Gay yellow calico skirt with its design printed on. Extra black rick-rack for dimension. Black sweater.

The calico skirt (4 yards ga[illegible]ed crosswise) worn with blo[illegible] matching calico, without the[illegible]gn.

Gray tweed jersey flecked with white makes a soft daytime dress. Add white overcollar, No. 8427.

Other Views, Sizes and Prices of Vogue Patterns on page 172. Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn., or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. Some prices slightly higher in Canada. (*Connecticut residents please add sales tax.) If you desire shipment first-class mail, please include 5¢ additional [illegible] each pattern ordered.

VOGUE

Young HOW AMERICA LIVES

This bright red chinchilla overcoat with a cozy Orlon-fleece lining is prepared to withstand a Vermont winter! Vogue Design No. S-4536.

TOM PALUMBO

loveliness that lingers on . . .

n the mood

lluring, elusive, faintly mysterious . . . The ne Mary King IN THE MOOD Perfume quietly calls attention to your personality and ha . This new, exciting IN THE MOOD scent is also available in cologne, sachet, sti powder, bath soap and bath salts.
Only your Watkins Dealer brings this exclusive rag nce collection directly to your home along with other fine cosmetics . . . and m erate prices. Mary King Cosmetics e created by The J. R. Watkins Company, nu cturers of the famous Watkins Products.

SINCE Watkins 1868

Th Shopping Center that Comes to Your Home"

THE J. R. WATKINS COMPANY • WINONA, MINNESOTA • NEWARK • MEMPHIS •
OAKLAND • MONTREAL • WINNIPEG • AUSTRALIA • NEW ZEALAND • SOUTH AFRICA

STUART

A pair of prefab closets turned a useless wall into a sparkling storage area. Closets come ready to assemble, complete with hardware for the sliding doors, range in width from 26″ to 72″. Bets and Scud chose a pair 36″ wide, 91″ tall, 26½″ deep. One has poles for hanging; the second has drawers and shelves. Snug between went white-painted chests, a day bed with casual blue throw and chintz ruffle. The same chintz at ceiling height encloses the nook in a bay-window effect. Result: a bare front room became a charming guest room plus a closet center.

Young HOW AMERICA LIVES

Young Home-Builders

New closet ideas and storage areas aid the Parker family at High Reach Farm.

By MARGARET DAVIDSON

THE Vermont farmhouse built in 1818 where Scud and Bets Parker now live has breath-taking views of Green Mountains to the west, White Mountains to the east. "Inside, the house is picturesque, too—but low on conveniences," Parkers told us while getting settled. "We're hanging coats behind the dining-room door, stowing clothes in an old wardrobe, and stacking up cleaning gear in corners." But the Parkers had plans for storage and decided to begin changes now, allowing themselves three years to finish remodeling. Winter is Scud's major time for indoor work. "We've started clearing up the clutter—we'll do more later on. And meantime we can watch sales and auctions for low-cost supplies we can use." These are first ideas installed at the farm.

DI PIETRO

Coat closet was the first one begun, and Sally (6), Stevie (4), Alan (2) were measured for shelf height while Denny (11) was helping dad.

Parkers' finished coat closet provides a panel for each child. Movable hooks and shelves are attached to punchboard backing, will be raised as children grow. Scud and Bets use left-hand section. Blue-painted shutters give ventilation so wet clothes will dry, and fold open out of the way in crowded front hall. In top, Bets packs out-of-season clothes.

Cleaning closet in blue-and-yellow punched fiberboard has low drawers to hold newspapers and sacks and to raise floor of cabinet to comfortable height. Left side is tall enough for Bets' long-handled tools. Right side clears bucket, stores cleaning aids over it. And both doors hold their own.

Did you know?

No tipping with his refreshments. . . .

With Alan Parker's no mug, milk may dribble it doesn't spill embarr ingly. Mug is plastic, h curved and weighted tom to keep it upright. extra protection, there clear plastic cap that serts, lets milk flow drinking but prevents jor floods down a diner's chin. Very as ing to the high-chair

A nylon mop head tha taches from its ha pops into the washer whirls out as white as is a star performe Bets' cleaning schem

Chipped ice, anyone new freezer tray of p releases not cubes b deluge of fine ice with no noise and no involved. Genius, we

Have you cotton backed with rubber? dren's clothes with r inserts at the knee? drying them in a hang them up to Heat not allowe escape could damag rubber, even cause

Jams, jellies and c goods should neve stored on high k shelves where heat r heckle them. They best when cool—i basement, or at th tom of a kitchen cup

Everyone who sew welcome a new man fiber thread in 18 Ideal to use on man fiber garments—it the same strength wear, easy wash and speedy drying chorglass modernizes stemware for everyday use!

Yes!..now you can afford all the right glasses!
Beautiful, practical…at unbelievably low prices!

about 19¢ each!

about 25¢ each!

Buy them in sets of eight…
Buy them by the piece!

If you've been afraid to buy stemware because it breaks easily, and costs too much to use every day, here's good news: Wonderful Anchorglass stemware is completely different! The smart, sturdy bases and short, rounded stems provide a firm, steady foundation.

Best of all, they're priced amazingly low!

So low, you'll never have to get along with unmatched glasses again. You'll be proud to serve from these matching sets, with their beautiful brilliance and handsomely ornamented stems.

For yourself, for that impressive gift!

Choose several sets-of-8, smartly packed in gift cartons. Available in open stock, too . . . wherever glass is sold. If your dealer does not have this stemware in stock, he can get it for you by writing Anchor Hocking Glass Corporation.

Look for the name Anchorglass

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

A PRODUCT OF ANCHOR HOCKING GLASS CORPORATION, LANCASTER, OHIO

Season's bount

to can or freeze

By BETS PARK

FROZEN GEMS

WITH two freezers filling up with good things to eat and a twelve-foot shelf in our basement well lined with jars of our own canning, we're set for the coming winter.

Materials and directions for freezing and canning are so generally available, I'll use my valuable space for recipes and tips on my own successes.

FROZEN GEMS

There's nothing like having frozen peaches and melon balls in the freezer for winter desserts and fruit salads. Jewels in jars, I call them.

Freezing Sliced Peaches: First make a sirup using 3 cups sugar to 4 cups water. Cool and add ¼ teaspoon ascorbic acid for each cup of water used. Wash the peaches and scald 30 seconds in boiling water to loosen the skin. Drain and plunge into cold water. Peel, pit and slice into cold sirup. (Some varieties peel readily without scalding.) Fill containers with peaches and sirup, leaving ½″ head space. Place a crumpled piece of freezer paper on top of the fruit, under the container top, to hold the fruit under the sirup. (This is a trick I learned from a neighbor and it really works.) Seal and freeze.

Freezing Melon Balls: I use a combination of melons and the same sirup as for peaches, without ascorbic acid, except that I add ¼ cup honey to the above proportion of sirup. The flavor of honey is wonderful with melon. Try it and see.

CHICKEN CACHE

I like to keep cooked chicken in the freezer, and use the heavier roasting and fricasseeing chickens for this. I have found it a good plan to steam or simmer several chickens at a time in seasoned broth, remove the meat from the bones, and package it for future meals. The chicken stock, cooked down until very richly flavored, makes an excellent base for soups and gravies. The cooked chicken I use for chicken pie or curry.

When making chicken pies, I combine a well-seasoned rich chicken gravy with cooked peas, whole white onions and tender chicken. The aluminum-foil cook-and-freeze pans are perfect for freezing and baking in later. But here's my trick for preventing a soggy crust: Freeze the chicken mixture in the pans until solid. Then put the uncooked crust on the hard-frozen surface, wrap and freeze. The pie is then ready to bake, and it doesn't need to be thawed before pu in the oven. It's certainly easier than s gling with fitting tender pastry on a liquid g

CHICKEN CACHE

EATING WITH RELISH

Tomatoes are red-ripe on the vines, an time for canning our favorite mixture the garden's odds and ends. I call it To Plus because of the added celery, onion, pepper and carrots. It's delicious as a for meat balls, also makes an excellent ghetti sauce and is a flavorful addition to and casserole dishes.

Tomato Plus: Wash 7 quart jars. I teaspoon salt in each. Add 3 or 4 peeled t toes to each jar, pressing down to lea little air space as possible. Prepare vege mixture by cooking approximately 1 cup (more or less to suit individual taste) c onion, pepper and carrot, finely diced, in amount of water until almost tender. D vegetable mixture evenly among the 7 Fill the jars with more tomatoes, pr gently when full till the juice is ready to flow. Remove air bubbles with a knife. A the lids according to the type of closure Process in boiling-water bath 45 minutes and cool.

TOMATO PLUS

When it's harvesttime at High Reach Farm, even the youngest children take pride in carrying out their special chores.

Porcupine Meat Balls: Mix well 2 pounds ground beef, ⅓ cup chopped onion, ⅔ cup uncooked rice, 3 teaspoons salt and ¼ teaspoon pepper. Shape into small balls the size of a walnut. Add to 1 quart canned Tomato Plus. Cook in pressure cooker at 15 pounds pressure 10 minutes according to manufacturer's directions. Or simmer, covered, on top of stove 30–40 minutes or until the rice grains are tender. Serves 6. Freezes successfully.

IT'S APPLE TIME

We have apples and luckily our farm keeps us supplied. Last fall, when we moved to Vermont, we hand-pressed 35 gallons of cider, canned applesauce and sliced apples, and made apple jelly and mincemeat besides. This way delicious apple treats all year round—for breakfast, lunch or dinner. Tender-crusted apple dumplings, redolent of sugar and spices, homey applesauce and luscious pies, cakes and puddings are made in a jiffy from our hoard of canned applesauce and sliced apples.

Apple Dumplings: Prepare a rich biscuit dough using your own recipe or a packaged mix. Divide dough into 6 portions. Roll each into 5" squares. Mix 2½ cups canned sliced apples, drained, with ½ teaspoon cinnamon ½ teaspoon nutmeg, 2 tablespoons brown sugar and ½ teaspoon grated lemon rind. Put ½ cup of apple on each square. Moisten edges of dough and fold over apple. Place dumplings in greased baking dish. Boil ½ cup sugar with 1 cup water and 2 tablespoons butter or margarine. Pour over dumplings and bake in a hot oven, 400° F., for 40 minutes, or until golden brown and bubbly. Serve hot.

For freezing: Rather than tie up your baking dishes, bake the dumplings in 7" foilware freeze-and-freeze pans—2 dumplings and ⅓ of sauce to a pan. Cool, cover with lid provided and freeze. Reheat right in the pan. You may be able to buy larger foilware pans to accommodate a larger quantity. To make dumplings with dried apples: add ½ cup sugar to apples instead of 2 tablespoons.

VELVA FRUIT

Our old-fashioned ice-cream freezer will have many a turn making velva fruit before the season's over. Through the summer we made it quart after quart of strawberry and raspberry velva. Now it's peach, and we will make cranberry velva into the fall.

The children are always delighted when we have a velva party—with cookies from the recipe for Honey Bubble Thins.

Cranberry Velva: Wash 1 pound fresh cranberries and cook in 2¾ cups water until all the skins pop open. Force through a fine sieve at once. While the cranberry purée is still hot, add 2 cups sugar, 2 envelopes unflavored gelatin softened in ½ cup cold water, and a pinch of salt. Stir until gelatin and sugar are dissolved. Cool. Pour into 2 refrigerator trays. Set indicator at coldest position and freeze 1–1½ hours. When firm around the edges, but still soft in the center, scrape mixture into a chilled bowl and beat with electric mixer or rotary beater until it becomes fluffy and light pink in color. It will look something like meringue even though there aren't any eggs in it. Scrape the mixture back into the freezing trays. Freeze until firm. If you have an ice-cream freezer, use 1 part rock salt to 4 parts crushed ice and turn, starting slowly at first, until the crank turns hard—about 20 minutes. Serve as soon as it is frozen, or pack and store in freezer immediately. If you have more than two freezing trays, double or triple the quantities to stow away in your freezer. Or you could make several batches in succession.

Peach Velva: Mix 6 cups fresh peach purée, 1½ to 2 cups sugar, 2 tablespoons lemon juice and ¼ teaspoon salt. Soften 2 envelopes unflavored gelatin in ½ cup cold water. Dissolve over hot water, and cool slightly. Add slowly to purée mixture, stirring until well blended. Flavor with ½ teaspoon almond extract. Freeze in refrigerator trays or ice-cream freezer as directed above. Fruit velvas, such as raspberry and peach, make delicious parfaits when layered alternately with vanilla ice cream.

Honey Bubble Thins: Our beehives give us so much honey, I make these confections often, to keep up with the honey supply. Heat to boiling ½ cup strained honey and add ½ cup butter or margarine. Stir until smooth and well blended. Add 1 cup flour, ⅔ cup sugar, ½ teaspoon each of almond and orange extract. Drop by level teaspoonfuls, 4" apart, onto a greased baking sheet. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., for about 10 minutes—until they darken a bit and bubble up. Remove from the oven and cool slightly on the pan until they can be loosened with a spatula without sticking. It is important not to let them cool too long. They will become too crisp to roll. While the cookies are still warm, roll them over the handle of a wooden spoon or any round stick. Cool on a rack. Makes 5 to 6 dozen.

To make Molasses Bubble Thins, substitute molasses for honey, and 1 tablespoon ginger for the almond and orange extracts.

TILL THE FRUIT'S IN THE LOFT"

APPLE TIME'S ALL YEAR

STUART

CRANBERRY VELVA

HAROLD FOWLER

Lots of paint, a color scheme of delft blue and white, and comfortable accommodations for eating and sitting about, made this old farm kitchen into a favorite family room.

Room for the Family

By HENRIETTA MURDOCK, Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

A CENTURY-OLD kitchen with a cozy cookstove for winter comfort inspired the Parkers to make their kitchen wing into an all-purpose family room.

Its transformation is mainly a paint story, for the primitive backgrounds were old and shabby without being distinctive. No fine old wood to uncover, no exciting floor possibilities, but just layers of ancient paint, cracked plaster and an uninviting gloominess.

A quaint tile paper for the upper walls, lots of snow-white paint, blue deck enamel for the floors and a giant braided rug effected the big changes. The room is homey and inviting, easy to maintain, and suited to the needs of a young and growing family.

To make a success of covering over dark paint to create dazzling whiteness, one can't cut corners. Old surfaces must be washed and scraped, sanded and given two or more coats of quality paint. A good paint job is part of your room's decoration.

The Parkers already had furniture suited to a room which was to function as a family dining, living and play room.

The regional furniture is not antique, but so faithfully copies old designs that anyone can have such a period room at budget prices. The rug is machine-made, braided and reversible. The family loves this new type of room which has become its favorite spot.

Young HOW AMERICA

A—French Provincial Pierced Tablespoon B—Candlelight C—Southwind D—Esplanade E—Rambler Rose F—King Richard G—Rose Solitaire

Choose Towle, and everyone will know it's Solid Silver

Wonderful, to own the genuine best! — more wonderful still, to have people know you do.

So one of the nicest things about being able to say "Mine's Towle" is that everyone instantly knows you own solid silver. Because Towle is the largest Sterlingsmith, working in solid silver only — never in lesser metals.

This means something else important to your pride, to your poise as hostess: it means that ALL of Towle's two-and-a-half-centuries-old skills go into their famous Sterling. That's why it brings such distinction and beauty to your table.

Towle has selected a store near you to carry its fine solid silver, which is easy to own: serving pieces from $4.00, teaspoons from $3.70, six-piece place settings from $29.75.

An Invitation: Come to Newburyport, see the Towle Sterlingsmiths at work and visit the Towle Gallery.

Mrs. America

TAKES A GREYHOUND PRE-PLANNED VACATION

YOU can enjoy a thrilling Florida tour — or any of a hundred others — with hotels, transportation, special sightseeing all included at one low price! Greyhound Expense-Paid Tours are not "conducted"—you may travel alone or with your own friends. For details, visit any Greyhound Travel Bureau — or mail the coupon below.

"Mrs. America" is lovely Wanda Jennings of St. Louis, pictured above with her husband. They visited Marineland, stopped at Ellinor Village, toured Miami, other fun spots.

FLORIDA CIRCLE
11 days, 10 nights' hotel from Jacksonville $79.10

LOS ANGELES—SAN FRANCISCO
3 days, 2 nights' hotel starting from either city.. 21.10

COLONIAL VIRGINIA
6 days, 5 nights' hotel from Washington, D.C.... 45.90

EVERGREEN CIRCLE
3 days, 2 nights' hotel from Seattle 28.40

OLD MEXICO
(Escorted from Laredo).
12 days, 11 nights' hotel (19 meals included) from San Antonio 149.10

GREAT SMOKIES
3 days, 2 nights' hotel starting from Asheville or Knoxville 50.50

Add Greyhound round-trip fare from your home to starting point. U.S. Tax extra.

FREE! PLEASURE MAP OF AMERICA—WITH TOUR FACTS

Mail coupon to Greyhound Tour Dept., 71 W. Lake St., Chicago 1, Ill. for colorful trip-planning map—details on 50 pre-planned vacations.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City & State*_____

Please send me special information on tour to: _____ LHJ-9-54

GREYHOUND®

IT HAPPENS ALL THE TIME

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 38

her man, Wilma reached over and held George's hand.

"Well," said George.

"Well, well, well," said Wilma.

"After twelve years of marriage," said George.

"Twelve and a half," said Wilma.

"I just can't get my mind to take hold of it," said George. "I had just given up thinking it was ever going to happen."

"Doctor Franz says it happens all the time," said Wilma. "He's handled dozens of confinements of women who have adopted children because they thought they couldn't have one themselves, and then—boom, a year or so later they turn up pregnant. Doctor Franz says the medical journals are full of examples like ours."

"I don't want to be in a medical journal," said George. "I can live out my entire life without once being in a medical journal and never feel the world has passed me by."

"Maybe they'll just print your initials," she said.

"It's not dignified," said George. "I am forty-six years old. Already when I go to the park with Polly on weekends, the young parents think I'm her grandfather. I'm the only man who ever became a grandfather without being a father."

"I know, George," said Wilma. "But I don't think that's what's bothering you."

"And you," said George. "You're thirty-six. You're old enough to be President. What about that?"

"Doctor Franz says I'm built like a peasant."

"Those Continental fellows certainly know how to pay a pretty compliment."

"In this case it is a compliment. Doctor Franz says I have nothing to worry about as long as I watch my weight. No, George, darling, you're concerned about that, of course. But that's not why you're acting like a cross old bear."

"All right, my clever spouse. Why am I acting like a cross old bear?"

Wilma leaned over and pressed her lips gently against her husband's brow. "I'll tell you, my cross old bear. It's because you're thrilled. Thrilled beyond words. Thrilled to the toenails. And you hate to admit it."

"All right, I admit it. It's normal, isn't it?"

"Of course. Especially for a warm, affectionate, clean-cut all-American fellow like you. And I'm thrilled too. I feel wonderfully female and fertile, like Mother Earth. Which is why I'm thinking exactly what you're thinking."

"Which is?"

"Which is that it's a dirty trick to play on Polly."

George put his face between his hands, rubbing his eyes deeply with the tips of his fingers. "That good girl," he said. "That good sweet treasure of a girl."

After a bit, Wilma said, "Let me make you some tea, George."

"All right," he said. "And put in two tea balls. I don't care what happens to me tonight."

While they drank their tea and prepared for bed, they chatted about the small things in their day. The overpowering new fact in their lives presented such problems that for a while they silently and mutually resolved to put it aside.

Before they turned off the bedroom light, Wilma made one last comment. "I'll tell you what I mind the most," she said. "I had it all worked out in my mind just how I was going to tell Polly we had adopted her. I was going to do it when she was about five, some morning in spring. I'd be helping her get dressed in a new navy-blue coat, and a yellow with flowers on it, and Mary Jane while I brushed her hair in front of I'd tell her that we were luckier tha parents in the world, because al parents had to just take the baby th to them, but we could go out a baby we thought was the nicest an est and the prettiest, and we had and that she should always remem now I can never tell her, because around to me with every good ri that if we thought she was so wo did we have to go and have ano our own."

"She won't say any such t George.

"Maybe not, but she'll thin Wilma. "Whenever she finds o adopted and the other one wasn't it all right, just as sure as there's a down your nose."

"Can we ever tell her?" said G

"I don't know," said Wilma. "A going to be such a pretty straw h

The days and weeks went by sw ing Wilma inexorably closer to confinement, but no closer to a her problem. Frequently her m boiled eggs were salted by her te watching into glo ally made snap her old cheer

"Look said on "You don't you

"Lie d tracks fo Wilma.

"And side you," "That's needs, is "You' one thin "What "I lov bushel a

"O.K. It's the only thing that doubt your sanity, but O.K. W to do with the price of popcorn

"Suppose it's a boy. Suppos me sideways the way you look times. That will just naturally fr cause he will be part of you, an and himself too."

"Why should that make Pol person?"

"Because she'll get the idea she doesn't get it from us, she George, I just decided somethi

"What?"

"We have to move out of to

"We do?"

"Far out of town. To So maybe."

"Do we have to start packin night, or can we wait till after asked.

"I'm serious, George. We away from our families."

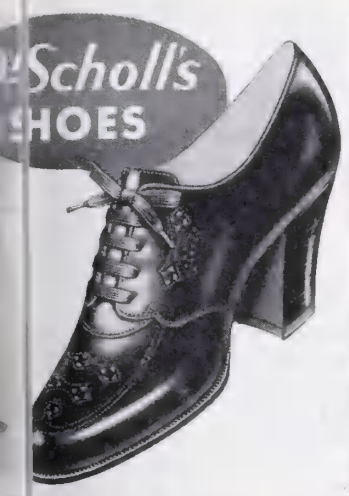
"I don't mind getting a family," said George. "But I your family. It was the main re you."

"Can you imagine how they a real live natural-born child t dynasties? They'll shut Polly r cold."

"How?"

"Oh, they'll keep talking abo your eyes."

"Maybe he'll have your eye



"Now let's not have any ar that. He's going to have you settled."

"How can I practice law in S I can't even say 'no' in Spanis

"Then your family is not to

Can we guess what the outstanding feature of our twentieth century will appear to be in the perspective of 300 years? My own guess is that our age will be remembered chiefly neither for its horrifying crimes nor its astonishing inventions, but for its having been the first age since the dawn of civilization, some five or six thousand years back, in which people dared to think it practicable to make the ideal of welfare for all a practical objective instead of a mere utopian dream.

—ARNOLD J. TOYNBEE

ombine Style Distinction with Scientific Design

Y 'll discover what real walking is e when you step out in your pai f supremely comfortable, foot- rin Dr. Scholl's Shoes. Made over Schl's scientifically designed lasts, gl e-like, foot-cradling fit makes ev so kind to your feet.

Sch 's Shoes are made in all sizes ll es of feet — Women's, some s 2½ o 13, AAAAA to EEEEEEEE; 's, to 16, AAA to EEEEEEE. rtly ted at Dr. Scholl's Foot Com- Sh os and Shoe and Department s i principal cities. If not obtain- loca , write for catalog, Dept. 49, Sch s, Inc., Chicago 10, Illinois.

T Hold A SE TEETH
lore Firmly in Place

ur lse teeth annoy and embarrass ing ropping or wobbling when you gh r talk? Just sprinkle a little TH your plates. This alkaline (non- owd holds false teeth more firmly re mfortably. No gummy, gooey, ste feeling. Does not sour. Checks ior enture breath). Get FASTEETH a drug counter.

OR-GLOW ACHROME MAS CARDS — YOU MAKE $55.00 On 50 BOXES!

amples to friends, keep $1.10 cash more with big line of 21-card $1 d Talking Cards, surprise Gifts, mas Cards and Stationery, etc. 0-$25-$50 in Bonus Gifts. Get As- Imprints Free. $1.25 Retractable E if you act fast! Write TODAY. Cermak, Dept. 580-J, Chicago 23, Ill.

$1.25 GIFT SET FREE!

YARNS

Novelty egular r Stoles weaters, c.

Get LATEST STYLE FLASH and BIG COLOR CARD with over 300 actual samples. Send 10c (refunded with order).

YARN D., 371 Grand Street, New York 2, Dept. L

Catalog and Color Swatches

NO-IRON
berglas
AINS and DRAPES

to $13 a pair!

curtains and drapes amazing s make! Never need ironing, ing! You can wash, hang and minutes! Guaranteed never to etch, sag! 30 sizes to fit any in drapes. And our huge buying t-to-you selling policy lets you 2.69 per pair. Write today for d Color Swatches.

IE, Dept. 76JJ-1
vay, New York 13, N.Y.

"That should be simple," said George. "We'll smuggle the kid in and out of the house at night. If anybody asks, we'll tell them we're just minding it for friends on a trip, like a puppy dog."

"George, has Polly ever done anything bad to you?"

"The first seven months she wouldn't burp," he said.

"George!"

"She has given me delight every day of my life, though there have been some tough nights."

"Then why should she be made to feel like a second-class citizen in this house?"

"Don't ask me, my darling. Doctor Franz says it happens all the time."

"Doctor Franz! I wish I'd never met Doctor Franz."

"Now let's not lose our heads," said George. "After all, I had a little something to do with this."

"In that case," said Wilma, blowing her nose, "boil me an egg."

The worst of Wilma's problem was that she spent nearly all day of every day with Polly, feeding her, dressing her, bathing her, listening to the endless singsong prattle with which Polly filled her day as a radio announcer fills dead time on the air. The sense of being a traitor to Polly intruded upon the smallest decisions and sensations of Wilma's day. When Polly clambered onto the glass-top table which she had been forbidden to climb, the cautioning words died on Wilma's lips as she remembered how much larger a burden than tiny daily disciplines Polly would soon have to bear. At Polly's two-year-old-birthday party, the child did a silly flat-footed dance to the music of her new toy phonograph, and Wilma wept as she watched with a stricken look, thinking only that she was seeing happy innocence betrayed.

THE very last months before the child came were the most difficult. As her body became weighted, Wilma found herself unable to do for Polly the simple services that had been routine. Each time she had to refuse to lift Polly into a high playground swing, for example, she felt this as a new instance of the treason already begun.

So the months dragged uneasily by, and then, on a cold and rainy morning in September, Wilma awoke with a vague awareness of a new sensation, a sensation that was different from the movement of the growing thing inside her twitching in its long drowse. She checked her wrist watch on the table beside her, then waited. Fifteen minutes later the sensation came again.

She reached over to touch George on the shoulder, but something made her draw her hand back. The sensation came again, not vague, but definite now.

She prodded her husband lightly.

"George," she said, "will you get out the car?"

George opened one eye. "It's a terrible day for a drive."

"This is only a short drive."

George sat right up in bed. "Are we having a birthday?" he said.

She nodded. George kissed her fiercely, holding her tight for a moment. "Get dressed," he said. "And be grateful you'll be wearing those maternity clothes for the last time this season."

While she dressed and checked her small bag for the hospital, George called Doctor Franz, and then summoned Wilma's sister Anne, who was to stay with Polly. As he finished the calls, they could hear Polly stirring in her room.

"You go to her," said Wilma. "I'll say good-by to her later."

George touched her hand and went into Polly's room. He was gone about three minutes. Wilma sat on the bed, looking dully at the shoe in her hand.

"What did you tell her?" said Wilma, when George came back.

"I told her you were going to the hospital, and that you'd come back in a few days with a new baby sister or baby brother."

"What did she say?"

"What did she say?" George cocked an eyebrow. "She informed me that medical

DON'T LAUNDER YOUR HAIR..

Shampoo it!

...restore its natural oil balance with

CONTI CASTILE SHAMPOO

Harsh detergents "launder" away the precious natural oil balance of your hair. Let the pure imported olive oil in Conti Castile Shampoo restore natural softness, life and luster. See how beautifully your hair takes and holds its wave, how easy it is to manage, with no harm to hair coloring. Conti Castile lathers instantly... rinses quickly... in all types of water. It is the outstanding choice of leading hair stylists.

CONTI
CASTILE SHAMPOO
made with olive oil

J. B. WILLIAMS COMPANY, GLASTONBURY, CONNECTICUT

How to Wrap Meats for Freezing

To Preserve ALL The Natural Flavor and Juicy Tenderness

Rolls are 15, 18, 24 inches wide.

Start with good meat, wrap and seal tightly to shut out air. Follow freezer manufacturer's temperature recommendations. Don't store too long. (Date packages and use oldest first.) Do this and you'll always have good results from your home freezer or refrigerator freezer compartment.

For the wrapper, use KVP Freezer Paper. It hugs the meat, guards against moisture loss and freezerburn. (Wrapping instructions with every box.)

KVP originated freezer paper — has kept it the leader in low-cost protection. Look for it in locker plants, retail stores, markets.

Paper Maids SAVE TIME — SAVE WORK

Shelf Papers • Freezer Papers • Heavy and Fancy Waxed • KVP and Mrs. Hayward's Dusting Papers • Pie Tape • Baking Cups • Place Mats • Cookery Parchment

Your Guarantee of Quality KVP

KALAMAZOO VEGETABLE PARCHMENT CO. • PARCHMENT, KALAMAZOO, MICHIGAN

In Canada Buy KVP — APPLEFORD Paper Products

We'll Send a Box of Christmas Cards

TO ALL WHO WANT EXTRA MONEY!

Rush name, address today for sensational, new, fast-selling "Feature" 21-Card Christmas Assortment. Show friends, neighbors, everyone for easy, big profits. Get facts about 50 money-makers such as Christmas Humorous Assortment, All-Parchment Christmas Ass't., Religious Ass't., Currier & Ives, Gift Wrappings, etc. —plus many Everyday Greeting Card Ass'ts. for Birthdays and other occasions. Also Children's Books, Imported Napkins, Gifts, many others. Each sells for only $1—keep up to 50c profit for yourself.

SEND NO MONEY Just your name and address. Get new "Feature" Christmas Card Assortment ON APPROVAL with complete money making plans, and samples of low-priced Personal Christmas Cards FREE. No experience needed. Write NOW!

WALLACE BROWN, Inc., Dept. U-9, 225 Fifth Av., New York 10, N.Y.

CLOSEOUT on PINKING SHEARS

$1 EACH instead of $5.00

ALL METAL!

We're stuck! We bought too many Pinking Shears. We're closing them out for only $1.00 each though you pay others up to $5.00! Smooth cutting action. Leave neat notched edge attractive on curtains, shelf edging, etc. High quality, carbon steel blades. Full 7½" long, enameled handles, nickel-plated blades. Scientifically synchronized. Guaranteed to work as well as expensive shears or money back. Send $1.00 plus 25¢ postage and handling or $1.25 for one. Or, two for only $2.00 and WE pay all postal charges. Order now! Make wonderful gifts!

PINKING SHEARS CO., Dept. PS-104, 881, St. Louis, Mo.

DOORWAY Dirt-Zone Vanishes OR YOUR MONEY BACK!

5-MINUTE BEAUTY TREATMENT FOR RUGS!

No need to clean entire rug! Just sprinkle Glamorene on each Dirt-Zone — brush in — and vacuum as usual! Leaves no rings! Perfect for spot cleaning, too! ½ gal. (cleans 2 complete 9 x 12 wool, wool-blend rugs) ONLY $2.29. (Special Applicator $1.25)

FOR COTTON and synthetic rugs, New Glamorene Cotton Rug Cleaner, ½ gal. $2.49 (Applicator FREE)

Glamorene RUG CLEANER

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

10 E. 34 St., New York 17, N. Y.

Sold in Canada as "Lamorene" by G. H. Wood & Co., Ltd., Toronto science had made remarkable progress in these matters and that you were not to worry."

"What did she really say?"

"She asked if she could give it a bath. I said she could and that she should practice with her doll when Anne came."

The doorbell rang. "That will be Anne," said George.

Wilma sat numb and cold in the car as George drove carefully to the hospital. Outside the big brick pile of the building George parked the car and sat with his hands still on the wheel, gripping it tensely.

"Listen to me for a second," he said. "This is a rough thing to be going into if you're not ready for it in your own mind."

"Then let's not go in," said Wilma harshly.

"Don't get mad, darling."

"I'm not mad. I'm afraid."

"With today's methods it's no worse than getting your tonsils out."

"I had my tonsils out when I was six, and I hated it," said Wilma. "They keep passing shiny, sharp things around, and they wear things over their faces and whisper to each other, and you can't hear what they're saying."

"I know a voodoo fellow on the other side of town," said George. "He has a spectacular mask. Shall I send him a signal on the jungle drums?"

Wilma looked at his funny, sad grin and loved him for his forlorn gallantry in trying to break the tension with a smile, but an icy armor about her seemed to blunt the edge of his quips.

"Don't joke with me, George, please. I'm afraid."

"Darling, I'd give anything in the wide green world if I could do this for you."

"I know that, George."

"Do you want to stay out here a minute longer?"

"I'm cold. Let's go inside."

She had never realized that a hospital had such heavy doors. The big glass entrance doors gave slowly against their air-stops, then sighed closed behind her. The elevator doors slammed shut with a brassy clang, and the operator shot across a second barrier of joined rails like the bars of a cage. The door to her semiprivate room, when she reached it, was a steel panel almost nine feet high.

At last she lay on the raised bed in a rough hospital nightgown. The nightgown had ridden up around her hips. She reached down and touched her hand to her thigh. The flesh felt as cold as stone.

THE lean face of Doctor Franz was above her. The light glanced off the lenses of his glasses and she could not see his eyes. He was wearing a white hospital jacket. In his office he had always worn a business suit.

"You have stopped for a while," said Doctor Franz. "You will begin again soon. Stay here for a little. The other ladies will be company for you."

He was gone. Wilma shivered the entire length of her body. She was aware she was in the middle of the biggest thing that had ever happened to her, and she did not know in her heart whether she would be able to do what she had to do.

"This your first?"

Wilma turned her head. In the next bed there was a shadow of dark hair against a white face.

"Honey, is this your first?" the woman said again.

"No. Yes."

There was a suppressed chuckl next bed. "You mean you don't k

"We adopted one. Then this ca

"Honey, I hear it happens all t

"So they say."

Wilma felt a vague stirring. T beginning to happen again.

"Honey, you're lucky."

"Lucky?"

"I mean you know what you're Me, I'm afraid I won't know wh the kid."

"They're stronger than you Wilma. "Once you've found out grow up in spite of you, you can j enjoy them."

Now the great hand seized her sucked in her breath she felt this out and search the deepest w strength. Her whole body was in trembled. She was in a room of room without walls. There was the same dim green globe which down at the end of the hospital she had through skinny girl in an bed, liste nurses g shadows ing rubb room of thronge known s were all and she

"Hone woman bed, "it as if you have a b

Now somethi above he rasp of was a th peated b cry of a It came out of a t but as determin She fum buzzer r and pre someon nurse ca in white

"A ba said Wil

"Somebody ought to go to the

The nurse smiled, and her fac focus as that of a surprisingl pretty girl. "It's feeding time i down the hall," said the nurse taken care of."

Wilma relaxed the tense m neck. This was something she k felt the warm body cradle aga had seen the soft mouth groping She had felt the whole tiny fra sustenance, then sweetly relax tion.

How many times had she thousand times? Two thousand was no question that the feedi the most fulfilling part of having house. She remembered the firs fed Polly, and the great sense of had suffused her whole body. Sh the first time she had fed solids the gorgeous mess that had re

She remembered the day covered that Polly could craw brought home a white rubber p tail, and suddenly, out of nowh made two deliberate crawling m her knees in order to reach the ing-room rug.

Now the hand tightened agai of darkness swept in upon he fight it. She did not try to fla back. She merely substituted a sunny images, flickering colorf like their own home movies of immensely comic first steps, Po

HOW WOULD YOU SAY IT?

Edited by John M. Henry

At the moment our sympathies are all with the poor girl who spent four years learning how to behave in polite society, and the rest of her life trying to locate it. Wall Street Journal

Hardest mental cases are those wherein the patient is crazy about himself. DICK CONWAY, In London, Ohio, Press

Safety note: Watch out for school children—especially if they're driving cars! HENRY TRYSLA, In South Sioux City, Nebr., Star

A man can do more than he thinks he can, but usually less than he thinks he does. Yankton, S. D., Public Opinion

Give a little blue check mark for thoughtfulness about the future to the bride who copies the recipe of her wedding cake. A. D. JOLLY, In Bartow, Ga., Herald

Here's a Secret We'll Share With You

It's the secret of the home-made goodness in Sexton preserves and jellies: we cook the finest fruits in small batches and extra s-l-o-w-l-y. "Just like mother used to make."

Preserves and jellies are the pride of Sexton Sunshine Kitchens. Let them be the pride of your own table.

At better grocers.

Sexton Quality Foods

...John Sexton & Co., Sexton Square, Chicago, Ill.

chicken for the first time on the day they had driven to the country, Polly trying to lift a huge Teddy bear almost as big as herself.

Wilma lay still. Her heart was beating fast, pounding like a great drum. She knew that she still had a long road to travel. But she had discovered something, something like a talisman she could keep close to her. The thought of the child to come from this was a glowing coin in her hand. She had but to hold up the shining thing before her, and the darkness would fall back.

"Honey, I'm ringing for the nurse," said the woman in the next bed. "I think you're about to become a mother."

"Honey, I've been a mother," said Wilma. She reached up herself to press the buzzer beside her head.

The nurse came in, followed by Doctor Franz and George.

"Let's go, team," said Wilma.

"You seem very chipper," said George.

"They'd better take me out while I'm still laughing," said Wilma. "This is not tiddlywinks."

Quickly, gently, Wilma was placed on the rolling table.

"I wish I could do this for you," said George.

"I can do this," said Wilma. She put her head back and closed her eyes.

Now the door of the room opened, and all the doors were opening. The elevator door opened, the gate opened, and her mind was filled with images of opening, doors opening, windows opening, ice melting, seeds bursting pods, flowers spreading their petals to the sun.

AFTERWARD she wanted only to sleep. She awoke the next morning, to find George sitting quietly by her bed.

"We have a son," he said. "I've been giving cigars to people. Have a cigar?"

"He has your eyes," said Wilma.

"How do you know? He hasn't opened them yet."

"Let's not discuss it," said Wilma. "He has your eyes."

"You'll turn up in him somewhere," said George. "I've arranged it with the hospital."

"How's Polly?" said Wilma.

George's smile faded. "Bathing the skin off all her dolls," he said. "She doesn't realize what's involved."

"Don't worry about Polly," said Wilma. "She's in."

"What do you mean?"

"Oh, she'll have her problems," Wilma told him. "But there's one thing nobody has to worry about. This girl is a first-class citizen, for life."

George looked at her quizzically. "What's happened?" he said. "Is there something I should tell her?"

"You don't have to tell her anything," said Wilma. "She'll feel it without the telling. And then, one day, when she's five, or six, or seven, whenever it seems right, I'll tell her myself. I'll be dressing her in a navy-blue coat, and I'll be brushing her hair in front of the mirror, and I'll say, 'Polly, my big girl, I'll tell you a story. Once upon a time there were a mommy and a daddy who had no baby of their own, and they were very lonely. So they decided to go out and find the nicest baby in the whole world and love it as their very own, and they did. And that baby was you. And you were so wonderful and sweet that something magic happened inside your mommy and daddy and they were able to have another baby. So no matter what happens around this house, Polly, you'll always be special. Before you came we had no children, and now, because of you, we have two. And now, let's us big girls put on our new spring hats and see what's doing downtown.'"

George took a cooky out of the gift box near the bed and munched it very slowly. "You know," he said, "it must be very interesting to be a woman."

"It has its compensations," said Wilma.

"I think I'll go out and buy something real crazy for our girl," said George.

"Do something for me too?"

"Sure."

Wilma leaned luxuriously back against her pillows. "When you get home, throw out all the eggs."

END

. . . in white, or color

Insist on a lovely GENEVA steel kitchen . . . personalized just for you. In white, or your choice of six decorator colors. Your GENEVA dealer will be happy to show you how you can have a beautiful GENEVA kitchen . . . designed to fit your budget. Compare before you buy.

Geneva Modern Kitchens, Inc.
Geneva, Ill. (Dept. LHJ-9-54)

Write for colorful 20-page booklet "Just For You" illustrating stunning Geneva kitchen designs. Enclose 10¢ for handling.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____

County_____ State_____

...it EVERY WINDOW with Shir-Back® CURTAINS and FLIK DRAPERIES CUSTOM SIZES
AT READY-MADE PRICES
Over 4000 decorator schemes to choose from — at stores everywhere

Mrs. E. Chabers, Atlantic City, N.J.
"I SAVED $35! I used to pay extra for altering curtains because ordinary ready-mades wouldn't fit my windows. Thanks to Cameo's selection of sizes, I fit every window without extra cost."

CAMEO'S new DO-IT-YOURSELF GUIDE TO WINDOW DECORATING
plus Cameo Decor-Chart
Send to CAMEO CURTAINS, INC.
Dept. 952 C, New York 1, N. Y.

HOW TO MEET EXPENSES

YOU can earn extra cash to meet your expenses by selling subscriptions to Ladies' Home Journal, The Saturday Evening Post, Holiday, Jack and Jill and Country Gentleman, and other popular magazines. Earn generous commissions in your spare time. We'll send details without obligation. Write to

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
448 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

OLSON RUGS
...HAVE EVERYTHING YOU WANT!

AT ½ the Price You Expected to Pay!

SEND US YOUR OLD RUGS, CLOTHING, etc.
. . . at Our Expense

No matter where you live, Write Today for new, FREE Olson Rug and Decorating Book in full colors and 80th Anniversary GIFT Offer. Learn how the valuable wool and material in discarded rugs, clothing, etc., are reclaimed like new, sterilized, shredded, pickered, bleached, merged, blended with choice new wools, then redyed, respun into rug yarn, and woven in 3 Days into deep-textured, new, Reversible . .

BROADLOOM RUGS
fine enough for any home. Double the Wear. 9x12 weighs 46 lbs., not 32. Choice of 52 patterns regardless of colors in your material, any size.

Solid Colors	Early American	Leaf
Two-tones	Oriental Designs	Floral
Tweed Blends	Embossed effects	Ovals

FACTORY-to-You. Satisfaction guaranteed. Over 3 million customers. We do not have agents or sell through stores.

——— Mail Coupon or Postcard for ———

FREE RUG & DECORATING BOOK IN COLORS—and GIFT OFFER

Name.....

Address.....

Town.....State.....

OLSON RUG CO. Dept. E-50, Chicago 41, ILL.

STOP MOTH DAMAGE NOW!
Garments—Carpets—Other Woolens

BERLOU FIVE-YEAR GUARANTEED MOTHPROOFING

Berlou Mothproofing protects your valuable woolens from moth or carpet beetle damage for 5 years or we pay for the damages. Berlou mothproofs the fabric—eliminates seasonal wrapping and storing.

LET YOUR CLEANER OR CARPET DEALER DO IT

Get Berlou 5-year protection at all leading dry cleaners, rug cleaners. Ask your carpet dealer to Berlou your new floor coverings before they are laid.

AUTHORIZED DEALER BERLOU MOTHPROOFING SERVICE 5 YEAR GUARANTEE

Look for this sign in the window of your authorized Berlou service dealer, or write for nearest dealer's name.

Berlou Manufacturing Co., Dept. LJF, Marion, Ohio
In Canada: The Berlou Co. (Canada) Ltd., London, Ontario. Or—Do It Yourself—Buy Berlou from your Department, Hardware, Drug, Furniture or Carpet Store.

...Miracle Jelly...
...TS OVEN
...EASE Like Magic!

...AD ON ...
...SE OFF ...SHINES!
...ng! No ... razor ... ammonia!
...d-crusted, ...rease wipes ...eaves oven, ...cks, grills, ...ling clean! ...-Off! In 8 oz. ...rs.
...OR FREE ...ATTACHED
...OFF OVEN CLEANER

Want lovelier hair with easier care?

JUST SET AT HOME . . . with new JO•CUR

JO•CUR's wonderful new formula gives hair that exciting professionally set look . . . in a few minutes at home! So easy to use—just dip the comb. So effective on the most stubborn curls. Keeps every wave in place, smoothly. Dries fast, won't flake, non-sticky. New JO•CUR, in green or "clear". At most cosmetic counters . . . only 15c plus tax.

"Short Cut", interpreted by Mr. René of Paschkes Hairdressers, New York. JO•CUR will preserve the beauty of your hair style.

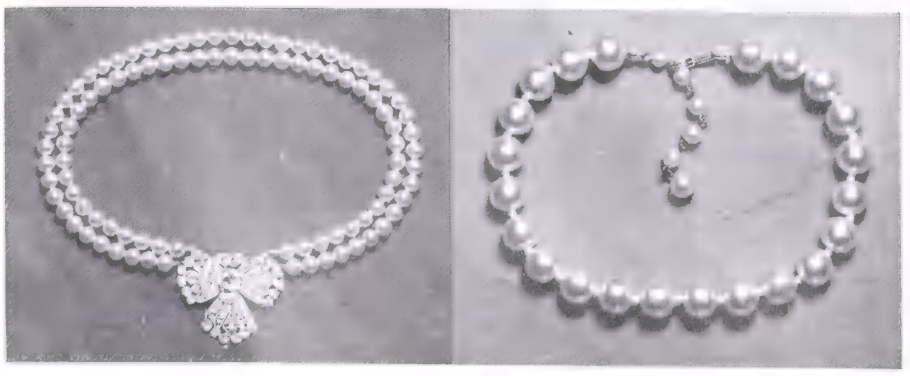
MAKES YOUR WAVE BEHAVE
Your coif forgets its wayward ways, becomes smooth, responsive, with new JO•CUR Wave Set.

LONGER LASTING LOVELINESS
It's dollars and sense to safeguard your precious hair-do for pennies . . . with thrifty JO•CUR Wave Set.



Look like a Million for $1.00

Duchess PEARLS
SIMULATED

Marvel at these expensive looking, lustrously lovely, rhinestone-clasped Duchess Pearls . . . with an elegant Lustre-Dip glow, exclusively our secret. These magnificent necklaces can be yours for only $1 each, plus tax, at your favorite store.

H & S ORIGINALS, INC. • 48 WEST 37th ST., NEW YORK

WE STARTED LIFE OVER

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 144

flies! And she had such a good mind—pretty thing too."

That would be largely true. We are located in the sparsely settled town of Danville, nine miles from the typically charming little New England village of St. Johnsbury, not far from the Canadian border, on a dirt road that much of the year is considered impassable beyond our 136-year-old farmhouse. I don't have all the manure I need—ample quantities of such good fertilizer are hard to come by, since we are not operating a dairy farm. But I do have some manure. In the summer we do have flies—and we fight them off with spray and by keeping things clean. The four children—Denny, eleven; Sally, six; Stevie, four; and Alan, two—are certainly real and not too good to be true. Bets does have a good mind, and to me she is more than pretty. We who have been called "smart young people," graduates of highly-rated Eastern colleges, good enough editors to keep two weekly newspapers running, smart enough businessmen (though not very) to sell them at a profit, are "miles from nowhere at the end of a dirt road" by choice. We believe it is a good one.

We are all but complete novices in farming of any sort. The man who sold us the farm went into a paroxysm of laughter watching me try to harness Molly, the horse that came with it. Last fall, just before one of our cows was about to calve, Bets asked me, "What are you going to do if she has trouble?" I had not thought of that. Never having played midwife to a cow, I was counting heavily on natural calfbirth. "Oh, everything will be all right," I told her. "I'll keep a close watch." I did—and I didn't see a thing. The calf was there one morning when I went into the barn.

We had some experience in growing our own food on the three acres we owned near Somers, in Westchester County, New York. We discovered that we could grow most of the food a family of six could eat on three acres, and we enjoyed both the gardening and the eating.

While vacationing in Vermont, the home state of many of my ancestors, we fell in love with the rolling pastures and distant views in the northeastern part of the state. After a long search and much deliberation, we bought the old farmhouse and two hundred hilly acres, much of it woodland.

WE announced to our friends in Katonah that we were going to move to a farm in Vermont. We spoke rapturously of its many glorious views. We told them about the beauty of the farmhouse, barn red with white trim, standing sturdily on a steep slope with the little stream below and a rim of soft mountains beyond. We told them about its big rocking-chair kitchen and squat black cookstove, about the big living room with white wainscoting, about the carefully cherished old New England parlor. We even had a new name for the farm—High Reach. "All very idyllic," most of them said in one way or anot how are you going to make a living

I KNOW what people mean when
"make a living." They mean someth more than that—or is it considera
They mean a very high standard of terms of gadgets and appliances, fir and automobiles, and a large suppl green cash. We are inept at farming b foolish as to imagine we shall grov terms of material things, through th of Vermont soil. But how are we make a living—a bare living? The that we do not expect to make a "ba Still it is a good question, even thoug that does not trouble either Bets or

Now, months an mont win we moved Reach F know the f feet on icy have felt knife throu we though sealed to
We have a our sleds headlong the hill ba house in a it took co breathe.
learned to the horse difficulty, chores hu times and our first crops app garden gr nificently.

We ha reasons fo this kind much diff simpler fr thought w when we married.
some glam work then glamour t life. For a worked in of Strateg in Washi both went fices each tried to money. W burgers, beans and tatoes ne

WHAT IS THE ANSWER—CAN TEACHERS AFFORD TO TEACH?

● Bob Hart teaches in a rural school near Verona, Virginia. So does his wife, Clara Belle, temporarily. Bob has hit top salary—$3400 after 15 years' experience. With three children and a fourth on the way, the Harts have a struggle but decide they can stay with it. Bob's story . . .

TEACHING IS MY LIFE

By JEAN TODD FREEMAN

● But in Trenton, N.J., respected teacher Ed Hough, wife Lilli and three young sons face a farewell to a dream. Ed felt he had to leave the schools, take over a gas station with another ex-teacher to avoid pell-mell debt. Ed explains why. "If you could get the facts to the people, I think something would be done. I've got great faith in people." Ed's story . . .

I QUIT TEACHING

By BETTY COE SPICER

HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES—next month—may determine how our children live tomorrow, as two typical teachers speak, and ask you to decide.

meal. With our friends we had inter conversations about Governmen about the part our offices played in w and our dreams of a better world. Ou room walk-up was never really a hor place to prepare quick breakfasts ar a place where late at night and on could study my lawbooks. It was our cold cellar now—a place to st ables but not a place to enjoy then like squirrels in those days, roaming separately, returning at night to c periences and discoveries. Our joy but we thought that was the price ahead" and that it was worth it.

The long separation of wartime differently. Bets moved to my par in Hartford, Connecticut, and to time job in an insurance agency t time until Denny was born. In one ters to me, she wrote: Don't worry you're going to do when this war f We'll find something, and anything with me if it makes you happy. Onl will find something we can work at

There is a good deal of pleasure a weekly newspaper, but there a many headaches also. Although

...nd writing editorials, I loathed the ...art—and that is the main part, or it ... be. Advertising sustains the small- ...ly, and usually job printing makes ... money for the business than the ... itself. I always had a feeling of ...d meanness about business, as ...vere trying to get something away ...body else—trying to put the other ...he same tight spot I was trying so ...o be in myself. On the farm we feel ...rking in harmony with the world, ...g it.

...ealth is one of the priceless ingredi- ...ppy family life—and we took ours ... until, in the summer of 1952, all of ... except Denny suffered mild attacks ...e didn't know it was not going to ...t the time and the world seemed to ...out our heads. Fortunately, we all ...in a few weeks without apparent ...he only one who suffered after- ... Bets, who should have stayed in ...isted on getting up to take care of ...st most of the strength in her right ...lder, leg and in her back, and has ...ly by constant exercise regained it. ... after the rest of us had polio, Bets ... came down with hepatitis. When I ...he same illness a week later, Bets' ... lived nearby and were always ...lp, took Denny and cared for him ...me. Friends took the three other ...d Bets and I went to the hospital ...ree weeks. We convalesced, mostly ... nearly six months—blissfully re- ...our children. Bets recovered about ...ead of me.

...ver had any idea how we were ex- ...olio or hepatitis—no doubt illness ...s inexplicably to people who live ...but after that siege the clear air ... of crowds in Northern Vermont ...cially good to us, and somehow we ...learer to one another. We wanted ... of life, now more emphatically ...st living together again was far ...n the chase for material things.

..., the four children were a consid- ...haps the most important one—in ... to get out of business and move ...try. In our garden the one best- ... priceless crop is our children. We ...to know and appreciate Nature. ... be a closely knit family, working ...e know of no way to give our ...at we believe is best in life more ...han on a farm. There is so much ...n to take part in and to share that ...d in no other way of living.

...reezers out in the shed are full of ...bles and meat we have raised, and ...n the cold cellar sag under the ...aches, pears, jams and pickles that ... up. At dinner the other evening, ...d, "We raised all this food except ...r and coffee."

...ked half the peas we're eating," ... not," Sal answered. "I 'specially ... is big one. I took it out of Stevie's ...mmer. Look, you can see where ...in."

...ssistants and I had worked hard ...ur vegetable garden all day and ...onsumed the mammoth meal of ...atoes, peas, asparagus and our ...m with fresh strawberries. Bets ... empty serving dishes and clean ...ook her head. "I don't know why ...l about a career," she said. "I am my mark on the world."

...e whole family went with me in ... utility trailer to get a load of ...ughs for banking against the ...ouse to ward off the winter wind. ... gate Denny, the eleven-year-old ...mped out to open it. "C'mon, ...d, "I'll show you how to do it." ...ed in jeans, jersey and jacket and ...y work boots that once belonged ...ed out and watched him remove ...s. He explained the simple pro- ...ay that was apparently too com- ...ally.

..."s a boy's job," she said conde- ...Why don't you show Stevie?" She clumped with determined daintiness back to the jeep. "Mommy and I are the only girls in this family and we have important work like making beds and fixing meals and having babies. Isn't that right, mommy?"

Bets looked slyly at me. "Well, Sal," she said, "sometimes it's a little hard to tell just what is a man's work and what is a woman's. It's better when we all help each other."

I don't know that the children noted the wisdom in her answer as I did, but I think inevitably they must absorb it.

For several years now we have had three pigs—three different pigs each year, of course. But their names remain the same: Faith, Hope and Charity. The children, who have the job of feeding the pigs, know that Faith and Hope will end up in our freezer, but the proceeds from Charity belong to them to give to others. The first year Denny was the only child large enough to lug the buckets of glop, and for a while he was convinced he had made a bad bargain. He grimly staggered out with the heavy pails, trying not to breathe as he neared the pigpen. But when the $58 Charity brought was in his hands, he had the pleasure of deciding how to give it away. That year Charity went to a CARE package for Korea, a box of groceries which Denny selected for a needy family (and delivered anonymously), a Christmas box for the family of the little Negro boy who spent a summer vacation with us through the Fresh Air Fund, and to several other projects of the children's choosing. Each year since they have demanded a renewal of that first agreement. Whenever they feed the pigs they look upon one of them as a CARE package or some other gift to someone who needs it.

When we got the latest set of Faith, Hope and Charity, Denny said to me, "It's harder to make money on a farm than on a newspaper, isn't it?"

"Seems to be," I told him, "especially when you know as little about farming as we do"; and he said:

SHOES, ANDREW GELLER; DRESS, ARLE; FURS, JULIUS SARGAVY. ACCESSORIES, EMILY WETHERBY.

Fabulous fashion investment: sheer sheer Berkshires, the full-fashioned stockings that wear so well and look so glamourous

Only full-fashioned Berkshire Stockings have the Nylace Top and Nylace Toe-Ring . . . twin run-stoppers!

the pantie
your legs can't feel

Pantie fan or not, you'll be completely won over by this completely different new Gossard. It combines 3 (!) kinds of elastic to ensure absolute leg freedom plus fine figure control. Of nylon tissuenet with satin elastic panel and lacy elastic finish at the legs. Petite-S-M-L. White. $7.95

curved and lacy
so it never,
never binds your legs!

seated low so it holds you in—beautifully!

paneled so it smooths your tummy—unbelievably!

at leading stores and shops or write us, we'll tell you where

Gossard
Youthful Line of Beauty

THE H.W. GOSSARD CO., 111 E. CANAL ST., CHICAGO 6 • NEW YORK • SAN FRANCISCO • ATLANTA • DALLAS • TORONTO

"Well, we decided that maybe this year the biggest pig should be Faith. O.K.?"

O.K.! If the children learn that "making a living" is more than making money, we are accomplishing one of our objectives. One year we raised a fourth pig named Maintenance for a neighbor in return for a supply of skim milk. This year, no milk, no Maintenance, and we'll see if we can have Charity without Maintenance.

Often, like all parents, we marvel at the difference in our children. Sally, for example, seems to me so much different from any of the others, perhaps because she is the only girl. "Everybody" and "outdoors" have been her favorite words since she first learned them. Sometimes she looks like an urchin who has never been in a bathtub, her face and jersey streaked with misplaced food, her blue jeans on backward and her shoes on the wrong feet. Then suddenly she will appear, usually on Sunday morning, with her hair neatly combed, her face shining clean, her clothes in perfect order—the picture of six-year-old femininity.

Denny is the oldest and delights in being "boss." He takes responsibility gravely and is a real helper in any job. Alan is the baby, a diminutive Winston Churchill, of all-embracing, sunny disposition. Stevie is in-between—he's the questioner, the boy who takes things apart, inquisitive and intelligent, but more often subdued than any of the others.

It's fun to mix the whole batch of them up in a whacky dance as we do occasionally before bedtime when they are in their sleepers, pajamas or nightgowns. Bets and I will burst into one of their bedrooms, dancing together to the tune of one of the records they play in the evenings. Stevie, with pleading look, grabs hold of my trouser leg and looks up questioningly. Have we lost our minds? In his crib Alan thumps and crows like a rooster in a cabbage patch. Sally shouts "Look at me!" and twirls madly until she is too dizzy to stand. Then Bets will call a square dance and we will dance every way but square. It's a mad scene that I am sure no one can understand except the participants.

MUCH of Bets' and my desire to "be a family" with our children comes from the happy example of my parents. It may be not in the best of modern taste or psychology for a man to say his mother and father are good examples of good living, but that is the way I feel and I am sure Bets agrees with me. She is one wife who learned to love her mother-in-law with very little difficulty.

Bets never had younger brothers or sisters. She had not held a tiny baby in her arms until she held her own. During her stay with my parents when I was in the Army, she and mother talked about the small, important things that interest every housewife. I conversations, and as she helped w housework, she took on my mother's in managing a house well, the joy of a happy home atmosphere, and a s sharing in family life that she had known before.

With mother, Bets relived all the old jokes: the struggle to get my brother teeth clean after he had chewed on a t the time I paraded self-consciously d street with my first date, suddenly to garter had let loose and was flapp snapping at every step; that beau n had who unintentionally gave her a b rotten fruit. And the visiting minister ill-fitting set of false teeth which he ately recovered, like a frog catching a eral times during his sermon. And when Van, my youngest brother, from a runny nose, made a speech in and discovered, midway, that he did a handkerchief.

WHEN Bets and I last saw my mo was dying of cancer. "I feel lazy," "Isn't that disgusting when you are a She apologized for her frequent c Then she whispered, "What a nuisan so weak you can't hug anyone you l

All these things mean a great dea but even more, in the practical terms living, to Bets. A few days later v telephone rang early in the morning what the message would be. We both a standing side by side. "The trumpets for mother at five this morning," dad didn't anticipate, and haven't been at get since, the way he phrased it.

Our career as a family is in full sp moment; the success of our farmi remains to be seen. We are trying c farming in an area where it has not b extensively before. We expect to raise other short-season cash crops—speci raspberries, strawberries, blueberrie paragus. We plan to build sever housekeeping units at various plac acreage and rent them out to vacati ing the summer, for the hunting or s son, "sugaring-off" time, or for t fishing. Meanwhile, we hope to kee a variety of farm stock, including c pigs, chickens, probably some tu sheep, as well as bees, to supplemer we raise in our general home ga farm is not our total support as yet, we have used but little of the mo aside to see us through the first few

I had the notion of thrift ingraine a child, and by necessity as well as are great practitioners of this old Ne

HOW THE PARKERS SPEND THEIR MONEY EACH MONTH

Scud and Bets bought their farm in October, '53, with money from for property they sold. Income for '54 is estimated only roughly at $4100: $1 from farm produce; $700 from Scud's working out at haying, plowing, sug ing, other farm chores; $1000 from his writing work; $900 from a trust fu legacy, and investments made after sale of their newspaper business house. "We can't expect a beginning farm to bring in much income the f year, so we're prepared to meet the difference from savings until the cr and animals get a chance to pay for themselves, and for us." Aver monthly expenses at the beginning of their venture run:

Food staples not grown, and household supplies	$60.00	Utilities (phone $7, gas $12.30, electricity $16.50, wood for heat free)	3
Clothing (Bets sews)	10.00	Miscellaneous personal (including children's allowances, gifts, some savings)	1
Home repairs	15.00	Pig, chicken, turkey, cattle feed	3
Property taxes	7.00	Seeds, plants, etc.	1
Medical and dental (includes health insurance)	20.00	Breeding fees
Insurance on life, house, car	72.00	Gas, oil, repairs for jeep, garden tractor, chain saw	3
Car running and repair expense	16.00	Fencing-cost average
Periodicals (many come from friends)	2.00	Fertilizer
Benevolences	15.00	Miscellaneous farm expense
Recreation	1.00	Total	$3

and I have stuck by the rule we e we were married—"no charge t saves a lot of headaches around ch month and it lends an enchanting, because we save for, discuss ite every major purchase. When ought the new vacuum cleaner nted for so long, it was a source of whole family. As each child was ned a bank account in his name we add to that, through gifts the ive and other sources, with a goal ar. That's a goal we often don't ost about 90 cents where we live, boys' hair. Every once in a while estling with that job I feel a twinge

I remember the times dad cut my ought of those squeaky, dull hand bing up the back of my neck, pinching every inch of the way, udder still. But we have modernxtent of having electric clippers.
s my hair. She has to look at it—e obvious at this point that I, and es our family, and perhaps our would be as nothing without s hardly anything a man can say is wife that doesn't sound asinine uld I say that it is fun to be with

, to watch the way she smiles, the cts to anything that happens?
about the way she works so hard time to help me with whatever o get done? Should I say I like cooks? Should I say I love her such a good mother? Or maybe nest all through, utterly faithful?
sounds deeply convincing. There describe the many bonds—and t make a marriage. Words only gs we say at meals, the times we together, the evenings we read the Bible with our children help are that a happy family is not and father and children, but the ent of their dependence upon and upon something far greater the time when Denny and I first eling of smallness, this recognidependence on something we rstand or explain. He was about we had spoken of God to him plain that the strength, resources ven of parents are terribly lim-noon, just before dark, we dea walk in the woods. The walk any other, with Denny darting ing behind, calling for me to wait. As we neared the woods, er changed. Woods do some-n and to adults. The things you n you are crossing a meadow ght when you are walking on neath big trees. Denny's ques-serious subjects, like bears and ffalo. As the sun slipped farther d closer, until finally, with the real dusk, his hand slipped into h the coming of dusk another ace in our conversation. Alone gether, Denny felt small and I we talked of bigger things—n bears or Indians or buffalo.

l hooted and we both jumped.
nger a father and son in the e two children. Our interests nd we spoke the same language.
ally make things grow?" Denny od make the stars? How?"

nd talked for most of an hour, mpletely dark. I carried Denny en a long walk for him and he me, filled with a sense of small-tion of how little people know, derstand, and how much there rol.

es when life seems almost im-ed and complex, and other when love of and faith in God and so recognizable that they ble. Unexpected insights often nd me in what seems to be a xperience.

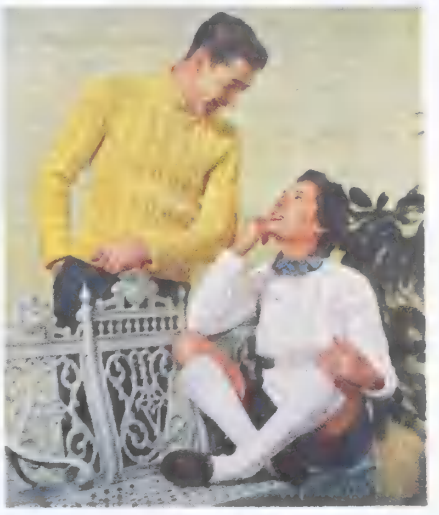
Such a time may come as we check the youngsters before we go to bed, as it did the other night. "Look at Alan," Bets whispered. Together we leaned over the side of his crib, watching the smile on his face as he slept. He lay flat on his back, his arms flopped by his sides, the palms of his hands turned up. Of what was he dreaming? A whole box of chocolates, perhaps?

On the other side of the room was Stevie, no doubt dreaming of the "cutter-grassers," "tractor hay-balers" and all the other "bachinery" that fascinates him.

In her room Sally was completely twisted around in her bed, with her feet on the pillow, her bottom sticking up, with bunched sheets, blanket and bedspread beneath her. I wouldn't even dare to guess what she might be dreaming about.

From his room Denny muttered in his sleep—something like, "Caught it, caught it!" Judging from his expression, he was hearing the applause of the crowds in Yankee Stadium after he had made that long run back to the right-field fence and snared the ball that would have gone for a game-winning homer but for his magnificent catch.



Bets and I couldn't get to sleep ourselves for a long time. We raised the shades on the windows of our room and pulled the curtains aside so we could see the high hills rising in the moonlight. "So many people were worried about our being isolated here," Bets said. "Why, we have the whole world around us!"

She spoke with quiet excitement. Her voice sounded just as it had at our wedding when she promised "I will." We listened in silence to the small sounds that children make in their sleep—the rattling of rugged little Alan's crib as he squirmed around, a sudden unintelligible squeak from Steve, Denny's cough and the steady rhythm of Sally's breathing. We lay there surrounded by those we loved, counting our blessings, and in awe and worship thanking God. END

GLAMOUR GIFTS to knit and crochet for Christmas

RED HEART ORLON makes these festive sweaters. The luxury look in Fashion Yarn (left), the sparkle-knit in Fashion-Glo (right). Directions for articles on this page in Style Parade #506.

QUICK KNITS are the news for fun North or South, in Red Heart Knitting Worsted.

JUMBO STITCHES are the fashion . . . and quick work with Red Heart Knitting Worsted.

You'll get enchanting results with Chadwick's new

RED HEART ORLON* YARNS

Fashion Yarn in 7 colors . . . Fashion-Glo in 6 glitter-colors

Soft and luxurious to the touch, yet so practical—mothproof, fast-drying, won't shrink out of shape. Exquisite colors plus glamorous glitter. Expensive-looking but popular-priced. No wonder Red Heart Orlon knitting yarns are such important fashion news! Fashion-Glo yarn has a sparkling metallic strand in colors, including gold and silver—all tarnish-proof and hand-washable. Both of these Red Heart Orlon yarns come in the famous Tangle-proof® Pull-out Skeins that save you the time and trouble of winding. A joy to work with, these beautiful new Red Heart yarns make gifts that are a joy to give and get!

Du Pont's acrylic fiber.*

Get these NEW BOOKS and get started

Exciting gifts for the whole family! Style Parade #506, fabulous ideas for Red Heart Orlon, plus new quick knits for Red Heart Knitting Worsted. Afghans with Matching Pillows #505, designs for contemporary décor. Baby Book #507, more charming than ever! Each only 25¢—at needlework counters.

ELEGANCE in a pillbox and matching handbag is easy with Red Heart Orlon Fashion-Glo.

GOLDEN GLOW, pretty and festive in Red Heart Orlon Fashion-Glo, is heart-winning.

JEWELLED COLLAR is glitter-crocheted of Red Heart Orlon Fashion-Glo. Dreamy!

CHADWICK'S Red Heart® ORLON YARN—a member of the famous Coats & Clark's "O.N.T." Thread Family . . . your guarantee of good value

Dear Mrs. Norman: I wonder how many women feel as frustrated as I do. Women like myself who are too busy housekeeping and raising children to afford beauty treatments and expensive clothes, but would like to improve themselves.

We see our husbands admire models and actresses and inwardly probably wondering why their wives don't keep up their appearances. I am twenty-nine years old, married at seventeen and a still-in-love wife with three children.

I know the power of make-up, hair styling and clothes, but without the know-how or confidence how does one start to improve?

I feel very low. Can't you help me, and others who feel the way I do?

Sincerely yours,
Mrs. Grace Visconti
Ridgefield, New Jersey

LEOMBRUNO · BODI

Self-criticizer (above, left) turns into self-analyzer and makes the most of her discoveries (above). Clothes that fit (she'd been wearing them three sizes too big!), eyebrows thinned to eliminate an apparent frown were two of the several simple steps that led to a real beauty transformation.

"I NEED TO BRING MYSELF OUT"

By DAWN CROWELL NORMAN
Beauty Editor of the Journal

GRACE VISCONTI'S before-and-after pictures were taken only a few hours apart. Yet the improvement in her appearance is almost unbelievable. What has transformed the drab, uninspiring-looking girl on the left into the vivacious brunette on the right? Nothing more than a series of little beauty steps based on these

SIMPLE POINTS IN SELF-ANALYSIS

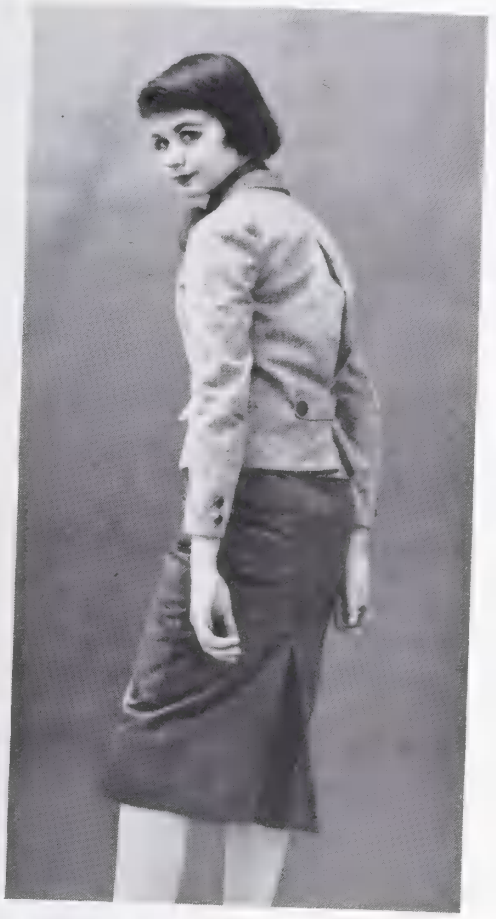
Heavy straight eyebrows growing too close to her eyes made Grace look as though she was constantly frowning. Her face livened immediately after her eyebrows were plucked from underneath and shaped to arch slightly. Little short strokes of eyebrow pencil were used on top to accent arch, give upward sweep to outer corners.

Mousy eyelashes can dull the color and expression of your eyes. With a modest amount of black mascara brushed on Grace's eyelashes, they look thicker, longer, eyes seem brighter.

Deep-set eyes, like Grace's, should never wear eye shadow. When eyes are prominent (or light in color) shadow can be used to pretty advantage.

Drooping lips can make you seem sullen. For Grace, we used a lipstick brush to follow the naturally pretty line of her lips until we got to the outer corners. There, the color was curved up slightly to give a more pleasant expression.

Unless your teeth are pure white pearls (Grace's are), take special note of what your lipstick color does for them. The purply, bluish shades are not half so flattering as the clear reds or reds touched with pink or coral.



Sallow skin can sour your looks. Grace's olive complexion needed lightening and brightening to give more delicate contrast to near-black hair, brown eyes. Creamy make-up base in pinky beige and powder to match did the trick. All make-up was applied lightly, with excess tissued off to create "it's-my-own-color" look.

Grace's shapeless hairdo exposed her big ears, frizzed off in all CONTINUED ON PAGE 172

Stop, look and learn a lesson!

mu." for school this year. A co cotton skirt with a wonder- su ght little cotton tweed jacket. on s such a smart year-round ..d takes so little upkeep!

What a shame to let shrinkage ruin such a smart outfit! Take care when you shop! Be sure all your cottons are marked "Sanforized"—and then they will always keep their smartness!

You can't make the grade in school without a jumper—and here's a honey. An easy-livin', full skirt with a prim empire waist—and, of course, in plaid! Tailored shirt is really tailored.

Tight squeeze—the jumper flunked its washing test. A cotton can actually shrink two sizes in a few washings! So always look for the "Sanforized" label . . . it guards against shrinkage.

t party dress to take back nd believe it or not, it's a otton with a little collar o make room for pearls or f!

If our heroine had spent just a second to see that her dress said "Sanforized," she wouldn't be in such sad shape! A "Sanforized" cotton can never lose its good fit. NEVER!

Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc. permits use of its trade-mark "Sanforized," adopted in 1930, only on fabrics which meet this company's rigid shrinkage requirements. Fabrics bearing the trade-mark "Sanforized" will not shrink more than 1% by the Government's standard test.

YOUR FEET ARE SHOWING BEAUTIFULLY IN
the new Enna Jetticks

Fashion and flattery step out together in these smart new shoe styles! They slim your foot to a beautiful profile, give you lightness and grace that feel wonderful, too!

Stop in at your nearest store carrying the new ENNA JETTICKS. See how beautifully they fit all your costume needs.

Doris

Midtown

Fancy Free

$9.95 and $10.95

®

ENNA JETTICK SHOES, INC., AUBURN, N. Y.

WHY DON'T THEY LIKE US ABROAD?

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 47

Well, in some places a cold, reasoned analysis of what is in their best interests determines which way a country moves—but in other countries emotion has much more to do with it.

MISS HICKEY: You see it as almost a new kind of diplomacy between peoples, Mr. Stassen?

MR. STASSEN: World association. And there is no precedent for it and no one can say categorically that it can succeed.

We in the United States are in a position where our production, our economic and military strength require us to fulfill the responsibility of leadership. But we do not want to lead by the force of requiring others to move with us. We want to move by their voluntary decisions. And we all know this is the most difficult way to get people moving together.

MISS HICKEY: Let us try now to get at some of the unfavorable impressions people have of us, and what causes them. Mr. Max, we would like you to start because of the country-wide poll your magazine took in France.

MR. MAX: Well, when it comes to how the French people feel about the American people, the poll shows not very much unfavorable comment. On policy—but you want to get to that later.

Now one of our questions was, "What foreign country do you like most?" The United States came second, behind only Switzerland.

Then we asked for their reactions to what adjectives described Americans, and the two that by far were the highest ranking were "practical" and "go-ahead." And those are qualities the French admire.

"The French people think fear of communism is leading Americans to practices which are not compatible with democracy as they preach it."

MRS. McCLOY: May I interrupt and tell a personal story? I lived in France many years ago and I took my young children there about three years ago. On our first morning in Paris we got in a taxi to drive to the Étoile, and when the taxicab driver heard me speak English to my two children, he said, "Why don't you Yankees go home?"

He was a most impossible person but I answered him, terribly provoked, and then I said, "Would you mind stopping this taxi?" and we got out. "I have loved France for many years," I said, "and I don't want my children to have their first impression of France from somebody so un-French and so ungracious and disagreeable as you are."

And then—he bowed to me and said, "Madame, you are charming! Will you forgive me? One only slaps one's sister."

MR. MAX: The poll does show that the overwhelming attitude of the French is sympathy and affection for Americans and there is no active dislike.

For instance—the most unfavorable opinion is the one that Americans are overgrown children, that is to say that Americans have the outward appearances that go with extreme youth—they are noisy, they brag ——

MR. STASSEN: Does this mean they also think we haven't shown the maturity and reserve they think we should have in world affairs?

MR. MAX: Yes. You find this same thing in articles in some newspapers in France and from political commentators—and the word "immature" is often used. To go on:

You have 27 per cent say it is completely true that Americans are overgrown children, 35 per cent say it is true enough, and only 19 per cent say it is false—the rest have no opinion. But the French do not think Americans are uncultured—43 per cent say that it is false that Americans are uncultured. "Uncultured" is rejected. You understand that these words were not taken at random, but they come from a list of the most frequent comme had actually been heard in conve about Americans.

"Only interested in money"—that is ment you hear very often: 32 per cent that was true, 34 per cent that it w enough. But "militarist"—that was cor rejected by almost half.

Now here is something which I t terribly important because it go deep. That is the comment which y often, that Americans are hypnot the fear of communism.

Question: Hypnotized?

MR. MAX: Yes, that is the word u gets acceptance; 34 per cent think pletely true, 30 per cent true enough per cent false. This goes very deeply the French live with 25 per cent of the citizens communists and every Fr knows several communists and often them very well. Therefore, he cannot its face value the idea that everybody communist is evil or must be done aw He cannot accept that, because in Fr happens that you have militant cor who take their orders from Moscow you have a large mass of people wh vote for the communists.

Question: Who just believe in the communism?

MR. MAX: Yes, without any ref Russia. It is a class-solidarity vote. It test vote again of class go which exists and it doesn't lack of loyal voter. As a re this the Frenc that America much afraid munism or R too much afra munists, com dividuals.

Question: make it very them to follo and understa

MR. MA And also ha to understa There is the that "Americ understand affairs"—tha ceptance. Ov you do not Another t was thought true was that Americ way of treating us "like poor relat

Now, here is a question which re ings. "Do you have any of the foll ments concerning the United Sta dislike, gratitude, hate, admiratio jealousy." Sixty-one per cent sai the United States. Thirty-two pe they felt gratitude. Dislike—8 per only 1 per cent.

And then we asked, "If you ha officer in your home which would a Russian or an American?" The Russian, 9 per cent; American, don't know, 32 per cent.

MR. ELLIOT: That is very ex Asking the British a question lik be like asking whether you wo have an Eskimo come to stay whether you would prefer to your own cousins. The idea tha prefer a Russian is somethi don't think would come into the at all!

MR. MAX: Well, as to the whether the presence of Ame helps or hinders good relati spot where they are actuall think, on the whole, the rea favorable.

MR. ELLIOT: When you ha flood of very young men you are reactions to young men—the liking or dis specifically anti-American or p

In Britain I think the 61 per cent figure who like Americans would be equaled or surpassed. Partly because of the enormous amount of migration that has gone on between the two countries. And partly because we British have had many English-speaking people among us who were not English—so that we are quite accustomed to another kind of person who speaks a very similar language and has very similar ideas but is not at all identical.

MISS HICKEY: What happened in India, Mr. Bowles, when the people there had their first contact with us in large groups rather than as individual tourists?

MR. BOWLES: On the whole I think the reaction was good. For instance, the large delegation of American social workers who came to the International Conference of Social Work in Madras in December, 1952, were enormously popular. They had done their homework on India and Asia before they came and they were very sensitive to Indian attitudes.

Not all the Point Four people—that is, the technicians sent out by our Government to help Indian development—have been well chosen in a technical sense. But as a group they have made a major contribution to a better understanding—simply because they were decent, hard-working, sincere Americans genuinely anxious to do what they could to support India's democratic effort.

Some transient visitors create misunderstandings—and this would include an occasional congressman going through India in a hurry, feeling rather important, and not really stopping to hear what Asia has to say.

Question: Have you made surveys of this in India?

MR. BOWLES: I wish we had. The only poll I can offer is my own poll, which covered 200 Indian students studying in America. I asked each of these students to write me a frank, complete letter about their stay in the United States, what they liked and what they disliked.

I had letters running to ten pages and they followed an extraordinarily similar pattern. The things they liked best were our willingness to work hard, our lack of class consciousness, the feeling that in America you could move ahead according to your abilities. They liked the simplicity of most Americans, their honesty, their desire to learn.

There were only two adverse things and they came through in most of the letters. First, the color line we draw in many parts of the country. Second, they asked, "What in the world is America afraid of?" That came out in almost every letter. "Why are you so ridden with fear? You didn't build your country on fear, you built it on faith, and yet you resort to fear ——"

Question: What fears did they mean?

MR. BOWLES: The fear that we will be gobbled up by communism, and fear of each other. They expressed the belief that we Americans are becoming more and more driven by what we are against rather than what we are for. Only five letters failed to mention this fear that they sensed throughout America.

I wasn't really surprised that the color question came up so prominently and with such feeling. One Indian student at a Midwestern university wrote me that he had gone to one of our Southern states for a vacation and had had a most bitter experience. He was refused service in a restaurant and asked to leave a bus because of his dark skin, and he was deeply resentful.

We often forget that two thirds of all the people in the world are colored. The knowledgeable Asians know that we are making great progress in removing the old color prejudices—but they still cannot think of American democracy without considering the discrimination which still remains.

MISS HICKEY: You think the two major criticisms of us in Asia, then, are on our color problem and our fears?

MR. BOWLES: There is one other: our concentration on military answers to complex problems which Asians believe are basically political and economic.

Most Asians secured their freedom without military struggle. In Burma, India, Pakistan and Ceylon there was no great civil war or revolution. Three hundred and sixty million Indians became free of Britain through Wonderful send-off!

The pretty-lady look of a Ship'n Shore blouse!
Early or late — you're sparkling-fresh in these cottons with washable charms!

Ship'n Shore®
blouses

The feature blouse: tiny Paisley print with "roll-up" sleeves. Lower left: fly-front shirt with three-quarter, French-cuff sleeves. Center: gentry-collar tattersall check.
All: Wamsutta pima cotton, sizes 30 to 40, $3.98.
Child's broadcloth blouse, 7 to 14...$1.98

Ship'n Shore
THE SIGN OF A GOOD WASHABLE BLOUSE

New ARROW GINGHAM PLAIDS and other bright back-to-school ideas!

The world's most famous shirts for Dads are now available for lads!

Send your buckos back to learning in comfort and good looks. Arrow Shirts for boys are designed for Grads (sizes 12-20) and Juniors (sizes 4-12). These new Arrow Shirts are colorfast, ruggedly washable and a cinch to iron.

Above, a gingham plaid for Juniors. Neat, comfortable Arafold Collar. "Sanforized" fabrics. Only $2.95.

ARROW
SHIRTS FOR BOYS
by Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc.

The Grad Gabanaro. Comfortable Arafold Collar. "Sanforset" rayon gabardine. 16 colors. $5.00

Rugged corduroys for Grads and Juniors. In dark to light shades. Comfortable Arafold Collar. $5.00 and $3.95

Heraldic printed broadcloth. Exclusive patterns for Juniors on "Sanforized" fabrics. Arafold Collar. $3.50 political and economic pressure alone. So naturally they say, "It is people who are important, rather than machine guns."

Sometimes their criticism of us seems unbalanced and unfair. Once I asked an Indian statesman, "Why are you always so willing and quick to criticize America for every mistake you think we make and yet you rarely criticize the Soviet Union, which is responsible for our divided and bitter world?"

His answer was, "We expect so much more of you. We expect nothing from the Soviet Union. But we expect great things of America." He intended that as a compliment.

MISS HICKEY: Now we are getting into the question of how we as a country, through our policy, cause anti-American feeling abroad. Let us go back to Mr. Max and his survey in France. You say that the French love us as individuals. It is our policy, then, that is causing this growing feeling against us abroad, in your opinion? Let us be very frank.

MR. MAX: Well, there are small things and big things. To take a small thing—there is your visa policy. On the one side there is Russia and the Iron Curtain, and the French resent that they are not allowed to travel there. On the other side there is America, the leader of the free countries, and the French assume, therefore, that she should be willing and even invite people to come in and inspect her. However, there are just too many instances where somebody is refused a visa for reasons which they do not understand, or reasons which they think are futile and even absurd.

The French will admit the Americans have to take precautions against spies, but when they see a man like Maurice Chevalier, who is a very innocuous old crooner and movie actor, refused a visa to go to the United States, they are shocked. It is true he may have signed the Stockholm appeal for forbidding atomic weapons or something like that—but what harm can he possibly do? Many people who are not sympathetic to Maurice Chevalier personally take it as sort of a personal insult that a Frenchman who is obviously a good Frenchman is refused access to the United States without much explanation.

Also, there are the formalities. It is very difficult to get a visa to the United States. You have to sign all sorts of statements and inquiries are made into your past and people feel that it all goes too far. It is all under oath too. When I applied for my visa I was asked to state all the countries I had been in in the past thirty years, and the name of a person who still lived there who would give me a character reference. Since, twenty years ago, in China—which is now communist inquiry had to be made ——

Question: In England, Mr. Ellio the same problems?

MR. ELLIOT: Well, when I fir visa in 1946 I know it came as a bit that I, an ex-minister, had to be fin And this time when I came, I had to all over again.

Question: We are dealing with c but we treat them almost like enem what you mean?

MR. STASSEN: Our problem spies and espionage agents fro in without inconveniencing and ing and humiliating a lot of safe people.

MR. GOULD: Perhaps, in fairn U.S., we should point out that we h lice supervision once people are in. you are registered with police in eve a matter of course and forced to your passport.

MISS HICKEY: Well, this sma visas has certainly grown big, Mr. you other complaints?

MR. MAX: There is the fear nism we talked about earlier. The Fre think it is leading Americans to which are not compatible with der they preach it. McCarthy; the deal given the Rosenbergs; the case of th employee whose passport was take cause he didn't want to come home ing—these are things that are widel preted in France, and perhaps if the ter explained to us it would help.

Also, there are the things that French-American relationships. I v that the French are hypersensitive pride these days, after the years of so they are apt to resent anything ta if it possibly is also fair. For instance anyone praises the Germans at the the French, or tries to present Ger example to the French, that is consi insult. And it happens very often in Your Secretary of State, Mr. I has done some things which are mist in France. The French will always ing a decision forced upon them.

Now when one sees the total pa inaction and inability to make decis part of the French parliament, think that anyone is justified in usin tactics which might produce a re the French people are very sensiti

"Of course George discusses his finances with me, mother, but I never lend him more than five dollars!"

Dr Scholl's
ALL-O-FOOT
Cushion

S OVER TOE →

RELIEF
louses, rness,
ng at f Foot of soft FOAM

NEW! With-
, scientifical-
Dr. Scholl's
OT Cushion
e and nestles foot. Relieves painful callouses, burn-ss at once. Gives priceless walking ease.
ot you—absorbs the shock of each step.
Worn invisibly. Washable. Only $1.00
g, Shoe, Department and 5-10¢ Stores oll's Foot Comfort* Shops everywhere.
inable locally, order direct, enclosing f for woman or man.
L'S, INC., Dept. 8B, Chicago 10, Ill.

NIC SET!

e picnic set by sending us five adies' Home Journals at $6.00 1-yr. Holidays at $5.00 each.
ntains blue and gray quart tles each with four nested blue blue enameled metal lunch hite lining, 13¼" x 3¾" x 3¼".
grained, tan leatherette with a ner and dark brown reinforced ions must be sold outside your at the full advertised prices.

d renewals count, but not your personal gift subscriptions.
ibers' names and addresses on and mail with your own name nd full remittance. Offer good al U.S. only until December ry, no picnic sets sold for cash.

IRCULATION COMPANY
nce Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

SE TEETH
holds them tighter

a comfort cushion; holds dental plates nd snugger that one can eat and talk ort and security; in many cases almost natural teeth. Klutch lessens the dropping, rocking, chafing plate. 35c gists. . . . If your druggist hasn't it, ney on substitutes, but send us 10c ou a generous trial box.
, Box 5421I, ELMIRA, N. Y.

EWEL Cards MAKE $50.00 (and more) CASH oney. Show new JEWEL cards in friends and neighbors. They'll 0 other items. Name-imprinted r $1. up. BURGOYNE line. Chance THER PRIZES. Write today for Asd get FREE pen for prompt action.

FREE BALL POINT PEN IF YOU WRITE NOW!

R CO. Dept. 37G Westfield, Mass.

Perhaps there is a way for your country to get done what has to be done without giving people an opportunity to be hurt.

MISS HICKEY: Would you like to be more specific?

MR. MAX: You wanted France suddenly, after hundreds of years, to give up its national army and merge with other armies—and the French wanted to take their time deciding this important thing. Also, there are all sorts of remarks here that the French weren't fighting in Indochina—and the French feel they were the only ones fighting although it had become as much America's war as France's ——

MR. STASSEN: One hundred congressmen can make very understanding speeches, but let one congressman make a very wild, asinine statement and that is the front-page news!

If only other countries could understand that these individual statements by congressmen do not reflect the attitude of either the American people as a whole or the Government.

MR. BOWLES: I would like to make another point. I am afraid our difficulties are going to get worse rather than better. I believe the Soviet Union has made the very obvious discovery that pressure applied in Europe tends to unite the West—but that pressure applied in Asia tends to divide the Western nations not only from each other, but also from the free Asian nations which should be our friends.

MISS HICKEY: While you have the floor, Mr. Ambassador, would you like to list the policies which you think cause distrust in Asia—the small things and the large things?

MR. BOWLES: I agree that many of our troubles come from shortsighted and thoughtless remarks. For instance, several years ago we voted to give India the loan which she needed desperately to buy our wheat when crops failed. But we received less good will in return than you might expect, because so many unfriendly things were said in the course of the long and bitter debates in Congress. It is not always what we do—it is often the way we do it.

For instance, we often ask Asians the question: "Are you with us or against us?" They think that is an arrogant question and ask, "What if Britain or France had said that to you in the days when you were isolationist and trying to stay out of all wars?"

Some Asians, with their deep concern for spiritual values, also resent statements that we are the leader of the free world. "What kind of leadership are you talking about—moral or physical?" they ask.

And it's impossible to exaggerate their sensitivity about race. I shall never forget the shock I had after I had been in India just a short time and a businessman asked, "Why did you Americans drop the atom bomb on Hiroshima and not on Germany?" Before I could answer his friend interrupted to say, "I can tell you—because the Japanese are Asians. You didn't mind destroying them. You would not drop atom bombs on the Germans because they are white." I ran into this same question all over Asia and I had difficulty convincing people that the atomic bomb was not perfected until after the Germans had surrendered.

Do you know the communist line on the recognition of Red China? It follows the same pattern. They say that we have refused recognition to the Chinese communists because they are a yellow people and we don't want any more yellow-skinned Asians in the United Nations! It is ridiculous, but millions of them believe it. May I tell you a tale which I heard in many parts of Asia, and which illustrates another important point?

MISS HICKEY: Please do.

MR. BOWLES: According to this story, the Prime Minister of the little European kingdom of Monaco is supposed to have requested $10-000,000 in American economic aid. He was asked if there were any communists in Monaco and when he said there were none, he was told he couldn't get the money.

So he asked the Foreign Minister of a neighboring country if he could borrow a thousand or so communists to stage a few riots and thereby convince the Americans that the aid should be made available.

Life's going to be Different!

With a Smooth, Blemish-Free Skin That Invites Romance

No More hateful blackheads, overoily skin or externally caused pimples to keep you from having fun. You can be lovely, alluring. It's easy if you take these 3 steps:

Step One: Cut down sweets, pastries, starchy foods. Eat sensibly.

Step Two: Get your skin really clean. Hundreds of doctors advise Cuticura Soap because it is superfatted and contains soothing, healing Cuticura medication.

Step Three: At bedtime smooth on Cuticura Ointment. This softens and improves your skin as it helps clear it up.

In 7 Days: you'll begin to see fresher, clearer, smoother skin, radiant new complexion tone.

Want Faster Action? During the day use new "invisible" Cuticura Medicated Liquid under your make-up. Many doctors report results in 1 to 3 days! Get Cuticura at your druggist today!

Cuticura

FREE Soap sample and folder—shows you the right way to wash your face. Write Cuticura, Dept. LH9, Malden 48, Mass.

"I feel just like hugging myself!"

"I made up my own mind about Tampax. One day I decided—just like that!—to try it. And every wonderful thing I've read about it turned out to be true. What a grand and glorious feeling it is when you know you've done the right thing!"

Tampax sanitary protection can work wonders for you, too. There's a world of difference when your protection absorbs internally. Gone forever are the cumbersome belt-pin-pad harness . . . the fear of telltale outlines . . . the risk of chafing. Tampax can't be seen or felt, once it's in place.

There are many things that make Tampax appeal especially to fastidious women. The way it prevents odor from forming, for example. Or the fact that the user's hands need never even touch the Tampax. Even the problem of disposal is no longer a problem.

Millions of women use this doctor-invented product regularly . . . why don't you? Get your choice of 3 absorbency-sizes (Regular, Super, Junior) at any drug or notion counter. Month's supply goes into purse. Look for Tampax Vendor in restrooms throughout the United States. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

TAMPAX INCORPORATED
Palmer, Mass.

Please send me in plain wrapper a trial package of Tampax. I enclose 10¢ (stamps or silver) to cover cost of mailing. Size is checked below.

( ) REGULAR ( ) SUPER ( ) JUNIOR

Name.....

Address.....

City..... State.....

The Foreign Minister is supposed to have looked thoughtfully out the window and then said, "My friend, we would like to be a good neighbor, but our country needs every communist she has."

Asians who tell this story ask, "Would America take any interest in our problems if we had no communists? Wouldn't you then turn your backs on us? If that is so, then communists are a valuable asset. Is this your idea of moral leadership?"

Such reactions are totally unfair, irritating and frustrating too. But I believe we must understand them and strive to deal with them constructively.

MISS HICKEY: That is very severe criticism. Mrs. McCloy, do you want to add anything from your experience abroad?

MRS. McCLOY: I feel, after listening to all this, that probably our greatest hope lies in the need for a terrific amount of work with the written word—the press—because the good things never come out.

But I don't mean we should attempt to control the press or use propaganda. The German youth was tremendously bewildered by our censorship of our free libraries abroad. I don't think any instrument of propaganda was as powerful as were these very libraries. In less than a year and a half, 14½ million Germans went there to read anything—Russian books, things on both sides, criticisms. And then, suddenly, a few detective stories had to be removed from the shelves because the writer had allegedly once been a Communist Party member! It was, I think, a great blow to our prestige.

MR. STASSEN: Could it be said that it is when we depart from our own concepts of our own ideals and objectives and methods that we get into the most trouble overseas?

MR. BOWLES: Definitely!

MR. STASSEN: It is the abnormal or the extreme that has been giving us the trouble in Asia and elsewhere, even in South America. And things grow especially difficult when people abroad get to thinking that abnormalities represent America instead of the ideas which might be called the basis of America.

MR. ELLIOT: You never can tell what small things one nation will pick up about another nation. There are, however, some big things that worry us in Britain. For example—the exclusion of Britain from the ANZUS pact, covering the South Pacific—Australia, New Zealand and America—our Prime Minister wanted to join, but he was told to keep out. Then when the Indochina crisis arose you thought we were keeping rather aloof. Well, why didn't America recognize Britain's interest in the Pacific before trouble came along?

Or take the really big question of recognition of Red China. We have been criticized a great deal for recognizing China, for trading with her; and yet, what is the alternative?

We take the position that you have got to live with these people and that an attitude of refusing to accept some of the facts of the situation, such as the fact that the effective government of China is just now the Red government, seems to us unrealistic.

Again, you say you don't want physical leadership. But you are the leading military power whether you like it or not—and the mere refusal to use your power is, in itself, an act of power. But you don't seem always to realize this.

MISS HICKEY: You consider this unrealistic?

MR. ELLIOT: Yes, and you are unrealistic about the criticism you get as well as that you give. Take this criticism from India about your color problem, for instance. It was India that created the word "outcast"—and India where fellow Indians, if they are not of the right castes, must drink from the pools and puddles, rather than the wells. Again, nobody from India came across with enormous loans to develop America in the first place; the Americans hacked their land out with their bone and muscle and it seems a little hard that they should then be criticized for not helping sufficiently to do all the things that this ancient society of India hasn't tackled for itself in the thousands of years of its existence.

I also think you are too critical of yourselves, just as the British are too critical of themselves. Americans go about America denouncing Americans, and Englishmen go about England denouncing Englishmen.

Question: But you don't think we criticize you too much?

MR. ELLIOT: Well, there was the man from North Carolina who stood up in Trafalgar Square in the middle of London and said, "It is never really warm in this country and never really light either." But I had a great deal of sympathy with him on both points.

The really important things are these: We feel, as France does, that in world-policy decisions you don't give enough consultation with those who will be affected by these decisions and with those who will have to cooperate in them.

The very power and might and strength of your country make us feel like a rather nervous passenger in the back of a car driven by a college boy who has just been given a very distinguished award from his university and is

BACK COUNTRY

By ELIZABETH COATSWORTH

The farm was so old, shaken and crazy,
wind-blown, rain-darkened, askew with the ground heave—

The barns were so broken, the worn roofs rent open,
patched with tar paper,
propped up with poles—

The fields were so barren, with pines in the wall corners, and junipers leaving little pasture for cows—

The hills came so near,
shaggy and hostile,
the alders so closely thatched the small stream—

That it came as a shock to see at the window geranium's red,
and a child at the door.

going right down the middle of the road, high, wide and handsome, not caring whether he does hit something, because the world is his and he is out for the day.

We are afraid of being drawn into war by America, not because America is intent upon war as a policy, but because the drive of her policies might lead her into war, just as this student might land us in the ditch.

MRS. McCLOY: Just a few years ago you thought we were isolationists.

MR. ELLIOT: It is a different situation now. It is not isolationism now that we are afraid of. It is involvement.

Question: And do you share this feeling that we are too much afraid of communists?

MR. ELLIOT: Well, I would not use the word "hypnotized" as Mr. Max did—I think "preoccupied to an unreasonable extent." You take your secrets so darned seriously. By an overemphasis on security and regulations you may slow down the impetus, the pace of your scientific and economic drive, which is the real safety to your country. It is not guarding some secret somebody found out in 1945 that is important. It is, to make the discovery of 1956.

MR. STASSEN: I think out of this discussion the more or less fundamental feeling toward America is coming into view, and that is: the question of our appraisal of the communist danger and our policies in relation to it.

In America there is a deep-seated conviction that in the past two things have happened: one, we have remained too isolated from the dangers that were arising in various world and did not do our part ir them; and two, that these totalita were treated with too much uncon great a lack of firm opposition i stages.

Now there is the conviction America must not only take an a world affairs, but our policy mu soft as the approach that was early years to the problem of Hitle lini and to the Japanese war powers erupted into such great t

This conviction—that we must policy in relation to communist C Soviet Union—is in contrast to th expressed here today, of Britain who apparently want a softer ap because of this, you call us over dren, or college students in powe describe us as impetuous or exube while we can do some work in thi some of our differences, until we agreement on this fundamental the communist countries we will have a lot of differences. Isn't tha

MR. ELLIOT: Well, you use
"softer approach." I say—look t the road! You have either got to n these people or use crushing crushing action means war.

MR. MAX: I do not think th we question the leadership of the U I do not see our differences so sha we are agreed on the actual line t but not on just how it is to be ta

MR. ELLIOT: Our differences technique and timing than of obj

MR. STASSEN: We are certai agreed on trying to work in this ation toward world peace rat third world war. We are for fr we are all agreed in all our coun wishing to see communist spread to new territories if it vented in any reasonable man

MR. ELLIOT: I would fully that.

MISS HICKEY: So now, we we as people do to increase our c
Mrs. McCloy, what are your tho

MRS. McCLOY: We certainly to know each other better, we nee sonal contact, better information other. And then, on the policy le an approach that isn't quite so su way, that has more give and take

MR. MAX: If only more could come to the States! Trav the best way of finding out ab and becoming an active friend
The problem is money. It is ve to come here and people say, " side there is the Iron Curtain other side there is the Dollar

MR. ELLIOT: More wives sh to travel with their husbands to change scholarships there is seld for the wife to accompany her hus wife is at least half the show. She an unofficial secretary to her hus as guide, philosopher and friend:
she is in contact with the woman world and she learns the price of f of clothes, the ways of another MISS HICKEY: And what ca sonally, each one of us, about problems disturbing our relation

MR. ELLIOT: Good mann standing. A piece of casual rude part toward another nation or th bit of malicious gossip about a f cause as much trouble in the wo of hostile diplomatic action. D your Government to do everyth

Remember this is your world ing about. We have moved o period, where our ambition w tory, into a negotiating peri our ambition cannot be total have to accept that as part o tions under which we all try gether in the world today. U world understands every section totalitarian world may tip the ba us. The danger of the world b against the free world is real. So tions of world policy will need m than they have had, more give they have had, before they are nice, nicer, nicest—the last word is

Van Raalte

Flex-Fit lace top styles from $1.35 to $1.95. In your own proportions. At fine stores everywhere.

F.EX-FIT* proves a straight line is the smartest distance between two points

B veen any two points, this wonderful news w travel fast. For now Van Raalte's fashioned a ocking with seams that never twist—a stock- in that clings from top to toe, never wrinkles or ags at the ankles!

Flex-Fit nylons just glorify your legs—create the slimmest illusion. (The new Flex-Fit process even does away with fashion-marks parading down the back—so there's nothing to distract from the lovely effect.)

See for yourself—Flex-Fits are the nicest nylons you've ever worn. Which, after all, is just what you'd expect from Van Raalte. Always making the nicest—not only in nylons but in fashionable fabric gloves and lingerie, too.

ecause you love nice things—and Van Raalte makes the nicest

Save space!
Save money!

New 36-inch Universal Gas Range gives you 2 ovens for the price of 1

■ It's the biggest value, the most practical space-saving gas range ever designed! Two ovens, a full-sized broiler and four big lifetime top burners—all in a gas range only 36 inches wide! Easy to clean, too, with removable burner bowls and one-piece porcelain top. You get these and many more famous Universal features for about the same price as an ordinary single oven range. See this exciting new automatic Universal Gas Range at your dealer now!

Bake at one temperature! Roast at another! Two separately controlled ovens make meal timing easy. When a full-size oven is not required, enjoy extra economy with the smaller second oven.

Broils like charcoal! Cleans like magic! Universal's smoke-proof, In-A-Drawer Broiler conveniently slides in and out. Exclusive Whirlpool broiler pan with removable rings is easy to clean as a plate.

Gas gives the easier, cooler, cleaner cooking—for less. You bake best, roast best, broil best, cook best with gas on a Universal Gas Range.

Universal
GAS RANGE • Cribben & Sexton Co., Chicago 12, Ill.

ALL SET FOR SEPTEMBER

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 58

Drain it. It's awful watery. Season with salt and pepper and dress it with garlic butter to taste. To make the garlic butter, take ¼ pound, or less, of softened butter or margarine and work into it with vigor and a silver fork a clove of garlic chopped and crushed and made messy and untidy. That's it. Give it to the zucchini. You made it for that, or did you? And the ——— likes the idea.

MIXED-VEGETABLE SALAD

Prepare mixed salad greens, using lettuce, escarole, romaine and endive, or any leafy thing about. Just before serving add 3 hard-cooked eggs, cut into quarters or sliced. Finally mix in 1 small can chilled and drained mixed vegetables and ½ cup sliced radishes. Toss the greens with French dressing and season to taste with salt and pepper. Have bowl and plates very cold. Wait a second—I have an idea. If you like you might chop the eggs, season and mix with mayonnaise or Russian dressing. Spread on very small crisp toast shapes that have been made reminiscent of anchovy by "buttering" toast slices with anchovy butter before cutting. Now you'll have, by mixing these morsels amidst the greens, a most delicious surprisingly new salad. And a first edition—from me to you.

HOMEMADE RYE BREAD

Mix together ¾ cup lukewarm water, ½ cup molasses, 4 teaspoons salt, 1 to 3 tablespoons caraway seed and 2 tablespoons shortening. Add to this 3 packages yeast, compressed or dry, which have been softened in ¾ cup lukewarm water for 5 minutes. Mix in, first with a big spoon, then with your hand, the flour, using enough to make a stiff dough. This means 2 cups unsifted coarse rye meal, or 2¾ cups sifted rye flour, and 3½ to 4 cups sifted white flour. Turn the dough on lightly floured board; cover and let stand 10 minutes to tighten up, then knead until smooth and a little shiny. Any bread dough should get a patina, a sweet finish like the patina on old cared-for maple and seen on pewter on a Dutch sideboard. Bread dough kneaded as it rates will get it. Then it's ready for the rise.

Make a big ball and put it to rest in a greased bowl, too large for it. And far too high. Cover with a damp cloth and set to rise in a warm place, about 85° F., until it rises to double its bulk—1½ to 2 hours, depending on temperature. Punch down dough and divide it into 2 parts. Round up each part into a smooth ball. Put them in opposite corners of a corn-meal-sprinkled baking sheet. Cover with a damp cloth and let rise until light—about 30 to 45 minutes. No ti now. Let the determined little heath peace. Only, keep it warm. When gently with the finger, the imprin remain. Bake in a moderately h 375° F., for about 40 minutes. C rack.

If you wish to go Gallic, make the the shape of the French loaf; corne yard—or ought to. If you're hungr loaf under your arm, all sliced nearly nicely buttered or spread with garli or with a bud of fresh crushed garlic the slices, and eat as you go and pendent. You'll be perfectly indepe you follow these suggestions in trolle subway.

CHOCOLATE VELVET WI COFFEE CREAM

Cut 8 ounces sweet chocolate into p scald with 1½ cups milk in doub until the chocolate is melted. Softe velopes unflavored gelatin in ½ milk. Beat the chocolate and milk tary beater. Add the softened gelati sugar and ⅛ teaspoon salt. Stir solved. Cool until it begins to thick ½ cup light cream, ½ teaspoon vanil teaspoon almond flavoring, and 1 c cream, whipped. Mix to a smoothn until it begins to thicken again. It's as determined to have its five-year-old in a tantrum. Beat with beater. Pour into a 5-cup ring mo has been rinsed with cold water. C firm.

Sprinkle 2 teaspoons instant coffe cup heavy cream. When most of t has dissolved, add ¼ teaspoon va whip the cream stiff, adding 3 tab sugar as you beat. Whip it as if you Of course, you aren't.

Unmold the chocolate dessert. F the coffee-flavored whipped crea nish with shaved sweet chocolate to please you and my guests, and I does please most folks—sweet ch mean. When used for such a busines I was going to say only that, as personal preference, I like shav chocolate. With cream and over c and puffs and on all the galaxy carry the flag for my own p.p.p. spelled out above).

It's a hot day, this aftermath of sum preview of September and thus autumn. It won't be long now befor geese take their flight south. "I wo they chart their way. Why, of all this the day?" Yo

"If you left it up to men, they'd never think of marriage!"

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 14

ted by society. And in these mes and schools, even the t of them, exercise pro- rly less influence than they eration ago. Radio, movies, and cheap publications with family and school inn every home.
tes are acquired; and this o remark on comic books in ne "good" (or harmless) as bad. The craze for them, it ne, contributes to the arrest-mal mental development.
books have in the past been or only very young children, ning to read, and as aids to hildren who stick to comics cture books beyond the age ten simply do not learn to by the process of reading to eir minds and imaginations.
king, such as it is, remains "Comics" are thus a diet to bright dull, the dull feeble-nd the government by the ntually a dubious proposidemocracy, as the great cultures understand the function successfully only ucated citizenry.
it of reading is usually ac-
y or never acquired at all.
immensely pleasurable is by the fact that youngsters aders continue to be read-

People who have no weaknesses are terrible; there's no way of taking advantage of them.
—ANATOLE FRANCE

lives. And they almost al-ess themselves more acfelicitously than do those read, or, if they do, read ne—verbal trash.
book today has far more than a generation ago, uccessfully competes with adio and movies, among o are, by habit, readers.
's law" asserts the propo-bad (inflated) currency ound money. There is a law, also, regarding the of aesthetic tastes and processes. Few people nt "time" for continued tic cultivation and train-minds. But they will never for it at all if they spend available on idle absorpient, vapid and worthless ent," which so seldom Any twelve-year-old who d a taste for reading first-
—who are also the best
-will throw away almost rough sheer boredom.
omic" or picture book,
ft to the imagination of verything is depicted in a child reads a great or much of it will be beyond ding, but he takes out of can grasp. This I remem-own childhood. I cannot Puritan father ever for-ad a book. But the books ilable (or put in my way)
the currently approved er for youngsters or the ather presented me with
's Les Misérables on my day—thereafter having e for reading it at the or when I should be story of Fantine, her her illegitimate child,
Cosette, and the affection of the convict, Jean Valjean, for the little one, moved me to tears, but I had no notion of what a child "born out of wedlock" meant. I thought Wedlock was a town, and a fallen woman one who had slipped on the ice or her doorstep. But this did not impede my understanding of the basic themes of the novel. I followed Marius breathlessly through the sewers of Paris, never afterward forgot the magnificent account of the Battle of Waterloo, and discovered once and for all, in the contrast between the bishop and the detective, Jouvert, the difference between Christian justice and a routine police system. The effect of the novel was both to enthrall and to elevate, and what I did not accurately grasp I translated for myself within the limits of my childish understanding.

And I cannot think of a single great and enduring work of literary art, however "realistic," that has not dealt with the eternal struggle between good and evil, truth and falsehood, courage and cowardice, sin and redemption, with the author firmly on the side of virtue, if not always of accepted respectability.

I am convinced that nothing could more permanently drive out the evil or idiotic comics than a renaissance of reading good books. Parents, schools, television, radio and movies all have a contribution to make.

The test of a good book is in the reader's reactions. And, as I began with a word of Whitman, I will close with another:

"Do nothing which offends your own soul."

"It's so easy to get EXPERT RESULTS with these mouth-watering REFRIGERATOR ROLLS!"

Betty Crocker
OF GENERAL MILLS

"There's no kneading and the dough keeps for days. Your family will enjoy several bakings from this one recipe."

Betty Crocker® Gold MEDAL "Kitchen-tested"® Enriched FLOUR
BLEACHED ALL-PURPOSE
General Mills, Inc.
AMERICA'S FAVORITE FLOUR

Remember... Gold Medal Flour is your key to EXPERT RESULTS WITH EVERYTHING YOU BAKE

Because... it's tested daily to insure dependability ...then women like you test it in their own kitchens under home baking conditions.

REFRIGERATOR ROLLS

- 2 pkgs. active dry yeast (not compressed)
- 2 cups warm water or potato water (not hot—110° to 115°)
- 1/2 cup sugar
- 2 tsp. salt
- 6 1/2 to 7 cups sifted GOLD MEDAL "Kitchen-tested" Enriched Flour
- 1 egg
- 1/4 cup soft shortening

Dissolve yeast in water: add sugar, salt and just ½ the flour. Beat thoroughly 2 minutes. Add egg and shortening. Beat in remaining flour gradually by hand. Mix with hands until smooth. Place in bowl and grease top.

Cover with damp cloth: place in refrigerator. Punch down occasionally. 2 hrs. before baking, cut off amount needed. Roll dough ½" thick into oblong 12" wide. Spread with soft butter. Fold over in half; cut in ½" strips.

Shape into knots, twists and fi ure 8's: place on greased ba ing sheet. Brush with melte butter. Let rise until light (1 to 2 hrs.). Bake in moderate hot oven (400°) 12 to 15 mi
Makes 4 dozen medium rol

Don't wonder!

Don't worry!

Call today and be sure

If you're thinking about somebody or there's something you want to get settled . . . don't wonder, don't worry. Call Long Distance today and be sure.

It's quick, personal, satisfying. And the cost is low —much lower, we find, than most people think.

LONG DISTANCE RATES ARE LOW

Here are some examples:

New York to Philadelphia.....	40¢
Pittsburgh to Baltimore.....	60¢
Cleveland to Louisville.....	75¢
St. Louis to Dallas.....	$1.05
San Francisco to Boston	$2.00

These are the Station-to-Station rates for the first 3 minutes, after 6 o'clock every night and all day Sunday. They do not include federal excise tax. Low rates for similar distances all over America.

YOU SAVE TIME WHEN YOU CALL BY NUMBER

BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

"I NEED TO BRING MYSELF OUT"

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 162

directions. The new arrangement is young, flattering and can be maintained easily with two rows of pin curls every other night. Casual curls sweep over (and hide) her ears; the brushed-up forehead section gives an imaginary 2″ to her height of 5′3″; the shorter length proves she does have a neck—and a pretty one! With most of her frizzy permanent cut off, her hair has shape, shine and high lights!

Smooth top arrangements with interest at the sides can work comparable tricks for too-tall girls. A thin face rounds out when hair is cut, brushed and shaped into becoming fullness; roly-poly faces "reduce" when hair is sleek and upswept at the sides and tapered into a slender line toward the back. A well-chosen hairdo can conceal shaggy hairlines at forehead or nape; soften the effect of a too-broad brow; help balance a large nose, receding chin, prominent jawline.

Your clothes need to fit if you want them to flatter. Grace has been wearing a Size 14 and complaining about looking "shapeless and dumpy in it." Actually the size that fits her best is 7! Her tiny waist, delicate shoulders and small bustline were enveloped and lost in baggy, ill-fitting clothes. Her reason for buying fourteens was "to get a straight skirt to fit over my hips." Unintentionally, she was emphasizing her only figure fault. See how much daintier she looks in her soft-shouldered dress with a skirt that flares out from a nipped-in waistline.

A five-dollar house dress that fits you will do more for you than a costlier that sags or hikes. If you are not a dress size" count alteration charges a portant item in your clothes budget "best-dressed" women are that way they spend time and attention on d taking in, hemming up or letting out!

Short-waiste can usually fi ter fit in the or junior dep where clothes on shorter, ful Many of junior-size dr simple and cated enou women well p teens.

Tall girls d look for length (in waistlines an even if it me ing inches everywhere achieve a perf

Short-necke shouldered wo ware of shoul ding that thickens and adds bulk w least need it! Look for smooth, simple lines in suits as well as dresses.

Your most becoming color is not on ter of the way it sets off your hair or y What does it do for your skin tone you buy, look at the color against y in daylight.

Even your shoes can create a pretty for you. Wide feet and heavy ankles s when you wear simple, dark pump long, sleek lines (a low V shape in fro stance). Avoid fussy shoes and ank unless you want to draw attention to and legs.

WHICH FINGER FOR THE WEDDING RING?

The wedding ring is worn on the fourth finger of the left hand because the ancients believed that an artery ran directly from this finger to the heart. Thus "it was the properest to bear this pledge of love." For the same reasons, physicians used to mix their potions with this finger, as a safeguard to their patients, for it was believed that any poison touching even the extreme tip of the finger would at once affect the heart.

OTHER VIEWS, SIZES AND PRICES OF VOGUE PATTE ON PAGE 146

Vogue Design No. 8394. One-piece dress or jumper dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 6

Vogue Design No. 8320. Blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.

Vogue Design No. 8429. Jacket; 10 to 18; 28 to 36. 60c.

Vogue Design No. 8427. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.

Vogue Design No. S-4536. Coat; sizes 12 to 20, 30 to 42. $1.50. 3 yds. 54-i fleece lining fabric for a Size 14.

8394 8320

8429 8427 S-4536

Prin

Modess . . . because

Only New Design Modess gives you the luxury of a new whisper-soft fabric covering . . . no gauze . . . no chafe.

Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

BRECK CREME RINSE · A NEW PREPARATION OFFERED IN COMBINATION WITH A BRECK SHAMPOO

Breck Creme Rinse, a new preparation, is used after the shampoo to add softness, lustre and manageability to your hair. It also makes combing and arranging easy. Breck Creme Rinse is helpful in the care of permanent waves and in the prevention of dry, brittle hair. There are three Breck Shampoos. One Breck Shampoo is for dry hair. Another Breck Shampoo is for oily hair. A third Breck Shampoo is for normal hair. A Breck Shampoo is not drying to the hair, yet it cleans thoroughly. Choose the Breck Shampoo for your individual hair condition and follow with fragrant Breck Creme Rinse.

Special Introductory Offer – a 2½ oz. bottle of Breck Creme Rinse with $1.00 bottle of one of the Three Breck Shampoos – for dry, oily or normal hair. Both for $1.00 plus 3¢ new federal tax.

JOHN H. BRECK INC. MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD 3 MASSACHUSETTS
NEW YORK · CHICAGO · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA CANADA

SEP 20 54

JOURNAL

PUBLIC LIBRARY

October
1954~35¢

The Magazine Women Believe In

O VE WANT S HOOLS?

ro ems,
l p losophical,
ed y ize .
e ries no cti sol ion, lat u si lar
th r nit s.

R GOULD

LET'S ATTACK THE PROBLEMS. NOT THE SCHOOLS

Leading Am Educators Tell the Journal

B UNGLE

A Re ols

THE NEW PA ONS

8 PAGES
OF WHAT TO WEAR FOR FALL

New-formula Ipana®

with bacteria-destroyer WD-9

Destroys hidden decay and bad-breath bacteria. It's yours today—a tooth paste with a wonder ingredient so effective it destroys most decay and bad-breath bacteria with every single brushing. And new-formula Ipana combines this protection you need with a new minty flavor your whole family will prefer.

Topped all leading tooth pastes in 3159 taste tests. New-formula Ipana beat all other leading brands in 3159 "masked-tube" taste tests. It's the best-tasting way to fight tooth decay . . . stop bad breath all day long. Taste it . . . enjoy it . . . trust your family's precious teeth to it. At all drug counters now in the yellow and red-striped carton.

Fights decay the best-tasting way!

Ipana-a-a-ah!

Ipana A/C Tooth Paste (Ammoniated Chlorophyll) also contains bacteria-destroyer WD-9 (Sodium Lauryl Sulfate)

MAKE YOUR OWN TASTE TEST

Send for generous sample tube. Mail coupon today for trial tube (enough for about 25 brushings).

BRISTOL-MYERS CO., DEPT. J-104,
Hillside, New Jersey

Please send trial tube of new-formula Ipana.
Enclosed is 3¢ stamp to cover part cost of handling.

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ Zone____ State____

(Offer good in continental U.S.A. only. Expires Jan. 31, 1955.)

Dream Bread!

WHAT is dream bread? It is the loaf you hope to find when you choose from the different brands you see at your grocer's.

It tastes as good as it looks...and because of the pride and integrity of its baker, you know it is as good for you as it is good to eat.

That is the kind of loaf your neighborhood Sunbeam Baker dreamed of, too. And that is why, today, Sunbeam Bread is everything you could possibly hope good bread to be: made only of the choicest ingredients...with the finest equipment...and baked to perfection by your neighborhood independent baker whose heritage is in the finest traditions of baking skills.

That is why you should look for Miss Sunbeam at your grocer's. When you see her you will know that at last your dream bread has come true.

You can enjoy Sunbeam 1001 ways

Tempters for the lunch box

A sunny start for the day

Delicious 'tween-meal treats

® Quality Bakers of America Co-op., Inc.

Quality guaranteed—locally baked—nationally advertised.

Journal

Contents

October 1954

VOL. LXXI NO. 8

Journalities

We know writers who we think would be much more like themselves if they were other people, but not EVAN HUNTER, author of Blackboard Jungle (page 58). He is, in our opinion, exactly the sort of young man who could and should write such a startling novel. Born in Manhattan, he grew up in the Bronx, attended a variety of New York City public schools. After a stint in the Navy, he enrolled at Hunter College, married a classmate named Anita during his senior year. He held several jobs, including that of a teacher in a vocational high school, before deciding to write full time. Blackboard Jungle is the first major result of this decision. Evan and Anita Hunter live on Long Island, have three children, all boys.

Evan Hunter

FRANCES GRAY PATTON (Miss Dove and the Maternal Instinct, page 64): "Since I wrote the first Miss Dove story I am eight years older but very little wiser. My twin daughters who were just little girls when I wrote The Terrible Miss Dove and who, incidentally, advised me to send it to the JOURNAL (and bet me five dollars it would be accepted) are eight years older, too, and one of them is married! The son who was then about to graduate from prep school is now graduated from medical school. I am sorry I haven't done something bizarre." (Since living a wonderful life is not news, we can report that she has also written a novel about Miss Dove, which is to be a Book-of-the-Month selection and a movie and will appear in the JOURNAL soon.)

Frances Patton

JOE COOGAN, the first man to know about The Decline and Fall of Augie Sheean (page 68), says this about himself: "Interested in writing because can't seem to do much else very well. Once during infantry training, after carefully cleaning thick grease off my new rifle, I raised it to fire and suddenly went blind. Seems I had cleaned every part but the sight. That is the story of my life. Nadir of career so far: wrote a one-minute radio commercial for a free haircut. Terrible haircut. Commercial not good either. Married Jeanmarie Dunn, ex-JOURNAL assistant editor. Beautiful. Have one son, Kevin. Kind of beautiful. Promised a daughter. Guaranteed to be beautiful."

Joe Coogan

Novel Condensation Complete in This Issue

BLACKBOARD JUNGLE, Evan Hunter . 58

Stories

THE REAL YOU, Marnie Ellingson . 48
THE SUMMER CHILDREN, Brooke Hanlon . 50
MISS DOVE AND THE MATERNAL INSTINCT, Frances Gray Patton . 64
THE DECLINE AND FALL OF AUGIE SHEEAN, Joe Coogan . 68
KATHERINE (Fifth part of six), Anya Seton . 78

Special Features

LIBERTY AND CONFORMITY IN AMERICA, Dorothy Thompson . 13
THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN HEAVEN AND HELL . 13
PLAY CENTERS SUBSTITUTE FOR CITY STREETS . 21
TRICK OR TREAT, Margaret Hickey . 21
TELL ME DOCTOR, Henry B. Safford, M.D. . 43
PORTRAIT OF LECONTE DE LISLE, Painting by Jean François Millet . 52
Description by John Walker
EDUCATING OUR CHILDREN—DO WE KNOW WHAT WE WANT? . 53
Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar Gould
LET'S ATTACK THE PROBLEMS, NOT THE SCHOOLS . 54
HONOR OUR TEACHERS, Margery Wilson . 56
LET THE PARENTS SPEAK . 57
LET THE TEACHERS SPEAK . 62
MUST WE SEND OUR CHILDREN TO PRIVATE SCHOOLS? . 62
Katherine G. Struve
YOUR CHILD CAN LEARN TO READ, G. M. White . 63
GERTRUDE LAWRENCE AS MRS. A (Fourth part of five) . 66
Richard Stoddard Aldrich
CAN THIS MARRIAGE BE SAVED?, Dorothy Cameron Disney . 83
HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES: "I QUIT TEACHING!", Betty Coe Spicer . 161
HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES: "TEACHING IS MY LIFE" . 164
Jean Todd Freeman
DR. SPOCK TALKS WITH MOTHERS, Benjamin Spock, M.D. . 205

General Features

OUR READERS WRITE US . 4
UNDER-COVER STUFF, Bernardine Kielty . 26
TRUE OR FALSE? (The Sub-Deb), Edited by Ruth Imler . 34
MAKING MARRIAGE WORK, Clifford R. Adams . 36
DIARY OF DOMESTICITY, Gladys Taber . 40
FIFTY YEARS AGO • JOURNAL ABOUT TOWN . 47
THERE'S A MAN IN THE HOUSE, Harlan Miller . 82
THIS IS A LUMP, Munro Leaf . 142
ASK ANY WOMAN, Marcelene Cox . 230

Fashion and Beauty

PARIS, Wilhela Cushman . 70
FASHIONS FOR TWO, Wilhela Cushman . 72
THERE'S SOMETHING ABOUT HER, Wilhela Cushman . 74
ONE WONDERFUL PATTERN, Nora O'Leary . 76
TIMELESS BEAUTY IDEAS, Dawn Crowell Norman . 114

Food and Homemaking

FALL FLING, Ann Batchelder . 84
LINE A DAY, Ann Batchelder . 86
YOUNG HOME-BUILDERS, Margaret Davidson . 170
TEACHERS' PETS, Lillian Hough and Clara Belle Hart . 172
THIS KITCHEN IS THE FAMILY CENTER, Gladys Taber . 188

Architecture, Gardening and Interior Decoration

STAFFORDSHIRE BLUE, Henrietta Murdock . 80
HOW MUCH CHARM WILL $200 BUY? Henrietta Murdock . 168
A HOUSE THAT FLATTERS ITS SETTING, Carol L. Mercado . 220

Poems

Mary Kennedy 96 • Marya Zaturenska 102 • Barbara Shook Conklin 129
Candace T. Stevenson 140 • José Garcia Villa 152 • Hannah Kahn 179
Helen Harrington 190 • Virginia Esterly Dunbar 201 • Dan G. Hoffman 214
Beulah Ridgeway Winans 222 • Georgie Starbuck Galbraith 229

Cover Photograph by Leombruno-Bodi

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect.

Address: LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1954 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U. S., U. S. Possessions and Canada—1 Yr., $3.50; 2 Yrs., $6; 3 Yrs., $8.50; 5 Yrs., $11. Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America (except the Guianas)—1 Yr., $4. All other countries—1 Yr., $7. Remit by Money Order or Draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. Funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Donald M. Hobart, Vice-President and Director of Research; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

Clean and polish pans fast with

BRILLO Soap Pads

No soaking! No more hard scrubbing! Sturdy metal-fiber Brillo® Soap Pads make light work of the crustiest, hardest-to-clean pots and pans. And Brillo polishes as it cleans, because every Brillo Soap Pad is loaded with special-formula soap that contains jeweler's polish! Of all types of cleansers tested, Brillo gives twice the shine in half the time!

SAVE MONEY! Brillo gives you more metal-fiber per pad—and more pads per box!

BRILLO SOAP PADS (red box)	BRILLO CLEANSER (green box)
Soap-filled pads	Pads plus cake soap

There's polishing soap right in every BRILLO Soap Pad!

THRIFTIER! 5 and 12 pad boxes

Now! ARROW SHIRTS Just for Boys!

New ARROW PINE LODGE FLANNELS are fleecy warm for winter wear

The world's most famous shirts for Dads are now available for lads!

A good cotton flannel is any boy's favorite. And Arrow Pine Lodge cotton flannels have exclusive Nordic sweater designs. Put your lads in sturdy Arrow cotton flannels this winter. They're colorfast . . . will wash and wash again. "Sanforized"-labeled to last and last!

Above, a Pine Lodge cotton flannel for Grads, sizes 12-20. It features the neat, comfortable Arafold Collar. $3.95

ARROW
SHIRTS FOR BOYS
by Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc.

Arrow Pine Lodge cotton flannel pattern for Grads. Sizes 12-20. $3.95

Arrow Pine Lodge cotton flannel pattern for Juniors. Sizes 4-12. $3.50

Arrow Pine Lodge cotton flannel pattern for Juniors. Sizes 4-12. $3.50

Our readers write us

Never Brand Your Child a "Failure"

Pocatello, Idaho

Dear Editors: A mother came to my classroom near the close of school. "Please don't fail Jimmy. I know he hasn't done as well as he should, but he'll do better next year." Without waiting for my answer, she continued, "He'll feel terrible if he fails, and all his friends will be ahead of him. Couldn't you pass him anyway?"

Similar scenes are enacted each spring, humiliating to parents and distressing to teachers, yet wholly unnecessary.

In the first place, I had not "failed" Jimmy, nor had Jimmy himself failed. Never, under any circumstances, should a young child be branded a failure. I had written on Jimmy's report card the word "retained," and that was exactly what I wished to do—keep him in the second grade another year to allow him time to catch up, time to get a firm grip on all those new facts that were crowding him too closely.

As I tried to explain my reasons, Jimmy's mother interrupted with, "Is there anything wrong with my boy? If that little Jensen boy can pass, Jimmy ought to be able to!"

I hastened to reassure her. Jimmy was perfectly normal, definitely not mentally retarded.

It's an odd thing. During the past years we have come to realize that babies do not all mature at the same rate—physically or mentally. They usually begin to walk and talk at the age of fourteen months, but many do so at nine months or wait until they are a year and a half. We accept these differences as completely natural.

But for some unaccountable reason every child, on reaching his sixth birthday, is presumed ready for formal education. This is not correct.

For the first time in his young life a time limit is set on his learning process. He will be required to absorb a definite amount of knowledge within a definite period of time.

For many the change is too drastic, and no amount of wishful thinking, of prodding, coaxing or threatening can make your child or any child accept this change of pace simply because he has lived six years.

I wish this specter of "failure" could be dismissed from every classroom. I should like to see many more of our boys and girls given the opportunity to spend an extra year in the primary grades. Actually, these are most important, for the amount of knowledge your child gains from his future education, the happiness and satisfaction he derives, depends to a marked degree on what he accomplishes in the first three grades.

It will be wonderful when all of us are as understanding as Bobby's parents.

They stood quietly, the father's hand resting on his son's shoulder as he explained in a matter-of-fact, kindly voice, "Bobby has talked things over with his mother and me, and he would like you to be his teacher while he repeats second grade. Bobby studies hard—he's not a lazy boy—but some things were a little too difficult for him to catch on to."

I smiled at the boy. "What seemed to give you the most trouble, Bobby?"

"Reading, I guess. I wasn't too good at spelling neither." His face brightened. "But I didn't have any trouble with numbers. Wish I could read as well as I can do arithmetic."

"You will, son, you will," his father assured him.

And Bobby did. As teachers will, I followed his progress through other grades. He continued above average scholastically, and led his class in popularity. How different his life might have been had they branded him a failure—too "stupid" to learn.

Sincerely yours,
MARGARET HEAPS

Class Baby

Lakeside

Dear Editors: Mrs. John Warr Oklahoma City teacher, started o fall very happily with her second only to discover that she was preg How could she explain to the people? She confided in her prin Then she called a meeting of the mo She asked them to go home and tel children, each in her own way, and the same time—that evening.

The children were delighted. rooms had fish, turtles, dogs, e crow, but they were going to have a

"Their baby" shower

The week before she stopped work, had a baby shower. On each presen name that child had chosen for the All the boys chose names for boy the girls for girls.

Now isn't that the dearest s Note: it's about a teacher too!

Yours sincerely,
ROSEMARY CA
Teacher for 21
OU School of Writing 2

▶ JOURNAL wrote Mrs. Warren f recent news; received this reply. —D.

Dear Editors: Shannon Sue ar the day before her 32 young godpa went on spring vacation. Forma nouncements went to them all. Pe you'd care for a few more details?

Many older Edgemere pupils, fo and fifth-graders, also asked me the anticipated baby. They want know when it was expected and sex did I want. After my leave b the second-graders (my pupils) al asked, "When will you get baby?"

A fourth-grade girl asked how on when pregnant. The answer was, " derful, for what could be nicer?' said, "But what is it like?" Then alized she seemed to be trying to ualize an expectant mother carry "life-size" baby. I explained how and helpless a new baby was and they were much smaller when they began to grow. She appeared sati

One of my private pupils said t about a week before the baby "Now you look like you have a b

The attitude of the older childre one of sincerity, concern and happ The little ones were impatient.

When Shannon Sue was six week we dressed her from the diaper c clothes given to her by the childre took her to school to meet her parents, through the car windo they and their teacher filed by t "their" baby, their comments sh the love that only a child can expr the sight of a little baby.

Sincerely,
FANNIE MAE WA

P.S. I hope to be "promoted" to grade and rejoin my class this fall.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 6

IVORY SNOW

Safest possible soap for baby's things

...for yours, too

.. for everything you wash with special care . . .

by HAND OR MACHINE!

99 44/100% PURE®

FOR DIAPERS . . .

and baby clothes, there's no soap like Ivory-safe Ivory Snow. It leaves them far softer than detergents or strong washday soaps, free from deposits that chafe baby skin. And, it's granulated for efficiency!

LINGERIE

stays lovely far longer with Ivory Snow care. It pampers colors, keeps white nylons so white, leaves woolens so softly fluffy, too. Ivory Snow is the safest possible soap you can buy for fine hand washables.

NICE MACHINE WASHABLES

like luncheon cloths, curtains, and blankets thrive on the special care they get with Ivory Snow. It's the only soap both Ivory-safe and in the efficient granulated form you prefer to use in your washing machine.

The only soap both IVORY-SAFE and GRANULATED for efficiency

50 YEARS OF PROGRESS 1904-1954 50th ANNIVERSARY IN THE SCIENCE OF FOOT RELIEF

Dr Scholl's

A NAME RESPECTED FOR 50 YEARS

Dr. Scholl's scientific methods for relieving Painful Feet — introduced a half century ago — are today recognized and accepted as the standard of the world!

Wm. M. Scholl, M.D.

Countless millions of people have been made foot-happy by Dr. Scholl's highly developed Foot Comfort® Remedies, Appliances, Arch Supports and Shoes. Dr. Scholl's factories and laboratories in many countries, constitute the world's largest institution devoted exclusively to Foot Care.

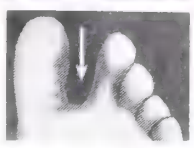
This means that no matter what common foot trouble or perplexing shoe problem YOU have, you enjoy quick relief with Dr. Scholl's.

Today—culminating 50 years of progress—the name "DR. SCHOLL'S" on a package, in a shoe, over a counter, or over the door of a Dr. Scholl's Foot Comfort® Shop, symbolizes fast relief to foot sufferers. Let it be your guide to foot happiness.

CORNS—SORE TOES
Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads quickly relieve pain and gently remove corns; lift shoe pressure. Prevent corns, sore toes, tender spots. Soothing, cushioning. 30¢ and 40¢ boxes.

CALLOUSES
Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads, special size for callouses, cushion, relieve painful pressure. Quickly, gently and painlessly loosen and remove callouses. 30¢ and 40¢ boxes.

BUNIONS
Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads, special size for bunions, relieve tender and painful enlarged joints; lift shoe pressure at once; cushion, protect sensitive area. 30¢ and 40¢ boxes.



SOFT CORNS
Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads, special size and shape for soft corns between toes, quickly relieve pain; speedily remove soft corns. 30¢ and 40¢ boxes.

TENDER, HOT FEET
Dr. Scholl's Foot Powder relieves tender, hot, tired, sensitive feet. Soothes irritated skin. Eases new or tight shoes. Helps prevent infection of Athlete's Foot. 40¢ can.

ACHING, TIRED FEET
Dr. Scholl's Foot Balm quickly relieves feverish, tender, sensitive, tired feet caused by exertion and fatigue. Soothes, refreshes the feet. 50¢.

ITCHING FEET and TOES
Dr. Scholl's Solvex relieves Athlete's Foot, itching feet and toes. Kills fungi on contact. Aids healing of raw, cracked or peeling skin. Liquid, Powder 60¢. Ointment, $1.00.

WEAK, FALLEN ARCH
Dr. Scholl's Foot-Eazer and exercise relieve tired, aching feet, rheumatic-like foot and leg pains, due to weak or fallen arches. Light, flexible. Adjustable. $6.50 pair.

PAIN HERE?
Dr. Scholl's Metatarsal Arch Supports and exercise relieve pains, cramps, callouses, burning sensations at ball of foot due to weak arch. Light, adjustable. $1.00 pair, up.

FOR INGROWN NAILS
Dr. Scholl's Onixol. A few drops of this soothing preparation in nail groove relieves soreness, pain; softens embedded part of nail in skin for easy removal. 75¢.

CROOKED TOES
Dr. Scholl's Toe-Flex of soft, cushioning rubber, tends to gradually straighten crooked or overlapping toes. Very comfortable. Worn invisibly. 75¢ each.

BUNIONS
Dr. Scholl's Bunion Reducer, of soft rubber, relieves painful shoe pressure, hides the bulge, helps preserve shape of shoe. 75¢ each. Leather Bunion Protector, $1.25 each.

CORNS, SOFT CORNS
Dr. Scholl's "2" Drop Corn Remedy (liquid) helps to relieve pain and remove hard corns on toes, soft corns between toes. Dries quickly. 35¢ bottle.

ODOROUS FEET
Dr. Scholl's Bromidrosis Powder is specially formulated to stop excessive perspiration and bad foot odor caused by a disorder of the sweat glands. Very soothing. 60¢ can.

THE SCHOLL MFG. CO., INC.

Chicago, New York, Los Angeles, Toronto, London, Paris, Frankfurt, Buenos Aires

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 4

Junior Space Man

Tuckahoe, New York

Dear Editors: The baby is three months old, son of Sergeant and Mrs. Farlin H. Johnson. He is possibly the most traveled baby of his age.

Born in Tacoma, Washington, he was taken by his mother over 3000 miles via the Great Northern Pacific Railway—the friendly porters baby-sitting when necessary—to visit his great-grandmother in New York State. Then he made the 3000-mile trip back to Tacoma, where for the first time he met his dad. Then Timmy started on a 3500-mile motor trip via the Alkan Highway to Big Delta, Alaska, where his dad is stationed.

10,000 miles in 3 months.

The trip took eight days of rugged driving. To date, almost 10,000 miles at the age of three months!

Now Timmy and his family are living in a stationary trailer on the post. Shades of our ancestors! Real modern pioneers. Sincerely,

JEANNETTE C. GILES

"Scotch Love"

Edinburgh, Scotland

Dear Sirs: My thanks for copies of the JOURNAL for May, June and July.

Let me say that I most heartily wish our national misunderstandings might be as easily disposed of, with common sense and courtesy. Most people in this country have the same aims, and the same social outlook, as our brethren in America. We have also a common enemy, against whom we must be always on guard.

Have you ever heard of "Scotch love"? It is a term used here to describe the squabbling between any persons, or group of persons, who are closely bound by affection or ties of kinship. They may argue and fight, but let anyone else join in, and at once the fighters forget the original dispute, and turn on the intruder!

With every good wish to my favorite magazine. Yours faithfully,

M. THOMSON

Puppy in Apartment

San Francisco, California

Dear Editors: The first puppies we raised had the run of our big basement. The laundry man, not finding us home one day, dumped our bundle of clothes through the meter door. The puppies were quick to discover it.

That set me to building puppy pens.

Various tries seemed pretty good, until I visited Dr. Leon F. Whitney at Orange, Connecticut. There, for the first time, I saw his laboratory puppies being raised on wire.

At first I was shocked. I was sure their little feet and legs would go through the one-inch mesh. I felt certain their feet and legs would be misshapen.

Dr. Whitney assured me that puppies raised in this manner actually developed better-formed feet and legs than those raised on the ground or the floor. My experience over fifteen years has proved

CONTINUED ON PAGE 8

"Dress Look" Lee work cloth pleases wive

Every husband looks neater, feels in Lee matched shirts and pants. T made of dressy, durable Chetopa tailored in his size, Sanforized to s size! Dozens of "dress-up" extras them fit better, wear longer, too! You'll love his looks in Lee clothes—and the price is right!

Le CLOTH

THE H. D. LEE CO.
Kansas City, Mo.

FOR WO AND PLA

COPYRIGHT 1954

Now... for you and your child

The Newly Revised, Greatly Expanded

Childcraft

America's Famous Child Development Plan

15 volumes—completely new!

...g guidance material—the up-to-... practical knowledge and experi... ...e than 150 of the country's leading ...nce specialists—to help you help ... become a healthy, well-rounded ...djusted individual.

... dramatic science volume—to ...nd satisfy your child's thirst for ...—to develop greater understanding of the world around him.

Most complete art program ever worked out! Exciting, inspirational, unique in its field—the great works of art reproduced in full color—to build art appreciation, and encourage your child to create in his own way.

Brilliant introduction to music—fun with sound and rhythm through especially selected lullabies, carols, hymns for the whole family.

World's finest children's literature—poems, rhymes, folk and fairy tales—intriguing nature stories—adventures. The ones every child should know—in full color—including hundreds of wonderful things to make-and-do.

There is nothing like it . . . It's a complete plan to help you prepare your child for school and later life. Best of all, the newly revised Childcraft is available at the same low price—with payment plans to fit all budgets! Send the coupon below today for full information.

Send now for Free Booklet!

Please send me FREE, without obligation, my copy of the new 24-page booklet "Their Future Is In Your Hands," which contains a summary of "Education Is A 'Round The Clock Process." Address: Mr. Robert Gibson, Childcraft, Box 3565, Dept. 370, Chicago 80, Illinois.

Name_____

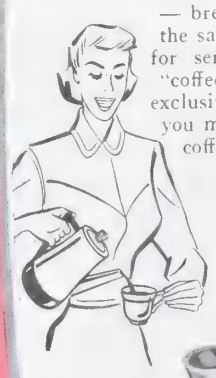
Address_____

City_____ Zone____ State_____

My children's ages are_____

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — Money refunded or repair or replacement made if not as advertised therein

Advertised in American Medical Association Publications



There may be an opportunity to represent Childcraft in your neighborhood on a full time basis. Free training, good income and future, no investment required. For full information, write Miss Thelma A. Garst, Childcraft, Dept 470, Box 3565, Chicago 54, Illinois.

...prises, Inc., Educational Division, Merchandise Mart Plaza, Chicago 54, Illinois.

you can pay more but the Flavo-matic makes better coffee

WEST BEND
Flavo-matic®

Exclusive design gives the correct timing and exact temperature control that extracts only the delicate and most flavorsome coffee oils. The West Bend Flavo-matic never overheats or "burns" your coffee — never drives the aromatic coffee oils into the air — never "underperks" either. It is completely automatic — brews and keeps your coffee at the same temperature, just right for serving. And besides, it's a "coffee economizer" because the exclusive percolation method gives you more cups of full-flavored coffee per pound.

Fully automatic — no gadgets. If you like mild coffee, merely use less ground coffee.

6 TO 8 CUP
polished aluminum, $11.95
red or gold color aluminum, $13.95 gleaming chrome, $17.95
2 TO 5 CUP
polished aluminum, $10.95
gold color aluminum, $12.50

WEST BEND®

SEE THESE OTHER West Bend FAVORITES, TOO!

FRYER-ROASTER SERVER $24.50* | ELECTRIC SERV-IT $7.95* | PENGUIN hot & cold server $7.50 | ELECTRIC CORN POPPER $6.95* | SPEEDMASTER hot water for instant coffee or tea. $12.95*

*Includes excise tax.

at leading housewares, appliance and gift stores; prices slightly higher in Canada

WEST BEND ALUMINUM CO.
DEPT. 67A, WEST BEND, WISCONSIN

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 6

this. I have found also that a puppy rarely steps through his wire more than once or twice, even at three weeks of age, and never injures himself.

When I had devised a wire-bottom puppy pen to suit my needs, our puppy buyers insisted that I plan one that could be used in a small apartment.

You see, a dog socializes best from about three weeks to twelve weeks of age. That is, he adjusts his behavior to living with you at that age. Like a human baby, he needs plenty of sleep and to avoid overstimulation or activities that will result in crossness from his human friends.

PHOTO BY DOROTHY LINEER

Room of one's own.

Training a puppy is such a pleasant, absorbing occupation that one doesn't worry too much—but if a puppy is raised unrestrained around the house, mother can worry about her curtains and chair legs, father about his slippers, and sister about her nylons.

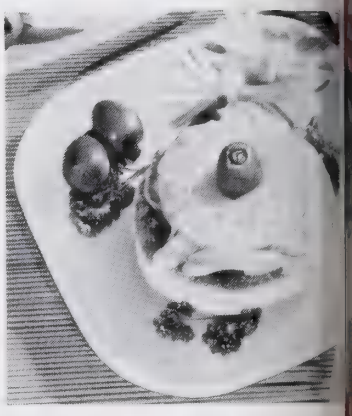
In a pen two feet wide and four feet long a puppy of any but very large breeds will live happily most of the time until he is three or four months old. (By that time he'll be housebroken and safe to run about the house or fenced-in yard.) His wire grid should be gravel-screen, one-inch-square mesh, 8, 10 or 12 gauge wire. (Any smaller will be useless; larger would endanger his feet.) His sleeping compartment is three-ply plywood and his "view" is quarter-inch-mesh hardware cloth stapled to the frame. Use cleats to protect him (and your clothes) from rough edges.

The time to start teaching him to be a house dog is just before feeding time. Take him out of the pen for a few minutes, not more than fifteen. Teach him to come to you by getting down near his level and clapping your hands, calling his name and saying "Come." You can also teach him the word "no." Do this by calling his name and the word "no," when he starts to get into mischief, and be firm, but do not punish him. Just make sure that he does not do anything he should not.

At the end of this lesson, which is play to him, put him back in his pen and feed him his food which you have previously prepared. He will soon associate the lesson with being fed and enjoy it all the more. At this age you can teach him many things and form his attachment for you and also form the sort of habits which you want in your dog.

Dogs are naturally clean and he will never soil the plywood nest in one end of the pen, while fresh papers under his wire are easy to provide and will automatically housebreak him.

No one will ever surmise what a lot of fun there can be in raising a puppy until he has tried it this way, giving him a warm safe place to sleep, play and amuse himself without destroying family property. And when your dog is grown what a delightful companion he will be.



Sincerely,
CLARENCE J. PFAFFENBERGER

▶ For more of dog expert Pfaffenberger's exciting new method of training puppies enjoyably (for them and you) see Under-Cover Stuff, page 31. ED.

Meadow Gold Mealtime Adventures

by Beatrice Cooke

FREE! RECIPES F
10 CHEESE SURPR

Chicken Hawaiian Sandwich
Lunch Box Special
Baked Cheese To asties
Cheese-Deviled Ham Open-Facers
Broiled Ham 'n Egger
DeLuxe Mus Cheesebur
Cheese and Cheese Souf Sandwich
Tunaburger
Ham 'n Swis

Here's sandwich fare that's par delicious and different—and g with cheese. Nine of the 10 re listed above are to be served p from your oven or broiler. An made with a special Meadow Gol You know, Meadow Gold Chee processed and natural—are adve good eating. They're sure to p palate of the most discriminati lover. Why not try Meadow Gol Cheddar right away? Then you c the family with this Chicken Hawa

Recipe for Chicken Haw

4 English muffins
¼ cup Meadow Gold Butter
8 slices cooked chicken
1 10½-ounce can condensed cream of chicken soup
⅓ cup Meadow Gold Homogenized Milk
¼ cup finely onion
¼ teaspoon
8 slices pine
1½ cups gra Meadow G Cheddar C
Paprika
8 stuffed oli

Split English muffins in half crossw cut surfaces with butter. Place on b and toast under broiler. Arrange a slic on each muffin half. Combine cream soup, milk, onion and salt; spoon m chicken. Top each with pineapple sli with cheese and the paprika. Place in or under moderate broiler heat u melts. Serve hot, garnished with st Makes 8 sandwiches. Note: Rusks o be used in place of English muffins.

HOW TO GET YOUR FREE RECIP
Each recipe printed on standa card. Write to: Beatrice Foo Dept. J-104, 120 S. LaSalle Chicago 3, Ill.

© 1954, BEA

ake a can of Ocean Spray for good anberry Eating..

is one of the best cranberry desserts you ever ate. Everyone raves about it.

CRANBERRY CRUNCH

ix together: 1 cup uncooked rolled oats, ½ cup flour, 1 cup brown sugar. in cup butter until crumbly. Place half this mixture in 8 x 8 greased ng h. Cover with 1 lb. can Ocean Spray Cranberry Sauce (Jellied or le) spread rest of oatmeal mixture over sauce. Bake 45 minutes at 350°. in s ares. Serve with vanilla ice cream.

Make everything ahead. An extra special dessert for an extra special occasion!

CRANBERRY BLOSSOMS

1. Make CRANBERRY SHERBET — Mix together: 1 lb. can Ocean Spray Jellied Cranberry Sauce, 2 tsp. grated lemon rind, 3 tbs. sugar, 6 tbs. orange juice. Freeze until partially set. Fold in 2 stiffly beaten egg whites. Freeze until firm.

2. Fold 1 cup whipped cream into lemon pie filling (use packaged mix). Spoon over sponge cup cakes or dessert shells. Top with cranberry sherbet.

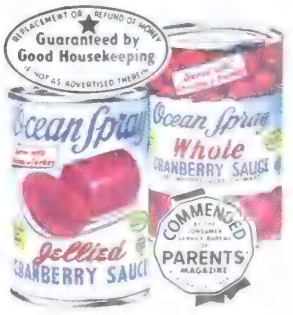
combination . . . quick to make: Ice Cream and Cranberries in a Pie.

CRANBERRY ICE CREAM PIE

l b d pie shell (or ginger snap crumb crust) with 1 qt. vanilla ice cream. wit lb. Ocean Spray Whole Cranberry Sauce. Place in freezing com- ten ntil ready to serve.

NO RSNAP CRUST — Blend thoroughly: 1½ cups ginger snap crumbs, up gar, ¼ cup melted butter. Pat into bottom and sides of 8-inch pie Ch n refrigerator.

Chicken-and-Cranberry — Perfect Partners for a Salad Plate.



TWIN SALAD PLATE

Fill one lettuce cup with your favorite chicken salad; the other with delicious Cranberry-Orange Salad: Place in a custard cup: 1 envelope unflavored gelatine, ¼ cup cold water. Let stand 2 minutes. Set cup in pan of boiling water until gelatine dissolves. Stir into: 1 lb. can Ocean Spray Cranberry Sauce (Jellied or Whole). Add 1 orange, including rind and pulp, put through food chopper. Chill until firm.

Ocean Spray

CRANBERRY SAUCE

Also . . . Fresh Cranberries
NEW! Frozen Cranberry Relish

3 quick ideas to please your man with

Fresh Co

What makes this New Tamale Pie so delightfully different? Corn Meal with Fresh Corn Flavor!

Quick Pork Sausage Tamale Pie

Easy Dinner-in-a-Dish . . . Juicy, meaty . . . (6 servings)

Sausage Base:
- 1 pound pork sausage links
- ½ cup chopped onion
- ¼ cup chopped green pepper
- 2 cups cooked lima beans, drained
- ½ cup chili sauce
- 2½ cups (#2 can) tomatoes
- 1 teaspoon salt

Corn Bread Topping:
- ¾ cup Quaker or Aunt Jemima Corn Meal*
- 1 tablespoon flour
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 1½ teaspoons baking powder
- 1 egg
- ⅓ cup milk
- 1 tablespoon shortening, soft

For sausage base, brown sausage links in frying pan. Remove links and drain all but a few tablespoons fat from the pan. Add onion and green pepper and cook until golden brown. Cut sausages in 1-inch pieces; add with remaining ingredients to onion and green pepper. Cover and simmer gently 30 minutes. Pour into 2-quart casserole.

Sift dry ingredients into bowl. Add egg, milk and shortening. Beat with rotary beater until smooth, about 1 minute. Do not overbeat. Drop batter onto hot meat mixture. It will sink into the flavory juices. Then, as you bake the pie in a hot oven (425°F.) for about 20 minutes, the batter rises magically to form a meat-flavored golden crust.

A new dinner dish. The tender short bread is made with Corn Meal with fresh corn favor.

Corned Beef Doubl

Quick Short Bread . . . Quic

(6 servings)

Short Bread:
- 1 cup Quaker or Aunt Jemima Corn Meal*
- 1¾ cups sifted flour
- 2 teaspoons baking powder
- ½ teaspoon salt

Sift together dry ingredien ening until mixture res crumbs. Add milk and sti a little more milk if neces soft dough.) Knead gentl Divide dough in half. Ro form a rectangle 7½ x 11

Mix filling ingredients t over one rectangle of do second rectangle of dou serving portions. Bake or in hot oven (425°F.) 12 to 15 with additional catsup.

n Flavor

Here's a new-day corn meal... easier-mixing... fo er cooking... and with that wonderful fresh corn flavor

J t see—just taste—what's happened to corn meal. Honest- tc oodness fresh corn flavor! Yours to enjoy in every pack- a of Quaker Corn Meal. In Aunt Jemima Corn Meal, too. *Y*ou never knew corn meal could be like this. You'll notice th difference in your corn bread—in everything you bake.

You'll be astonished, too, at the easier mixing and faster cooking this modern corn meal gives you. To say nothing of the velvet-smooth texture you get.

Add the excitement of fresh corn flavor to your cooking. Try the Tamale Pie or the Corned Beef Double-Deckers. Either one transforms a little meat into a satisfying meal. And that new Pimiento-Pepper Corn Bread is simply wonderful! Try it!

Easy, fun to make, gay to look at. Changes plain-Jane meals into feasts

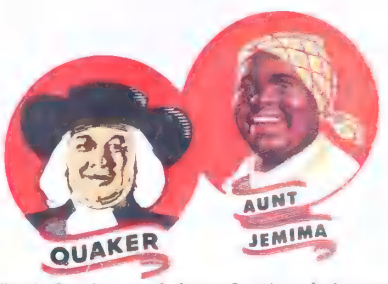
Quick Pimiento-Pepper Corn Bread

Quick 9-minute 1 bowl recipe

Smooth-textured. Non-crumbly

- 1 cup Quaker or Aunt Jemima Corn Meal*
- 1 cup sifted flour
- 4 teaspoons baking powder
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ¼ cup chopped green pepper
- 3 tablespoons chopped pimiento
- 2 eggs, beaten
- ½ cup milk
- ⅓ cup melted shortening

Sift together corn meal, flour, baking powder and salt; mix with green pepper and pimiento. Stir in beaten eggs and milk; lightly stir in melted shortening. Bake in a greased 8" square pan in a hot oven (425°F.) 20 to 25 minutes.



*Results on all recipes guaranteed only for Quaker Corn Meal or Aunt Jemima Corn Meal. Either white or yellow Corn Meal can be used.

Quaker and nt Jemima } CORN MEAL

with the

FRESH CORN FLAVOR

In Quick and Regular Grits, too

Both Quaker and Aunt Jemima bring you the choice corn, new milling methods, new packaging—for the Corn Meal (and Grits) with the fresh corn flavor. In bag or box, with either of these famous faces.

Give your lettuce a heart of gold–

then do it justice with pineapple with balanced flavo

☆ true-to-the-fruit goodness because DEL MONTE Pineapple is picked only when tartness and sweetness balance perfectly

These are privileged pineapples from the word "go." We raise them from our own selected strains—so special that we grew over 60,000 types to find them.

Then we shower them with loving care—pick and pack them just when natural tropic tartness and sweetness are in perfect balance.

So when you hear that all DEL MONTE Brand Pineapple has remarkably true-to-the-fruit flavor, you can believe it. Better still, taste for yourself—any style!

CHRYSANTHEMUM SALAD

- 1 medium-large solid head of lettuce
- ½ lb. package pasteurized process cheese food (at room temperature)
- ¼ cup cooked-type salad dressing
- 8 slices DEL MONTE Pineapple
- 1 red apple, unpeeled, cored and cut in 8 wedges
- Additional salad dressing thinned with some of the syrup from pineapple

Wash lettuce; drain dry. Place core side up and cut out a cylindrical hole about 2½ inches in diameter and 2 inches deep (including core). Mash cheese with the ¼ cup salad dressing; reserve 2 tablespoons for garnish; pack the rest into lettuce cavity, heaping slightly in center. Chill 1 hour. At serving time, cut into 8 wedges, arrange with cheese-stuffed ends toward center as shown. Place apple wedges, dipped in syrup from pineapple as soon as cut, between lettuce wedges. Arrange drained pineapple slices and cheese garnish as shown. Serve with salad dressing thinned with some syrup. Serves 8.

Enjoy 5 handy styles: sliced • crushed • chunks • tidbits • juice

Del Monte® Pineapple —the brand you know puts flavor first

The Difference Between Heaven and Hell

ONCE there was a man—so an old fable goes—who remarked to a friend one evening that he did not know whether he preferred to spend eternity in heaven or in hell. "Judging from what I have heard of both places," he said, "neither appeals to me very much."

Instantly his friend was transformed into an angel. "How would you like to visit hell?" the angel asked. The man said he was agreeable to a short visit if he could also take a quick look at heaven, so that he could compare the two.

"We'll do it," the angel said. He flapped his wings once and immediately they were in hell. It appeared to be a banquet room, with long tables piled high with luscious food. But the people around the tables were writhing in agony, for their elbows were encased in wide iron bands. With much food within their reach, they were starving, for they could not bend their arms to bring it to their mouths. They screamed and rolled on the floor. It was a horrible sight.

After a moment the man said, "I've seen all I want of hell. Show me heaven."

The angel flapped his wings once more and they were in heaven. It looked much the same as hell—a banquet room, the tables loaded with food, and seated at the bountiful tables, the people. They, too, could not bend their arms, for their elbows were encased in iron bands. Nevertheless, it was a heavenly sight.

The angel asked the man, "Now do you see the difference?"

"I see," he said. "I know why this is heaven, not hell."

The people in heaven were feeding each other.

This fable is the JOURNAL's reminder that October is Red Feather month. Community Chest and United Fund campaigns are going on in more than 1800 cities and towns all over the United States. This is the largest single voluntary fund-raising effort in the nation and it helps to finance 19,500 health, recreation and family-welfare services, including those which help our young men and women in military uniforms. Each community sets its own campaign goal, decides which services to include, and budgets and distributes the funds raised. It is the once-a-year community drive to help ourselves by helping others. Contributing to the Community Chest and United Fund is now the generally accepted way to extend a helping hand. Be prepared to give as generously as you can.

Executive Editor, Mary Bass

Managing Editor: Laura Lou Brookman

Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Dawn Crowell Norman, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary, Barbara Benson, Glenn Matthew White, Donald Stuart, Ruth Imler, Tina S. Fredericks, Helen Everitt, Peter Briggs

Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Margaret Hickey, Betty Kidd, Ruth Mills Teague

Editorial Associates: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Shapley Matthews, Alice Conkling, Joseph Di Pietro, Anne Einselen, Elizabeth Goetsch, Nancy Crawford, Cynthia McAdoo Wheatland, Rosemary Jones, Nelle Keys Perry, Adrina Kayaian

Assistant Editors: Victoria Harris, Alice Kastberg, Virginia Price, Dorothy Anne Robinson, Jean Todd Freeman, Elizabeth McFarland, Eileen Sharpe, Albert Serwazi, Dolores Knapp

Editorial Assistants: Lee Stowell Cullen, Patricia Martin, Aileen Dowd, June Schwartz, Gretchen Wehler, Babette Brimberg, Joyce Posson, Nancy Terry, Flora Casparian, Betty Jo Ramsey, Constance Holland, Helen Schofield Lukacs, Alberte Wright, Simone Smith, Betty Coe Spicer, Carol Mercado, Elizabeth Hart

"Portrait of the Artist," by Paul Gauguin (1848–1903). Black chalk on paper, 14" x 10½". Used by Gauguin to wrap a canvas which he sent from Tahiti to Gustave Fayet. Collection Paul Bacon, Paris.

Liberty and Conformity in America

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

THERE are two things that even friendly foreign critics of America do not really understand about our country. I doubt whether all Americans fully realize them. Yet these two facts account partly if not largely, I believe, for the more-or-less-continual swing of the pendulum between liberty and conformity in this country.

One is the ethnic structure of our nation. The other is the relative ease in entering it and the conditions that contribute to hiding in it, once here.

The United States is the only great and populous nation-state and world power whose people are not cemented by ties of blood, race or original language. It is the only world power which recognizes but one nationality of its citizens—American—while lacking the ties of blood, tribal kinship, original language, long-established unified culture, which contribute so much to national cohesion. How can such a union be maintained except through some idea which involves loyalty?

American relationships with the European nations of the noncommunist world have deteriorated during the last months. The nations that welcomed American leadership after World War II and were salvaged from their initial postwar troubles by American aid have become increasingly critical of both the foreign and the domestic policies of the United States.

"We have been unable to understand the anticommunist spy mania which has swept the United States in the last few years," the former British Chancellor of the Exchequer, Hugh Gaitskell, wrote in the New York Times Magazine.

Others have remarked on the contradiction between the American tradition of liberty and the periodic recrudescence CONTINUED ON PAGE 15

Enjoy So Many Delicious Dishes made with Wilson B-V

Rich meat flavor for Macaroni dishes

Hearty, stimulating B-V Tea

The favorite Gravy Maker

Flavor magic for Stews

Delicious Onion or Vegetable Soups

A flavor lift for Steaks

Better flavored Meat Loaf

WIN

Just write in 25 words or less about your favorite way to use WILSON B-V

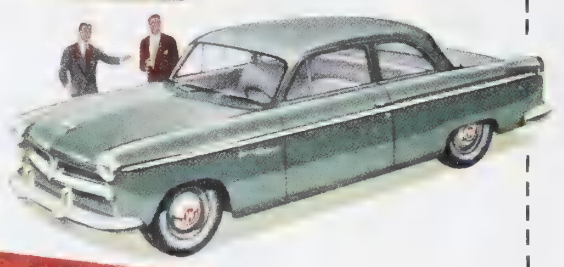
Win one of these 103 VALUA PRIZES in B-V's "Many-Use" c

America's most exciting new sports car!

1ST Prize

Kaiser-Darrin 161

Styled by Darrin of Paris! Fiberglas Up to 35 miles per gallon!



2ND PRIZE

NEW 1954
WILLYS AERO-EAGLE
Beautiful two-tone hardtop convertible ...averages better than 30 miles to the gallon (with overdrive).

3RD PRIZE

NEW 1954
WILLYS AERO-LARK
America's great 2-door family car... less than a penny a mile total operating cost (as tested).

ALSO 100 EXTRA PRIZ

Your Choice of these wonderful DORMEYERS...

Fri-Well... for automatic deep-fat frying. (Other cooking, too)
Retail value $29.50

Coffee-Well...
Electric...compl automatic...mak 4 to 10 cups of c
Retail value $29

Mix-Maid...
Mixer-juicer; portable; 9 full-powered speeds!
Retail value $29.50

Here Are Some Hints To Help you win:

In kitchens all over America, Wilson B-V is a must. It is a favorite for making rich brown gravies, wonderful soups, hearty B-V tea or broth, delicious consomme, tasty stews and casseroles and for other uses such as flavoring steaks and chops. B-V is a delicious blend of real meat extract, choice vegetable flavors and seasoning in highly concentrated, quick-dissolving paste form. Extremely low in calories.

Here's All You Do:

What is your favorite way to us Use it regularly in preparing all delicious dishes mentioned abov and then just write us in 25 wor or less about your most enjoyabl most interesting or most unusual of Wilson B-V, and enclose the of a B-V carton. It's fun. It's ea The 103 wonderful prizes make worth your while. Discover B-V many uses and you'll be an ever better cook than you are today.

FOLLOW THESE SIMPLE RULES:

1. Write plainly, on one side of a plain sheet of white paper—IN 25 WORDS OR LESS—about your most enjoyable, most interesting or unusual use of Wilson B-V. You don't have to write a recipe.
2. PRINT YOUR NAME AND ADDRESS IN THE UPPER RIGHT HAND CORNER OF THE PAPER.
3. All entries must be mailed to WILSON B-V Contest, Box 722-A, Chicago 77, Illinois and must be post-marked not later than midnight of Saturday, November 6, 1954 and received by judges not later than midnight of Saturday, November 13, 1954.
4. Entries must be original work of contestant and carry his or her own SIGNATURE.
5. Contestants may enter as many times as desired but each entry must be accompanied by a B-V carton top.
6. Entries will be judged by an independent organization upon the basis of originality, aptness and compliance with these rules. Judges' decisions are final. Duplicate prizes awarded in case of ties. All entries become the property of Wilson & Co., Inc. None will be returned. You accept these conditions when you enter.
7. This contest is open to all residents of the United States and District of Columbia, EXCEPT employees of Wilson & Co., Inc., its subsidiary companies, its advertising agencies, and their families. Contest is subject to all Federal, State and Local regulations.
8. All winners will be notified by mail, or in person, approximately six weeks after contest ends.

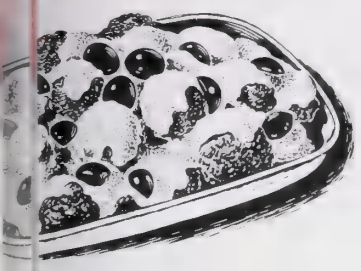
Enter B-V's "Many-Use" Contest N

Remember:
Contest closes November 6

WILSON & CO., INC. • CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

TO MAKE

uckWagon



eat Balls

glamor eating that sings with

California flavor

ou ink meat balls are hum-drum?
rec e will change your mind—fast!
sec t is: here they sing with the t ny flavor of California Ripe
es. y it and taste what we mean.

	¾ cup ripe olives
fir dry bread	1 (10½-ounce) can tomato soup
	1 tbsp. vinegar
salt	1 tsp. prepared mustard
nd ound lean	1 tsp. Worcestershire sauce sh ening

eg lightly and combine with bs, ilk and salt. Add beef and mix Sha e into balls and brown in hot eni While meat browns, cut olives arg ieces. Put browned meat balls bak g dish. Heat undiluted soup vir gar, mustard, Worcestershire ar olives. Pour over meat balls cov Bake in moderate oven (350 es) 30 minutes. Makes 4 gener-erv gs.

r yo best friends—set out your st v come—that's whole Ripe ives f course—in a handy "welme wl" or tempting appetizer ty.

Ripe Olive Recipe Booklet loze of exciting ways to add this orni flavor to everyday cooking, for legant but Easy Recipes with orn Ripe Olives." Write to the Ac sory Board, Dept. D-50, 24
orni St., San Francisco 11, Calif.

ripe...whole, pitted, chopped or sliced!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 13

of waves of hostility toward everyone suspected of failing to meet the prevailing norm of "loyalty."

It is not the purpose of this article to argue with Mr. Gaitskell. I do not think that Marxist communism menaces the social-political structure of the United States any more than he thinks it menaces that of Great Britain. Were I French or Italian, I should, I think, be more concerned about the internal communist danger than most of my French and Italian friends seem to be. I know also that in this country, as everywhere else, there is an internal communist conspiracy, allied with formidable foreign forces. But I do not think that communism as a belief, apart from overt and illegal actions, can be successfully combated by police methods, persecution, war or a mere anti spirit. The only force that can overcome an idea and a faith is another and better idea and faith, positively and fearlessly upheld.

But it might not be out of place here to remind our European friends and critics that not long ago their own forebears looked upon the American "experiment" with extreme skepticism, some of them predicting that such an "impossible" union-in-liberty would "inevitably" end in tyrannical dictatorship. By God's grace and our own intelligence and determination it never will.

This is not to deny that the existence of numerous nationalities, recalling earlier allegiances to states still existing,

If men are so wicked with religion, what would they be without it?
—BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

creates special problems peculiar to the United States.

It contributes to isolationism because of the apprehension that organized minority pressures may bring America into wars involving no specific American interests, creating a reaction of the whole to the particular: America first.

Where a sufficient number of minorities become emotionally involved, it contributes to interventionism. Hitler's persecution of the Jews produced especially powerful reactions here where live half of all the Jews in the world, as his subsequent persecutions of Poles and other Western Slavs elicited the strongest repercussions in the country that has more Poles, Czechs, Slovaks and South Slavs—defining them by national origin—than any area outside Poland, Czechoslovakia or Yugoslavia.

The two great political parties are also somewhat divided along ethnic lines. The larger part of the more recent immigrants are Democrats. There is almost certainly a connection between this fact and the fact that the Democratic Party has, in the past, been the more interventionist in behalf of immigrants' former countries. In 1952 the Republicans undoubtedly hoped to change normally Democratic votes among Americans of East European extraction by advocating the liberation of their mother countries—an idea received with less than enthusiasm by our West European allies.

The multiple ethnic structure gives to America variety, vitality and the outward appearance and reality of nonconformity. No other country has so enormous a foreign-language press. No other country is so catholic in many of its tastes—for instance, in food. No other country has an Athens, a London, Berlin, Warsaw, Rome, and what not, among its towns and cities.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 18

Delicate  in Flavor

Buttery Smooth...

Royal

The Only INSTANT Pudding that is Super Homogenized

REALLY MELTS IN YOUR MOUTH!

PRE-COOKED!
DIGESTIBLE!
DELICIOUS!

You'll taste the difference instantly! Only ROYAL Instant Pudding is both pre-cooked and super homogenized. So easy to digest you can give it to babies! So creamy textured and smooth it's a new sensation on your tongue! And whether you choose delicate Vanilla, tangy Butterscotch, rich Chocolate, or luscious Coconut Cream, the flavor is at its best—with no hint of starchy taste. Do try this Instant Pudding. Get super homogenized ROYAL today.

INSTANTLY SMOOTH WITHOUT COOKING

Just add to cold milk . . . beat . . . let set . . . serve. No film, lumps or starchy taste!

A Joy, too, for Making Ice Creams, Frostings, Cake and Pie Fillings!

HOWDY DOODY'S FAVORITE

© KAGRAN

They're NEW! They're TWO! T

A perfect Angel Food Cake every time you bake

A high, light and better-tasting Angel Food Cake

Betty Crocker
OF GENERAL MILLS

"Hello, there—I'm Betty Crocker do want you to know our new Ang Mix. Our best friends tell us it b high and light a cake as our ov 13-egg recipe. Better-tasting, too, b you add your own favorite flavor ing else but water to add—all the fine country egg you need and special angel cake flour are right package. You don't even have to sift! Do bake a food . . . a Betty Crocker Angel Food . . . right eat cake mixes from Betty Cr

VL SET

of MIXING!

TLY PACKED IN GIFT CARTON

ABOUT $2.95

Notice the tapered sides. They make these bowls easy to hold, pour from, clean. You can even bake in amazing Anchorglass! So handsome, you'll use them as serving bowls, too!

See these remarkable mixing bowls wherever glass is sold. If your dealer does not have them in stock, he can get them for you by writing Anchor Hocking Glass Corporation.

■ Black Polka Dots 1, 2, 3, 4 Qt. Bowls

• Red Polka Dots 1, 2, 3, 4 Qt. Bowls

Smartly packed in gift carton, about $2.95

A product of Anchor Hocking Glass Corporation, Lancaster, Ohio

And a marv

arvelous M

Cake (you m

orglass

in one

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 15

But it is almost a law of politics that every pressure creates a counterpressure. Thus, cosmopolitan diversity threatening to create disruptive tendencies is counteracted by exceptional pressures for unifying tendencies, variety being checked by an equal trend to conformity, expressing itself especially in times of international crisis in "100 per cent Americanism."

As the phrase reflects the determination to shed a former national loyalty for the new one, the demand for it registers the realization that it is not so easy to abandon ancient allegiances as it is to cast off an old coat, and that he who has changed his nationality once may change it again.

Thus the law nullifying the citizenship of a naturalized American if he returns to the country of his origin and remains for more than two years without being able to present reasons, unrelated to preference, for his prolonged stay abroad.

For it is not easy to change a nationality or divest oneself of old national prejudices. Immigrants tend to gravitate to settlements largely composed of their own kind, and the tendency survives several generations. Nearly every great merican city has its Polish, German or ian section.

e pull which undoubtedly exists beold allegiances and the new one ributes to the dream of an Amer- If the whole world were "safe cy" and the "Four Freedoms" ical adjustments of Ameri-

re the greatest ciety.
RBERT SPENCER

uld be eased. inciples, at s of their ers the e over o as so within Aus- side ed e? of v

A perfect Angel Food Cake every time you bake

A high, light and better-tasting Angel Food Cake

Betty Crocker
OF GENERAL MILLS

ing else but wate
you need and sp package. You do food . . . a Betty

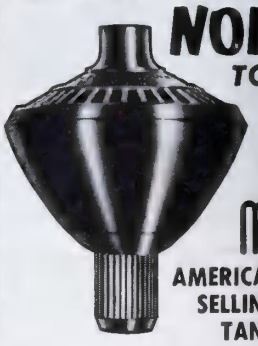
Chase this "GHOST OF THE PAST



VANiSH cleans toilet bowls fast, scents the bathroom with a fresh, enjoyable aroma. Simply pour VANiSH into bowl. Bubbling "scrubbing action" removes rings, stains, and unseen, germ-laden scum. Harmless to plumbing and septic tanks. Use it regularly. You'll like the handy Expellid Opener.

the fragrant way to clean Toilet Bowls

JUDSON DUNAWAY CORP., Dover, N
makers of ELF DRAIN OPENER.

TRICKLING . . .

NOISY TOILET GET WATE MASTE

AMERICA'S LARG SELLING TOILE TANK BALL

Noisy running toilets can waste over 500 lons of water a day. Stop this annoying n waste and expense. The amazing new ented Water-Master Tank Ball instantly s the flow of water after each flushing—s the flow everytime, not just some of the t

75c at hardware stores EVERYWHE

DACRON ORLON NYLON

IMAGI HATHAW CURTAINS at these LOW P

7" double full ruffles 104" wide per pr.—in white Masterweave Nylon.

Length	Per Pr.
63"	$6.29
72"	6.89
81"	7.49
90"	7.98

This is typical of the see huge variety of and materials shown new beautifully illu home furnishings LOG. Let Miller's SA money . . . SERVE you Write for your FRE TODAY!

Miller's OF NEW ENGLAND

Dept. J160
30 Anita Ter
Boston 19, M

1954

chorglass takes the splatter out of mixing!

At last! AMAZING DEEP-BOWL SET DESIGNED FOR Splash-proof MIXING!

r...1, 2, 3, 4 Qt. Bowls smartly packed in gift carton

-PIECE SETS ABOUT $2.95

s and tapered shape of these ent splashing! No more wip-rs from walls, counter, floor!
nd these brand-new Anchor-h-proof bowls rest on a good, perfectly balanced for tip-ng. Whether you use a wooden whisk, hand beater or port-ic mixer, you can reach every r without fear of splashing.

Notice the tapered sides. They make these bowls easy to hold, pour from, clean. You can even bake in amazing Anchorglass! So handsome, you'll use them as serving bowls, too!

See these remarkable mixing bowls wherever glass is sold. If your dealer does not have them in stock, he can get them for you by writing Anchor Hocking Glass Corporation.

the name Anchorglass

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

• Black Polka Dots 1, 2, 3, 4 Qt. Bowls • Red Polka Dots 1, 2, 3, 4 Qt. Bowls

Smartly packed in gift carton, about $2.95

A product of Anchor Hocking Glass Corporation, Lancaster, Ohio

At Last!

A NEW SHAMPOO FORMULA THAT MAKES HAIR SHINY-CLEAN...RINSES OUT QUICKLY ...YET NEVER, NEVER DRIES YOUR HAIR

New Woodbury Shampoo

FOR BEAUTIFUL HAIR-DOS RIGHT AFTER SHAMPOOING!

It's a happy feeling to have your hair shiny-clean and pretty. New Woodbury Shampoo will promise you that. But it will also promise that your hair won't be dried out and hard-to-manage. There is a special ingredient in this formula which protects the natural oils of your hair. You can set it right after washing, and the results will delight you. New Woodbury's lather is unusually rich, yet every bubble rinses out quickly — even in hardest water. (You won't need special rinses.) Because so many people are convinced new Woodbury is the ideal shampoo, and buy so much of it, it can actually be priced much lower than any other quality shampoo. Today, the big $1.00 bottle is yours for only 59¢. You'll enjoy using it!

Play centers substitute for city streets

. . . Yorkville, New York City

Trick or Treat

By MARGARET HICKEY

In thousands of our cities and towns boys and girls in costumes will ring doorbells as usual and say "Trick or treat" on Halloween. But some will wear badges bearing the letters UNICEF and, instead of filling their bags with candy and cookies for themselves, will be collecting nickels and dimes for milk and medicine for the hungry and sick children of the world.

The Halloween "Trick or Treat" project offers youngsters an opportunity to share in the work of UNICEF, the United Nations' program which is the world's largest international effort to improve the health and welfare of children and their mothers. Thanks to UNICEF, Korean boys and girls in unheated schoolrooms and homes will have a glass of warm milk every morning this winter. In Burma, Thailand, Indochina and Hong Kong, fewer mothers will have to stand by helplessly and watch their babies and youngsters die from preventable diseases. Fewer children in South America or India need suffer malaria or yaws for want of 15 cents' worth of drugs.

Last year 1349 community groups in 48 states taking part in the new "Trick or Treat" Halloween project turned over $99,000 to UNICEF. The largest collection, representing a county-wide effort, was $4423.37 from the towns and cities of Westchester County, New York. The largest single check, was for $2341.28 from "the United Church Women of Columbus and Franklin County and the children of Columbus, Ohio." The smallest—and equally heart-warming—was 50 cents from a fifth-grade child in Willimantic, Connecticut.

A single dollar, according to UNICEF, buys enough powdered milk to give 9 children a glass every day for a week; enough vaccine to protect 33 boys and girls against diphtheria; or enough penicillin to treat 8 youngsters for yaws.

Among the pioneer "Trick or Treat" organizers were the Rev. and Mrs. Clyde M. Allison, whose Sunday-school classes at the Bridesburg Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia were the first to go out with "jingle jars" for UNICEF in 1950. Since then P.T.A.'s, Junior Chambers of Commerce and other organizations in many communities have joined in this humanitarian Halloween celebration. Theaters, radio and television stations in many towns have helped out by presenting film shorts and spot announcements. This program for helping the world's children, says Mr. Allison, "shows boys and girls at their natural best at a time when juvenile delinquency is holding the attention of the public."

UNICEF can't have any more states participating in "Trick or Treat," since it already has 48, but it can have more communities in each state and more groups in each community. Would you, or an organization you belong to, like to introduce this project to the children of your own neighborhood? Write to "Trick or Treat" of the American Committee for UNICEF, United Nations Building, New York City, for detailed information. END

On a sunny afternoon children crowd every doorway along the streets of Yorkville—a great mixed section of New York's upper East Side, extending from 59th to 96th streets, from Fifth Avenue to the East River. Little boys, no higher than your elbow, are hitching rides on the great city buses. They jump on the back when the bus comes to a stop, then jump off as the bus begins to gain speed. A nine-year-old girl and a two-year-old boy, the little one screaming loudly, are pushed out of a corner saloon and a woman shouts after them, "Don't let him get in here again!" Children with light skins and dark skins race along the sidewalks, climb around parked cars, dart into the streets.

For Joseph Kubat, a small, dark-haired six-year-old, playtime in crowded Yorkville is different. The magic hour of Joe's day is three o'clock in the afternoon. Then Joe and the hundreds of other kids who go to P.S. 86 pour out onto busy Lexington Avenue. They're free till next day!

But Joe's father, who is a barber, and his mother, a telephone operator, won't be home till suppertime. The empty apartment is locked. In his school there are about 150 kids like him—children who, a few years ago, had only the already overflowing sidewalks and streets to turn to.

Today all 150 of them crowd around the school doors to go back in at 3:15—not for more school but for play. Inside are friends and neighbors—some adults, some teen-agers—who are full of ideas about interesting things to do. The big boys, shouting at the tops of their voices, play ball in the yard outside, with a good-natured adult (they call him "Teach!") to umpire. A high-school girl and a small fifth-grader whirl a long rope for the girls waiting to try their skill at jumping.

Inside, smaller boys and girls begin banging large blocks over the floor. They've decided to build a ship—with bunks for everyone. Next door there's a wonderful messy scene with paste and colored paper—young artists are learning paper sculpture.

So begins a typical afternoon in one of five afterschool play centers (three for elementary-school children, two for CONTINUED ON PAGE 23

ERICH HARTMANN

When school is out, their fun begins. Children who once roamed city streets now spend long afternoons with paste and paint—making animals, greeting cards, jack-o'-lanterns, pictures—under the helpful guidance of volunteers working with the Yorkville Youth Council, New York City.

"SEE RED"

fashion's new hot-tempered red in

MAX Factor's Color-fast lipstick

the only non-smear type lipstick with "stay-on lustre"

Looking for t Wear "See Re
the maddening
new lipstick c
Max Factor. B careful—don't anything you finish! $1.10 p

ONTINUED FROM PAGE 21

which are operated by the York-Council, a private agency created ago by parents and neighbors in nity. With a minimum budget t year) and a small nucleus of pro-ff members supplied by the Board
n, the council has built a program provides daily recreation and new 1300 children and young people!
one of the program is an enthusiof 250 parents, college students hool juniors and seniors, each of s one afternoon a week to the se volunteers work with the chile office, raise funds for the council, e the experimental and adminisning. Volunteers even recruit new munity undertaking, aptly de-"adventure in human relations," by the Parents' League, an asso-arents of private-school pupils.

experience with their own chilmothers and fathers knew that f the child's most important ways o live happily with himself and yet hundreds of Yorkville's chilconfronted with locked school d empty apartments just when egan.

children, "learning to live with special meaning. They have last all nations: Nekvapil, Rutherguel, Sweeney, stein, Colom-lle, once pre-German, now
sh, Czech, Yurman, Irish,
rto Rican, Ne-
omes also vary.
he play centers
the homes of drivers, cooks, achers, engi-York's largest of private mentary and rises in the same blocks with the lic schools. Tensions mount as nted apartment buildings go up rows of cold-water flats.
rovided the most effective answer ying problem. Recreation plans often are—costly, but the Yorkouncil proposed to build a com-rogram on the smallest budget ing the resources at hand.
hose resources? First there were school buildings themselves.
the licensed teachers in the
and women trained to work with st resource of all, there were the community. Parents from Park First Avenue shared one power-terest—the welfare of their chile council's program for children exciting by-product: a commug to pull together—instead of

R FREDERICK MILLER, enthusiastic king president of the Y.Y.C.'s ectors, was a member of the mittee. "From the beginning it f building trust," she points out, le of very different ways of life.
derstood what we hoped to do—itself, was hard at first—every-help. Our problem was to put nto action as soon as possible, lve in a lot of fine talk."
ttee went first to the private Millicent C. McIntosh, now Barnard College, then headearley, led the discussion with icators. The heads were so ent the plan that they pledged the financial backing from their nds.
an idea and a thousand dollars
the committee went to Mark irector of the Bureau of Com-tion of the Board of Education City. He promised the use of a public-school building after school hours, and the help of professional teachers, their salaries to be supplemented by the Yorkville Youth Council. But, because he knows people as well as he likes them, Mr. McCloskey warned the committee that they would from that point on be wearing "the hair shirt of co-operation!"

The program was three years old, the first experimental play center (for 200 children) had proved a notable success when Miss Elisabeth Ayres was brought in to head the project. A slender vital woman who never loses her air of calm, Miss Ayres is liaison officer between the board of directors, the advisory panel (leading professionals from New York's schools and school associations), the schools where play centers are established, the parents' organizations of both private and public schools, the professional staff—now grown to eighteen members—the volunteers in every field, and the children themselves.

THE volunteer aides, more than any others, make possible that line of children, pushing and shouting, eager to go back into the school building at 3:15. Because the volunteers are there in such number, hundreds of children rather than a handful (about one third of the total enrollment in each school) are taken care of by the Y.Y.C. program. Children from neighboring parochial schools are included. Parents' applications for their children's admission to the center are accepted in order of need—first priority goes to the children whose mothers work outside the home.

The only way to play the game of life is to take your tarts when they are passing tarts, and not wait to see what they are going to pass next.
—WARREN HENRY GOLDSMITH:
Crumbs of Common Sense

The large number of volunteers makes possible, too, the wide choice each child has for his afternoon play—active games, quiet games, arts and crafts, music, drama, dancing, woodwork. A little boy may spend a busy hour just pounding nails in a board. Or if a child wants to be quiet and read awhile, he can do that too. Trips are arranged each year to museums, art centers and local industries.

Adult volunteers come from the parents' groups of public and private schools. Mrs. Helen Eustis, a well-known writer, leads a story hour. Mrs. Ross Harris, a vice-president of the council, and an accomplished musician, teaches a drum section. The children pound out their explosive energy on old sugar kegs covered with used drumheads (Mrs. Harris' own idea). In a room nearby Mrs. Puleselic, who speaks English with an accent (and whose own child attends the play center), brings her clever fingers and ingenious ideas to a "sewing class" where little girls make pot holders, aprons or felt decorations to take home to mother later.

College students, majoring in education or sociology, come from five New York colleges and universities to help with the program. And to the Y.Y.C. leaders' delight, over half of the volunteers working with the children come from public and private high schools.

Because these 125 teen-agers are young enough to sympathize fully with the children's energy—and noise!—they are among the best workers there. Sue Raymond, of Chapin, a private school for girls, has gone to P.S. 86 one afternoon a week for three years. A small sturdy girl who loves games and has unusual poise, she can umpire twenty-five high-spirited boys in a fierce game of "warball" and have as much fun as anyone there. "And I learn more than I ever could from books!" she says.

The program for "junior volunteers" is one of the most important—and demanding—aspects of the Y.Y.C.'s recreation plan. High-school principals or headmasters select only young people who are mature, well-balanced personalities, and the Y.Y.C. directors guide the students individually in their work with the children. Young people—as staff aides—are treated as adults. "We feel deeply grateful to the Y.Y.C.," Miss Edna M. Hill, headmistress of Nightingale-Bamford, says, "for providing a worth-while mature project for adolescents—always accused of being immature."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 212

The only cotton swabs that give your baby all these benefits

1. Sparkling-white Red Cross Cotton
2. No loose wisps or fuzz; won't twist or slip
3. Splinter-free sticks, polished smooth
4. Doctor-recommended size
5. 100% sterile, guaranteed by Johnson & Johnson

New JOHNSON'S COTTON BUDS

Air St TATTOO
THEME CAMPUS
TEASE
see the newest Air Steps at your retailer's fall Fashion feel it...

IC SOLE that softens your step gi es you fashion with a bonus of comfort

At the heart of Air Step fashion is the comfort of the Magic Sole ... a buoyant, airy cushion skillfully designed to pillow your every step.

The woman you see here is actually feeling the Air Step Magic Sole. You can feel it, too ... in every one of these six style leaders now at your retailer's Fashion Fair. Air Step's Magic Sole is the invisible side of fashion—seen only in your light step, happy smile. Your best buy in shoe fashion plus a bonus of comfort.

MOHAWK

CHECKER

Shoes Illustrated

$10.95 and $11.95

Other styles $8.95 to $12.95

Higher Denver West

A Product of Brown Shoe Company

Air Step®

9 to Oct. 30 . . . Air Step Division, Brown Shoe Company, St. Louis.

Only 36 inches wide!

Universal's new 2-oven gas range... at a budget price!

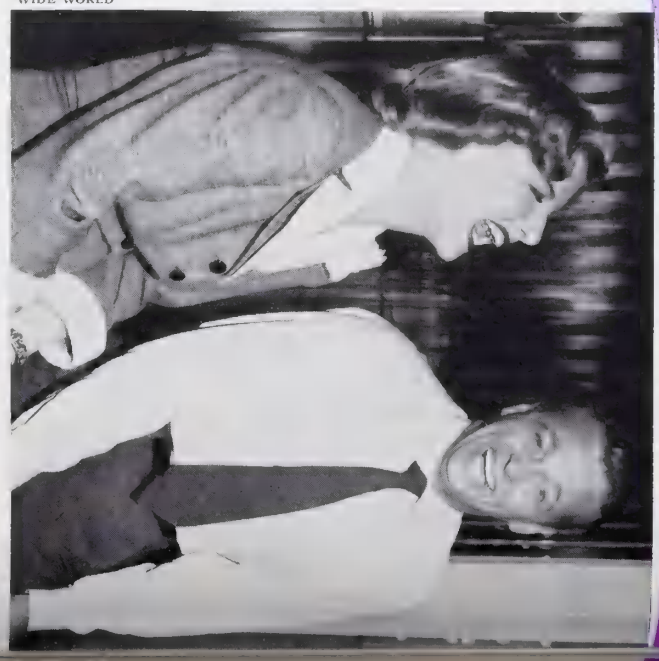
Enjoy two-oven convenience at single-oven price in just 36 inches of wall space! Bake at one temperature while you roast at another in Universal's two separately controlled ovens. Makes perfect meal timing a cinch!

A full-sized smokeless broiler, four big lifetime top burners, modern automatic controls and many other famous Universal features make this budget-priced gas range today's best buy. See it now at your Universal Gas Range dealer.

Fully automatic! All guess work is eliminated with Universal's modern automatic controls.

Easy to clean! Removable burner bowls and one-piece top make cleaning quick and easy.

Universal



GAS RANGE ▪ Cribben & Sexton Co., Chicago 12, Ill.

Gas gives easier, cooler, cleaner cooking—for less. You bake best, broil best, roast best, cook best with gas on a Universal Gas Range.

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

WIDE WORLD

Ann Sheridan and John Lund give a lesson in laughing.

IT may be the times we're living through, or maybe it's just that we're all growing older, but people don't seem to laugh the way they used to. They're tense and heavy-minded. They should read more amusing books, is my notion, so I've turned up a few—various kinds for various tastes—hoping that among them there'll be a laugh for all.

To begin with there's AN ENCYCLOPEDIA OF AMERICAN HUMOR, put together by Bennett Cerf, who has been chuckling for the past year. It's a wonderful collection, with bits chosen from the best-selling humor, like The Egg and I, The Father of the Bride, Mr. Roberts, The Last Resorts; a department called "A Whiff of Grease Paint" devoted to theater humor which goes all the way down the line to W. C. Fields–Charlie McCarthy; "The Next Verse You Hear"—and so on through 704 gloom-dispelling pages.

NO TIME FOR SERGEANTS, by Mac Hyman, will make almost anybody laugh out loud. It is about a Georgia hillbilly drafted into the Army. When the draft official first turned up Pa drove him off with a rifle. The second time Pa said he'd let Will go if he could go freely, not be fetched in a car. So Wi twenty-seven miles to town to feelings. He hadn't gone to board in the first place becaus up there could read.

THE RAMAYANA, on the ot is not everybody's caviar—a phisticated, philosophical satire written by Aubrey Menen. the Ramayana is an old India but this version is pure Aubrey just as The Private Life of Hele was pure John Erskine. Menen, remember, is the half-Irish, h young man, brought up in Engl living in Italy, who made his liter with that indescribable book, alence of Witches. Someone h him the modern Anatole Franc two, I must confess that I find M more amusing.

THE WORCESTER ACCOUN specifically a funny book, but y with pleasure as you read. This the people who lived, forty or f ago, on Providence Street, W Massachusetts—the one Jewish

CONTINUED ON PAGE

"Come now—I know you can do better than that!"

Maybe the reason more children eat Jell-O Puddings than any other kind is because they taste so good.

Maybe the reason more mothers serve them is because they're so nourishing . . . and so easy to fix.

Maybe you ought to try some!

Vanilla
Chocolate
Butterscotch
Lemon

JELL-O IS A REGISTERED TRADE-MARK OF GENERAL FOODS CORPORATION

new! deep

Tissue-Test proves it!

After you think your usual cleansing method has cleaned your skin, use a few drops of Deep Magic. Then look at your tissue. See all the clogging make-up that only Deep Magic can remove . . . Proof that Deep Magic cleans deep, deep down— where beauty begins!

magic

facial cleansing lotion by Toni

leans your skin up to* 3 times cleaner *than soaps or creams

now you can have a clearer skin

because you can have a cleaner skin. New Deep Magic actually deep-cleans your skin as much as three times cleaner than soaps or creams—without soap drying, without cream greasiness! It leaves your skin far cleaner, radiantly clear the very first time you use it. Lanolin-gentle Deep Magic actually replaces natural oils, leaving behind an invisible powder base.

Try Deep Magic today. See the wonderful magic it works on your complexion!

(60¢ and $1.00, plus tax, wherever cosmetics are sold.)

No other cleansing method leaves your skin

so clear - so soft - so radiant !

"Brown Beauty" Dry Mop and Split Duster

New, Light-Weight Stanhome Electric Iron

Stainless Steel Steak Knife and Fork Sets

Gifts you'll love!

Ask your Stanley Dealer how you can get these and other valuable REWARDS FOR THE STANLEY PARTY HOSTESS

Entertaining your friends at a Stanley Hostess Party is both pleasant and profitable. Stanley Dealers are grateful for the privilege of being invited into homes to demonstrate Stanley's Quality-Plus Housekeeping and Personal Grooming Aids. In appreciation, these friendly Dealers see that each and every Stanley Party Hostess is liberally rewarded for her cooperation. For this purpose, Stanley Dealers feature a wide choice of highly-prized Dividend Gifts exclusively for Stanley Party Hostesses. Ask your Stanley Dealer to show you the complete assortment for your selection. Then plan to give your own Stanley Hostess Party soon.

Stainless Steel Kitchen Cutlery Set

Hand-Painted Dishes, Lace Cloth, Salt and Pepper Shakers

Stanley-Flex Kitchen and Household Nece

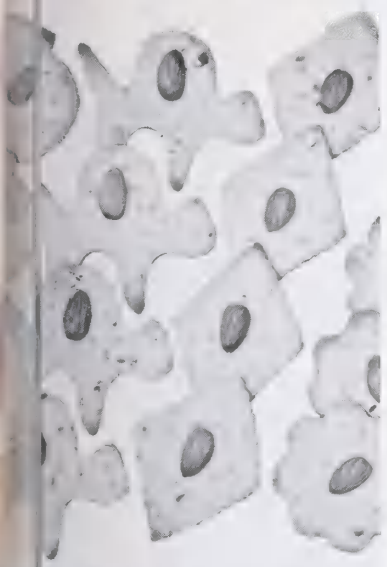
Most Popular

STANHOME
A STANLEY HOME PRODUCT

Originators of th Famous Stanley Hos Party Plan

Stanley Home Products, Inc., Westfield, Ma
Stanley Home Products of Canada, Ltd., Londo

© Stanley Home Products



When you give a Stanley Hostess Party, you give one of America's most popular home demonstration parties. More than 12,000 of these fun-filled and convenient shopping Parties take place every day. These Parties are easy to hold. No home is too little, no group too small. To arrange for your Stanley Hostess Party, phone or write your Stanley Dealer, your nearest Stanley Home Products Branch Office, or communicate direct with Stanley's Main Office in Westfield, Massachusetts.

STANLEY LEADS with more than 150 Quality-Plus Products featured at the Stanley Hostess Parties: Mops, Brushes, Brooms, Dusters, Waxes, Polishes, Chemicals, Deodorizers, Moth Preventives to help you save time, work, mone doing housework better. Feminine Toilette Articles, Masculine Shaving Prepa Bath Accessories, Personal and Clothing Brushes, Dental Hygiene Aids, a w other items to improve personal grooming.

TO MAKE

"Trick or Treat" Cookies

gobblin good for Halloween

Trick or Treat, thanks to Blue Diamond ... These crisp cookies resemble the ... Swedish tea cookies called Spritz. Make ... this way.

... butter or ... granulated ... sugar ... eggs

2½ cups sifted all-purpose flour
½ tsp. salt
½ cup ground almonds
½ tsp. vanilla extract
Almond meats

...tter and sugar together thoroughly. ...unbeaten egg yolks. Stir in flour, ...nds, and flavoring. Work mixture ...ls until smooth. Roll dough ⅛ to ...hick and cut into desired shapes. ...may be shaped into 1-inch balls and ...with fork.) Top with half or whole ...ither natural kernel or blanched. ...ngreased cooky sheet in hot oven ... for about 8 to 10 minutes or until ...ht brown.

...nds "glorify" 'most any dish

Crunchy almonds "perk up" everyday dishes and glorify desserts. Try roasted almonds, diced, on ice cream, with or without syrup topping. M-m-m-m. Home-made Sundaes for only pennies!

...Diamond ...Almonds ...sted- ... or ...s of ...monds ...d meats.

FREE RECIPES For free booklet "Win Compliments with Almonds," write California Almond Growers Exchange, Sacramento, California

WHATEVER THE DISH, FOR ...NESS' SAKE, ADD ALMONDS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 26

that New England city. It is what S. N. Behrman, the now famous playwright, remembers about his childhood. It concerns intimately only Jews, but Protestant-Catholic Worcester peeps through everywhere—Worcester Academy, Easton's, Holy Cross. St. Vincent's Catholic Hospital was in the Jewish section, and Mrs. Behrman, Sam's mother, was a frequent patient there. Though she spoke only Yiddish, she made close friendships with many of the nuns. It was a charming consideration, her son tells us, that the nuns veiled the holy pictures—the Virgin and the Crucifix—to spare the religious sensibilities of their Orthodox Jewish patients.

Sam Behrman has traveled a long way from Providence Street. He knows the world well and his sense of values is unerring. This little book of his is never woeful, never precious, never funny at the expense of truth. It is an artist's mature work. (Among Behrman's many comedies are Biography, No Time for Comedy, The Second Man.)

•

If you ever take a small girl to Boston, take her on a swan boat on the lake in the Public Garden. And if you have not already done so, don't fail to read to her, before and after, Robert McCloskey's MAKE WAY FOR THE DUCKLINGS. It is a Boston classic.

FPG

Swan boat on the lake in Boston's Public Garden.

And if you have a spaniel you will do well to get TRAINING YOUR SPANIEL, by Clarence Pfaffenberger. (See page 6.)

•

Two of England's "bright young men" have current books: TACTICAL EXERCISE, a collection of a dozen of Evelyn Waugh's stories, typical Waugh, witty, wicked; and FUTURE INDICATIVE, the second volume of Noel Coward's autobiography, particularly interesting in light of the Gertrude Lawrence story now running in the JOURNAL because those two were always such friends.

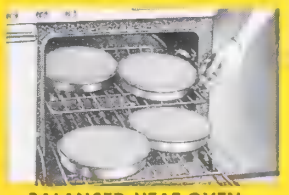
•

Detroit citizens will be interested in HATCHET IN THE SKY, by Margaret Cooper Gay, fine historical novel of the period 1760–70 when the French and English were fighting for control of the Northwest, climaxed by the fall of Detroit into the hands of the English, and the valiant though fruitless efforts of Pontiac, the great Indian leader.

Texans will want to read THE SEARCHERS, by Alan Le May. This is a historical novel laid after the Civil War when the Comanches, best horsemen and most savage of our American Indians, faced the plain hard-working cattlemen of South Texas.

Virginians will like SHADOWS IN SILVER, a book of old photographs,

BRILLIANT cooking combination . . . YOU and your



HARDWICK 75

Gas Range with Super EconoMatic

ECONOTROL TOP BURNERS
3 burners in 1! High flame for quick boiling; click to controlled boiling heat (NO boil-overs); click again to keep-warm heat!

Exclusive HARDWICK features

BALANCED-HEAT OVEN
EquaFlo Burner provides the absolute same temperatures throughout the roomy oven. Bakes cakes identically without peeking, turning or reshuffling!

SMOKE-PROOF BROILING
EquaFlo char-broils a broilerful of meat, browns edges of steaks or chops just like the center, with no smoke at all!

You'll win a reputation as cook extraordinary with this feature-studded HARDWICK 75, triumph of HARDWICK'S 75 years of making gas ranges that cook better and look better.

SAFE! Your HARDWICK 75's top burners and oven light instantly, automatically, from a pin-point pilot so small it can't heat the range. But no gas can escape ever, for Super EconoMatic automatically cuts off gas supply to top burners or oven if pilot is extinguished.

Start a brilliant cooking future . . . see the popular-priced HARDWICK 75 today at your dealer or gas company!

HARDWICK STOVE COMPANY • CLEVELAND, TENNESSEE

HARDWICK 1879 75 1954 DIAMOND JUBILEE

PERFORMANCE that only 75 years of experience could produce

FREE! Complete story of Super EconoMatic. New safety in your home. New automatic features of HARDWICK 75 Gas Range. Mail coupon today to Department L-23.

NAME _____

STREET _____

CITY _____ STATE _____

Women who love luxury choose this newer, nicer kind of tissue

Newer, nicer...for today's nicer bathrooms

Gentle as facial tissue. Soft-Weve is the modern bathroom luxury you find in most carefully appointed bathrooms of today. It's soft like your facial tissue—made like facial tissue, too.

Two soft thicknesses, firm and strong give Soft-Weve its wonderful softness and practical strength. Your family and guests will appreciate the greater comfort of Soft-Weve . . . so be sure to provide it in your home. Soft-Weve is another great Scott paper value.

"SOFT-WEVE." REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

taken between 1850 and 1900 by George Cook and his sons, with text by A. Lawrence Kocher and Howard Dearstyne.

•

For biography this month there is THE REMARKABLE MR. JEROME, by Anita Leslie, a period piece set around Sir Winston Churchill's energetic American grandfather. Energetic! Leonard Jerome kept New York whizzing through a large part of the nineteenth century. He introduced the royal sport of horse-racing, nurtured grand opera, put the New York Times on its feet, made a fortune of $10,000,000—lost it and made it again.

•

The male equivalent of a mink coat (to leap forward a century) is the rich-and-racy-looking modern sports car. Probably very few JOURNAL subscribers

REPRODUCED BY PERMISSION. COPR. 1954 THE NEW YORKER MAGAZINE, INC.

"But, Charles, what about us?"

will care to read THE MODERN SPORTS CAR, by Tom McCahill, but they do have husbands and brothers, and they can dream, can't they?

•

NEW HOPE FOR THE RETARDED, by Miriam and Phillip Pollock, has been recommended to me by a Girl Scout leader who found it very helpful in dealing with a problem in her troop—"simple, written in nontechnical language and a blessing for anyone working with a retarded child."

•

For poetry we have THE LANTERN OF DIOGENES, by Jenny Lind Porter, whose first poem and many poems since you have seen in the JOURNAL.

•

Last of all there's humor again—this time the broad variety. NEVER SAY DIET, by Corey Ford, illustrated by R. Taylor, is a comic on calorie diets, a possible gift to the stout party who can take a joke when it's handed him.

Fret away those surplus pounds, suggests Mr. Ford. Concentrate on some of those things that upset you. Lose pounds.

What was it I was to be sure and pick up at the supermarket on the way home? Loss, ½ pound.

Is that a motorcycle following us? 3 pounds.

What did the boss mean yesterday when he said sales were falling off and there seemed to be a lot of deadwood in the office? 5 pounds.

What time is it? 1 pound. END

HAVE YOU S MEDI
ON TV?

"...no comprom with truth" makes MEDIC top television drama!

An unforgettable experience awai you haven't yet seen MEDIC. W paralleled realism and honesty it case histories and carries the off dorsement of the Los Angeles Association. It is produced und technical supervision by Wort Miner, originator of Studio One;
and written by Dragnet writer, Jame
The Dow Chemical Company is p present a program of such exception

MEDIC
Monday Nights
9 to 9:30 EST NB

THE DOW CHEMICAL COMPANY
MIDLAND, MICHIGAN

DOW

Dial Soap again offers you this wonderful opportunity!

WIN AN OIL WELL!

Have money flowing in for years*

* Grand Prize

Full operating income of a producing oil well (subject to usual farmer's royalty). Independent petroleum engineer estimates winner's first year's income at $12,000—gradually less yearly income for as long as 10 to 20 years. Total may eventually run as high as $35,000. OR—winner can take $25,000 CASH now.

206 CASH PRIZES
EVERY WEEK FOR 6 WEEKS

FIRST PRIZE	5 PRIZES	200 PRIZES
(every week)	(every week)	(every week)
$1,000.00 Cash	each $100 Cash	each $10 Cash

...ning an oil well—becoming rich over night! ...y opportunity in Dial Soap's fabulous new con-...parate weekly contests. 206 cash prizes every ...the Grand Prize Oil Well going to one of the six ...ers. All this for the winning jingles on Dial Soap. ...very week and increase your chance of winning!

6 Big Contests! Enter often every week!

DIAL SOAP JINGLE CONTEST

Just finish a 2-line jingle starting with

"I'M GLAD I USE DIAL _____

_____"

SAMPLE JINGLES

I'm glad I use Dial, I wish everyone would,
For Dial stops odor in a way that is good!

I'm glad I use Dial, its lather so creamy,
Helps my complexion in a way that is dreamy!

How to Write Winning Jingles. 2-line jingles are the easiest kind to write! Just start your jingle with "I'm glad I use Dial." Keep your jingle to two lines, and make the last word in both lines rhyme (as in samples above). Read our "Hints" and just tell us your own reasons for liking Dial Soap. Mail today—you may win an Oil Well!

Enter this week and every week! Follow these easy rules

1. Finish a 2-line jingle that starts "I'm glad I use Dial....." Last word in both lines must rhyme.

2. Send in as many entries each week as you wish. Write each on a separate piece of paper. Print your name and address plainly. Attach to each entry a Dial Soap wrapper—either Bath Size or Regular Size. Mail to DIAL, BOX 7199, Chicago 77, Illinois. (Be sure to use enough postage.)

3. There will be 6 weekly contests, each with its own set of prizes each week. Dates are:

Contest	Opens	Closes
1st	Now	Sept. 25
2nd	Sept. 26	Oct. 2
3rd	Oct. 3	Oct. 9
4th	Oct. 10	Oct. 16
5th	Oct. 17	Oct. 23
6th	Oct. 24	Oct. 30

4. Entries received before midnight, Sept. 25, will be judged in first week's contest. Thereafter, entries as received will be judged in the then current week's contest which will close at midnight each successive Saturday. Entries for 6th and final week must be postmarked before midnight, Saturday, Oct. 30, and received by Nov. 6, 1954.

5. The Grand Prize to be awarded at the end of the final contest will be the full operating income of a producing oil well (subject to usual farmer's royalty) or $25,000 cash. Armour and Company will furnish independent petroleum engineer's estimate of oil well's present and future earnings to help winner decide whether to choose the oil well or the $25,000 cash. Also, the following Cash Prizes will be awarded each week:

1 Prize, $1,000 Cash
5 Prizes, each $100 Cash
200 Prizes, each $10 Cash

The Grand Prize winner will be selected from among the six weekly $1,000 winners.

6. Entries will be judged on originality, uniqueness and aptness of thought by Reuben H. Donnelley Corporation. Duplicate prizes in case of ties. Judges' decision final. No entries returned or published. Entries and ideas therein become property of Armour and Company. Armour and Company reserves the right to disqualify any entry which was not personally composed by contestant or members of his immediate household. (This right is reserved to disqualify entries prepared by professional "ghost" writers, schools and contest writing services.)

7. All persons in the United States, its territories and possessions may enter, except employees of Armour and Company, its advertising agencies and their families. Contest subject to all Federal and State regulations. Winners will be notified by mail approximately six weeks after the close of the 6th contest. List of winners will be mailed to anyone sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

...AST YEAR'S GRAND PRIZE WINNER

...onald Parkinson, 6027 Ells-... Dallas, shown with Mrs. ...son as he learned he was Grand ...Winner in Dial Soap's 1953 ...ll Contest.

...er of a young son and ...er, he is an employee of an ...ice company. And he proves ... to keep on entering: "The ...ontest I ever won was the ... prize of $1000, and in the 6th ...t that. You can imagine how ... getting the Grand Prize, too. ... am glad I use Dial Soap!"

HINTS TO HELP YOU WIN

Now, more than ever, you can be glad you use Dial. Tell us why (in an easy 2-line jingle like the samples above) and maybe win an Oil Well! Dial's the soap that stops perspiration odor before it starts. Because Dial's AT-7 (Hexachlorophene) destroys odor-causing bacteria that other soaps leave on your skin.

And mild, fragrant Dial protects complexions even under make-up, because it removes bacteria that spread surface blemishes. For children, Dial helps prevent infections that often follow minor cuts or scratches. Tell us why you like Dial in an easy jingle. It may win you Cash or an Oil Well!

True or False?

THE SUB-DEB edited by

Ruth Imler

"A girl has to neck to be popular."

FALSE A truly popular girl doesn't have to do anything she doesn't want to do; she's independent enough to do only those things she chooses to do. And this attitude of independence—and her own friendly interest in people and her ability to make others feel her interest in them—is plenty good date-bait, as boys tend to rate a girl by the same system of values as she rates herself. True, a girl who gets a reputation for being a "good neck" is likely to have a sudden whirl of dates from the curious. But who would want to change phones with her, on that inevitable date when she has to ask herself if the boy really likes her, or if he's "only interested in necking"? From that date forward, she is never quite certain of her charms; and although she likes dances, movies, walks, football games and parties, somehow she has to keep proving to her dates that she does! And the girl who depends on necking for popularity often loses the very freshness and sincerity that are a girl's two biggest assets in attracting boys.

"If his kiss leaves you weak, it's real love."

FALSE For, although it may be real love, it isn't necessarily so. His kiss can also leave you weak if 1—you're crazy about him and uncertain about the way he feels about you; 2—if it's your first real kiss the swooning side of a good-night peck; 3—if you still believe, romantically, that "when the right person comes along you'll know it," and think that only that love which comes suddenly and dramatically is "real." The real test of love is how much do you enjoy a person—what he thinks, hopes, does? How much do you care about his happiness? How much do you respect and admire him? As well as how far do his kisses send you!

"Kissing games are kid stuff."

TRUE Kissing isn't a game, any more than it's a bargain or a reward, and anybody who thinks it is just isn't old enough to know the difference yet. "Kissing games are kid stuff" is usually enough to squelch the infant who suggests a round of post office or truth or consequences—if it's followed head on by a suggestion for amusement, like a square dance or charades, or just "Refreshments!"

Couples who wander off at parties—to play a kissing game of their own—are also a problem to their hostess and their friends. A skillful hostess can often prevent this trend from starting by suggesting a challenging game and asking the antisocial boy to help her get it going. Using kissing as a way to pass the time is another way of cheapening your affections. Kisses are special and should be private

TANA HOBAN

"Love is a kind of big hunk of black magic that glitters all over."

"Love has no rules."

TRUE & FALSE Love, once you've seen it for yourself, is a kind of big hunk of black magic that glitters all over with his laughter and his kisses; a magic that can make a front-seat, a silly-kissing-game, a C-movie, or a just-one-good-night-kiss-please problem disappear. But how do you know if you're in love—if you're only sixteen? Or if you're seventeen—and you believe that it is the real thing—what then?

Then you'll want to consider the reasons for some of society's rules. Why are interests in common, similarity of background and religion so important in choosing a "mate"? Why are some expressions of affection considered right before marriage, others wrong? Maybe you think it all "depends on the individual"? Certainly when it comes to deciding what's wise and what's foolish, what's beautiful and what's ugly, you'll have to write your own rules. And you'll want to think about what others have to say about the Garden-of-Eden-old problem.

Read: Facts of Life and Love: A Guide for Teen-Agers, by Evelyn Millis Duvall, New York, Association Press, 1950; Looking Ahead to Marriage, by Clifford Adams, Chicago, Science Research Associates, 1949; Understanding Sex, by Lester A. Kirkendall, Chicago, Science Research Associates, 1948.

"A boy is entitled to a good-night

FALSE A boy is entitled to a bright sm and an enthusiastic acknowle ment of the efforts he's made to please the ("Good night, Jerry—I had a wonde time.") Of course he hopes for a kiss, too, he'll value that kiss about in proportion a is hard to get—he'd like to think that he's only guy who gets one. If a boy knows th girl wouldn't kiss a boy unless she really li him (and that's a good thing to tell the bo her kiss will be a significant one. Such kisse as expressions of real affection—help us grow into love. They're not to be denied- doled out, either, as a payment of debt.

"It's different if you're going ste

TRUE & FALSE True, if you like a well enough to devote your dating time to him, you want to h hands in the movies and you do. You h hands and you want to kiss. And you You kiss and you want to neck. You nec and then it is different. When you're go steady, it is harder to control your emot than when you're playing the field with th or four boys—but especially important to so, if you have the happy hope that this r be marriage-type love. Since one of the pr advantages of going steady is being able to things together, why muff this wonde chance of discovering each other's tastes, terests and personality quirks? Washing family car together, trying to define a " curity risk" together, even shopping for clot together, cuts down on those tough pr lems that will come up if you and your ste begin to spend virtually all your time gether in some sort of clinch.

"It's up to a girl to set the limit

TRUE It's a biological fact, most doct say, that boys are more ea aroused than girls. Biology aside, it's a so fact that it's the girl's job to keep sex in lin to draw away gently when two kisses threa to turn into twenty or something else a gether. With an understanding of her biol and his she won't snuggle up to him in the on the way home "because it's cooler all o sudden," or linger overly long in the mo light. Boys dislike the prude who preaches know this isn't right, Tom," or "It's wrong kiss a girl when you don't mean it," and flirting prude who teases—by speech a dress—and then acts as if the boy has so nerve thinking that she would do such a th as neck.

One of the surest ways a girl can tell h much a boy really likes and respects her is degree to which he helps her decide wha "off bounds." If he accepts it as his job, t not hers alone, she can be sure she has a r gentleman who has a deep affection for h sh from our artists' easels...

udio Greetings by Gibson

ly new! delightfully different!

ng for something really new in greeting cards? n see these gay, light-hearted Gibson creations ght way. Each has a personality to match someone ou know. For birthdays, illness, anniversaries, ab , and every occasion, you'll find Gibson Studio riginals that say exactly what you want to say n a cleverly different way. And everyone knows there's nothing nicer than a Gibson Card.

GIBSON Greetings

The Gibson Art Company · Cincinnati, Ohio
Publishers since 1850

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS,
Pennsylvania State University, Department of P

Making marriage work

How much should father aid in looking after the children?

Helping Him be a Father

"OUR son Billy is five, and he worships his father. Tom loves him, of course, but he is almost always too busy or too tired to play with him. He leaves the house before eight, returns after six, and often brings work home besides. I begrudge the time he spends on community affairs and weekend golf, but I can't really object since the contacts he makes help his business. Now Tom thinks we should have another baby. I'd like to have several more, but I don't want to bring them up alone. Is there any way to make a man a good father?"

This wife's question has no doubt troubled young mothers throughout history. When he marries, the average man is not equipped either by training or instinct for the responsibilities inherent in the role of husband and father. He has to learn from experience and with his wife's guidance and example.

In earlier generations, the day's routine gave men more time and opportunity to take part in family life. Schedules permitted parents and children to share their leisure, at least on farms, and their work as well.

But the fast tempo, the competitive pressure and the physical circumstances of modern life make it increasingly difficult for many men to find time for companionship with their children. And at the end of a long and fatiguing day the inclination may be lacking too. Though unfortunate, it's understandable if a tired, hungry and worried man is not in the mood for a romp the minute he gets home, even though he loves his children.

The difficulty is aggravated if home is a long distance from the father's work. With ingenious planning, and some self-sacrifice, a man who operates on a commuter's schedule can fulfill his responsibilities as a father. But he needs his wife's encouragement, understanding and active help.

A mother's sense of unity with her child is normally achieved by the mere fact of her pregnancy. Lacking that natural bond, a man may be slower to develop the same feeling of kinship. If the baby takes all his wife's time and attention, he may feel left out or even deliberately excluded. The wife should forestall this reaction, even before she is pregnant, by sharing with him her plans, feelings and hopes about the family they expect to have. After the baby is born, she can continue to foster his sense of belonging by asking his advice, describing the baby's remarkable qualities and seeking his help in some of the tasks. Now and later, she must take the initiative in keeping her husband in touch with his children.

If you feel your children need more companionship with their father, tell him so frankly, but without criticism. Explain why you think it important for him and for them. Point out specific things he can do which you cannot. Tell him how much it means to you as his wife for your children really to know the man you love.

If he's a husband worth having, he will try to cooperate. If you are sincere and unselfish in your motives, you will want to do all you can to make his efforts a pleasure instead of a chore. The ideas listed may suggest others:

Provide things to do. He isn't familiar with the children's activities and interests and may feel helpless when alone with them. Suitable games, drawing or building materials, or a story to read will occupy the time.

Suggest projects. "Going somewhere with daddy" is a special thrill, even if the trip is only a ride to the drugstore or walk to the post office. At infrequent intervals, ask him to accompany you on a picnic or trip to the zoo. Don't expect him to undertake ambitious excursions without you, unless he volunteers.

Create opportunity. If possible, arrange the household schedule to provide a definite and convenient time for him to play with the children. A slight change in the children's bedtime or your meal hours may do it.

Make the time short. Don't expect him to take over for long or indefinite periods, and relieve him if he seems tired or the children are unruly.

Keep him in touch. Help him to appreciate his children as individuals by telling him about their activities and interests, triumphs and disappointments.

Finally, remember that you and the children must do your part. If he shares some of his precious leisure with them, they should not be allowed to interrupt or interfere with his activities or privacy at other times. Above all, don't take advantage of him yourself. He was your husband before he was the children's father.

ASK YOURSELF:
Can We Enjoy the Same Things?

The understanding between husband and wife is strengthened and enriched by the interests they share. Check the list below to see how closely you agree in your choice of activities.

We both enjoy:

1. Having friends in for meals.
2. Picnics and family outings.
3. Playing cards or other games.
4. Celebrating birthdays and special occasions.
5. Spending vacations together.
6. Talking over his job and business affairs.
7. Working together on household projects.
8. Laughing at the same jokes.
9. Shopping for something special.
10. Sharing personal mail of interest.
11. The same plays and movies.
12. A hobby we pursue together.
13. Staying home more often than going out.
14. Seeing the same friends.

With a wealth of interests in common, you are not likely to get bored with each other or with marriage. The best proof of common interests is the number and variety of things you enjoy doing together. If you checked nine or ten items above, you and your husband share more fully than the average couple. But if you can make only six or fewer check marks, it is a serious warning that you two may be drifting apart. If your activities don't appeal to your husband, try to accept and share his preferences. As your interests broaden, you will find more things to do together which both enjoy.

Seeing the Other Side

ON matters affecting her family, a wife's convictions are strong and her responsibilities great. Her husband's irritability and her son's disobedience are separate problems, but each aggravates the other. She wants to soothe her husband, control her son and restore harmony. But her own anxiety and sympathy limit her effectiveness as a peacemaker.

The more deeply you are involved, the less likely you are to see the situation as it appears to the others concerned. It's particularly hard—and particularly important—for a parent to imagine himself in his child's position when a conflict arises. I doubt if one parent in a hundred even tries.

Recently a mother who did try told us what she learned, and how she succeeded. Even if you face a similar situation, her corrective measures may not work in your case. But her approach will help you find your own solution and improve family relationship generally. For by putting herself in her child's place, Mrs. Terry began to understand behavior which had upset the whole family.

Four-year-old Jane couldn't get along with other neighborhood children. She was too rough for playmates her own age, and frequently she teased and even abused the smaller ones. Her mother cajoled, scolded and tried various forms of discipline with little result. But when Jane was permanently banned from one neighbor's yard and then another, Mrs. Terry became really worried. Neither her fourteen-year-old son nor her eleven-year-old daughter had ever been mean to smaller children. What was the matter with Jane?

Mrs. Terry pondered the situation during hours when she was free from interruption or any immediate crisis. She watched Jane attentively, and she tried to see herself and the rest of the family through Jane's eyes.

Gradually she saw that the household was geared to older children and adults, not to a four-year-old. When her brother and sister absorbed their mother's attention, Jane felt left out. She needed more freedom and she tried to assert herself by bullying smaller children as an escape from bossing by her brother and sister.

To be sure, understanding the problem did not solve it. Mrs. Terry had first to correct the underlying causes. Then Jane responded to discipline.

When you are disturbed by Johnny's unruly behavior, rebellious moods or poor school record, you probably discuss the facts with your husband, as most conscientious mothers do. But Johnny may know additional facts, and he interprets them differently. Trying to modify the behavior of your children (or your husband) without searching for the cause is treating the symptom instead of the disease.

Among a wife's many duties, none is more important than her role as family interpreter. She cannot interpret what she does not understand. She can gain new insight if she tries to see through the eyes of her husband and children.

Do You Agree?

"When upset, why don't men cry as women do?"

Because boys are taught that crying is unmanly and a feminine weakness. So far as I know, there is no sound physiological explanation.

ow! Get wonderful "fried-chicken" flavor without fussing—and without frying

Spry makes the difference!

Here's All You Do!

Cut 3-lb. frying chicken in serving pieces. Combine ½ cup Spry, melted, 2 teaspoons salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper. Rub Spry well into each piece. Put chicken in shallow baking dish. Bake, uncovered, in hot oven (450°F.) 50-60 minutes or until golden brown on both sides. Turn just once!

When your family tastes that old-fashioned flavor, they'll never guess you cooked your chicken crisp and golden this easy, modern way! The secret? Pure, digestible Spry seals in the flavor and protects the chicken from cooking dry. You'll agree it's delicious, moist and tender, or Lever Brothers will return your money. For more easy Spry recipes, drop a postcard to Lever Brothers, 390 Park Avenue, New York 22, N. Y.

Spry makes just about everything you cook taste better!

Unretouched photo showing how heat spreads evenly across the copper bottom.

HEAT CONDUCTIVITY* CHART

Copper	100.0%
Aluminum	54.2%
Cast Iron	11.9%
Steel	11.8%

*Taken at 100° C., the boiling point of water.
Source: Handbook of Chemistry and Physics, 34th edition

Here's proof positive that copper has the greatest heat-conductivity of all metals used for cooking utensils.

BER 954

WHY...

Copper on the bottom makes the difference!

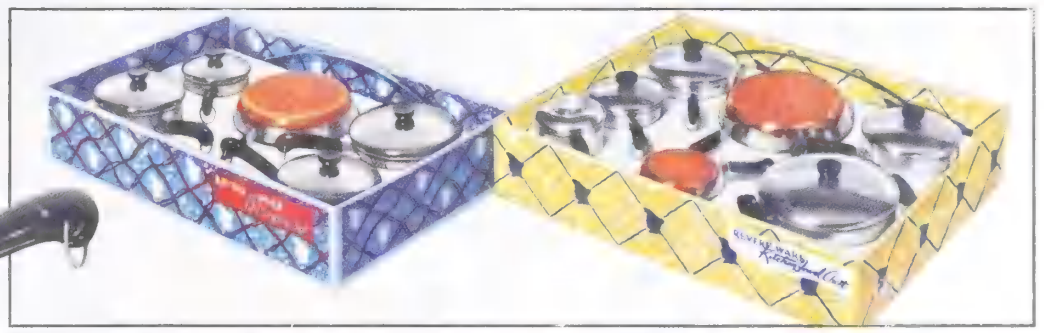
COPPER COOKS BEST! Revere puts copper on the bottom where it does the most good. Because copper best spreads the heat evenly and quickly . . . For comparisons and proof look at the chart below! . . . With copper on the bottom there are no hot spots, foods don't stick. And Revere Ware's thick copper bottoms are permanent . . . won't melt off or burn through.

STAINLESS STEEL ADDS ADVANTAGES! Corrosion resistant stainless steel, always bright and clean, is sanitary. The stainless steel keeps the heat in the utensil — where it belongs. You heat your food — not your kitchen!

ENJOY THE BENEFITS OF "WATERLESS" COOKING! Because Revere copper bottoms eliminate hot spots and hold the heat you can cook the Revere "waterless" way . . . preserving precious vitamins and minerals which are so important to the health of your family. And with copper bottoms you can cook with lowest heat and cut fuel costs! For fifteen years, Revere Ware's copper bottoms, stainless steel bodies and tight-fitting covers, have made "waterless" cooking possible.

REVERE WARE HAS ESTABLISHED NEW STANDARDS OF DESIGN AND BEAUTY! Millions upon millions of Revere Ware utensils are now hanging on the walls of kitchens from coast to coast. For fifteen years American homemakers have been proud to own and display these handsome, smartly-designed copper-clad stainless steel "Kitchen Jewels". And they'll give you a lifetime of cooking pleasure.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS! Since Revere introduced copper-clad stainless steel utensils with their many design improvements they have had many imitators. When you buy cooking utensils insist they bear the Revere Trade-Mark—Buy the Best.



REVERE COPPER AND BRASS INCORPORATED

Rome Manufacturing Company Division

Rome, New York; Clinton, Illinois; Riverside, California

SEE "MEET THE PRESS" ON NBC TELEVISION, SUNDAYS

Whether you buy your Revere Ware in these handsome, specially-priced sets . . . or individually . . . you are wisely choosing the "World's Finest"! Look for the famous trade mark in the thick copper bottoms!

Walking is Pure Joy when shoes are elasticized with Lastex®
the miracle yarn that makes things fit
US RUBBER
UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
Rockefeller Center, New York

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

Tiki and Teddy beg for a race in the leaves.

Now come wonderful bright days after the black frost has moved down the valley and stilled the summer. In the garden there are still tomatoes that were hidden under the vines and the August weeds. Acorn squash and red cabbages and chard wait to be brought in, and we shall dig carrots for some time. The parsnips prefer to be frozen in before harvesting; this is an individualistic vegetable and one a good many people do not properly appreciate. Cooked quickly in a small amount of water and seasoned, it is as delicate and sweet as home-whipped sweet butter.

The smell of drying mint and sage forecasts tender roast lamb with spicy sauce and a plump pork shoulder stuffed neatly with sage stuffing later on. Jill keeps bringing in little pots of things, too, and sifting a supply of good garden earth to store. Nothing is more maddening in January than to need to repot something and have to use a pick to whack the ice away for a teaspoonful of granitelike dirt.

Weeds and old raspberry canes and cornstalks must be burned as the garden is cleared, and that means the right day and the fire permit and a spell of nerves for me—I am always afraid of fire. I know the theory is that you burn up all the summer pests, but I notice even so they come romping back next summer.

The bird feeders and suet cages are repaired and extra supplies of wild-bird food stored. Tools are mended, handles painted, the wheelbarrow gets a coat of bright red, and the barbecue grill is cleaned and oiled and moved into the woodshed.

All this activity does not seem like work because the excitement of October fills the air and restores the heart.

I don't suppose Isaiah could have thought of New England in autumn, but he described it nevertheless: "The mountains and the hills shall break forth . . . into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands."

The very air is like a trumpet blowing down the fields of time, and the blaze of glory has the majesty of Bach's music. It is too tremendous to put down, but the heart remembers it all winter long.

Now I notice how the trees have grown this season, and the lilacs we planted such a short time ago reach the second-story window. There is a sadness about this, although the lilacs are lovely so high against the old handmade clapboards. Time just does not stand still, although we all have moments we wish we could keep forever the same. Another season has gone into the secret byways of infinity, and the best way to combat that melancholy thought is to prune something immediately.

I feel this is the very best time of the year to have parties because it is comfortable in the kitchen, nobody will get bogged down by bad storms, and the press of country matters is over. And so many things are so good to eat in the crisp cool evenings! A sugar-cured country ham sliced thin makes a basis for a buffet. Baked beans spicy with molasses and mustard go with ham so well. Coleslaw with fresh red cabbage can't be beat. And these are so easy. Or a casserole dinner is delicious, and one of my favorites for this is my friend Mrs. Snider's Little Pig Sausage Bake. For this I sauté 1 pound link sausages in a skillet. Drain on paper towels, and place in a 2-quart casserole. Toss together lightly 1 quart potatoes, sliced thin, 1 can drained whole-kernel corn and 1½ cups thinly sliced onions. Arrange in layers on top of the sausage, sprinkling with a mixture of 2 tablespoons flour, 1½ teaspoons salt and ¼ teaspoon pepper. Pour over all 1¾ cups top milk and dot with 1 tablespoon butter or margarine. Bake, uncovered, for 1¼ hours in a moderate oven, 350° F.

For dessert a fruit bowl and a tray of assorted cheeses, creamy and golden, delicate and sharp, with crisp paprika crackers, is just right. Dieters may eat the apple sliced thin with cheese spread on the slices, omitting the crackers!

The fire burns pleasantly on the great hearth in the afternoon and evening and the soup kettle swings over it sending forth such goodly smells as salt pork and onions, ham bone and lentils, beef and carrots. Seasonings come into their own now it is autumn. I use chili and peppercorns and Hungarian sweet paprika and herbs and spices with a free hand. Six cloves, for instance make a great difference in a meat stew!

This year we face the oncoming winter with a very easy heart, for our

CONTINUED ON PAGE 180

You

You'll never, never know h younger and prettier you re look — until you discover 'Touch-and-Glow'. Thou grateful women tell us it's l ing life all over again—with new complexion! And hon true. The tender texture, th color, the healthy glowing thought you'd lost forever—you seem to have it ba 'Touch-and-Glow'.

You won't believe how eas use, until you try it! Just sm a very few drops of this Lanolite-enriched liquid wi fingertips. Work it in gent your entire face and throat.
on Revlon face powder, lightly. You'll be astounde instant change. Your fac younger, softer—far more and alive!

And did you ever dream a could soften and improve yo every minute you wear it?
and-Glow' does all this, beca more than a makeup—it's a s cally-blended beauty prescrip your skin, made with Revlo
'Lanolite'—an astonishing gredient that does far more f skin than lanolin itself: (1) your skin smoother than lan supplies more moisture than (3) protects your skin longe lanolin.

Whether your skin is dry, normal—'Touch-and-Glow' i for you—it's the one makeup good for all types of skin.

How foolish to go through a day without discovering this able makeup! Do try 'Touc Glow' this very day. You'll your mirror and think that turned the clock back 5 years!

Revlon

e an Instant Change in your Complexion!

t Touch On This Liquid Makeup—And Turn The Clock Back 5 Years!

ouch-and-Glow' liquid makeup

8 incredibly flattering colors 1.25* and 1.75* face powder to harmonize 1.10*

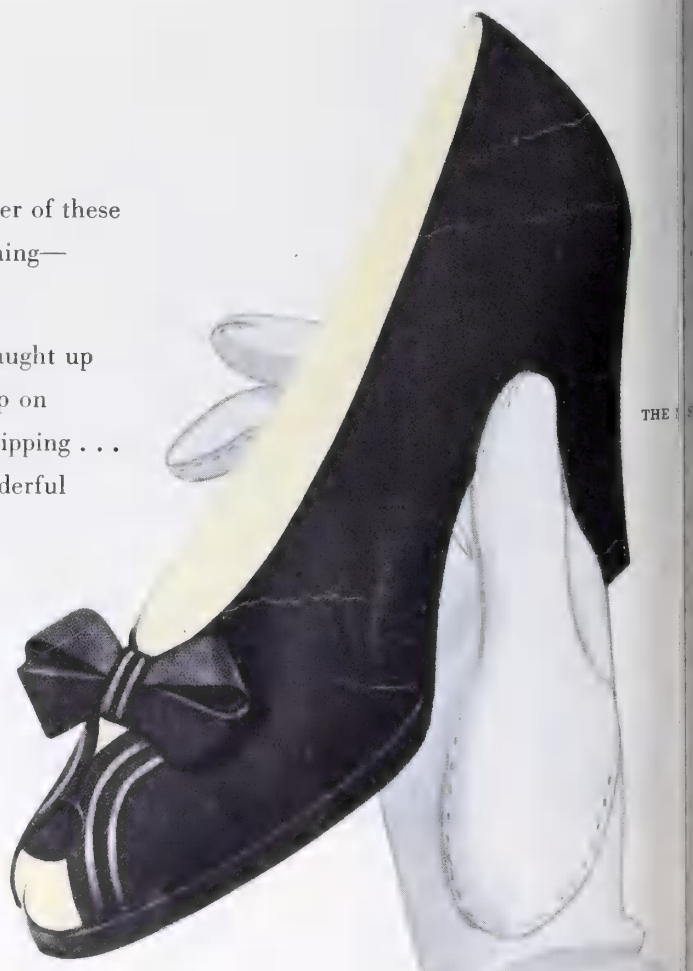
only face makeup that beauty-treats your skin with 'Lanolite'

HAT, JOHN-FREDERICS DRESS, TRIGERE JEWELS, SEAMAN SCHEPPS

Walking Gloves

THE SLEEK



A new kind of softness . . .

fully elasticized to fit

like no other shoes in the world!

Be ready for a wonderful, new sensation! For so soft is the leather of these beautiful, new Red Cross Shoes—so magic is their full Lastex lining—that they actually feel more like gloves than shoes.

Stand still in them—and you feel every contour of your foot caught up in a soft embrace. Take a step—and these "walking gloves" keep on fitting just as beautifully all over. Never a hint of rubbing or slipping . . . biting or gapping. It's truly a wonderful, new sensation—a wonderful discovery to make at your Red Cross Shoe retailer's, tomorrow.

THE

Red Cross Shoes

FEATURED IN CANADA AS GOLD CROSS SHOES

America's unchallenged shoe value. Styles from 8^{95} to 12^{95}

THIS PRODUCT HAS NO CONNECTION WHATEVER WITH THE AMERICAN NATIONAL RED CROSS

Gold Cross Shoes in Canada by B & L Shoe, Ltd., in England by Somerset Bros., Ltd., in Australia by "Gold Cross Shoes" (Aust.), Pty. Ltd., in South Africa by Eddels (S.A.), Ltd., in New Zealand by Duckworth, Turner an

The United States Shoe Corporation, Cincinnati 7, Ohio. These shoes are manufactured and di

Tell me Doctor

Editors' Note: There are many questions which women would like to ask a trusted physician, but there is not always the opportunity. In continuation of this series, Tell Me Doctor, Doctor Safford will answer some of these questions which have been sent to him by readers. The questions are all real but the names are fictitious.

By HENRY B. SAFFORD, M.D.

Daughter, aged sixteen, has not menstruated. She is five feet two, weighs about one-forty. She is well, her appetite is not abnormal. Can you suggest what might be causing menstruation?"

"EARLY I had the change of life at about seventeen." The doctor listened to this statement, but it was apparent that he did not agree.

"Then if you are not making too rash an assumption," he said, "you mean it couldn't be that?" the doctor demanded.

"Exactly, Mrs. Dill. So far as I know, the youngest menopause on record occurred at the age of twenty-seven. Suppose you tell me a little about yourself. What is your age now?"

"I am thirty-four and have been married for ten years. When I was twelve my menstrual periods began and for five years was regular, and actually no pain. Then at seventeen menstruation stopped. I had a lot of medical attention—doctors and even endocrinologists, but without any effect. The reason I came to see you today is that I have a great desire for children, and I want to know if there is any chance. Do you think there is, Doctor?"

"I think it is entirely possible. Did this medical attention which you received continue over a period of years?"

"Yes, up to the time I married. It was then suggested that marriage might be helpful in restoring the menstrual function. I suppose that was ridiculous—wishful thinking, probably."

"No, I don't think it was ridiculous." Mrs. Dill understood all about this and continued to be hopeful about children. I've become quite discouraged, however."

"Even if you haven't entirely given up hope, do think I have a chance?"

"I will know more about that after an examination, can tell you, however, that there is much more known about the science of endocrinology now than there was seventeen years ago. Will you go with the nurse?" Mrs. Dill returned to the consulting room about an hour later, and her first words were a question, "Do you think there is hope for me, Doctor?"

"You mean, will a pregnancy be possible? I can answer that question at once. Indeed there is hope—considerable hope. At the same time, I must qualify this opinion. Your case is interesting and not uncommon, and I shall be obliged to make a rather lengthy explanation so that you may understand it. My examination indicates that you have a relatively small, poorly developed internal generative system."

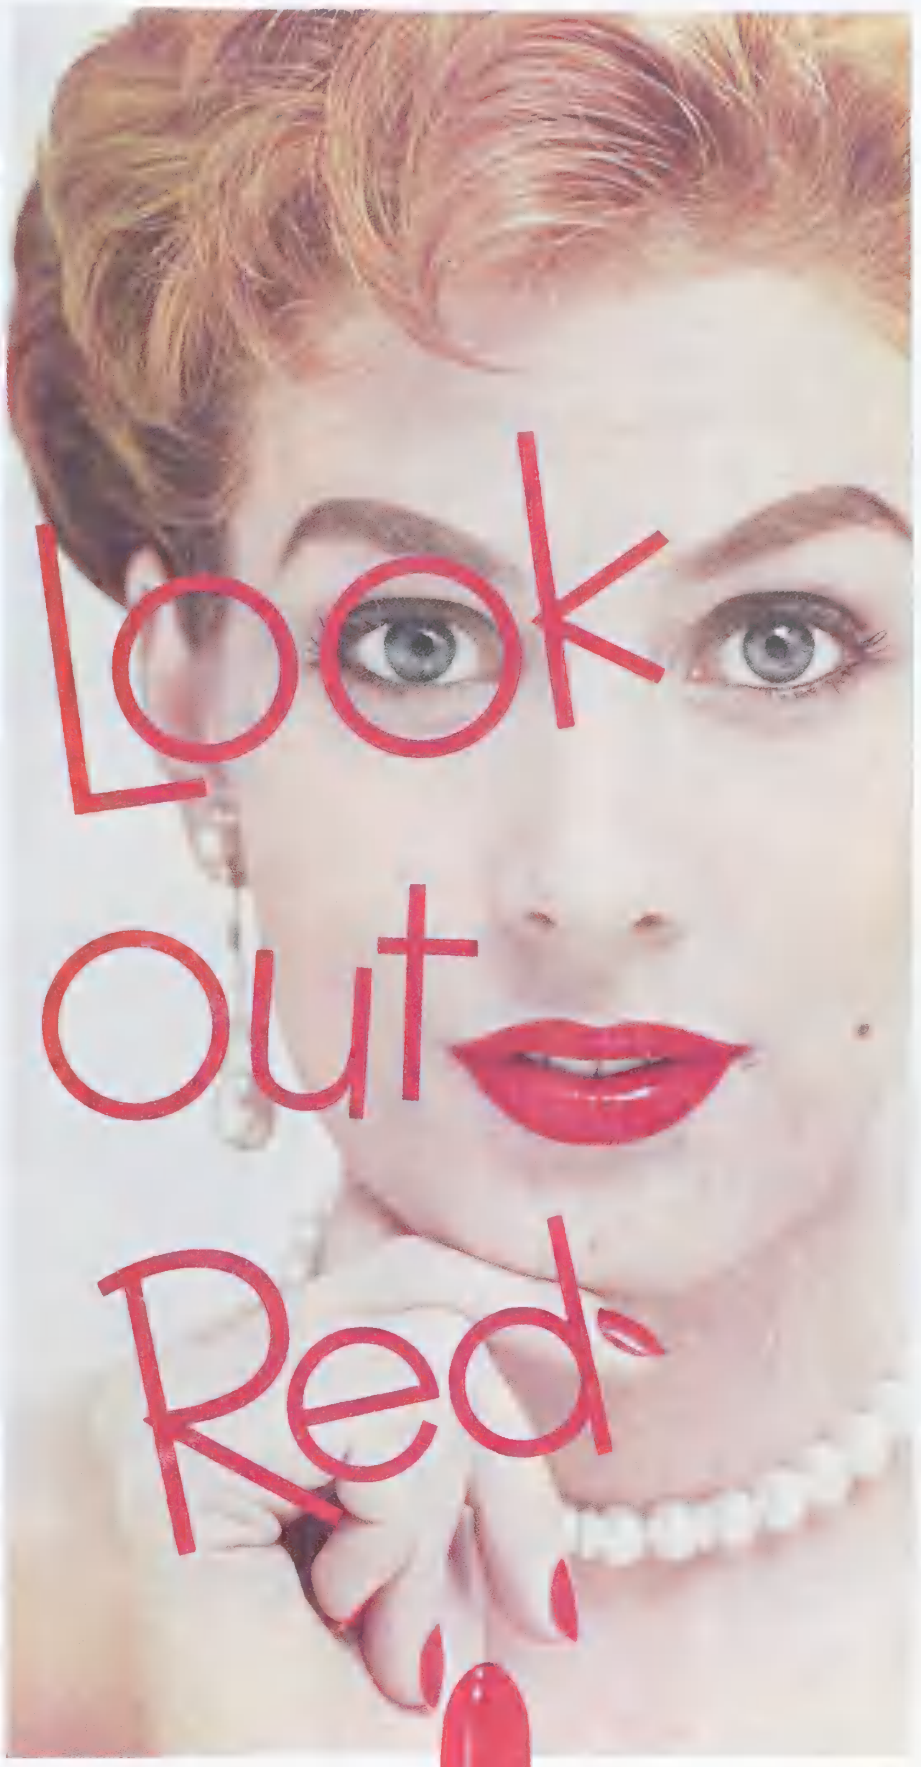
"That sounds rather hopeless to me."

"Well, it is not, although I will admit that I wish you were years younger—I mean at the age when you ceased to menstruate. I think yours is a case of arrested development which very likely can be stimulated into activity again, even at this late date."

"I've heard about infantile uterus and that it is a hopeless condition."

"That is not entirely true, since there are various grades of infantilism. I shall try to explain. In the baby girl the uterus is a quite tiny organ—just a tubelike structure. With the onset of puberty it increases until it is about three inches long, developing into a pear shape. If this development is arrested, all that remains is a little bundle of muscle tissue, scarcely an inch and a half long. It is often curled like a letter C, roughly comparable to the two end sections of your little finger in size and shape. That is not a very satisfactory organ with which to produce a seven- or eight-pound baby."

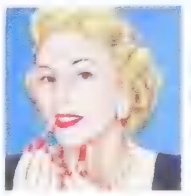
"What causes this arrest in development?"



"A deficiency in the supply of ovarian hormones and sometimes of the pituitary. The latter is the worse type and is sometimes connected with arrested development of the entire reproductive system, including the breasts. Individuals suffering from this deficiency are liable to be overweight, and there are girls of this type as old as eighteen who have never menstruated. With others the onset of puberty is delayed and the menses frequently irregular so that the cycle may be sometimes drawn out to six or eight weeks. There may also be underdevelopment in other regions, including the vaginal and certain bony structures."

"Well, I am not that type, anyhow."

"No, you are not, at least to such an extent, although you undoubtedly are overweight—and I consider that in your favor. You did start menstruation, even rather early. Your trouble appears to be due to an arrest in development, which I hope can be overcome. Here, let me show you something ——"



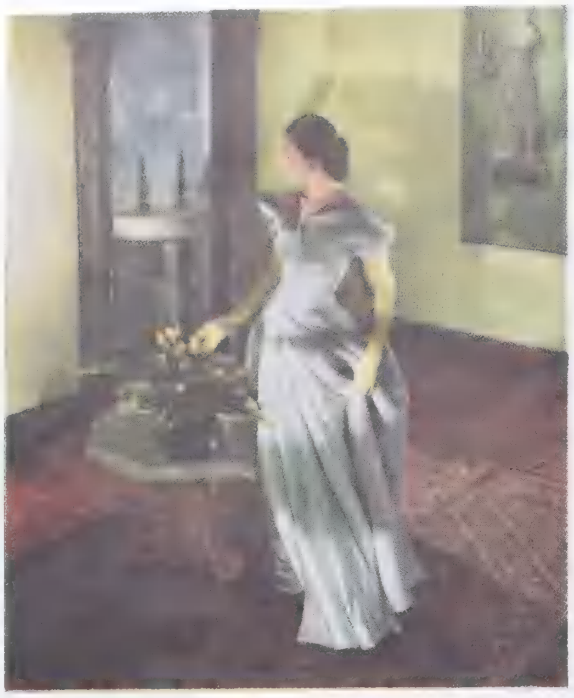
CONTINUED ON PAGE 182

Dr. Safford's new book, The Intimate Problems of Women, containing several chapters which have not appeared in Journal, has been published by Hawthorn Books, Inc., 70 Fifth Ave., New York 11, N.Y.

Slow down—this is a red you have to see! A bright, blazing, stop-and-look red . . . hard to miss, but awfully easy to wear. For Look-Out Red is all red—no trace of orange or blue—and perfect with every stitch you own. It's a Cashmere Bouquet red that stays red and stays on—hour after hour!

7 Cover-Girl Colors 49¢ plus tax

Conover Girls Pick Cashmere Bouquet

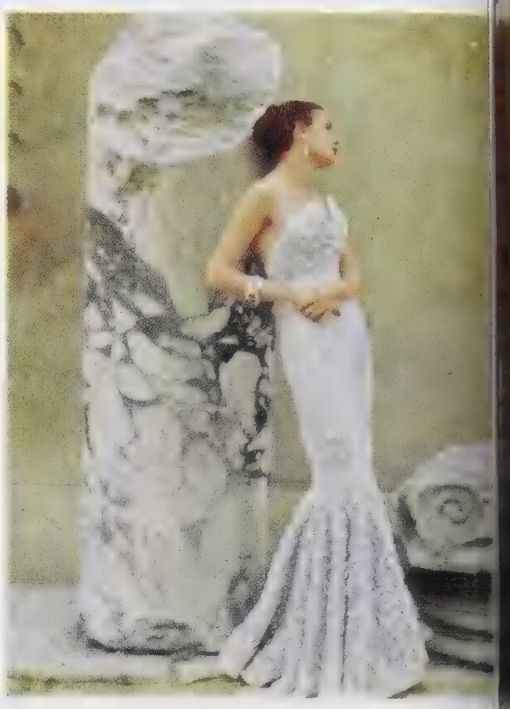


Advice from the Beauty Director of the Conover School: "Use a lip brush for a sharp, clear outline. Then fill in with short, down strokes of your Cashmere Bouquet lipstick."

Candy Jones

cashmere bouquet

INDELIBLE-TYPE LIPSTICK



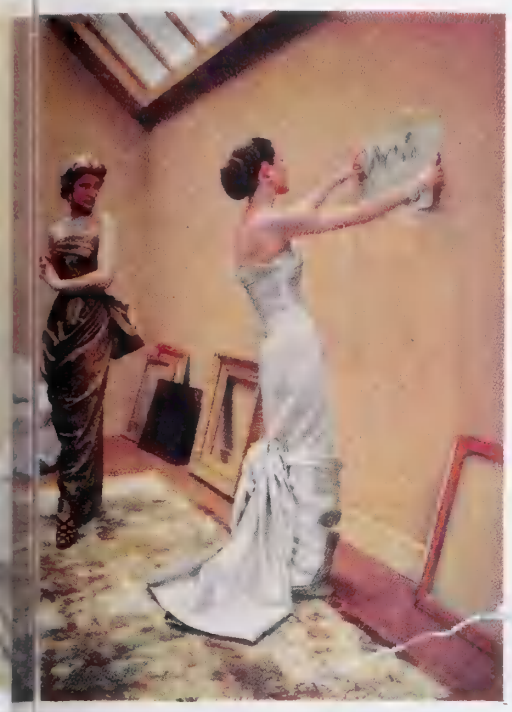
Super-creamed to Keep Your Lips Like Velvet

First of the Modess series, photographed by Horst. It appeared in 1948—created an immediate sensation.

The Modess series was represented by this photograph in the book "The 100 Greatest Advertisements."

The Roman Forum is the spectacular setting for th photograph by Coffin of an unknown Italian

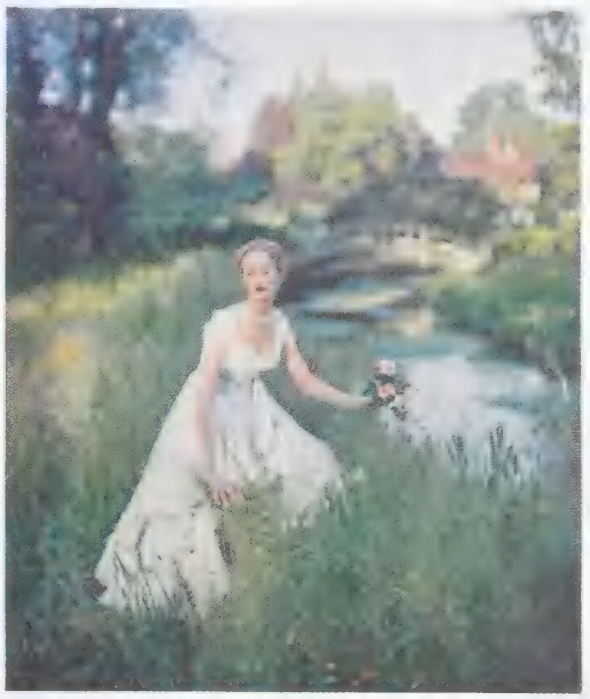
Cecil Beaton creates the illusion of a lady dressed for her presentation at court, in this cool white study.



Two sisters, famous beauties Dorian Leigh and Susie Parker, photographed in a Manhattan penthouse.

In a Paris salon, 1950. Many famous couturiers designed the gorgeous Modess-picture ball dr

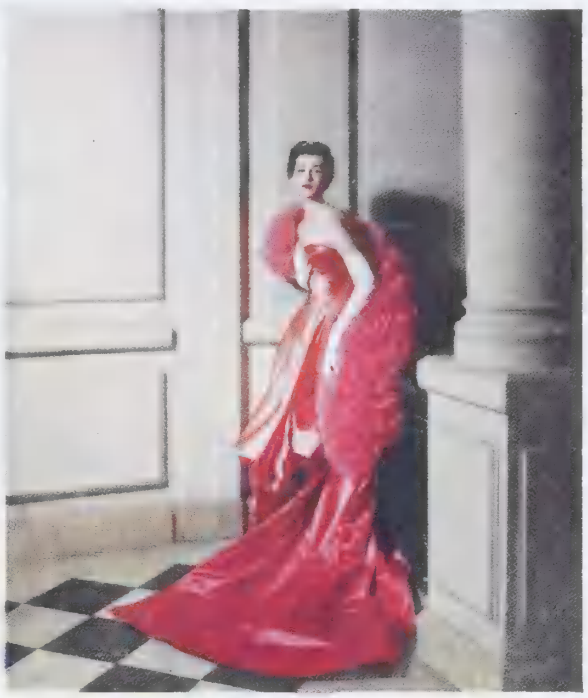
FABULOUS PICTURES...



give one whispered word a thousand meanings

...an Art Directors' Club Award for Distinctive ... typical Modess photograph by Ruzzie Green.

A palazzo in Italy, its storied "golden room ... rich background for a sheath of sculptured ice-gray satin.



A garden in England, scene of this Cecil Beaton master-piece that captures the sunlight of a summer afternoon.

...ed he ...g food songs ...pany- ...o little ...ed by his ... arranged ...him up for

...cal ...mmerhouse in the British West Indies, and ...ove Dorian Leigh wearing sheerest white lawn.

Dovima's exotic beauty, a historic New York mansion. Another award-winning; Art Directors' Club, 1954.

A romantic dress, a dazzling beauty, a splendid setting —these have made the fame of the Modess pictures.

From time to time the makers of Modess—curious to know the effect of their advertising—have asked many of their customers just what ". . . because" meant to them. The answers are as varied as the women questioned! And the words—each woman's own—more persuasive than the eloquence of a well-informed salesman.

Every woman responds to beauty—and rewards those who understand her. The makers of a product that is seldom discussed put their faith in this innate feminine response. They commissioned designers whose creations have made fashion history—photographers of international fame—the most glamorous models—to give meaning to a simple word.

Photographers and famous beauties travelled far to find appropriate settings for dazzling ball gowns. Pictures have been taken in a Doge's palace in Venice—on an exotic plantation in the West Indies—in a Paris salon hung with priceless tapestries. For six years, American women have responded to the most wordless—and possibly the most beautiful—advertising ever addressed to them.

In 1953 the long "silence" was broken. A whisper-soft non-woven fabric, developed exclusively for Modess, proved to be far superior to gauze as a napkin covering. This revolutionary improvement was explained with the addition of a single discreet sentence to " . . . because."

TO SEE HOW THE GREAT PHOTOGRAPHER, IRVING PENN, INTERPRETS THE NEWEST MEANING OF ". . . BECAUSE"—PLEASE TURN THE PAGE

Fi
appea

Modess . . . because

Only New Design Modess gives you the luxury of a new whisper-soft fabric covering . . . no gauze . . . no chafe.

Journal About Town

Gossip about people you know, Editors you like, and what goes on in New York

ifty Years Ago in the Journal

WALDORF SALAD and ragtime music were "catching on" in October, 1904. Trust-buster Teddy Roosevelt was running for the presidency against a conservative Democrat called Parker. Teen-aged girls were going dancing in red stockings and red slippers and reading the best seller, The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come.

Tell us girls how to keep house when we get married," a reader urges Editor Bok in the October, 1904, JOURNAL. "Be sure and choose a young bride with an income of $18 a week, living in a small town, with no maid and no knowledge of cooking!" Answers Editor Bok: "We're searching for one."

When pinning on the baby's diaper, pull his stockings up over his knees and fasten them to the diaper. This will keep the baby's entire leg covered."

Thin slices of raw beef do wonders for pots of ferns."

Fashion note: "A Bride's Trousseau for $150" includes "six assorted chemises, six pairs of drawers, four petticoats of silk, a hair and white cambric, four corset covers and one corset."

Shape a small mirror inside the crown of your hat," the Beauty Editor advises girls, "and when your hat is removed it will be very easy to take a sly peep to see if you look presentable."

How Some Families Live on $900 a Year: My husband buys a 'best' about once in six years and a $10 suit in a dark color. Once in three or four years, he invests in a cheaper suit for working."

Penny-money suggestion: Reproducing in black paper silhouette family pictures for 25 cents each.

"I am a mother with a son of twenty-six," a reader writes to Edward Bok, "a fine, manly fellow, clean-minded, four-squared, of such unyielding principles that even a mother could not desire anything better. But mostly, I go alone to church."

Health advice by Emma Walker, M.D.: "It is wise to remove all cut flowers from the bedroom overnight. It leaves the air of the room pure while the flowers stay fresher longer."

DEE KNAPP

Schoolteacher-cover girl Patricia Cody passes with flying . . . tassel.

IT is only fitting this month that the girl on the cover should be a genuine schoolteacher, and of course a pretty one. With the country being scouted for candidates, it was lucky Joe Leombruno who discovered Patricia Cody in the graduating class at the teachers' college in New Paltz, New York, then photographed her here for the cover. And it was Picture Assistant Dee Knapp who met Pat at commencement and took her picture both before and after graduation, proving that Pat remembered to flip her tassel from right to left after getting her diploma. Dee figures that one out of fifty girl graduates forgets to do this. Dee did.

In San Francisco recently, at Omar Khayyam's, where the food is fabulous, Louella Shouer was having dinner with some friends who secretly let the proprietor know Louella was there. From that point on it was a matter of tasting one delectable specialty after another. Their waiter was soon caught up in the spirit of the occasion, and he brought Louella, on his own, a slender sliver of spinach pie; his own particular favorite of the famous Khayyam delicacies, and the last slice in the place, he whispered in Louella's ear, then added, "I was saving it for myself."

A writer who wanted to do an article for us on Mrs. Oscar Hammerstein told Peter Briggs the Hammersteins would be away until November shooting the movie Oklahoma! "Where?" asked Peter. "Arizona," replied the writer.

Having taken a taxi home from an auction recently, Henrietta Murdock was entering the lobby of her apartment building when the taxi driver came running after her with the purchase she'd just made and had left on the seat of the cab—a fine gilt antique figure of Cupid. Handing her the Cupid, the taxi driver pulled a notebook from his pocket. "I want to add this," he explained to Miss M., "to the list of things people have left in my cab," and showed her the list. She's forgotten some of the things, but these she remembers: a crab net, a telephone, a hub cap from a car, a waffle iron, a baby carriage, a stuffed pheasant, and—oh! yes—a toupee.

A study of junior-high-school students shows that only 17 per cent turn to reference books for help in homework problems: only 5 per cent consult teachers. About 40 per cent seek aid from parents, 13 per cent ask brothers and sisters, 9 per cent simply skip over the hard parts. And although only 33 per cent of the seventh-graders questioned admit copying homework from other students, 82 per cent of ninth-graders say they do it often.

It was one of the warmest afternoons of August when Louise Benjamin came in looking as cool as lemonade in the shade, and explained she'd just been to a preview of White Christmas, a picture that is due about now; and from what Louise said, one you won't want to miss. The same Irving Berlin tune from Holiday Inn is in it, she said, and the same Bing, but all the rest is brand-new, including Danny Kaye, Rosemary Clooney and Vera-Ellen—who, according to a Paramount man sitting next to Louise at the preview, would all start off with Bing every morning at rehearsals by making up a lot of crazy singing commercials. He told Louise, however, the producer almost died one morning when Bing's voice on the phone informed him he'd decided not to go on with the picture, but to go fishing instead—only just then Bing walked into his office and the quick-thinking producer, realizing Bing's voice was being imitated by Danny Kaye, said calmly into the phone, "O.K., Bing. Guess I'll have to get Gary."

The only troubadour we've heard about in centuries turned up at Tina Fredericks' house at East Hampton one afternoon in late summer and explained he was on his way to Maine, earning food and lodging by singing medieval songs and telling medieval stories, accompanying them on his lute. As Tina's two little daughters were already enchanted by his picturesque appearance, it was arranged that the Fredericks would put him up for the night and provide him with supper and breakfast, for which he sang and played all evening. When the children had gone to bed he told his story—Harvard, summer stock, wanderlust—and when asked where he'd like to sleep, he chose the most medieval spot on the place, the hayloft of the Fredericks barn.

ALFRED MERCADO

A modern "Tommy Tucker" entertains the Fredericks and (left) architectural assistant Carol Mercado.

Bing Crosby, Rosemary Clooney, Vera-Ellen, Danny Kaye rehearse.

"Jody, honey, you've got bats in the belfry."

said

The Real You

She told David all the secrets she had never told anyone before—and could never, never tell again.

By MARNIE ELLINGSON

JODY stretched her feet out behind the protective cover of Mrs. Gordon's coffee table and wriggled her toes. Her new shoes were satisfyingly frivolous, completely incapable of providing warmth or comfort or sturdy arch support. Their only possible excuse for existing would be to lead her into something exciting, something gay—here at tonight's party, maybe.

Jody believed in magic. And the shoes were suddenly magic.

With shining brown hair, forthright smile and really very good ankles, Jody didn't look like a girl who needed the aid of magic. But she'd been in the city six months and all the people she had met in her ceramics and Great Books night classes were female-variety people. She had a home-economics-staff job on Hearthside Magazine (she could whip up a Bavarian-cream Charlotte quicker than you could say "almond extract"), and while she loved it, it would be, she thought, much more fun to be home economical in a home of her own. The trouble with working for a family magazine was that it had such a cozy staff—everyone all married and settled and suburban, except Jody.

Mrs. Gordon, a school friend of her mother's, had dutifully "looked Jody up" and invited her over several times. Nothing had happened the other times that could be called exciting. She hadn't the shoes on then.

She wriggled her toes again and felt a shiver of anticipation run through her. Everyone seemed to be doing a great deal of unorganized milling, when suddenly Jody looked up and saw her hostess herding a man across the room to meet her. He wasn't handsome, but Jody liked his face right away, craggy and not-quite-thirtyish and somehow trustworthy. And there was a comfortable pipe-sized bulge in his coat pocket.

He was so exactly right that for the first time in years Jody felt a moment of panic, somewhat akin to stage fright, and she wondered what she could say to keep him from milling off too. Then like all good Hearthsiders, she thought of the personal-charm page and Mrs. Peabody's article in the newest issue.

Mrs. Peabody said: "Don't be a blurred carbon copy of the latest movie queen. Be yourself—The Real You!"

Well, that made sense, Jody thought. She certainly didn't want this nice young man to mistake her for a blurred carbon.

Mrs. Gordon said, "Jody, this is Dr. David Winston; Jody Marsh. Doctor Winston is a psychiatrist," she added significantly and left them.

Jody smiled up at him in the most friendly possible way, which was The Real Jody.

"Have you had anything to eat yet, Doctor Winston?" she asked. "Those alarming-looking little pink sandwiches on the coffee table are really quite good."

He looked startled. "What did you say?" CONTINUED ON PAGE 197

ILLUSTRATED BY HARRY FREDMAN

The

Like swallows they came with ummer Children

the season, the soon-gone
summer of love

THE Wallaces had rented their house on the shabbier side of Faculty Hill to a group of teachers taking summer work, and Ward, assistant to the head of the history department at the university, had taken a cubicle in one of the dormitories for the summer. Faye was out at unfashionable Hackett's Lake with the children, and in the same nondescript cottage she had had for several years. The children were Kev and Timmie, sons of Ward's first marriage, and ten-month-old Janie, Faye and Ward's child. The boys were only part-time family. They spent a good part of the year with their mother, now Mrs. Spender, in New York.

Ward's summer-school schedule of four days at the university and three at the lake was still in force now in late August. Most of his calls to Faye had to do with supplies, but when he called her after lunch on a warm Friday there was something else. "Nina's come, Faye." He announced it tiredly. "She's here in town."

Faye had been undressing Janie for a nap and she restrained the child with one arm while the silence lengthened. "It's early for her," she said then with an effort.

"She came on ahead, and Spender's staying a day or so with friends. They were in Canada." Ward's voice was more slowed. "Spender will get here late tomorrow or early Sunday, and they'll go right on with the boys." He had got it over. Sometime toward the end of each summer he had to say, "Pick up the children," and "Nina and Quent Spender." The girl he had married out of a USO unit ten years ago and the then actor-manager of a road company for whom she'd divorced him. In nearly five years Ward's half share of his sons had shrunk more and more under Nina's maneuverings. The boys spent the long school term now in New York. Conscienceless-looking things kept cutting into vacation weeks. Things like long-drawn-out shots for this and that, protracted dental work.

"The silly part of it's still to come," he went on. "Nina can't get into the Lodge out there and she wants to know if you can put her up. So help me," he added after a moment. "Look Faye"—his tone changed—"there's something on her mind, obviously. If you could bring yourself to ——"

Something on the mind of Ward's vain and shallow and somewhat pretentious first wife never boded any good to the Wallaces. Faye's head went down. "It's all right, Ward," she said immediately. She'd caught the tormented note in his voice and she went on to reassure him. She didn't mind having the boys' mother a bit, she told him cheerfully.

When she put the phone down she sat motionless and sober, though. Her guest would arrive on the Lodge bus at about six-thirty, and Faye and the little boys would wait dinner for her. Ward would stay in town catching up with work most of the weekend.

Every time the Wallaces began to get their lives adjusted, a hand with beautifully done nails seemed to reach in to pull things awry. A conniving and insensitive hand, it often seemed. Faye sighed, lowering the baby into CONTINUED ON PAGE 192

by Brooke Hanlon

ILLUSTRATED BY HARRY ANDERSON

Next June they would probably come back withdrawn and quiet and unsure of themselves again.

FROM THE CHESTER DALE COLLECTION

PORTRAIT OF LECONTE DE LISLE

JEAN FRANÇOIS MILLET (1814–75)

For brief account of this painting, and the artist, see page 112

Educating our children . . . do we know what we want?

Public schools belong to the public, but far too many of us have looked upon the public schools as something provided for us, rather than by us.

THE editors of the JOURNAL share the concern of thoughtful parents everywhere with the mounting crisis in public education today. In preparing this section of articles and stories related to specific problems of educating American youth, we grew increasingly aware that individual schools and school systems differ drastically from state to state, city to city, even in the same city. Our worst schools are almost literally houses of horror that would make any sensitive person hang his head in shame; our best schools show by sharp contrast how much better the others could be.

The condition of schools generally today is critical, first, for a very practical reason. We do not have enough classrooms or enough qualified teachers for our growing school population. It is as simple as that. But the solution to this problem is not simple, because we continue to lose ground; the ills of education grow on one another.

Almost all classes in our primary classrooms are too large for effective teaching. Children cannot properly be taught to read, for example, in groups of thirty-five and forty, and even fifty. But in most schools it is the policy—in part, sheer physical necessity—to herd all children, regardless of how poorly they do, on to the next higher grade at the end of each school year. With such conveyor-belt schooling, some children never acquire the basic tools of learning, never learn to read. Lacking this basic tool, they stumble on through elementary and high school, handicapped and humiliated, are "graduated" and given a diploma—having learned mainly to hate anything that looks like a book. With smaller classes and some individual attention at an early age, they might have become enjoying readers.

Some of these ills can be cured by money, and more money the schools must have. But there are other problems—problems of perhaps more basic importance—that demand our attention and study. Questions like these must be answered and understood if we are to know where we are going with our schools:

Should all children be promoted every year, regardless of attainment, and after twelve years of attendance be given a high-school diploma? Should high-school courses be watered down until no one can fail? This is happening in many of our schools.

Does democracy in education mean that all students—those of limited ability, the average and the most able—be instructed in the same way with the same books in the same group? Must the more highly intelligent mark time, the large middle group be inadequately taught while the teacher tries to keep the laggards in line? Is it either fair or kind to keep those with below-average ability in regular classes where they are constantly reminded of their failings? This is the common arrangement in most schools today.

Or should we carefully re-examine the notion of compulsory attendance and beware of confusing attendance with education? Is it really beneficial to require young people to stay in school until the age of sixteen or eighteen—young people who are resentful of this privilege and must be policed into any proper classroom behavior? Are we forcing many of them to attend school merely to "keep them off the streets" or to "keep them off the labor market"? Is it right that teachers, hired to teach, must often serve primarily as custodians of neglected and disturbed children?

Since our school problems, financial and philosophical, must be solved by informed citizens, the following section of this issue of the JOURNAL deals with some of the major problems of education today. Many readers will be appalled by the brutality in Blackboard Jungle, Evan Hunter's novel of human events in a big-city vocational high school, condensed and expurgated for publication here. In a round-table forum, six leaders in education, together with JOURNAL editors, discuss basic policies of education. Your Child Can Learn to Read, by G. M. White, is an encouraging report of an outstanding public-school reading program in St. Louis. In a forthright article, Must We Send Our Children to Private Schools?, Katherine G. Struve, a public-school teacher for 25 years, says what she thinks is wrong with our schools and what she would do to improve them. Many other teachers express their opinions; a poll on educational questions, conducted especially for the JOURNAL, indicates the way parents feel. Finally, there is Frances Gray Patton's "terrible" Miss Dove, the lovable tyrant teacher that everyone has known, in another great story of what teaching can be. The "terrible" Miss Dove, who appeared originally in the JOURNAL in January, 1947, will soon appear in motion pictures on your local screen. Blackboard Jungle is also scheduled for motion-picture production. We offer these stories and articles not as a representative cross section or a complete solution of the problems of education today, but to stimulate those who must grapple with similar problems in their own communities—in short, to help people decide what they want of schools.

To those who want more reading for action, we especially recommend Agnes Meyer's article, Schoolboy Racketeers, in the March, 1954, Atlantic Monthly. Worthy of careful study are Walter Lippmann's The Shortage in Education, and Beardsley Ruml's Financing the Public Schools. Beardsley Ruml makes an original suggestion that Federal aid to schools should be given on a per-capita-child-in-school basis— the money allotted according to the number of children in school in each state rather than any criterion of need—thus minimizing the danger of potential political influence on school curriculums. The National Citizen's Commission for the Public Schools, 2 West 45th Street, New York 36, N.Y., will supply any person or group working for better schools with these pamphlets as well as other information and various helpful guidebooks.

THE EDITORS

Bruce Gould

Beatrice Blackmar Gould

Meeting in the New York JOURNAL Workshop to discuss problems of education (left to right): Dr. Paul Woodring, Margaret Hickey, Barbara Benson (back to camera), Dr. A. Whitney Griswold, Dr. Francis S. Chase, G. M. White (back to camera) and Dr. Leslie B. Hohman.

Let's attack the Problems

Whose fault is it if your child is not learning all he should?

In a special round-table forum, six distinguished experts share their views on the crisis in education today with millions of JOURNAL readers.

A. WHITNEY GRISWOLD,
President, Yale University.

FRANCIS S. CHASE,
Chairman, Department of Education, University of Chicago.

PAUL WOODRING,
Professor of Psychology, Western Washington College of Education.

LESLIE B. HOHMAN,
Professor of Neuro-Psychiatry, College of Medicine, Duke University.

WILLIAM J. LARAMY,
Principal, Haverford Junior High School, Haverford, Pennsylvania.

GRACE B. WHITE,
Primary teacher, Miami, Florida.

BRUCE GOULD, BARBARA BENSON, G. M. WHITE and MARGARET HICKEY (moderator), of the editorial staff of LADIES' HOME JOURNAL.

Question: Doctor Griswold, do you feel that we, the American people, are facing an educational recession?

DR. GRISWOLD: I think we are in the midst of one. It isn't a question of facing it—it's how to get out of it. Educationally, we are in somewhat the same position in which the country found itself in 1933, after the banks were closed, which was when all the thinking began—too late to forestall and barely in time to ameliorate.

Question: What are some of the aspects of this educational recession?

DR. GRISWOLD: We have terrible deficits of teachers and facilities in our elementary and secondary school systems. There is the vastly increased, and increasing, attendance. For this enormous new educational population, no really adequate provisions have been made. We haven't been able to catch up, much less get ahead. Now we don't have anywhere near enough teachers or schoolrooms, to say nothing of the quality of either.

MR. LARAMY: The worst is yet to come. Birth rates continue to increase. The first big group, for the year 1947, started in school last September. Birth rates in 1948 and 1949 were only slig lower than in 1947, and since 1949 have been higher.

MRS. WHITE: We have in our neigh hood, close to our school, twelve hun new houses with new families—big families. Three hundred of these children entered the school last y There will be more. In most fami these were the eldest children ente school.

DR. HOHMAN: There is certainly shortage of teachers and it is incr ing, but that is only a small part of problem.

DR. GRISWOLD: Yes, of course it is, you might say that these shortages are barometric readings—the easiest way prove there is trouble. Let me mention one more barometric reading—twenty billion dollars. That is an estimate of cost of supplying the schoolrooms nee in the next six years—just the rooms, to get the children indoors.

CHAIRMAN HICKEY: We know it is go to take a lot of money, but we bel people need to know how to make v decisions first. If people know what t want in the way of education for ust schools retain children just to p them off the streets?"

—BRUCE GOULD.

"We are trying to teach everyone, ready or not."—GRACE B. WHITE.

e biggest enrollments are yet to e." —WILLIAM J. LARAMY.

e need plain, ordinary discipline in schools!"
—A. WHITNEY GRISWOLD.

"We cannot count on the genius teacher, any more than we can on the genius nurse or the genius doctor."
—LESLIE HOHMAN.

r the lower third, or possibly twenty cent, high-school education with thing like the traditional standards npossible." —PAUL WOODRING.

"There are cases where a youngster would learn more from an occupation, from a life situation, than from being kept in school unduly long."
—FRANCIS S. CHASE.

PHOTOS BY DI PIETRO

Grace B. White, Bruce Gould and William J. Laramy offer views on school problems from their end of the table.

. not the Schools

s children, they will find ways to so let's take the need for more as a first principle and go on here.

D GRISWOLD: I think that is sound
ics. Starting with money and end-h policies is the wrong way around.
as been the trouble all along.

IRMAN HICKEY: Some people talk attack" on the public schools when-criticism is made, but we hope that e kind of leadership represented at ple we can help people make valid ns—to see the problem in terms of wrong and to see ways to work toolutions.

GRISWOLD: If we are to take the n that schools and colleges are and beyond criticism, we shall never where. I would not attack anything improper educational standards.

IRMAN HICKEY: And you believe ist?

GRISWOLD: I certainly believe they base this belief not only on what is aid and written about the crisis in hools but on my own personal exe of nearly twenty-five years of g their graduates.

Question: And what are some deficiencies in education today as you see them?

DR. GRISWOLD: First, I would cite the deficiency in the use and comprehension of the English language—the use and meaning of words. There is a marked deterioration in the use of the English language by college students, even by those drawn from the top quarter in ability, not just from the bottom quarter or middle quarters. The reading habit has declined. The use of reading as a tool—the ability to use it independently for further exploration—that habit has certainly declined. There is a comparable decline (or failure to advance) in competency in the use of foreign languages. History also is a subject in which lesser competence is demonstrated—there is much less solid general preparation in American and European history than there used to be.

DR. CHASE: Perhaps you are pointing out an influence that has permeated American life, not something peculiar to the schools.

DR. GRISWOLD: Yes, I agree. It is television and the comics and many other things. But what is a school for if it isn't to cope with adverse influences?

DR. CHASE: Well, passing over some special conditions, I would say the real tragedy in American education today is that, by and large, provisions for education are much the same as forty years ago. There have been some gains, perhaps, some losses. A few years ago, I visited the small rural school I attended as a child. I found approximately the same number of pupils. The methods of teaching were almost identical with those I remembered. I said to one of the people in that little rural community, "The schools haven't improved much since our day." He said, "Improved! They are a lot worse!"

I think this is where some people miss the boat—in thinking that some terrible ideology of progressive thinking has come in and wrecked what we once had. In school after school I find the same textbook teaching, the same rote-memory teaching that teachers were condemned for a good many years ago. At one period in education we did make some slight gains in the quality of teaching. We are losing whatever gains we have made—and there is a recession in that sense—because of the present acute shortage of qualified teachers. The real indictment of American education, as I see it, is that when you consider everything that has happened in the world in the last fifty years, education in most of our schools is so much like it was fifty years ago.

DR. GRISWOLD: I agree with Doctor Chase that this isn't just a question of clash of doctrine, or anything like that. There are many historical reasons for the present posture of education, in secondary schools particularly, which have produced harmful results to the whole process of education. Although there are such reasons for these results, there is no excuse for tolerating them.

I think, too, the American home is remiss. Some parents dump their children on the schools and then criticize the schools for not doing what they themselves are unwilling to do. For example, discipline—just plain old-fashioned discipline. I can name three teachers not far from my home community who have just recently resigned in disgust from a public-school system because they were not able to discipline their classes. They were insulted and even threatened with physical violence, and when they tried to get support from the principal and ir schools furnish dinner-table argument in every home that has children of school-going age.

Are we failing to educate our children?

superintendent for their discipline, they got none. So they resigned.

Question: Dr. Woodring, how would you define or describe today's central educational problems or crisis in education?

DR. WOODRING: I think the current educational crisis grows out of our failure as citizens to decide just what we want the schools to accomplish. What are the aims of education? Should the schools be responsible for the child's intellectual development only or should they be responsible also for his social, moral, religious, vocational, physical and emotional development as well as for his recreation? If the schools are to be responsible for everything, are all these things of equal importance; and if not, what is the order of priority—what comes first? Unless we decide what is more important and what is less important the schools are faced with an impossible task, for there is not adequate time to do everything well.

This is a policy decision to be made by all the people—not by educators alone. The failure of the people to make the decision, and to communicate that decision to the educators, has brought about the present crisis.

Question: I am particularly interested in the wide variations in intelligence and ability of children in elementary and secondary schools, and how to do what is best for all of them. Would you say, Doctor Griswold, that schools today are geared to the slow learner?

DR. GRISWOLD: There is a tendency, not only in the public-school system but in colleges and everywhere else, to gear things to the slow student. It is the educational expression of our democratic ideal. There seems to be a fundamental conflict between education and democracy. Democracy says, "Everybody is equal." Education says, "Some get 100, some get 60 and others flunk out." It sorts the sheep from the goats. It says, "You are qualified to go to college and you are not." Now, we have chosen in this country to cast the net as widely as we can and to keep the mesh as tight as we can. This has been our national ideal from the beginning and I personally think it is a good idea, but we can do a lot better with it than we have been doing.

WILLIAM J. LARAMY

A. WHITNEY GRISWOLD

Dr. Griswold: Forcing the lad who can't or won't learn t remain in school until the age of sixteen or longer has no educationa value. Socially, it may keep him out of worse trouble—or it may lea him into it, through frustration, boredom or feelings of inferiority

DR. HOHMAN: I would take exception to that use of the word "democracy." It seems to me that democracy means everybody shall have the maximum opportunity to develop himself to the maximum.

DR. GRISWOLD: I accept that correction, and I am glad you made it. But I believe there is a popular, uncritical acceptance of the meaning of democracy in the terms I stated, and with that education is in conflict.

Question: Will you give your definition and interpretation of true democracy as applied to education?

DR. GRISWOLD: I should say that democracy as applied to education means equal opportunity (for individuals to go as far as their abilities can carry them) plus a maximum diffusion of knowledge (talent, skill, virtue, responsibility) through society. This philosophy is not being carried out in practice because many of the best high-school graduates (40 per cent of the top 25 per cent) are not going as far as they could because of insufficient motivation and, secondly, because many of those who do go on are inadequately prepared. Hence, on both counts, the ideals of equal educational opportunity and maximum diffusion of knowledge are not being fulfilled.

DR. HOHMAN: It is certainly a false principle that suggests it is democratic to place children in classrooms without regard to their intelligence. It is not democratic—it is vicious. If you take the distribution curve of intelligence in the population, about 20 per cent of it is not going to be geared above satisfactory accomplishment of the grade-school level; about 60 per cent will be geared to the possible finishing of high school and only some 20 per cent of our population is geared to higher education. Yet in my home town where we have nine first-year classes, the children are selected alphabetically for fear there will be any separation on the basis of intelligence!

The practice is, in 90 per cent of schools in America, to put all chil together in the same classroom and t expect some type of supernatural ge in the way of a teacher to be able to k them all working and learning at t own individual speed. I think we me pretend that classes are kept at th pupils per class. In my experience th are much more likely to be thirty-fiv forty pupils in a class. I mention this cause I think it might be possible fo skillful teacher to give equal opportu to all kinds of children, with all type background, ability and attainment there were only ten to fifteen childre the classroom.

Question: Isn't this failure to criminate among types of learn detrimental to the fast as well as the sl

DR. WOODRING: If a teacher is tea ing thirty-five or forty children, as a g many teachers are, and he is teaching, the fourth grade, he has mental a ranging from about six to sixteen. If teaches for the upper group, all the lo ones are lost. If he teaches for the lowest group, the upper ones are bo Usually he aims for the middle, or below the middle, and I think there is doubt that the upper group suffers. T learn the essentials but they are unm vated and unstimulated. Likewise, lowest group may be neglected and f trated. I don't doubt that the upper gr is neglected, except in those compa tively rare schools that have spe classes, and they deal only with the up 5 per cent or 1 per cent, rather than upper 30 per cent.

MR. LARAMY: Well, in our school, find that reading ability is probably best guide for grouping students. Par will accept grouping according to read ability. Separation on the basis of I they might object to.

DR. HOHMAN: I wonder if that is t or if it is the teachers who object? O and over again, teachers say to "Parents won't stand for any separat according to ability in learning." But parents I deal with don't say it. It's teachers.

HONOR OUR TEACHERS

By MARGERY WILSON

We need inspired, dedicated teachers. We need to encourage the good ones we have. We need to make the teaching field attractive to fine people with fine talents. The first and most important step is to raise the prestige of the profession. Other advantages would follow more easily.

Though more money and good surroundings are fine assets, they are not the primary, deciding factor in attracting or holding superior teachers. Besides, these points must be left to those in charge of them. But there is an important job for you and me.

It has been proved that the deepest yearning of the human heart is for recognition, for honor! And in this we have failed our teachers.

We, you and I, have let the teaching profession slide downward in prestige. A traveling teacher is overjoyed if no one guesses her to be a teacher! The "schoolma'am" of comic-valentine smear is the mental picture impressed in the national mind. Teaching is at its lowest ebb in our country. Intentional and unintentional enemies have made it so. You and I can raise it by honoring our teachers. Everybody can help.

About a hundred years ago in Germany, the same sad state existed—and one man changed it. He went to his emperor and explained his plan for honoring professors and all teachers of both sexes. In a short time respect had been so built up for Herr Professor that his rank was next to royalty! And German education went rapidly forward to top rank.

We must honor our teachers—and quickly. We do not need to wait for funds, or official approval. There is no red tape involved. We need but to touch an already ripe public opinion. I have had amazing responses where I have presented this idea. A three-fold program suffices.

NEEDS	WHAT YOU CAN DO
1. SOCIAL RECOGNITION	Entertain, this week, for your teachers. Have a tea. Sponsor and back your teachers. Don't leave them on their own after hours (and then criticize them). Provide social contacts for them. Take responsibility for the happiness of these faithful people who are so valuable to the community. Establish a Teachers' Day.
2. PUBLIC HONOR	Arrange for teachers to have special courtesies and privileges (and discounts). Wherever possible, give them first position in your town. Require children to stand when they enter a room.
3. MORAL BACKING	Never criticize a teacher before a pupil. Befriend your present teachers by helping any who need it to raise their qualifications—but do it privately, and with affectionate interest. They will work hard for further qualifications if you show them respect. This spirit is needed even more than any material assets in the field, whether buildings or salaries, however important they may be. You and I can raise the prestige of the teaching profession in a very short time—and the returns are incalculable for teachers, pupils and parents.

When public schools are discussed, somebody always says, "But parents won't stand for it!"

What will people stand for in regard to public schools? To find out, the American Institute of Public Opinion conducted a nationwide survey for the JOURNAL. Crucial issues raised by the experts in the JOURNAL forum were submitted to a representative cross section of adults, including parents and people without children.

The great majority want the same things recommended by the experts. Here are the questions and replies:

Should every public-school pupil in the first eight grades be promoted, or should pupils who have failed most of their subjects be kept back?

*Kept back	Promoted	Undecided
79%	16%	5%

Do you think that studies in the public schools should be made easy enough that every child can pass?

Should not	Should	Undecided
78%	16%	6%

Do you yourself think the study of reading is more important or less important than other school subjects?

More important	About same
67%	25%
Less important	Undecided
4%	4%

If a pupil is having trouble with reading, do you think he should spend extra time catching up, if it means taking time away from other subjects?

Extra time	Should not	Undecided
74%	22%	4%

In some public schools, pupils are divided into "above-average" and "below-average" sections for study and recitation, according to the scores they make on intelligence tests. Do you think this is a good or a poor idea?

Good idea	Poor idea	Undecided
61%	26%	13%

Instead of grouping pupils according to their scores on intelligence tests some public schools group them according to their skill in each particular subject. Do you think this is a good idea, or a poor idea?

Good idea	Poor idea	Undecided
71%	14%	15%

If your child had trouble learning to read, would you prefer that he study reading with other slow readers, or in a class where most of the other pupils read better and faster?

With slow	With better	Undecided
67%	26%	7%

Do you think high-school students who won't behave and won't do their work should be allowed to stay in high school?

Should	Should not	Undecided
29%	64%	7%

Do you think very poor readers should be admitted to high school, or should they be kept back until they have caught up in reading?

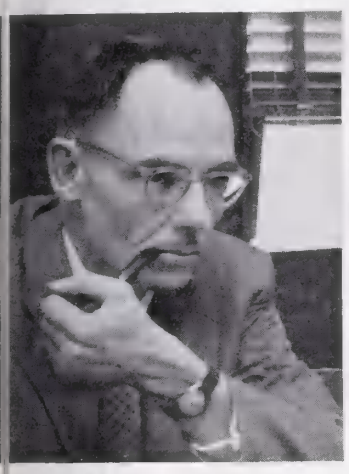
Thirty-two per cent said they should be admitted anyway, and another 9 per cent said admitted but given special work; 51 per cent said poor readers should be kept back, and 8 per cent were undecided.

What do you think we should do about high-school students who don't like high school and aren't getting anything out of their studies?

Thirteen per cent say they should be kept in school till they reach the legal age limit, as at present. But 72 per cent said a different kind of training program should be provided for such pupils, and another 10 per cent believe they should be released a year or two earlier if they wish. Five per cent are undecided.

*These results combine the replies of parents and of people without children. The answers of parents alone are similar, but consistently slightly closer to the viewpoint of the experts.

...ARAMY: We used to group on the ... intelligence and we got lots of ...nts. I didn't have one this year, ...ouping largely on the basis of ... ability.



DR. GRISWOLD: Well, that was my ...hen I suggested a conflict between ...on and democracy. Isn't what you ...of that there has been such a con... ...ween the proper, democratic ideal ...tion and popular ideas of democ... ...applied to education?

DR. HOHMAN: Yes, I think there has ...nd it has deprived many children ... democratic right to learn.

Question: You all agree that this differ... mental ability and attainment ...hen the children start to school. ... child is automatically promoted ...ext grade at the end of each year, ...ss of his achievement, what hap... ...that child as a person?

DR. HOHMAN: In my experience, one of ...gs—he sits and is good and the ... offers no objection to him, or he ... a clown and misbehaves, be... has to get his place in the sun ...n.

DR. WOODRING: We have given far too ...mphasis to how old children are ...s. We start them in school on ...is of age alone, and that is our ...stake. In my state, promotions ...le almost entirely on the basis ... At the age of seventeen, nearly ...e in high school is a senior. ...ss of ability—and the differ... ...e greater then than in the first ...ecause they have broadened ... grouping of children for learning ...e based on a variety of factors: ...naturity, physical maturity, in... ...l maturity, and special knowledge ...ls. Since a child may be advanced ... of these traits and retarded in ...t may be necessary to place him ...ent groups for different activities. ... think it is either necessary or pos... eliminate competition in learning ...s, but the child should have an ...nity to compete with those of ...mately his own ability rather than ...se far above or far below him—

PAUL WOODRING

FRANCIS S. CHASE

Dr. Chase: Teachers, in common with other citizens, recog... this nation needs the fullest possible development of its human ...sources if it is to provide world leadership. Our present provisions for ...ucation in this country are clearly not equal to that task.

which is what frequently happens when he is kept with his age group for all activities. I do not think there is anything democratic in keeping all twelve-year-olds together when some have a mental age of eight and others a mental age of eighteen.

DR. CHASE: This is all the result of our mass-production methods in education. The old system of repeating a grade for a second, third or fourth time was seldom a valid educational experience. Some youngsters after repeating a grade three or four times often knew no more than they did the first time. You can't solve this problem either by promoting everybody or by keeping a child in a given grade until he masters the so-called minimum standards for that grade. We must deal with the problem by setting goals that are appropriate for different types of learners.

DR. HOHMAN: I agree 100 per cent with Doctor Chase. Therefore, it seems to me we must establish different types of education for the slow learner and the fast learner.

DR. WOODRING: Of course there is a large group of Americans, including a large group of teachers, who do think it is undemocratic to divide children on the basis of ability.

Question: Is it mainly teachers who believe that, or is it parents?

DR. WOODRING: There are a great many teachers whose education philosophy has led them to believe that we ought not to call attention to these differences, and further—and this is a second belief I think is erroneous—the best way to avoid the appearance of difference is to keep them in the same group.

DR. CHASE: Well, the schools really have been giving consideration to this for a number of years and they have made progress. The idea of grouping children in classrooms in various ways to improve teaching was common at one time—and then it was discarded almost entirely, partly because the grouping was being done on the wrong basis and partly because there wasn't much difference in the teaching after the children were separated into groups. I think there is a swing back toward grouping—but not the same grouping for every kind of learning. When you have a half-dozen first-grade classes, even if you know nothing about the intelligence of the children, you can still easily determine their relative readiness for reading and certain other kinds of experience. Not to take advantage of that in grouping seems to me the utmost folly.

DR. HOHMAN: Even if there were only two first-grade classes, you could still do it, because then the teacher can separate the very bright from the average; a third group could be made up of the slow learners from more than one grade.

DR. CHASE: Let us remember, too, that many exceptionally able people have come out of the one-room schools. In such schools the teacher had a completely varied group of all ages and grades. When

CONTINUED ON PAGE 184

GRACE B. WHITE

LESLIE HOHMAN

JOSEPH DI PIETRO

Mrs. White: Not all children are ready to read at six or even seven. We can to some degree speed up reading readiness, but not much. Some may never read with ease.

WRITING = THINKING

A novel dealing with a crisis in the lives of thousands of America's rejected children today

By EVAN HUNTER

This is a shocking story. It is a frightening story. It is a story based on reality which now finds its counterpart in many of our great American cities. It is published to awaken and warn the majority of parents and citizens whose children are more fortunate. It shows what conditions can produce juvenile delinquency and even crime among school children.

We believe that it is the responsibility of every citizen to see that the conditions described in this powerful novel are banished from the land. In the tradition of Victor Hugo, Charles Dickens, Theodore Dreiser, Frank Norris and Sinclair Lewis, this novel exposes a contemporary social evil. Thousands of rejected children can now be bent to delinquency and a resentment at society through schools which police rather than educate. Unless a better program can be found for these nonacademic minds, society must seriously consider whether they would not be better off in a fruitful job experience, also educative, which many factors, including union practices, now tend to deny them. (We, as editors, believe that America as a society can be no greater than the homes and schools which mar or make our citizens.)

Teachers are not to blame for these appalling conditions. Society is. The conflict of the idealistic teacher in the midst of this chaos, the final triumph of this teacher's courage over disaster, is told with poignance and compassion, by a writer who has himself lived through the agony.

Turn the page for this New Novel Complete in this Issue

Blackboard Jungle

The kids knew what had happened... and they liked i

The building presented a not unpleasant architectural scheme, the banks of wide windows reflecting golden sunlight, the browned weathered brick façade, the ivy clinging to the brick and framing the windows. He walked through the gate in the fence and into the empty yard. He was a little nervous, but knew that would pass once the interview started. He paused on the shadowed steps to look up at the chiseled letters in the triangular arch over the doorway: NORTH MANUAL TRADES HIGH SCHOOL.

He sucked in a deep breath, the way a man on a diving board will just before taking the plunge, and started up the steps. He pulled open the wooden door and saw the sign, GENERAL OFFICE. He followed the arrow beneath the sign into a cool, dim corridor. The halls were freshly painted and spotlessly clean. He admired this with an air of proprietorship, almost as if he had already won the job. A clean school is a good school, he mused, and wondered in which education class he'd picked that up.

He made a turn at the end of the corridor, and walked rapidly to an open doorway. A sign to the right read GENERAL OFFICE.

He stood in the doorway for just an instant, and then walked to the railing. A blonde with an upswept hairdo and a pencil stabbed into the hair was busily scribbling something on an official-looking form. She did not look up. He cleared his throat, and she still continued scribbling and did not deign to notice him until she had finished. She looked at him exactly as she had looked at the form.

"Yes?" she said.

"I have an appointment with Mr. Stanley," he said, smiling.

"Your name, please?"

"Mr. Dadier."

"If you'll take a seat, Mr. Dadier, he'll be with you in a moment."

"Thank you."

Richard Dadier walked to the bench and took a seat. He turned his attention to the two men at the desk beyond the railing. The distinguished-looking man was doubtless Mr. Stanley, and the one with fear all over his face was undoubtedly applying for the open English teacher's position. Stanley was a blondish man, with a thin, angular face and a precise mustache. The fellow opposite him droned on, using his hands to illustrate points. Rick heard the words "student taught," and Stanley nodded. The fellow went on, and Stanley penciled notes on the pad before him.

There was movement behind the railing, and Rick saw the frightened-looking man rise and shake hands with Stanley. The blonde with the pencil in her hair said, "Mr. Dadier?" and Rick rose.

He threw his shoulders back, remembering to walk proudly. Stanley appraised him as he came closer to the desk, and Rick kept his hands tightly clenched because he knew they would tremble if he loosened them. Stanley followed him all the way across the room, his eyes inquisitive.

"Mr. Dadier?" he said, and his voice was soft, like the roll of distant thunder in purple hills.

"Yes, sir," Rick said.

"Sit down, won't you?"

He sat stiffly. Stanley's eyes were gray, a pale gray. His hair was not as blond as it had looked from the other side of the railing. His suit was expensively tailored, and he looked the complete picture of the chairman of the English Department at Princeton or Harvard, except this was North Manual Trades and not Princeton or Harvard.

"Why do you want to teach here?" Stanley asked suddenly.

"I have to teach in a vocational school," Rick told him.

"Would you rather teach in another type of school?"

Rick smiled a bit tremulously, wondering if he were taking the right tack. "Sir," he said, "I would rather teach at Princeton . . . but so would a lot of other people."

Stanley smiled, and Rick knew he'd hit the right spot. He felt his hands unclench, and knew he could take whatever Stanley had to offer now. Fire away, he thought, and he waited impatiently.

"You said you have to teach in a vocational school. That means you have an emergency license, doesn't it?" Stanley asked.

"Yes, sir. A year in vocational high schools to make the license valid for any high school."

"A good move on the board's part," Stanley commented dryly. "We need teachers in vocational high schools." He paused and smoothed his thin mustache, patchy in spots, Rick saw, now that he was closer to it. It's probably a new mustache. A department chairman must look older, and he figured Stanley for no more than thirty-eight or -nine.

"Which college did you attend?"

"Hunter, sir."

"Oh?" Stanley's brows went up in interest. Everyone's brows always went up in interest. It was better than having a Harvard degree. "That's an all-girls' school, isn't it?"

"It was, sir. They took in veterans after the war. It was difficult to find a school, so many of us were returning at once."

"You're a veteran, then?" Stanley asked.

"Yes, sir. Navy."

"I see." He could tell Stanley was pleased. The veteran hook always pleased people. "Where did you student-teach?"

Stanley pronounced it "styu-dent," and Rick suddenly remembered his diction, and he recalled the Speech I and II classes. He knew he possesse sibilant s, and he reminded himself to watch tha When he spoke, his speech was letter perfect, a Stanley's "styu-dent" had given him an invis shot in the arm.

"I taught"—and he hit the t perfectly—"at N chine and Metal Trades, sir."

"Oh? A vocational school, eh? That was think ahead."

"Yes, sir."

"How'd you find it?"

"I enjoyed it, sir. It wasn't at all as bad as the painted it."

"If you liked Machine and Metal, you'll lik here. Who was department chairman there?"

"Mr. Ackerman, sir."

"M-m-m, yes, a good man."

"He helped me a lot, sir."

"You speak rather softly," Stanley said sudde "Can you be heard at the back of a classroom?"

"Well, I did a lot of dramatics in college, sir, they could always hear me in the last row of theater."

"Really?" Stanley asked, seeming truly interest

"Shall I project a little?" Rick asked, smiling

Stanley leaned back and smiled with him. " ahead. Project."

Rick felt for his voice at the pit of his d phragm. "Once more unto the breach, dear frie once more," he quoted loudly, strongly, "or close wall up with our English dead. In peace there's no ing so becomes a man as modest stillness and humili but when the blast of war blows in our ears, then i tate the action of the tiger."

He stopped there, hoping Stanley would not w him to go farther because he could not remem any more of the quotation.

"An aptly chosen quotation," Stanley s smilingly. "Henry the Fourth, wasn't it?"

Rick hesitated. The passage had been from He V—Hank the Cinq, as they'd called it in school. W it possible that Stanley, the chairman of the Engl Department, did not know this?

"I think it's Henry the Fifth," Rick said polite gambling that Stanley knew and was simply test him.

Stanley nodded knowingly, more pleased n "Right; it is," he said. "Can you be here Friday an organizational meeting, Mr. Dadier?"

"Certainly, sir," Rick said, still not realizing job was his.

"Fine. Give your license to Miss Brady in the joining office," Stanley told him. "She'll list you the books and make out a time card for you. T meeting is at noon, but I'd like you to be here eleven or so. I'll introduce you to Mr. Small, new principal. You can report to the English off That's on the fourth floor, Room Four thirty-ni Any questions?"

"Just one, sir," Rick said. He hesitated, and th asked, "The discipline problem here. Is it ——"

Stanley's eyes tightened. "There is no discipl problem here," he said quickly. "I'll look for y on Friday."

He rose and took Rick's hand, and Rick r uncertainly.

"Yes, sir," he said. "Thank you very much, s

Copyright, 1953, 1954, by Evan Hunter
This is a condensation of the novel, soon to be published by Simon and Schuster

This sort of evened the score.

He strode briskly from the desk and through the ate remembering to keep his shoulders back and is head high.

He caught the bus at the corner. When he was eate and looking through the window he remem- ere he hadn't called Anne. But he told himself it as better this way; he'd surprise her.

The bus belched carbon monoxide, pulled out nto the thick traffic.

When the old-fashioned twist bell in the loo sounded she was standing at the sink with her han in soapy water. She called, "Just a moment," dryi her hands rapidly. She walked down the long ove lifted the flap of the peephole in the door, and aid "Oh, Rick, it's you." She said it happily, and her unlocked the door, wondering why he hadn't sec his key.

He stood there with a little-boy look on his face, both hands behind his back. He was grinning broadly, like a kid on Christmas morning, and she knew then that he'd got the job, but she would not have spoiled his surprise for all the tea in China.

"Hello, Anne," he said softly, secretly.

"Hello, darling," she replied. "Why didn't you use your key?"

"I couldn't."

"Why couldn't you?" she asked, playing with the game, still standing in the doorway, waiting for him to break the surprise.

"My hands are full," he said. "Voilà!" He pulled and from behind his back, and there was a bou et of red roses, six of them, with ferns and ris green wrapping. "And voilà!" He pulled the the hand out, and she saw the bottle of cham- pag. She could read the delicately scripted Dom stic, but that didn't matter at all.

"You got the job!" she said ecstatically, pretend- ing surprise, not having to pretend vast joy because he was truly excited.

"Did I get it? Did I get it?" He scooped her into his arms, lifting her off her feet, with the champagne and roses clutched tightly behind her back. "Did I get honey? Did I get it?"

He swung her around, and she shrieked girlishly, "Rick, your son and heir!" and he answered, "Nuts to your son and heir."

But then—remembering that she was six months pregnant, remembering that you don't go wad ing six-months-pregnant women around in the air, even if you did get a job at Manual Trades, and ve if this was the first break you'd had since you got out of school—he put her down.

He kissed her resoundingly, thinking how sweet her lips were, and thinking there was no one on earth he would have rather come home to with the news tha he had got the job at Manual Trades. No one on ear at, and that included Hedy Lamarr and Rita Hayworth and anyone else you might care to name.

"Oh, Rick," she said, "that's wonderful, truly wo derful!"

"And are you going to worry about money any mo dear?" Rick wanted to know. "Are you?"

"No, darling," she said softly, pleased, smiling.

"And are you going to love me?"

"I love you, Rick," she said.

"Are you going to really love me?"

"I really love you, darling."

"Have you cooked supper yet?"

"No, I ——" She put her hand to her lips because she hadn't even begun supper. Her green eyes clouded. "I ——"

"Good! Because I am going out and get something for supper," he told her. "I shall bring supper home to you as befits the wife of a new English teacher at North Manual Trades High School, Incorporated, of America. How about ravioli? That goes well with champagne, doesn't it? Ravioli, and a good antipasto. And we'll put candles on the table, and these roses."

"All right, Rick," she said, watching him happily, loving the excitement in his eyes and the high flush on his cheeks.

"And I want you to wear your black strapless, and I'll wear my blue ——"

"Rick, I'd never get into it!"

He swept her into his arms again and kissed her lingeringly this time, and she tightened her arms around his neck, not wanting to let him go, wanting to preserve this bubble of complete happiness forever. He released her suddenly, holding her at arm's length.

"That new maternity thing then," he told her, "the pink one. I want this to be dress-up, Anne. Do you understand?"

"Yes, darling," she said, "I do."

"Good. Now you set the table, and don't forget the candles," he said. "Hop to it, wench! I'll go get the vittles."

They could not have asked for more from the evening.

The candles cast a warm glow onto the stiff regularity of a City Housing Project kitchen, and the food that Rick had bought looked inviting and tempting. They ate with relish, and afterward they turned on the radio and danced in the living room, with the cool breeze blowing off the East River into their eleventh-floor window. They danced and he held her tightly, and they didn't speak, just listened to the music and felt the breeze and were content in the tight little happy vacuum they had built around themselves.

This thing that miraculously surrounded them was all a part of Rick's getting the job, and the impromptu supper suggestions, and the dancing afterward. They did not stop to realize that this thing about them was simply being in love.

Richard Dadier examined his program, and after he'd studied it he could not but admit it was a good one. The program was divided into eight forty-five-minute periods. There was five minutes allowed between periods for change of classes, and fifteen minutes allowed at the beginning of the day for his official class. He reported for work at 8:30 A.M. and his day ended at 3:25 P.M. A short day, even counting the lesson plans that would have to be prepared at night and the fact that he'd have to be at school by about 8:15 and wouldn't leave, most likely, until 4:00. Even so, it was a short day.

His official room was Room 206, in which he would teach all day long. His official class was a second-term class, officially titled 27.

The program looked like this:

8:30—8:45	Home Room
1— 8:50—9:35	English 21—206
2— 9:40—10:25	English 22—206
3—10:30—11:15	Hall Patrol
4—11:20—12:05	Lunch
5—12:10—12:55	English 55—206
6— 1:00—1:45	Unassigned
7— 1:50—2:35	English 77—206
8— 2:40—3:25	English 78—206

He did not realize that it was undesirable to have two English 2 classes. It was undesirable because they, unlike the upper-term classes, did not follow individual programs. They traveled in a group, and that group was a well-knit, solidified thing. It was undesirable because 2's are beginning to feel their oats, are beginning to feel familiar in the school, are beginning to know the score. They are just marking time until they're sixteen and can get working papers. Rick did not realize this.

The Hall Patrol period did not disturb him either. He knew that there were so-called "duty" periods in every high school, and a hall patrol was a nice time to sit and catch up on lesson plans while the monitors did all the work.

He did not as yet know that his hall patrol was in the short end of the first-floor corridor L, and that there was an entrance at the end of that L, and also a toilet. Even if he had known this, it would not have bothered him because he didn't know the locks on every door to that entrance were broken, and he didn't know that this particular toilet was a gathering place for every kid in the school who was cutting, smoking, or just generally killing time.

He was glad they'd given him an English 5 class. Perhaps he would have still been glad if he had known a little about English 55–206, but that is doubtful. Most of the boys in 55–206 had traveled in a block program with a freshman named Juan Garza, and Juan Garza had raised delightful sorts of hell at Manual Trades. Nor was Juan Garza without disciples in 55-206, and those disciples were reported to be some of the worst troublemakers at Manual Trades, even now that Garza was safely ensconced in a reform school. Rick did not know all this.

His program looked fine, especially when he saw that he had two English 7 classes. Everyone knew that English 7's were ideal. They'd come to within a term of graduation, and didn't want to get thrown out of school for fouling up at this late stage of the game.

This was ordinarily true. It was, unfortunately, not true at the present time.

Because most of Rick's English 7's were boys of eighteen and nineteen, and most of them were expecting to be drafted into the Army of the United States. Most of them worked after school, so it was doubly unfortunate that one of the English 7 classes was during the eighth and last period. A last-period class is always restless, and when a boy is thinking about the money he

CONTINUED ON PAGE 116

Let the Teache

Teachers and administrators who know what goes on in the classrooms are the great sources of common sense in education today, but many of them are afraid to voice their opinions.

TOO MUCH TO TEACH

Burnet, Texas

Last year I was teaching the third grade. I was trying to cover fourteen subjects, between the hours of nine and three, five days a week, watching the door for the next interruption, and hoping to teach the students to read in the thirty-minute allotted period. Would you have been frustrated? Would you have known the new word presented the day before? Would the command "Let's settle down, please" have meant much to you? I did not have time even to discover the child's needs, much less do anything about them if I had.

MRS. O. L. KASSAW
(Teacher)

THE TEACHERS DO TRY

St. Louis, Missouri

One of the changes that have occurred as a result of the demands of society is the change in the type of pupil we are trying to educate. Time was when colleges received only the cream of the crop of high-school graduates, the high school got only the cream of the crop of elementary-school graduates, and the elementary schools did much eliminating of pupils during their elementary-school years. Now everyone goes through elementary school, almost everyone goes through high school, and a high percentage of high-school graduates goes on to college. How hard teachers have tried to maintain standards of excellence!

The group of citizens that demands that something be added to the curriculum is not concerned about what is subtracted. Each addition, however, requires a subtraction; for the school day still has the same number of hours, the school year still has the same number of months, and the school course still has the same number of years. We must educate a changed pupil, member of a changed family, to take his changed place in a changed society, with a changed cultural heritage. We say that the curriculum, too, must be changed, and we educators are eager to have society crystallize its thinking, and establish its goals.

MARION STRAUSS
(Teacher—retired)

WHY USE YOUR HEAD?

San Antonio, Texas

The idea of discipline in my school is a "talking to." Suspension is unheard of and would shock everyone. In senior classes my husband has had students of low mentality, bad discipline problems and students who refuse to do anything but grudgingly attend some classes. He has been told to pass all of them "just to keep them in school." You can imagine the atmosphere for the brighter student. There are many students in this high school who have perfectly normal minds but have never learned to read. They cannot comprehend what they do read because they have never been required to reason or think. The comparatively small chemistry class was supposed to have been the cream of the crop. Yet my husband had to stop over and over and teach basic math before he could proceed with chemistry.

This school is afflicted with clubs, organizational activities and band trips. Activities are not restricted in number, nor students restricted from participation by their grades. The students join everything they can and major in minors. The teacher learns quickly not to waste time sending discipline problems to the office and suffers in frustrated silence—or quits teaching and gets a good job.

TEACHER'S WIFE
(Name withheld by request)

NO BRAINS ALLOWED

Toledo, Ohio

My 8-A English class numbers thirty-six youngsters whose reading skills vary from third to tenth grade and whose mental abilities cover as wide a range. For convenience, I think of them as "brighties," "middlings" and "little dears."

The task assigned to me is to keep all progressing while I provide for the gifted what is called an "enriched curriculum," supposed to stretch their active little minds to the full and store them with added knowledge. Here's what happens:

"Why can't I read my comic books? I'm always through first anyway," smugly from Larry.

"I have read all those books," says Jane. "I am tired of them."

"I don't want to do any more work," announces Joe. "The kids are calling me a brain now."

And how are the "little dears" coming? Are they discouraged? They need some participation. But the "brighties" won't listen to their stumbling reading, and repetitious stories. If I only had two heads! While one of them stirred and stimulated and fulfilled the clever ones, the other could be a devoted audience, listening to the problems and watching the eye movements of the "little dears." Maybe some of them could learn to read after all.

But, as it is, "enrichment" falls short. Are the "brighties" growing mischievous, careless or smug? Are the "middlings" marking time? Isn't it too bad that in the eighth grade we still haven't time to teach so many just to read? Shouldn't something be done about it soon? It's already too late for too many.

(Name withheld by request)

YOU CAN'T FAIL THEM

Bellflower, California

Since students everywhere vary tremendously in their intellectual capacity, obviously many of those who finish high school cannot be expected to achieve desirable standards.

Society will no longer permit us to fail pupils repeatedly, or expel them from school, just because they cannot attain the intellectual standards of the more able. Most of us would agree that this newer point of view, which permits a large majority of our citizenry to complete high school, is a desirable one. Nevertheless, business and the professions should no longer expect the high-school diploma to be an indication of high-level competency. Employers will need to be selective in the employment of high-school graduates.

W. NORMAN WAMPLER
(Superintendent)
Bellflower City School District

Must

to priva

"We are with high-schoo but what

PARENTS who want their child good fundamental education in a wholeso ment are in grave danger of being forced t to private schools. This necessity will financial sacrifice on the part of many pare ill afford such a burden on top of taxes they toward public education. It will also mean bright youngsters will be deprived of the e which they are entitled because their pare be able to pay private-school tuition. Is it that the young people most capable of pro an education and returning a valuable ser country are in danger of being pushed out to pay for their education while the energy of the country are being squandered on capable of profiting from the investment? accepting supinely the conditions that are b enrollment of the private schools, should demanding a reorganization of the public that bright boys and girls of whatever fina can have an equal opportunity to receive a an education as is possible for the child wealthy?

The observations and recommendations make in this article are based on twenty-fi teaching in a public high school. That we out thousands of illiterates with high-schoo is deplored by public-school teachers. C however, the load carried by public-high-sch ers and the conditions under which they tea it is remarkable that they send as many we students to college as they do.

Public-school education is now mass edu is heir to all the sorry defects of mass produ idea dominating the schools today is that all must be kept in school regardless of intel pacity or interest in learning. (We are boast per cent of the youngsters of high-school school.) This idea is based on the worthiest all our fumbling is done in the name of de that all children shall have an equal opport

The idea has become fixed in America th dren must have a bookish education. Tr working with the hands has acquired a soc the idea has become prevalent that a person happy unless he has a college degree and hol collar job. Parents refuse to accept a non child and are determined to make their chil the Procrustean bed of academic education bones are cracked rather than admit that t peak

end hildren chools?

ans of illiterates
er deplore it—
ATERINE G. STRUVE

ild ho is not suited to a bookish education. Conse-ent we have many unhappy, maladjusted young op in our schools today who are making teaching ch nightmare that young teachers are leaving the ofe on by the thousands. Poor salaries, it is true, e de factor causing teachers to leave, but the ilo phy of education controlling the schools is, in y o nion, a much more powerful factor.

In der to qualify for teaching positions in the bli high schools, candidates are required to pass an ations in subject matter that would qualify them t in the best private schools. It is not unreason-ble f them to expect that they will teach these sub-cts n the high-school level. But when they secure eir positions, they find themselves being asked to ach lasses in the high schools on the fifth- and sixth-ad evels to students who are not only uninterested l ning but who are also so unco-operative that ey terfere with the learning of other students who w n to learn.

Si e the entire public-school system is geared to the ed re, and academic activities are subordinated to er other sort of activity, the teacher who wants to r re for the capable child finds himself in a con-an tate of frustration. The teachers are told, after ey e in the schools, that they will have to teach the ta d students or get out. Hundreds of young ch rs are getting out, and it is my opinion that as ac g conditions in the public schools become n lly known, a much greater number of capable u college graduates will avoid getting into such us ting situations.

I e high schools are to be conducted for the masses, cl ing the delinquents and hoodlums, the kind of t r training given should be of the type formerly o led for teaching in the correctional institutions. t at least be honest in stating what we are trying i so that persons interested in that kind of work r cure the proper training for accomplishing their s and can go into the work with their eyes open o are teachers trained to teach academic subjects t the humiliating position in which they now find e lves.

r the past twenty-five years a system of "social otion" has gradually been accepted by the ls. Faced with the impossibility of educating all en to the same level, educators have given up and established the policy of passing pupils from one to the next without requiring them to meet any ards. The theory CONTINUED ON PAGE 182

Your child can learn to read

More is known about the teaching of reading than possibly any other subject; still, thousands of children are failing to master this essential educational tool.

By G. M. WHITE

ASSISTANT SUPERINTENDENT WILLIAM KOTTMEYER, in charge of the reading program in the St. Louis public schools, says flatly, "All children qualified to be in regular public-school classrooms can be taught to read. If they do not learn, it is because they are not taught."

His statement may well be news to many parents whose children have stumbled and suffered through school because of poor reading ability. Reading failure has been attributed to any number of complex factors other than inadequate teaching. Doctor Kottmeyer maintains the chief factors are educational. Here is an accounting of 924 children studied in the St. Louis language-arts centers because of failure to learn to read. Why did they not learn to read?

QUESTION: Are these children so stupid that they can't learn?

ANSWER: No. As a matter of fact, 636 of these cases, or 69 per cent, had normal or superior intelligence. Lowest recorded intelligence quotient was 50, the highest, 140.

Q.: Are they physically handicapped?

A.: Yes, as a group they show more physical handicaps than normal groups. Some 494, or 53 per cent, had a physical handicap which might have had something to do with their failure to learn.

Q.: Can they see? Can they hear?

A.: Again, this group shows more seeing and hearing handicaps than a random group—47 per cent had some sight deficiency and 18 per cent had hearing losses greater than a 10 per cent loss in either ear.

Q.: What seems to be the relative importance of emotional disturbances in learning to read?

A.: Emotional disturbances among the children in this group were a relatively minor factor. The best judgment of the St. Louis Reading Clinic teachers making these diagnoses is that some 6 per cent of the 924 cases showed evidence that emotional disturbances interfered seriously with their learning to read.

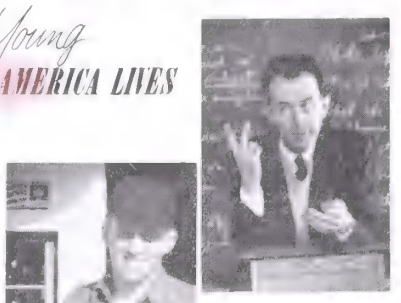
Q.: Is there any outstanding handicapping characteristic among these 924 cases?

A.: Yes. Approximately 94 per cent of these children either have never learned or have never been taught to associate sounds with letters of the alphabet.

No one can state accurately the number of retarded readers in the public schools today. Some estimates run as high as one third of the total enrollment. Others are lower, largely because of disagreement about standards upon which the judgment is based. At the outset of World War II, 433,000 young American men were rejected in the draft because they were illiterate. At that point, to prevent more thousands' being lost to the armed services, a program was started to teach illiterate draftees the rudiments of reading and writing. That program was highly successful, proving that men can be taught to read when they are needed to fight a war.

Nobody disagrees that the ability to read is essential for anyone to get anything from the printed page. Even the most optimistic observers concede that great numbers of children—a horde frighteningly large in a nation governed by its people—are failing to learn to read easily and well.

In many of our schools children are, in effect, being taught not to read, to hate reading. They are being promoted each year to the next higher grade, without ever having mastered the one skill essential for them to learn from the books. For them the classroom is a torture chamber and they react accordingly. They often express their frustration by misbehavior or complete passivity in the classroom, and sometimes by more serious delinquency.



Here is the case of Ronnie, a seventh-grader in St. Louis who alternately moped and clowned in the classroom because he could barely read fourth-grade material. "You can't teach me nothin'!" he told his teacher. "Lots of people have tried. I'm just too dumb to learn." No defiance—just a hangdog look.

His score on a Stanford-Binet Form M showed an I.Q. of 106—comfortably above average. But like most poor readers he was convinced he was stupid and getting more so. His reading-disability analysis read: Retarded because of failure to develop methods of word attack. Ronnie wasn't dumb; he simply had never been taught to read.

With special reading training, individually given, his progress was spectacular. In only twenty-seven clock hours of teaching (two hours a week for about three months), he gained two years in reading ability. "Well, what do you know—I can read!" he told his mother. "They gave me a book I can read!" His blue eyes glistened almost with tears, as though he had found a new world—as indeed he had. And along with it, new self-respect and pride. But for these few hours of CONTINUED ON PAGE 190

To learn the real-life decisions of two teachers, turn to How Young America Lives, page 161.

Young HOW AMERICA LIVES

ROBERT S. HART

Bob says, "Oh, teachers get resigned. Besides, a good life is more important than money and I'm happy. I'm a teacher and I like teaching."

EDWARD HOUGH

"It's all right to talk about dedicating yourself to teaching," Ed says, "but the day comes when you have to think about your own kids."

Miss Dove and the Maternal Instinct

'The terrible Miss Dove," they called her—not so much from her dogmatic insistence upon punctuality and punctuation as from the awful suspicion that she knew all about them.

"AH, poor Miss Dove!" thought the mothers of the outgoing sixth grade as they watched that seasoned mentor of youth descend the steps from the stage of the school auditorium. Ordinarily—try as they might to disguise the fact by poking fun at her bony figure, her sharp nose, and the tight little ball of hair at the nape of her rigid neck—they were afraid of Miss Dove. As children most of them had been exposed to her not-too-tender mercy. Forty-five minutes a day, five days a week, nine months a year for six notably impressionable years of their lives, they had spent in the geography room in the aura of Miss Dove's personality. There, life had been different from life at home. Nobody had cared if they were bored or entertained, gay or sulky. Nobody had asked them to be clever or charming. The teacher had required only that they be industrious and good—but steadily, all the time. "The terrible Miss Dove" they had called her, and their title for her had derived less from her dogmatic insistence upon such tiresome virtues as punctuality, correct posture and neatness than from the awful suspicion that she knew all about them. She could put her finger on the snively, ignoble spots in their natures as unerringly, they felt, as she could touch with her long map pointer the capital of Bolivia or the source of the Danube.

To her pupils, past and present, Miss Dove was not so much a fellow creature of flesh and blood as a public conscience. But on this June morning some of them, rich and charitable in successful maternity, glimpsed infinite pathos in the spinster's life.

The graduation exercises at Cedar Grove Elementary School had drawn to a close. Diplomas and music-memory medals had been duly bestowed. On the platform forty white-clad children, all with rapt dedicated faces, had presented a tableau of propriety. (At least, thirty-nine of them had. Sterling Baker, a boy remarkable for pinkness and aplomb, had attempted, by practicing Morse code with his mobile ears, to provide comic relief for the transcendent solemnity of the occasion. But, with a single exception, the audience had ignored Sterling. Only his elder brother, Dr. Thomas Baker—the sole adult male in attendance—had suffered a brief fit of coughing.) "Trees" had been recited, with much flutter of the hands to suggest nesting robins, by Fae Patricia Rigsbee, a bisque doll of a girl. Finally the Citizenship Cup had been awarded to Lester Knight, Jr. Thrusting his jaw forward almost to the angle of dislocation, Lester had declared that to him the trophy "rep-er-resented just one more challenge!"

Now, preceded by the principal and most of the faculty, the graduates were marching single-file down the center aisle. Their voices, raised in the song of farewell, had a sweetness independent of pitch or harmony.

"Dear old Cedar Grove, to thee-ee-eee
We pledge love and loy-al-tee-ee-ee ——" sang the graduates and proceeded to vow, off-key, that whatever CONTINUED ON PAGE 174

By FRANCES GRAY PATTON

"He spoke to the waiter in French Jincey said, "and wore a cumm

RICHARD AVEDON

"Gertrude smiled for the cameras. It was my first taste of being 'Mr. Gertrude Lawrence.'"

GERTRU

Hurt and angry, they faced each and said with bitter fu
"I'm thro

IV IT is strange, and it may seem incredible, that whereas the dangers and deprivations of war had revealed to Gertrude and to me our need of dependence upon each other, our reunion, shortly before V-J Day, brought us to the verge of separation.

I had every expectation of being kept on in the E.T.O. for some time, when I was suddenly ordered to attend a naval conference then convening in Chicago. Before taking off from England there was no time or opportunity to get in touch with Gertrude. I wired Gertrude (she was in San Francisco) at once asking her to join me in Chicago. My message, as I learned later, caused dramatic commotion. Until she ripped open the yellow envelope, Gertrude was under the impression that I was six thousand miles away. She headed for the first train.

Fanny Holtzmann communicated with Gertrude's New York publishers, telling them that their author would be in Chicago on the day her book was to be released. Thus, when I took time off from the conference to hurry down to Union Station to meet my wife, I walked into a huddle of newsmen, photographers, radio broadcasters, lights, microphones and several hundred gaping spectators.

Our reunion promised to have about as much privacy as that of two goldfish in the proverbial bowl.

Irritation made me self-conscious, awkward and brusque. I was having my first taste of being "Mr. Gertrude Lawrence," and finding it bitter on the tongue. I was there to meet Mrs. A; not the author of a potential best seller. To have half a dozen cameramen snapping our first embrace, shouting at us to "Hold it!," did not lessen my chagrin. I fe freeze up.

Gertrude looked at me ingly. And smiled at the

"But, Richard darling, tested when I called over gave the driver the addres you coming too?"

I explained that I had been absent from the co longer than I should hav

"But you're meeting yo

I replied that the Navy tirely uninterested in tha as it—the Navy—was con was in Chicago on duty. T first. I would join her at bassador as soon as I wa do so.

"What will the press th separate at once, like thi trude demanded. "They'l sorts of things. That you d me. That there is some ot or some other woman."

I said that for all of press could think and sa ever it chose. I had not as of them to be there.

It was close to the dini when the conference bro was at liberty to rejoin G Before I reached the doo suite I heard her singing h found her unpacking the which her maid had sent New York, surrounded by with more being delivere little while. The unpacking flower arrangement we longed by the repeated i tion of the telephone. Eve seemed, was eager to welc to fete her. I heard her pl to lunch next day, cock dine at someone's house, morrow night. We have ar
ment. What about Th

CONTINUED ON PAGE

Copyright, 1954, by Richard Stoddard Aldrich

Please tell me if you are happy with me - & if

AWRENCE AS

Mrs. A.

MAURICE SEYMOUR

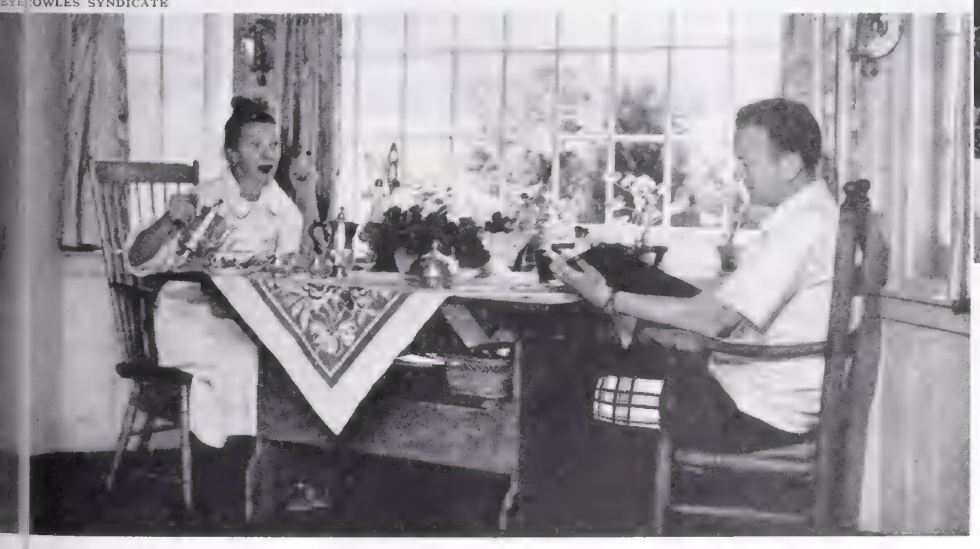
"Darling," she breathed happily, "that's the first time you've shouted at me in months!"

what a unsane A woman is in love!!

RICHARD STODDARD ALDRICH

DOROTHY WILDING

Sarah Bernhardt's parasol was cherished part of Gertrude's costume as cockney Eliza in Pygmalion.



to tell you that my heart is aching almost beyond being able to bear.

AMERICAN HOME MAG.

Happiest on the Cape, she still yearned for "home" in England.

EVE OWLES SYNDICATE

bear it!" Gertrude exclaimed indignantly. "Polly s, and me just sitting here—and he's rich too!"

– and do you know that I am lost without you??

in love, be free, but please truthful – for both our sakes.

Your own "Mrs A"

NEW BEDFORD SUNDAY STANDARD

Horn-rimmed glasses appeared only when "Gee" was feeling crisp and efficient.

THE Decline and fall OF AUGIE SHEEAN

By JOE COOGAN

I WAS thirteen years old on the day that Augie Sheean sold his soul to the devil. Augie, a short, stocky boy with a round, cheerful face, was an eighth-grade classmate of mine, who lived four doors away from me in an old two-story row house on Eighteenth Street in Philadelphia. He was a newcomer to our neighborhood. At just about the time the new school term was beginning, Augie and his widowed mother arrived from Tinahely, a small Irish village, and moved into the house left vacant by the death of old Matt Harvey, a bachelor who had lived in the old house on Eighteenth Street for twenty years. It seems that the Sheeans were cousins of his, and old Matt—who had been a saving and fairly prosperous plumber—used to send money to them when he was alive; when he died, he left them the house and a small legacy.

"It's a mystery to me," my mother
he didn't send for them long ago. Ratt by himself in that big house when he had a fine woman to take care of it for

The mystery was cleared up when we g Margaret Sheean. A tall, heavy-set wom air of brisk, determined piety, she was, i breezy way, what my father called frowner." One of the things she frown America. "A land of flappers, gangs leggers and drunkards," she called it.
would have had no living with her. M

Augie was a year older than I and hac from school in Tinahely, but it was d he'd have to repeat the eighth grade at S grammar school to qualify for admitta Catholic high school. St. Anselm's sc

He'd been warned about

Augie was having a terrible time trying to be polite.
His face was scarlet.

ck building which huddled self-conly ainst the stone, majestically sprawling
n. was only about five blocks down the fr our house, so I was commissioned to Au there on the first few mornings and at got to know everybody.
I c e out of the house on the first day of Au e was standing on his front doorstep
g me. He was dressed in a dark-blue nc nickers, high black shoes and stock-l s wearing what everyone wore that -br vn corduroy knickers and knee-b ts with a penknife jammed in the top
m. ugie pointed to my boots.
it nting you're going?"
eci d to dislike him. "These are lumber-oc I'm going CONTINUED ON PAGE 201

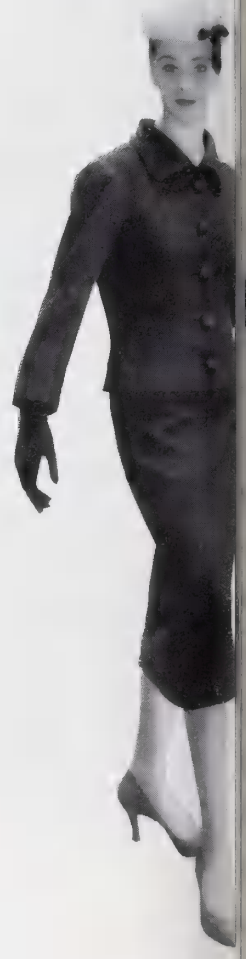
...but a man likes to learn for himself

PARIS



The Paris story in silhouettes—bustlines smoother, waistlines rising and falling, jackets much longer or much shorter. Black the great fashion, black tweed the great fabric, bows everywhere in Paris.

By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

Fashion has an easy, almost loose sort of look. There are few acutely fitted lines. The newest reefer in Paris (right) is black wool by Christian Dior, curved and shaped at the waistline, flaring like a bell. The hat is a saucer of velvet and ribbon. The most important suit in Paris (extreme right) has simplicity and elegance, is slim, easy, the waistline barely indicated. In the blackest wool with braided buttons, by Balenciaga. Adorable hat—pink satin pillbox, banded with ermine, jet bow and tassel.

Paris furs have a new and differ t ap- peal—disarming little jackets, jac t lin- ings, berets, bags, ermine col s on many, many black suits. Fur fas on is black and white—broadtail, ermi Per sian lamb, ocelot. Top of page: Giv waist-length ocelot jacket edge with ermine, over a slim black wool. left: Jacques Fath's short coc n on shiny broadtail with an ermine llar

PHOTOGRAPHED IN PARIS BY RICHARD DORME

Longer jacket silhouette at the left—black-and-brown tweed tailleur by Christian Dior, bag in amber-brown suède. Right: Broadtail beret, back-of-the-head silhouette, the bow important to the profile. Worn with broadtail jacket by Givenchy. Extreme right: Short-jacket silhouette in a ribbon-trimmed wool suit by Givenchy, a bow at the hipline.

n th center of this page are two ers ns of the bell-of-Paris sil- ouc e. At the right: Jacques Fath ut s an almost-straight jacket ver dress with a flare. The fabric s ky gray tweed, in itself an mp ant fashion. The dress could e v rn almost any time of day, ith ur or black satin tucked into s d p v neckline or with marble- ize earls as photographed. The ack has a Persian-lamb collar, oc ts in a new position. The flat ou is fur, the hat black velvet. Gra nd black, a theme to follow.

Left: Christian Dior does the bell in pleats, puts a modified crinoline under it. The dress is black wool with a draped neckline knotted like a cravat. Like so many Paris fashions this year, this dress with its long sleeves and its afternoon look can be worn for many occasions. Below: Big rhinestone buckles are the mark of Jacques Fath this year. He uses them to fasten the wide cuffs of a black tweed suit.

Prettiest necklines in years—high and softly furred or deep and bare. The suit at the far left has the ermine collar which is like a signature of Paris this season, a softly bloused short jacket, enormous jeweled cuff links. By Jacques Fath. The dinner dress with the v-shaped bodice (left) is taffeta and moire. by Givenchy.

Fashions for football Saturdays: Vera Maxwell's tweed topcoat, a printed wool-challis dress-and-coat costume, v-neck jersey by Lotte. Men wear worsted suit, tweed jacket with gabardine slacks.

FASHION

This is the way young America dresses today and jersey for the girls and just-marrieds, short that don't cost much, velveteen skirts, tapered slacks, gobs of jewelry. Men borrow separates ideas—tweed jack covert slacks, black corduroy with gray flannel. Black-and-brown mol worsted is the newest American tweed. Graphite grays, charcoal brov row belts, solid-color ties are the fashion for men. By WILHELA

Fashion Edito

Her afternoon casual is a fall-weight Peruvian checked cotton. his is the popular (and popular-priced) corduroy jacket. light gray flannel slacks.

OR TWO

WILHELA CUSHMAN

House hunting: she wears a red knitted dress by Gertrude Goldworm, and short sheared-fur coat in sandalwood beige; he wears a shadow-checked topcoat over a tweed suit, with moccasin-type shoes.

Fashion of printed velveteen slacks and of pink-and-red combination, by Greta Plattry. The young man wears a black-and-brown mohair-and-wool jacket with black gabardine slacks.

ft: weed and leather—jacket-and-skirt costume with a cashmere ea by Samuel Roberts. Accessories are beige leather bag, gloves
l oes. The man's gray tweed, an office-to-country fashion.

This parchment jersey dress goes back and forth, town or country, designed by Vincent Draddy. His charcoal-brown jacket is right with pin-checked brown slacks, and a sweater for the country.

There's something abo

"I HAVEN'T got many clothes," Mrs. William W. Mein, Jr., o Woodside, California, tells us—"too many other ways to us time as well as money." She "spends" on one good suit "to las at least three years" or an evening dress, loves "not to spend" on less important clothes, shops for the $19.95's in jersey and cottons. She wears and surrounds herself with her fa vorite colors—pink, red, gray, yellow greens. She loves to enter tain—"twenty-four is as easy as twelve"—always changes fo dinner, often with "just the family" wears Chinese pajamas, ful skirts and blouses.

Living attractively and happily comes natural to this tall dark-haired, fifth-generation Californian. She has three son and a daughter, gardens, swims and rides practically the yea round, is active in the Woodside Community Foundation, presi dent of the Woodside Gard n Club.

By WILHELA CUSHMA
Fashion Editor of the Journ

Important black silk crepe day a noon dress with jersey midriff w a short broadtail jacket, pearl n

Charcoal-gray knitted-wool sheath, accompanied by year-round red wool coat. Calfskin pumps and big overarm bag.

ner

JOHN ENGSTEAD

Tweeds for fall, winter and spring, for country life and San Francisco. This suit has matching short topcoat lined with moleskin.

Mrs. Mein likes the fashion of long evening dresses. This is green-and-gold chiffon she wears at home or to the theater.

Dramatic red wool skirt—Mrs. Mein loves it with silk shirt for country afternoons. With her, 11-year-old Nicky (Robert Nichol Mein). Other sons are Billie, 18 (William W. III), Thomas Tucker, 16. Tina (Sara Ernestine) is 5½-year-old daughter.

Pink satin and blue wool, beautifully comfortable robe for leisure hours.

Mrs. Mein gardens all year, usually wears blue jeans, cotton shirts and wide calfskin belt.

One wonderful pat interpreted by

six JOURNAL re

WE are proud to present these Jo readers as fashion models, each a version of one wonderful pattern. is a design flattering to figures rang from 10 to 16, as appropriate to the plus as to the young marrieds. As y see, it is the choice of fabric and the personal interpretation of the design make the dress so becoming.

By NORA
Pattern Editor of

MRS. HUGH LOWE, JR., of Santa Ar California, has twinkling brown that match her pretty short hair. This Nancy's favorite skirts—the quilted India print (January JOURNAL) and th ruffles and roses (April). Her quilted early-American print has an individua in the black felt, braid-trimmed colla and cuffs. Nancy plans to make matc dresses for her daughters, five and eig

LOVELY Mrs. Charles Plummer lives Charleston, West Virginia. Mothe two small children, she is an enthusia sewer and very creative, has been kno make a dress from a pair of drapes. H beige satin dress will be her basic "goin costume this winter. Helen's persona was the addition of a matching pleat chiffon overskirt, lots of colorful bea

BEADS BY MIRIAM HASKELL

JEANNETTE RICE lives in Somerville, Massachusetts, and works for one of the major air lines in Boston. She has a tall, willowy figure and her height and the width of her shoulders require a Size 16 pattern, but she makes obvious waistline alterations. She originally wrote to us to find out where to buy several of the fabrics and trimmings she saw on our pages. Her lightweight mauve tweed dress has deep purple velvet on top collar and cuffs. Purple felt Breton.

MUFFS BY ERNA MAYS

ATTRACTIVE Mrs. Vernon Freitas, of Red Bluff, California, is the charming mother of four children as well as a busy clubwoman. Her job as president of the Junior Membership of the California Federation of Women's Clubs keeps her on the go from September to May. Their present project, legislation to curb comic books. When does she sew? When the children are tucked in bed. Her gray-and-white woven cotton in a damask design is perfect for club meetings, is accented by a brilliant satin bow, a matching velveteen hat.

TOM PALUMBO

MRS. PAUL KINGSBURY's Size 10 figure is the envy of many in Cedar Grove, New Jersey. She sews very professionally and makes all her own clothes and most of her two daughters', although her ten-year-old is starting to do some of her own. She loves bright clear colors and her red nylon-and-acetate jersey has a doeskin finish. The soft fullness in the front (she has used gathers instead of inverted pleats) gives the easy swing for walking and driving that fits our life today.

ALTHOUGH Mrs. C. L. Brown is the grandmother of three, her interest in fashion is keen. She wears her lovely blond hair parted in the center, a chignon in back. We agree with her theory that older women should wear color for both becomingness and morale purposes. Her hobby is gardening, and her rose garden, twenty miles outside New York City, boasts four hundred bushes. Her blue silk dress is topped by a matching cashmere cardigan trimmed with the dress fabric.

All dresses shown on these pages are Vogue Design No. 8437, 12 to 20.

Other Views, Sizes and Prices on page 202

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. Some prices slightly higher in Canada. (*Conn. residents please add sales tax.) These patterns will be sent third-class mail. If you desire shipment first-class mail, please include 5c additional for each pattern ordered.

There was silence except for the duke's harsh he sighed, "Were his kisses sweet as mine, Katrine?"

Katherine

By ANYA SETON

IT snowed in Leicester on Christmas Day of the year 1380, and to the hundreds of guests at the castle the white drifts were good omen for young Henry of Bolingbroke's wedding to little Mary de Bohun. This joint celebration of Christmas and a wedding had turned Leicester to feverish pitch. Each night mummers came to the castle. The halls and churches were bowers of holly, bay and evergreen. The kitchens overflowed with mince pasties, lamprey stews and plum porridge. A stream of varlets could not keep filled the wassail bowls.

On the night of the wedding there was a riotous banquet in the castle hall. Katherine's sides ached from laughing at the Lord of Misrule, who was dressed in a fool's costume and wore a tinsel crown on his head to show that he must be obeyed. The Lord of Misrule had been chosen by lot, and happened to be Robin Beyville.

Katherine sat beside the duke, but not in their usual seats of honor, for those were given to the bride and groom—and Richard.

The king and many of his meinie had come to Leicester for his cousin's wedding, though not his mother. The Princess Joan sent polite messages to Katherine occasionally, but they had not met since the coronation. The duke had told her of the princess' request that he hide Katherine away in one of the northern castles, and of his indignant repudiation of the idea.

Far from hiding Katherine during these three and a half years, he had taken her with him on all his journeys throughout England.

It had been a year of weddings and matchmaking. The duke had married off two of his children in ways most advantageous to their prosperity, if not their happiness. However, nobody expected happiness from marriage, and least of all the duke, though he had achieved it once. He had procured for Henry another great English heiress, such as Blanche had been, but the marriage of these two children promised no such felicity. Henry was thirteen and his bride twelve. In her glittering finery, one could see the child trembling, but she would return to her mother's care tomorrow. The duke had no intention of prematurely taxing the breeding powers that would eventually produce the next Lancastrian heir.

The Chaucers had been invited to the festivities.

"She's an ill-tempered vixen," asserted Philippa suddenly. "She's scowling at me."

"Who?" asked Geoffrey, looking around.

Philippa raised her spoon and pointed at the hawk-nosed Countess of Buckingham. "Her. Bride's sister."

Geoffrey said, "Nonsense! 'Tis simply that she dislikes this wedding, scowls at everyone."

"She glares at me," retorted Philippa, "because she dares not to be rude to Katherine. . . . Oh, I heard her in the garderobe, squawking to her ladies that I'd no right to be seated above the salt. She called me a pantry wench married to nought but a scribbling wool counter."

Geoffrey recrossed his legs and considered with amusement the Lady Eleanor's contempt. Scribbling wool counter no doubt he was, but a much traveled one on the king's secret service. Peace negotiations,

CONTINUED ON PAGE 88

Copyright, 1954, by Anya Seton Chase

ILLUSTRATED BY PRUETT CARTER

TODAY'S DECORATIONS KEYED

TO AN OLD COLOR FAVORITE

Staffordshire Blue

RAPH BY HAROLD FOWLER. STAFFORDSHIRE FROM THE COLLECTION OF GEORGE S. MC KEARIN

A small but beautiful collection of old Staffordshire, suitably displayed, sets both the theme and the scheme for today's informal, decorated living room.

ETTA MURDOCK
Decoration Editor of the Journal

OLLECTION of interesting old china, pewter or ilver is always an excellent means for setting the and personality of a room. Because so much rdshire came to America a century or more ago, iderable amount of it still survives, as treasured in- al pieces or whole collections. Even a Staffordshire , a platter and a cream jug are enough to give your a Staffordshire theme. Display your pieces im- ntly in a cabinet or informally on your bookshelves, g to your collection as you make new finds.

ffordshire collecting, except for rare pieces, is not xpensive for the average income. This was the day dinnerware of early America and even in rural unities it was obtainable in exchange for farm ce. Big milk and cider jugs were abundant, platters and tureens, of course, family-size teapots in exquisite shapes, and commemorative plates, printed with historic scenes, people and places. These are the pieces you are likely to find anywhere in America, for pioneer women took their treasures west in their covered wagons.

For the more sophisticated taste, there were figurines and candlesticks more delicately molded and decorated than the dinnerware, but also not so easily found today, and more expensive. In case you are wondering, not all Staffordshire was blue. The name is applied to a whole group of potteries which were located in Staffordshire, and colors varied according to taste. But blue was the favorite, and so there is more of it around today. The blue itself varies in shade, but the general family is a cornflower or flax blue, dark and rich or pale and delicate.

In decorating a room with a period motif such as the blue Staffordshire, part of the charm lies in using furniture styles compatible with the period. All the pieces in our Staffordshire room borrow their lines from original eighteenth-century styles; even our modern innovation, the coffee table, shows its relationship to eighteenth-century Chinese Chippendale. The accessories, too, are today's version of fine old pieces—lamps inspired by mantel vases and urns, boxes brought back by the Continental traveler. Be sure to choose a fabric design that is really pretty and reflects the "spirit" of your room as well as being matched to your color scheme. The sprightly gaiety of our printed fabric suggests country meadows in midsummer with blue chicory and yellow daisies among tall grasses and richly patterned foliage.

There's a Man in the House

by Harlan Miller

At a recent air-cooled party in our town, one well-bred fortyish husband punched another in the kisser. This hasn't happened in our crowd since sultry nights fifteen years ago, and made us all feel younger, if a mite embarrassed.

Why do I smile such a satanic smile at 5 A.M. when I hear the baby at its gramps' next door yell for its bottle? Do I remember the parents' romantic 2 A.M. good nights at the front door a short year ago?

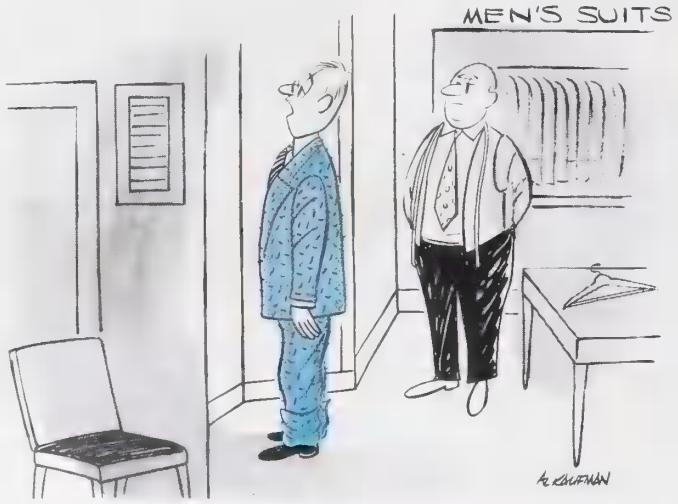
Our luncheon table's least interruptible spokesman is positive Ike will keep us out of war. "Why," he exclaims, "Ike won't even skirmish when a senator shoots paper wads at him!"

"It's taken my wife fourteen years," muses Peter Comfort, inflating his son's football, "to learn how to cook lentil soup and bake hard biscuit like my mother's. It dawns on me why she dragged her feet: she may not like 'em as much as I do!"

I had to pay Junior $60 in bonuses for good grades in his third year at college. "I learned to study at Exeter," he tells me modestly. "With only ten or twelve in each class I could think of no way to bluff my instructors."

The man and woman next door are renting a new painting each month or two, from our town's art center, at $2 or $3 a month. This gives 'em something they've almost got to agree on every month or so.

One of my beauteous wife's faithful admirers brought us a big fish from Canada, wrapped in sprigs of fragrant juniper. "But I'd better warn you," he said, "that the juniper now smells more like fish than the fish does like juniper."



How can you repay a hostess when she sits you down between the most amusing brunette and the handsomest redhead in town? But man is insatiable: he cranes his neck for a peek at his hostess, our state's most decorative blonde.

At last the tweed jacket I had tailored in Dublin has arrived, and it's a lulu: the Irish version of Brooks Brothers. . . . It's long and shaggy and makes me feel like a Killarney squire coaching the diggers in a peat bog.

"They can't do that to me!" exclaimed the thirty-nine-year-old grandmother in the glass house around the corner, when scientists announced that babies needn't be burped. "How can I, without burping the baby, exercise my rights as a grandmother?"

I've stumbled on a fascinating new hobby: the collection of color slides of our friends, the three-dimensional pictures. How glamorous they look, poised in beauty, almost fit to eat! We go out and snap 'em on Sunday mornings.

"This is the school year," vows Betty Comfort, sewing name tapes on three piles of clothes, "when I'm inviting all our kids' teachers to dinner between now and Thanksgiving. And on nights when we eat meat too!"

"I believe in using my own judgment, and in my judgment I should get my wife's opinion."

"With one third of your customers bulging at the waist," I told our sporting grocer at a picnic, "I marvel you don't demand nonfattening hash, crackers and ice cream from your wholesalers and at decent prices."

"Shucks," he grinned, "diet is still a racket."

"Our kids come home from school," says my neighbor who's afraid of his children, "acting as if they'd been taught the world began at nine o'clock this morning. No wonder they assume everything their parents say is obsolete."

Our town is no metropolis, but the pressure gets us down unless we fulfill our vow to drive three times a week into the country, where there aren't more'n four houses in a square mile.

My b.w. says I'm not wearing my old college raccoon coat to the state-university home-coming football game this year. I say I am. . . . We'll probably compromise; I'll carry it and she'll use it as a lap robe.

Sons of the pioneers in our staid town rebelled openly against the hot weather just ended. So many wore walking shorts that at times our post office and liquor store reminded the tourists of a British colony.

We didn't quite eat 100 meals outdoors in our garden this summer. . . . But I've learned to take it calmly when a bee goes after the marmalade on the toast I'm nibbling.

I was bragging to a pretty girl on the plane that this was my eleventh air crossing of the Atlantic when the loud-speaker announced that this was the air line's 47,955th crossing and the pilot's 431st. I changed the subject.

Several of our neighborhood youngsters have started seashell collections from the shells of faraway beaches we've mingled with the gravel in our garden. But they've left us quite a few too.

One of our town's shrewd bachelors told me at the drugstore that to marry a registered trained nurse nowadays is a better financial gamble than to marry a rich man's daughter.

I thought the Normandy landing operations were the most complex maneuver I'd ever participated in, until I tried to assemble the family for a snapshot to put on our 1954 Christmas cards.

. . . When our youngest says, "You aren't too mad at me to kiss me good night,"

. . . Or our daughter changes quickly from her blue jeans to a yellow dress to please me,

. . . And Junior suddenly changes his mind and invites us to clutter up his weekend at his air base,

. . . Or the Dream Woman plants a row of sunflowers and a row of hollyhocks just to humor my corny whim,

Then I grin inside and tell myself that under their influence maybe I'll amount to something when I grow up.

Can this marriage be saved?

DON ORNITZ

SHE: "I have repeatedly tried to show Hobey how his mother is taking possession of our baby and our lives."

HE: "In my opinion, Myra's attitude isn't sensible. My mother has been kindness itself to us."

Much of the difficulty in any marriage could be avoided if husband and wife could talk things over fully, freely and without heat. When they cannot do so, an experienced intermediary and interpreter—a marriage counselor—enables them to understand each other and get on a common ground of agreement. The American Institute of Family Relations has helped more than 20,000 husbands and wives at its headquarters in Los Angeles and has put thousands of others in touch with qualified counselors in their own home communities. In about 80 per cent of the cases brought to them, the Institute's counselors have aided husband and wife to solve their problems and avoid a broken home, even though their conflict was acute and of many years' duration. The counselor in this case was Laurence Smardan. PAUL POPENOE, Sc.D., Director.

Dr. Paul Popenoe

MYRA TELLS HER SIDE:

"HOBEY isn't interested in hearing my ideas or opinions," said twenty-four-year-old Myra, whose long blond hair fitted her well-shaped head like a shining helmet, "and he won't discuss his opinions and ideas with me. Whenever I begin a serious conversation with Hobey—if I start to talk about my difficulties with his mother, say—Hobey's face closes and our conversation ends right there. Again and again in our three years of marriage—Hobey has been secretive and evasive from the first—he has slipped away from discussing and facing any uncomfortable facts with me. Actually I know so little of my husband's thoughts, his real thoughts, I often feel I'm married to a stranger.

"I hoped our baby would bring us closer together," the young wife said. "Eileen is seven months and nine days old, and her father and I are farther apart than ever. Hobey and I are like two ships drifting in opposite directions, with the baby in a little boat being pulled this way and that between us. Hobey presented Eileen with a tennis racket on the day she was born; he wants her to be a big-time girl athlete. I have different ideas, but we don't talk about that either. Everything about the way we live seems wrong to me. Empty and meaningless.

"Hobey and I haven't gone dancing since Eileen was born. We've been to the movies only twice. If our home life was what it should be—if I could believe Hobey and I were thinking and working in partnership—I wouldn't care. I'm not mad keen for gaiety and unnecessary spending. But to sit evening after evening in silence, staring at the four walls and at Hobey and wondering what kind of a man I have for a husband, adds up to a dreary, demoralizing existence.

"Perhaps if he and the baby and I did more things together," Myra said to the counselor, "I could get a grip on myself. Certainly I wouldn't have so much time to brood. I didn't use to be introspective and self-pitying and faultfinding the way I am now. I'm alone a great deal with the baby. Hobey's new job keeps him away from the apartment for hours on end. He is an assistant football coach in a huge city high school, and I realize he can't help being gone so much. He's the youngest member of the faculty, has held the job only a few months, and is still feeling his way. But I do think Hobey should offer Eileen and me more love and companionship and—and moral support when he is at home.

"We moved to this new neighborhood when the baby was born and I gave up my own job—I was a teacher myself until then—and we have no friends in the community. We see practically nobody except my parents and Hobey's parents—we see too much of them, particularly Hobey's mother—and I'm so bored, dissatisfied and unhappy I can hardly stand it.

"I don't feel my marriage belongs to me," Myra burst out. "Crazy as it may sound, I don't feel that my husband and my baby are really mine. My mother-in-law is the reason. I have repeatedly tried to show Hobey how his mother is taking possession of our baby and our lives. Invariably he speaks of my parents, who have never once interfered with us, or else he reminds me I am fond of his mother. I am fond of Hobey's mother—in a way. I grow less and less fond of her all the time. Often I almost hate her.

"My mother-in-law," Myra went on in a dull flat voice, "is too smart for me. She compliments my cooking, lends me her pet recipes, praises my hair and my clothes sense, tells Hobey I'm amusing and intelligent, says my untidy housekeeping is 'cute.' In her own peculiar fashion, I think she likes me. Nevertheless, she is doing her darnedest to get between my husband and my baby and me. She is trying to take over my job, the only job I've got. I'm dead serious. It's a pity you can't meet my mother-in-law, though maybe she would fool you as she fooled me until Eileen was born.

"My mother-in-law is a dynamo of energy, and an expert at managing her own affairs and everybody else's affairs. She brought up Hobey and his brother Ben at the same time she worked a twelve-hour shift as a nurse. Her husband wasn't financially successful and she was too proud to accept help from her family, who had money. Hobey and Ben consider their mother the miracle of the ages, and they think nothing of their father, who is an extremely nice person. He is the low man on the totem pole in the setup, just as I'm low woman. It has always been the three of them in that family—mamma and Hobey and Ben. When Hobey and his brother were growing up, their mother called her sons and herself the Three Musketeers. To this day she trots out the old nickname. Hobey has been married to me three years and Ben is now engaged. Ben's fiancée doesn't appreciate the Three Musketeers line of talk any better than I do.

"In my opinion, bringing up two sons to ignore their father and worship you isn't a very bright or a very kind way for a mother to act. However, I'm not CONTINUED ON PAGE 213

"I hoped our baby would bring us closer together. Eileen is now seven months and nine days old, and her father and I are farther apart than ever."

Ménu
Caviar Madrilène
Savory Toast
Roast Fresh Ham
Cranberry Relish
Green-Bean-and-Mushroom Casserole
Crusty Rolls
Red-Onion-and-Endive Salad
Avocado Dressing
Raspberry-Sherbet Ring
Coffee
(Planned for 8)

Fall Fling

WHEN the first frost comes, how often people feel a sadness and a nostalgia for the "good old summertime." But with me it is just the other way. Maybe it is because I was brought up in a cold climate. I like winter, but of all the seasons—and it is hard to choose—I am partial to autumn. So let the first frost come. I am partial to snappy days out in the woods, and folks who tramp through autumn leaves and have to be stoked at the dinner table like an open fire. I am partial to the good old-fashioned, hearty, company dinner, one that's guaranteed to stick to the ribs—and here we go, as advertised. Let's have ourselves a fling.

The starting point. As you see, this is known under various guises and familiar names, but call it Caviar Madrilène and you won't be out of step.

Caviar Madrilène

Soften 1 envelope unflavored gelatin in ¼ cup canned consommé madrilène. Heat 1¾ cups madrilène and add gelatin; stir until dissolved. Chill until partly set. Fold in one 4-ounce jar red caviar (this is only salmon roe, or eggs, with a real Park Avenue name). Pour into 8 small individual molds; chill until firm. Unmold and serve with a spoonful of thick commercial sour cream, seasoned with a little grated onion. Serve with rolls of sliced smoked salmon, fingers of savory toast, ripe olives and sliced cucumbers.

The crux of the matter is a hot, well-intentioned, homely, family-sized and right-for-its-mission roasted fresh ham. That is, frankly, the ham part of a porker, only it stops short of being a ham because of the deceitfulness of man—and woman. However, it behaves as well as it knows how, and turns out a very respectable pièce de résistance thusly:

Roast Fresh Ham

Put a fresh ham, about 10 pounds, on the rack in a roasting pan. Bake in a moderately slow oven (325° F.). If you have a meat thermometer, insert it in the thickest part of the ham and bake until thermometer indicates an internal

CONTINUED ON PAGE 181

By ANN BATCHELDER

STUART-FOWLER

Line a Day

1 GOING AWAY

How can I leave my lilacs
That perfumed all my spring?
Now they are deep in their winter sleep
Like a bird with a folded wing.

How say farewell to my roses,
Each in its mossy bed?
They are only resting as bluebirds nesting.
They are waiting, they are not dead.

How shall I leave my garden,
With no word said?

A. B.

2 Something choice in the stuffed-celery class is achieved by stuffing the tender inside stalks with some of the savory pastes such as partridge, chicken, smoked turkey, et al.

3 Even if a bachelor did invent this salad, husbands will like it too. Cook 4 ounces shell macaroni in boiling, salted water. Rinse and cool. Combine with 1 can tuna, flaked, ¾ cup diced, tart apple, ½ avocado, diced, 1 small onion, chopped, and 1 tablespoon lemon juice. Mix with French dressing and chill.

4 A honey of a companion to steak at dinner: Grease a casserole and arrange in it alternate layers of peeled mushrooms and grated cheese. Add cream to moisten well. Cover with buttered crumbs. Bake until mushrooms are done, cheese melted and the whole brown.

5 First verse: A delicious soup is made by first mincing very fine enough mushrooms to make 2 cups. Put in a skillet 2 tablespoons butter or margarine. Melt. Add 2 tablespoons each minced onion and finely chopped green pepper, the mushrooms and ½ cup minced celery. Cook 5 minutes, stirring it once or twice.

6 Second verse: Now put the mushroom mix in a double boiler. Add 1½ quarts clear chicken broth, with a very little mace, sugar and pepper and salt to taste. Cook until the celery is tender. Add ⅓ cup finely rolled cracker crumbs and ⅔ cup hot cream. Serve very hot with a broiled mushroom in each cup. A rosette of salted whipped cream makes for a garnish.

7 Another bright and choice addition to your collection is large sardines sans skin and bones, dipped in chutney. If the chutney is mislaid, try chopped preserved watermelon rind in sirup. Reposing on toast fingers, they appeal no end.

8 Are you a yoghurt fan? If so, try it this way. Add ½ cup peeled and seeded chopped cucumber—only the firm part, please—to 1 cup yoghurt and season well with ¾ teaspoon curry powder, salt and pepper to taste, and maybe a little onion.

9 Let's skip to dessert for a change of pace. Canto I: Drain 1 No. 2½ can purple prune plums. Pit and put plums through sieve or food mill to make 1½ cups purée. Beat 1 egg until light and thick, adding ¼ cup sugar gradually while beating. Then add ¼ cup light corn sirup, ½ cup light cream, ½ cup milk, the plum purée, and 1 tablespoon lemon juice. More to follow:

10 Canto II: Tint with a little red food coloring. Pour into a refrigerator tray. Set indicator to coldest position. When frozen ½″ around the edge but still soft in the center, scrape into chilled bowl and beat like mad until fluffy. Return to tray. Freeze until firm.

11 Perhaps I've told you this before, but it's worth repeating. Eggplant, peeled, cut into ½″-thick slices, salted, and piled up with a weight on top to extract the brown juice. Rinse and dry. Marinate in French dressing 15 minutes, then broil and serve hot with meats.

12 Witches will soon be riding and goblins knocking at your door for treats, well equipped with paper bags to carry away the loot. Set them up with doughnuts, unsugared to spare the rug, and tiny boxes of raisins.

MYRTON S. REED—FPG

Old covered—or should it be semicovered?—bridge, Sturbridge, Mass.

13 Looking-Up-and-On Division: With the after-dinner coffee serve an array of tiny hot savories, made with shapes of buttered toast, spread with Russian dressing, covered with minced chicken mixed with chopped salted almonds and a little more Russian dressing. Run under the broiler a minute or two.

14 I got for myself a present when I found that everyone whose hearing was otherwise acute was singularly deaf to a year or more of hints. It's none other than an electric corn popper. Now I am as popular at parties as a young man at a debutante blowout.

15 Little artichoke hearts in oil are as becoming to a green salad as her first party dress is to a teen-ager.

16 Cold curtain raisers slip back in the wings when the wind blows chill. A tureen of spiced-onion-and-celery soup is what you want. Cook together in a covered saucepan until very soft 1½ cups finely chopped onion, ¼ cup finely diced celery, 1 cup water, ½ teaspoon salt. Then force the vegetables through a coarse sieve.

By Ann Batchelder

17 Melt 3 tablespoons butter or margarine in a sau pan. Blend in 3 tablespoons flour. Gradually stir in cups milk; cook over medium heat until slightly thi ened. Add 1 teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon sugar, ¼ t spoon ground nutmeg, vegetable purée and pepper a garlic powder to taste. Heat and serve.

18 A lobster-and-macaroni-and-cheese creation fr a famous chef, and here's the how of it. Make macaroni and cheese as usual. Season well and h plenty of cream sauce. Add a generous amount of l ster meat—frozen or canned is fine too—cut fine. La more cheese through the dish before covering w buttered crumbs and baking to the bubbling point.

19 Yams are up from the South—to cook and gl with butter and apple jelly thinned with a little wat

20 A supper dish that will light the gourmet is an egg-a cheese dream. Beat 6 eggs, seas with salt, paprika and a little t ragon. Add 2 tablespoons cre and 1 cup grated Swiss chee 21 Melt ¼ cup butter in skillet. Cook egg mixture slow lifting it from the sides of the p with a spoon, until you have smooth creamy windup. Ser on hot buttered toast.

22 Does the idea of a toma and-cucumber salad fail to p pitate? Well, lend me your e Take some smallish tomat and peel. Slice them but n quite through to the stem en Pick out a fine cucumber (do peel it), slice thin. In each slit the tomato, put a slice of c cumber. Read on.

23 Dress with Russian dressi Top each tomato with a cap cream treated with minced fre or dried powdered basil.

24 Glory be! The oyster seas is here; try a new oyster fry.

25 Select large oysters, sprink them with lemon juice, dip melted butter or margarine, th in beaten egg, cover with fi cracker crumbs, well seasone and broil on an oiled broiler p for 2 minutes on each sid

26 Parties there will be after football games—you m be sure. When a cold collation is called for, make jellied cranberry, apple and celery salad in your pre tiest mold, and repose it on a bed of greens. Then —

27 Cut thick slices of ham and turkey into finge Dip one end of each finger of ham and turkey first mayonnaise, then in finely chopped walnuts. Alterna the strips neatly around the mold.

28 Three parts to this, and worth it. It's a Hone Cheese Pie. Part I: Make a 9″ graham-cracker cru Mix 1 envelope unflavored gelatin, ⅓ cup honey and teaspoon salt in top of double boiler. Beat together egg yolk and ½ cup milk; add to gelatin mixture.

29 Part II: Cook over boiling water, stirring co stantly, until gelatin dissolves—about 10 minutes. R move from heat; add ½ teaspoon lemon rind. Coo Stir in 2 eight-ounce cartons cottage cheese, sieved, 1 teaspoons lemon juice and ½ teaspoon vanilla. Chi Stir now and then until it begins to thicken up.

30 Part III: Make a meringue with 1 egg white and tablespoons sugar. Fold into gelatin with ½ cup heav cream, whipped. Turn into crust. Chill. Serve with frui

31 Well, the summer is over, the harvest moon r flected in the silver lake. And Jupiter, king of the sk reigns as ever, seen or unseen, in the sky. Your ANNI

hortcakes and Pies by Campbell's

SIMPLY WONDERFUL—WONDERFULLY SIMPLE . . . ANY TIME

By Anne Marshall
tor Home Economics, Campbell Soup Company.

e 'l's for a quick'n easy dinner, sur- family with a Campbell's special. n ne refrigerator for leftover meat, hicken (or take a handy can of meat kitchen shelf). Then add a tender ge ble and a flavor-packed can of 's oup. Top with light, flaky pie crust king-powder biscuits. In no time rv g your family a piping-hot, come- al.

re our ways I use Campbell's Soup in ca s and pies. I know you'll think of ri ons, but you'll discover one thing's ne ame—when you add Campbell's, go dness!

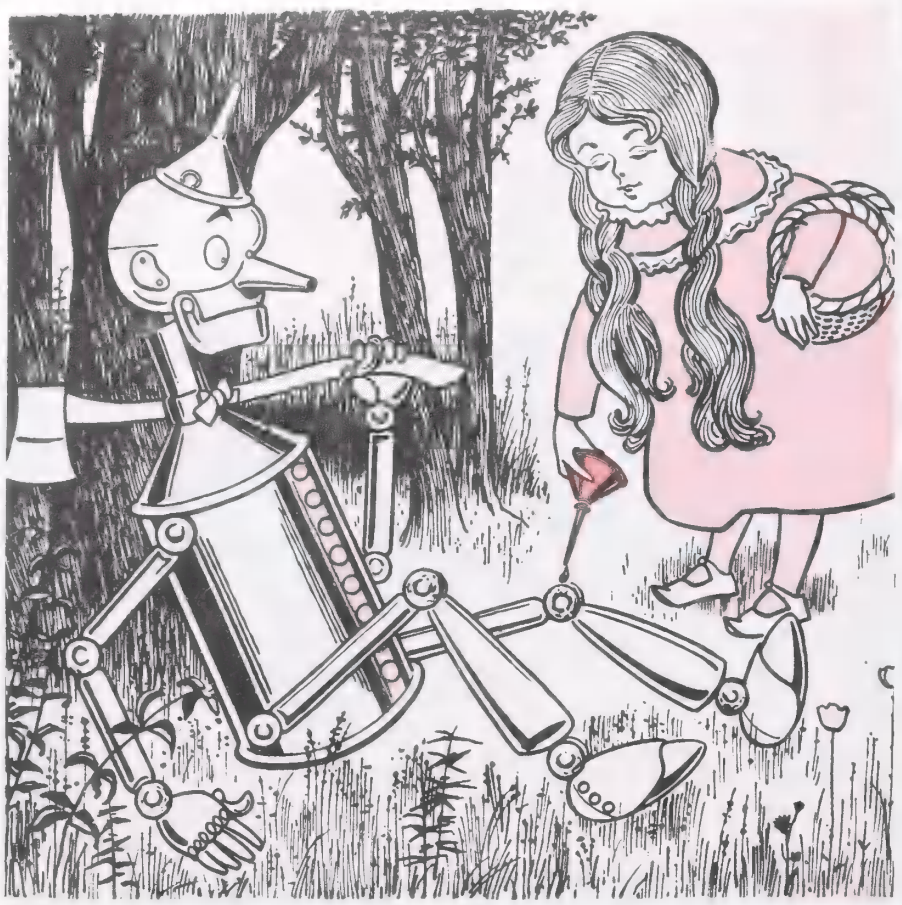
CHICKEN PIE

Combine 1 can Campbell's Cream of Chicken Soup with ¼ cup milk, 1 cup diced cooked chicken, 1 large potato (cooked and cubed), 1 cup cooked peas and carrots and a dash of black pepper. Put in 1½-quart casserole and top with pastry crust (with or without a picture window!). Bake in very hot oven (450°F.) 25 minutes. 4 servings.

TUNA 'N WAFFLES

Blend 1 can Campbell's Cream of Mushroom Soup with ⅓ cup milk, 1 cup drained, flaked tuna (7-oz. can) and ¼ cup sliced stuffed olives. Heat thoroughly. Pour over 4 crisp waffles. Presto, a quick'n easy dinner for 4.

SALMON SHORTCAKE



Blend 1 can Campbell's Cream of Celery Soup with ⅓ cup milk, 1 cup drained, flaked salmon (8-oz. can), 1 cup drained cooked peas and a dash of powdered dill. Heat thoroughly. Serve on hot biscuits. 4 servings.

HAM 'N EGGS 'N CORN BREAD

Combine 1 can Campbell's Cream of Asparagus Soup with ¼ cup milk, 1 cup diced cooked ham (or canned luncheon meat) and 2 hard-cooked, sliced eggs. Heat thoroughly. Serve on hot corn bread. 4 servings.

Here's a good "lesson" about ARTHRITIS...

NEARLY everyone knows the story of "The Wizard of Oz"* . . . and how Dorothy, the little girl in this tale, met a man made of tin.

As the story goes, the Tin Woodman, after a year of exposure in the forest, could not move because his joints were badly rusted. So, Dorothy oiled his joints. Thereafter, the Tin Woodman was able to journey with Dorothy to see the wonderful Wizard of Oz.

In a way, this fable points up some important facts about the joints of the human body and the disease that often affects them—arthritis. Like the joints of the tin man, the body's joints can also "rust" or become stiff over the years. However, with proper medical care, they can usually be kept flexible and workable in most cases despite arthritis.

The most common type of arthritis . . . called osteoarthritis . . . occurs in middle age and later life, probably because of wear and tear on the joints. While it usually does not lead to severe crippling, it may cause varying degrees of disability. Consequently, recurring aches and pains in and about any joint . . . as well as tenderness and stiffness of the joints . . . should never be dismissed as "a touch of rheumatism."

The second most common form of arthritis occurs most often in younger people. Known as rheumatoid arthritis, it is a serious disorder that may involve all the joints. It can also be controlled in many cases when proper treatment is started early.

There is as yet no cure for either osteo or rheumatoid arthritis. Doctors, however, have many effective treatments for relieving pain and restoring joint function. Greater gains against arthritis will undoubtedly be made as new methods of therapy are perfected.

Meantime, there are some safeguards that all of us can take to lessen the chances of developing arthritis or to control arthritis if it does occur. Among such precautionary measures are—keeping your weight down; maintaining good posture; getting enough rest and sleep and having periodic health and dental examinations.

To control arthritis, see your doctor promptly whenever persistent symptoms occur in any joint, or when you feel "run down." Give him your complete cooperation and always rely on the individualized treatment he prescribes. So-called "sure cures" generally provide only temporary relief.

Today, when proper treatment is continued persistently, at least 70 percent of all arthritis patients are spared serious disability and returned to reasonably good health.

Copr. Bobbs-Merrill Co., Inc., Publishers*

COPYRIGHT 1954—METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

1 MADISON AVE., NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.
1 Madison Ave., N. Y. 10, N. Y.

Please mail me a copy of your booklet, 1054-J.

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

KATHERINE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 79

royal-marriage negotiations, in France, in Flanders, in Italy, he had acquitted himself well in these.

Geoffrey's eyes veered to the Lady Elizabeth, the duke's younger daughter. Last summer when Elizabeth was sixteen she had become the Countess of Pembroke by means of an eight-year-old husband, John Hastings, who had promptly suffered an attack of measles and returned to his mama for nursing.

There was grave doubt that Elizabeth would wait until the years should bring virility to her little husband. At this moment her cheeks were flushed, her dark eyes bright as she lolled against John Holland and teased him with pouting lips. The king's half brother was no Joseph, and his repute for wenching was great.

There remained the Lady Philippa. Decorous as always, she sat smiling at some quip made by her Uncle Edmund. Scarcely a prince in Europe but had been mentioned for her husband, but none found to be suitable. Philippa at twenty-one was yet unwed.

Geoffrey started as a wand of jingling bells thumped him on the shoulder. The Lord of Misrule stood grinning down at him beneath a red-spotted half mask.

"Ho, Dan Chaucer!" shouted Robin. "'Tis crime to doze when all make merry! In punishment we decree that you give us a rhyme. Come tell of love, my master! Tell us of love!"

Geoffrey laughed and rose. He lifted his arm in solemn invocation, and declaimed:

"Since I from Love escaped am so fat
I think no more to be in prison lean Since I am free, I count him not a bean."

He sat down.

There was a startled roar of mirth and indignation. Robin waved his scepter. "By St. Venus, I command that he shall kiss his wife!"

Philippa bridled at the shouts that greeted this, but Geoffrey promptly rose again and kissed her heartily on the lips. "'Tis nought so great a penance," he cried.

If fifty million people say a foolish thing, it is still a foolish thing.
—ANATOLE FRANCE

Then Robin's usually level head forsook him. By all the rules of Christmas, no man could gainsay him, and he shouted exultantly, "Now shall each man kiss the lady of his heart!"

He whirled, and before she had the faintest conception of what he would do, Robin had grabbed Katherine around the waist, pressed his eager young mouth to hers.

Few people saw it, because Robin's command was being obeyed in a whirl of giggles and coquettish screams. Katherine was astounded.

"My poor Robin—you're mad," she whispered, pushing at his chest, as a voice spoke beside them.

"Here's a pretty little piece of Christmas mumming! 'Twould seem you play your parts well." The voice of stone, the eyes of murderous blue flint.

ROBIN's arms slackened. She released herself and cried wildly. "To be sure, my lord—why not? The King of Misrule must be obeyed. It seems he feels most sportive and has just told me he would kiss all the ladies. The Lady Isabella," cried Katherine, seizing the arm of Edmund's wife, and thrusting her at Robin. "Here's a king dies of love for you!"

Isabella giggled and preened herself. She clutched at the young squire's arm.

"My lord," said Katherine to John, moving quickly, "shall we not join the dancing?"

"Nay, my lady," said the duke, "I do not feel like dancing." He strode under the minstrels' gallery toward the guardroom.

Katherine ran after him. She cried desperately, "You *can*not be angry at a boy's tipsy Yuletide kiss. 'Tis unworthy of you."

He stopped by a torchlit recess and turned. "I marked well how little you resisted, no doubt because these kisses are not so unaccustomed."

Her own eyes blazed as hot knew that Robin's safety dep control. "I must believe that t slur gives proof of your love," bling. "If you have lived so lon cannot trust, then all our life i

John's fists fell slowly open.
welcome his kisses, why did y falderal and thrust Isabella at H

"I spoke for fear of you, my l would do ——"

"You think you need to guar

"Aye, your Grace," said Kat at him. "I thought you would s upon him—though your chiva breed mercy to such lowly folk and me."

There was silence in the pass the duke's harsh breath. At last sorry, Katrine." He grabbed bent and kissed her savagely. " sweet as mine, lovedy?"

She gave a sobbing laugh. "
you are my whole life—you kn

He caught her round the wais said, and pulled her toward th

"No," she cried, "we've be
You cannot so slight the king!

He laughed. "The king will well as any man."

ON the morning after the
and Katherine lay late in bed,
the castle inhabitants. The fol Town were already out skating the frozen Soar. John had be some time, and thinking. "Lov
"Robin Beyville must go. I'll my temperance, if I see him n eyes at you."

Katherine blinked. "Yes," sh fully, "it were better he leave he disgrace, my served you w

"Not in di shall go toda tish border—of Liddel. T cool his ard the Scots, wh
ing as usual.

John had
the violent brood that harasse
He could arrange truces with t no one else could. A new approa toward the seizure of Castile; th for enraging the ancient rival te

Two incredibly fortunate de England her chance to strike.
usurping Castilian, Trastamai leaving the throne to his degene
And now Charles the Fifth was successor, Charles, was but a Spain and France were both, tually leaderless.

"Aye," said John on a note c tation, "this time we'll succeed

Katherine had no need to a spoke. "Thank God, darling," ing, "that at least you don't soon."

He frowned. His brothers,
Thomas, were to be the vangu campaign. But he must remain while to strengthen domestic af with both Scottish and We Richard's council, the Princess own judgment had concurred though it irked him and he ha Edmund's diplomacy.

Katherine reached for the h would summon Hawise and a chamber.

The chamber valet came in a the curtains while another pok a blaze. A squire presented h silver tankard of ale. Anothe scarlet velvet dressing gown.

Welladay, thought Katherine stag hunt and tonight we'll dance
She smiled, for they danced so that even the most spiteful w admire.

CONTINUED ON PAG

In these 3-hour danger periods your skin "dies" a little

Every day for periods of 1 to 3 hours, your skin is "open" to trouble, dermatologists say. This is immediately after you wash your face. In washing away dirt, you also remove natural skin protectors. Your skin takes 1 to 3 hours to re-establish its defenses. Meanwhile, distressing problems can take hold:

Dryness . . ."shriveling" Stretched pores . . . roughened, grainy texture

d what skin specialists recommend r ent these serious skin problems . . .

After each washing— 'e-balance" your skin

e f the more obvious signs of skin b nce" show up as soon as you n shing your face—

Th stiff, drawn-tight feel of your face. Ro h flaking; often a splotchy look.

e e the immediate warnings of skin b nce." But in the 1 to 3 hours that r akes to re-protect your skin, much e sturbing problems often take hold. l es deepen. Inside moisture that s in looking young evaporates away. er kin "shrivels." Skin secretions er in pore-openings—cause enlarged s d blackheads.

) ading skin specialists advise you o ash your face? "Of course you can ur face—and as often as you like," s . "But after each washing, always al ce' your skin immediately . . ."

) times faster than Nature

s nd Pond's Cold Creaming right shing "re-balances" your skin in m ute—at least 60 times faster than a does. This quick-acting beauty u promptly restores skin elasticity. n ts dryness, flaking, parched shriv- eeps pore-openings cleared—keeps t ure fine and smooth. Always leave on a trace of Pond's Cold Cream for continuing skin "balance" beneath your make-up.

A deep clearing at bedtime

Besides this 7-second "re-balancing" after each washing, most skins need a thorough clearing at night. A deep Pond's Cold Creaming dislodges water-resistant dirt from the pores. Keeps your skin looking fresh, young, vibrant.

Start this complete beauty care with Pond's Cold Cream today. Within a week, it will be as natural as putting on your lipstick. And soon friends will be saying—"Your skin looks marvelous these days!"

Among society beauties who use Pond's

MRS. FRANCIS IRÉNÉE DU PONT II

THE DUCHESS OF LEEDS

THE LADY SARAH SPENCER-CHURCHILL RUSSELL

LA COMTESSE JEAN DE CARAMAN

MRS. GEORGE WHITNEY, JR.

LA COMTESSE DE LA FALAISE

w ld's most-famous beauty formula—never c l, never equaled. Get a large jar of Pond's C m today. Begin giving your skin this le eauty care: quick Pond's "re-balancings" g e day; a deep, stimulating clearing with s ch night. More women use and love Pond's C m than any other face cream ever made.

Mrs. Amory S. Carhart, Jr.

An ardent traveler, young Mrs. Carhart chose for her wedding trip a safari in Africa. She lives now in New York and Southampton. Her love of simplicity and perfection are shown not only in her home and dress—but also in her complexion care. "I find that the easiest skin care is the most effective," she says. "It's a quick smoothing with Pond's Cold Cream the moment after I wash my face. And I always give my skin a deep clearing with Pond's Cold Cream every night."

"WHEAT" by Lenox, lovely for a lifetime, so wise for now

Whether you are a Miss-About-To-Be-Married or due for a wedding anniversary, follow your heart when you choose china . . . choose the finest . . . lovely, lovely Lenox. The china chosen for our embassies . . . to represent American hospitality from London to Cairo; from Teheran to the Philippines! Your Lenox would be the same superb quality . . . for there's only one . . . truly the finest.

Lenox has lifetime quality, so from any standpoint "compromise china" isn't wise. Lenox is easy to acquire, by piece or place setting; most stores extend budget-payment service.

So start with lovely Lenox . . . bring beauty to your table . . . a lifetime.

"WHEAT" modern elegance in Lenox; Coupe Shape. 5 pc. setting (dinner, salad, butter plates; cup, saucer) $18.95. Do see the wide selection of distinguished Lenox in leading stores.

. . .

For pattern-price leaflets in color, the informative "Reference Book of Fine China", plus name of your dealer, send 25¢ to: Lenox Inc., Dept. K-65, Trenton, N. J.

Lenox China

WORLD'S FINEST...FOR LIFETIME ENJOYMENT

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 88

greeting, my lady," said Hawise, her broad face through the curtains. k gay as a goldfinch. My lord too." ired with her white-coifed head to- garderobe where the duke's voice heard singing. "'Twas not his mood in the hall!" She enveloped Kather- amber robe, encased the slim feet in red kid slippers.

lo you know that?" asked Katherine. nown through the castle that fool of bussed you last night, and the duke k as iron."

o women walked into Katherine's e. Katherine sat down on a stool and ommenced combing out the long air. "Robin leaves today for Cum- said Katherine.

I'm not surprised. Poor gawk. Yet e who'll be heart-stricken."

" asked Katherine idly.

nette, m'lady—the poor little wench utton he wore under her pillow."

d St. Mary!" cried Katherine. "That 's too young. Robin's shown her no otice, has he?"

Robin's had eyes for no woman but ne bit her lips and sighed. This, then, xplanation of Blanchette's increasing though Katherine had shown great in the matter of the betrothal to Sir stings. The duke had been annoyed about it. Blanchette could scarcely another such offer, and Sir Ralph ne man to be kept dangling.

'd be no match for her, even if he'd " said Katherine slowly. "She must er than a Suffolk yeoman. I don't at ails the girl."

was silent while n the elaborate of her mistress' offered thought- e seemed brighter visit to Kettle- an I've seen her 's years."

thorpe!" repeated Katherine with ne put down the mirror.

ago in November the duke had de- they should visit Kettlethorpe and atherine's property did. They took lanchette so that the Swynford chil- t see their birthplace, and they had Kettlethorpe for three very uncom- ays.

e had long ago appointed a resident o that the manor had been kept in was being efficiently run. But to Kettlethorpe had presented a pic- k desolateness. Then there had been ways. The plowman's twin lads had d in Sherwood Forest. Cob o' ne former spit boy, had made off, had been caught and brought back. rty had been confiscated. He had ded with an F on his left cheek, for ' and was in the village stocks.

ard reported that the unrest and n among the serfs was truly shock- ad walked Katherine to the village re a gibbet had been set up beside where Cob was punished daily from dusk. She recoiled as she saw the o rotting half-naked bodies dangled nooses. Later she had ordered that eed from the stocks, and that his estored to him, for she had been y all the sights on the village green. e had detested Kettlethorpe, and frenzy to get away again! But now bered that Blanchette had not. The sited all the haunts of her childhood, sked questions about her father.

women walked down the passage sery wing. John and Harry had long out to play in the snow, but her two were sitting on a bearskin rug by ne picked up the baby and put her le, then saw that Tamkin had opened w and was hanging halfway out.

she called, "what are you doing? window!"

The boy did not hear her, for there was a noise outside. The nursery windows looked down on Castle Street where a cluster of rustics and townsfolk had gathered, while a man in a long russet gown harangued them.

Katherine went over to her son. "'Tis only some Christmas mumming," she said, shutting the window.

"Nay," said Hawise, peering over the little boy's shoulder. "'Tis that Lollard preacher, John Ball, just come to Leicester."

"They keep singing something, mamma," said Tamkin, "'n' shaking their fists."

"THEY do," said Hawise grimly. "D'ye know what they sing?"

Katherine looked out again more curiously. She saw that the preacher waved his arms violently and sometimes pointed at the castle.

"What do they sing?" Katherine opened the window wide. The shouts gradually clarified themselves into words:

"When Adam delved and Eva span—
Who was then the gentleman?"

"What nonsense!" began Katherine. "What do they mean by that?"

"They mean trouble," said Hawise. "This last poll tax has really roiled 'em, and John Ball's doing his best to keep 'em roiled."

"Oh," said Katherine, shrugging, as she turned from the window. "The poll tax is hard on folk, no doubt, but wars must be paid for. Why must they show so much hatred?"

"'Tis easy to hate, lady dear, when you be poor and starving."

"But they're not! Nobody starves in Leicester, or any of the duke's domains. The kitchens ofttimes feed three hundred a day."

"'Tis not everyone wants to be beggars," said Hawise. "And there's mighty few who like to be unfree."

"The duke has freed many of his serfs," retorted Katherine. "The eve of Christmas he freed ten in honor of Lord Henry's marriage."

"'Tis true, but there be ten thousand more in bondage. Ye needna look so fierce—'tis not my thoughts I'm giving; 'tis what John Ball yammers out there."

"But what can they do?" said Katherine.

"Oh, they'll not do anything." Hawise shrugged. "'Tis nought but talk. England be a great place for windy grumbles. 'Twill all die down like stale ale—no doubt."

The Lancastrian household held their May revels at the Savoy. The servants trundled in barrowfuls of primroses and violets from the meadows and made garlands to hang in each of the hundred rooms. A Maypole had been set up in the river gardens. Each afternoon there was dancing. At night there were bonfires built along the riverbank, and the duke's barges, lit by torches, raced across the river while wagers were placed on each contestant.

No one could be melancholy during these days, and the duke shut his mind to impending problems. On May twelfth he was to set forth for Scotland. The King's Council had commissioned him to ride north and negotiate for a prolongation of the truce. Parliament had finally voted an appropriation, and the poll tax was being raised, albeit there had been some trouble.

Katherine had been a trifle uneasy since she had heard John Ball preaching at Leicester, until the duke told her that Ball had been imprisoned in Kent by Archbishop Sudbury.

"No need to fret, lovedy," said the duke. "With that ranting little firebrand quenched in jail, the people'll quiet down. They've no real cause for grievance."

Katherine was reassured. On Sunday she would leave the Savoy with the duke, who would drop her and her household off at Kenilworth while he continued north. But before they left there was a small private matter to be attended to.

Sir Ralph Hastings would accompany his lord to Scotland, and Blanchette's betrothal should be solemnized.

The duke and Katherine were sitting in the rose garden, watching a troupe of Cornish

Without going you can get nowhere.
—CHINESE PROVERB

Bring back the blush with new DuBarry Bloom!

Shades of Victoria—the blush is back! You see this glow-of-cheek on the radiant, new crop of American beauties and think, "how pretty!" Nature? Vitamins? No—DuBarry Bloom!

Bloom is a wonderful new kind of color for your cheeks, so creamy-light in texture that it spreads quickly and softly as a blush! No blotching or streaking. Never any hard, artificial "rouged" look. And the pretty blush that Bloom gives your cheeks is so fresh and natural, no one would ever dream it's "put on"!

Bloom, $1.10 plus tax

Sounds like magic, but Bloom comes in just one shade and gives each her own prettiest color glow!

P. S. If you're 30 plus, start using new DuBarry Penetrating Balm with Hormones at night (wear it under your make-up by day) and watch it work wonders in moisturizing and smoothing your complexion. This fabulous beauty treatment is a magical blend and balance of vitamins, hormones and lanolin that works under, through and on the skin to give it the moist, full look of youth. Not the least bit greasy—a perfect joy to use!

Penetrating Balm, $2.50 plus tax

DUBARRY BEAUTY PREPARATIONS
by RICHARD HUDNUT of Fifth Avenue

tumblers and glee maidens who were cavorting on the lawn.

Sir Ralph strode through the archway into the garden and walking to the duke's chair, knelt and kissed his hand. "God's greeting, my lord," he said and bowed to Katherine. "I'm here a day before I thought to be, but love is a sharp spur." He chuckled and swaggered a little. Blanchette's aversion to him, he had assured himself, sprang from charming modesty, being quite certain of his attraction. He was thirty-five and looked younger. He was an excellent horseman and jouster, and had been forbearing to the wife he had been married to for twelve barren years until her lung complaint released him.

Blanchette had no excuse whatsoever for her behavior, thought Katherine, smiling at Sir Ralph, who was asking after the girl.

"I'll get her," said Katherine, rising. "In truth, Sir Ralph, you must have patience with her. Woo her gently. I confess she's sometimes of a heavy spirit."

The knight frowned a trifle, but he spoke confidently. "'Tis natural she should be shy."

"Natural, maybe," said the duke. "But she's played the coy long enough. We'll have the betrothal tomorrow. Blanchette shall be May Queen for the day."

Katherine bestowed a loving glance on John as she hurried from the gardens in search of Blanchette.

The girl lodged in a chamber in the Monmouth Wing, and could seldom be persuaded to leave it. Here she carried on many little occupations of her own. She had wooden puppets that she dressed in scraps of silk. She strummed her lute and sang melodies of her own devising.

And there were her birds. Almost daily Blanchette sent the little page who waited on her to the market. He fetched her singing birds—linnets, thrushes, skylarks and sometimes nightingales that had been netted by fowlers and were offered for sale. She had a ritual with these. She left them in their cages only one night, while she talked to them softly. At the dawning she would free them through her window.

A harmless-enough pastime, but while Katherine stood at the girl's door she heard the low voice inside singing a plaintive tune, and the twittering of a bird. She put her hand on the door and found it locked.

"Let me in!" she called sharply. "'Tis your mother."

After a moment the door opened slowly and Blanchette stood as though to bar the way. Her copper-gold hair cascaded in loose ringlets down her back. She wore a dove-gray chamber robe, unadorned. Never would she willingly wear any of the costly trinkets the duke or Katherine gave her.

"Come, child," said Katherine more gently. "Why must you always act as though I'd harm you? It hurts me when you act like this."

A tiny green linnet hopped and twittered in a wooden cage. The girl's eyes moved from her mother's face to the linnet.

She that was the sweetest and the gentlest of children, Katherine thought, dear Lord, why is she like this now? She sighed, then spoke with decision. "Blanchette, Sir Ralph has come. He's in the garden with my lord. Your betrothal shall take place tomorrow."

Blanchette raised her eyes. "I'll n-not," she said. "I'll . . . run away. I'll not do what he says—I swear it by my father's soul!" She crossed herself and her face went white as clay.

"This is wicked folly!" cried Katherine. "'Tis not what the duke says, 'tis what I say ——"

SHE gasped, for Blanchette flung out her arms and shouted, "You lie! And I hate you! You are nought but his creature—you and the scurvy pack of bastards that you bear him!" She turned wildly and flung herself on her bed.

"Jesu," whispered Katherine. A black wave submerged her and at length retreated, leaving behind a jutting rock of anger as refuge. "This, Blanchette, is too much!" Katherine said in a voice of icy control. "God knows if I can ever find it in my heart to forgive you."

Blanchette twisted slowly around and stared up at her mother. Seeing there anger for the first time in her life, she gave a frightened moan. "Mama ——" she whispered.

Katherine moved away. Aye, she thought, my patience is at an end. I've put up with her humors, with the hatred she shows to John. She blames me, too, that Robin did not love her, and now she speaks to me like that.

"Since you are lost to decency and make wicked threats, Blanchette," she said, "I shall see that you are guarded night and day. Tomorrow at noon there will be your betrothal to Sir Ralph, and after that I shall send you to a convent until your marriage."

"Mama, I d-didn't m-mean ——"

Katherine hardened her heart and answered frigidly, "Think not to wheedle me into softness. I've been soft with you too long."

One by one Katherine took the measures for Blanchette's imprisonment. She summoned a strong Lancashire lass and told her not to leave the girl alone. She stationed a man-at-arms outside the door. Then she went back to the gardens and told Sir Ralph that he would see Blanchette on the morrow at the betrothal, but that the girl was indisposed at present.

Blanchette acted throughout the morning of her betrothal like one of the puppets she played with. She let the Lancashire wench and Hawise array her in a gown of myrtle green. They twined flowers in her flowing hair and garlanded her with lilies. She never spoke nor seemed to know what they were doing.

When Blanchette was dressed, H to fetch Katherine. "She's ready, said Hawise, "but I fear she's sic something. Her skin's hot to touch

"Bah!" said Katherine. "There' wrong with her than ill temper. "T first time she's acted illness when s her own way." Hawise knew tha true, but still she was uneasy.

The chapel bell began to ring. jumped up and hurried to the N Wing. Blanchette was waiting. S once at her mother and then at th while Katherine said "Come" an girl's hand, which was certainly dry

Dear Jane: Come visit us please!
You'll enjoy our new comfort and Let me tell you why, it's so easy t
...Those Heavenly Carpets by

Lees Carpet Selector—a wonder you have to see, to believe! Makes carpet shopping in the store so easy. All the lovely Lees colors and textures at your fingertips, to match and compare. We picked Lees Nugget, a rich hard twist.

Easy, sensible prices kept the pressure off our family purse. Lees Carpets come in a wide assortment of colors, weaves and patterns, priced to fit any pocketbook. You'd really be surprised at how little a Lees Carpet costs.

Rest and quiet moved the day we got our Lees. Now dren can romp and play to the content—still there's no clatte or jarring noise now that Lees Nugget on our floors a

"Don't way-relax!" is our new family motto! Those heavenly carpets by Lees are so easy to clean . . . Susie just adores doing the vacuuming for me. No rubbing, scrubbing, polishing, or waxing around our house any more!

Peace of mind goes along with safety underfoot. Our Lees Carpets keep the children from bumps and drafty floors. The soft resilient pile of Lees Carpets under our feet gives us a grand feeling of security. Love, Betty.

P.S. I can't write anymo
the postman just came to Guess I'll ask him insi for a look at "our pri
Our luxurious Lees carpe

FOR THE NAME AND ADDRESS OF THE AUTHORIZED LEES CARPET AND RUG DEALER NEAREST YOU, PLEASE WRITE TO: D through the courtyards to the g assembled lords and ladies h and the Carmelite, Brother waited by a portable altar in the duke stood resplendent beside in his gold-and-pearl-embroi-earing the chain of Castile and e Garter.

ne he is, Katherine thought, as gravely, holding Blanchette by denly, as Katherine started to hand in the outstretched one of nchette gave a strangled cry and he clutched up her myrtle-green rantically through the archway.

"What's this!" cried the duke, while Sir Ralph flushed crimson.

"She shall be beaten for it," cried Katherine, herself trembling with anger. "My lord," she said to John, "I beg you let me deal with her."

Katherine hurried back through the archway, and saw Blanchette behind a yew tree, on the inner side of the wall. The girl was doubled up on the ground and had been vomiting.

Katherine's anger vanished in fear. "Oh, my poor sweeting!" she cried, running to her.

Blanchette gazed at her mother without recognition. "Hurts," she muttered, putting her hand to her head. Her fingers touched the garland of lilies and she pulled it off. "White swans," she said, throwing them into the air. "I must let them fly away like the others."

Dear God, thought Katherine, with a stab of terror. As she touched Blanchette, she knew that this was the madness of fever. The girl's body gave off heat like an oven.

Katherine called for help. In the garden they did not hear her, but the sergeant-at-arms came running. He picked the girl up and carried her to the Monmouth Wing.

"'Tis what they call the scarlet sickness, my lady," said the burly soldier as he put Blanchette down on her bed.

On Sunday when the duke departed for Scotland, Blanchette was better. The fever persisted, but she did not cry out and toss so much. Her body was covered with a mesh of tiny scarlet dots. Brother William said that though she was still in danger, he had great hopes of her recovery.

Katherine could not leave Blanchette alone. Hawise and the Beaufort babies were to travel to Kenilworth without her.

Throughout the rest of May and the first week of June, Katherine lived in seclusion. She moved into the Monmouth Wing and slept in the chamber with her child. She saw no one but Mab, who shared the nursing, and Brother William, who came daily.

Blanchette improved gradually, the rash faded, but a succession of complications bedeviled her. For some days her throat was so swollen that she could not swallow, and when this abated she suffered from earaches.

DURING this time the girl reverted to her childhood and looked to her mother for everything. The conflict between them was as though it had never been.

A month after the onset of her illness, Brother William pronounced Blanchette definitely on the mend.

It was in the long golden dusk that the Franciscan friar came to visit his patient and found the girl sitting in the window seat with Katherine beside her. Blanchette's head rested against her mother's shoulder, her little face was pinched and white, and she seemed shockingly diminished, because the lovely hair had begun to fall out in handfuls, and Katherine had resolutely cut it short.

Huddled in her dressing robe, and with the little shorn head, she might have been a child of five, and the Gray Friar felt an unwelcome softness. He saw that Katherine was as pale as her daughter, and he spoke in a warmer tone than usual.

"Lady Swynford, we shall have you ailing, too, if you don't take care. Now the lass is better, I think you should move."

Katherine looked up. "To Kenilworth? But she's not well enough yet for that."

"No," said the friar, frowning. "I meant that you might move to another chamber, one with more air and light."

Katherine nodded thoughtfully. "Then we'll move to the Privy Suite. Those apartments are by far the most comfortable."

She was aware at once of the friar's withdrawal. He said stiffly, "There are many other rooms at the Savoy."

Blanchette, too, stirred and said, "Oh, mama, don't let's leave here."

"Sweetheart, 'twill do you good," said Katherine briskly. "There are such beautiful tapestries for you to look at—I'll tell you stories about them—and you can watch the boats on the Thames, and there's the duke's collection of little ivory saints—you'll like to play with them!"

Blanchette drew her breath in, and Katherine realized that it was the first time the duke's name had been mentioned since the girl's illness. She was reassured when Blanchette murmured, "As you will, mama."

Brother William frowned, but there was nothing he could say. The duke's suite was certainly the most comfortable accommodation in the palace.

"Please sit down and sup with us," said Katherine gently. "You seem wan yourself. There's no fresh sickness about, I hope."

"No more than usual," said the Gray Friar. "Aye, I am awearied." He sat down abruptly.

Katherine's ring of the hand bell was answered somewhat tardily by a varlet she had never seen before. "Where's Piers?" she said.

"Piers be took wi' a colic," answered the lad. "So I come in his stead. I be called Perkin. What's your wish, m'lady?"

She gave Perkin the order for meat and wine.

Brother William, who had been examining the lad, said, "Since I'm here, I'll have a look at this Piers' colic. Where does he lodge?"

Perkin's eyes shifted. He said, "No need of that, Sir Friar. 'Tis but the common gripes."

"Where is he now?" repeated the friar.

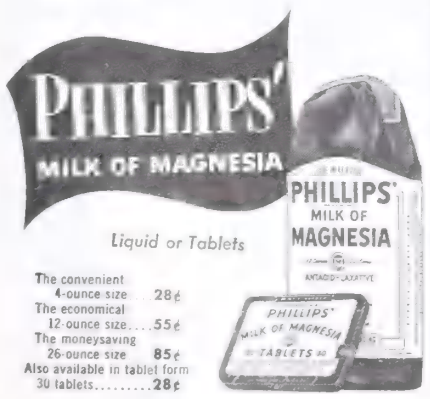
"How should I know, sir?" said the lad sullenly. "He maught be lying in t'kitchen passage, or he maught've ta'en his pallet to the cellars, or he maught ——"



AND SONS COMPANY, BRIDGEPORT, PENNA. OTHER FAMOUS PRODUCTS: COLUMBIA • MINERVA AND BEEHIVE HAND KNITTING YARNS

My Constipation worries are over!

Milk of Magnesia provides better relief—more complete relief than single-purpose laxatives which have no effect on the acid indigestion that usually accompanies constipation. For Milk of Magnesia relieves both conditions. Two to four tablespoonfuls taken at bedtime work leisurely—without embarrassing urgency. So, when morning comes, you start the day feeling wonderful. Get Phillips' Milk of Magnesia—the best laxative money can buy.

The convenient 4-ounce size 28¢
The economical 12-ounce size....55¢
The moneysaving 26-ounce size 85¢
Also available in tablet form 30 tablets.....28¢

"—— have left the Savoy altogether on some errand of his own?" said the friar with chill emphasis.

The lad thrust out his underlip and did not answer. Then, seeing that there were to be no more questions, he disappeared quickly.

"What did you mean by that?" asked Katherine, frowning. "The varlets can't leave the castle wards without permission."

"There's a deal being done just now without permission," said the friar dryly. "There's rioting in Kent."

"What sort of riots?" asked Katherine. "Is it the poll tax again?"

"That and other grievances, all ably dinned into the peasants by a priest called John Ball."

"But he's in gaol!" she cried.

The friar crossed his lean shanks. "He was in gaol, but the Kentishmen have released him. There's been violence in Essex, too, I hear."

Katherine thought of the russet-clad preacher she had seen at Leicester. "But what is it that the commons want?" she said impatiently.

The friar raised his lids and looked at her. "They want the equality of man. They want freedom. They're tired of serfdom or unfair wages for their labor. They're tired of eating black bread while the manor lords eat venison and fat capons."

"But, Brother William," Katherine said, "is it not true that in most cases the villeins are better off on the manors where they were born, and their forebears too? A good manor lord cares for his serfs. In time of trouble he protects them."

"You voice the arguments for slavery that are old as Babylon and have satisfied many. There are, however, others who prefer freedom to any benefits. . . . I don't know," he added half to himself. Brother William's chair grated on the tiles. He shook himself to his feet. "The food is long in coming. I cannot wait." He spoke in the harsh tone she was accustomed to from him. "I'll be back in a day or so. Benedicite." And he stalked out.

To be conscious that you are ignorant is a great step to knowledge. —DISRAELI

The next day Katherine and Blanchette moved to the Privy Suite. Blanchette had never before been in the ducal apartments, and could not withhold her admiration when Katherine helped her walk into the Avalon Chamber. Behind the bed hung the great Avalon tapestry with the dark, mysterious greens of the enchanted forest, and the figures of Arthur, Guinevere and the wizard Merlin.

To divert Blanchette, Katherine told her a little about the tapestry, but the girl was not much interested; she preferred to sit in the window and watch the river flow by, and as Katherine had hoped she was delighted with the finger-high ivory figurines of the saints. She picked up the figure of the North Country saint, Columba, who held a dove, and looked up at her mother. "What happened to my green linnet?"

"It's well. I've fed it myself. We'll send for it so you can hang it in your room."

Blanchette was better in every way, recovering not only from the illness but from the strange dark rebellions that had preceded it.

HER pale face flushed suddenly; she looked down at the window seat and said, "You've been good to me, dearest mama."

Katherine caught her breath. Though her arms ached to hug and shelter, she knew that she must not force this new delicate balance. "And why not, mouse!" she said lightly.

Tuesday and Wednesday they had a happy time together. Blanchette played her lute, and Katherine taught her the gay old tune, "Hé! Dame de Vaillance!" and they sang it in rondo. Katherine in persuading her child to lightheartedness found gaiety herself, dimmed only by secret worry over Blanchette's dulled hearing.

She could walk about the chambers without help, she was eating well, and some color had returned to her cheeks. Next week they could leave for Kenilworth, Katherine thought.

On Wednesday evening the courtyard clock clanged out seven as they finished their supper.

"Brother William hasn't been here since Sunday," said Katherine idly. "Maybe he'll come tonight—though you scarcely need his skill any more, God be thanked."

"I hope he does," said Blanchette. "I like him. He looks ugly and grim, yet his hands're gentle."

Katherine assented. There was a knock on the door, and she called, "Enter!" thinking that it might be the friar.

It was a page who announced that there was a tradesman below who wished to see Lady Swynford. Guy le Pessoner.

"Master Guy!" exclaimed Katherine. "Show him up, to be sure," and to Blanchette said, "'Tis Hawise's father."

The fishmonger came in, puffing, and bowed to Katherine. "God's greeting! Whew! 'Tis warm for one o' my port to be ahurrying."

KATHERINE smiled and indicated a chair. "A pleasure to see you."

Master Guy's shrewd little eyes became intent. "Where's Hawise, m'lady?" he said.

"At Kenilworth. She left a month ago."

"Ah-h," said the fishmonger. "'Twas what I be telling Emma, but she made me come anyhow."

"Why?" asked Katherine. "Is anything wrong?"

"Nay—not what ye might call wrong." He shrugged. "'Tis more that me dame's a dithering old 'oman." Master Guy frowned.

These last two days there was no doubt that the rebellion had become more serious. The Kentish mob had advanced as close as Blackheath across the river, while Essex men neared London from the north. Dame Emma had kept badgering him to make sure that Hawise was out of possible danger. She had heard a rumor that Lady Swynford remained at the Savoy, though the duke had left.

"What does Dame Emma dither about?" asked Katherine.

"She thinks if them ribauds over on Blackheath should cross the river into Lunnon, there maught be a bad time. I tell her all they want is to set their grievances afore the king. Besides, they can't get into town. The drawbridge's up, and the gates all closed."

"I know nothing of all this, Master Guy," said Katherine slowly. "I thought the king was at Windsor."

"He's in the Tower now—wi' the Princess Joan and a mort o' the lords and Mayor Walworth. They've got t' old archbishop wi' 'em and Hales, the treasurer, too, or the rebels'd've strung them two makers o' the stinking poll tax up to the nearest trees."

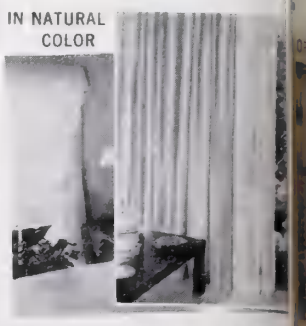
Katherine considered this with astonishment. "Has the king talked to the rebels?"

"Nay, he went downriver by barge this morn to Rotherhithe, but he didn't land. 'Tis said some o' his lords turned poltroon when they saw the great mob that was awaiting on the bank."

"The poor lad," said Katherine, thinking of the sensitive delicate boy she had seen last Christmas at Leicester. She turned back to Master Guy. "I understand these rebels are loyal to the king?"

"Oh, aye—'tis so." The fishmonger nodded. "They fly his banner with those of St. George on Blackheath."

"Then there can be no great danger from them," said Katherine confidently. She rose, and poured ale and handed it to Master Guy, saying, "Forgive me that I did not offer this sooner. How's Hawise's Jack, by the bye?"



The fishmonger drained his ale and cried, "Spleen! God's wounds, but there ne'er was such a churl for grudges 'n' spleen. A bloodthirsty knave is Jack. I begin to think Hawise well shed o' him." He lumbered up out of his chair. "Well, m'lady, I'll be off." He hesitated. "Warn your men-at-arms to be on guard and make sure the water gates're lowered. Then ye needna have a care."

Katherine thanked him for coming and sent her love to Dame Emma. When the fishmonger had gone, she summoned Sergeant Leach and repeated Master Guy's advice.

"Have no fear, m'lady," said the sergeant.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 96

IN NATURAL COLOR

PERFECT TOGE

Vogue

SUNGLOW FIBE
CURTAINS and DR

Vogue expertly tailored Fiber settes offer sheer styles that dows look lovelier while Vo Drapes* in Fiberglas* Boucl the new solid color Fosto traverse draperies. Easiest to starching, no stretching, no ir Fiberglas* Curtains and D passed the most rigid quality standards. You'll find styles and sizes for every room

AT THESE FINE S

Akron
A. Polsky Co.
Atlanta
Davison-Paxon Co.
Rich's, Inc.
Baltimore
May Company
Boston
Filene's
Jordan Marsh Co.
Pray's
R. H. Stearns
Birmingham
Burger-Phillips Co.
Buffalo
Wm. Hengerer
Canton, Ohio
Thurin's
Charleston, W. Va.
Woodrum's
Chicago
Carson Pirie Scott
The Fair
Cincinnati
John Shillito Co.
Cleveland
The Halle Bros. Co.
Higbee Company
Sterling-Lindner
Columbus
F. & R. Lazarus Co.
Dallas
Titche-Goettinger
Dayton
Rike-Kumler Co.
Des Moines
Younker's
Detroit
Demery's
J. L. Hudson Co.
Grand Rapids
Herpolsheimer's
Greensburg, Pa.
A. E. Troutman
Hartford
G. Fox & Co.
Huntington, W. Va.
Anderson Newcomb Co.
Indianapolis
L. S. Ayres & Co.
Jamaica, N. Y.
B. Gertz, Inc.
Kansas City
Emery-Bird-Thayer
Lawrence, Mass.
A. B. Sutherland
Lincoln, Neb.
Gold's
Los Angeles
Barker Bros.
Broadway Dept. Stores
Bullock's
May Company
Louisville
Kaufman-Straus

Miami, F
Richa
Milwauk
Gimb
Minneap
L. S. I
Montreal
T. Ea
Newark,
L. Ba Kresg
New Bed
C. F.
New Hav
Edwa
New Orl
D. H.
New Yor
B. Alt
Bloon
Oakland
Breun
H. C.
Omaha
Orcha
Paterson,
Quack
Philadelp
Straw
Clo Pittsburgh
Kaufn
Portland,
Rines
Portland,
Meier
Providenc
Gladd
Rochester
Sibley
Cur
San Franc
Empo
Macy'
St. Paul
Empo
Sacramen
Breun
San Anto
Joske's
Scranton
Glelan
Seattle
The Bo
South Ben
Robert
Spokane
Cresce
Toledo
Lamso
Toronto
The T.
House F
Waltham,
Grover
Washingto
Lansbu
Wheeling,
L. S. G

and many others

*TRADEMARK

IF THE STORE IN YOUR CITY LISTED ABOVE, WRITE FOR ITS

ROBERTSON FACTORI
347 FIFTH AVE., NEW YORK,

ly in 7 minutes . . . VOGUE'S Expanda Draperies!

Even a steamy hot kitchen won't wilt VOGUE'S Gingham Girl prints!

Imagine! Not one of VOGUE'S ruffles needs a touch of ironing!

t their best in the sun

-iron Fiberglas curtains and draperies glow with the sun . . . keep their wrinkle-free freshness.

erglas curtains and draperies make your whole life sunnier! In colors specially cted to resist fading, they filter sunshine . . . give your home a lovely glow . . . turn iantly beautiful in night lights. They're perfect for today's easy way of living. They never, er need ironing . . . not even a touch at ruffles and hems . . . actually wash and g in 7 minutes and promise never to shrink, stretch, mildew or burn.
ens-Corning Fiberglas, Decorative Fabrics, New York 22, N. Y.

OWENS-CORNING
FIBERGLAS
T.M. REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

VOGUE Fiberglas curtain and drapery fabrics also by-the-yard.

ASK Mary Gordon — OF TWA

How to see Europe for only $53 down

RIGHT NOW . . . fly away on that dream trip to Europe you've always wanted! Just visit your nearest TWA office, pay only $53 down, pack your bags—and you're off! After you return, pay the balance in low monthly installments spread over 20 months. That's what TWA's new TIME PAY PLAN means! Remember, you can use this TWA TIME PAY PLAN to fly from your home town to any place in the world. Don't delay – fly TWA now – pay later!

SEE EUROPE for only $523. Ask Mary Gordon about TWA's special 14-day THRIFT SEASON TOUR of England, Belgium, Holland and France. It's yours for $523 from New York and back. Think of it . . . two weeks in the gay, romantic centers of Europe . . . two weeks of never-to-be-forgotten experiences for only $523 . . . and remember, you pay $53 down . . . the balance in easy payments.

LET MARY GORDON help you stretch your travel dollars. She'll tell you when to go, where to go, what to take, how to pack, what to see. For more information visit your local TWA office or see your favorite TWA travel agent, or fill out the coupon below and mail it to Mary Gordon.

Here's what TWA's TIME PAY PLAN, means to you

Destination	Round Trip	Down Payment
NEW YORK to LONDON and return	$425.00	$43.00
NEW YORK to PARIS and return	$461.00	$47.00
NEW YORK to ROME and return	$551.40	$55.40
COAST to COAST	$99.00 (one way plus tax)	$10.90

Sky Tourist fares to Europe effective during Thrift Season, Nov. 1 through Mar. 31

—FILL OUT AND MAIL—

Mary Gordon of TWA, Dept. J104
Trans World Airlines, 380 Madison Ave., New York 17, N. Y.

Please send me information on . . .

☐ How to Stretch Your Travel Dollar.

☐ How to Make TWA Reservations by Mail

☐ TWA Tours.

NAME _____
PLEASE PRINT
ADDRESS _____
CITY _____ STATE _____

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 94

He went off to alert his men-at-arms, to order the great crossbarred portcullis lowered at the Strand, and to check on the security of the water gates. He issued extra arms from the well-stocked armory—maces, battle-axes, swords, breastplates and shields—and instructed the varlets in their use.

When dusk fell, the sergeant threw himself down to sleep in the guardroom with a mind as quiet as the evening air.

ACROSS the river at Blackheath the rebel mob had grown until ten thousand desperate, hungry men surged back and forth across the trampled gorse and heath.

John Ball preached his great sermon there on Blackheath, telling them how God had created all men equal in the days of Adam and Eve, and how there were then no rich lords or bishops—and there were no slaves.

"My poor friends," he cried, "things cannot go right in England nor ever will until everything shall be in common. And there shall be no more lords and vassals! Aye, by the Holy Rood, we shall change that now!"

They had heard all this many times before, but never with the growing frenzied hope. As the preacher's voice trembled, their leader Wat, the tiler from Maidstone, climbed up on the stump and rehearsed their instructions.

A powerful, grim man was Wat, and thirsting for revenge—some said because his daughter had been ravished by a tax collector—but no reason was needed to swell the torment of blind hatred in all their breasts.

They had sent to the king a list of the men who must be delivered to them for vengeance. They demanded the heads of Simon of Sudbury, the archbishop-chancellor who had instigated the poll tax and who had imprisoned John Ball; of Robert Hales, treasurer of England. They demanded the death of twelve others whom they had cause to hate—and the head of John o' Gaunt. They greatly feared the duke who was so bloated with lands and power, and yet traitorously craved to be king. A monster of villainy, they thought him.

Wat shouted out the list of heads that they had demanded, and at each name the crowd roared. Soon, he said, there would be an answer from King Richard, who would surely meet them for a parley this time.

"All must be seemly done in our revenge!" cried Wat. "No plundering, no ravishing! Commons be not thieves, remember!"

They stamped and bellowed and waved their St. George pennants. Wat seized the king's standard, he raised it high into the sky. "And commons be loyal!" he shouted.

In one mighty voice they answered with the watchword: "With King Richard and the true commons!"

Wat nodded heavily and got down off the stump. "Christ's mercy, but I hope them aldermen'll soon open the bridge," he murmured.

The peasant army had had no food that day, would have none until they got into London. It was cruel hard to hold in check so wild and mixed a mob. Here were not only angry farmers and bondsmen, but outlaws and gaolbirds, too, aplenty.

Even as Wat spoke, a voice cried out, "To the Marshalsea, men!" and another called, "Yea! Burn the Marshalsea and on to Lambeth!"

The rabble shifted and wavered, a dozen broke away and began to run toward the western road. Others followed brandishing torches, some armed with rusty old swords, with picks and hoes and cudgels.

The crowd that thundered off toward Southwark grew dense, and Wat watched uneasily.

"An' they do more harm'n v growled, "'twill mayhap hurt John Ball started. "Not so,' hoarsely. "Nought can harm o is God's. They'll but root ou weeds that choke our crops."
Wat's misgivings were sile thrilled to the confidence that spired, but Wat was a man of mind darted to practical matt Jack Strawe, Sir Priest?" he asl
his men've entered the city yet b
This was their plan, that the rallied in Essex should broac her eastern gate, while the s crossed over on the bridge.
"If they have not, they soon v the preacher. "We shall succ aims!"

LANTERN

By MARY KENNEDY

At night the Balinese boy puts fireflies in his blouse to light his way through somber mountains, as in my sorrow I have gathered all my memories of you.
Each gesture, each loving glance shines with a radiance that lights my way over the black, uneven ground
I must now cross.

Katherine awoke suddenly hour of that Thursday, June thi was the Feast of Corpus Chris to the distant bells and thought processions were starting early seemed to her that the rhythm somewhat violent. She sat up in the velvet curtains back.
She was mildly surprised t flushed with redness. She slipp and, flinging her chamber rob peered cu window.
Down
neighborl wark, the Dense sn up agains colored st Nearer, to Lambeth
leaping to
"Jesu
pered, bank's af
She ju came a ba door. It Brother W into the r
The fri yourself
Swynford child—the
She clu around happened? There's fire out ther

The friar said grimly, "There than fire. The peasant army's London. Hasten—don't waste
ter!"
She obeyed him blindly, forc to quietness as she dressed garderobe. She put on a linen sh stinct pulled down the plainest an old dark green wool. Then she Blanchette.
In a few minutes Katherine ca Blanchette. Both women were friar saw in one sharp glance little patient had improved.
"Take hooded mantles," he s ine. "Put your jewels in your pu any money?"
"Two or three nobles," she an
ily. "Brother William—what's

FROM far off on the Strand th fused noises. As they listene swelled.
"The sergeant and his men'll h said the friar. "We've plenty of t away by barge—upstream to sat to fear," he said to Blanchette, him dumbly.
"The privy stairs," cried Ka quicker!"
She scooped some jewels at her casket and seized two mant and Blanchette. They went alon and down the steps to the hidde stepped into the outer ward n house, and stopped aghast.
The great portcullis of the gat lifted as they stood staring in Roger Leach had ranged him

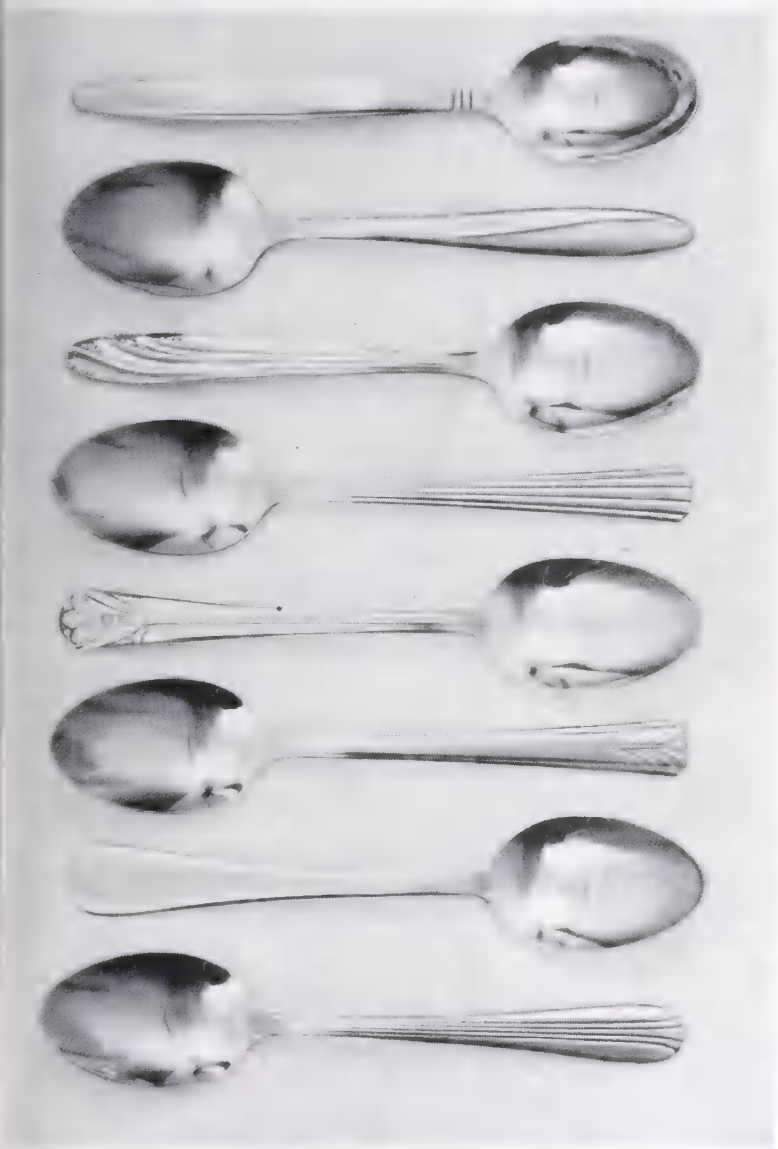
CONTINUED ON PAGE

NTRODUCING

an exquisite new pattern in stainless



NEW DAWN

for modern living

Another new design in International Stainless . . . elegantly simple, crisply modern, and appropriately named NEW DAWN.

You'll love the worksaving beauty of International Stainless. Its gleaming, tarnish-proof finish is scratch-resistant and needs no special care in normal use.

International Stainless is made by silversmiths to the exacting standards of the costliest tableware. The hollow-handle knives with forged blades, and deep-bowled spoons mark it the finest tableware of its kind. See NEW DAWN at your silverware dealer's soon. $6.00 for a five-piece place setting.

See these other lovely new patterns in International Stainless. Prices listed for 5-piece place settings (top to bottom):

STOCKHOLM	$8.00	TULIP TIME	$4.00
CHRISTIANIA	$8.00	SCANDIA	$4.00
SPRING LILY	$6.00	RAVENNA	$4.00
LORDSHIP	$4.00	EMPIRE	$4.00

ALL PATTERNS MADE IN U. S. A.

International

Stainless

Mastercrafted in Steel by The International Silver Company

Today's fashion... The Slender Figure

Today's refreshment ...Light refreshment

FASHION is wiser than we think! By making women watchful of their waistlines, it's led to wholesome diets, as good for health as they are for looks.

Heavy, over-rich food and drinks are out of date. The modern taste is for lighter, less filling foods and beverages.

That is why Pepsi-Cola is now more popular than ever. For Pepsi has kept up with the times. Today's Pepsi-Cola is light, dry (not too sweet), reduced in calories. It refreshes without filling.

You'll find it everywhere, in the familiar economy bottle that serves two people, and in the smaller, single-drink size, just right for one.

Modern fashion, modern refreshment, go hand in hand. Pepsi-Cola is the modern, the light refreshment.

Refresh without filling. Have a Pepsi.

Pepsi-Cola

refreshes without filling

ONTINUED FROM PAGE 96

s on the inside of the gatehouse.
oud cry and sprang forward with praised.
nen had their arrows notched, but time to take aim. The mob poured gate in a cataract. The bowmen heir useless bows and fought hand
h mace and sword.
!" cried the friar, grabbing the two
ms. "Back! We must get back up-hope now of escape by barge. He women toward the little hidden s they stumbled panting into the shock-haired man in leather helm late veered away from the main e mob.
ack Maudelyn, who had special of the Savoy. His sharp, questing en the friar and recognized him.
ged down the courtyard, flourish-
e. "Ho!" he shouted, his yellow in a wolf grin. "So 'tis the puling men!" he yelled. "Here's merry here to me ——"
s bony fist had shot out and landed f the weaver's face. Jack staggered forward with his pike. The lancet slashed down across the friar's re through his habit and pierced the breastbone. The friar's fist veaver on the jaw. He reeled, spitooth, and fell down. Bunching his ne hand against the welling blood, ked up Jack's pike.
Londoners and Essex men ramugh the gate. None had heard

It is only when the dark comes down that the stars shine.
—WINSTON CHURCHILL

The friar turned o the archway erine had got ned. They shut
it behind them,
d up the stairs
on Chamber.
William helped hoot the iron h the hasps on oor and pushed the massive table

're secure. They can't get in here," Katherine foolishly. Then, turning
, she started. "Jesu, brother—
"
hunched and doubled over, holds to his breast while scarlet oozed ay habit. "Aye," he said, "aye."
o him and pulled him to the bed.
n without resistance.
t," he said. "A clean cloth."
l a corner of the sheet from under l wadded it into the gaping wound.
erve awhile," he said. He looked s she bent over him. He saw the ng, frightened face. "I shall die," dull certainty. "No matter." He his elbow and looked at her again.
ou shall hear the truth!"
—good brother—I beg you to lie Katherine. "You won't die. For so deep a wound as that."

iet again, his lips moved in the ough he scarcely knew it.
the tumult outside grew louder.
shouts and a muffled, sinister
"Oh, that my dear lord was here!"
ried. "My dearest love—to pro-
"
made a sharp motion with his th flowed into him. He shoved her ose from the bed. He clutched at and cried fiercely, "So now, grace-
, you call out for your paramour!
-don't you yet see that it is because in—and his—that this disaster you know what they write of you ys? That you have bewitched the our enchantments. And 'tis for this e hate of all men."
false!" She forgot, as he had, the f the mob. She forgot Blanchette.
you speak to me like that! I've him harm. I love him."
drew a rasping breath. "Aye—of your lechery, these Benedictine y little know they might also write Katherine Swynford, you and the duke murdered Hugh Swynford in Bordeaux as truly as though you had yourselves procured the poison that killed him."

"You're mad," she whispered, gazing at him in horror. "Brother William, your wound has made you mad."

"Nay, not mad but dying," the friar said solemnly. "May God forgive me that I break the vow of the confessional—but I'll not die with this vile secret on my soul. 'Twas Nirac de Bayonne who put the poison in Sir Hugh's cup—this he confessed to me on his deathbed—but 'twas you gave your husband the draught to drink."

"The cup," she said. "But I didn't know! Before God, I didn't know!"

"You didn't know! Nor did the duke, who cast his poor tool aside when it had blindly committed the foulest of all crimes for him. But can you take this crucifix and kiss it, while swearing that you did not long for your husband's death? Can you?"

She did not move.

THE friar held the crucifix toward her with a shaking hand. Then another shudder seized him. He slumped forward and stumbled to the ivory prie-dieu. He clasped his hands together, and began to chant, "Ostende nobis, Domine, misericordiam tuam ——"

Katherine sank slowly to her knees beside the bedpost. Her wide-straining eyes fixed themselves on the round white disk of the friar's tonsure, her lips moved in mindless echo of his prayers.

Blanchette was huddled in the chair. She made no sound, but deep in her brain a voice cried on two notes. It said, "Murder—murder—murder"; and sometimes it changed and said, "She gave poison to your father."

Below in the outer ward the Kentish rebels had arrived with Wat the tiler at their head. He knew now that the duke had escaped them, but they would wreak what vengeance they could on his possessions.

Wat took command at once. Some of the Londoners still pounded at the iron-bound treasure-chamber door. Wat and his men added their strength until the hinges burst.

They dragged out coffers full of gold and silver and piled them unopened in the Great Hall. They took the coronets, the jeweled chains, the diamond-crusted scabbards and broke them up in the courtyard, then ground the jewels to powder.

"We be not thieves!" roared Wat, as he spied a lad who stuffed a silver goblet in his jerkin. He killed the lad with a thrust of his sword and threw the goblet on the mangled pile in the center of the Great Hall. Some of the mob, as the frenzy grew, ran into the gardens trampling on the flowers, uprooting the rosebushes. When Wat seized a torch and set fire to the hall, they roared with joy.

It was a slobbering whey-faced Londoner who led a band up the great state staircase. A weaver by the badge of trade on his arm, his jaw had been knocked awry. A short and meager little man in tattered leather jerkin went in this band too. A branded F was on his cheek, half hidden by the grime.

They swarmed up to the Presence Chamber, past a shut door to a suite of empty rooms where they destroyed the furnishings, but the weaver was not satisfied; he pointed back and made them see that they must get inside the shut door they had passed.

Inside the Avalon Chamber, the friar prayed on, through the pounding and the shouts outside, but Katherine rose from her knees, pulling herself up by the bed curtains.

She saw the little door begin to give. She walked to Blanchette and put her arm around the huddled shoulders. "Don't be afraid, darling," she whispered. Blanchette twisted out from under her mother's arm and sprang back. In her eyes there was a look that caused Katherine to cry out in anguish.

The door burst open and a huge red-bearded peasant stepped in, brandishing a sickle, which he lowered in confusion when he saw two women and a praying friar, but the other men shoved past him.

I dreamed I went on a safari in my*maidenform bra®*

Look who's after big game . . . me!
. . . the most dangerous figure in the Congo.
Completely ambushed by admiring glances for my fabulous form.
No girl on the hunt ever had more fatal ammunition than a Maidenform bra.

Shown: Maidenform's Maidenette* in acetate satin with lace. Also in nylon taffeta and in broadcloth with lace . . . from 1.50

There is a Maidenform for every type of figure*.
Send for free style booklet.
Maidenform, New York 16.

*REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. ©1954 MAIDEN FORM BRASSIERE CO., INC. JEWELRY: MONET COSTUME: COLE OF CALIFORNIA

Next time you break the seal on a crisp, new pack take a moment to think of all the fun...all the promise of excitement the little package holds!

BRIDGE

All-time strategy favorite of keen players. It's today's version of the "trump" games improved and refined by every generation since Henry VIII.

HEARTS

is an easy game to learn, with more opportunity for skill than most people realize. An excellent game for youngsters vs. oldsters.

CONCENTRATION

played with the pack spread out, face down. A game small fry excel at, and usually trounce their parents. Wonderful memory builder and rainy-day occupation!

CRIBBAGE

Favorite duel of wits for more than 300 years, combining luck and skill in absorbing entertainment. Think of it when you want a good game for two.

CANASTA

One of the most exciting of all the new Rummy games. Easy to learn, fun to play for hours. Samba and Bolivia are two interesting variations.

156 great card games old and new, in the 256-page "Official Rules of Card Games." Send 15¢ in coin with your name and address to Dept. L-1, The United States Playing Card Company, Cincinnati 12, Ohio. In Canada, send 25¢ in coin to International Playing Card Co., Windsor, Ont.

Every game's more pleasure with Congress Cards, the luxury, gem-colored packs whose edges flash like gold! Exclusive, satin-smooth Cel-u-tone Finish—supreme in deal and shuffle.

CONGRESS PLAYING CARDS

The friar heaved himself to his feet and grabbed the pike he had taken from the weaver. He backed tottering against the fireplace.

"Kill! Kill!" Jack screamed. He rushed forward with his sword. Blood spurted high, then spattered on the marble mantel and on Blanchette's skirt. The friar gasped once, fell prone upon the tiles and was still.

Again Jack lifted his sword; this Lancastrian friar's head would be carried on a pike to London Bridge with those of the other traitors. But now the outlaw ran forward. "Not in here," he said, "not afore them." He jerked his chin toward Katherine and Blanchette, who stood transfixed against the wall.

Jack furiously shrugged off the restraining hand, but they dragged Brother William's body out into the passage.

Katherine gazed at the flaxen-polled little outlaw. 'Tis Cob o' Fenton, she thought, my runaway serf. Soon he'll kill us, too, if Jack Maudelyn does not first. It seemed strange that Cob should be there when she had last seen him in the village stocks at Kettlethorpe.

The men cast sideways glances at the two women, but did not molest them. Some chopped up the sandalwood chairs, some the gilded table. They pulled down the Avalon tapestry and hacked it into strips.

Wat Tyler strode into the chamber crying, "Come, lads, get on wi' it. What's keeping ye so long?" The smell of smoke came with him.

Jack Maudelyn slithered in behind the tiler. He pointed to Katherine. "Kill ——" he gobbled again, and raised his sword.

"Nay, weaver—by the rood—ye've gone daft!" Wat gave him a shove that sent him spinning. "Who are ye?" He turned to Katherine. The fires were catching fast in the buildings behind them, they must finish this business up, then on to Westminster. Katherine could not reply.

"You then!" The tiler rounded on Blanchette, and drew back startled. Almost he made a sign of the cross, the crop-haired girl had so strange a look. She had lifted a fold of her skirt and dabbled with her fingers in the stains made by the friar's blood, and she was smiling. "Who are ye, child?" repeated Wat.

Blanchette raised her head. "Who am I?" she said in a high, sweet tone. "Nay, that, good sir, I must not tell you." Her eyes moved unseeing over the faces of the men. "But I can tell you who I'll be." She nodded three times slowly, and laughed low in her throat.

Wat swallowed. The men did not stir, a shivering unease held them.

"Why, I shall be a whore, good sir," cried Blanchette in a loud voice, "like my mother. A murdering whore mayhap, too—like my mother!" She gathered up her skirts as though she would make a curtsy. Then like quicksilver she whirled and ran out of the chamber.

"Stop her!" screamed Katherine, dashing forward. "Blanchette!"

Jack Maudelyn snatched out his hand and grabbed Katherine. He jerked her back so violently that she fell. Her head hit the tiles. A thousand lights exploded behind her eyes, and then there was darkness.

Queen Elizabeth, in her wise way, writing to a mother who had lost her son, tells her that she will be comforted in time; and why should she not do for herself what the mere lapse of time will do for her?
—BENTLEY

ACROSS the Strand from the Savoy's ...tehouse there lay an open field. Two ... Wat Tyler's men carried Katherine there and dumped her on a grassy bank near a little brook, before dashing off to join their fellows heading for Westminster.

Cob o' Fenton had followed the men. Suddenly he jumped and gasped, jerking his head up to look at the Savoy. An explosion had thundered off behind the walls. A sheet of flame shot up as high as the spire on the Monmouth Tower. The tower wavered, seeming to dance and sway like a sapling in the wind; it buckled in the middle, and fell with the rumble of an earthquake, in great clouds of dust and flying stone.

"God's passion," whispered Cob, crossing himself. He took to his heels across the field. He had quite forgotten Katherine, but she lay across his path.

He stopped. She lay on her ... like the marble effigies he'd s... Cathedral. But she breathed. A... her girdle the purse with her ... Roet arms, impaling Swynford.

Through Cob's uncertain he... a strange feeling. He stared ... Swynford arms—three yellow ... the black chevron. These arms ... They were fastened on the ma... meant the fealty that his fath... given to Sir Hugh Swynford ... Thomas before that. They mean... manor house where he himself ... age to Swynfords—homage ... woman.

COB glanced fearfully over his... saw that the fire drew nearer. "La... shaking Katherine. "Lady, fo... God, awake!"

Still she lay limp. She was tall, ... sized and puny. He could not c... in desperation pulled at her ur... into the little brook. She opened ... shuddered. "'Tis cold," she wh... moved her hands in the flowing ... them and stared at their wetness.

"Get up, lady! We must haste ...

He hoisted her by the armpits a... slowly rose, dripping and stood ... while Cob held her. She looked ... matted flaxen hair and the F t... cheek, but she did not quite ren...

She turned a... the immense ... nace across th...

"Come! Car... cried Cob impa... pelling her alo... She moved her f... Cob saw that h... clung to her le... peded her. He di... from its sheath ... skirt off just bel...

"Where are ... Katherine said, ... diently she trie... The sick giddin... her eyes was passing, though her h...

"Into town," said Cob, though... know what he was going to do wit...

"Oh," said Katherine, "I've goo... town. The Pessoners in Billingsga... going to the Pessoners?"

"Might as well," said Cob, relie...

He dragged her along until they ... Clement Danes'. The Temple was ... the Strand ahead of them. He had ... that. "Have to go up there, I ... pointed up the hill toward Holborn.

He and Katherine plodded ... reached Holborn Street, where a h... the rebels came marching four ab... singing "Jack Milner."

A fellow outlaw whom Cob had ... the Essex camp called out, "What b... wi' a woman? 'Tis no time for spor...

"Nay—true," Cob shouted back, ... "'Tis a poor affrighted country wenc... lost. I but take her to the city. Then I... Where are ye bound?"

Several of the rebels answered him ... They were off to burn all Robert Ha... erty, though the treasurer himself st... in the Tower, protected by the king.

The rebels veered off to the left a... erine started walking again when ... They came to the edge of a tremendo... who were watching what took place o... in the center of the crossways.

Some forty Flemings had been rou... along with two richer prizes, the detes... chant, Richard Lyons, and a sneak... former the mob had dragged from sa... in St. Martin's. They were all tied arm... in a line that was now diminished as o... another was dragged forward and flun... knees beside the block. A man stood th... an ax, and he worked fast. Already ... heads had rolled into the central gutter... ran crimson.

Cob shrank. "We must get out o' he... whispered, grabbing Katherine's ar... shoved her down an alley until they ... Watling Street, which was nearly de...

You both rest easy when he goes Pullman

sk him to—Go ULLMAN
able, Convenient and Safe

have a "Rent-a-car" waiting m if he asks the ticket agent
HE PULLMAN COMPANY

Peaceable citizens were all at home behind barred doors.

"Lady," cried Cob, "where is this Billingsgate to which ye'd go?"

Katherine stopped and stared about her. "There!" she cried, pointing toward the river. She seized Cob's hand and began to run.

She saw the half-timbered house and the gilded fish that flapped from a pole over the shop. "'Tis here," she said, and pulled the door knocker.

The wooden peephole opened and a frightened eye looked out. "What is't?" quavered an old man's creaking voice. "There's no one here. Go 'way."

"Dame Emma!" cried Katherine. "Where's Dame Emma? Tell her Lady Swynford's here, and I've need of her."

"The mistress's not here. Be off wi' ye!" The shutter began to slide across the peephole.

"Stop!" Cob grabbed Katherine's purse and, opening it, breathed "Holy saints!" as he saw jewels and gold. He fished out a gold noble and waved it through the peephole. "'Tis yours an ye let us in!" Cob shouted.

A gold noble was nearly seven shillings. Half a year's wages for a freeman.

THE door opened. Cob shoved it wider and, pulling Katherine with him, walked in. Cob shut and barred the door. "Here ye are, then," he said roughly, dropping the noble in the old man's outstretched hand.

The old man was called Elias, and usually he worked around the fishhouse as night watch. He had been left here alone this afternoon, for Master Guy had gone to an emergency meeting in Fishmongers Hall.

"Where's Dame Emma?" said Katherine, sinking down on the settle. The kitchen fire was unlighted, the low raftered room that had always shown a homely cheer was empty and gloomy behind its drawn shutters.

The old man would not answer her. Master Guy, alarmed at last, had packed Dame Emma and the maids off to St. Helen's Priory, but no need to tell this strange touseled wench that—or anything. Elias mumbled with feeble malevolence as Cob, who had been rummaging, came back with his finds.

"Ye best eat, lady," said Cob, breaking a juicy hunk off a meat pasty and holding it out to her. As Katherine shook her head, he thrust out his mug of ale. "Drink, then!"

She lowered her lips and swallowed thirstily.

Cob held the mug and suddenly chuckled. "Here's something warms me cockles," he said; "to see the Lady o' Kettlethorpe adrinking from the same mug as her serf."

Katherine raised her head from the mug. "Cob," she whispered. Cob, the runaway from Kettlethorpe—she knew him now. It was no squire had guided her this day. "Cob," she said, "do you know where is Blanchette?"

"Nay, lady," replied the little outlaw, and crossed himself. "For sure now ye must rest. Old gaffer"—he prodded Elias—"where can the lady rest?"

"I know where to go," said Katherine. "The chamber above the fishshop. Aye—I must lie down awhile." Her head spun as she rose, and she dragged herself toward the stairs.

"Ye can't go up there, woman!" squealed Elias, jumping up.

"Bung down—bung down, old goat. She'll go where she pleases!" Cob gave him a negligent shove. "Where's more ale?"

While Cob made himself comfortable in the kitchen, Katherine found her way to the chamber loft. She lay down on the bed which she had once shared with Hawise. She moaned a little, and closed her eyes.

When Master Guy returned home, it was near to sundown and the grave issues of the rebellion so perturbed him that he gave scant attention to the presence of a ragged little churl in his kitchen, or to old Elias' stammered excuses.

When he understood from Cob that Lady Swynford was sleeping upstairs, Master Guy banged his pudgy hand on the table in exasperation. "Why must she come here? Well, let her be—let her be. I canna concern mesel' wi' her, one way or t'other—nor ye neither," he said to Cob. "Ye can rest a bit, then out ye go. I want none o' the rebels in here."

Cob did not protest. "Aye, I'll be off." He yawned and docilely went out upon Thames Push a button! Get a station!

New Zenith table radio with PUSH-BUTTONS on top

Only Zenith has it! Get favorite stations instantly without dialing. Push-buttons are on top so you don't push radio off base!

Here's a beautifully modern Zenith table radio that does away with dialing and hunting for favorite stations.

A push of a button brings in a station, instantly. It's pin-pointed on the dial by a beam of light. And you push the buttons down without pushing the radio around!

There's nothing else like it on the market—for beauty of tone as well as ease of tuning. Has Zenith's exclusive LONG DISTANCE chassis with built-in WAVEMAGNET® antenna for clearest reception in any location. Centered in the cabinet is a big ZENITH-BUILT speaker activated by Alnico 5. (We build our own speakers to get the tone quality we want—to give you radio's finest listening.)

Hear it, operate it, at your Zenith Dealer's. In glamorous colors of Maroon, $39.95*; Green, Ivory, Red, $41.95*.

The Zenith Advance, AC-DC Table Radio, Model R512.

GREEN IVORY MAROON RED

ZENITH®
The royalty of television and RADIO

Backed by 36 Years of Experience in Radionics Exclusively

ALSO MAKERS OF FINE HEARING AIDS • Zenith Radio Corporation, Chicago 39, Ill.

*Manufacturer's suggested retail price, slightly higher in Far West and South. Specifications subject to change. COPR. 1954

'Sanforlan' Wools Wash!

Wools labeled "Sanforlan"
won't shrink out of fit...stay soft as new

Look for wool dresses you can wash—because they're labeled "Sanforlan"—or make them yourself from "Sanforlan" trade-marked yard goods.

Look for jackets, slacks, shirts, skirts, bathrobes you can keep soap-and-water fresh, soft as new—because they're labeled "Sanforlan."

Look for children's woolens that wash easily—baby things that never shrink, get hard or matted—because they're labeled "Sanforlan."

Look for sport shirts that wash like a breeze—for socks and sweaters that need no stretchers—because they're labeled "Sanforlan."

BROUGHT TO YOU BY THE "SANFORIZED" PEOPLE

Sanforlan®

Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc. permits use of its trade-mark "Sanforlan" only on woolen fabrics or garments which have been treated by procedures approved by this company and which meet its rigid requirements. When washed in accordance with recommended procedures for wool, garments bearing the trade-mark "Sanforlan" will not mat, felt, or shrink out of fit.

Street while Master Guy barred his door behind him.

Cob finished out his sleep on a stone bench in St. Magnus' Church porch and awakened when its bells rang out for prime. He munched on the delicious white bread and bacon with which he had prudently stuffed his pockets and glanced once toward the fishmonger's house where Lady Swynford slept, devoutly glad that he was rid of her and wondering that he had taken so much pains to care for her yesterday. A murrain on her and all her kind, thought Cob bitterly. He trotted off down the street toward the Tower and the rebel camp beyond it.

Here Cob was swept up by the wild excitement. Their leaders, Wat Tyler, Jack Strawe and the priest John Ball, were all ahorseback, galloping among their forces, which numbered by now nearly eighty thousand men. "Mile End! Mile End!" they shouted. The king was to meet them at Mile End. "Onward march to Mile End to meet the king!"

Cob surged forward with them, swarming and trampling over fields until they reached the meadow where the little king awaited them.

Richard sat pale and stiff upon his brightly caparisoned white horse. His crown was no more golden than his long curls, and in Cob's eyes and those of his fellows Richard's royal beauty shone round him like a halo. "God bless our king!" they cried.

The king smiled at them uncertainly and waved his hand, as Wat Tyler rode up to him for parley.

A dozen nobles were gathered behind the king—those who had been with him in the Tower. The little king gave no sign of fear as he nodded graciously to Wat and, after listening awhile, readily gave the verbal agreement his advisers had told him to.

The abolition of serfdom and a general pardon for all the rebels—these were what the tiler demanded first, and "Aye—it shall be done!" cried Richard in his high, childish voice. "The charters shall be prepared. Ye shall have them on the morrow."

This was not all that John Ball and Wat had drawn up as their requirements, but Wat thought it better not to press for too much at once. He seized Richard's hand and kissed it. Then he jumped on his horse and standing in the stirrups, shouted to the silent straining mob, "The king has agreed there's to be no more bondage!"

In the wild exulting turmoil Cob did not understand at first. He tugged at his neighbor and cried, "What is it? What did Wat say?"

"Why, man—he said we're free! King's granted it."

"Free?" whispered Cob, swallowing. A shiver ran down his back. "I didn't rightly believe 'twould ever happen," he whispered, and a sob rose in his throat. All around him men were leaping, laughing, crying.

HE and others took their time wandering back to the city. As he reached the camp at last a procession came through the postern gate from Tower Hill. John Ball led it on his mule, Wat Tyler and Jack Strawe followed on horses, and behind them seven members of the fellowship, each bearing a dripping head set on a pole. They marched triumphantly to the blithe rhythm of the pipes and tabors, and they held the heads high so all could see.

Cob wormed his way up to the front and gaped with the others. The first head that went by had belonged to Sudbury, the Archbishop of Canterbury.

"How'd they get him?" Cob cried, startled.

A Kentishman answered, "We rat in the Tower chapel—when we hour back. And there's Hales treasurer's head was mangled and profusely.

Four other heads passed by. Ther ened and squinted. "Ah, I know th said. "'Tis from yesterday at the S

"Aye. They say 'twas John o' G Gray Friar. Wat said since we did duke, we must show off his friar in

COB thought to himself that it about the Gray Friar, but you could custard without breaking eggs. He fi brand on his cheek and set to whist

The rebel camp that Friday ni happy one. John Ball spent the ni knees before the cross that was pla Catherine's Hill, thanking God fo tories they had won.

The king, too, and his meinie spe the night in prayer, but it was no thanksgiving. Richard had cried ou when he found what had happen

THE INTRUDER

By MARYA ZATURENSKA

Have you no eyes for me?
Whose wings have often beat Against your window seat
Dear love, let, let me in.

So wasted white, and thin
And dulling piteously
From long trial and denial,
Dear love, let, let me in.

"The hour is late, the night
Ingrown within my breast
Too late for all delight
And sleep is best."

No, loosen your dark hair
And gaze long, deep, and still,
You cannot fly or kill
The winged immortal joy
The flowering love.

Tower in his
He had wep gentle old a and been frig his mother, rebels had roughly but n

Next morn
ard and his pa fasted while another confe

"Your G have to meet cursed ribaud fear," said L bury gravely.
still play for t tell them to Smithfield; 'ti

That aftern led his men t new rendezvou been temper past days, but victory all bu had been lus brating, drink after mug out o wine that son men had take Lombard cella

Wat and J rode at the hea forces into S where tournan usually held, peasant force
in after them. Cob, in the vanguard, up a tree on the edge of the parade he was determined to see all that to Richard had sixty men with hi knights and lords in flashing armor.

alds' trumpets sounded with a flouri the king rode out to the center of the companied by Mayor Walworth and The mayor beckoned to Wat, who t and, dismounting, bobbed his knee ard, before seizing the boy's hand an it vigorously.

On the edge of the field the watch stiffened at this effrontery.

"Brother," cried Wat, beaming u king, "be o' good cheer, lad. Here's n thousand commons I've brought to y be stanch comrades, you and me."

Richard withdrew his pale small h
the tiler's clasp and said with childish ness, "Why won't you all go home to y places?"

Wat drew back and, swaggering said, "By God's skin and bones, hov go home till we get our charters! An more grants we must have too!"

"What are they?" asked Richard q

The tiler drew himself up and rehe the demands he and John Ball had cussing for weeks.

When he had finished, Richard inc small, crowned head and said, "You sh all this. 'Tis granted."

Wat drew a great exulting breath.
easiness penetrated his fuddled wits. T young face was unsmiling, the brig

T HUBBARD AYER
lcishes

Missing Moisture

MULAYER
ining miraculous

Ayerogen

BRINGS BEAUTY BACK TO LIFE IN 7 DAYS!

s skin deep . . . kept alive ll- rings of oil and water hid-ay elow the surface. When this ir s missing, your skin dries ge ows too soon.

e your beauty to missing ur . . . stay younger-looking consistent use of famous ld r, the only non-hormone taining active "Ayerogen," d pressly to conserve the pren ural moisture of your skin.

his special price . . . dis-v at Formulayer can do for n it seems to smooth out lines, t inkles, prevent skin flaking gi the radiant, dewy look of y ought to life.

skin begin to drink at er's "fountain of youth" . . .
d erence in just one week!

d Time Only

jar only 1.75 plus tax

rtment and drug stores everywhere

ET HUBBARD AYER
ORK • PARIS • LONDON

Plantagenet eyes were not so friendly as Wat had thought.

"Now I command that you shall all go home," said Richard sternly.

"Sure, sure we will," said Wat, but he was dismayed. The comradeship, the equality had somehow disappeared, and he tried to recapture them. He mounted his horse, so that he should be on a level with the king. "Me throat's dry as a bone, king," he cried. "How about a spot o' wine? Shall we share a drink to seal the pact?"

Over Richard's delicate face hot color flowed. He gestured to his squire, who ran and dipped water from a well near the priory and, bringing the dipperful back to Wat, held it out to him with sneering insolence.

"Water? Faw!" cried the discomfited tiler. Wat glared at the squire, slobbered up a great mouthful and with a vulgar noise squirted it out onto the dust.

"By God!" cried the young squire. "This greatest knave and robber in all Kent, look at the respect he shows the king's Grace!"

Wat started. "What was that ye called me?"

"Knave and robber!" shouted the squire.

Wat pulled his dagger and, kicking his horse, charged—not at the king, as it might seem, but past him toward the squire, who ran.

The mayor had been waiting for a chance. He spurred his horse, crying, "So, ribaud, you'd draw steel against your king!" and with his cutlass slashed sideways at Wat, carving deep into his shoulder. The tiler staggered, plunging his dagger blindly at the mayor, but it glanced off the coat of mail.

Richard's horse reared and snorted. The boy pulled him away from Wat, who lay thrashing on the ground, while Walworth and the squire hacked at him with furious blows of sword and cutlass.

"What's happening?" cried voices from the rebel side. "Wat's down, what is it?"

Soon they all saw Wat's terrified horse galloping across the field, dragging Wat's body by the stirrup.

"Christus, Christus!" cried John Ball. "They've killed Wat!"

THE rebel army stood gaping, paralyzed. The lords across Smithfield drew back white-faced and murmuring. Richard sat his horse stiffly in the center of the field. Then he flung his head back and dug the golden spurs of knighthood into his horse's flanks. He galloped straight toward the rebel lines and shouted, "So now I shall be your leader, as you wished me to!"

The rebels looked at one another, at Wat's body and up at the shining crowned youth. "Aye!" they cried. "Our little king is leader! Richard! Richard! We hold wi' you, Richard!"

The mayor had galloped up behind and, pulling his horse near, said in a low voice, "Lead them to Clerkenwell, your Grace, and keep them there. I'll soon be up with reinforcements."

"Follow me, good people!" Richard called. "Follow now your king!"

The peasant army gazed up at him with confiding trust. Had he not given them their freedom? Richard wheeled his horse and started off up along the Fleet toward the open farmlands.

When Walworth and Sir Robert Knolles arrived later with troops, the mayor also bore with him Wat the tiler's head, mounted on a pike. The rebels stared at Wat's head in terror and, turning again to the king, begged for mercy, which he sweetly granted. The peasants' great revolt was ended.

The loft above the fishshop was dark and gray when Katherine opened her eyes. She lay quietly for a time, wondering where she was, aware at first only of hunger and weakness. There had been a confusion of terrible dreams: sinister faces leering like gargoyles.

Katherine shuddered and sat up dizzily. Her gaze focused slowly and was caught by the little wooden calvary that stood on a bracket above a Pessoner clothes coffer. She stared at the cross, which was the size of Brother William's crucifix. She stared until it wavered and grew, until it loomed big as a window and blotted out all light behind it.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 107

Should the hostess be served—

☐ First ☐ Last ☐ In turn

If you lived in the days of the poison-dealing Borgias, you might want to de-jitter your guests! So—you'd be served first, to prove no cyanide lurked in the soup. But today, etiquette scowls on "me first" hostessing. Here, service should start with the femme in foreground (at right)—continuing clockwise; hostess to be served in turn. Being sure, builds your poise. That's why, on "those" days, you choose Kotex—assured no revealing outlines show, thanks to special flat pressed ends!

Are you in the know?

To snap out of a slump, try—

☐ Hi-fi ☐ Jumping rope ☐ Elastic

Droop shouldered? Make an elastic exerciser, 3 inches wide; for length measure your arm stretch (less 8 inches). Add loops for hand grips. Hold grips behind head; stretch arms out straight, counting slowly to 10. Rest. Repeat 10 times daily. Posture strengthens confidence—and so (on certain days) does Kotex. Try Regular, Junior, Super, to see which size best suits you. P.S.: Kotex can be worn on either side, safely!

What's a good wampum-magnet?

☐ Your piggy bank ☐ A bureau

Need extra mazuma? Have Mom help you set up an after-school-jobs bureau. Neighbors phone you for help wanted (to rake leaves, wash cars, run errands). Job minded kids apply to you, pay you 15% of their earnings. And at calendar time, let Kotex keep you comfortable. That chafe-free softness holds its shape; and you get non-fail absorbency!

More women choose KOTEX® than all other sanitary napkins

™ REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

Know someone who needs to know? Remember how puzzled you were when "that" day arrived for the first time? Maybe you know some youngster now who's in the same boat. Help her out! Send for new free booklet "You're A Young Lady Now". Written for girls 9 to 12, tells all she needs to know, beforehand. Write P.O. Box 3434, Dept. 18104, Chicago 11, Ill.

CELESTE — Five-piece place setting, 10.75

Beauty that works for a

Prices slightly higher West of the Rockies

HARMONY — Five-piece place setting, 16.7

Beauty in form and design to give you lasting pleasure. Here are some of the many exquisite Syracuse patterns which vary from enchanting traditional charm to sophisticated modern simplicity. Among these marvels of poise and balance, you'll find a pattern perfectly suited for your personality... your decorative scheme. So choose from this select collection.. and know that you're buying "the world's finest"... SYRACUSE China

Free Portfolio of Syracuse China patterns in full color...with helpful hints on choosing, using and caring for your china. Send for your copy today. Syracuse China, Dept. J-10, Syracuse 4, N.Y.

USE IT DA

ABAMA
Goodwin Jewelry Co.
A. & A. Ash, Inc.
obe Rose Jewelry Co.
eman, Joseph & Loeb
Mefford's Jewelers
C. F. Hoffman & Sons
oldstein & Sons, Inc.
Klein & Sons
Fincher & Ozment
The Jewel Box

RIZONA
Dorris Heyman Co.
Rosenwieg's
Grondona's

KANSAS
Cave's Jewelers
Pfeifer's of Arkansas Brothers Hardware Co.
ed Vining Jewelry Co.

IFORNIA
kersfield Hardware Co.
J. F. Hink & Son
J. W. Robinson Co.
Myron Walsh
Gottschalk's
Barker Bros.
k. Bluemle and Gibson
Barker Bros.
Dohrmann's
Barker Bros.

Denver McKenzie-Thomas, Inc.
Denver The May Co.
Pueblo Crews-Beggs Dry Goods Co.
Pueblo Fisher Jewelry Co.

CONNECTICUT
Bridgeport D. M. Read Co.
Bridgeport G. W. Fairchild & Sons Bridgeport Michaels, Inc.
Bridgeport Spectors, Inc.
Hartford G. Fox & Company
Hartford Michaels, Inc.
Hartford Phillip H. Stevens Co.
New Britain Beacon Book & Gift Shop
New Britain Michaels, Inc.
New Haven S. H. Kirby Jewelers
New Haven Michaels, Inc.
New Haven B. Spector & Bros., Inc.
New Haven Wylie's
Norwich J. & G. H. Bliss Jewelers
Norwich The Modern Jewelers
South Norwalk Michaels, Inc.
Stamford Brown's, Inc.
Stamford Cowlin's
Stamford Grunberger, Inc.
Waterbury J. R. Clayton Co.
Waterbury Michaels, Jewelers
Waterbury W. E. Pierpont, Jewelers
Waterbury The China Shop
Waterbury Morris A. Green
Waterbury R. R. Strisik Company

DELAWARE
Wilmington Strawbridge & Clothier

Cedar Rapids Newman's
Cedar Rapids Prastka Jewelers
Davenport Folwell Crockery Co.
Des Moines Younker Bros., Inc.
Fort Dodge Olson Jewelry
Iowa City Wayner's
Mason City Kathryn's China & Gift
Mason City Peterson China Center
Sioux City Sioux City Crockery Co.
Waterloo The James Black Dry Goods Co.
Waterloo The Davidson Company

KANSAS
Hutchinson Pegues-Wright
Kansas City Goldman Jewelry Co.
Topeka Crosby Brothers, Inc.
Wichita Carl Barrier, Jewelers & Silversmiths
Wichita Helzberg's
Wichita George Innes Company

KENTUCKY
Lexington The Purcell Co., Inc.
Louisville Dolfinger China Co.
Louisville Kaufman-Straus Co., Inc.

LOUISIANA
Baton Rouge Goudchaux's
Baton Rouge Norman's Jewelers
Lake Charles Rester's Jewelers
Lake Charles Rider Jewelry Co.
Monroe Durrett Hwde. & Furnit. Co.
Monroe Howard Brothers Jewelers
Monroe Masur Brothers

Minneapolis PowersDryGoodsCo., Inc.
Rochester H. C. Winkle-China Hall
St. Paul Emporium
St. Paul The Golden Rule

MISSISSIPPI
Biloxi Elliott Jewelry Co.
Jackson Albriton Jewelers
Jackson Carter Jewelers

MISSOURI
Joplin Newman Mercantile Co.
Kansas City Emery-Bird-Thayer
Kansas City Glass & China House
Kansas City Hall Brothers, Inc.
Kansas City Helzberg's
Kansas City Macy's
Kansas City The Jones Stores Co.
St. Louis Famous Barr Company
St. Louis Kiefer's Jewlrs. & Optomet.
St. Louis Scruggs, Vandervoort & Barney
St. Louis Stix, Baer & Fuller Co.
Springfield Heer's, Inc.
Springfield Shirk Jewelry

MONTANA
Billings The Gift Shop
Bozeman Chambers Fisher Co.
Butte Hennessy Co.
Helena Helena Hardware Co.

NEBRASKA
Lincoln Gold & Company
Omaha Omaha Crockery Company

NEW HAMPSHIRE
Manchester Lemay Brothers

Raleigh Neiman's, Inc.
Wilmington Berman Jewelers, Inc.
Wilmington Kingoff's, Inc.
Winston-Salem Hunts', Inc.

NORTH DAKOTA
Fargo The Luger Furniture Co.

OHIO
Akron M. O'Neil Company
Akron Polsky's
Canton Deuble's
Canton Hillman's
Cincinnati A. B. Closson Jr. Co.
Cincinnati John Shillito Company
Cleveland Ruth Coulter Galleries
Cleveland Halle Brothers Co.
Cleveland The Higbee Company
Cleveland Sterling, Lindner & Davis
Columbus F. & R. Lazarus Company
Columbus Warwick's Gift Shop
Dayton Rike-Kumler Company
Hamilton Burns Jewelers
Lima Johnson's Furniture & Gifts, Inc.
Lorain Lorain Gift Shop
Marion Carroll's Jewelry Store
Middletown Fenzel McDonough
Springfield Denton's, Inc.
Steubenville W. G. Spies Company
Toledo Lamson Brothers Co.
Toledo La Salle & Koch Co.
Toledo Harold W. Taft
Youngstown Chas. Carolyne, Inc.
Youngstown M. McKelvey Company

Memphis Charles C. Owens Jeweler
Nashville Cain-Sloan Co., Inc.
Nashville Phillips & Buttorff Mfg. Co.

TEXAS
Abilene Busch & Sons of Texas, Inc.
Abilene Goulding's Jewelry
Abilene Lesters Jewelers
Abilene Thornton's
Amarillo Bagot Hdwe. Co.
Amarillo Blackburn Bros. Gift Shop
Amarillo Sam A. Fenberg & Sons, Inc.
Amarillo Lewis Jewelers
Amarillo Wagner's Jewelers
Amarillo White & Kirk
Austin J. Koen & Sons, Jewelers
Austin Kruger Jewelry Co.
Beaumont White House Dry Goods
Corpus Christi Brodkey's Jewelers
Corpus Christi Fedway Stores
Corpus Christi Lester's Jewelers
Dallas Arthur A. Everts Co.
Dallas A. Harris & Co.
Dallas Polly Du Pont
Dallas Sanger Brothers
Dallas Titche-Goettinger Co.
El Paso Feders Jewelers, Inc.
El Paso The White House
Fort Worth The Fair Store
Fort Worth W. C. Strippling Co.
Galveston J. L. Lopez Jewelry
Galveston Melcer's Jewelry Store Houston Foley Brothers, living!

No need to pamper Syracuse' rare loveliness high on a cupboard shelf. Use it every day—so family and friends can constantly enjoy its smooth lustre, superb translucence, rich colors, glorious designs. Syracuse China is beautiful all the way through... famous for its unusually strong body, hard glaze and exceptionally long life. Such quality and beauty at such modest prices represent the ultimate in value... the reason, perhaps, that more Syracuse China is made and sold than any other American fine china.

SYRACUSE China

LOVE IT LONG... FIND IT HERE AT THESE STORES

ORNIA (Cont.)
Bullock's Downtown
Bullock's Westwood
Dohrmann's
J. W. Robinson Co.
H. C. Capwell Co.
Kahn's
Barker Bros.
Bullock's
F. C. Nash & Co.
Barker Bros.
Earl W. Wilkinson
Dohrmann's
dward A. Grebitus & Son Vienstock, Lubin & Co.
Harris Store
armalee Dohrmann Co.
Dohrmann's
The Emporium
Nathan Dohrmann Co.
Rankin's
Ott Hdwe. Co.
Barker Bros.

N. Dohrmann Co.
Barker Bros.
Barker Bros.

COLORADO
ings Mahan Jewelry Co.
Denver Dry Goods Co.

Wilmington The Crockery Den
Wilmington John Wanamaker

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Washington, D.C. Woodward & Lothrop

FLORIDA
Gainesville Rutherfords
Jacksonville Underwood Jewelers
Jacksonville Charles L. Wells, Jeweler
Miami Burdine's
Orlando Lawton Jewelers
Orlando Long's
Pensacola Elebash Jewelry Co.
Pensacola Nickelson Jewelry Co.
St. Petersburg Louise Ainsworth, Inc.
Tampa Adams Magnon Jewelers
Tampa Beckwith Range
Tampa Maas Brothers, Inc.
W. Palm Beach Palm Beach Mercantile Co.

GEORGIA
Atlanta Rich's
Augusta H. Schmerling
Columbus Max Rosenberg Co., Inc.
Macon Carl Hay's, Inc.
Macon Kernaghan, Inc.
Savannah Desbouillon's
Savannah Levy Jewelers

IDAHO
Boise Cash Bazaar
Boise Green Griffin Co.

ILLINOIS
Aurora Leona Connery
Bloomington Chadband Jewelry
Bloomington Waldman's, Inc.
Champaign Tepper's China Store
Champaign W. Lewis & Company
Chicago Carson, Pirie, Scott
Chicago Croydon China Co.
Chicago The Fair
Chicago Marshall Field
Chicago Wieboldt Stores, Inc.
Danville Fred Frame Jewelers
Decatur Walter Flora & Sons Elmhurst Midwest China Co.
Evanston Wieboldt Stores, Inc.
Oak Park Wieboldt Stores, Inc.
Peoria Block & Kuhl Company
Peoria Cardoza's, Ltd.
Peoria Homer Coulter, Jewelers
Quincy Dryden Jewelers
Quincy Halbach-Schroeder Co.
Rockford Martin Gustafson's
Rockford Allens Crockery Store
Rockford Hultberg's
Springfield McDonald Art & Book Store
Springfield John Bressmer Co.
Springfield J. Ralph Tobin & Son

INDIANA
Anderson Star China Co.
Anderson W. T. Walker, Jeweler
Elkhart Sigmund Sorg, Inc.
Fort Wayne Hillman China Co
Gary Palace of Flowers
Hammond Tilles, Inc.
Indianapolis L. S. Ayres & Co.
Indianapolis Wm. H. Block Co.

Monroe Peacock's Inc. of Monroe
New Orleans D. H. Holmes Co., Ltd.
New Orleans Maison Blanche Co
Shreveport La Tienda, Inc.
Shreveport Peacock's Jewelers
Shreveport Southern Gift Shop

MAINE
Lewiston Henry Nolin, Jeweler
Lewiston B. Peck & Company
Portland Porteous Mitchell & Braun Co.
Portland Geo. T. Springer Co.

MARYLAND
Baltimore Brager-Eisenberg, Inc.
Baltimore Hutzler Brothers Co.
Baltimore The May Co.
Baltimore Stewart & Co., Inc.
Cumberland Rosenbaum Brothers
Hagerstown Roy L. Mundey Jeweler
Hagerstown Charles E. Eyerly Co.
Hagerstown Milton Kohler & Sons
Hagerstown Harry S. Myers, Inc.

MASSACHUSETTS
Boston Cooley's, Inc.
Boston Jordan Marsh Company
Boston R. H. Stearns Co.
Boston A. Stowell Co.
Brockton Romm & Company, Inc.
Fitchburg Harry's Jewelry
Haverhill Karelis Jewelers, Inc.
Holyoke Frederick's Jewelers of Holyoke, Inc.
Holyoke M. Stein, Inc.
Lawrence A. B. Sutherland
Lawrence Caliri Bros. Co.
Lowell The Bon Marche, Inc.
New Bedford Poor Brothers
Pittsfield England Brothers
Pittsfield J. F. Kahl Co.
Quincy Sheridan's
Salem Almy, Bigelow & Washburn, Inc.
Salem Bernard's, Inc.
Springfield Forbes & Wallace
Springfield Frederick's Jewelers
Springfield Hall Galleries—Albert Steiger Co.
Waltham Grover Cronin
West Springfield Lotus China & Glass Co., Inc.
Worcester Denholm & McKay
Worcester Sharfman's Jewelers

MICHIGAN
Ann Arbor Chester Roberts Gifts
Battle Creek Griswold China Co.
Bay City Herman Hiss & Company
Detroit Grinnell Brothers
Detroit J. L. Hudson Company
Detroit L. B. King Company
Detroit Pongracz Jewelers
Flint McLogan & Austin
Grand Rapids Paul Steketee Sons

Grand Rapids The Wurzburg Co.
Jackson Beckwith's
Jackson L. H. Field Company
Kalamazoo Gilmore Brothers
Lansing The F. N. Arbaugh Co.
Lansing J. W. Knapp Company
Monroe Ohio China Company
Muskegon A. Krautheim, Jeweler
Pontiac Connolly's Jewelers
Saginaw Morley Brothers

MINNESOTA
Duluth Bagley & Co.
Duluth Edward F. Wahl Company
Minneapolis Dayton Company
Minneapolis L. S. Donaldson Co.

NEW JERSEY
Atlantic City M. E. Blatt Company
East Orange Hostess House
East Orange Jolly Tar Gift Shop
Elizabeth R. J. Goerke Co.
Jersey City Nelmor Jewelers
Jersey City New Jordan's Gift Shop
Montclair The Potter's, Inc.
Newark L. Bamberger & Company
New Brunswick P. J. Young Passaic Wechsler's
Paterson Meyer Bros.
Paterson Quackenbush Company
Paterson Van Dyke Furniture Co.
Trenton Reid's Jewelers

NEVADA
Elko E. F. Cox Jewelry
Las Vegas Bertha's
Reno Bohlman's

NEW MEXICO
Albuquerque Cappia Gift House
Albuquerque Fedway Stores
Albuquerque Zale's Jewelry Co.

NEW YORK
Albany The Linen Chest, Inc.
Albany Van Huesen Charles Company
Albany W. M. Whitney & Company
Auburn H. R. Wait Co., Inc.
Binghamton Rosenthal & Rubin
Brooklyn Abraham & Straus
Bronx Hermitage China Co.
Buffalo J. N. Adams & Company
Buffalo William Hengerer Company
Elmira George W. Peck Co.
Hempstead Community China Co.
Kingston Safford & Scudder
Jamaica B. Gertz, Inc.
Jamestown Abrahamson-Bigelow Co.
Mount Vernon Adam Jewelry
New Rochelle Anne's Art Corner
New York B. Altman & Company
New York Bloomingdale Brothers, Inc.
New York Cardel, Ltd.
New York Gimbel Brothers
New York R. H. Macy & Co.
New York W. H. Plummer & Co.
New York John Wanamaker
Niagara Falls Beir Brothers, Inc.
Niagara Falls Jenss Bros., Inc.
Port Richmond Modern Gift Shop
Poughkeepsie Luckey, Platt & Co.
Poughkeepsie H. Arnold Wood Co.
Rochester E. W. Edwards & Son
Rochester Hershberg's, Inc.
Rochester McCurdy & Company
Rochester Sibley, Lindsay & Curr Co.

Schenectady H. S. Barney Co.
Syracuse Dey Bros. & Co.
Syracuse E. W. Edwards & Son
Troy Adel's
Troy Ann's Gift Shop
Troy R. C. Reynolds Co.
Utica J. B. Wells & Sons Co.
Utica W. B. Wilcox Co.
White Plains The Gift Box
White Plains Mazur Bros., Inc.
Yonkers Henry Resnick, Inc.

NORTH CAROLINA
Asheville Hursey & Co.
Charlotte J. B. Ivey & Co.
Durham Ellis Stone & Co.
Fayetteville Sterling Jewelers, Inc
Greensboro Schiffman Jewelry Co.
High Point Albert's
High Point Perkinson Jewelry Co.
Raleigh Jolly's

Youngstown Strauss-Hirshberg Co.

OKLAHOMA
Enid Newman Mercantile Co.
Oklahoma City Harbour-Longmire
Oklahoma City W. J. Pettee & Co.
Tulsa Vandever Dry Goods Co.

OREGON
Eugene The Gift Shop
Portland Meier & Frank Portland Olds & King
Salem Allen Hdwe. Co.

PENNSYLVANIA
Allentown Hess Brothers
Allentown Smoyer's Jewelry
Altoona William F. Gable Co.
Bethlehem Haber Jewelers
Bethlehem C. E. Hinkle
Chester Cooley-Lilley
Easton A. B. Bixler Jewelry Store
Easton William Laubach & Son
Erie Trask Prescott & Richardson Co.
Erie Erie Dry Goods Co.
Harrisburg Bowman's Dept. Store, Inc.
Harrisburg Pomerov's, Inc.
Hazelton Blumer's
Hazelton Felin's
Johnstown Penn Traffic Co.
Lancaster Hager & Bros., Inc.
Lancaster Zook's Jewelers, Inc.
McKeesport Morrow's, Inc.
New Castle Strouss Hirschberg
Norristown Robert J. Snyder, Jeweler
Philadelphia Bailey, Banks & Biddle Co.
Philadelphia Gimbel Brothers
Philadelphia Strawbridge & Clothier
Philadelphia John Wanamaker
Pittsburgh Gimbel Brothers
Pittsburgh Joseph Horne Co.
Pittsburgh John M. Roberts & Son Co.
Reading Bechtel, Lutz & Jost, Inc.
Scranton Carter's, Inc.
Scranton The Globe
Wilkes Barre Isaac Long Store
Williamsport L. L. Stearns & Sons
Williamsport Ralph B. Grammer York S. Grumbacher & Sons York Pottery Hill, Inc.

RHODE ISLAND
Pawtucket Michaels-Bauer, Inc.
Providence The Outlet Co.

Providence Callender, McAuslan & Troup Co.
Providence Michaels-Bauer, Inc.
Providence The Shepard Co.
Providence Tilden-Thurber Corp.
Woonsocket Arthur Baudett

SOUTH CAROLINA
Columbia Hamilton, Inc., Jewelers
Columbia The Sterling Shop, Inc.
Columbia James L. Tapp Co.
Florence Dixie China Co.
Greenville Hales Jewelers
Spartanburg August W. Smith

SOUTH DAKOTA
Sioux Falls Shriver-Johnson Co.

TENNESSEE
Chattanooga Miller Bros.
Chattanooga Templeton's Jewelers
Knoxville Kimball's Inc.
Knoxville Miller's, Inc.
Knoxville W. W. Woodruff Hdwe. Co.
Memphis J. Goldsmith & Sons Co.
Memphis The John Gerber Co.
Memphis B. Lowenstein & Bros., Inc.
Memphis Perel & Lowenstein, Jewelers

Houston Good Housekeeping, Inc.
Houston Joske's of Texas
Houston G. A. Stowers Furniture Co.
Houston J. J. Sweeney Jewelry Co.
Laredo Leon Daiches Jewelers
Lubbock Anderson Brothers
Lubbock Hemphill Wells Co.
Lubbock Zale's Jewelry
Port Arthur Gibson Layman Jewelers
Port Arthur W. D. Weller's
San Angelo Nathan's Jewelers
San Antonio Joske's of Texas
San Antonio Naomi's Gift Shop
San Antonio The Vogue
Tyler Dickason, Jewelry Co.
Waco Armstrong's Jewelers
Waco R. E. Cox Company
Waco The Goldstein Migel Co., Inc.
Wichita Falls Kruger Jewelry Co.

UTAH
Salt Lake City Anderson Jewelry
Salt Lake City Auerbach Co.
Salt Lake City Cardall's
Salt Lake City Z. C. M. I.

VERMONT
Burlington The Old Bee Hive
Burlington Abernathy, Clarkson, Wright, Inc.
Burlington Lippa & Co.
Rutland Economy Dept. Store
Rutland Freeman-Hascall Jewelers
Rutland F. B. Howard Co., Inc.

VIRGINIA
Lynchburg J. R. Millner Co., Inc.
Newport News Barclay & Sons
Norfolk D. P. Paul Co.
Norfolk Max Schwan Corp.
Norfolk Smith & Welton
Petersburg C. F. Lauterbach's Sons
Portsmouth Cooper's, Inc.
Richmond Miller & Rhoads, Inc.
Richmond Richmond Art Co.
Richmond Schwarzschild Bros., Inc.
Richmond E. B. Taylor Co.
Richmond Thalhimer Bros., Inc.
Roanoke Thurman & Boone Co., Inc.
Roanoke S. H. Heironimus Co., Inc.

WASHINGTON
Seattle Bon Marche, Inc.
Seattle Ernest Hardware Co.
Seattle Frederick & Nelson
Spokane Spokane Dry Goods Co.
Tacoma LeRoy's
Tacoma Rhodes Brothers
Yakima Yakima Hardware Co.

WEST VIRGINIA
Charleston Coffey's, Inc.
Charleston The Diamond
Charleston Woodrum Home Outfitters
Huntington Anderson Newcomb Co.
Huntington Bradshaw Diehl Co.
Huntington O. B. Wise

WISCONSIN
Eau Claire Lasker's, Inc., Jewelers
Green Bay H. C. Prange Co.
Green Bay Roland Crockery Co.
Kenosha Phillips Gift Shoppe
La Crosse Garvalia China Shop
Madison Robert E. Douglass Co.
Madison Harry S. Manchester, Inc.
Milwaukee S. J. Casper Co., Inc.
Milwaukee T. A. Chapman Company
Milwaukee Gimbel Bros.
Racine Cook-Gere Co.
Racine Jensens
Sheboygan B. Rudnick, Inc.
Superior Bridelle's House of Gifts
Superior Roth Bros. Co.

WYOMING
Cheyenne Dan S. Park & Co.
Gillette La Bonte Gift Shop
Sheridan Pohl's Gift Shop

We wish it were possible to list ALL the fine dealers who handle Syracuse China. If you do not find a Syracuse dealer convenient to you on this page, write for additional listing to SYRACUSE CHINA, Syracuse 4, N.Y.

INTRODUCING GORHAM "WILLOW," the new American Modern look in a sterling pattern that's a subtle blend of Far East and the West. 3 pcs. shown, $

INTRODUCING GORHAM "THEME," the exciting new American Modern pattern that derives cool beauty from the Scandinavian. 3 pcs. shown, $16.50

Gorham introduces the "American Modern" look in two brilliant new sterling patterns

It takes two, yes, two new patterns to tell you the whole exciting story of this American Modern look. Because American Modern in furniture, in textiles, and now in sterling is no one rigidly stylized form. Rather, it's a timeless kind of good design that draws for inspiration on the whole wide world.

Lovely Gorham "Willow."* for example, borrows its fluid grace and sophisticated use of a simple nature form from the Far East: while Gorham "Theme"* owes much to Scandinavia for its calm reflective qualities and clean-swept look.

American Modern, you might say as you see it here, is modern grown up. There's a new kind of thinking in the way each piece is designed to do its own special job and also have more than one use. To give you an idea: the knife and fork are a new size and weight that are as elegantly correct for a formal dinner as for a casual family lunch. (The knife has Gorham's one-piece seamless handle that never rattles, resists dents.)

And there's the new spreader (or buffet knife) that teams up with the salad fork for buffet dining. But you must see these new Gorham* American Moderns to appreciate how easy they are to live with, how all the pieces are designed to complement each other and fit the different ways you like to serve.

Ask your dealer to show you new Gorham "Willow" and new Gorham "Theme." When you see them, you'll know it's Gorham Sterling, the finer sterling you want to own. Six-piece placesetting (consisting of teaspoon, new size place and spoon, hollow handle spreader and s gives maximum use with minimum of p $32.50. 16 piece starter sets to serve four incl. Fed. Tax. Budget payment plans ava

Gorham
STERLING

AMERICA'S LEADING SILVERSMITHS S

*TRADE MARKS © 1954 BY THE GORHAM CO. PROV

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 103

...he whispered, shrinking back onto ...esu, no!" She pushed her hands out ...her as though she pushed against a ...ght. Her breath came sharp and fast. ...moment she pulled herself off the ...ooked down at her green gown. It ...ort below the knees and spotted with

...ave mercy on me," said Katherine ...r those were no dreams." Her nails ...nto her sweating palms, she stum...gh the door toward the stairs.

...Guy had brought Dame Emma back ...elen's Priory, the danger being over. ...vife was standing by the hearth, di... maids who were laying the fire.

...mma started as Katherine wavered ... stairs clinging to the rail. "Sweet ...ary!" cried Emma, running to her. ... ye were asleep."

...ette," said Katherine in a faint dead ..."ust find Blanchette. What day is it

...nday," said Dame Emma. "But ye ...ywhere like that, my lady. Sit down! ...us, what's happened?"

...Emma poured forth a stream of ...quiry. She made Katherine sit on the ... put a pillow to her head. She fed ...p by sip until faint color came back ...ow cheeks.

...the swimming feebleness had gone, ...y body had taken up its ordered ...g again, and ...ady.

...you a horse ...y borrow?" ..."I must find .... God help ...much time

...ocilelycom... ...d her hus... ...elding and ...y saddle it. ...d Katherine ...f Hawise's ...set-colored ...ut nothing ...suade her to ...rine go un...

...plied through the streets. The dame ...hat she herself would go pillion ...atherine.

...ne made no objection to Dame ...ompany, nor to the armed prentice ...ame routed out from the fishhouse. ...ot speak as they rode through Lon... ...s toward Ludgate, and beyond it to

...Emma's cheerful chatter was soon ...er comely face fell into dismay and ...ound-eyed horror when they skirted ... of the Temple. Ahead of them the ... always loomed in a piled mass of ... walls, of gleaming white turrets ...cles with fluttering pennants. Now ... nothing, no shape against the empty ...ing but a vast expanse of rubble.

...a thing canna be," Dame Emma ...d, crossing herself. "Lady dear—I ...w 'twould be like this."

...ne did not answer. She dismounted ...prentice held the horse, and began to ...ard the ruins, Dame Emma behind ...turned through the blocks of fallen ...that had been the gatehouse.

...INE stumbled on, picking her way ...red fragments of beams and black... ...es until she saw high above her the ...f the fireplace that had been in the ...chamber. Up there, where there was ...floor, they had stood when Brother ...was killed—she and Blanchette. On ... the girl had spoken to the black... ...der before she ran toward the stairs. ...e turned. From the place where the ... been a little cloud of steamy smoke

...ing," said Dame Emma, laying her ... Katherine's arm, "come away, do. ...ought here but ruin. The little lass'll ... to safety somewhere, ye'll find her." ...fety," repeated Katherine. "Nay— ...ot think of safety when she ran from me. Dame Emma, go away! Leave me alone awhile! Leave me ——"

She sank to her knees by a block of burned stone. Dame Emma obeyed, profoundly shocked. She withdrew to the mass of fallen stone at the gatehouse. She looked back into the distance where she could just see Lady Katherine. She had moved, and was now with bent head walking slowly about the outer ward. While Dame Emma watched, she saw the tall russet-clad figure lean over and pick up something before coming toward the dame.

Katherine held out an object. "Look," she said. "Do you see this, Dame Emma?"

It was a small, silvery, half-melted mass. The dame said uncertainly, "Is't a clasp?"

"I think so," said Katherine. "It might be the clasp on Blanchette's chamber robe."

The dame stifled her gasp of dismay and cried heartily, "Nay, 'tis no clasp—and if it were, it means nought."

"BLANCHETTE was touched by madness when she ran from the Avalon Chamber," said Katherine in the same toneless voice. "'Twas not from the horror of the Gray Friar's blood, but from the horror of what she had heard him say."

"Think not o' horrors, dear!" cried Dame Emma. "This does no good."

"Ah, but I must think on it," said Katherine. "Good dame, you don't know what my sin has been. I did not wholly know, but the Gray Friar did, and God in His vengeance has stricken my innocent child as the first measure of my punishment."

"Nay, nay," Dame Emma expostulated, anxious only to get Katherine back to dryness and comfort.

Katherine said no more, and came with Dame Emma, unprotesting. She mounted the horse and they rode until they came to the Church of St. Clement Danes, when Katherine pulled up the gelding. "It was here that I married Hugh Swynford." She dismounted. "Dame Emma, please leave me here and go home. I've no need of protection—do you think any danger could matter to me now?" She turned into the church porch as the dame reluctantly rode off.

Katherine knelt by the altar rail. Here in this church had been the beginning of two long roads: one that ended in a shabby little room in Bordeaux in a death that would not have been except for her; the other road had ended in blood and fire and madness in the Avalon Chamber.

Above in the tower the bell began to toll for vespers, and Katherine arose and pushed aside a leather curtain. It was the priest himself who hauled the rope, and he stared at her in astonishment.

"Father," said Katherine, "was it you who was priest here fifteen years ago? Did you once come from Lincolnshire?"

"Aye, my daughter. What is it?"

"I wish to make confession to you. I am a Swynford, father—Katherine Swynford, Sir Hugh Swynford's widow. Aye, I see that means something to you."

He remembered well the marriage, and remembered the moment when the great Duke and Duchess of Lancaster had appeared in his church.

But when he listened through the grille to the woman's anguished voice, he was appalled. Murder of Sir Hugh, her husband—not deliberate, but murder in God's sight, a Gray Friar had said so. Ten years of adultery with the Duke of Lancaster resultant upon this murder. And she spoke of a child who had been driven mad, who might be dead too.

"Cease, daughter!" said the priest at last. "I cannot grant you absolution, no priest could."

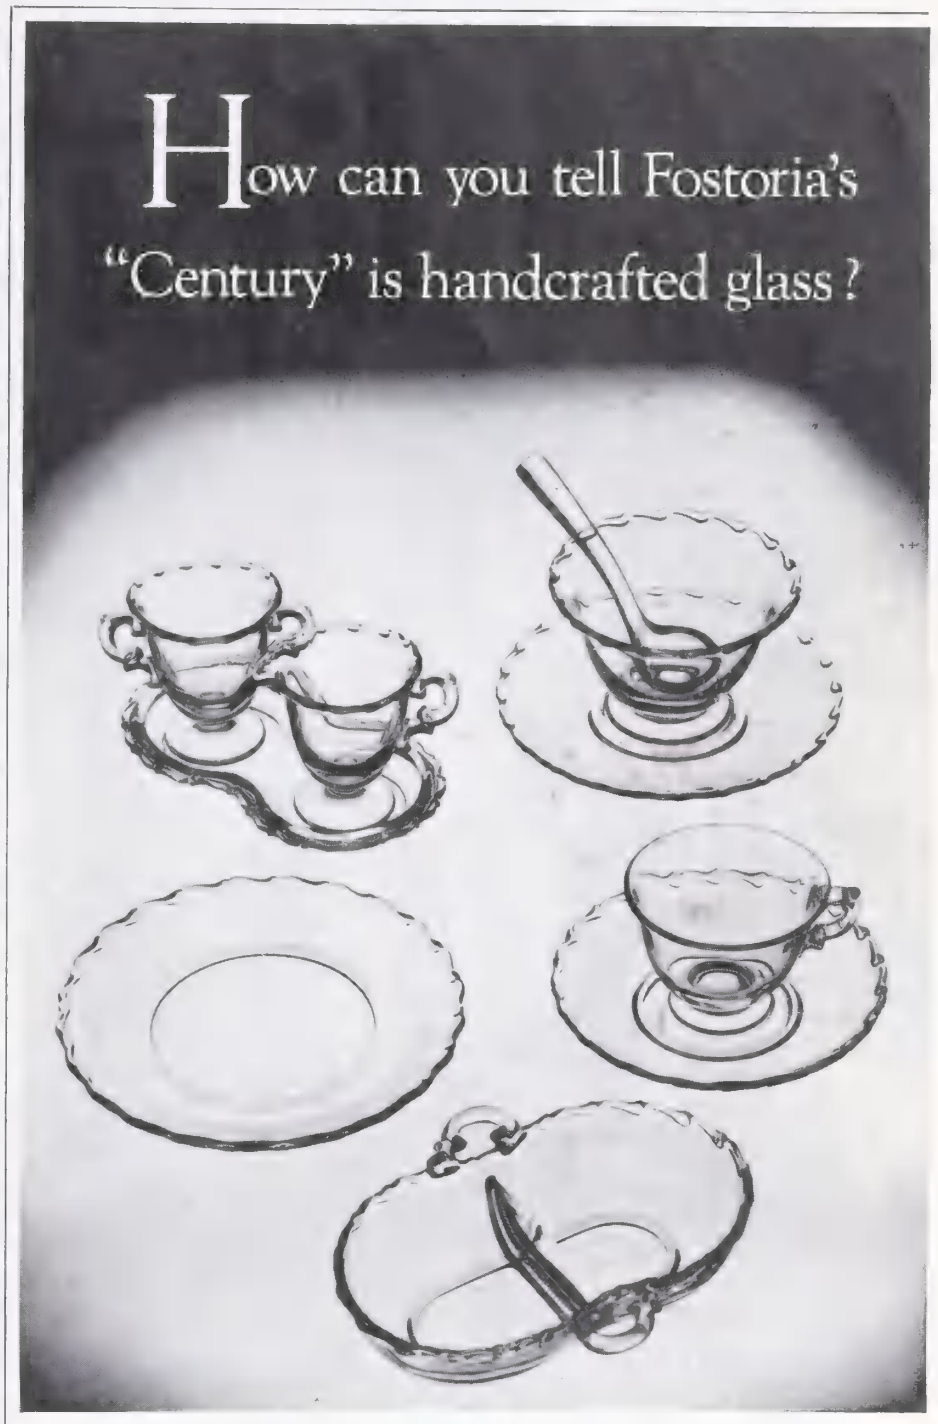
"I know," said Katherine. "'Tis not of my own soul I'm thinking. It is of my child's. Father, surely a merciful God will accept from me some penance that will save Blanchette wherever she be."

"Penance—aye, what penance?" stammered the little priest.

It came clearer to his panicking mind that this woman was protected by the duke, who was all-powerful and might remove a meddlesome priest as easily as he would squash a fly. On the other hand, the duke's great palace had been burned and he was hated by the common folk whose vengeance also might include a priest.

"True contrition, give up your evil life, make reparation, mortify your senses," he gabbled quickly. "Daughter, I cannot tell you what else—go to your own priest. Go—go," and he pulled the shutter over the grille.

Katherine walked from the church with dragging steps. By St. Paul's close she stopped and gazed up at the great cathedral spire. After a while she entered the huge shadowed nave and walked to the chantry by the Lady Chapel where two candles burned on the little altar and shone on the serene alabaster face.



Katherine knelt beside the tomb and reached out to touch one corner of the sculptured robe while she spoke to the Lady Blanche: "Dearest lady—if I have wronged you, too, forgive, but you know that I never meant wrong toward you. You know what it is to love him, as I have

CONTINUED ON PAGE 110

There is perhaps no surer mark of folly than to attempt to correct the natural infirmities of those we love. The finest composition of human nature, as well as the finest china, may have a flaw in it; and this, I am afraid, in either case, is equally incurable; though nevertheless, the pattern may remain of the highest value.

—HENRY FIELDING

How can you tell Fostoria's "Century" is handcrafted glass?

HOLD it up to the light. Handmade glass like Century has a swirling, liquid quality there's no mistaking. It's clear, like ice, but it has more sparkle than Jack Frost ever made! Fostoria craftsmen take molten glass from a furnace, shape it ever so deftly. Then they polish it in flame—that's where the smooth brilliance comes from. All this explains why Century will look so beautiful on your table—or with your card as a gift. Prices are modest; for instance, your choice in the illustration above ranges in price from $1.40* to $3.25*. In open stock because it's made by the Fostoria Glass Company in Moundsville, West Virginia.

slightly higher in the West*

FOSTORIA

never before a lipstick so red!

Now Toni brings you a new lipstick in SIX of the most vivid shades any woman has ever worn!

Here's a new depth of color for your lips!

No woman before you has ever worn such vivid shades. There just never has been a lipstick so red—so wonderfully, so excitingly red, as this new VIV lipstick by Toni!

VIV comes in a range of six vivid shades from pink to plum, shades that make you feel and look vividly alive. Each is more vivid than reds have ever been before because Toni has found a way to add a new depth of color to lipstick.

Long-lasting colors stay on— keep lips soft and moist.

New VIV is the comfortable, long-lasting lipstick.

Choose your favorite shade and see what VIV, the really vivid lipstick, can do for you.

$1.10 plus tax

new VIV by Toni

© THE GILLETTE CO.

omfortable long-lasting lipstick

NEW!

DOCTOR'S DEODORANT DISCOVERY*

SAFELY STOPS ODOR 24 HOURS A DAY!

New Mum with M-3 won't irritate normal skin or damage fabrics

Proved in underarm comparison tests made by a doctor. Deodorant without M-3, tested under one arm, stopped perspiration odor only a few hours. New Mum with M-3, tested under other arm, stopped odor a full 24 hours.

1. *Exclusive deodorant based originally on doctor's discovery, now contains long-lasting M-3 (Hexachlorophene).

2. Stops odor all day long because invisible M-3 clings to your skin—keeps on destroying odor bacteria a full 24 hours.

3. Non-irritating to normal skin. Use it daily. Only leading deodorant containing no strong chemical astringents—will not block pores.

4. Won't rot or discolor fabrics—certified by American Institute of Laundering.

5. Delicate new fragrance. Creamier texture—new Mum won't dry out in the jar.

6. Gentle, safe, dependable—ideal for sanitary napkins, too. Get new Mum today.

NEW MUM

cream deodorant with long-lasting M-3

(HEXACHLOROPHENE)

PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 107

loved him. So forgive—and tell me how to save my child who is your namesake."

The lovely face shimmered in the dimness of the chantry, pure and cool as a star. A spirit. How should it give comfort to one who had denied the spirit these long years, who had lived for nothing but her own desires?

Outside the cathedral the gray daylight waned. Along the choir aisles a verger passed and stared curiously at the woman who wept beside the Duchess of Lancaster's tomb. At last Katherine raised her head and spoke to Blanche again: "Lady, I see now that it was yet one more wickedness that I should ask you to help me." She struggled up from her cramped knees.

Then it seemed the candlelight brightened on the alabaster face, and Katherine heard the echo of a soft voice. She saw the Lady Blanche's living face as it had been that Christmastide at Bolingbroke, and remembered what Blanche had said: "Someday you must make pilgrimage to Our Lady of Walsingham, who is especially kind and merciful to mothers."

It was Blanchette that Katherine had borne within her as she had heard those words—and surely it was for Blanchette's sake that the Lady Blanche had given Katherine some answer at last.

Katherine remained until the following Saturday with the Pessoners, and each day searched for Blanchette. Master Guy sent forth two of his prentices to cry through the streets that there would be reward for any information respecting a little maid of fourteen with cropped copper-toned hair, and dark gray eyes, whose Christian name was Blanche. But no one had seen the girl.

On the evening before Katherine's departure on pilgrimage to Walsingham, the Pessoners had an unexpected visitor.

Katherine was upstairs when Dame Emma opened the door to a knock. "Why, Master Geoffrey, welcome! Guy," she called over her shoulder, "'tis Master Geoffrey Chaucer."

Geoffrey came in with appropriate greetings, accepted a mug of ale, then said in a tone of anxious wonder, "Is it really true that Lady Swynford is here?"

"That she is, poor thing," said the fishmonger. "And a fearful time she had o' it last week in the revolt. Burned out o' the Savoy, and her lass gone daft—or dead more like ——" He broke off. "I clean forgot the little maid was your niece."

"Yes," said Geoffrey soberly, "and I'd no idea of any of this until I heard your street crier today."

Geoffrey had returned from a trip the night before the revolt and had been snugly ensconced in his rooms over Aldgate. There he had stayed unmolested, reading and writing, during the three days of the violence.

"Where is Lady Swynford?" he said.

"Ye'll find her sadly changed." Dame Emma came bustling up. "She's shaved off her hair, and fasts like an anchorite. Seems like she blames herself for the loss o' her child—and for the Gray Friar's death too."

GEOFFREY's concern increased at each thing he heard, and when Katherine finally came into the kitchen he could not repress an exclamation of dismay. She was dressed in a coarse black gown of woven hemp such as the humblest widows wore. Her slender white feet were bare and dusty; around her neck there was a wooden rosary, and on her forehead a smudge of ashes. She had beauty still, but the great brooding eyes were circled by shadows.

"Katherine, what does this mean, my dear?" Geoffrey cried, kissing her on the cheek.

"Geoffrey," she said gently, "I'm glad to see you, and I know that you'll help me."

"Aye, for sure, little sister, but ——" He hesitated, at a loss for words.

"Come outside with me, Geoffrey," Katherine said, "I must talk to you alone."

They went out to Thames Street and Katherine turned toward the bridge. She walked on, guiding him up the wooden step onto London Bridge. They passed along the bridge between the clustered overhanging houses until they came to a small tower with pikes set up around it and vultures wheeling and screaming around the decaying heads upon the pikes.

Geoffrey's steps faltered; he tried to protest, but Katherine pulled him on until they stood below an eyeless skull. A piece of parchment had been tied to the pike below this head.

He peered at the parchment, then drew back sharply, crossing himself. "Brother William! May God rest his poor soul."

"Yes," said Katherine, "Brother William! He died because he came to protect me, and he died trying to save my soul."

Geoffrey turned. "But, Katherine, you can buy Masses for him. 'Twas not your fault ——"

She drew her breath in harshly. "I can buy Masses for him, and for Blanchette—and I can buy Masses for my husband Hugh, who was murdered. Aye—murdered, Geoffrey. You may well whiten and shrink from me!"

"Hush, for the love of God, Katherine," Geoffrey cried. He glanced quickly at the people who passed by on the bridge. "Come over here, where we'll not be overheard." He drew her to an angle made by the tower buttress, and gazed with incredulous pity into her haunted eyes. "Now tell me," he said quietly.

The duke and his meinie started south and on the sixteenth of July they reached Newcastle-upon-Tyne. The duke rode at the head of his men to the old Norman castle. He entered and, pausing in his chamber only long enough to remove his armor and cleanse himself, walked to the beautiful little chapel.

Here he lit a candle to the Virgin and knelt to pray. There was no image of St. Catherine in this chapel, so he could not properly renew the vow he had made, but he repeated it at the end of his prayers. "If I find my Katherine safe and unharmed, I vow to build a chapel to St. Catherine on any place in my lands that the blessed saint shall designate." He kissed the crucifix on his beads and rose.

He went to the hall where his knights had gathered. The hall was smoky from the old-fashioned fire over which the varlets were roasting a bullock; John, glancing in, changed his mind and continued up the stairs to the leaded roof of the keep.

He leaned his elbows on the parapet in one of the square towers, breathed deeply of the fresh summer air.

The sun turned red and sank, leaving a sudden chill that struck through John. He turned away from the moors and looked down into the castle ward where his eye was caught by something familiar in a figure that was mounting the outside stairs into the keep. He leaned over the parapet and stared, then shouted in amazement, "Ho there! You in the brown hood and cloak. Look up!"

The man paused, stared around to find the voice until finally, raising his head, he saw the duke and waved. It was Ge and John's heart beat faster. to me!" he called. Geoffrey appeared into the keep, then the tiles through a tower door

The duke's hand trembled Geoffrey kissed it while he be ing, "Your Grace, I've be afinding you."

"Indeed?" said John, afraid tion that beat against his lips.

"AYE, my lord. A fortnigh pass into Northumberland, were not welcoming to trave dentials. I was turned bac Knaresborough until word were at last on your way south

"Knaresborough," John could not hide his bitter disa

"My lord," said Geoffrey the pouch that hung from hi you a letter from Lady Kath

The duke's indrawn breat tearing silk. "She's well harmed?"

Geoffrey nodded.

"Thank God!" the duke seized Geoffrey's hand. "Ol shall be well rewarded for this is she now? My Katherine?"

"I don't know, my lord," looking down at the leaded til his pouch and drew out a fo "You would better be alone this. I'll wait in the chamber in want me."

The happy flush died on cheeks as Geoffrey disappeare He broke the seal on Kathe read it by the light of the dyi

Geoffrey waited until Newc out for curfew. He heard his last and went back up to the

In the evening light the loomed white as ashes. He know what's in this letter?"

"Aye, my lord. But no on ever shall."

"She cannot mean to give don't believe it. She says fa must never meet again. This c credible commands! She who soft, who has borne my childr hollow voice faltered. "She s ette. You'd think she had Blanchette!"

"'Tis, I think, my lord," G "because of the terror she fe maid, who may be dead. She h other children, but they are i

CONTINUED ON PA

"He's in a stage where he says 'No.' In fact, he's never been in any other stage."

Beautiful Hair

R E C K

Tube 75¢ plus tax
Jar $1.00 plus tax

BRECK CREAM TREATMENT WITH LIPICIL* · A NEW AND EASY WAY TO MAKE HAIR SOFT AND BEAUTIFUL

1 Breck Cream Treatment offers a new and easy way to make dry or damaged hair soft and manageable. Breck Cream Treatment also aids in removing dandruff.

2 In addition to lanolin, Breck Cream Treatment contains Lipicil*, an ingredient which aids in the treatment and prevention of hair dryness, dandruff and hard to manage hair.

3 Breck Cream Treatment is easy to use. After your shampoo, massage onto the hair and scalp. Rinse and set. When dry, your hair will be soft, lustrous and as beautiful as a bride's.

Lipicil is the Breck Registered Trade Mark for a stabilized lipide complex.*

Breck Cream Treatment is available at Beauty Shops, Drug Stores, Department Stores and wherever cosmetics are sold.

H BRECK INC · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD 3 MASSACHUSETTS YORK · CHICAGO · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA CANADA

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 110

"But I am in need," cried the duke. "She thinks not of that!"

Geoffrey forced himself to go on. "It is because she loves you that she must give you up. Brother William told her this before he was killed. She believes it. And I, my lord, have come to believe it too. The load of sin, and now the knowledge of murder done, would crush you both."

John turned away from Geoffrey and looked out over the parapet into the night of shadows. So it was Swynford's murder that the martyred Gray Friar had meant in all those strange allusions through the years. Nirac, poor little rat—a monstrous, sneaking crime in truth. Sickening. John's flesh crawled at the thought of it—and yet, so long ago, and Nirac had been shriven of his crime by the Gray Friar. His soul was not imperiled. It was Katherine's and his souls that were in danger—so Katherine believed.

Where you are is of no moment, but only what you are doing there.
—PETRARCH

"By God," he said roughly, crumpling up her letter, "if fate wills it that we are to be damned, then we shall be damned. I'll not give Katherine up. Where is she, Chaucer?"

"Gone on pilgrimage, my lord."

"Aye—but where?"

"I don't know, upon my honor. She would not tell. She doesn't wish you to find her."

"Then God help me, she may have set out for Rome—for Jerusalem even!"

Geoffrey was silent. He thought it possible that Katherine had set forth on the longest and harshest pilgrimage of all. He cleared his throat unhappily, for he had not yet discharged all of Katherine's anguished message. "Your Grace—one more thing she bade me tell you. It is not in the letter, be not bring herself to write it." H membering how her control ha at last, how she had covered he tears coursed down between h

"What is that one more thi

"She prays you, my lord—b have borne her—to ask the duc her. Yes—I know, my lord," quickly as he heard a sharp exc this is what she said. Matters h with you for a long time, and th punishment for murder and murder cannot be undone, bu must cease. you both the duche thinks loves fashion, as Swynford wa loved Kath best he coul

"Blessed know you li

Geoffrey quickly. "I've not invented her l

"Her letter!" The duke's vo fury. "That I should live to see me like this! Dismiss me like a th with rantings about morality! you to prate of love that Swyn 'Tis late times to think of that."

"My lord, my lord," whispere treating farther along the roof terrible wrong."

"Wrong, wrong!" shouted t this babbling of wrong. She vow leave me—she has broke it. It's see she never loved me. Kathe has no need to hide from me, for I shall never forgive this, n her."

(To be Concluded)

the biggest step in the world for the most important feet in the world deserves all the care in the world!

THE STRIDE RITE SHOE

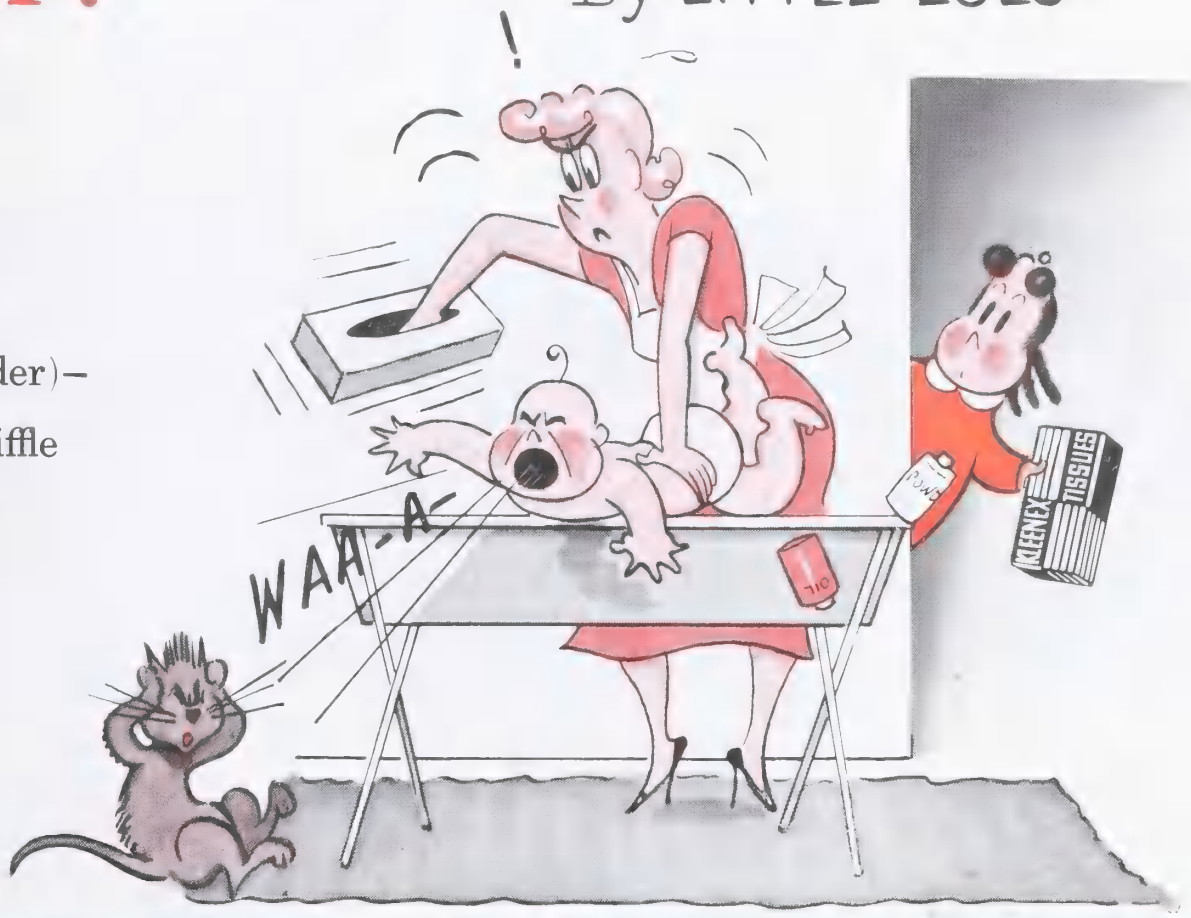
Green Shoe Mfg. Co., Boston, Mass.

PORTRAIT OF LECONTE DE LISLE

(Painting on Page 52)

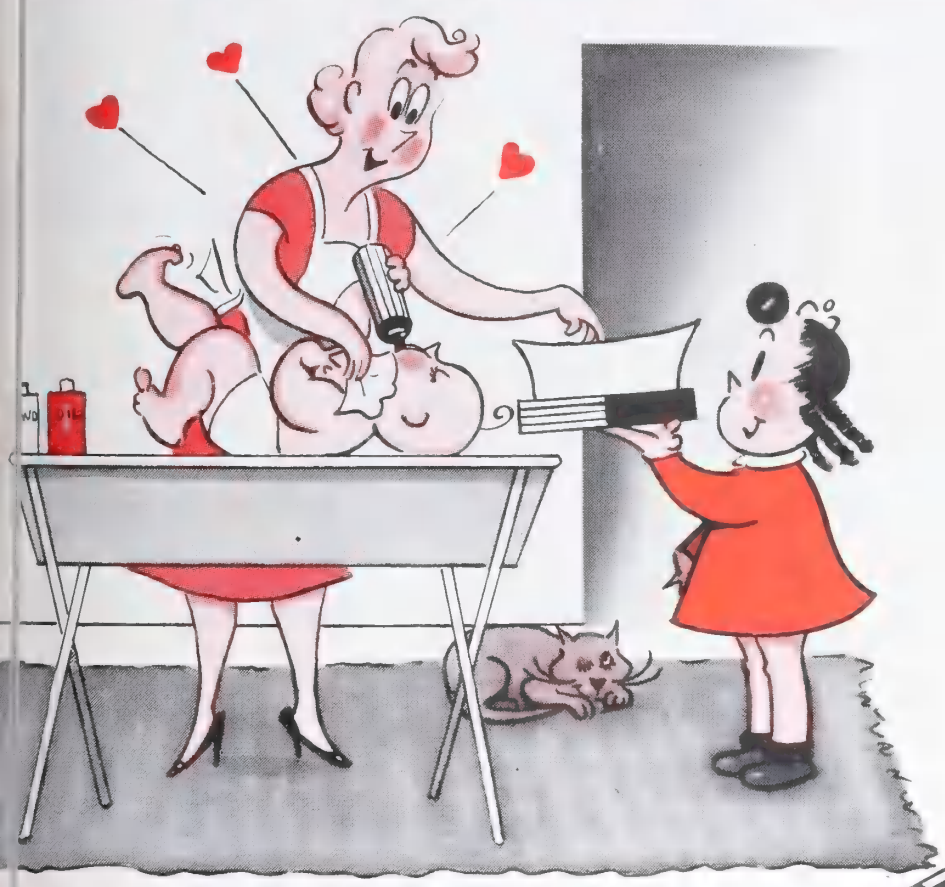
ARTISTS' reputations are in a state of constant revision, but none has been more mutable than that of Jean François Millet. Though he lived to see himself the most famous of the painters who worked at Barbizon, during much of his life he was on the verge of penury. Poverty hastened, if it did not cause, the death of his first wife. His second wife also endured a difficult and insecure existence. Once when a friend managed to bring Millet a small commission from the government, he found the painter and his family destitute. Millet admitted that he and his wife had eaten nothing for two days. "The great point," he said, "is the children have not suffered. They have had food up to the present time." As a result of privation, he was subject all his life to fearful headaches and pains in his eyes. But he never complained. "Art is no diversion," he told a friend. "It is a conflict in which one is crushed."

Yet Millet painted one of the most popular pictures of the nineteenth century, The Angelus. Even this, his most famous canvas, he had difficulty in selling, but, once sold, its rise in value was fantastic. It passed rapidly from collector to collector until a few years before Millet's death, when it was bought by a dealer for $7500, about thirty times its original price. By 1881 it had been sold for $40,000, then for $60,000, then in 1889 for $138,000 and finally around 1900 for about $200,000. But today, if the Louvre were to part with The Angelus, it would probably bring a much lower sum, for Millet's faults have been made especially conspicuous by the trend of modern painting. He was a powerful draftsman, but he was indifferent to color; he was a touching poet, but he often became sentimental; he was an admirable humanitarian, but he rarely conveyed his feelings with any charm or beauty of brushwork. Consequently his canvases, which were once the glory of the Barbizon School, have sunk in critical esteem to a point below their real worth.



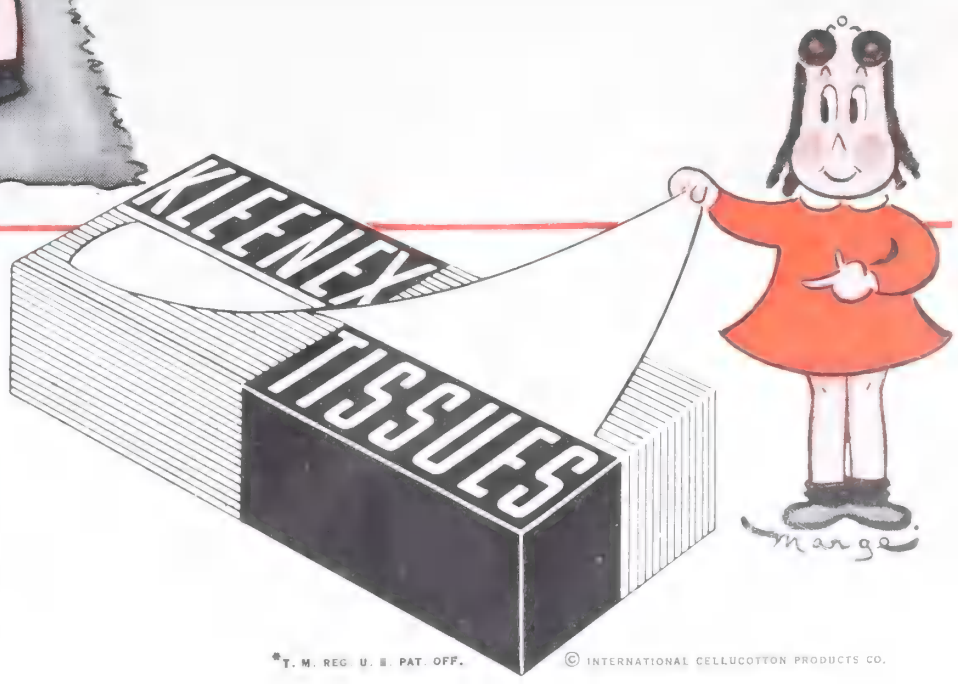
Before he went to live in Barbizon, however, Millet executed a few portraits which helped him to earn a living. These are now especially prized by collectors. they are better than his peasant some even rank among the fi ments of nineteenth-century por color is less important in por than in figure painting or lands outstanding weakness is here l Also, while his portraits show h power of construction, they are subjective sadness, from that "of a melancholy heart" which he a depressing monotony. And, fi Millet always affirmed, "A peasa and a peasant I will die," he ma his sitters a distinction, an aristoing, which is attractive.

Because of its subject, the pa duced is the most interesting of traits Millet executed. It was a cidence that brought together the men of genius, Millet and Lecc one an unknown artist, the othe perienced poet. Leconte de Lisle 1818 in the Island of Réunion, plantation owner. His father sen tany to be educated. Between 1 he lived with his uncle at Dinan the University of Rennes. Durin and before he returned for a p union, he apparently met Millet, in his twenties and who spent th Brittany with his family. There which Leconte de Lisle mention with "three landscapists from Pa Millet was one of these artists, or met, the young poet proved an a romantic subject. He is portraye dressed and standing with one a a wall, which is proudly inscribed This is one of the earliest commi executed and it is the first impo we have of Leconte de Lisle. Th is doubly precious, as a painting o beauty and as the likeness of on iuses of French literature, who Manchy Baudelaire considered "a without an equal." —JOH



Chief Curator, National G

d you ever?



By LITTLE LULU

vr tussle with a tissue
(while baby's cries grow louder)– Vlen you want to soothe a sniffle
c apply his oil and powder?

Use Kleenex in the "pop up" box–
this tissue's up and doing!
Absorbent, soft–its gentle care keeps Kleenex babies cooing!

Be thrifty–Buy quality

Buy Kleenex

, strong, completely disposable

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

© INTERNATIONAL CELLUCOTTON PRODUCTS CO.

Timeless Beauty Ideas

By Dawn Crowell Norman Beauty Editor of the Journal

LEOMBRUNO · BODI

for blondes Your hair may be ash, golden or light brown flecked with high lights. Your eyes blue, green or somewhere in between. Your skin, fair. A flair for color combined with restraint in the use of make-up will help bring your blond beauty into full bloom.

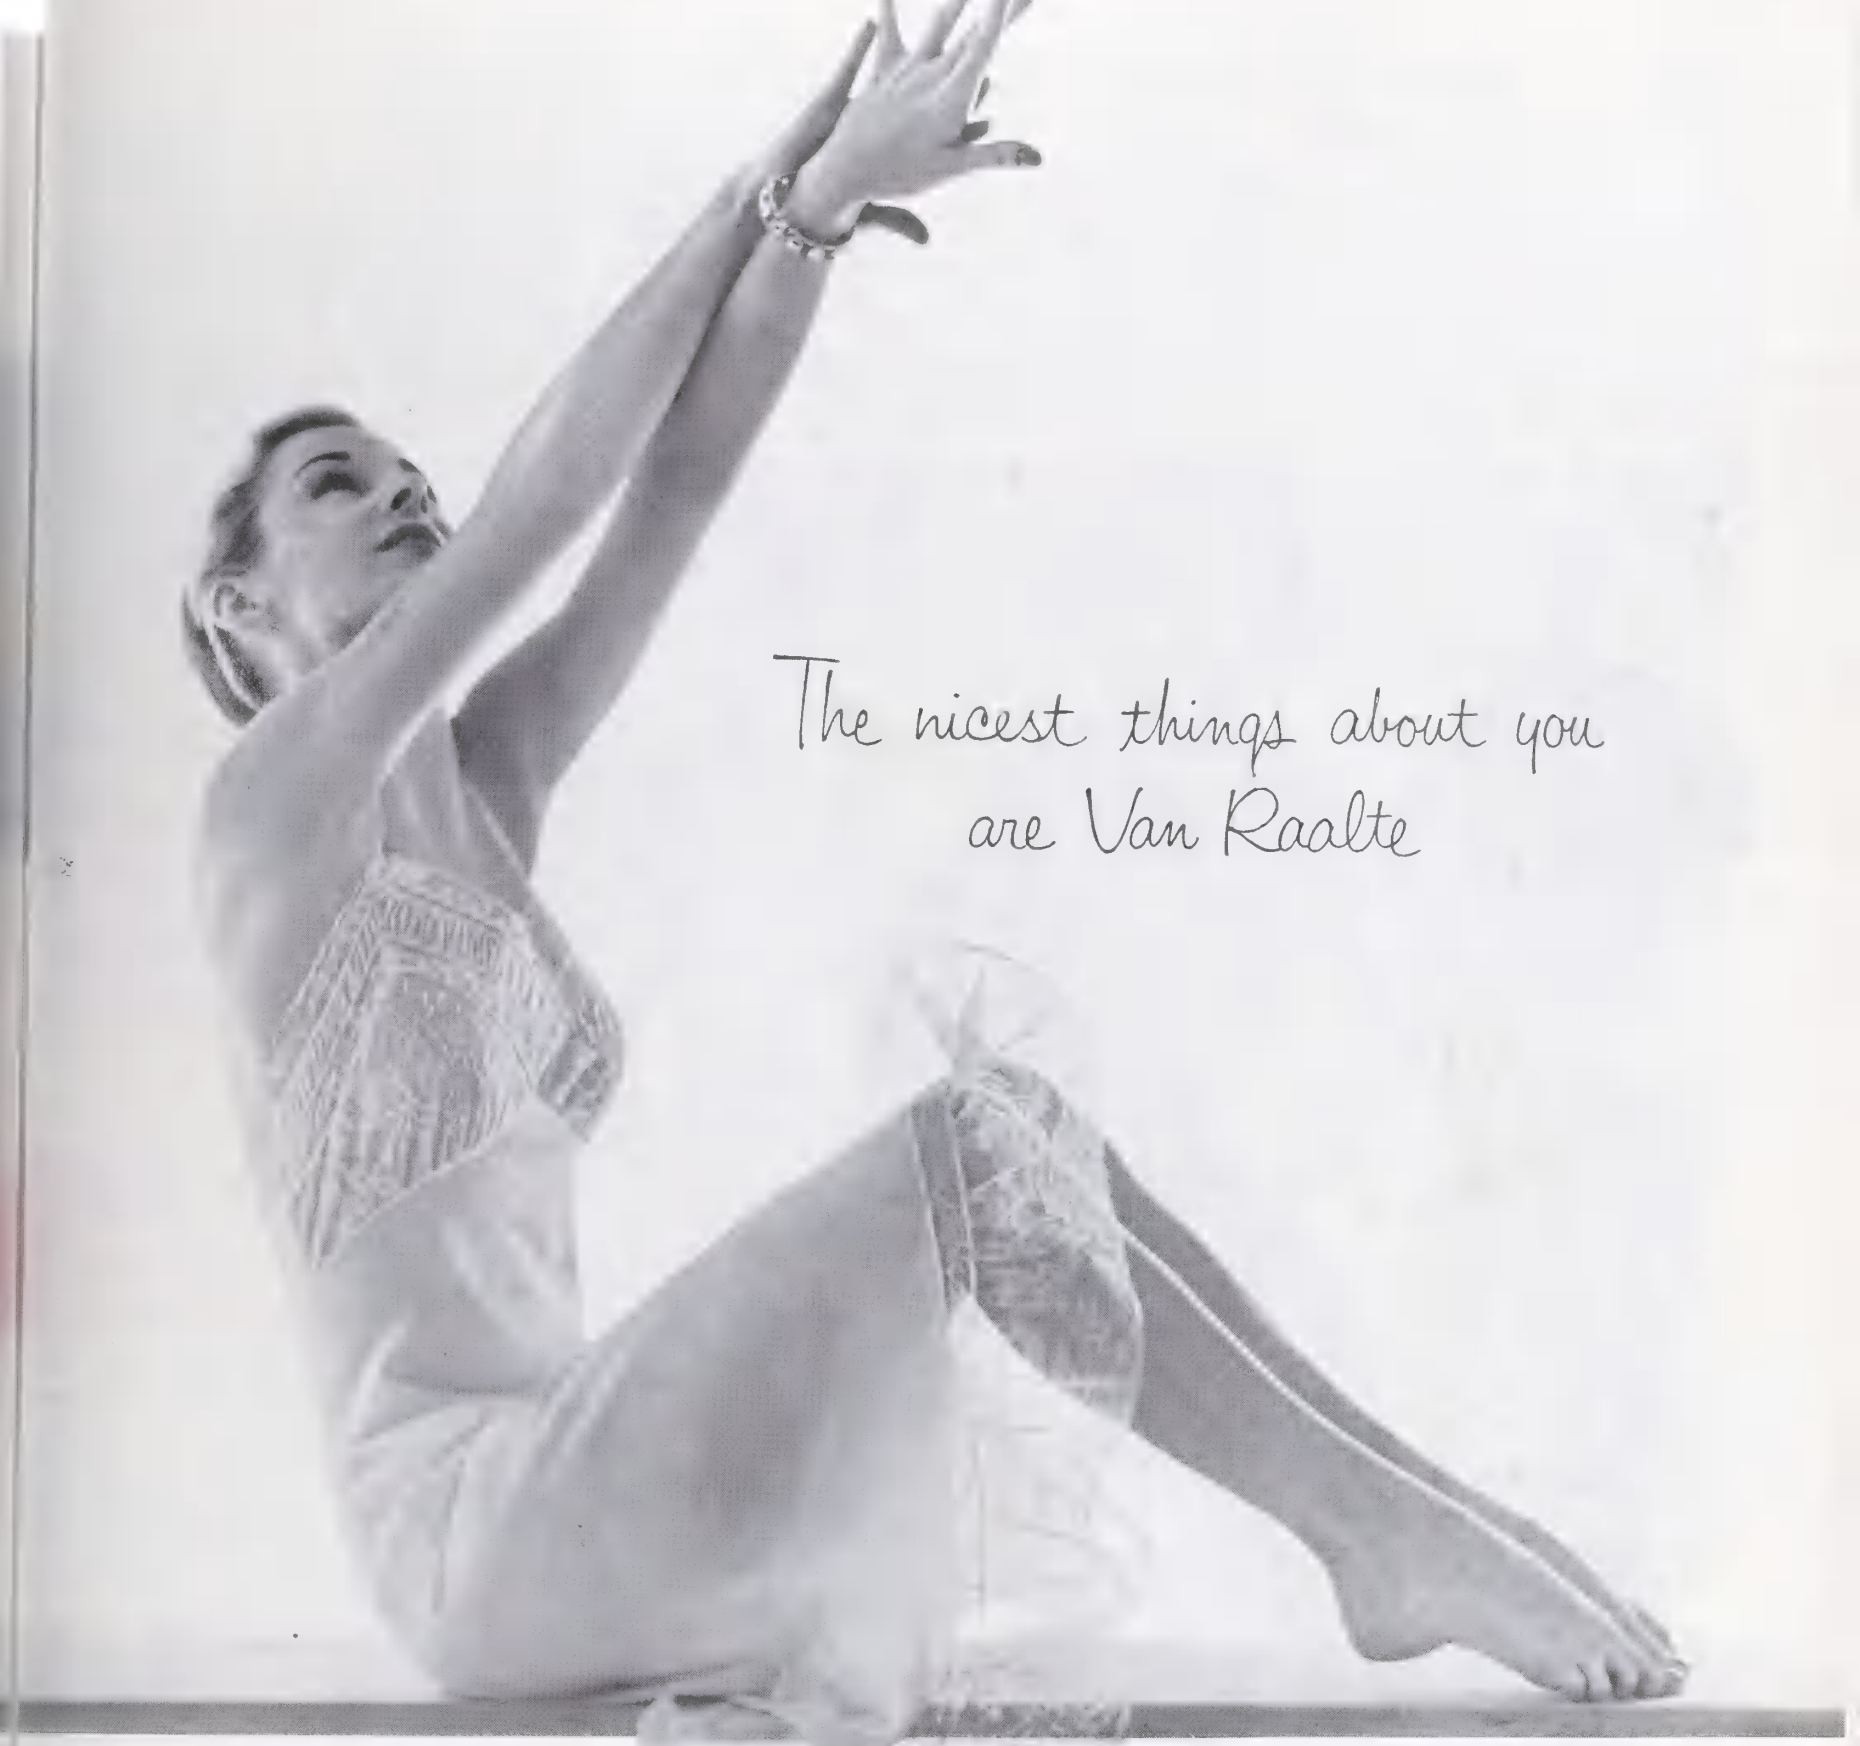
Select colors that reflect flatteringly against your fair skin—cherry reds, watermelon pinks, clear, sunshiny yellows, deep violets. If yours is a flawless complexion, dramatize it with stark black, or an "all-blond" look in beige allowing one color accent—a turquoise bracelet, mimosa or pimiento scarf tucked into a belt or pocket. Except in summer, when your sun-tinted skin is a pretty foil for baby pinks and blues, wear these shades in little ways—a soft cardigan, a pretty blouse, a flower near your face. For evening, go all out for one wonderfully feminine color—palest mauve, delphinium blue, clear emerald green. In accessories—small accents of gold, or jewel colors to repeat and enhance the color of your eyes.

A deft touch with make-up is the trick that replaces a "washed out" or monotone look with character and beauty. Eyes brighten and widen when lashes are brushed lightly with dark mascara . . . and when eyebrows are penciled a golden brown. Flesh-colored foundations followed with warm-beige powders (choose a shade just barely deeper than your own skin tone) can create subtle contrast between skin and hair. Lipsticks and nail polish in pink geranium or red-touched-with-blue bring fresh clarity to fair skin tones. Your eye shadow: a hint of green, blue or violet.

Fair skin is delicately textured, tends toward dryness, requires daily cream cleansings, nightly cream softenings. Don't forget hands, heels, elbows.

Play up your pale hair color by playing down its arrangement. A shining silk sheath (like our model's) is pin-curled only on the ends, permanented no more than twice a year. If your hair is oily, shampoo it regularly to keep it immaculate from roots to ends. Dry hair responds to less-frequent shampoos, becomes silkier, more manageable when shampoos are followed with a cream rinse.

for brunettes Your hair is deep chestnut brown or black; eyes, hazel or brown; skin, medium to olive. A sense of drama, guided by careful attention to little details, can turn your basic richness of coloring into an outstanding beauty feature.



Combine soft flattery with color excitement: a pale pink scarf tucked into the neckline of a scarlet dress or coat . . . a bib of pearls to put a glow in your skin when you wear black . . . a boutonniere of coral carnations or a turquoise velvet ribbon pinned prettily in place at your shoulder. Give a bright surprise to a basic color—shocking pink or electric blue in a sash, a headband, a stole. Try touches of chalk white for bandbox beauty . . . in gloves, in fresh-pressed collars and cuffs, in starchy piqué or linen gilets, vests—or a soft silk blouse. Colors least likely to succeed with you: brown, rust, fuchsia, dark green.

Heighten the contrast between skin and hair with soft-effect make-up. Use clear beige-touched-with-pink in foundations and powders, choosing the tone that comes closest to your own coloring. Avoid the sallowing brownish, orangey shades. Accent lips and nails with bright reds, or reds tinged with vivid pink or coral. Beware of the purply, bluish shades which tend to drab and darken. If your lashes need darkening, brush them lightly with a rich brown mascara to intensify the color of your eyes. For more sparkle, palest topaz or misty green eye shadow—just a touch!

If your skin is oilier than you'd like it to be (brunet complexions often are) skin astringent is your ally. Use it on cotton to freshen and dry the oily spots (around nose and chin) instead of constant repowdering. Other oily-skin aids: mild soap-and-warm-water clean-up twice a day—a cake-type make-up instead of creamy bases.

Make a clean sweep of hairline (slick back wispy hairs, allow no powder smudges)—delicately arch your eyebrows by plucking from underneath.

Shampoo and brush your hair as often as it is necessary to turn it into a softly curled halo of high lights—or a sleek-and-shining silhouette—whichever is most becoming to you.

Slip #7978. Cloud White, Petal Pink, Black, Blue Horizon, Navy, Harvest Beige, Currant Red, Beechen Green, Pepper Gray, Cafe Brown. 32 to 42. $8.95. In 44 and 46, White, Pink, Black. $9.95.

It's so nice to lead a lacy private life

sweet swirl of a slip in ten colors to match every ood of your new Fall fashions! Lace-lavished as ly Van Raalte can—from the lined Chantilly bodice the rich flounce. And the fit's so wonderful, you'll el lovelier through and through!

Materially wonderful, too—in Opaquelon®, Van Raalte's fabulous new nylon tricot! Though its touch is soft as petals, there's no show-through, no clinging either. And, practically speaking, Opaquelon® washes in a wink—never ever needs an iron!

All so unmistakably Van Raalte—because Van Raalte actually creates all its own nylon tricot fabrics and laces—showers every style with those custom touches you love. Why not see for yourself—how nice it is—at fine stores everywhere.

Because you love nice things—and Van Raalte makes the nicest*

*GLOVES AND HOSIERY, TOO

BLACKBOARD JUNGLE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 61

can be out earning, it can become a torture, even if the English teacher is the best English teacher in the world—which Rick was not.

Rick did not think of all these things. After Stanley had spoken to the gathered English teachers on Friday, including the lovely brunette with the peekaboo blouse—a blouse which seemed to ruffle Stanley until he finally advised her to wear something "less feminine" this coming Monday—Rick had gone down to the general office to pick up the roll book for his class. He took the key to his official room, and then walked out into the corridor to the elevator. He buzzed for it, and then realized it probably wouldn't be running until Monday, so he climbed the steps to the second floor.

Room 206 was close to the elevator and close to the stair well, and it received sunlight from six large windows. It was also directly below a machine shop, a fact Rick would discover shortly. The machines were not running so the corridor was absolutely still as he inserted his key into the door. He noticed that the upper half of the door consisted of four panes of glass, and thought that was sensible in a vocational high school, where any passer-by could look through the glass and see if the teacher inside were perhaps being pinned to the wall or stomped into the floor.

The room was absolutely silent. Rick walked to his desk and looked out over the rows of empty seats, feeling something like a priest in a new parish awaiting his Sunday congregation. He pulled back his chair gently, and put the roll book on the desk and opened it. For each boy there was a plastic-encased white card in the book. Rick glanced d of names quickly:

Abrahms, Morris
Arretti, Louis
Bonneli, George
Casey, Frank
Diaz, Alonso

There were more, a good many did not bother looking at them now make a list of the names before school, and study them when he g

He sat at the desk looking ou empty classroom. When the voice the doorway, it startled him.

"Makes you feel good, doesn't it

He looked toward the door and the new teacher Stanley had intro to earlier. The man was small looking, with intense brown eyes spectacles. Rick tried to think of his

"Yes," he said. "It makes you fee

The small man walked into the didn't think it would affect me t mean, it's just a job. But the minut into my room, I felt differently abo reaching a goal, you know? Like— am."

Some of the small man's enthu beginning to rub off on Rick. "I'm forgotten your name," he said.

"Edwards. Joshua Edwards. The the two first names, like Harry Jam like swing?"

"Well, yes."

"I do too. I have a good collect on bringing some of the records in f to hear sometime. Do you think that?"

"Well, yes, I suppose they would.

"You can call me Josh," the smal "Your name is Dadier, isn't it? I think. Shall it be Dick, Rick, F Richard, or what?"

"Rick," Rick said.

Josh extended his hand, and Ric "Have you ever taught before?" Jo

"No. Just student teaching."

"Me too."

"Did you student-teach in a voca-

"Yes, Central Commercial; do it?"

"There's a nice bunch of ki isn't ——"

"Yes, very nice. These kids will pr rougher, but I figure you can handl if ——"

"If you can handle them," Rick

"Yes, exactly," Josh said, beam that's right. You just have to han that's all. I can't wait until Monday."

Rick entered the building at 8:15 the time clock, gathered up his roll walked confidently toward the au His confidence momentarily waverec entered the high-ceilinged, student-fi and heard what he considered an un mur of many voices. He figured, how this was the customary fall exchang mer experiences between the students

He found Josh Edwards sitting and nodded pleasantly at the pret woman teacher whom Stanley had i on Friday noting with amused sa that she'd exchanged her sheer blo severely tailored beige suit.

"When do we start?" Josh wanted "Look, there's somebody now."

Somebody had indeed climbed th the stage and was fiddling with the ac of the microphone. The somebody tall. He owned a thatch of unruly sprang up from his forehead like cr His brows were thick patches of chic

Rick watched the man as his l struggled with the mechanism of th phone. The man thrust his jaw clos mike and said, "All right, testing, three-four, one-two-three-four."

A boy at the back of the au shouted, "Five by five, Mr. Hallor this started a series of shouts, laug catcalls which Rick felt would soon g hand unless somebody took control uation.

Somebody did. Mr. Halloran pick mike and shouted, "Shaddup!" Perfectionist's skirts . . .

fall of '54 . . . and more, more, more new Pendleton skirts for you! Skirts slim as penknives . . . or eased into fullness. Skirts for town . . . or the city's outskirts. In colors and patterns purposely planned to accompany your 49'er jacket or shirt . . . or new Pendleton sweaters . . . perfectly. Skirts, in short . . . as only Pendleton looms, designs and tailors them . . . only of precious pure virgin wool! skirts 14.95, 19.95; shirt 14.95; tartan collar 1.50; sweaters 9.95, 11.95

ALWAYS VIRGIN WOOL

PENDLETON

Sportswear

Nothing measures up to WOOL

PENDLETON WOOLEN MILLS • PORTLAND, OREGON THE WOOL CITY

was startled by the outburst, rise him that the students im- d down.

Ir. Halloran said in a gravelly, ice. "All right, now dat's the nse like dat. We're here to get r wit, so le's get on wit it."

were quiet and Rick wondered lloran wielded over them.

ssembly in the middle of da reme purpose of meetin' the Mr. Small, so we'll dispense wit is to wedder he'll be here now t, and dat's dat. We're here for The first t'ing is to wish you all back to Manyul Trades ——"

the students groaned audibly. I'm doin' dat right now. Wel- I hope dis'll be one of de best had. Now we come to de sec- o why we're here t'day, and e school term. We will start it teachers call the rolls for dere When your name is called, you enter aisle wit the rest of the ass, and your teacher will den your official room. We don't ey business. And I can guaran- to take care of any you guys ttle monkey business, I'm sure at."

laughed at this, and Rick con- at Halloran, wondering if his was simply affected in order to rt with the boys.

wit de seniors," Halloran said, our way down to de freshmen. teacher you all know well and y from Carpentry and Wood- oor is yours, Mr. Clancy."

the red-thatched, rotund Mr. the steps to the stage. Then , in comparatively brilliant rolled forth and the seniors he ing into the aisle, slapping one back occasionally, clasping dly classmate gestures. Then down off the stage and walked class.

s back at the mike, and he nex' teacher is a new one in Hammond, please."

glish teacher started mounting stage. Her skirt, even though the severely tailored suit, was haps too tight. A loud wolf-call rom several thousand throats. atters worse, she dropped her ted to stoop down for it, and realized what such a stoop r skirt. She looked to Halloran e handed her the book, bowed and then grinned at the boys. nd cheered in appreciation of valry, and who were all too Hammond's reasons for not op down for the book.

ond suddenly seemed to regain e opened her roll book, and the he auditorium were dead silent to speak. Her voice caught and in getting out only a mouselike convulsed the kids.

Hammond, completely rattled urted the name of the first boy cheer of congratulation went up mbled kids. The senior who'd ped into the aisle and shouted, e!" and this caused a fresh out- ter.

d "Shaddddduppp" burst from . Miss Hammond smiled trem- nen began calling the roll while ed in cowed respect.

l called the two dozen or so class, she stepped down from every eye in the auditorium was leekness of her legs. She walked ass stiffly.

as over now, and the kids settled n as the rolls were called, one r. Rick sat impatiently in his e heard Halloran call out his ed up his roll book and walked steps. He paused dramatically , then began calling the roll in aurence Olivier voice.

"Abrahms," and he saw movement out there in the seats, but he did not pause to focus the movement.

"Arretti," and another blur of movement.

"Bonneli," and "Casey," and "Diaz," and "Di Zeffolo," and on, and on. There had not been a murmur while he spoke. He slapped the roll book shut, and walked down the steps conscious of the curious eyes of the kids.

When he reached his class the same curiosity was reflected in their eyes.

"Follow me," he said, unsmiling. "No talking on the way up."

That, he figured, was the correct approach. Let them know who's boss from the start.

"Hey, teach'," one of the boys said, "what did Mr. Halloran say your name was?"

Rick turned his head sharply. "I said no talking, and I meant it."

The boy was silent for a second, and then Rick heard him say, "Dig this cat. He's playin' it hard."

He chose to ignore the comment. He walked ahead of his class, feeling the same excitement he'd felt when he got the job, only greater now.

When they reached the door to Room 206, he inserted the key and pushed the door back. "Sit anywhere," he said brusquely. "We'll arrange seating later."

The boys filed in. They seated themselves quietly, and Rick thought, This is going even better than I expected.

He walked to his desk, pulled out his chair, but did not sit. He looked out over the faces in the seats before him. Then he turned to a Negro boy sitting up front near his desk.

"What's your name?" he asked.

The boy looked frightened, as if he had been accused of something. "Me?"

"Yes, what's your name?"

"Dover. I didn't do nothin', teach'. Jeez ——"

"Open some of the windows in here, Dover. It's a little stuffy."

Dover smiled, his lips pulling back over bright white teeth. He got up from his seat and Rick congratulated himself on having handled that perfectly. He had not simply given an order which would have resulted in a mad scramble to the windows. He had first chosen one of the boys, and then given the order. All according to the book.

He turned and walked to the blackboard, and wrote his name in big letters:

MR. DADIER.

"That's my name," he said. "In case you missed it in the auditorium." He paused. "Mr. Dad-ee-yay," he pronounced clearly.

"Is that French, teach'?" a boy asked.

"Yes," Rick said. "When you have anything to say, raise your hand. We might as well get a few things straight. First, I want you to fill out Delaney cards. While you're doing that, I'll tell you what it's going to be like in my classroom. The official class is Twenty-seven." He walked to the blackboard and wrote 27. "Please fill the cards out in ink."

"I ain't got a pen," Dover said.

"Then use pencil."

"I ain't got a pencil either."

"I have some," Rick said coldly. He walked back to his briefcase, pulled out eight sharpened pencils, handed one to Dover. "Does anyone else need something to write with?"

A husky boy near the back of the room said, "I do, teach'."

"Let's knock off this 'teach' business right now," Rick said. "My name is Mr. Dadier. You'll call me that, or you'll learn what extra homework is."

"Sure, Mr. Dadier," the boy at the back of the room said.

"Come get your pencil."

The boy rose nonchalantly. He was older than the other boys, and Rick spotted him immediately as a troublemaker. The boy wore a white T shirt and tight dungaree trousers. He strode to the front of the room, taking the pencil gingerly from Rick's hand.

"Thanks, teach'," he said, s
"What's your name?" Rick
"Sullivan," the boy said, sn was red, and a spatter of freck bridge of his nose. He had a and pleasant green eyes.
"How would you like to school is out today, Sullivan?"
"I wouldn't," the boy answe
"Then learn how to use my
"Sure," Sullivan said. He s broad insolent smile, and turn Rick, walking lazily to his seat
"I want those pencils return gruffly, feeling he had lost som out the cards as quickly as you
"To begin with, as I've alr there'll be none of this 'teac classroom. I'll call you by yo you'll call me by mine. If you to say, you raise your hand. Yo until I call on you. Is that clea
The boys made no comment, their silence for understanding.
were bent now as they busily Delaney cards.
"Hey, what's our official cl asked.
"Twenty-seven," Rick said, out." He turned his back to chalked the numerals 27 on th remembering the vocational-which frankly warned, "Never on a class." But he obviously tion well under control, and for demonstrating distrust at t of the game. He put the chalk "Dover, you will be in charge the windows are adjusted ever
"Yes, sir," Dover said res Rick was a little surprised, b pleased. He remembered somet told back in one of his educ something about giving the di the class things to do, like ra and cleaning blackboards and e ning errands. He remembered had to bring down the list of a morning, and he decided Sul ideal man for the job.
"And you, Sullivan," he sa down the roll book each morni
"Sure," Sullivan said, smili won a major victory.
Sullivan's attitude puzzled decided not to let it bother him blond boy in the third row and s collect the Delaney cards, pleas
"Sure, teach'," the boy said.
"What's your name?" Rick a "Foster, teach'."
"Mr. Dadier," Rick correcte
"Oh, yeah. Sure."
"Hurry up with those cards,
"Sure, teach'."

RICK stared at the boy incr don't want to have to mention t next boy who calls me 'teach' self sitting here until four o'clo noon. Now remember that."
The boys stared at him solem hostility suddenly erected betwe and their seats. He sensed the wa he could say something that w to crumble immediately. But I back down on this "teach" inf so he stayed behind his side of stared back at the boys sternly.
The door opened suddenly, a with brown hair matted against poked his head into the room.
"Mr. Dadier?" he asked.
"Yes?"
The boy walked briskly to Ri handed him a mimeographed sl
"Notice from the office," the bo
"Thank you."
"Y'welcome." The boy walke stepped out into the hallway, ar his head back into the room. H addressed one of the boys, " how you like Mr. Daddy-oh?"
He slammed the door quickly Someone near the back of th mured, "Daddy-oh, oh Daddy-o turned toward the class hotly.
"That's enough of that!" he

Richer in protective oil than any other leading hand lotion—

Trushay guards your hands better— 9 ways!

YES, it's true! Trushay Lotion contains more protective beautifying ingredients for those precious hands of yours—promises you these 9 benefits!

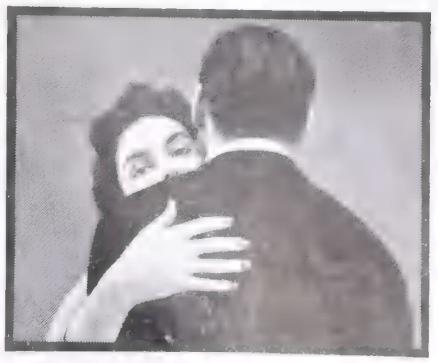
1. Counteracts drying chemical action of detergents!

2. Rubs right in—supplements natural skin oils.

3. Softens, smooths and beautifies!

4. Softens rough cuticle and hangnails.

5. Soothes and comforts dry, cracked hands!



6. Soothes soap and detergent irritation!

7. Helps chapped, cracked, red skin!

8. Applied beforehand, guards hands even in hot, sudsy water—helps prevent drying damage.

9. Pleasant to use—no stickiness!

NO OTHER leading hand lotion can do so much for your skin—for no other is so rich in protective ingredients!

And Trushay does more than just guard your hands! It smooths into the upper layers of your skin—softening, smoothing and beautifying. Trushay's wonderful, too, for rough elbows, knees, heels—for luxurious body rubs—as a flattering powder base. You'll be lovelier—begin today to use Trushay!

TRUSHAY® LOTION

A PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

es went blank. He looked at another moment, and then tion to the notice from the hat the roll calling had been ster than they had expected, would sound at ten-thirty. It instruct his class that they o their third-period class.

re of the sudden attentiveness . He glanced at his watch.

sound in fifteen minutes," he gong sounds, you will leave directly to your third-period ar?"

gan talking it up, looking at n their desks. A boy in the d his hand.

asked.

hean we won't have you for Mr. Dadier?" he asked.

what it means." Rick smiled, the boy had used his name and. "Say," he said conversa- better hurry if we want to get 's time to go."

s roll book, and began calling s alphabetically, seating them ther. When the gong sounded, your third-period class now," you all tomorrow morning." oys had already filed out into ck heard someone shout, "Not rst, Daddy-oh!" but when he loor, the boys were gone. He reath and then he consulted his egan packing his brief case. He e Caesar, true; he had done it u let them step all over you at there was no gaining control ed packing, locked the door, the General Office.

rough the swarm of students in lked to the main-floor corridor, sition of his hall patrol directly ntrance doors.

od flanking the wide doorways, arm bands on their biceps told monitors. He said pleasantly, My name is Mr. Dadier. We'll gether on this post during the ery day."

dded obediently. One, a fat kid dungarees and a striped T shirt, t Rick as if he were expecting tions.

'Would you get a chair for me rooms, please? Tell the teacher adier."

fat boy said.

d the boy go down the corridor, rned his attention to the doors. ur of them, side by side. On the he doors a flight of marble steps ide. He said to the second mon- y who stood with his hands be-n't been letting anyone in or out s, have you?"

d no one is allowed in the corri- room pass."

ick said again. He looked down noticing the toilet there for the walked to the battered wooden the gold-lettered STUDENTS' nd pulled the door open.

" someone shouted, and Rick tant flush of a toilet. The room illed, and his entrance started a le among the ten or twelve boys standing around smoking.

t," Rick bellowed, "let's just topped dead in their tracks, drop- igarettes and stepping on them. a rush for the door, but Rick boy and shoved him back into ed room.

oing on here?" he roared. "What fficers' Club?"

e boys snickered, and Rick cut th a dead cold stare.

"Now clear out of here," he shouted. "I'm letting you all go this time, but if I catch anyone else smoking or loitering here, your name goes to the principal. Remember that."

The boys filed out of the room swiftly. Rick watched them go, and then turned to face two boys who lounged near the sinks. "What's the matter with you two?" he asked.

One of the boys was a husky Negro with an engaging grin. He had a wide nose, and thin lips, and clear, large brown eyes. He wore a white T shirt and tight dungarees, and the rich brown of his skin glistened against the white of his shirt.

"We on'y just got here, chief," he said.

"Well, you can only just get right out of here," Rick mimicked.

The boy with the Negro was obviously Puerto Rican. He grinned and a gold-capped tooth in the front of his mouth gleamed.

"Sure," he said, "we jus' get here, chief."

"Look," Rick told them, "I don't want a debate." He turned on the Puerto Rican. "What's your name?"

"Emmanuel."

"Emmanuel what?"

"Emmanuel Trades," the Negro boy said. "Man, don'choo know? This boy yere, he got the school named after him."

"What's your name, wise guy?"

The boy lifted one eyebrow. "Gregory," he said defiantly. "Gregory Miller."

"I'll remember that name," Rick said.

"Sure, chief. You do that."

"Or maybe you'd like to take a walk to the principal's office right this minute? Maybe you'd like that?"

Miller shrugged, and then smiled. He was a good-looking boy, with the build of a weight lifter, and an easy, nonchalant charm. "You hol'in' all the cards, chief," he said. "You wanna take me t'see Mistuh Small, that's your choice."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 122

SHOES, JULIANELLI. DRESS, ADELE SIMPSON. FURS REYNARD. JEWELRY VOGUE JEWELRY COMPANY

Fashion hint for leg glamour: sheer sheer Berkshires with the fine fine seams make your legs look slimmer!

Only full-fashioned Berkshire stockings have the Nylace Top and Nylace Toe-Ring . . . twin run-stoppers!

VISIT

Drexel-time U.S.A.

at the fine stores listed below

The numbers "1" and "2" after each store name tell which furniture groups it carries. "1" means Travis Court, "2" means American Traditional.

ALABAMA

Anniston — Geo. Cater Furn. Co. 1
Bessemer — Chew's Home Furn. 1-2
Birmingham — Calder Furn. Co. 1
Loveman, Joseph & Loeb, Inc. 1-2
Rhodes-Carroll Furn. Co. 1
Cullman — Steele Furn. Co. 1
Decatur — Hunter Furn. Co. 1
Dothan — Blumberg's 1
Rimson Furn. Co. 1
Florence — Lamar Furn. Co. 1
Roger's, Inc. 2
Gadsden — Rhodes, Inc. 1
Witherspoon's, Inc. 1-2
Jasper — Palmer-McCutcheon Furn. Co. 1
Mobile
Adam Glass & Co., Div. of Hammell's 1-2 Montgomery
Bishop-Parker Furn. Co. 1-2
Frank Tennille Furn. Co. 1
Talladega — Conner's 2
Tuscaloosa — City Furn. Co. 1

ARIZONA

Flagstaff — Babbitt Bros. 1
Phoenix — Cole's Home Furnishings 1
Dorris-Heyman 1
Safford — Long's Furn. Co. 1
Tucson — Shearman Furn. Co. 1-2
Yuma — Imperial Hdw. Co. 1

ARKANSAS

Blytheville — Hubbard & Son Furn. Co. 1
El Dorado
McWilliams Hdw. & Furn. Co. 1-2
Hot Springs — J. E. Harper & Son 1-2
Little Rock
Arkansas Carpet & Furn. Co. 1-2
Texarkana — Booth Furn. Co. 1

CALIFORNIA

Alhambra — Ashburn Furn. 1
Anaheim — Mission Furn. 1
Smith-Realsnyder 1
Antioch — Trethric's Furn., Inc. 1
Bakersfield — McCart & Bultman 1
Beverly Hills — Greene & Hinkle 1
W & J Sloane 1-2
Brawley — Imperial Hdw. Co. 1
Calexico — Imperial Hdw. Co. 1
Compton — Fedderly Furn. 1
Covina — Sawyer Furn. 1
Crockett — Crolona Furn. Co. 1
El Cajon — Benbough's-El Cajon 2
El Centro — Imperial Hdw. Co. 1
Eureka — Standard Furn. Co. 1
Fresno — Roth Furn. Co. 1
Slater Furn. Co. 1
Fullerton — Riutcel Bros. Furn. 1
Glendale — Lee-Gingery Furn. 1
George Seeley Furn. 1
Inglewood — Inglewood Furn. 1
Wright's Furn. 2
Laguna Beach — Martin & Von Hemert 2
Lodi — M. Newfield & Son 1
Long Beach — Davis Furn. 1-2
Lloyd's of Long Beach 2
Los Angeles — Barker Brothers 1-2
Bollman Furn. 1
Bullock's Downtown 1-2
Bullock's Westwood 1
Colony House 2
Harry Gladstone 2
Leimert Furn. 1
The May Company 1
J. W. Robinson Co. 1
Wilder's Furn. 1-2
Los Banos — Cerini's 1
Merced — Slater Furn. Co. 1
Modesto — Slater Furn. Co. 1
Oakland — Breuners 1
H. C. Capwell 1
Ontario — Brewer's Furn. 2
Thompson Furn. 1
Orville — Hill Furn. Co. 1
Pasadena — J. H. Biggar 1
Bullock's Pasadena 1
Pittsburg — Lanzafame Furn. Co. 1
Pomona — Home Furn. 1
Wright Bros. & Rice 1
Redding — Goodloe Furn. Co. 1
Redlands — Nelson-Hales 1
Richmond — R. Travalini Furn. Co. 1
Riverside — J. R. Westbrook Co. 1
Sacramento — Breuners 1
Salinas — Standard Furn. Co. 1
San Bernardino — Fooshee Furn. Co. 1
HarrisCo. 1
San Diego — Dryer's Furn. Co. 1
V. J. Lloyd, Inc. 1
San Francisco — W & J Sloane 1
Sterling's 1
San Gabriel — Mission Furn. 1
San Jose — Robinson & Sons Co. 1-2
San Pedro — Henton's Furn. 1
Santa Ana — Chandler's 1
Santa Barbara — Henry Levy, Inc. 1
Paulson Studios 1
Santa Cruz — Haber's Eastern Furn. Co. 1
Santa Monica — Clark Furn. 1
Santa Rosa — Lings 1
Sherman Oaks — Valley Home Furn. 2
South Gate — Moomaw Furn. 1
Stockton — Breuners 1
Temple City — Brenneman Furn. 2
Vallejo — Eaton & Berry 1
Van Nuys — Hoagland Furn. 1
Ventura — Bush's Furn. 1
Paulson Studios 1
Visalia — Ray's Home Furnishings 1
Whittier — Colonial Shop 2
H. J. Perry Furn. 1
Yreka — J. E. Turner & Son 1

COLORADO

Alamosa — Curtis Bros., Inc. 1
Colorado Springs — Home Furn. Co. 2
Peerless Furn. Co. 1
Denver — Daniels and Fishers Stores Co. 1
The Denver Dry Goods Co. 1-2
Durango — Durango Furn. Mart 1
Fort Collins — Stark's Inc. 1
Fort Morgan — Waxman's 1
Grand Junction — Bannister Furn. Co. 1-2
Greeley — Chilanda-Harris Inc. 2
Clough Furn. Co. 1
Julesburg — Coffman's 1
La Junta — F. M. Stark and Co. 1
Montrose — Hupp Furn. Co. 1-2
Pueblo — The Frank Pryor Furniture Co. 1
Salida — Greenberg Furn. Co. 1
Sterling — Sterling Furn. Co. 1
Trinidad — Jamieson's 1-2
Wray — Shea's 1
Yuma — Waxman's 1

CONNECTICUT

Ansonia — Spector Furn. Co. 1-2
Bridgeport — Howland Dry Goods Co. 1
Nothnagle 1
D. Read Co.
Bristol — C. Funk & Son
Danbury — Henry Dick & Son 1-2
Hartford — Nassau Furn. Co. 1-2
Manchester — Watkins Bros. 1-2
Meriden — Bullard-Fowler & La Place 1
Caplan Furn. Co. 1-2
Milford — Wayside Furn. Shops 1
Naugatuck — Carlson Furn. Co. 1
New Britain — John A. Andrews Co. 2
B. C. Porter & Sons, Inc. 1
New Haven — Bullard's 1-2
The Chamberlain Co. 2
New London — Shafner's, Inc. 2
Newington
Bonelli's Wayside Furn. Store 1-2
Norwich — Silberman's, Inc. 1-2
Oakville — Carlson Furn. Co. 1
South Norwalk — A. J. Collins Furn. Co. 1-2
Stamford — Buettner's 1-2
W & J Sloane 1
Terryville — Terryville Furn. Store 2
Torrington — Wolcott House 1
Waterbury — Hampson-Mintie & Abbott 1

DELAWARE

Dover — Nap & Spence 1-2
Wilmington — H. Feinberg Furn. Co. 1-2

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Washington, D. C. — Colony House 1-2
Mayer & Company 1-2

FLORIDA

Daytona Beach — McFarlands 2
Eustis — B. E. Thompson Furn. Co. 2
Fort Lauderdale — Burdine's 1-2
Fort Lauderdale Furn. Co. 1
Fort Myers — Robb & Stucky 1-2
Gainesville — Alachua Furn. Co. 1
Homestead — Homestead Furn. Co. 2
Jacksonville — Cohen Brothers 1-2
Cunningham Furn. Co. 1
Lakeland — Maas Brothers 1-2
Leesburg — Boyd's Furn. & Hdw. 1-2
Melbourne — Johnson's Furn. Store 1-2
Miami — Burdine's 1-2
Monitor Furn. Inc. 2
Moore's 1
Orlando — Lloyd's Home Furnishings 2
Panama City — Danley Furn. Company 1-2
Pensacola — Marston-Quina, Inc. 2
Sarasota — Barkus Furn. Co. 1-2
St. Petersburg — Lester Brothers 1
Maas Brothers 1-2
Tallahassee — Shaw's, Inc. 1
Tampa — Friday-O'Neal Furn. Co. 1
Maas Brothers 1-2
Vero Beach — Tropical Furn. Co. 2
Wachula — J. W. Ernest Company 2
West Palm Beach — Burdine's 1-2
J. J. Cater Furn. Co. 1
Winter Haven — Thornton Furn. Co. 2

GEORGIA

Ailey — Georgia Furn. Co. 1-2
Albany — Albany Housefurnishing Co. 1-2
Athens — Whitmire Furn. Company 2
Atlanta — Rich's, Inc. 1-2
Augusta — Richards Furn. Company 1-2
Bainbridge — Hart-Rollins Furn. Co. 1-2
Williams Furn. Company 1
Baxley — Mills Furn. Company 1-2
Buford — Wilson Furn. Co. 1
Cartersville — Cummings & Shellhorse 2
Cedartown
Stubbs & Hogg Furn. Company 1
Columbus — Hinson Galleries 1
Kirven's 1-2
Cordele — Christopher Furn. Company 1
Dublin — Brown Furn. Company 1-2
Fitzgerald — Home Furn. Company 1-2
Gainesville
Pilgrim-Estes Furn. Company 1
Griffin — Goode & Nichols Furn. Co. 1-2
La Grange — Hinson Colonial House 1-2
Macon — Wood-Peavy Furn. Company 1-2
Moultrie
M. W. Majors Furn. Company 1-2
Pelham — Hand Trading Company 1
Rome
Maxwell Brothers & Garnett Furn. Co. 1
Wyatt's 1
Savannah — Dream House Furn. Co. 1-2
Thomasville — W. Feinberg & Son 1-2
Tifton — Kent's Furn. Store 2
Valdosta — Herrin-Conoly Furn. Company 1
Vidalia — Chastain Furn. Company 1-2
Waycross — R. B. Zachry Furn. Co. 1-2
Waynesboro — Goldbergs Furn. Store 1
Winder
Sanders-Winder Furn. Company 1

HAWAII

Honolulu — Bailey Furn. Co., Ltd. 1

IDAHO

Boise — Hendren's Furn. Co. 1
Caldwell — Case Furn. Company 1
Idaho Falls — Petersen Furn. Co. 1
Lewiston — Lewiston Furn. 1
Moscow — Moscow Furn. & Music 1
Nampa — Case Furn. Company 1
Pocatello — Petersen Furn. Co. 1-2
Twin Falls — Hoosier Furn. Co. 1-2
Weiser — Globe Furn. Co. 1

ILLINOIS

Aurora — Simons Furn. & Rug Co. 1-2
Bloomington — G. A. Ensenberger & Sons 1
W. H. Roland Co. 2
Cairo — Rhodes-Burford 2
Carbondale — Renfro Furn. Co. 1
Centralia — The Fair Furn. Co., Inc. 1-2
Champaign — Robeson's Dept. Store 1-2
Charleston — Miller Furn. Co. 1
Chicago — The Fair 1
Jansen Furn. Co. 1
Rusnak Bros. 1
Chicago Hgts. — Harry Friedlander Furn. 1
The Rau Store 1
Cissna Park — Busch Furn. 1
Danville — Block & Kuhl 2
Penry Furn. Co. 1
Decatur — The Bachman Co., Inc. 1-2
DeKalb — Wirtz & Wirtz 1-2
El Dorado — Craggs-DeVilles 1
Harrisburg — Lloyd L. Parker Furn. Store 1
Havana — Wehner's Furn. 1
Herrin — Herrin Supply Co. 2
Jacksonville — Gustine's Furn. Co. 1-2
Joliet — Fitzgerald Furn. Co. 1-2
Kankakee — Turk Furn. Co. 1-2
Kewanee — Good's Furn. House 1-2
LaSalle — Hummer Furn. Co. 1
Lincoln — Harwick's Furn. 1
Macomb — Wyne Bros. Furn. 1-2
Marion — Cox's 1
Moline — Block & Kuhl 1
Shetter-Tude Furn. 1
Morris — Allan Furn. Co. 1-2
Morton — Dietrich Furn. 1
Mt. Carmel — The Cowling Co. 1-2
Murphysboro — Ward & K Furn. Co. 2
Oak Park — Graiviers Furn. Shop 1
Ottawa — Allan Furn. Co. 1-2
Peoria — Block & Kuhl 1-2
Pontiac — Wright's Furn. & Appl. 2
Quincy — Roy Bennett Ltd. 1-2
Rantoul — Leonard Furn. Co. 2
Rockford — Hess-Lindberg Furn. 1
Rockford Standard Furn. Co. 2
Springfield — The John Bressemer Co. 2
A. Dirksen & Sons 1
Madison Furn. Co. 1-2
Sterling — G. E. Behrens Furn. 1-2
Taylorville — Rost Bulpitt Furn. 1-2
Watseka — L. B. Segur & Co. 1
Waukegan — J. Blumberg, Inc. 1
West Frankfort — B.F.J. Furn. Co. 1

INDIANA

Auburn — Gerig Furn. Co. 1-2
Crawfordsville — Schlool Furn. Co. 1
Crown Point — The House Beautiful 1-2
Elwood — Leeson's New Furn. Mart 1-2
Evansville — The R. & G. Furn. Co. 1
Schear's Furn. Mart 1-2
Fort Wayne — Wolf & Dessauer 1-2
Gary — Radigan Brothers 1
Hammond — Edward C. Minas Co. 1
Indianapolis — L. S. Ayres Co. 1-2
Kokomo — Miller Furn. Co. 1-2
Muncie — C. Cree Gable 1-2
Richmond — Weiss Furn. Store 1-2
South Bend
Robertson Bros. Dept. Store 1-2
Terre Haute — Weberg's 1-2 Valparaiso
Windle's Home Furnishings 1-2
Vincennes — Schultheis & Sons 1
Wolcottville — Patterson Furn. Co. 1-2

IOWA

Burlington — Bennett & Dooley Furn. 1
Block & Kuhl 2
Cedar Rapids — The Luberger Co. 2
Charles City — Andersen Furn. 1
Clinton Byllesby's Home Furnishings 1-2 Davenport — Block & Kuhl 1
Des Moines — Davidsons 2
Younkers 1
Dubuque — Roshek Bros. Co. 1
Fort Dodge — Home Furn. Co. 1
Fort Madison — Home Furn. Co. 1-2
Grinnell — McGregor Furn. Company 1
Marshalltown — The McGregor Company 1
Mason City — Mier Wolf & Sons 1
Muscatine — S. G. & P. Stein Co. 1-2
Oskaloosa — The McGregor Company 1
Ottumwa — McGregor Furn. Co. 1
Sac City — Farber & Otteman 1
Sioux City — T. S. Martin Co. 1
Spencer — Twetten's 1
Washington — Kiple & Deprenger 1
Waterloo — Hurwich Furn. Co., Inc. 2
McGregor Furn. Company 1
Webster City — Brins 1

KANSAS

Garden City — Garnands 1-2
Hays — Home Furn. Co. 1
Hutchinson — Grabers 1-2
Junction City — Johnson Bros. 1
Lawrence — Miller Furn. Co. 1-2
Neodesha — Glenn Utt Furn. 1-2
Parsons — Kinzie Home Furnishings 2
Salina — Norris Furn. Store 1
Topeka — C. A. Karlan Furn. Co. 1-2
Wichita — Hinkels 2

KENTUCKY

Elizabethtown — The Hardin Furn. Co. 1-2
Lexington — Leet Bros. 1
Purcell's 2
Louisville — Stewart Dry Goods Co. 1-2
Mayfield — Rhodes Burford Co., Inc. 1-2
Owensboro
McAtee, Lyddane & Ray, Inc. 1-2
Paducah — Rhodes Burford Co., Inc. 1-2

LOUISIANA

Abbeville — Justin's Furn. Store, Inc. 1 Alexandria — Hemenway's 1
Baton Rouge
Kornmeyer Furn. Co., Inc. 1-2
Bogalusa — Cohen's Furn. Store 1
Crowley — Brandt Furn. Co. 1
Donaldsonville — Matassa Furn. Co., Inc. 1
Houma — John Rizzo 1
Lafayette — Knight's Furn. Store 1-2
Lake Charles — Hemenway's 1
Minden — Webb Hardware & Furn. Co. 1
Monroe — Dixie Bedding & Furn. Co. 1-2
Natchitoches — Mason Salter's 1
New Iberia — Davis Furn. Co. 1
New Orleans
Lester Barnett Gentilly Inc. 2
Maison Blanche 1
D. H. Holmes 2
Hurwitz-Mintz 1
Mintz & Mintz 1
Opelousas — Abdalla's Furn. Store 1
Shreveport — Booth Furn. & Carpet Co. 1
Hemenway's 2
Thibodaux — Block Furn. Co. 1

MAINE

Bangor — Bangor Furn. Co. 1
Portland — Lancaster Furn. Co. 2

MARYLAND

Baltimore — C. J. Benson & Co., Inc. 1
Hochschild, Kohn & Co. 1-2
M. Shaivitz & Sons, Inc. 1
Cumberland — B. Beneman & Sons 1-2
Essex — M. Shaivitz & Sons, Inc. 1
Frederick — Cline's Furn. Store, Inc. 1-2
Hagerstown — Shockey Furn. Co. 1-2
Salisbury — R. E. Powell & Co., Inc. 1

MASSACHUSETTS

Beverly — Scotti Furn. Co. 1-2
Boston — Jordan Marsh Co. 1-2
Boston (West Newton)
Mayflower Wayside Furn. Co. 1
Boston — Paine Furn. Co. 1-2
Wm. E. Tully & Son 2
Brockton — Willis Furn. Co. 1-2
Canton — Connor's Wayside Furn. Co. 1-2
Fall River — Mason Furn. Co. 1-2
Fitchburg — Kidder & Davis Co. 2
Framingham — Jordan Marsh Co. 1-2 Greenfield — Ruby's Furn. Stores, Inc. 2
Haverhill — Boston Furn. Co. 2
Lawrence — Michael J. Sullivan, Inc. 2
Lynn — Titus & Buckley Co. 1
New Bedford — Mason Furn. Co. 1-2
North Adams — Taskin Furn. Co. 1
Northampton — Ruby's Furn. Stores, Inc. 2
Pittsfield — New England Furn. Corp. 1-2
Quincy — Paine Furn. Co. 1-2
Roslindale — Allen Furn. Co. 1
Salem — A. C. Titus Co. 1
Springfield — Red Lion 1
Stoneham — Barbo's, Inc. 2
West Springfield — Sam Salem, Inc. 2
Woburn — Mayflower Wayside Furn. Co. 1

MICHIGAN

Ann Arbor — Handicraft Furn. Co. 1
Bay City — C. E. Rosenbury & Sons 1
Dearborn — Daly Brothers 1-2
Detroit — J. L. Hudson Co. 1-2
Irving's Furn. Co. 1
Margolis Furn. Co. 1
Preuss Furn. Co. 1
Pringle Furn. Co. 1-2
Escanaba — Peterson Furn. Co. 1
Flint — Flint Home Furnishing Co. 1-2
MacDonald Furn. Co. 1
Gladstone — Swenson Brothers 1
Grand Rapids — Galewood Outfitting Co. 2
Klingman's 1-2
Iron Mountain
Iron Mountain Home Furn. Co. 1
Jackson — Vermeulen's 1
Kalamazoo — Vermeulen's 1
Lansing — Estes Furn. Co. 2
J. W. Knapp Company 1
Marshall — E. B. Moore Furn. Co. 1
Menomonie — Plankuch Furniture Co. 1
Monroe — Stadelman's, Inc. 1
Mt. Pleasant — Elmore's 1
Muskegon — Pine Street Furn. Co. 1
Owosso — Robbins Furn. Co. 1
Pontiac — Wiggs 2
Port Huron
Vining-Thompson Furn. Shops 1-2
Plymouth — Blunk's, Inc. 2
Royal Oak — Edward Furn. Co. 1
Triangle Furn. Co. 2
Saginaw — Stevens 1-2
Sault Ste. Marie — Cowan's Dept. Store 1
Traverse City — Wilson Furn. Co. 1-2

MINNESOTA

Minneapolis — Boutell's 1
St. Paul — Emporium Co. 1
Weyand Furn. Co. 1-2

MISSISSIPPI

Biloxi — Merchiston-Hall Galleries 1
Brookhaven — T. H. Perkins Furn. Co. 1-2
Clarksdale — Hungerford's, Inc. 1-2
Greenville — C. E. Jordan & Co. 2
Levy & Rode, Inc. 1-2
Greenwood
Greenwood Furniture Co., Inc. 1-2
Gulfport — J. C. Clower Furn. Co. 1
Hattiesburg — Pioneer Furn. Co. 1-2
Jackson — Kennington Co. 1-2
Laurel — Rhodes, Inc. 1
Meridian — Hulett Furn. Co. 1-2
Natchez — Byrne Furn. Co. 1
Vicksburg — Marcus Furn. Co. 1

MISSOURI

Cape Girardeau
Excelsior Furn. & Music Co. 1-2
Charleston — Frank Lair Co. 1
Gideon — Gideon Anderson Dept. Store 1-2
Hannibal — Bennett & Wyatt Furn. 1-2
Joplin — Newman Furn. Division 1
Kansas City — Emery Bird Thayer 1
Edward Keith 2
Robert Keith 1
Marshall — Winkelmeyer's 1-2
Mexico — Cline Furn. Co. 1-2
Qulin — Joe Hefner Mercantile Co. 1
Springfield — Martin Bros. Piano Co. 1-2
St. Joseph — Kirwan Furn. Co. 1
Townsend & Wall 1-2
St. Louis — Craig Furn. Company 2
Lammert Furn. Co. 1

MONTANA

Billings — Elliott's, Inc. 1-2
Bozeman — Gallatin Valley Furn. Co. 1
Butte — Christie Furn. Co. 1
Furniture Mart 1
Great Falls — Barbers, Inc. 1
Havre — Valley Furn. Co. 1
Helena — Grand Street Furn. Co. 1
Kalispell — Kelly Furn. Co. 1
Missoula — J. M. Lucy & Sons 1

NEBRASKA

Chaney Furn. Co. 1
Fremont — Kavich's Fine Furniture 1
Kearney — Payne-Larson Furniture 1-2
Lincoln — Gold's of Nebraska 1-2
Norfolk — Ballantyne's Furniture 1
North Platte — Dempster Furn. Co. 1
Omaha — Orchard Wilhelm Co. 1-2
Scottsbluff — Webber Furn. Co. 1-2
Valentine — Walts Furn. Co. 1-2

NEVADA

Las Vegas — Sheppard's 1
Wood's Maple House 2
Reno — Reno Furn. Co. 1

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Manchester — E. M. Chase Co. 2
Portsmouth — Margeson's, Inc. 1-2

NEW JERSEY

Asbury Park — Frederick Furn. 1
Steinbach Company 2
Atlantic City — M. E. Blatt Co. 1-2
Avenel
Winter Brothers Wayside Furn. Shop 1-2
Bayonne — Steinert Brothers 1
Elizabeth — McManus Bros. 1-2
Englewood — Franklin Furn. Co. 1
Freehold — Silvert's 2
Hackensack — Denson's 1-2
Hackettstown — Reliable Furn. House 1-2
Haddonfield — Haddon Wayside 1-2
Hanover — E. A. Kirch & Co. 1
Hoboken — Washington Furn. Co. 1
Jersey City — Goodman Furn. Co. 1
Keyport — West Furn. Company 1-2
Montclair — Hampton House 1
Morristown
Grand Rapids Furn. House 1-2
Newark — Cooper Furn. Co., Inc. 1
Hahne & Co. 1-2
New Brunswick — Middlesex Furn. Co. 1
J. Schwartz 2
North Bergen — Castle Furn. Co. 1-2
North Hackensack — Huffman & Boyle 1-2
North Plainfield
Highway Furn. Shop, Inc. 2
Orange — Gold Furn. Co. 1
Huffman & Boyle 1-2
Paramus — Castle Furn. Co. 1-2
Passaic — Locker Bros. 1
Paterson — Bograd Brothers 1-2
C. De Palma Furn. Co. 1
Scott & De Palma 1-2
Perth Amboy — Du Brow's 1-2
Plainfield — Watchung Furn. House 1-2
Pompton Plains — Huffman & Boyle 1-2
Princeton
The Rug Mart-The Furn. Mart 1
Red Bank — Sterling Furn. Shop 1-2
Ridgewood
Ridgewood Rug & Carpet Co. 1
Rutherford — Hayman Furn. Stores 1
Salem — Hitchner's 1-2
Sea Girt — Sea Girt Furn. Shop 1
Somerville — Granetz 1-2
Springfield — Huffman & Boyle 1-2
Succasunna — Suburban Furn. Co. 2
Teaneck — Ronald Furn. Co. 1
Trenton — J. Ferd Convery, Inc. 1-2

NEW MEXICO

Albuquerque — Broome Furn. Co. 1
West's 1
Carlsbad — Wertheim Furn. Co. 1-2
Clovis — Allen's Furn. Co. 1-2
Deming — J. A. Mahoney 1
Hobbs — Thompson Hdw. & Furn. Co. 2
White's Auto Stores 1
Roswell — C. Forster Furn. Co. 1-2
Santa Fe — Broome Furn. Co. 1

NEW YORK

Albany — John B. Hauf, Inc. 1
Harry Simmons Co., Inc. 1 Amityville, L. I.
Nassau Wayside Shops 1-2
Amsterdam — Chas. J. Olender & Sons 1
Astoria, L. I. — Harris Furn. Co. 1-2
Auburn — H. R. Wait Co. 1-2
Batavia — Batavia Furn. Store 2 Bayshore, L. I.
Ralph Edwards Fine Furn. 2
Bayside, L. I. — Victor Furn. Center 1-2
Bellerose, L. I. — Bellerose Furn. Co. 1-2
Binghamton — Ellis Bros., Inc. 1-2
Boonville — Clark A. Layng 1-2
Buffalo — J. N. Adam Co. 1-2
Gardner Furn. Co. 1-2
Central Islip, L. I.
Suffolk Wayside Shops 1-2
Corning — J. P. & M. Sullivan, Inc. 1-2
Cortland — Peck's Furn. House 1-2
Elmira — J. P. & M. Sullivan, Inc. 1-2
Far Rockaway, L. I. — Neve Furn. Co. 1-2
Flushing, L. I. — B. Gertz, Inc. 1-2
Simons Furn. Co. 1-2
Forest Hills — Town House Furn. 1
Geneva — Lynch Furn. Co. 2
Glendale, L. I.
Michaels Floor Covering 1-2
Glens Falls — Wilmarth & Son 1
Gloversville — Livingston's 1
Hempstead, L. I. — George's Fine Furn. 1-2
John A. Schwarz, Inc. 1-2
Hudson — R. Gray's Sons 1
Huntington, L. I.
Ralph Edwards Fine Furn. 1-2
Jackson Heights, L. I.
Jackson Furn. Co. 1-2
Jamaica, L. I. — B. Gertz, Inc. 1-2
Jamestown — Wellman Brothers 1-2
Kingston — Kaplan Furn. Co. 1
Latham — John P. Ryan Furn. Corp. 2
Manhasset, L. I. — Flint & Horner 2
John Hamill, Inc. 1-2
W & J Sloane 1
Mineola — J. Katz Furn. Co. 1-2
Mt. Vernon — Fennells 1
Newburgh — Kreisel Furn. Co. 1
New Rochelle — Stan Cassidy 1
Neptune Furn. Co. 1-2
New York City — B. Altman & Co. 2
Cahill & Barros 1-2
G. Cardarelli 2
Gimbel Bros. 2
Hathaways 1
Daniel Jones 1
Lee-Smyth, Inc. 1-2
W & J Sloane 1
Stern Bros. 1-2
Niagara Falls
Mendleson's Furn. Galleries 2
Harry Pugrant 1
Ogdensburg — Sperling's, Inc. 2
Oneida — Edward J. Browne 1
John Froass & Son 2
Ossining — Cartoons Furn. Store 1-2
Oswego — Browne-Davis Furn. Co. 1-2
Port Chester
Jos. Tunick and Sons, Inc. 1-2
Poughkeepsie — Luckey-Platt & Co. 1
Mitchell Furn. Co. 2
Riverhead, L. I. — J. Meyer 1-2
Rochester — Lauer Furn. Co., Inc. 1
Sibley, Lindsay & Curr 1-2
Weis & Fisher Co. 2
Rockville Centre, L. I.
Nassau Wayside Shops 1-2
Schenectady — H. S. Barney Co. 2
Southampton, L. I. — E. A. Hildreth 1-2
Staten Island — Farr Furn. Co. 1
J. Jaeger & Sons 2
Shepard Furn. Co. 1
Syracuse — I. Fleischman & Sons 1-2
Tarrytown — Cartoons Furn. Store 1-2
Troy — R. C. Reynolds Co. 1
John P. Ryan Furn. Corp. 2
Utica — E. Tudor Williams, Inc. 1-2
Valley Stream, L. I. — The Roman Co. 1-2
White Plains — Ardsley Furn. Corp. 1-2
Riley-Hogan 2
W & J Sloane 1
Woodhaven, L. I. — Klingman Furn. Co. 2
Yonkers — Brenner Furn. Co. 2
M. Dee & Son 1

NORTH CAROLINA

Ahoskie — Garretts, Inc. 2
Asheville — Morrison's, Inc. 1-2
Benson — Rose Furn. Co. 2
Burlington — Neese-Shoffner Furn. Co. 1-2 Chapel Hill — Johnson-Strowd-Ward 2
Charlotte
Mecklenburg Furn. Shops, Inc. 1-2
Concord — Craig-Prewitt 2
Dunn — Dunn Furn. Co. 1-2
Durham
Christian-Harward Furn. Co. 1-2
Elizabeth City — Quinn Furn. Co. 1-2
Elizabethtown
Bladen Hdw. & Furn. Co. 2
Farmville — Farmville Furn. Co. 1-2
Fayetteville — Market Furn. Co. 2
Forest City — Grindstaff Furn. Co. 2
Fuquay Springs — Proctor-LarLour Co. 1-2
Gastonia — Rankin-Armstrong Co., Inc. 2
Goldsboro — Creech's, Inc. 2 Heilig Meyers Co. 1
Greensboro — Morrison-Neese, Inc. 1-2
Colonial Furn. House 1
Greenville — Taft Furn. Co. 1-2
Henderson
M. B. Sasser Wayside Furn. Co. 2
Hickory — Wagner Furn. Co. 1-2
High Point — Bloom Furn. Co. 1-2
Jacksonville — Modern Furn. Co. 2
Kannapolis — Snead-Sprott Furn. Co. 2
Kinston — Oettinger Bros. Furn. Co. 2
Laurinburg — Market Furn. Co. 2
Lillington — Wilrich Furn. Co. 2
Lumberton — R. W. Norman Furn. Co. 2
Morganton — Nite Furn. Co. 1-2
New Bern — Heilig-Levine Furn. Co. 1
Newton — Carolina Furn. Store 2
Raleigh — Heilig-Levine Furn. Co. 1
Wayside Furn. House 1-2
Roanoke Rapids
Crutchfield-Bunn Furn. Co. 2
Rockingham — Hallum Furn. Co. 1-2
Rocky Mount — Bulluck Furn. Co. 2
Enterprise Furn. Co. 1
Roseboro — Butler Furn. Co. 2
Salisbury — R. W. Norman Co. 1
Sparks Furn. Co. 2
Selma — Dunn Furn. Co. 2
Smithfield — Home Furn. Co. 1-2
Spray — Wall Furn. Co. 2
Statesville — Blackwelder Furn. Co. 1
Gordon's Furn. Dept. Store 2
Tarboro — W. S. Clark & Sons 2
J. E. Simmons Furn. Co. 2
Washington — Southern Furn. Co. 1-2
Whiteville — Todd Furn. Co. 1-2
Wilmington — Todd Furn. Co. 1-2
Todd Wayside Furn. Co. 1
Wilson — R. E. Quinn Furn. Co. 2
Windsor — Byrd-Walker Furn. Co. 2
Winston-Salem — Colonial Furn. Shops 1
Morris-Early & Co. 2
Zebulon — Whitley Furn. Co. 1-2

NORTH DAKOTA

Fargo — Bergstrom-Crowe Co. 1-2
Luger Furn. Co. 1

OHIO

Akron — Polsky's 1
Alliance — Cope Furn. Co., Inc. 1
Archbold — Detter's Furn. 1
Ashland — Gilbert Furn. Co. 1
Athens — Jayne's Furn. Co. 1
Bellville — Meyers Furn. Co. 1-2
Bucyrus — William Wise & Sons 1-2
Canton — Summers Furn. Shoppe 1
Thurin's 2
Chillicothe — Ebenhack & Son 1-2
Cincinnati — Alms & Doepke Co. 1
Kreimer's 1
Wm. Kurtinitis Furn. 2
Paul Schutte Furn. Co. 2
The John Shillito Co. 2
Stille & Duhlmeier Furn. Co. 1
Cleveland — The Halle Bros. Co. 1-2
Columbus — The F. G. & A. Howald Co. 1-2
The F. & R. Lazarus Co. 1-2
Schorr-Ketner & Lane 2
Cuyahoga Falls — Long & Co. 2
Dayton — Elder & Johnston Co. 1-2
Defiance — Hoffman's 2
Dennison — The Hicks Co., Inc. 2
East Liverpool
The Moore Furn. Co., Inc. 1
Fremont — Tschumy Brothers 1-2
Galion — Willard Logan Furn. Co. 1
Greenville — Willhoff's 1
Hillsboro — Stockwell's 1
Hubbard — C. R. Stewart & Sons 1
Kenton — Jennings Furn. Co. 1
Rexin's, Inc. 2
Lancaster — Buchanan's 1-2
Lima — Armstrong & Son Co. 1-2
Lucas — McCready Furn. Co. 2
Mansfield
W. E. Jones Piano & Furn. Co. 2
Chas. Schroer Co. 1-2
Marion — City Furn. Mart 1-2
Middletown
Rathman-Troup Furn. Co. 1-2
Mount Vernon — The Rudin Co., Inc. 1
New Philadelphia
Linn-Hert Company 1-2
North Baltimore — L. L. Trout 1-2 Norwalk — Perfected Furniture 2
Piqua — Buecker's 1-2
Portsmouth — Long & Co. 1-2
Springfield — Robert Gray Barnitz Studio 1
Toledo — Johnson Brothers Furn. Co. 1-2
LaSalle & Koch Company 1-2
Upper Sandusky — Bernard Furn. Co. 1
Van Wert — Balyeat Furn. Co. 1
Warren — The Cross-Leslie Co. 1
Wilmington — G. M. Rice Furn. Co. 1-2
Youngstown — Hume's 1-2
Lowry Furn. & Carpet Co. 1-2

OKLAHOMA

Ada — Pete Green Furn. Co. 1
Altus — Hickerson Furn. Co. 1-2
Ardmore — Collier Bros. 1-2
Bartlesville — Bartlesville Furn. Co. 1-2
Clinton — Chalfant Furn. Co. 1
Duncan — Everetts Home Furnishing 1-2
Hobart — Stanley Furn. Co. 1-2
Chickasha — Collier Brothers 1
Lawton — Colony House 2
Lacy Furn. Co. 1
Marlow — J. F. Callaway & Co. 1
McAlester — Kerr Furn. Co. 1
Miami — Nelson Furn. Co. 1
Muskogee — Nelson Furn. Co. 1
Norman — Landsaw Furn. Co. 1
Oklahoma City
Callaway Home Furnishings 1-2
Harbour Longmire 2
O K Furn. & Rug Co. 1
Okmulgee — Nelson Furn. Co. 1
Ponca City — Glenn Paris & Son 1-2
Tulsa — Cathey's 1-2
Wewoka — J. A. Ligon 1

OREGON

Albany — Frager Furn. Co. 1
Baker — Emrich Furn. Co. 1
Eugene — Rubenstein Furn. Co. 1
Klamath Falls — Klamath Furn. Co. 1
Oregon City — Hogg Brothers 1
Portland — Meier and Frank Co. 1
Salem — Hamilton Furn. Co. 1

PENNSYLVANIA

Aliquippa — Pittsburgh Mercantile Co. 1
Allentown — C. A. Dorney Furn. Co. 1
Altoona — The Wm. F. Gable Co. 1-2
Ardmore — E. J. Tract 1-2
Bangor — Harold Hough 2
Beaver — J. T. Anderson 1
Beaver Falls — Walter H. Gross Furn. Co. 2
Bellefonte — Brachbill's 1-2
Berlin — Johnson & Son 1
Berwick — Guinan Dept. Store 1-2
Bethlehem — Furniture Hall 1-2
Butler — Davis Furn. Co. 2
John Honse Co. 1
Carlisle — Earley's, Inc. 1-2
Chambersburg — P. Nicklas' Sons, Inc. 1-2
Chester — Tollins 1-2
Clearfield — Wolf Furn. Co. 1
Coatesville — Lipkin Furn. Stores 1-2
Connellsville — Aaron Company 1
Danville — McVey's 2
Du Bois — Du Bois Furn. Co. 2
Easton — Furniture House 1
Liebman's 2
Lipkin's 1
Elizabethtown — Roth's Furn. Store 1-2
Erdenheim
Erdenheim Wayside Furniture 1-2
Erie — Klick Furn. Co., Inc. 1-2
Ford City — A. Greenbaum & Son 2
Genesee — Chapman-Lurrton 1-2
Gettysburg — R. W. Wentz & Sons 2
Greensburg — A. E. Troutman Co. 2
Grove City — Shelley's Furn. Store 1
Hanover — Waltersdorf Furn. Co. 1-2
Harrisburg — M. Lee Goldsmith 2
Hazleton
Williams Hazleton Furn. Mart 1-2
Homestead — Half Brothers 1
Huntingdon — C. H. Miller Hdw. Co. 1
Jeannette — Euwer & Co. 1-2
Johnstown — Penn Traffic Co. 2
Lancaster — Watt and Shand 1
Westenberger, Maley & Myers 2
Latrobe — Miller and Bigg Co. 1
Leechburg — Leechburg Furn. Co. 2
Lock Haven — Wolf Furn. Co. 2
Mahanoy City — Guinan Dept. Store 1-2
McKeesport — Hirshberg Furn. Co. 1
R. E. Kaplan 2
Meadville — J. H

. . . America's most popular traditional furniture group! Superb beauty, flawless construction and 100 open-stock ...ting freedom in your dining room and bedroom. Starting group, including table, four chairs and buffet, as low as $359.*

IT'S

Drexel-time U.S.A.

...TO FURNISH UP...FASHION UP...FURNISH UP

The opportunity of the year to make the most of Drexel's Value, Variety, Versatility! Never before has there been a wider selection to choose from, nor have prices been more to your liking! Two typical opportunities are pictured here—see them at your nearest Drexel dealer listed opposite.

Get your "Portfolio of Fine Furniture", colorful booklets on Drexel's provincial, traditional and modern groups featured during "Drexel-time U.S.A." Send 25c in coin to 14 Huffman Road, Drexel, North Carolina.

©

Relaxed, comfortable, informal . . . that's American Traditional, with nearly 80 authentic designs in sunny sugar pine for living room, bedroom and dining room. Starting group, including dresser, mirror and bed (single or double), as low as $179.*

by Drexel

Drexel FURNITURE COMPANY
Drexel, North Carolina

*Slightly higher in the West

HATHAWAY NYLON

WELCOMES SUNLIGHT!

CURTAINS OF

HATHAWAY NYLON

MARQUISETTE

BRING YEARS OF BEAUTY

TO YOUR HOME!

Famous HATHAWAY NYLON Marquisette loves sunlight!

And you'll love the way your curtains of this beautiful Hathaway fabric resist wrinkles, shed dust. They wash as easily as stockings—without stretching or shrinking—dry in a jiffy with only touch-up ironing needed.

Curtains of HATHAWAY NYLON Marquisette come in two shimmering weaves—luxurious Masterweave or airy Crystalweave—both at prices everyone can afford.

Look for the Hathaway label.

Nylon • Dacron* • Orlon • Organdy • Dots

*Du Pont's polyester fiber Du Pont's acrylic fiber

Ruffled

Tiers

Tailored

FREE! ALL ABOUT CURTAINS

Hathaway Mfg. Co., Dept. L 104, New Bedford, Mass.

Send for this booklet of decorating ideas. Shows how to use standard curtains to achieve beautiful effects.

Name.....

Address..... City..... State.....

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 119

Rick reconsidered. There was no sense getting a boy into trouble on the first day of school. "Well," he said slowly, "I'll let it pass this time. Just get back to your classroom."

"Sure thing," Miller said. He walked to the door with the Puerto Rican and Rick followed them into the corridor. When they were out of sight, he turned to find the fat boy with his chair.

He took the chair, placed it against the wall, and said, "Thanks a lot." The fat boy nodded. Rick unzipped his briefcase and took out the Delaney book, hoping to arrange the cards for his official class. He was reaching for the Delaney cards when the outside doors were thrown open. He got to his feet as three boys came through the inside doors, laughing.

"What's this?" Rick asked sternly. "Where are you boys coming from?"

"Outside, teach'."

"You're not supposed to enter the building through this entrance."

"Oh no?" the boy asked, surprised.

"No," Rick said.

"We was just havin' lunch."

"Well, clear out and go around to the auditorium entrance, the way you're supposed to."

"Sure, teach'," the boy said. Together, the three went down the marble steps and out of the building.

"How'd they get in?" Rick asked the fat monitor.

"Through the doors, I guess," the boy answered.

"I know, but aren't the doors locked?"

"Gee, I guess not."

"Go down and lock them, would you?"

The fat boy hesitated. Then he said, "I can't, Mr. Dadier. The locks are busted."

"What do you mean busted?"

"On all the doors. That's how the kids get in."

"How long have they been broken?" Rick asked.

"Long as I can remember," the fat boy answered.

"M-m-m," Rick said, making a mental note to tell the custodian about the broken locks. "We'll just have to be careful then, that's all."

"Yes, sir."

Rick sat down again. He was seated for about thirty seconds when the outside doors flew open and a swarm of kids started up the marble steps. He dispatched them quickly, sat down for a full minute, and then rose again when a new gang started up the steps. By the time he'd sent them around to the auditorium entrance, the toilet had gathere and smokers, and Rick flushed grily, giving them all warnings. chance to sit down again becaus riod was almost over, and the were opening and closing with ity as the kids began returning building.

When the bell announcing t period finally rang, Rick cons gram he'd taped to the inside of Fourth period: Lunch.

Allah be praised.

As he walked up to the thir lingered awhile to avoid the st congratulated himself upon w ered almost perfect behavior th shown a tough exterior to whereas tough teachers were no they were always respected. H ticularly interested in being lov terested in doing his job, and teaching. Once discipline becam would be time for joking, time fo

He had formed no preconce what the teachers' lunchroom so he had no reason to be surp he found. The lunchroom co rooms. There was an open door stepped through it into the first

One wall was lined with win posite wall was bare. A long length of the room. The table refrigerator and a sink occupie ing Rick. An old gas stove wa side of the doorway. A teakett stove, blue flame curling aroun

Rick stepped through the do second, smaller room. This w room, as differentiated—he su the other room which could be kitchen. A table was in the cente There were chairs around the t were men sitting in the chairs, had a sandwich in his hands. A rested beneath the bulletin boa

A short stout man standing tin board turned when Rick smiled and said, "Sit down waiter will take your order."

"Thanks," Rick said. The ot table glanced up, smiled, and t to demolishing their sandwiche out a chair, dipped into his bri sandwiches Anne had prepare them on the table before him. T bulletin board continued lookin

"My name is Solly Klein," he one of the new English teachers

"You shouldn't have winked at him when you got on, mister."

ne is Rick Dadier."
the Forbidden City," Solly going so far?"
."
," Solly answered. "It'll get led, and then the smile van-wondered if he were joking ything to drink?" Rick asked.

onalcoholic, I take it," one of able said. The man was small a curling crop of hair that d like a Navy watch cap. He in one hand, and an open his-other.
"I don't suppose there's beer re?"
if you can get the water tap to first teaching job?" the small,

l.

Katz," the small, wiry man udies. Taught at Christopher re I got appointed here."
have stayed there," Solly said.
o change the subject," Rick get something to drink?"
hoice," Solly said. "You can container of milk and stick it or. If you drink coffee, you can ffee and use the hot water from tside. If you drink tea, you can chaefer a scant ten cents a 'll let you use the tea balls he e hot water is still free."
Rick started.
you will have to pay Schaefer ll pop in any minute and put
, as soon as he has his gym-ropes or playing basketball."
n teacher?" Rick asked. "What
?"
he captain buys the cups."
are the dues?"
tain," Solly said. "They change me a quarter," one of the men down the length of the table to l spoken. He was a tall, hand-lder than twenty-five, and built f a Greek athlete.

ounds reasonable," Rick said.
I could use one of the tea balls
my dues?"
elf," Solly said.
the cupboard, found the card-
r of tea balls.
s boiling," George Katz said, n his history book. "Would you ball, Dadier?"
said.

d to the cupboard and took arked with S.K. in bright blue ight as well all have some tea."
is cup to the table, putting it Rick's sandwiches. "How about
" he asked the Greek athlete.
me," Manners replied. "I'm man. Two quarts a day."
," Solly said. "I'll bet you don't r curse either."
t me wrong," Manners said.
Amoral Alan in my neighborat? In the Virgin Islands?"

st," Manners said.
d they give you a school in the l," Manners said dryly. "I won't nyway."

?"
all-girls' school," Manners said.
rse than all-boys' schools."
to his ham sandwich and then ea.
go to an all-girls' school if you id, "but you won't find it any any other vocational school in ll you something, Dadier. This can of the educational system.
nal school in the city. You put ther, and you got one big, fat, garbage can. And you want to r job is? Our job is to sit on the age can and see that none of the filth overflows into the streets. That's our job."

"Maybe the kids just need a chance," Rick said. "They can't all be bad."

"All right," Solly said, "you give them their chance. But whatever you do, don't turn your back on them."

"I turned my back on them this morning."

"And you didn't get stabbed?" Solly shrugged. "The first day of school. They probably left their hardware home."

"You're exaggerating," Rick said, smiling.

"I am, huh? All right, I'm exaggerating. I turned my back on a class just once. Just once. I never turned my back again after that."

"What happened?"

"I was putting a diagram of a carburetor on the board. I had my back turned for about forty seconds. I had hardly picked up the chalk and started the drawing. A baseball came crashing into the blackboard about two inches from my head. It knocked a piece of slate out of the board as big as a half dollar."

"What'd you do?" Rick asked.

"I got so mad I was ready to rip every one of those stinkers into little pieces. I turned around, and they were all sitting there dead-panned with that stupid, innocent look on their faces. Then I cooled down and played it smart. I picked up the baseball, dropped it in the wastebasket and said, 'You'll never pitch for the Yanks, boy.' Just that. But I never turned my back again. Even writing on the board. I do it sideways."

"Solly's right," George Katz put in. "You've got to realize what you're dealing with. You've got to understand the problem of most of these kids, and adjust your teaching accordingly."

"What teaching?" Solly wanted to know. "There's no teaching involved here. The sooner you realize that, the better off you'll be."

"Well," Katz said respectfully, "I think that's carrying it a little far."

Good Morning, darling . . .

You were so pretty sleeping this morning that I could not wake you. You looked as you must have when you were a child . . . warm, relaxed and dreaming about something quite wonderful. You had a little smile on your face and some of that blue-violet blanket against your cheek . . . and a lump came into my throat as I looked at you.

Beloved things are always beautiful . . . the woman for the wonder of her . . . the St. Marys Blanket for the color it casts across a cheek . . . for the sun-warmth it gives in darkness . . . for the years its soft strength comforts and contents.

ST. MARYS BLANKETS

ST. MARYS, OHIO

St. Marys

© St. Marys Woolen Mfg. Co.

Twin Bed, Double Bed and King Size Blankets • Baby Blankets • St. Marys Fabrics • Three Weavers Handwoven Throws

Rick rose, cleared his place and dumped the waxed paper and brown bag in the trash basket. Then he washed the cup he'd used and put it back in the cupboard.

When the bell rang, he picked up his brief case. Solly said, "I'll walk down with you."

"O.K.," Rick said.

"What've you got now?" Solly asked.

"Fifth-termers," Rick said.

"Fifth-termers, you say?" Solly asked, his eyebrows raised. He didn't say another word as they walked down the steps.

The first thing Rick noticed when he entered the room was that the class was a small one, not more than twenty boys. He didn't know that there were thirty-five in 55-206, and that many of them had already begun cutting on this first day of the term. The second thing he noticed was the Negro boy with the white T shirt and dungarees. The boy noticed him at the same moment, and the charming grin broke out on his handsome face.

"Well," he said, "hello, chief."

"Gregory Miller," Rick said.

"You did remember the name, di'ntchoo, chief?"

"Sit down, Miller," Rick said. "And my name is Mr. Dadier. I think you'd better start remembering that."

Miller took his seat, and Rick looked over to the other boys who were standing around the room, talking or laughing.

"All right," he said, "let's sit down. And let's make it fast."

The boys looked at him, but made no move toward their seats.

"You deaf back there? Let's break it up."

"Why?" one of the boys asked.

"I heard you, smart boy. Get to your seat before you find a seat in the principal's office."

"I'm petrified," the tall boy said. He continued smiling as he walked to the middle of the room and took the seat alongside Miller. The other boys, taking his move as a cue, slowly drifted to the seats and attention to Rick.

"You may keep the seats you Rick said, reaching into his briefc Delaney cards. He distributed th said, "I'm sure you know how out."

"We sure do," the blond boy s

"I didn't get your name," Rick edly.

"Maybe 'cause I didn't give answered.

"His name is Emmanuel too," He smiled at the private joke wh and Rick shared.

"Is it?" Rick asked innocently

"No," the blond boy said.

"Then what is it?"

"Guess," the blond boy said with a W."

"I'd say 'Wiseguy' offhand, good at guessing. What's your make it snappy."

"West," the boy said, "Artie W

Rick looked out over the b filled out the cards. There was Negroes in the class, and the res were white, including a few Pu They all appeared to be between seventeen, and most of them wor and dungarees which Rick assun unofficial uniform of the school.

"As you know," he said, "th 55-206, and we're here to lear know a lot of you will be wonde earth you have to learn English. help you get a job as a mech electrician? The answer is yes. Be you'll enjoy this class, and yo surprised to find English one of subjects before the term is finishe

"I'll be s'prised, all right," Mi

"I don't want any calling out room," Rick said sternly. "If yo thing to say, raise your hand. I stood? My name, incidentally, is

"We heard of you, Daddy-ol the back of the room said.

"Pronunciation is an impor English," Rick said coldly. "I'd any boy because he couldn't l nounce my name. It's Mr. Dad and learn it now. Believe me, it my heart to fail all of you."

A small Negro boy wearing a suddenly got to his feet. He put his hips.

"You ever try to fight thirty- once, teach'?" he asked.

Rick heard the question, and trigger response in his mind wh This is it, Dadier. This is it, n narrowed his eyes and walked purposefully around his desk. seated in the middle of the roo walked up the aisle, realizing as he was placing himself in a su boys position. He walked direct and said, "Sit down, son, and hat before I knock it off."

HE said it tightly, the way he' lines for Duke Mantee when he' Petrified Forest at Hunter. He what the reaction would be, vaguely aware of a persistent fea up his spine and into his crani he could be jumped by all of single instant, and the knowled taut and tense.

The room was dead silent, a suddenly cold, despite the Se shine streaming through the win

The boy snatched the hat fron his bravado gone. "I'm sorry said, and instantly corrected Dadier."

He sat immediately, and av eyes. Rick turned and walked ba desk. His face was set tightly, an nostrils flare, the way he'd learne time ago in his first dramatics cl

He raised his head slowly, th anger still in his eyes. "Pass the to the front of the room. Pas program cards, too, and I'll sig there, in the first row, collect th them to my desk."

No other cream or lotion does more to help keep your birthdays from showing!

Cellogen Hormone Cream by Dorothy Gray

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH PROVES its combination of hormones and extra-rich emollients works most quickly . . . most naturally . . . to help you look younger and lovelier!

If your mirror reveals "expression lines", sallowness or increased skin dryness, use CELLOGEN HORMONE CREAM nightly. Its exclusive combination of hormones and extra-rich emollients works faster . . . more effectively to help your skin deny your age!

In terms of self-confidence and serenity alone, CELLOGEN HORMONE CREAM can reward you immeasurably. And you may expect to see a radiantly younger look in as little as 30 days!

With its full 10,000 International Units (per ounce) of natural estrogenic hormones, CELLOGEN HORMONE CREAM helps boost your own supply which dwindles with the years. Thus, it helps "cushion" your skin against dryness and lines through better moisture retention. It also heightens circulation within skin for a more youthful glow. The costly, extra-rich emollients in CELLOGEN HORMONE CREAM work in unison with its hormones—help speed beautifying action. At the same time they combat dryness, promote a smoother, fresher look.

The finest beauty care you can give your skin takes only a few delightful minutes each day!

1 CLEANSE—with Dorothy Gray Dry-Skin Cleanser, scientifically formulated for the mature skin type. Now at new popular prices—$1. to $3.50.

2 STIMULATE—with Dorothy Gray Orange Flower Skin Lotion, made just for you. $1. to $3.75.

3 LUBRICATE—with famous Dorothy Gray CELLOGEN HORMONE CREAM. $3.50 and $5.

4 UNDER MAKE-UP—use Dorothy Gray CELLOGEN HORMONE LOTION, and give your skin 24-hour benefits. It's greaseless! $2.50 and $5.

Remember, too—no treatment for over-30 skin is complete without REMOLDINE! This famous Dorothy Gray Contour Facial (with Hormones) gives a "lifted" glowing look! $2.50 and $5.

(All prices plus tax.)

Trust Dorothy Gray

For everything you need to stay a beauty—

the first seat of the first row ade no move to start collecting ear me?" Rick asked.

oy said, still smiling vacuously.
move," Rick said tightly.
se, collected the cards, and to Rick.
mechanically signing the pro-
We won't accomplish much to-getting acquainted. Tomorrow ooks from the bookroom, and Our trip to the bookroom more than ——"
necessary?" one of the boys

second row. Rick automatically oy. "What'd you say, Belazi?"
is trip necessary?"
Does that answer your quess," the boy said.

does, Belazi. Do you have any t questions to ask?"

. May I go on with what I was ith your kind permission?"
zi said, smiling.
. I appreciate your thoughtful-st thoughtful cat in this class," phatically.

ked you, Miller," Rick snapped.
volunteerin' the information."
te it," Rick said, unsmiling.
o manage without your help."
ll make it, teach'?" West asked.
what, West," Rick said. "I'll ur this afternoon, planning ton. Since you're so worried, why me, and we'll plan it together."
andle that case alone," West help him," another boy called.

away and looked directly at first seat of the first row. The miling that blank, stupid smile.
ny?" Rick asked.
tinued to smile.
k snapped. He looked at the elaney book. "Santini. What's Santini said, smiling broadly.

are you ——"
in'est cat in this whole school,"
d Rick. "He smile all the time.
e an idiot."
ck asked, turning.
d his temple with one forefinger.
s," he said, "but no brains."
at Santini. The boy was still e smile was an idiotic one. He mbarrassed for having brought e attention of the class. Surely t an idiot, but his intelligence so low that —— pay attention here," Rick said attention," Santini said inno-ling.

his throat and passed out the n cards. "We'll cover a lot of ics this term," he said. "We'll vspapers, and we'll read a lot of rt stories, and several good have contests, too, for letter or progress. I'm thinking of s to the boys who show me orking. Like tickets to football ckey games. Provided I get tion from you."
near of Juan Garza, teach'?"
s piped.
't believe so. Who was Juan be in my class," the boy said.

ed his card now in the Delaney
's name was Maglin.
t Juan Garza, Maglin?" ght you might have heard about was a celebrity of some sort,"

y.
as," Maglin said, and all the a shame he's not in the class id, and for some reason all the boys found this exceptionally funny. He was ready to pursue the subject further when the bell rang. He rose quickly and said, "I'll see you all tomorrow. Miller, I'd like to talk to you for a moment."

Miller's brow creased into a frown. He came to the front of the room and stood uneasily by the desk.

Rick waited until the other boys were gone. "Miller, I've checked your records," he lied. "You've got the makings of a leader. You're bright and quick, and the other boys like you."

"Me?" Miller asked, surprised. "Me?"

The flattery was beginning to work. Rick pressed his advantage. "Yes, Miller, you. Come now, you know you're head and shoulders above all these boys."

Miller smiled shyly. "Well, I don't know. I mean ——"

"Here's the point. We're going to have a damned fine class here." He used the word "damned" purposely, to show Miller he was not above swearing occasionally. "I can sense that. But I want it to be an outstanding class and I can't make it that without your help."

"Me?" Miller asked again, really surprised.

"Yes, you," he pushed on. "Come on, let's lay our cards on the table."

"I don't know what you want, ch—Mr. Dadier," Miller said.

"I want you to be the leader in this class. I want you to give me all your co-operation, and the other boys will automatically follow suit. If you help me, we can make this class the best one in the school."

"Well, I don't know," Miller said dubiously.

"I do know. What do you say, boy?"

"Well . . . sure, I'll help all I can."

"That's my boy," Rick said, rising and clapping Miller on the shoulder. "I'll see you tomorrow." He walked to the doorway, his arm around the boy. "Now take it easy."

"Sure," Miller said. His brow furrowed once, and then he smiled. "Sure," he said almost arrogantly.

One of life's bleakest moments—A tissue without wet-strength left in a pocket spreads fuzzy lint all over the wash

Happy surprise—Again a tissue left in a pocket—but it was a "wet strength" Scottie. No messy lint, it came through all in one piece

Wet-Strength Scotties don't go to pieces

—IF YOU ACCIDENTALLY LEAVE A SCOTTIE IN A POCKET IT DOESN'T SPREAD LINT ALL OVER YOUR WASH

Accidents will happen—but if a Scottie should get into your washing machine via an apron or pajama pocket your wash is safe.

Hundreds of women have written us that Scotties, with their remarkable wet-strength, actually go from "wash" to "spin dry" without going to pieces, without leaving your colored wash a mass of fuzzy, hard-to-remove lint.

When you blow or sneeze, or when you remove make-up, Scotties stay whole. They don't shred or go to pieces in your fingers.

Get Scotties today. In the handy vanity size or the big family box—they are another great Scott Paper value. Scotties are thrifties.

You will be grateful for Scotties wonderful new wet-strength for heavy-cold blows and sneezes

"SCOTTIES," REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

Rick watched him go down the corridor. He zipped up his brief case, and when he left the room for his Unassigned sixth period, he was happy. He had no idea where he was going. He knew that he could go up to the teachers' lunchroom, but he somehow did not feel like listening to more comments upon the imbecility of the students at Manual Trades.

Instead, he decided to leave the building, take a brisk walk. He did not know that a teacher was not permitted to leave the building during an Unassigned period. He headed for the stair well. It was then that he became a hero.

The sunshine streamed through the meshed window, blinding him for an instant. He saw a blur of movement to the right of the window, and blinked his eyes against the sunlight, and then the blur became two figures.

He suddenly realized that the figures were struggling, and figured it for a fight between two of the boys. Then the figures took a definite shape, and he dropped the brief case, and started forward at a sprint.

One of the figures was a tall boy in T shirt and dungarees. The other figure was Miss Hammond.

The boy had one hand clamped over Miss Hammond's mouth. The other hand was around her waist as he forced her backward against the wall.

"Hey!" Rick shouted.

The boy turned suddenly, moving to Miss Hammond's side. Rick saw the torn front of her suit jacket, and the ripped blouse, and then he was clamping his hand on the boy's shoulder and spinning him around.

Fear and panic were mingled on the boy's face. Miss Hammond, her mouth free now, screamed. Rick probably wouldn't have hit the boy if Miss Hammond hadn't screamed, but he brought back his fist as he spun the boy around, and then he threw his arm forward, and his fist collided with the boy's mouth.

The boy bounced back against the radiator, and Miss Hammond screamed again.

"You lousy bastard," the boy yelled, and Rick hit him again, and this time a smear of crimson spread on the boy's mouth. Miss Hammond kept screaming, and the stair well was suddenly flooded with teachers and monitors. Rick held the boy's arm tightly, twisting it up behind his back.

Miss Hammond said, "A jacket, something, a jacket," blubbering incoherently. Another teacher grabbed the bleeding boy, and Rick stripped off his jacket, handing it to Miss Hammond. She slipped into it quickly, still sobbing.

The teachers had grasped the situation and were shooing the monitors away. Martha Riley, whose math class happened to be on the second floor, began comforting Miss Hammond. She led her to the ladies' room.

Rick took the boy to the principal's office. He listened to everything the principal said, listened to the principal say, "We're going to take care of you, smart guy. We're really going to take care of you." He filled out reports and signed them, and told the story at least ten times before the bell sounded for the beginning of the seventh period.

Richard Dadier, though he went through the paces of orientating his seventh- and eighth-period classes, did not remember afterward what he had said. He was totally unaware of them throughout the last two periods of the day.

And he was certainly unaware of the fact that his heroism, tales of which had spread through the school like a brush fire, was regarded by the students of Manual Trades as nothing but the basest, most treacherous type of villainy.

THERE was not a student on Tuesday morning who had not heard of Rick's derring-do. He had been elevated to a celebrity's position, and did not know whether or not he appreciated the sudden fame.

His classes beheld him with a mute curiosity. When he spoke, they listened. No one called him "teach'." There was no calling out, and no buzzing, and no disorder of any kind. Rick's classes watched him, and whereas their silence was appreciated, it was also a peculiar silence. The eyes were not so much admiring as they were appraising. The eyes were waiting for a chance to test the skill of this notorious fellow.

On Wednesday, the picture changed. Mr. Small changed all that at his get-acquainted assembly with the students.

He was a big man, and the kids gave him almost as much attention as they'd given Rick's sudden rise to fame. It was always rough on the pupils when a new man hopped into the principal's chair. Right away came the reforms.

Small crowded the microphon expected no back talk from it present. The kids disliked him ir gave them the usual reform pitch. as if he meant it. And then Small to the attempted rape. "There wa tunate incident here on the first da he said. "One of our boys decide in the streets. The boy's name w Murray. One of our teachers sto cident from becoming a disastrous las Murray may be a little sorry he of line. Criminal-assault charge pressed against him. I think you al that means."

THEY all knew, all right. They a this didn't mean reform school. tally calculated Murray's age, an for a prison rap. All because stepped in and made like a hero.

"I'm telling you this story," Sn "to illustrate an important point and then roared, "I will stand fo in my school, is that understood?"

Rick's hands were trembling. the boys in his official class w him. He sensed hostility, and if Sma the righ ing atte had ha

Smal sudden "Boys, smiling ing to g I've tau before them, b felt so about pointe here." sadly. bad st teams pennar have He cler fist an overth "Nor Trades is goi penna What' lows, win th

The boys did not applaud. move. The assembly was dismis the day was shot anyway, what periods in order to give all the to meet Small at two separa there wasn't much time left for school term, for all practical pu start until Thursday morning, had started with a considerabl days before.

Rick had no trouble at all three periods, though he coul ment on the other side of his de forget the resentment; he didn kid in the school feared him, an if they hated him. He was there and since the major problem i school was making yourself thankful for the wall of silence out in front of him. The kids, h using a sort of passive resistan their Gandhi philosophy was into his hands. When the bell end of his duty period, he hea the teachers' lunchroom.

He was a little disappointed ers showed no signs of continui days' banter. Solly Klein was about a friend who taught sh high school and the teachers li and paid very little attention Manual Trades. He ate his sand almost morosely. He'd have lik opinions on the course he was t monopolized the floor until th and Rick went to greet 55-20

CONTINUED ON PAG

NEXT MONTH

If it had happened to anyone else, the shock would not have been so great. But Miss Dove simply wasn't like other people. It was difficult enough to believe that she had even been born—and now there were rumors that she was actually human.

She was gone—for the first time in thirty-six years. The geography room at Cedar Grove Elementary School was empty. Could the dismaying report be true?

GOOD MORNING, MISS DOVE

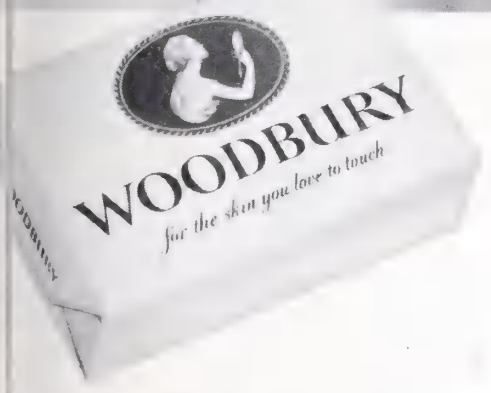
BY FRANCES GRAY PATTON

Complete in the November Journal, condensed from the novel soon to be published by Dodd, Mead & Co., Inc.

Mighty thrifty!

Good to the last drip! No wonder women from coast-to-coast stock their shelves with Dundee—the glamour towel that comes in the happiest textures, the snappiest colors, the happiest prices ever! Give your bathroom the "Dundee beauty treatment" today.

Dundee Towels



DUNDEE MILLS, INC., Griffin, Ga. • Showrooms: 40 Worth St., New York City

Other Dundee Fabrics: DIAPERS • FLANNELETTES • DUNFAST ALL-PURPOSE COTTONS

(5)

Your skin s never looked so lovely...

... because there's never been a beauty care like this! Seven face cream oils and emollients—intended to help replace natural oils that wash away—are blended right into New Woodbury Soap. That means the vivid freshness of soap-and-water cleansing plus the delicate softness of face cream care. Nothing has ever done so much for your complexion. And no soap has ever given you such beauty baths! The mild lather and haunting fragrance of New Woodbury leave your skin soft and subtly scented head to toe. Get New Woodbury Soap today "for the skin you love to touch"!

New Woodbury Soap is enriched with 7 face cream oils

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 126

The boys were talking when he entered Room 206, but they took their seats immediately. The room was dead silent.

Good, Rick thought. That's the way it should be.

He reached into his brief case and pulled out a blue-jacketed book titled Graded Units in Vital English. He said, "I'd like to pinpoint some of your most common grammatical faults today, so that I'll be able to plan the remedial work we'll need throughout the term. Antoro, will you get these books from the closet back there and distribute them?"

ANTORO rose without a sound. He was a good-looking boy, with sandy-brown hair and brown eyes. He walked to the front of the room, extended his hand for the key Rick offered, and then walked to the book closet.

"You'd better give him a hand, Belazi," Rick said. Belazi rose as soundlessly as Antoro had. The book distribution was accomplished. Both boys returned to their seats.

"If you'll turn to Page One," Rick said, and watched the boys move like automatons. "Page One," Rick repeated. "Have you all got that? It's an achievement test. If you'll all look at Part A, now. It says, 'Select the correct word or words in each parenthesis.' Have you all found that?"

No one in the class answered. Rick frowned slightly, and went on.

"There's an example there of what's to be done." He read aloud: "EXAMPLE: He (done, did) what he was told. Answer: did." He paused again. "Do you all get the idea? I'll call on you, and you'll take the sentences in order. Don't be afraid of making mistakes. That's what I want to find out. When I discover your weak spots, I'll be able to fix them. Is that clear?"

The class remained silent.

"All right," Rick said, "will you take the first one, Miller?"

He had chosen Miller purposely, hoping the boy would start things off right. The first sentence read: Henry hasn't written (no, any) answer to my letter.

Rick read the sentence, and then looked at Miller. "Well, Miller, what do you say?"

Miller hesitated for just a moment. "Henry hasn't written no answer to my letter," he said.

Rick stared at Miller, and then he looked out at the class. Something had come alive in their eyes, but there was still no sound. "No," Rick said. "It should be 'Henry hasn't written any answer.' Well, that's all right. I want to learn your mistakes. Will you take the next one, Carter?"

Carter, a big redheaded boy, looked at the second sentence in the test. If I were (he, him), I wouldn't say that. "If I were him," he said rapidly, "I wouldn't say that."

Rick smiled. "Well," he said, "if I were you, I wouldn't say that, either. 'He' is correct."

Something was happening out there in the class, but Rick didn't know what it was yet. There was excitement showing in the eyes of the boys, an excitement they could hardly contain.

"Antoro, will you take the next one, please?" Rick said. He looked at the third sentence:

It was none other than (her, she).

"It was none other than her," Antoro said quickly.

"No," Rick said. "The answer is 'she.' Take the next one, Levy."

Levy spoke almost as soon as his name was called. "George throwed the ball fast," he said.

"Throwed the ball?" Rick said, lifting his eyebrows. "Throwed? Come now, Levy. Surely you know 'threw' is correct."

Levy said nothing. He studied Rick with cold eyes.

"Belazi," Rick said tightly, "take the next one."

"It is them who spoke," Belazi said.

He knew the game now. Miller had started it, and the other kids had picked it up with an uncanny instinct. He listened to scattered sentences as he called on every boy.

Won't anyone borrow you a pen?

The player stealed a base.

She speaks worst than her brother.

Where was you when the police

O.K., Rick thought, we can pla from both sides of the fence. If we're little smart guys, let's all be little

"Since we've gone over all the class now, and since I gave you the swer for each sentence, the homew night should be fairly simple," he s

"Home——" one of the boys
Miller turned in instant reproval.
"Shut ——" burst from his mout could stop it, but he never finish tence, apparently realizing the con
tence would be too incriminating.

But Rick knew the whole story n class sensed it. A battle of wills Rick's desk, and he watched it ment, because it was obviously was holding the minds of his clas tive in a clenched fist. He had gi leadership pitch on Monday, but h a moment believed that Miller leader. A troublemaker, yes, but n to follow seriously. He revised rapidly.

Rick smiled, sensing the conflict bring the battle to a head. "Yes, h he said. "You can begin copying a questions into your notebooks rig

"Hey, what the hell!" Carter s words were livid with outrage. "
the first week of school!"

"Talk about slave drivers ——"

"I go to work after school, teac

"That's enough of that!" Rick tightened his jaws and calmly copying the sentences. The hon count as one of the tests the class ing the term. It may very well dec you pass or fail this course."

The rebellion ended as sudden started. Miller flipped open his no weary superiority, and the other b suit while Rick watched them sentences.

His victory, if considered such been a hollow one. Aside from tary elation he'd felt when th broken to his will, he felt no real j

The bell sounded.

"That's all," Rick said. "Pas down to the front of your row Antoro, collect them please and the closet. Your homework is du when we meet again." He paused.
like to talk to you. Would you mi

The class began filing out. W and Belazi left, Rick faced Miller

"What do you say, Miller?" he Miller did not smile. His face plete repose. "About what, chief

"I thought we had a little talk.

"So?"

"You led them today," Rick sa being completely honest with th you led them the wrong way. Wh

"Maybe you should of ough your own business, chief," Miller many guys who like whut happen las Murray. Murray's goan to jail

"I had nothing to do with pres Miller."

"No?"

"No."

"You jus' pure-white innocent
Miller said.

"But what about our talk th Miller? I thought we ——"

"Mr. Dad-yay," Miller said, " forget that li'l' snow job, O.K.?"

"I wasn't snowing you," R right, he had snowed Miller. Tha he knew. This was different now.

"Man, the snow was knee de

RICK stared at the boy, feeli like the fellow who'd cried wolf.
capture Miller's loyalty on a false
The peg had turned out to be a
one, and now Miller had turned t hadn't believed Rick then, and h ing anything Rick sold from now

"I mean it, Miller," Rick sa
"You are a leader."

"I got a class now," Miller sai go, chief?"

He walked across the room an
the door, seemingly about to sa

he smiled, shrugged, and left t his desk.
rem der of Rick's teaching day was a r etition of what went on in his eriod nglish class. By the end of the was s jumpy as a toad. He gathered book and papers and stuffed them into ei ca viciously. Then he went to his at th back of the room, unlocked it, ok o his topper, slinging it over his e lo ed the door to Room 206, and for e General Office.
Ha nond was standing by the time when got there. "Oh, hello," she said.
lo. ick did not mean to be rude, but nd w occupied with Miller and the nt h d received from his classes, and id t exactly discount Lois Hamrol the sequence of events.
was miling, her pale lipstick almost ains her delicate face. "I've—I've been g to ank you," she said in a low voice.
cre her eyes momentarily, and then em ddenly. "I hope this hasn't hinou any way. With your classes, I 'd h e to think ——"
" H lied hastily. "If anything, it's Ma me a notorious figure."
I. th 's good," she said. "I don't know
t ir that boy. He just ——" sm d and said, "Well, tomorrow is I th the hardt w be over s wk is gone."
pe ." She ex-her hand, and ick ook it she d r fingers.
s ain. Very

't ention it,"
d.
tc d her leave
e. W en she was e t k his card
e rk, inserted
th clock and
d. It was d was tired ou get home.

5 e next day s t as tired.
l class dise at his desk
o over the ea He rose oys of about an began stuffing alked past Josh Ed ards poked hing at them. Their n. Pal," he said, nalt, and then the h ay, huh?" I up.
o case. said abruptly.
ig d. "As y?"
l hile crain' us."
ir le as it ring the even cadence of
'l Rick omething came alive in his , pha'ed, "Josh!" and wished dese ike were sober.
T owck at the same instant. There u Jtold. The three who had gone c ily came out of the darkness, c path. Rick turned, trying to
" r four boys who were closing fast.
addy-oh." The voice came out of
, and if he'd had any doubt bec as no doubt now.
ned beside him. "Back to back,
id.

were glad about how things had
This was an ideal trap, worthy
, worthy of cutthroats anywhere.
liked it better if Daddy-oh had but the shrimp with him was worry about.
em shouted, "This is for Douglas bastard," and threw his fist and ect with flesh and bone. He felt head lurch back, felt the teacher ainst the shrimp's back and then swinging wildly.
boy slammed his fist on the back
h's neck, and Daddy-oh grunted
rward, and another of the attack-his knee up. Daddy-oh grunted
then swung out and one of the s fist and backed away respectfully.
oh was facing the side with four

Josh put his glass down and said, "This has been a week, Rick. A mighty week."

"Are you disappointed?"

Josh seemed to consider. "Not really. No, I think the kids'll shape up. This is just an adjustment period, I suppose. Me to them and them to me." He paused and added, "I hope."

"They're not exactly what I'd call and students."

"No, not exactly," Josh answered, "But they'll come around. I'm not because any Einsteins."

"Another drink?" Rick asked. and his me split this." The bartender ca ging until Rick ordered two more of the sa ement and

"We're lacking music," Jos he stomach. music when I drink." He ros ause his arms the jukebox, fishing a quarte and stabbing at five butte opped struggling to the bar, finished his his briefcase and then straddled the stool the gutter, tearing Let's have another one, ok, and then ripping

He signaled for th g, and breaking the heard the whir of th ng it over with a knife. record onto the turn got ideas, but the sport den blast of an orc en the sport is over you room. orhood before the cops

"Kenton," Josh e kid put the knife away far advanced for th all strolled off down the the street lamp near Third

DEATH OF THE OLD FARMER

By BARBARA SHOOK

The long days pa morn-boards crea of the Shutters clasp RD BEECHER and spe
"It's harv
he's g to The pe e was w ser, and glanced up

e kitchen wall had become could almost see eyes on it, t the advancing black hands grinning mouth.
ard the key in the latch, her breath caught in her throat.
She whirled and shouted,
"Rick? Rick?"

And then the door was open, and he stood there, blood caked on his mouth and streaked on his face, his left eye almost closed, his cheek ripped wide in a flap of flesh. His suit was torn, his new suit, and there was a rip in his shirt, and she saw the flesh of his chest.

"Rick," she said, "Rick," and led him into the apartment. "Darling, oh my darling, my poor darling."

He didn't speak. He flopped down onto the couch, lifting his legs as if the effort was an extremely painful one.

"I'll get a doctor," she said in a rush, and he shook his head. She stood there not knowing what to do, knowing only that he was hurt badly. She ran to the bathroom, unable to control the tears. She got iodine and peroxide, and gauze and adhesive tape, and rushed back, helping him out of his jacket. She undressed him, biting her lip when she saw the bruises on his body, almost screaming when the red welts were exposed.

"Darling, darling," she kept repeating through her tears, working hastily with her medicines and her bandages.

She splashed peroxide into the wound on his cheek and Rick winced, and she said, "Oh, I'm sorry," and he said, "That's all right." She put the flap of skin back into place, wondering if that were the right thing to do, and then she covered it with gauze and adhesive tape and began treating the other cuts on his face.

"They didn't hurt your teeth," she said.

"No," he answered.

"Were they ——"

"The boys, yes. Me and Josh. I took him home first. We got a cab. I'm sorry, honey, but he ——"

"It's all right," she said.

"We were high. We shouldn't have got high. We'd have stood a better chance ——"

"How many were there?"

"Seven, I think. Big kids."

She washed his face, and then got him into his pajamas and threw a robe around his shoulders. She got a pot of coffee going, remembering something about hot drinks being good for shock.

He drank the coffee gratefully. He began telling her what had happened then, leaving nothing out. She listened with her hands clenched in her lap. When he finished his story and his coffee, she sat beside him on the couch and held him close to her breast, stroking his face.

They sat silently and after a long while Rick said, "I think I'll survive, don't you?"

"You'd better," she said. "I'm too young to be a widow."

He laughed, and she laughed with him, and she knew that everything was really going to be all right.

The first snowfall came on Monday, October nineteenth, a little more than a month after Rick and Josh were attacked. His face bore no marks now. The wounds had healed very rapidly.

He was not afraid of facing the boys again. That did not enter his mind at all. He was surprised, on Sunday night, when Anne asked, "Are you going back, Rick?"

"Why, of course I'm going back." Anne had stared at him and then nodded, and he knew she'd been pleased over his decision.

He tried to forget about his face on that Monday after the beating. And when Stanley asked what happened, and of course Stanley knew damn well what had happened, Rick had made some inane remark about having run into a belligerent doorknob.

The kids knew what had happened too. The kids got the story straight from the horse's

Cheerful homemakers choose
PEQUOT PASTELS

Carol and her architect husband are living in a small, rented house while their dream house is a-building.
Carol is a planner too, here she is enjoying one of the lovely things she has already acquired for her new home—Pequot sheets. She's probably dreaming of how well the newest shade, Orchid, will look in the master bedroom! Good planning Carol!

Harmony of line and color is the keynote of Marian's modern split-level home. Here's a living example, her daughter Nancy's cheeks and the delicate hue of Pequot sheets in pastel pink!

Sue is a stylist, noted for her unconventional creations. Something of the same daring is to be found in the way she has furnished her apartment. Color is boldly used, yet the overall effect is as subtle as the Pequot Candlelight sheets she has selected for her bedroom.

PEQUOT SHEETS AND PILLOW CASES
Pequot Mills

"All about Sheets" and "Easy Sewing Magic With Sheets" are valuable, informative booklets every woman should have. Send 10¢ for each booklet to cover mailing to: Dept. L-6, Pequot Mills, Salem, Mass.

Christmas is coming...

See Avon's new Christmas Gift Book
Brimful of new and wonderful ideas . . .
Something for everyone you know!

An exciting Christmas shopping adventure will be coming to your home soon—brought by your Avon Representative. Avon's Christmas Gift Book shows, in full color, over 100 exquisitely packaged gifts . . . gifts of useful cosmetics and toiletries for women, men and children, in a wide range of prices. Do your Christmas shopping early, the thrifty, comfortable Avon way.

Welcome your Avon Representative

CALL WESTERN UNION OPERATOR 25 FOR YOUR AVON REPRESENTATIVE

© AVON cosmetics

RADIO CITY, NEW YORK · PASADENA, CALIFORNIA · MONTREAL, CANADA

sh out in V point cal faul remedia term. An the closet

ANTORO ro good-looking b brown eyes. He room, extended h
fered, and then wa

"You'd better gi
Rick said. Belazi ros toro had. The book
plished. Both boys retu

"If you'll turn to Page watched the boys mo
"Page One," Rick repeat that? It's an achievement at Part A, now. It says, word or words in each par all found that?"

No one in the class answer slightly, and went on.

"There's an example there done." He read aloud: "EXA did) what he was told. An paused again. "Do you all ge call on you, and you'll take th order. Don't be afraid of makin That's what I want to find out. Wh cover your weak spots, I'll be able to fix Is that clear?"

The class remained silent.

"All right," Rick said, "will you take th first one, Miller?"

He had chosen Miller purposely, hoping the boy would start things off right. The first sentence read: Henry hasn't written (no, any) answer to my letter.

Rick read the sentence, and then looked at Miller. "Well, Miller, what do you say?"

Miller hesitated for just a moment. "Henry hasn't written no answer to my letter," he said.

Rick stared at Miller, and then he looked out at the class. Something had come alive in their eyes, but there was still no sound. "No," Rick said. "It should be 'Henry hasn't written any answer.' Well, that's all right. I want to learn your mistakes. Will you take the next one, Carter?"

Carter, a big redheaded boy, looked at the second sentence in the test. If I were (he, him), I wouldn't say that. "If I were him," he said rapidly, "I wouldn't say that."

Rick smiled. "Well," he said, "if I were you, I wouldn't say that, either. 'He' is correct."

Something was happening out there in the class, but Rick didn't know what it was yet. There was excitement showing in the eyes of the boys, an excitement they could hardly contain.

"Antoro, will you take the next one, please?" Rick said. He looked at the third sentence:

It was none other than (her, she).

"It was none other than her," Antoro said quickly.

"No," Rick said. "The answer is 'she.' Take the next one, Levy."

Levy spoke almost as soon as his name was called. "George throwed the ball fast," he said.

"Throwed the ball?" Rick said, lifting his eyebrows. "Throwed? Come now, Levy. Surely you know 'threw' is correct."

Levy said nothing. He studied Rick with cold eyes.

"Belazi," Rick said tightly, "take the next one."

"It is them who spoke," Belazi said.

He knew the game now. Miller had started it, and the other kids had picked it up with an uncanny instinct. He listened to scattered sentences as he called on every boy.

Won't anyone borrow you a pen?
The player stealed a base.
She speaks worst than her brother.

br
T
"Th down t Antoro,
the closet.
when we me like to talk to

The class b and Belazi left,

"What do you

Miller did not s
plete repose. "Abou

"I thought we had

"So?"

"You led them today, being completely honest
you led them the wrong wa

"Maybe you should of your own business, chief," M many guys who like whut hap las Murray. Murray's goan to

"I had nothing to do with pre Miller."

"No?"

"No."

"You jus' pure-white innocent,
Miller said.

"But what about our talk the Miller? I thought we ——"

"Mr. Dad-yay," Miller said, "s forget that li'l' snow job, O.K.?"

"I wasn't snowing you," Ri right, he had snowed Miller. That he knew. This was different now.

"Man, the snow was knee dee

RICK stared at the boy, feelin like the fellow who'd cried wolf. I capture Miller's loyalty on a false
The peg had turned out to be a
one, and now Miller had turned t hadn't believed Rick then, and he ing anything Rick sold from now

"I mean it, Miller," Rick sa
"You are a leader."

"I got a class now," Miller sai
go, chief?"

He walked across the room an
the door, seemingly about to sa

INUED FROM PAGE 129

'm jus' tryin'a figure how to tie nglish class, tha's all."
ently, sipping their drinks, lislence of the bar now that Josh's juke had been exhausted. A ghteen came into the room, and him walk to the cigarette unch out a pack. He glanced at
. and then left the bar.
o home," Rick said suddenly.
ant."
itions," Josh said. "How does father?"
m not one yet."
, Rickie?"
counting on his fingers, and
d. "Soon." He stood up and his topper.
y," Josh said.
lit it," Rick offered.
his's on me." Josh put a bill on and waited for his change. go home, Rickie?"
l Avenue."
ou down," Josh said.

ut of the bar and into the darkeet. The street lights had come warm yellow glow on the conoked up at the sky, receiving an ression of blackness and pins, and realizing it was later than home," he said. "Got to hurry."

sh agreed.
a narrow side street behind the stores that d Avenue. A urned at the e block, but in darkness.
down the street,
footsteps be-
most instantly.
dy comin',"
hout turning.
ome," Rick answered, trying to n Anne, and worried lest she was

d the footsteps grow closer, and past them, and they glanced up
y.
kids," Josh said.
e three of them, boys of about so, and they walked past Josh hout even looking at them. Their ed on the asphalt, and then the llowed them up.
ny," Josh said abruptly.
Wha's funny?"
steps behin' us." ed, hearing the even cadence of ind. Something came alive in his ispered, "Josh!" and wished des-he were sober.
struck at the same instant. There ll told. The three who had gone nly came out of the darkness, path. Rick turned, trying to er four boys who were closing fast.
addy-oh." The voice came out of
, and if he'd had any doubt be-as no doubt now.
ned beside him. "Back to back,
id.

ere glad about how things had
This was an ideal trap, worthy
, worthy of cutthroats anywhere.
liked it better if Daddy-oh had
but the shrimp with him was orry about.
em shouted, "This is for Douglas a bastard," and threw his fist and ct with flesh and bone. He felt head lurch back, felt the teacher inst the shrimp's back and then swinging wildly.
boy slammed his fist on the back
h's neck, and Daddy-oh grunted
rward, and another of the attack-
his knee up. Daddy-oh grunted
then swung out and one of the fist and backed away respectfully.
-oh was facing the side with four

One of the boys grabbed Daddy-oh from behind, struggled for a grip in his short hair, and then gave that up as a sorry task. He lopped his arm around Daddy-oh's neck, tightening his forearm across the Adam's apple, pulling his head back.

"All right, you bastards," the shrimp kept yelling, but the shrimp was on the ground now, and feet had taken over because it was easier to use feet when a guy was down.

You had to hand it to Daddy-oh because he went down swinging all the way. He hadn't said a word. He was spitting blood, and his clothes were torn, but he kept swinging until they dragged him down to the pavement and gave him four sharp blows to the stomach. He stopped swinging then because his arms were pinned to his sides.

They gave it to him. He stopped struggling at last, and they grabbed his briefcase and dumped everything into the gutter, tearing the papers and the notebook, and then ripping the stitching on the bag, and breaking the clasp, and finally working it over with a knife. The kid with the knife got ideas, but the sport was over now, and when the sport is over you get out of the neighborhood before the cops show on the scene. The kid put the knife away reluctantly, and they all strolled off down the street, heading for the street lamp near Third Avenue.

The clock on the kitchen wall had become a leering face. She could almost see eyes on it, could almost twist the advancing black hands into a crookedly grinning mouth.

When she heard the key in the latch, her breath caught in her throat. She whirled and shouted, "Rick? Rick?"

And then the door was open, and he stood there, blood caked on his mouth and streaked on his face, his left eye almost closed, his cheek ripped wide in a flap of flesh. His suit was torn, his new suit, and there was a rip in his shirt, and she saw the flesh of his chest.

"Rick," she said, "Rick," and led him into the apartment. "Darling, oh my darling, my poor darling."

He didn't speak. He flopped down onto the couch, lifting his legs as if the effort was an extremely painful one.

"I'll get a doctor," she said in a rush, and he shook his head. She stood there not knowing what to do, knowing only that he was hurt badly. She ran to the bathroom, unable to control the tears. She got iodine and peroxide, and gauze and adhesive tape, and rushed back, helping him out of his jacket. She undressed him, biting her lip when she saw the bruises on his body, almost screaming when the red welts were exposed.

"Darling, darling," she kept repeating through her tears, working hastily with her medicines and her bandages.

She splashed peroxide into the wound on his cheek and Rick winced, and she said, "Oh, I'm sorry," and he said, "That's all right." She put the flap of skin back into place, wondering if that were the right thing to do, and then she covered it with gauze and adhesive tape and began treating the other cuts on his face.

"They didn't hurt your teeth," she said.

"No," he answered.

"Were they ——"

"The boys, yes. Me and Josh. I took him home first. We got a cab. I'm sorry, honey, but he ——"

"It's all right," she said.

"We were high. We shouldn't have got high. We'd have stood a better chance ——"

"How many were there?"

"Seven, I think. Big kids."

She washed his face, and then got him into his pajamas and threw a robe around his shoulders. She got a pot of coffee going, remembering something about hot drinks being good for shock.

He drank the coffee gratefully. He began telling her what had happened then, leaving nothing out. She listened with her hands clenched in her lap. When he finished his story and his coffee, she sat beside him on the couch and held him close to her breast, stroking his face.

They sat silently and after a long while Rick said, "I think I'll survive, don't you?"

"You'd better," she said. "I'm too young to be a widow."

He laughed, and she laughed with him, and she knew that everything was really going to be all right.

The first snowfall came on Monday, October nineteenth, a little more than a month after Rick and Josh were attacked. His face bore no marks now. The wounds had healed very rapidly.

He was not afraid of facing the boys again. That did not enter his mind at all. He was surprised, on Sunday night, when Anne asked, "Are you going back, Rick?"

"Why, of course I'm going back." Anne had stared at him and then nodded, and he knew she'd been pleased over his decision.

He tried to forget about his face on that Monday after the beating. And when Stanley asked what happened and of course Stanley knew damn well what had happened, Rick had made some inane remark about having run into a belligerent doorknob.

The kids knew what had happened too. The kids got the story straight from the horse's

The first hour of the morning is the rudder of the day.

—HENRY WARD BEECHER

Cheerful homemakers choose
PEQUOT PASTELS

Carol and her architect husband are living in a small, rented house while their dream house is a-building.

Carol is a planner too, here she is enjoying one of the lovely things she has already acquired for her new home—Pequot sheets. She's probably dreaming of how well the newest shade, Orchid, will look in the master bedroom! Good planning Carol!

Harmony of line and color is the keynote of Marian's modern split-level home. Here's a living example, her daughter Nancy's cheeks and the delicate hue of Pequot sheets in pastel pink!

Sue is a stylist, noted for her unconventional creations. Something of the same daring is to be found in the way she has furnished her apartment. Color is boldly used, yet the overall effect is as subtle as the Pequot Candlelight sheets she has selected for her bedroom.

PEQUOT SHEETS AND PILLOW CASES

Pequot Mills

"All about Sheets" and "Easy Sewing Magic With Sheets" are valuable, informative booklets every woman should have. Send 10¢ for each booklet to cover mailing to: Dept. L-6, Pequot Mills, Salem, Mass.

mouth—all seven horses, in fact—and the kids knew that Daddy-oh and Edwards had been worked over but good on Friday night. The kids knew it, and they liked it.

And so the silent treatment, which had begun on the day after Small's delightful little speech, ended just as abruptly. Rick was surprised by the change. The kids settled down to normal, for a vocational school, behavior. They called out, and they shouted, and they laughed, and they cursed, and they were disobedient and plain ornery. And Rick settled down to trying to teach them.

He found the I.Q. of every boy in his classes listed on their permanent record cards. He checked all the cards, making a rough computation and coming up with an average intelligence for the class of 85. He was familiar enough with the Stanford-Binet test to know that an I.Q. between 80 and 90 was considered Low Normal.

Santini, the smiling boy, had an I.Q. of 66, and the Stanford-Binet test classified anyone within the 50-to-70 range as a moron.

There was one boy with the surprisingly high I.Q. of 113. In Rick's mind, the Stanford-Binet table took photographic shape and form:

Normal	90-110
Superior	110-120

He looked at the figure on the record card again—113. And then he looked at the boy's name:

MILLER, GREGORY

On impulse, he turned to the card headed WEST, ARTHUR FRANCIS, almost relieved when he saw an I.Q. listing of 86. He left the records with a new knowledge, and wondered why a teacher in a vocational school wasn't told about little unimportant things like average I.Q.'s before he started teaching.

He spent the next week observing his classes. He taught, or tried to teach, while he was observing, but he was really stalling for time, trying to learn all the things he'd never been taught. He sensed that the beginning of the teaching process had to come from the kids themselves. He knew that there could be no beginning unless the kids desired it. Standing up there in front of the room and throwing facts at them was a waste of time, until they realized that there could be no teaching and no learning unless there was a give and take.

At ten minutes to four, when Rick was leaving the building, he met Josh Edwards and Lois Hammond. Lois said, smiling pertly, "This has been a very special day, Rick."

"Oh, really? What happened?"

"I've been put in charge of the newspaper," Lois said.

"Well. Are congratulations or condolences in order?"

"It's a very important job," Lois said primly.

"Well, then, congratulations." Rick turned to Josh. "How were your monsters today, boy?"

"So-so," Josh answered. "I'm getting there."

"Well, fine," Rick said with false enthusiasm, looking at Josh again. The beating had done something to Josh. He was not looking well lately. There were heavy pockets of shadow beneath his eyes, and his cheekbones stood out too prominently.

"Unless you like walking in the snow," Josh said, "I can give you a lift to the bus stop. I've got my brother's car."

"Nothing I like better than a walk in the snow," Rick said, attempting to get a smile out of Josh. "Unless it's a ride in the snow. Lead me to it, boy."

"I'm dropping Lois off too," Josh said.

They walked down the corridor and out of the building, and Lois took Rick's arm as they went down the steps. She looked at the slushy snow and said, "I hate snow. I'm scared to death of slipping."

"Careful," Rick said, aware of the pressure of her hand on his arm, feeling uncomfortable because he was used to Anne's hand on his arm, and this hand did not belong to Anne.

THEY began crossing the schoolyard, and Rick spotted Miller leaning against the fence, then he noticed West beside him with a cigarette dangling from his mouth. Rick glanced at Miller, and the boy smiled disarmingly.

"Hello, Mr. Dadier," he said politely. "Nice day, ain't it?"

"If you like snow," Rick said, smiling back.

"Oh, yes, I like snow," Miller said. West's eyes traveled the length of Lois Hammond's body, and then a smirk filled his mouth.

"Good night, boys," Rick said.

"'Night," Miller said. West did not answer.

"It's this way," Josh said. When they reached the car, he unlocked the door and walked to the driver's side. Rick helped Lois in and then slid onto the seat beside her.

Josh crowded in and Lois moved closer to Rick. Her foot brushed his lightly. "It's crowded," Lois said, smiling. "I like crowded cars in the winter. They're cozy."

Rick remained silent. He did not like this warm feeling within him and he did not like the feeling of guilt that accompanied it. He knew that Lois Hammond was a woman and it had been a long time since he'd looked at any woman, as a woman, other than Anne.

The car was in motion now and when Josh rounded a corner Lois was hurled against Rick. She lingered there for the fraction of a second and then pulled away.

He thought of Anne. He remembered the touch of her hair and the color of her eyes and he remembered her sweetnes
He thought of Anne and forgot pletely.

"I'm going to bring my reco week," Josh said. "Remember about them, Rick?"

"Yes."

"Going to bring them in," Josh
the kids a lesson in jazz."

"Sounds good," Lois said, turn for his comment.

"Yes," Rick said. "I think the

"I hope so," Josh said. "You g don't you, Rick?"

"This is it."

To find your Sanitone Dry Cleaner..

Look in the classified pages of your telephone directory, under Cleaners, for "Sanitone Approved Service." There you will find listed the Sanitone Dry Cleaner in your town.

Here's proof you can see that SANITONE makes your clothes give more like-new service

For years, you have heard that Sanitone Dry Cleaning makes clothes so much cleaner you can actually SEE the difference. Here's how you can prove it: send the coat of a suit to any dry cleaner—the pants to a SANITONE Dry Cleaner. If you don't agree that the pants look definitely cleaner than the coat, send the Sanitone sales slip to us and we'll refund* every penny you paid for cleaning. Try it. See for yourself that you really can wear clothes "for best" many more times if they're regularly Sanitone Dry Cleaned.

*Offer void after December 31, 1954

APPROVED SANITONE SERVICE

Sanitone

DRY CLEANING SERVICE

A Division of Emery Industries, Inc. · Carew Tower · Cincinnati 2, Ohio

he helped me realiz

how important a woman's perfume can b

If a woman were to realize hov important a part perfume can pl in her life, I think she would cho her fragrance with far more care

I bought INTOXICATION becaus worn by a woman I admire very A woman who carries herself wit great deal of confidence... a wom who is so completely feminine.

But it took a man to make me to the facts of life about perfume the first time he became aware of fragrance I was wearing. He act mentioned it! As a matter of fac
I think it was the first time he wa aware that I was a woman, too.
What a wonderful, wonderful fe
The fragrance? INTOXICATION!

p.s. "He" was my boss..."He" my husband, now.

the champagne fragrance that goes to his heart

Intoxication

D'ORSA

note: You'll find INTOXICAT D'Orsay's famous perfume from F in most of the world's fine stores. S it not be available near you we w happy to accept your introductory

D'ORSAY PARFUMS, 71 FIFTH AVENUE
Gentlemen: Please send me the follo ☐ Perfume (Pursette) @ $3.30 (Fed. Ta ☐ Eau de Toilette @ $3.30 (Fed. Ta
NAME
ADDRESS
CITY STATE
Send check or money order...no C.O.D., n?" Lois said. She faced Rick ick smiled back warily. Josh to the curb and Rick stepped and said, "See you all tomor-ved at him but he spotted his , running to catch it. Anne was didn't want to be late.

k had his brief encounter with s West was, coincidentally, the ua Edwards brought his record chool. It started like any ordi-t that Rick had grown wary of knowing that the students of Trades had a knack for turning nto the extraordinary within a utes.
boys a written assignment to then went over the test papers d-termers. He was grading the he became aware of someone his desk. He looked up.
ed there with his thumbs looped
es.
West?" Rick asked.
d. "Give me the pass, hand-

d up at him. "What?"
me the pass, handsome. I got hn."
West," Rick said tightly.
t to go to the john."
u, West. Sit down."
d stopped writing, anticipating ps hoping for it.
West said, "keep the pass. I'll
"
around the desk and Rick air back, blocking the passage.
going anywhere, West. Get back

o to the john," West said, his
"You want me to —— all over filthy mouth, West," Rick said.

sit down, do you understand?"
t stop me from going to the go when you learn how to ask properly."

or the —— pass," West shouted.
give it to me or ——" ounded at that instant. West
g. He smiled then with a supe-t told Rick he didn't need the yhow. "Saved by the bell," he ed his back, gathered his books lassroom.
d his brief case, thankful for the eriod ahead of him.

o Unassigned period ahead of
-301. There was another English
. Edwards. They walked into the like prisoners being forced into . They looked at Edwards sitting ooked at his goggles perched on ked at the intense, serious eyes goggles. Man, they thought, why such a ugly child? And such a bor-bargain?
ed into the classroom, and took esigned to their fate. *What's it y, Josh-wah? A letter to grandma How you feeling, grandma? Your othering you, girlie? Come on, through with the attendance and closed his Delaney book and e boys. "I've got a surprise for he said.

d of surprise?" Vallera asked.
se I think you'll like," Edwards

t?" Jones asked suspiciously.
a test," Edwards answered.
you'll like."
was walking to his coat closet at e room. "As you know," he said, not the only form of expression.
other means of expression too.
ulpture—uh—art in general. And ther form."
he closet open now, and he was something that looked like . . .
o you like that? A record player!
we're going to listen to some ards said. He was walking back to his desk now, the phonograph under one arm, the leather case of records dangling at the end of his other arm.

"What kind of music?" Pasco asked suspiciously.

"No long-hair stuff," Edwards said. "Today we're going to hear swing, and jazz, and even a little bop. I think you'll like these records. I've been a collector for a long time, and there's some exciting stuff here."

He was setting up the player, plugging it into the outlet. He said, "The player's not my own, but it'll do. Let's see now." He fiddled around in his record case, and came up with a shining black disk. "We'll play this one first," he said. "I Can't Get Started is the title. It's one of Bunny Berigan's best records."

He put the record onto the turntable, dropped the arm into place, and stepped back, a broad smile on his face.

So this is Bunny Berigan. What's so special? So it's a guy singing. Does he stack up against Como? Where does he shine to Tony Bennett? Guys singing are a dime a dozen. Who does Josh-wah think he's fooling? This is exciting stuff, huh? Ain't he got no stuff by the Hilltoppers?

"Listen to this fine trumpet work," Edwards said. "This man is the predecessor of James and Spivak and Elman. Just listen."

James? He mean Harry James? But who's Spivak? And who the hell is Elman? Man, this guy lives in another world. All right, so we hear a trumpet player. What else you got, Josh-wah? Come on, this one is almost over.

The needle raced through the record, clicked in the retaining grooves. Edwards lifted the record from the turntable and picked up another.

"This is the old Will Bradley combo," he said. "It's called Celery Stalks at Midnight."

"What else you got, teach'?" Brothers shouted.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 135

BUY-LINES by Nancy Sasser

AN ADVERTISING PAGE

BEAUTY WONDERS NEVER CEASE when you reach for Q-TIPS Beauty Swabs . . . dainty cotton-tipped applicators that are the perfect cosmetic accessories! That's because they're especially designed to end make-up slip-ups . . . to give you the artful finesse you need to look simply ravishing from head to toe. They're longer and slimmer than baby's Q-TIPS . . . so right in size and shape, and so "talented", they serve as a "beauty operator" in the boudoir. And I reach for them all the time . . . when applying rouge and eyeshadow . . . as well as removing nail polish, mascara and lipstick smudges and the like. Q-TIPS come in a pretty dressing table box . . . with lessons in loveliness by that master of make-up Ern Westmore, to teach you beauty "Q's" of Hollywood stars such as:

Smoother, quicker nail care . . . rouging the right way . . . allure for the lips, eyes and brows . . . hiding flaws, hair helps and perfume pointers.

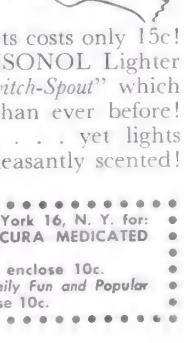
You cannot rely on faltering finger-tips . . . if you use cosmetics, you need Q-TIPS Beauty Swabs!

A WOMAN'S FACE IS HER FORTUNE (an old saying and a true one!) . . . so don't let a bad complexion "rob" you of your natural beauty! Instead, win it back . . . by letting me send you this:

SAMPLE OF CUTICURA SOAP . . . for if used regularly and correctly, it will make your skin softer and smoother in just 7 days! That's a promise . . . because CUTICURA (unlike leading soaps) is superfatted . . . and as it deep-cleanses, it supplements the natural oils of the skin and keeps your skin soft, smooth, supple, satiny and healthy. I'll send you a trial-size bottle of CUTICURA MEDICATED LIQUID along with the generous sample of CUTICURA SOAP. Send 10c to cover mailing costs. See OFFER #1 in box.

And be sure to use emollient CUTICURA OINTMENT at night to soften your skin and help clear up blackheads, pimples and other externally caused blemishes . . . then apply "invisible", greaseless CUTICURA MEDICATED LIQUID under your make-up during the day to speed healing!

DREAMS COME TRUE when you sleep on sheets of 100% Du Pont NYLON . . . for they answer every woman's wish to be luxurious and her need to be practical, too! Du Pont NYLON makes possible so many new advantages in sheets . . . sheets that are caressingly smooth . . . and give such an exquisite feeling of dreamy luxury. Yet Du Pont NYLON makes them amazingly easy to care for . . . light in weight, so compact they can be stored in little space and so-o-o durable they keep their delicate beauty through many washings and wearings! And speaking of washing . . . sheets of Du Pont NYLON wash so quickly and easily, are feather-light to handle and need little or no ironing. You'll find both regular and fitted sheets of Du Pont NYLON at your Favorite Store . . . in a rainbow of pretty pastels as well as sparkling white. And I suggest you get some of each . . . particularly the fitted sheets . . . which cut bed-making time in half and give a heavenly feeling of smooth, wrinkle-free comfort.



I KNOW YOU'RE PROUD of your beautiful furniture and want to keep it looking lovely . . . so you can thank your lucky stars for O-CEDAR DRI-GLO, the new miracle furniture polish that goes on in minutes and lasts for months. You see, it contains a modern, non-oily silicone ingredient that makes furniture gleam like a mirror with a long-lasting "Bone Dry" shine . . . yet all you do is smooth on DRI-GLO, let it dry and wipe off. That's actually all you do and DRI-GLO protects furniture, too . . . even spilled liquids can't mar its rich beauty. And finger marks whisk off like magic...dust can't cling to its "Bone Dry" surface! In fact, DRI-GLO is so good it's guaranteed to outshine and outlast any furniture polish or wax you ever used. You can get it at any Grocery, Hardware or Department Store . . . but I'd like you to get a GENEROUS SAMPLE of O-CEDAR DRI-GLO . . . to let you try it before you buy it! See OFFER #2 in box!

ENTERTAINMENT WILL SOON MOVE INDOORS for the Winter . . . and with windows closed all day, you must be sure that the air smells fresh and inviting. And you can be if you use GOOD-AIRE . . . for I've tried everything and nothing beats GOOD-AIRE for making odors disappear! You just press the valve on the GOOD-AIRE can and poof! . . . household odors vanish instantly! Imagine . . . with only a touch of the finger, odors from cooking, bathrooms, pets and the nursery are gone. GOOD-AIRE also "does away" with odors from stale air and tobacco smoke . . . and that's most important when you're entertaining! So use GOOD-AIRE every day . . . because "GOOD-AIRE is good etiquette". It's only 98c for the regular size and $1.89 for the large economy size . . . at Drug, Grocery, Hardware and Department Stores. It's made by the makers of Bridgeport® Aer★A★Sol Bug Bombs and other Aer★A★Sol Products . . . you know it must be good.

I WISH YOU COULD SEE how glad people are when I bring out "Sorry" . . . the exciting slide-pursuit PARKER GAME everybody loves! It combines chance and skill to perfection . . . as each player risks "going back" to get his men from "Start" to "Home" before the others. And "Sorry" is such a fast-moving game it holds everyone's interest right through to the end . . . because at any moment an early "winner" can fall by the wayside! Two or three can play . . . but we think it's more fun when we play partners. And there's point scoring . . . which makes it a perfect party game. "Sorry" is just one of the famous PARKER GAMES you'll enjoy . . . "Monopoly", "Clue" and "Keyword", for instance, are equally absorbing! So get several PARKER GAMES . . . to keep you and friends amused on long Winter evenings. And then send for this:

WONDERFUL BOOKLET . . . "How to Have Family Fun and Popular Parties with Parker Games." It contains tips on entertaining . . . plus suggestions for special party themes and refreshments. OFFER #3 in box.

DON'T NAG if your husband keeps forgetting to reflint (and refuel!) your beautiful table lighters . . . just take matters into your own hands! That's what I do . . . for it's so simple, really, to buy RONSON extra-length Flints and it takes only seconds to replace worn flints. But be sure they're RONSON Flints you buy . . . because they're 40% longer than ordinary flints and give 500 more lights! I find that RONSON extra-length Flints don't jam or powder, either . . . and since they're precision made and finest quality, they give the surest sparks of all! As for economy . . . well, the "Five Flinter" packet of 5 extra-length RONSON Flints costs only 15c! You'll want to get a couple of cans of RONSONOL Lighter Fuel, too . . . in its brand-new patented "Switch-Spout" which makes refueling any lighter faster and easier than ever before! What's more, RONSONOL costs only 25c . . . yet lights instantly, burns cleaner, lasts longer and is pleasantly scented!

Write Nancy Sasser, Dept. P-6, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y. for:

- ☐ OFFER 1 . . . SAMPLE of CUTICURA SOAP and CUTICURA MEDICATED LIQUID. Please enclose 10c.
- ☐ OFFER 2 . . . SAMPLE of O-CEDAR DRI-GLO. Please enclose 10c.
- ☐ OFFER 3 . . . PARKER'S BOOKLET "How to Have Family Fun and Popular Parties with Parker Games". Please enclose 10c.

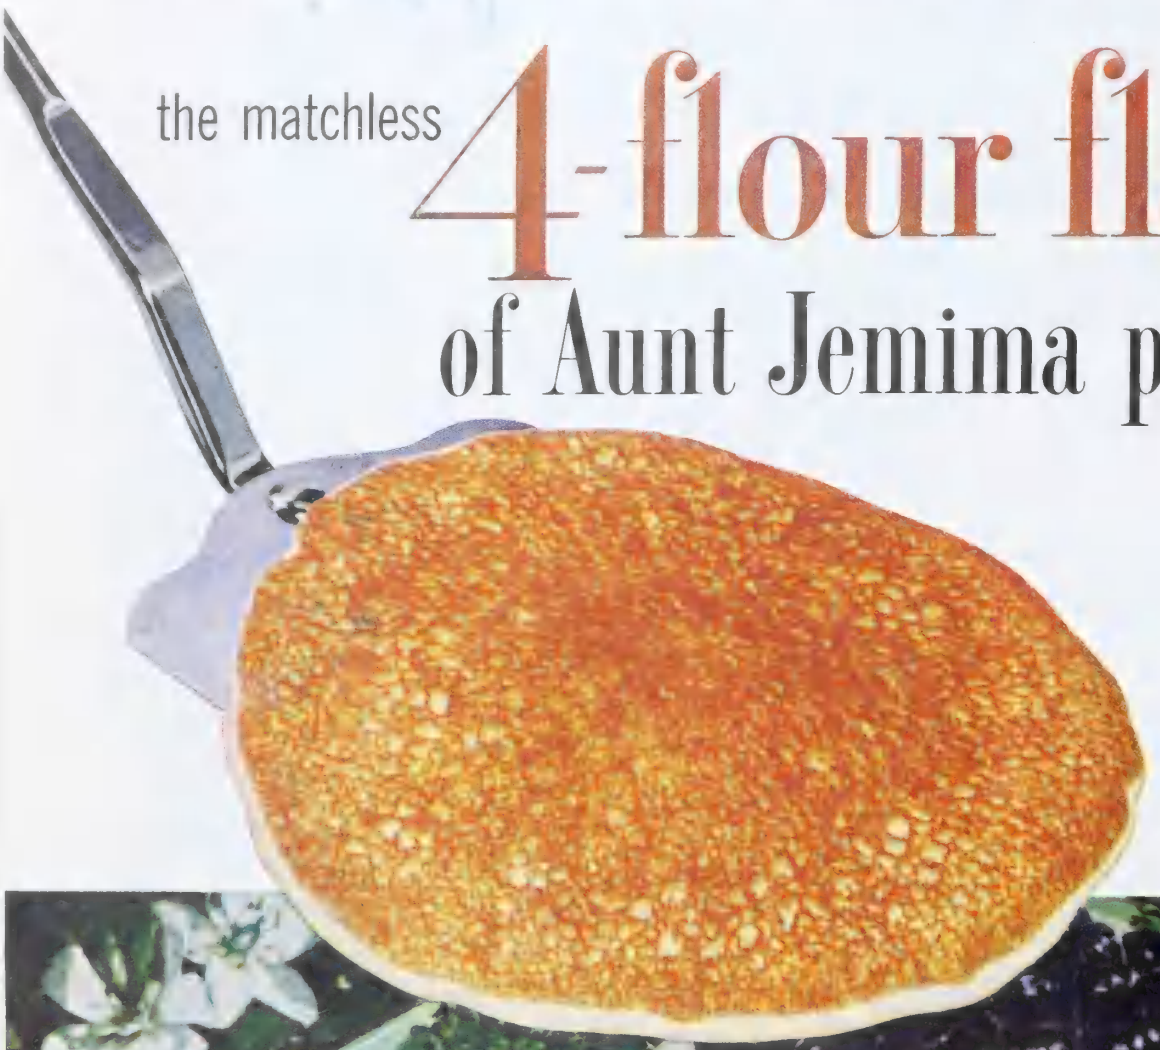
Overnight guests were frequent at the Higbee plantation. Colonel Higbee always saw that they had a hearty breakfast of Aunt Jemima's pancakes before they left. Soon the lightness and flavor of these pancakes became the talk of the countryside.

You can't duplicate it in a homemade batter; you don't get it in any other n

the matchless



4-flour flavor

of Aunt Jemima pancakes

FOR THE FINEST BUCK
Aunt Jemima in th

The treasured Aunt Jemima recipe com flours in a special way. Wheat flour for lig corn for tenderness, rye for richness, browning quality. This 4-flour blend giv Jemima pancakes a flavor no others can

BLUEBERRY-PI
Overlap slic Canadian hot Aunt J cakes. Serv berry sauc sauce, add of cornstar of frozen heat until add a little

Listen to D
Breakfast Cl and TV

TINUED FROM PAGE 133

good one," Edwards said, en-ten to it."
any recent stuff?" Magruder sten," Edwards said, his head d the player.

me on, teach'," Kramer said.
ot nobody singin'?"
just heard Bunny ——" mean somebody who knows how

, I have. As soon as this one is I see what else I have."
it off now," Liggett shouted.
ifted the arm near the end of the quickly took the disk from the 've got a lot of vocals," he said.
m, I'm sure, will —— Here's one e Morse. It's called Cow-Cow

, Josh-wah!" Alexander shouted.
idin' in that damned box?"
our language, Alexander," Ed-
d.
s see what the hell he's hiding," outed to the class. Vallera leaped nd started for the record case. Ed-ed. "Sit ra."
u got in teach'?"
d.
n the r Santa

ay from ds!" Ed-
l.
nt some ' Vallera
ching for Edwards
n away, cked up case, his wideoose the e yelled.

away!"
se some
!" Jones

the hell
ay," Val-
He shoved Edwards, and Edwards nd then went flying back against oard.
way from that case!" he screamed, already had a record in his hands,
it up and shouted, "Clap Hands, s Charlie!"
record ——" Edwards started.
nt to hear that one?"
he class shouted in unison, rising seats, ready to join in the fun. The already left Vallera's hands, was rough the air in a dizzying black he floor, and the crash was lost in ee!" Vallera shouted. "You want

s?" he class bellowed. "Throw it out!"

s saw the second record leave Val-ds, sail across the room and smack ll. He turned, whirling and rushing llera.
abbed his arm and spun him back
t shoved Vallera away from the rec-and yelled, "Here's Kalamazoo. bid for Kalamazoo?" Edwards yelled. "No! Stop it, stop n't know what you're ——" ord hit the wall, splashed off it in a ng black pieces. Someone else was ord case now, and Edwards was ross the room. A boy in the first out his foot, and Edwards fell for-is face, his glasses shattering on the his nose.
t!" he yelled. "Please, you don't
t ——" d turned into a real party! If those eren't smashing all over the joint like hand grenades! Man alive, this was a surprise all right, the best damn class they'd had all term!

"Concerto for Cootie!" And another crash, and then the crashes came one after the other, like machine-gun fire, because everybody had his hands in the record case, and everybody was yelling all at once and throwing records.

THEN one of the boys grabbed the case, and shouted, "Here it goes!" He held it in both hands, swung it down beneath his knees, holding it the way a basketball player holds the ball when he's taking a foul shot. The case sailed upward and then plunged toward the floor, upside down, the records tumbling from their slots, crashing, shattering, the case thudding to the floor too.

"You stinkers!" Edwards screamed. "You dirty stinkers!"

The boys realized all this screaming and crashing around was going to bring somebody soon, so they cut out for the door, leaving Edwards on the floor with his broken records and dented case.

It wasn't until Rick came up from his Unassigned sixth period that he found Joshua Edwards. He walked into the room and saw Josh in the middle of the floor, his fingers idly running over the dented case, the broken records scattered around him.

"Josh!" he said. "What the hell ——"

"My records," Josh mumbled. "They—they broke my records, Rick." He looked up, and his face looked pathetically young without glasses, and there were thin streams of blood running down his nose. He suddenly began to cry bitterly. Rick put his arm around Josh's shoulder and Josh kept crying and saying, "Why'd they want to do that? Why'd they want to do that? They broke my records."

Rick kept his arm around Josh's shoulders, and listened to the sobs that racked his friend's body, and he wanted to cry himself, but he didn't.

The first note came on November fourth, the day after the Election Day holiday. It was not in the mailbox when Rick left for school that morning, and it was not placed in the mailbox until 10:44 when an overburdened mailman gave only a cursory glance to the small envelope typed MRS. RICHARD DADIER, and dumped it into the box for 11C.

The delivery of the note was preceded by an important flow of events at North Manual Trades which left no doubt about Mr. Small's reformative policy. The incident in Joshua Edwards' classroom had disturbed him deeply. The records had meant little to him. The record player, on the other hand, had belonged to the school.

The parents of every boy in Josh's sixth-period English class had been summoned and Small had informed them that Joshua Edwards would be reimbursed for his loss, and that North Manual Trades would be likewise reimbursed for the damaged record player. There had been twenty-six boys present that day, and the sum total of the damages had been divided by twenty-six. Small advised the parents that he would not like to call in the police, but he was sure they all knew that willful destruction of private or public property was a criminal offense. The parents got the point, and they forked over the cash, and there were many raw, red behinds that week, and a few battered heads. Money did not grow on trees, and being called to school was humiliating even when it didn't cost anything.

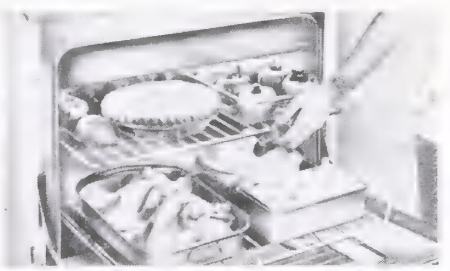
Nor were the red and aching behinds the only punishment the boys in Josh's class suffered. They were brought in a group to Mr. Small's office, whereupon Mr. Small delivered a shouting, ranting ten-minute speech. He concluded by telling the boys they would spend their next week at school in the auditorium, all day. They would come supplied with fountain pens, paper and ink. They would sit three seats apart from one another and there would be three Unassigned teachers watching them during each period. They would write all day long, "I shall learn to respect the property of others."

Anne Dadier, on that morning after Election Day, had given Rick his breakfast and then gone back to bed, rising finally at 9:10. She went into the bathroom in her shorty nightgown, and when she spotted herself in the full-length mirror, examined her profile. She turned, looked at herself full-face, and thought, You can hardly tell this way. Except that my hips have gone.

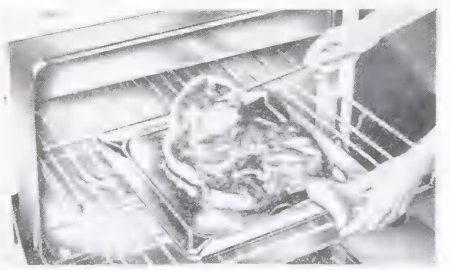
She turned her back to the mirror, looking over her shoulder, her eyes traveling over her good, long legs. This is the best view, she thought. All expectant mothers should be forced to walk backward. She shrugged, and then brushed her teeth, washed her face and brushed out her hair.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 137

THE GREATEST BOOK EVER WRITTEN



In a day of literary superlatives, there is one book for which the word "greatest" is slight. Abraham Lincoln called it "the best gift God has given to man." Among God's gifts, it is always there to turn to, in sad moments, in happy moments, any moment. This book of books is the Bible. It has passed the test of centuries of reading, yet has still more to give to each new generation. Those who know the Bible do not need to be told of its values; those who do not have only to turn to its pages to learn them. This year the Laymen's National League, an all-faiths organization, is observing National Bible Week, October 18-24.



Every big range feature in this 30-inch Holiday and the beauty of it is

–it's a TAPPAN

Whatever you want for easier, more enjoyable cooking is here at its best—in just thirty space-saving inches! Yes, only Tappan brings you every big range feature in the most modern, most efficient range beauty you've ever seen!

Food for thirty is a cinch in this large, roomy 24-inch Chrome-Lined Oven. Chrome lining is beautiful and it reflects the heat for faster, tastier roasting and baking.

Charkrome grill gives you steaks and chops with that seared-in flavor. Another example of cooking convenience is the grill location at an easy-to-reach height.

TAPPAN GAS RANGES
In models to fit every kitchen, every budget. For city gas, Philgas, other LP (bottled) gases and electricity. The Tappan Stove Co., Dept. L-104 Mansfield, Ohio

GREAT VARIETY SALE!

MANY STYLES! MANY SIZES!

DOLE HAWAIIAN HARVEST

Slices, Chunks, Tidbits, Crushed, Spears, Juice, Fresh-frozen Chunks and Juice—and Fruit
Choose your favorite cuts in the can size you prefer. All ready-to-serve! Extra delicious becau Hawaiian Pineapple is brighter, tenderer, tastier! Good for you. And thrifty, too! See your gro serve DOLE each day a different

...INUED FROM PAGE 135

...the new shine of her hair, the ...ment her pregnancy had brought ...hat's not true, she thought. My ...ut a little, and I look better this ...ted the brush strokes, and when ...she took a last look at herself in ... mirror. She left the bathroom ...the bedroom to dress.

... of December, Doctor Bradley ... it be nice if the baby were born ... Day? Or would it? It would be ... a sort of super Christmas pres... n't be very nice for the baby, ...use he'd miss out on either a ...nt or a Christmas present. It ...ir to cheat him of —— ...nk of him as him. I suppose I ... want a boy. Rick wants a boy, I ... l love a boy.

...Rick, do you know? she thought, ...d and reached for the slip her ...ven her. She put on a blouse and ... went into the kitchen where she ...offee going. She drank a little ... and made herself some toast, ...cups of coffee, and then decided ...get downstairs and do some

... her coat and locked the apart... down the hall to the elevator. ..., her colored neighbor, was ...ont of the elevator door.

...ne," she said warmly. Viola was ...n with a ready smile, and Anne ... feel a warm sort of happiness ...

...la," she answered, smiling. ... kids are holding the elevator ...Viola said. She shook her head. ...e." She smiled suddenly and ...do you feel?"

...he said.

...st met Viola Jackson two days ... she had moved into the proj... and, Fred, had been out sweep... ridor, and when they'd stepped ...r he'd explained, "If you got a ...ive in, you got to keep it nice." ...ed himself, and Viola—hearing ...on—had come out and joined ...ad been the beginning of their

... elevator now," Viola said.

...ped and they got in and punched ...or button. They got off in the ... Anne walked to the mailboxes, ... box.

... phone bill, and a handbill from ...rmarket, and also a letter. The ... neatly typed:

MRS. RICHARD DADIER
1935 East 174 Street
Bronx, New York

She looked in the upper-left-hand corner for a return address, but there was none. Anne walked to the windows near the radiator and unfolded the letter. It was a plain white sheet of paper. There was no date on it and no salutation. In the center of the page, neatly typed, were the words:

WATCH RICHARD.
THERE'S ANOTHER WOMAN!

The note was unsigned.

Rick almost missed Gregory Miller, walking past the stair well.

"Hello, Mr. Dadier," Miller said.

"Hello, Miller," Rick said briefly. "You cutting a class?"

"Why no, chief," Miller said. "I was just goan to the john." He held up the large wooden room pass. "You—uh—cuttin' a class, teach'?"

"What do you mean by that?" Rick asked.

"Why, nothin'. Nothin' at all, teach'."

"Mr. Dadier," Rick snapped.

"Sure. Mr. Dadier. That's what I said, wunt it?"

"No, it wasn't what you said. And you know it wasn't."

"You got somethin' against me?" Miller asked suddenly.

"I might ask the same of you," Rick answered.

"Me?" Miller asked, seemingly surprised. "What is it, chief? Why you got the knife out for me?"

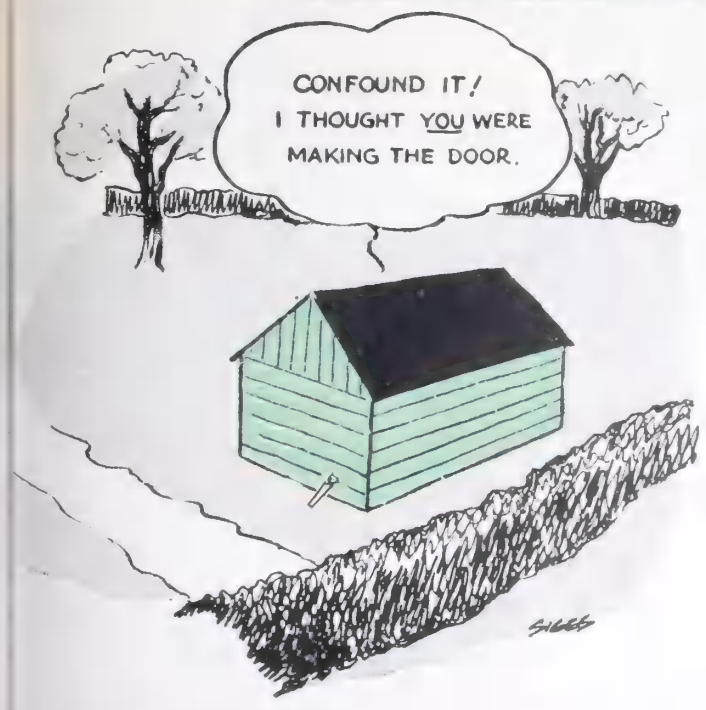
"I haven't got a knife out for anyone, Miller. You're imagining things."

"You do, chief. You sure as hell do. Why, tha's what I like to know. Why?"

Rick stared at Miller. "Are you serious?"

Miller looked confused. "Why, sure I am."

"You've got the nerve to ask that! After all the trouble you've caused in my classroom? After all you've done?" He paused and then blurted, "I wouldn't be surprised if you were in on that beating I got a while ago."



Miller's eyes tightened, and he looked at Rick soberly. "You doan mean that, chief," he said softly.

"I do mean it," Rick said, refusing to budge an inch.

"You really got it bad, huh, boy?" Miller said. He shook his head and glanced into the corridor, and Rick's anger suddenly bubbled over.

"Shut up, Miller," he said. "Just shut up, you little ——" He took a step toward Miller, and the boy backed off, his eyes narrowed.

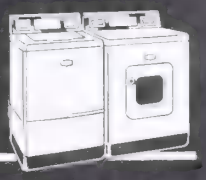
"You gonna hit me, Mr. Dadier?" he said. "Tha's all you need, boy. Tha's all you need to wash you up. Go on, hit me."

Your Neighbors Will Tell You

...there's nothing finer than an ABC WASHER

"Shampoo" Washing's the Reason

ABC owners pass the good word. They'll tell you how gentle, thorough the ABC-O-MATIC is in washing clothes. "Shampoo" washing, with "Centric" agitation, is water-thrifty, super-cleansing . . . washes clothes in concentrated suds the way you wash your hair. See the colorful new ABC. Ask about the two separate washing cycles . . . for regular fabrics . . . delicate fabrics. You'll be glad you did.



...and ...there's nothing finer than an ABC DRYER

"Jet-Aire" Drying's the Reason

Want safe automatic drying? Better see the new ABC Dryer. The single drying temperature is pre-set to prevent overheating clothes. You simply dial the drying time on the colorful control panel . . . and forget line-drying drudgery. Clothes dry fleecy-soft and fresh, easy to iron . . . many pieces so wrinkle-free they need no ironing. Performance-proved ABC Dryer matches the handsome ABC-O-MATIC WASHER.

ABC

Ask your ABC dealer to demonstrate the remarkable new ABC-O-MATIC Washer and matching Automatic Dryer. His name is in the classified section of your phone directory. Or write direct.

ALTORFER BROS. COMPANY
Makers of America's finest washers and dryers
PEORIA, ILLINOIS

Matchmates give YOU a holiday from hard work

Now!... "CHARCOAL" BROIL Right in Your Kitchen Range with KITCHEN BOUQUET

Costs so little ... Adds so Much!

See, Smell, Taste the Difference!

You don't need charcoal to "charcoal" broil. Just brush steaks, chops, hamburgers with Kitchen Bouquet—your broiler does the rest! That tempting "charcoal" broiled crust helps seal in all the savory meat juices!

Get more meat for your money! Cook the Low-Temperature Kitchen Bouquet Way!

Find full information on modern, low-temperature cooking—along with many exciting recipes—in the folder in each Kitchen Bouquet package. For over 75 years, good cooks have depended on Kitchen Bouquet to give meats, fish, poultry and gravy rich brown color, stepped-up flavor!

B in B Broiled in Butter MUSHROOMS FOR QUICK, DELICIOUS LOW-CALORIE DISHES!

Give everyday dishes a "party touch"... make them go farther, too! Just add a can or two of B in B Broiled in Butter Mushrooms. These choice hothouse beauties are real "lifesavers" for unexpected guests!

BROILED PLATTER

Simmer ■ in B Mushrooms in their own buttery broth. Drain, arrange on platter of broiled chops, poultry, hamburgers or fish. Serve ringed with your favorite vegetables. Eat your fill... B in B Mushrooms are low in calories, low in cost, high in appetite appeal!

3 Convenient Styles!

■ in B Whole Crowns
B in B Sliced Mushrooms
B in B Chopped Mushrooms

★ B in B BROILED in BUTTER MUSHROOMS and KITCHEN BOUQUET are products of GROCERY STORE PRODUCTS CO., West Chester, Pa. ★

Rick gained instant control of himself, and now that he was calm again he could not understand Miller's anger. Nor could he understand how a seemingly innocuous conversation had led to this explosive point.

"I'm sorr——" he started, and Miller backed off another pace.

"Go ahead, Mr. Dadier," he shouted, "go ahead and hit me. I doan know what's eatin' you, but I'd sure like to see you hit me."

Rick turned his back to Miller. "I'll see you in class tomorrow," he said coldly.

"And maybe you won't!" Miller shouted. He turned and started off down the hallway. Rick walked down the steps, his own anger slowly returning.

The little bastard, he thought. The little black ——

He stopped abruptly.

It's not because he's black, Rick thought. That has nothing to do with it.

Then why did you think that? What you think isn't important. What does Miller think? Miller, the boy you almost called a little black bastard. What does he think? Does he think you think of him as a little black bastard?

It had never occurred to him that Miller might feel that way. That would be ironic, he thought. If Miller thought that about me. If that were the nub of all the trouble.

Could he go to the boy and say, "Look, you've got me all wrong. I don't care what color your skin is"?

Could he do that? How could he make an issue of the color of Miller's skin and at the same time state that the color of that skin was a thing of no importance? And suppose he was wrong? No, he could not take the direct approach. If color was a sore spot with him, Miller would not want to discuss it frankly. And if it wasn't, there was no sense making an issue of it, and risking a fresh breach.

As it turned out, the whole thing was simpler than he ever imagined it could be. Miller, apparently forgetting his parting threat, diligently appeared at each English class, and it was during one of those classes that the opportunity presented itself.

The class was discussing a story Rick had read to them. Rick had asked Antoro a question, and Antoro had got to his feet and fumbled haltingly.

Taglio, bored, shouted, "Oh, sit down, you crazy wop. You don't know what you're talking about."

"You're a bigger wop," Antoro had answered, smiling, and Rick had stepped in, though he knew the boys were joking.

"That's enough of that," he said sternly. "I don't like name calling in my classes."

"I wasn't calling no names," Taglio said. "I was just kiddin'."

"That's the way it starts," Rick said. "Just kidding. Like a fist fight in the streets. You shove a guy jokingly, and he shoves you back, and the next thing you know you're at each other's throats."

THE class regarded him silently. He had their complete attention, and sensed that he was broaching a subject in which they were interested.

"All right, Antoro, you're of Italian descent. So's Taglio. You call Taglio a wop, and he calls you a wop, and everything's O.K. But suppose Levy calls you both wops? Is it O.K. then?"

Rick paused and waited.

"No, it's not O.K.," he provided. "It's not O.K., and you'll snap right back and call Levy a kike or a mockie."

"Aw I didn't mean nothin'." Taglio said.

"I know you didn't. That's just my point. You shouldn't use vicious expressions, whether you're joking or serious. Look, my parents are French. Do you know how many times I've been called frog? Do you think I like it? Well, no, I don't.

"Do you think Morales or De la Cruz or Rodriguez like being called spics? Well, I can tell you they don't."

He looked out at the class, saw the three Puerto Rican boys smile in embarrassment.

"Do you think Kruger or V being called krauts? Do you th Erin like being called micks Rick paused. "Do you think Mi or Baker like being called nig

The class stirred a little, ar they'd all used every one of th at one time or another.

"No one likes fun poked at H or nationality," Rick went on. tolerate it in my class. So don't kidding or not kidding. I'm Just don't use derogatory exp classroom. Is that clear?"

The kids remained silent. S nodded, and some of them fi seats. Miller smiled. He smile Rick could not read the smile, his little lecture had made a p of all, he felt he had delivered Miller.

THE executive ax began falli fore Armistice Day. Rick had would fall, nor did he even kno over his head. He considered visit to his classroom a part c cedure.

The department chairman ar 206 just before the fifth period tered the room smiling, walked "Hope you don't mind a litt Dadier?"

"Why—why, not at all," Rick

"I'll just sit at the back of th ley said. He took the last seat and opened a black notebook.

Worry is like a rocking chair. It will give you something to do, but it won't get you anywhere. —ANON.

The class ting Stanley behaving lik fore the Ch There'd be day, Rick k primarily on dents, throw the duller kid ley he was he steered aw and West, not wanting to risk ments.

At the end of the period, S the desk and smiled briefly. watch the distribution of your said. "You seem to favor sever

"Oh, do I?" Rick asked in watch that."

"Yes, do." He paused and notes. "Ever call on Morales?"

"Yes," Rick said, a little flu do."

"Nice boy."

"Yes."

"Ever call on Rodriguez?"

"Why, certainly. Yes. Yes, I

"Like him?"

Rick shrugged and smiled. Not too bright, but not a bad k

"Uh-huh. What about Mill didn't call on him once."

"Didn't I? No, I guess I d quite active in the class usually hoping Stanley would unders meant. Stanley did not return th

"I'll have a report typed up ance, Dadier. I may drop in ag

"Please do," Rick answered

Stanley began stopping by fr beginning, Rick resented the would watch Stanley scribblin the room, and wonder what St ing; he felt something like a bu scope slide of a noted entomol

He began to realize, after Stanley's visits were probably needed, and he found himself l to the unannounced appearan partment chairman. With pain admitted to himself that his st entirely to blame for the lack went on in his classes. He was cope with them, and unless so what he was doing wrong, he'd be prepared to cope with them ley's visits were the answer to h where he had made lesson pla fore, he now devoted more tim

CONTINUED ON PAG

Now even igher, lighter, more delicate than ever!

is is the gel Food ke Mix
th the ites of 13 country sh eggs right in the mix

WATER IS ALL YOU ADD

EW!

illsbury Angel Food Cake Mix

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 138

lined his lessons in the minutest detail. And when Stanley asked to see his plan during one of his visits, Rick felt amply rewarded, even though Stanley made no comment.

He was grateful, too, for the obedience of his classes whenever Stanley was present. He had never fully licked the discipline problem, and doubted if he ever would. He had succeeded, though, in forcing some sort of obedience out of the kids, usually by threats of homework or tests or visits from parents.

He tried to reach them, and he tried harder when Stanley was present because he did not have to fight the shouting and the ranting then.

There were times when they irritated him so much that he felt like chucking the whole mess and taking a job as a shoe clerk. And there were times when he simply did not understand. Like the afternoon four of his eighth-period students stayed after school voluntarily, helping him erase the boards and stack the books away in the closet. He'd found himself talking about Anne, and the baby to come, talking to these kids the way he'd talk to anyone else. When they left they all waved and said, "So long, Mr. Dadier. See you tomorrow." He'd liked the kids that afternoon, and couldn't wait to get home and tell Anne about how nice they'd been.

And then the very next day, those same four kids had raised all kinds of hell, creating a havoc he'd never had before in that class. The same four kids. What could you do when they ran hot and cold like that? He had no answer.

He had no answer to why Stanley dropped in so often, either, but he enjoyed the visits. He kept teaching in his own fashion, hoping for some miraculous thing to happen, hoping he'd break through if he simply kept at it, hoping he'd find the way.

He did not find the way, but he did find Stanley's reasons for lavishing so much attention upon him.

It was two days before Thanksgiving. Stanley had dropped in, taken his seat at the rear of the room, and Rick had taught as well as he knew how to teach, calling primarily on his best students.

At the end of the period, Stanley came to him and said, "You're unassigned now, aren't you, Dadier? I think Mr. Small would like to talk to you."

"Is—is anything wrong?" Rick asked.

"Mr. Small will discuss it with you," Stanley said noncommittally. "Get down there as soon as you can, Dadier."

"Yes, sir," Rick said.

He picked up his brief case and went down to Small's office, and told Miss Brady, the secretary, that Stanley had asked him to stop in.

"Oh, yes," Miss Brady said.

Rick walked to Small's frosted-glass door and knocked.

"Come in, Dadier," Small called, and Rick entered the room. He had not been in this room since the day of the organizational meeting, when Stanley had taken his new teachers to meet the principal.

SMALL indicated a chair, said, "Sit down, Dadier," and picked up his pen to sign something on his desk. He capped the pen without looking at Rick and then lifted his head.

"Now, then, Dadier."

He paused and stared at Rick, and the stare was a frigid one. "Do you like Negroes?" Small asked.

Rick blinked, surprised. "Sir?"

"Do you like Negroes?" He frowned at Rick belligerently.

"Yes, I do. That is, as much like anyone else." Rick's brow I don't understand, sir."

"What about Puerto Rican spics, Dadier?"

"Spics, sir?" Rick asked, prised by Small's choice of lan

"Yes, spics. Do you like th

"Why do you ask, sir?"

"I'll ask the questions, Da don't you like spics?"

"Sir, I like them or dislike t people."

"And just what does that

"It means there are Puerto Puerto Ricans I dislike."

"What about wops?"

"WOPS?" Rick asked, real by Small's vocabulary. "Italia

"You know what I mean about them?"

"Is this some sort of joke, si smiling and thinking he'd fou last.

"No, it is not a joke," Sma I'll thank you to remember t the ques happen cipal of Remem and an tion."

The from Ri may I a all abou

"No, what it i me, Dad think mockies donkeys niggers? Dadier?

"No," grily, "it you insi

"I n Dadier. you not rogatory classroo did you cial, rel tional g

"I cer Rick sai

"Sit Small s

"Did you use the expression classroom?"

"Yes, I did. But only to ex

"Did you use the expressio

"Yes, in the same lesson kids ——"

"And 'kike' and 'mockie,' D you, a Fascist? A Communist Dadier?"

"What are you?" Rick sho Inquisitor?"

"What?" Small sputtered.

"I used those expressions what should not be said. I use tive examples."

"You did not!" Small roare

"Are you calling me a liar, M asked, his voice cold white.

"I am telling you exactly wh to me by one of your own stu ing my conclusions upon wh told me and upon reports fron to the prejudiced teaching pra by you in your ——"

"That's enough!" Rick shou about enough, Mr. Small. I d fire me right this minute, do y I told you I used those expres examples. I never once, not i and not anywhere, ever referr group ——"

"This boy said you did," S his voice somewhat on the de

"Which boy?" Rick snapp

"A boy in one of your clas

"Who? What's his name?"

CONTINUED ON PA

CHILD TO WOMAN

By CANDACE T. STEVENSON

Red coat and hat, I saw her in the park
The tailored pigeons clustered round her feet,
A pretty child that one would scarcely mark
As more than any child, dark-haired and sweet.

I see her often now to woman grown,
With friends submissive to her winning ways.
I catch her words in gentle undertone,
Scattering round her little crumbs of praise.

Why show your age? You don't tell it!

25, Dry Skin Tells Your Age, If You're Not Careful!

'Moon Drops'... and these 3 new flowing cremes... can change your beauty life overnight!

'Build-Up' Firming Facial for Tired Skin. Lifts weary contours at jawline, throat, brow, corners of the eyes. 3.50*

'White Sable' Liquid Cleansing-Creme. Cleans skin cleaner, helps keep it younger looking day by day. 1.50*. With hormones, 2.25*

'Waking Beauty' Night Creme. Ultra-enriched night creme for sensitive dry skin that needs extra care. You wake to a younger looking skin. 3.50* and 6.00*. With hormones, 4.00* and 7.00*

*PLUS TAX

...rkable new formula acts like a 'fountain of youth' for dry skin!

...ou're only 25 — dry skin can make you look ...r than you really are! Yes, dried-out skin is ...iveaway of age. Small wonder, then, that ...f women are blessing Revlon for this new ...alm that combats dry skin as nothing else ...ps you stay younger looking longer than you ...ned possible!

...the lusciously smooth look and feel of a ...der skin? That's because a baby's skin con... ...h percentage of moisture. Unfortunately, this ...diminishes every day you live. Obviously, then, ...nt to look younger, you must replenish your skin's inner moisture every day. And that's just what 'Moon Drops' does! When you smooth this greaseless, flowing creme on at bedtime . . . when you wear it under your makeup by day, you can actually feel the moisture flow into your skin, helping it look smoother, fresher, years younger . . . 24 hours a day!

So economical to use, you'll say every drop is worth its weight in gold!

3.00* and 5.00*

Revlon's new wonder balm

'Moon Drops'

brings rejuvenating moisture to aging or drying-out skins

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 14

"I prefer not to divulge that," Small said, quietly pompous.

"He was lying," Rick said tightly. "He was lying, and you took his word over mine."

"Mr. Stanley substantiated ——"

"I called on my best students whenever Mr. Stanley was observing. I can't help it if he drew the wrong conclusions. If he'd visited my second-period class, I'd have called almost exclusively on Simpson, who happens to be the brightest kid in the class, and who also happens to be a Negro."

"Gregory Miller is in your fifth-term class," Small said. "He has an I.Q. of 113. I consider that bright, Dadier. Yet Mr. Stanley visited that class four times, and you called upon Miller only once. Why, Dadier?"

"Because Miller is a troublemaker, and I didn't want to risk trouble while being observed by the department chairman. I didn't call on Harris in my eighth-period class either, and Harris is pure white Protestant. But Harris is a troublemaker, too, and I wasn't going to put my worst foot forward while the department chairman was taking notes."

"I see," Small said quietly.

"Was Miller the one who put this idea into your head?" Rick asked. "Did he make the complaint?"

"I prefer not to divulge the boy's name."

"Why not? Don't you think I have a right to know?"

"No, I do not think so. You can understand that a complaint of this type demanded immediate action. Perhaps I was a bit hasty, Dadier, but you can't blame me for misinterpreting the facts, especially in the light of the complaint." He paused. "If I was wrong, I apologize."

"You were wrong, sir," Rick said, not able to resist the twisting of the knife, "but I shouldn't have lost my temper, either."

"In that case," Small said, smiling benevolently, "shall we let bygones be bygones?"

He extended his palm across th
Rick took it.

"There," Small said, "that's be like tiffs in my school family, Mr.

Rick heard the added Mister, an he had regained his position in th esteem, or at least he felt he had.

"Well," Small said, "let's just f this little incident, eh? I've alread it, believe me, and I have a mem elephant."

"Yes, sir," Rick said, backing t

He made his way up to the secon started down the corridor. That w heard the din coming from Josh room, and he forgot his own tr walked rapidly to Josh's room through the glass panels. Josh sat c desk, and the kids were romping room, yelling at the tops of their rapped on one glass panel, and Jos him, and then walked to the door.

"Hello, Rick," he said, smiling.
new pair of glasses, and they chan pearance of his face, but the sad eyes, behind the new glasses, despit changed the appearance of his face

Rick looked through the glass p observing the disorderly conduct
"Any trouble, Josh?" he asked, c

"Trouble?" Josh's eyebrows cli his forehead. "No, no trouble."
over his shoulder. "You though quiet them down, Rick? I would Not today, pal. Today is a very sp

"What happened, Josh?"

"Mr. Stanley and I had a deli chat. I'm leaving. I quit."

"No. No, you didn't."

"Ah, but I did. Off for Thanks
that's the last I'll see of Manual Tr

The bell sounded and doors we all along the corridor.

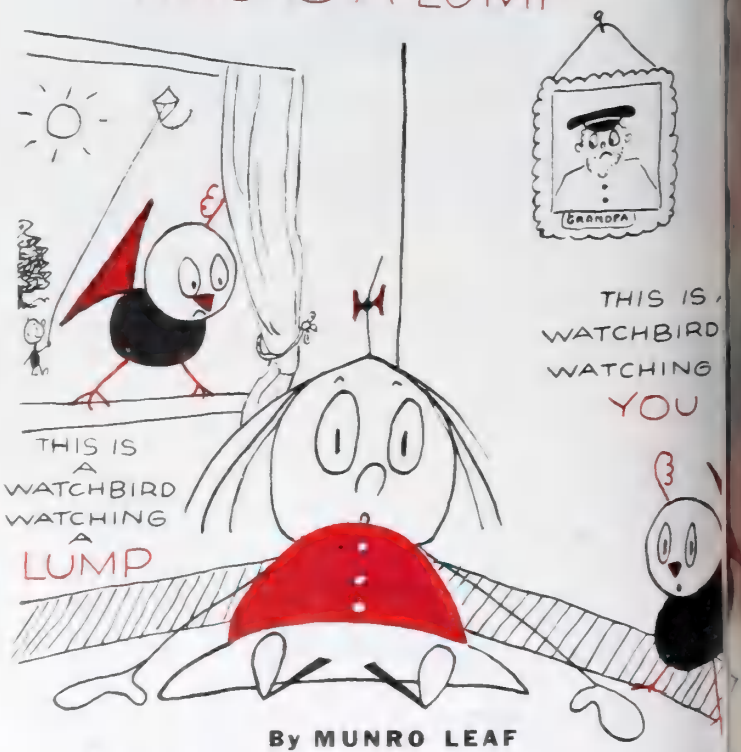
"I'll see you later," Rick said.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 1



NOW YOU CAN pop heaping bowls of delicious pop corn in just a jiffy! Never any unpopped kernels. Never any failures. It is so easy with JOLLY TIME—the patented pop corn that is guaranteed by Good Housekeeping.

IT'S A SPECIAL KIND

Positively no other like it. Pops like fury every time. Created especially for home popping to give you oodles and oodles of delightfully fluffy, tender, crisp and delicious pop corn. We seal it airtight in metal cans to bring it to you fresh—every kernel packed with poppin' power. One 10 ounce can pops enough for an entire party. Try both the White and the Yellow.

EVERY KERNEL POPS OR YOUR MONEY BACK

THIS IS A LUMP

By MUNRO LEAF

THIS goggle-eyed goose slumped down in the corner is a Lump. It can't even get up to go outside on a beautiful day, because it has just about forgotten how to walk and play. A Lump just sits around and watches things instead of doing things itself. It doesn't work, it doesn't play, it doesn't make things, do things, and you wonder if it even thinks things for itself. It just watches and watches and gets duller and droopier until it is just a Lump. This one's grandfather had more pep at the age of ninety-two.

WERE YOU A LUMP THIS MONTH?

...rkling Seven-Up and Popcorn!

Cards or TV? Games or chatter?
Twenty guests - or just a few?
Oldsters? Youngsters? Doesn't matter,
It's a PARTY with these two!

"Fresh up" with Seven-Up!

Sparkling, crystal-clear 7-Up is just the thing with popcorn for a quick, tasty snack. Seven-Up is so pure and wholesome it's perfect for all ages. You like it . . . it likes you. Get 24 bottles at a time—enough for family and guests. Buy it by the case. Or get the handy 7-Up Family Pack. Easy-lift center handle, easy to store. Buy 7-Up wherever you see those bright 7-Up signs.

Copyright 1954 by The Seven-Up Company

Patent applied for fat-free frye

A deep trough circles all the way around the inside of the fryer. Fat drains into it as fast as it melts. Fryer has pouring lips. • Large enough for 4 or 5 chops, 6 hamburgers, etc.

As in a broiler, calories drain o

Finer flavor! Easier digestibility!

Here, at last, is a fryer that automatically keeps your fried foods FREE OF EXCESS FAT!

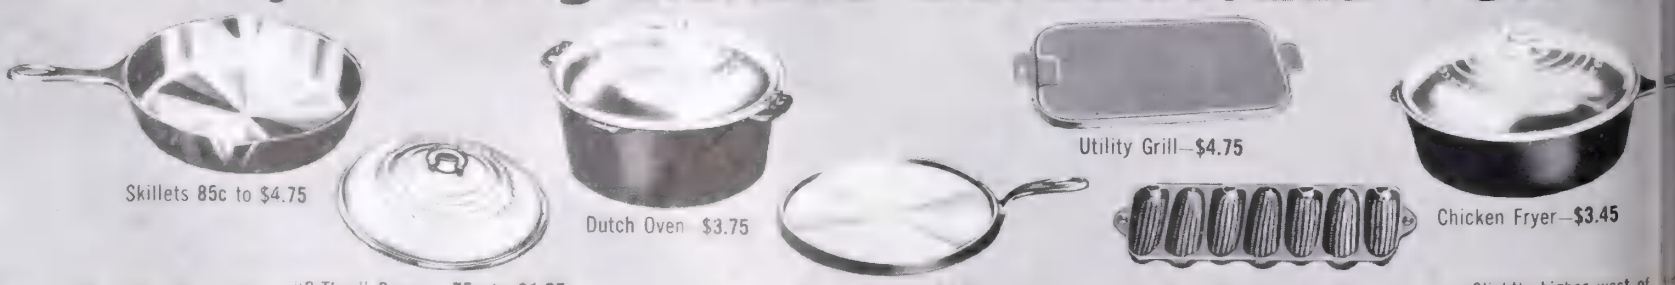
Yes, automatically! You don't lift a finger! As fast as the fat melts it drains off into a deep trough that circles the fryer. No pouring off of grease—no spooning out. Just enough fat remains, as in broiling, to keep the meat moist and juicy.

The WAGNER Fat-Free Fryer does wonders for all fried foods! Bacon as delicately crisp as Melba toast! Pork sausages deep brown and firm . . . yet tender as can be! Steaks and chops so savory they seem to have been broiled! Greaseless burgers that taste grill-toasted!

But that's not all. Foods cooked this n in the WAGNER Fat-Free Fryer are fa digestible. And much LOWER in calories news if you're watching your weight.

The Get-Acquainted price is good for a time only. You'd better hurry. On sale in mo 30,000 Department, Hardware and Variety

The Wagner Manufacturing Compar Dept. 73, Sidney, Ohio



Perfect for use on gas, electric and bottled gas sto

Introductory price $1.89

REGULAR PRICE $2.25

West of the Rocki Introductory price Regular price $2.

The only cooking utensils GUARANTEED FOR LI

Slightly higher west of

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 142

king about Josh all through the ighth periods, and almost forgot ish with Small. Finally it was day was over. He packed his cked up his coat, and locked the s waiting across the hall.

, boy," he said. "I've got my Come, let's go."

hed out, and when they reached sked, "Are you in a hurry to get ought we'd take a little ride. Un- a rush."

.K.," Rick said.

ked the car. Rick opened the door when he'd settled himself behind started the car. He drove uptown, dly spoke until Josh turned onto iver Parkway. Then Josh said, cursing me out."

you mean?"

w, Rick. Quitter, coward, turn- l fit, don't they?"

el that way about it," Rick said, u quitting?"

good question," Josh said. "I that question a lot of times, Rick. od question."

y?"

t the beating, Rick. You took the and you're not quitting. The not that either. I loved those it wasn't the beating, and it cords. You're going to tell me the in September, ly November don't I give it I gave myself gument, and I up with the t was that?"

no good. I'm

r."

silly. You —"

he truth. It's not my fault, because want to be a teacher—you know n not one. You're only a teacher learns from what you say or do. getting anything from me, believe u're hardly giving it a fair chance. of breaking through to the kids, u've done that ——" the kids, because they don't want a good teacher should make them n. There are good teachers in the chools, Rick, you know that."

—"

e, and we've got some good ones rades too. Do you know Sokoloff? good; and there's Jamison y don't you stick with it?"

I'm no good, Rick. What's the ding myself? Could I live with my- that? Could I come to school all e being a teacher, fake it all the n, just blab all day long, and then d look at myself in the mirror and I'm not a fake? Could I do that?"

know, Josh. I suppose ——"

know I couldn't. I should have he day my records were smashed. er never gets into a setup like that.

chers ——"

n't, Rick. The kids respect them. e got no respect for me because I'm er. I can be a fake teacher or a real think I'd rather be a real man."

ve in silence, the evening shadows ; across the road. There was no e car, and their breaths fogged the Josh reached over to clear it with a d before making his U-turn.

doing the right thing, Rick?" he know. If you feel right about it, I ght."

what I figured," Josh said.

ve to the project, and Rick glanced and saw how late it was. He hadn't called Anne, and he knew she'd be worried. He got out of the car and then leaned over when Josh opened the window.

"So you've got one more day, Josh," Rick said.

"Yes."

He had a sudden feeling that he would not see much of Josh tomorrow, and so he took off his glove and held out his hand. When Josh took it, he said, "Lots of luck, boy."

"Thanks," Josh said. Then he turned the car into the stream of traffic and Rick walked to the entrance of his building.

THERE were three notes. The first had come a long time ago, and said WATCH RICHARD. THERE'S ANOTHER WOMAN!

She had thought about it all that day, wondering first who had sent it, and then why. She did not for a moment attribute any truth to the message. There was not another woman, and there was no reason to watch Rick. Richard, as the informant had called him, which probably indicated that the informant didn't know Rick very well, or at least not well enough to call him by the name everyone else used.

The second note came a week later. She fished it out of the mailbox, and when she saw the neatly typed MRS. RICHARD DADIER, she knew this would be another note, and was tempted to throw it away without opening it. But she did open it and it read:

AT SCHOOL.
ALL DAY, EVERY DAY.

That was all, just that, but it started a new train of thought. She had never considered this before, never visualized the school as a trysting place. She always looked upon it as a place of labor, but now she began remembering stories about places of labor, stories about men and their secretaries, and she also began remembering Rick's part in an attempted rape long ago. She began thinking about the woman who had provoked that attempt, and Lois Hammond began taking shape in her mind.

Your friend is the man who knows all about you, and still likes you.

—ELBERT HUBBARD

AT SCHOOL. ALL DAY, EVERY DAY the note said, but after all, what could a man do at school, all day, every day? There wasn't even a coed teachers' lunchroom, unless Rick was lying about the talks with the other men teachers, and all his other time was occupied with classes and duty periods and what not. Of course no one said you had to eat in the teachers' lunchroom. Oh, nonsense! Picture Rick in some out-of-the-way place, holding hands with that Hammond woman. I don't even know what she looks like. And I'm sure Rick doesn't either. And I can't see him holding hands with her. And even if he were holding hands, what's so terrible about that?

She sat in the kitchen and stared at the clock on the beige wall. The notes were before her, three notes now, and the third read:

LOIS HAMMOND

And the clock read 8:22.

Rick was usually home by 4:30, at the very latest.

She looked at the notes again, and then she looked at the clock and vowed to discuss it with him that night, because if it was true, she wanted to know, and if it was not true, she wanted Rick to know. She picked up the notes and put them into their envelopes, and then she put the three envelopes into her purse.

She went into the living room and she turned on the radio. She was not frightened this time. She did not for a moment believe that Rick had met with another ambush. She tried not to think that he was with Lois Hammond, but she could not forget the notes.

He came into the apartment at 8:40.

She heard his key in the lock and stayed in the living room, until she realized it would look strange, her not going to the door. She rose hastily then, and rushed into the foyer.

He was closing the door, and she went to him and kissed him tenderly, but he didn't seem terribly interested. His face was tired and somehow sad-looking.

"How was it today?" she asked, trying to keep her voice light.

"Comfortable Interlock Knit-lined Neoprene Household Gloves with Safe Non-slip Grip"

Offers TEN Housewives A 28 Day Vacation From Housework

Here's How You Can Enter and Win

1. Buy a pair of $1.49 Bluettes ($1.98 in Canada)—use them around your home.

2. Complete this sentence. "I use my Bluettes to (one use) because: (25 words or less)"

3. Send as many entries as you wish but each must be accompanied by a triangular Bluettes package front and mailed to PIONEER Contest, Box 808, Chicago 77, Illinois. Entries must be postmarked not later than midnight Nov. 30, 1954.

4. Entries will be judged by R. L. Polk & Co. on the basis of originality, sincerity and aptness of thought. Duplicate prizes awarded in case of ties.

5. °This contest is open to all residents of Continental U.S. and Canada except employees of PIONEER Rubber Co., and its advertising agencies and their families.

6. Winners will be notified by mail 30 days after contest ends. List of winners available about 60 days after contest closes to those sending stamped, self addressed envelope.

Here's What You Can Win...

The services of the maid of your choice for 24 working days for four consecutive weeks at any time during 1955. Maximum salary $300.

Here Are Some Ideas to Start With...

to protect your hands from detergents, soaps and other household cleaning compounds.

to protect your fingernails from snagging while you work.

to keep your hands clean and soft while you paint.

to keep your hands free from strong food odors (fish, garlic and onions).

to protect your hands from scalding hot water.

to help you open stubborn screw-on type lids quickly.

COMMENDED PARENTS

the PIONEER Rubber Company
156 TIFFIN ROAD • WILLARD, OHIO

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

MAKERS OF BLUETTES, EBONETTES, GARD'NETTES, KAYAKS, ESKIMITTS AND QUALATEX BALLOONS

RITZ

There's a Ritz Cloth for every household cleaning purpose

RITZ® Since 1892

On sale at leading hardware and department stores

CLOTHS

JOHN RITZENTHALER, 73 FRANKLIN ST., N. Y. 13

GRAVY MASTER

BROWNS — TENDERIZES — FLAVORS

BRUSHED ON MEATS before cooking!

"Lousy," Rick said. He shrugged out of his coat and dropped it onto the sofa. "I had a fight with Small."

"Rick, you didn't!"

"Yes, I did. And Josh is quitting and ——"

"What did you fight about?" she asked, momentarily forgetting her resolve to discuss the notes with him.

Rick sighed heavily. "Oh, we fought. He said I'd been intolerant in my classroom."

"What!"

"Honey, please don't have me repeat everything a dozen times. I'm ——"

"If you don't want to talk about it ——"

"I didn't say I didn't want to talk about it."

"I'm sorry, Rick," she said.

They were both silent for a moment. Then Rick sighed again.

"Someone made a complaint to him. You remember that little lecture I gave? My bright idea? Well, someone misconstrued it. Accidentally on purpose."

"Who?"

"He wouldn't tell me."

"What did you say, Rick?"

"I told him he was wrong. I told him . . . what difference does it make? We kissed and made up, but he's still a louse!"

Anne nodded, troubled by what Rick had told her, and then abruptly remembered the notes. "Have you—have you had supper yet?" she asked.

"No. Where would I have supper?"

"I don't know. I just thought—well, it's rather late. I thought ——"

"Oh, Josh and I went for a ride. I thought I might be able to talk him out of quitting, so we went for a ride in his car."

"You and Josh?"

"Yes, me and Josh. Anne, what's wrong with you? I just told you it was Josh and me, and now you ask ——"

"I'm sorry, it's . . . the chops got overdone waiting for you, and now everything is cold ——"

"Oh, I'm not hungry anyway."

She stood there awkwardly, whether he had already eaten, a him again, afraid because she lo ribly and did not want to lose hi

"Should I . . . some eggs, mayb of coffee?"

"Coffee," Rick said.

She went into the kitchen and ting the coffee ready. She called fr "Does Miss Hammond know J ting?"

"I don't know, hon."

She stood at the stove, her back room. "Did—did you tell her, Ri

"Me? Why, no. Why should I

"I—I thought you might have In the halls, here and there."

"No, I didn't tell her," Rick sai suddenly wished she was in the where she could see his face.

"Is she very pretty, Rick?"

"Who?"

"Lois Hammond."

"I suppose so. If you go for th

"What type?"

"Dark. Busty."

"She's dark?"

"Yes."

"And . . . busty?"

"Very."

"Oh."

"I like blondes," Rick said fro room, and again she wished she see his face.

"Do you now?" she asked, try her voice sound light.

"Indeed I do."

He was suddenly behind her, circling her waist. He'd entered th softly that she hadn't heard him. mouth on hers, and clung to him ti ing, The notes are crazy, this is my with Josh, the notes are crazy. A pulled her lips away and pressed his tightly, her arms moving up neck, her fingers spreading, holdi

"Hey!" he said, surprised.

"Do you love me, Rick?" she a close to his neck.

"Why, of course I love you."

"No. I don't mean 'of course mean'"—she shook her head, he against his, not knowing what "I mean, do you love me, Rick?"

"Yes, darling."

"Even though I look like a hor

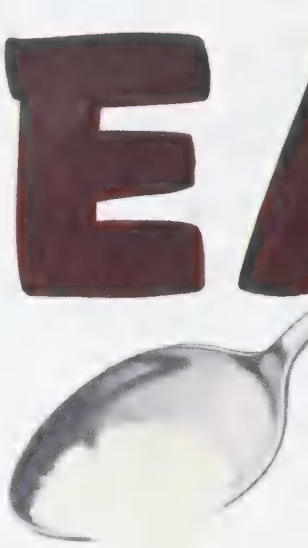
"You do not look like a horse

"I do, Rick, really, darling, deny it. But do you love me any

"Honey, honey," he said, strok closing his eyes, smiling. "Honey more than anything in this world

WILLIAM SMALL, in his own wor memory of an elephant." That m not ignore the fact that Richard D out of college, had in effect told S up. In reality, he had shouted, "Tha but this was the equivalent of "S

So when the yearly chore of p Christmas Assembly rolled aro which any teacher at North Ma would have happily shirked, Sma be condemned for choosing Ric for the job. Did he not have Stanle Dadier had done a lot of college



Of course Small could have r from his third-period hall patrol, one or two of his classes, was he be magnanimous. He was not of that, and so Rick carried a full p was left to his own devious mean ter of the Christmas Assembly. T means meant that he would have Unassigned sixth to the preparati sembly, as well as a good many hours.

Rick was truly happy about the to work at once. He ran off noti teacher and announced that a sea was on. He spoke to all his class assembly, and at night—forsakin plans—he wrote a show. It was for Broadway. It was intended f ment of the students and teache Manual Trades High School. wasn't a bad little thing. It dealt

New easy, thrifty way to "cream" your coffee!

PREAM

A delicious 100% dairy product in powdered form that stays fresh without refrigeration!

Not a substitute! Pream is a true dairy product—made entirely from fresh, sweet cream and other milk products—powdered for your convenience.

Never sours! Never "turns." Because it's in powdered form, you don't have to store Pream in your refrigerator. It keeps indefinitely while sealed! When opened for regular use, Pream stays fresh tasting to the last spoonful.

Saves over ⅓. One container of Pream goes as far as 2 half pints of coffee cream . . . yet costs you so much less!

Instant dissolving! Just put a spoonful of Pream on top of your cup of hot coffee or tea. Stir to blend . . . and enjoy! Get Pream today!

Want a foolproof Cream Sauce Recipe?

SEND FOR FREE PREAM RECIPE FOLDER!

For the new, easy Pream way to make a delicious cream sauce that never lumps — plus 36 other time-saving, taste-teasing ways to use this exciting new dairy product, send for the Pream Recipe Folder.

The new way to "cream" it, is to Pream it!

Mail to:
Sally Ross, Pream Test Kitchen
Box 959-B,
Columbus 16, Ohio

Name_____
Street_____
City_____ Zone____
State_____

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

OVER 50 YEARS OF PROGRESS IN THE DAIRY INDUSTRY

© 1954, M & R Dietetic Laboratories, Inc., Columbus 16, Ohio

Manual Trades, accompanied gels. Rick didn't know where ally entered into the show, but l get some of the senior boys halos, and the costumes alone
l for a laugh.
asses about the show as soon as d writing it. His notices had results. Aside from a handful of e turned out for anything from ition to a discussion of nuclear ere were such kids at Manual d nothing to work with.
k came when George Katz vole Santa Claus role. Rick acces gratefully. The Santa Claus ally, the most difficult one in Rick had planned it with a l.
reak came in 55–206, and that rise. It came from Miller.
ained in class after most of the d left. Rick looked up, saw ed, "What is it?"
hat Miller was the boy who'd Small, and he had not forgotten principal's office.
kin' 'bout your Christmas
adier," Miller said.
t it?"
angels you tole us about in a lot of lines to say? I mean, ot of memorizin' to do?"
much." Rick looked at Miller y do you ask?"
a idea. Mr. Dadier. Whutchoo a of colored angels?"
at Miller warily. "Colored ked slowly.
d to be just as wary as Rick. He evelly. "I figured maybe they'd . well, I figured it'd maybe be aughs, you know? Like four or m white sheets, with halos. You s for laughs, don'tchoo? You onna get seniors, if you could,
ig. I got some friends, Mr.
y not on'y big, they black."
know," Rick said, undecided.
ds of mine," Miller went on.
sing aroun', you know, and ld do a Christmas carol, if you good on Silunt Night, and they t Ye an' all the others." Miller gly embarrassed. "You—you on colored boys in the show, rse," Rick said. "I just don't might be good," Miller said
d and then said, "How do you
. . . colored boys would react in the audience."
you think somebody goan take er smiled confidently. "Naw, ries there. They'll jus' think it's a's all."
now," Rick said, really not ," Miller said, possessed of a you know Green Pastures?"
Rick said, surprised that Miller ith the play.
red angels in that one, Mr.
even a colored God. They did the Y in Harlem, and nobody it. It'll be all right, you'll see."
k said, nodding his head,
ld. Look, Miller, let me check Small today. If he likes the you see, I don't want to offend ikes it, you can tell your friends
sed. "I hope, Miller, that you n coming out for the show too."
I was," Miller said, surprised.
bass in the group."
," Rick said. "I'll let you know row."
d with Mr. Small that afternoon, in favor of the idea. He was es-d that the idea had come from ents.
ay, Rick passed the informa-ller. He asked the boy to wait was annoyed when West waited

"I want to talk to Miller alone," he said to West. "Would you mind waiting outside?"

West shot Rick a disgusted glance and then walked to the doorway.

"I spoke to Mr. Small, Miller," Rick said, keeping his voice low. "He thinks it'll be fine."

"Tha's good," Miller said, smiling. "I'll tell the boys. When do we start?"

"Well, can you get me the boys' programs, so I can arrange some sort of schedule?"

"I'll get the programs," Miller said. He started for the door, turned. "An' thanks, Mr. Dadier."

West, standing in the doorway, said, "What're you doin', Greg?"

The two boys passed out into the corridor, and Rick did not hear Miller's answer.

Was Miller plotting some trick? If Miller had been the one who'd complained to Small, couldn't this be some sort of extension of his complaint? Was it possible he'd try to foul up the show?

Rick made up his mind to watch Miller and the other angels very carefully, and to drop them from the show at the first sign of any sort of trouble.

As it turned out, his fears were entirely ungrounded.

There were six angels in all, counting Miller. They were all big boys, with one member of the sextet standing at six-two. Miller, in fact, was the shortest boy in the group, and Rick arranged them according to height.

The angels were surprisingly co-operative. The speaking roles, as Rick had written them, were not really individual parts. He surmised correctly that the success or failure of the angels would depend upon their actions as a group. Everything they said, therefore, was said in chorus.

Rick introduced Mr. Katz to the boys and told them he'd be playing Santa Claus, and that the angels and St. Nick would have to work very closely together. Rick handed out copies of the angels' parts, and then they all makes a big difference in flavor!

Even a tiny difference in freshness...

CHASE & SANBORN COMES TO YOU FRESHER THAN ANY OTHER LEADING COFFEE!

It's a fact—most coffees are fresh some of the time . . . however they're packed. But there's just one coffee you can always depend on for that important extra freshness that tastes so delightful in your cup. That's Chase & Sanborn!

You see, it's pressure packed. And only pressure packing can pack coffee fresh from the roaster, while flavor's richest. Then all flavor-stealing air is replaced by flavor-sealing vapor. Pressure surrounds each coffee grain to lock flavor in! That's why Chase & Sanborn "Dome Top" Coffee is fresher than coffee in vacuum cans or bags.

You can even prove it's fresh before you buy! The rounded top of the can tells how. You can't test coffee packed any other way! So discover what real freshness does for coffee. Try wonderful, flavorful Chase & Sanborn today!

Pressure Packed for fresher flavor!

CHASE & SANBORN COFFEES ARE SERVED BY MORE FINE HOTELS AND RESTAURANTS THROUGHOUT AMERICA THAN ANY OTHER BRAND!

caught in the rain today may cause a

COLD

tomorrow !

at the first sign of a cold—take 2 Bayer Aspirin tablets with a full glass of water and feel better—

FAST

Imagine! That headachy, feverish feeling . . . those muscular aches and pains—relieved by Bayer Aspirin, with amazing speed.

One reason why is that a Bayer Aspirin tablet starts disintegrating fast—stopwatch fast! Thus, it's ready to go to work almost the instant you take it.

So use Bayer Aspirin. And, for soothing relief of sore throat due to a cold, gargle three times daily with 3 Bayer Aspirin tablets dissolved in one-third of a glass of water.

BAYER ASPIRIN

sat on chairs in the center of the stage and began reading the parts.

They'd read a few paragraphs when Rick noticed that one of the angels was silent. He called a halt and asked, "Is there any trouble there? I'm sorry, I don't remember your name."

"He Brown," Miller said. "He can't read so hot, Mr. Dadier. We'll teach him his part. Don' worry. He can't read so hot, but he got a good memory."

"Well, all right," Rick said reluctantly. "Let's take it from Santa's second speech."

GEORGE KATZ had memorized the role, and he gave it all the stiffness of the Magna Charta. Rick let that pass because he was sure the stiffness would work out once he began walking the show through. Besides, the choral speaking was presenting more of a problem than George Katz's interpretation of St. Nick.

They went over one passage several times, with Rick trying in vain to synchronize them.

"We tacklin' this all wrong," Miller said. "We not givin' what Mr. Dadier wants. You want this together, don' you, chief?"

"Yes, I do," Rick said.

"Yeah. Well, we ain't doin' that." He looked at the script and said, "Look, fellers, you see there where Santa Claus he say, 'How're all my heavenly messengers today?'"

The boys nodded and mumbled, and Miller said, "O.K., so his last word there is 'today.' Now, here's the beat. One-and-two-and. You got that? One-and-two-and. Then we suppose to say, 'Oh, we jus' fine, Santa.' O.K., so we speed up that one-and-two-and, an' then we come in on the down beat. We say, 'Oh' on the down beat, an' then we stop a beat, an' then we say, 'we jus' fine, Santa.' Now, you got that?" The boys talked it up a little more, studying the script.

"You want to give us that speech, Mr. Katz?" Miller asked.

George Katz stiffly said, "How're all my heavenly messengers today?"

Miller said, "One-and-two-and Oh, beat, we jus' fine, Santa." He paused and looked at the boys again. "O.K. I'll give you the beat one more time, then we'll try it in our heads. Could we have that line again, Mr. Katz?"

"How're all my heavenly messengers today?" George Katz asked stiffly.

"One-and-two-and," Miller whispered.

"Oh," the boys said in chorus together—and Miller whispered "beat"—"we jus' fine, Santa."

"That was very good," Rick said, surprised and pleased. "Let's mark that on the scripts. We'll do that for every speech you boys have."

"Could we try it silent, Mr. Dadier?" Miller asked. "Doin' the countin' inside our heads?"

"Why, certainly," Rick said.

George Katz dutifully said, "How're all my heavenly messengers today?"

"Oh," the boys said in chorus, "we jus' fine, Santa."

"Very good," Rick said, excited now. "That was excellent. Now if we can do that for all your speeches ——"

"We can do it," Miller said confidently. "It's jus' like singin', chief, 'cept there's no melody."

They went through the script, marking out the rhythm of the speeches, Rick deciding where the pauses should be. When the bell rang at the end of the fourth period, he reluctantly walked up to Room 206. Miller was in the room already.

"Hey, teach'," Miller shouted watch that stuff."

Rick, still happy over the reh and asked, "What stuff, Miller'

"Draggin' in after the late b settin' a bad 'zample for the pu

The class laughed, and Rick ler, surprised.

"Well, ain'tchoo, chief?" Mi eyes roguishly innocent.

Rick, still a little stunned, sai so, Miller."

"You spose so? Hell, mai know?" Miller asked. "You stupid!" and the class roared its

"He's confused," West sneere

"That's enough of that," Ric suddenly shocked into reactio knock it off."

"Knock it off!" West shouted the man."

"He say 'Knock it off,'" Mille when he say 'Knock it off' ——

"He means knock it off," We clapping Miller on the shoulder

Rick blinked at Miller. Was helpful kid w out t rhythm torium believe let it he co stand days t he lea fact.

He Miller the r game, rules and un just as an arbi fore the English over w not st drew a separat from a demic.

It w ing situ confus Rick r along w ler at re student lationship seemed to vanish They were just two people workir mon goal.

And then rehearsal would b Miller drew his line again, and he up to that line, always baiting Ric always annoying him until Ric onto Miller's side of the line an faced with the choice of retreatin over onto Rick's side of the line. would never do.

Rick tried to understand it, conclusion he could draw was t provided a normal outlet for Mi ship qualities—and there was possessed these qualities—where room provided no such outlet.

RICK learned to accept the goo the bad Miller, and he felt som psychoanalyst treating a schizoph while he wondered which was sonality, hoping it was the good bad.

The good certainly prevailed hearsals, and the show traveled speed. By December tenth, the Santa Claus were a working unit

The angels, apparently putting hearsal time on their own, de punch lines as one man. They and Rick burst out laughing eve performed, even though he'd hea hundred times. The boys develop dead-pan delivery. It couldn't hav

CONTINUED ON PAGE

WHAT IS NEPHWEEK?

NEPHWEEK means "National Employ the Physically Handicapped Week."

The purpose of NEPHWEEK is to create interest in the employment of physically handicapped workers. The resolution creating NEPHWEEK was passed unanimously by the House and Senate and signed by the President on August 11, 1945. As a result of programs initiated by NEPHWEEK, more than three million handicapped persons have been placed in suitable jobs. The American Federation of the Physically Handicapped, 1370 National Press Building, Washington 4, D. C., is eager to co-operate with all programs, agencies and individuals to the end that every disabled man and woman who wants to work can do so.

October 3 through 9 is

NEPHWEEK

...v you can clear away beauty-robbing "make-up clog"

...with your special Tussy Cleansing Cream

This is a fact and a promise. Your skin will lo smoother, finer, lovelier . . . if you cleanse with th Tussy cream made for your skin type. It cleanses be er than ANY soap.

It clears out clogged make-up and dirt that m y creams can't even reach!

And please don't rub, and risk stretching r skin. This cream is so effective, it needs only ge le smoothing to do its good work.

Follow the arrows for beauty cleansing. St ke your special Tissy Cleansing Cream on face n neck... moving up, up, up with your finger tips. U short, round-and-round motions on your fore- he d, nose and chin. These are the places where p s are most apt to become clogged.

It actually cleanses deep-down! Tussy's de p-reach cleansing cream actually gets down u er "Make-up Clog" and dirt... and clears them o What's more, it softens and satinizes your skin w le it cleanses.

The result? Your skin has new beauty, new g or—fast.

Remember, there's a Tussy Cleansing Cream f every skin type... dry, normal and oily. Each is i a special beauty prescription for your skin. I h helps give your skin what it needs, to make l ok its loveliest!

Tussy Pink Cleansing Cream for oily or normal skin. It dissolves and removes excess oil; lessens chance of blemishes and blackheads. Silkens skin as it cleanses. Only $1.25.

Tussy Emulsified Cleansing Cream for dry skin. It's extra rich in lanolin and other skin-softeners. Provides dry skin with beauty oils it thirsts for. Use it faithfully for lovelier skin. Only $1.25.

prices plus tax

NOW! 3 wonderful features in

FRANCISCAN WARE

chip-resistant...oven-safe...color-fast

Many a smart woman cherishes a sentimental little vice—she hoards chipped, faded dishes. Don't clutter your table with has-beens—give them to your favorite charity—then buy this exciting new Franciscan Ware. It's smart on your table—safe in your oven—color-fast in your dishwasher because it is decorated by a patented process no other dinnerware has—Color-Seal.

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO., LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 148

And the boys could sing! With remarkable versatility, they dropped their comic approach when attacking the carols. They did God Rest Ye Merry Gentlemen; Deck the Halls; The First Noel and Silent Night. Rick saved Silent Night as the last number in the show, using the six-foot-two boy—who had the best voice—as a soloist and hoping the audience would join in on a repeat of the chorus. As it turned out, the audience did join in on the day of the Christmas Assembly, but Rick didn't know that until long after the show was over.

Miller was the picture of helpfulness. The boy did anything that was asked of him, and frequently many things Rick wouldn't have thought to ask. Like the night Rick stayed to repaint one of the flats which showed to bad advantage under the amber gels. He'd brought his Navy dungarees, changed backstage, and sprawled out on the floor with his paint buckets and brushes.

Miller drifted in, watching him for a while. Then he asked, "You got an extra brush, Mr. Dadier?"

"Why, yes."

"I thought maybe you could use a hand. Otherwise, you be here all night."

"Help yourself," Rick said, smiling. "That brush is a little hard, but I think it'll work."

Miller picked up the brush and tested the bristles. "Be all right," he said, and then he sprawled out beside Rick and got to work.

They talked about the show at first. Then, perhaps because they were both in dungarees, the formality dropped, and they began talking about other things: movies they had seen, teachers and students around the school, even—surprisingly—the books Miller had read outside of school, many of them excellent books.

With me, a change of trouble is as good as a vacation.
—DAVID LLOYD GEORGE

It was at this point that Rick asked, "How'd you happen to come to a vocational school, Miller?"

"Oh, I dunno." Miller worked the paint into the material in long strokes and then looked up. "Jus' like that, I spose."

"Had you considered an academic high school?"

"Yeah, I gave it some thought."

"I mean ——" Rick hesitated. "What are you majoring in, Miller?"

"Automotive," Miller said.

"You want to be a mechanic?"

"I spose," Miller said. He seemed suddenly embarrassed. "Way I look at it, there ain't much choice."

"How do you mean, Miller?"

Miller looked up, and there was no malice in his voice. "I colored, Mr. Dadier."

"I don't understand you," Rick said.

MILLER smiled. "You figure me for a lawyer or a doctor or somethin'? Can't fool myself like that, Mr. Dadier."

"Would you like to be a doctor?"

"No, no, nothin' like that. I jus' don't . . . well, you know. I mean, I rather be a mechanic than a elevator op'rator, or a bootblack, or a porter. I figure a mechanic always got somethin' to do, like a skill, and maybe it won't matter he black or white."

"But you'd like to be something . . . more than a mechanic?"

"I spose." Miller grinned embarrassedly. "I figured one time I could maybe be a singer, but I ain't good 'nough for that. Lots of colored folks drift into singin', you know. Nat Cole, Pearl Bailey, you know."

"Yes," Rick said. "What would you like to be?"

"I dunno." Miller looked up and suddenly asked, "You think this is a good school, Mr. Dadier?"

"Sure I do," Rick lied.

"Yeah?" Miller said, his brow wrinkled. "You really think that?"

"Yes, I do," Rick lied again.

"You see, I wunt mind bein' a mechanic, I mean, if I felt like—like I was learnin' somethin'. You don't hafta be a mechanic all your life, you know. You could branch out, maybe have your own place, a little shop. You could use bein' a mechanic like a start, you know."

"Yes, I know," Rick said.

"I guess maybe I really did wa mechanic when I first come here. H English an' language an' all those to me. Tha's why I di'n' take the tec guess I'm good with my hands."

"But what you said about being

"Well, that too. You got to be sen it, and I know a black man got a r It's easier to be a mechanic, you kn

"You can't always take the e Miller," Rick said.

Miller lifted his eyes. "You ain't Dadier."

"I know. And I understand what against. But black men have ——"

"OH, sure, I know. But you go your choice, an' I ain't no crusader I'm jus' a guy figurin' on how he c livin' the best way. You see, if I g mechanic, I got to be a good mecha plenty white mechanics, an' a white get preference over a black man black man's real good. An' I jus' ain to be a good mechanic here, tha's

"Aren't your teachers good?"

"Oh, they O.K., I guess."

"Well, what is it, then?"

"I dunno," Miller said. "In the b tried real hard, but what's the sense no real school. This jus'—jus'—I d jus' like a—like a big dump heap,

A garbage can, Rick thought. W have we got? Miller believes that to

"That's not true," he said. "You say that, Miller."

"Aw, it's true," Miller said. "Yo a short while. Y out, you'll see."

"But there are do learn here."

"Yeah, maybe, seen none. Nob know what's goin Ever'body thinks jus' fine, but it never be a mecha place, Mr. Dadier. Ever'body jus' fo here."

"Including you, Miller," Rick sa

Miller stared at him for a moment thought he would lose contact wit right then, thought the conversati come to a complete halt.

"I spose," Miller said.

"Why, Miller?"

"What else you goan do?" He Rick with honest puzzlement on hi

"That's the easy way, Miller. Yo ways take the soft way out. Sometin got to do whatever's best, even if things harder. Can't you underst Miller?"

"No," Miller said, shaking his he can't see anybody takin' the hard the easy way's open. You got to pro me, man."

"I wish I could, Miller. I wish t some way to show you."

"There ain't, man, I'm tellin' you. the easy way, an' you get along, an aroun' jus' like ever'body else, and t

"And you forget about being a n Rick said.

"I guess so," Miller said sadly.

"And what will you be?"

"Somethin'll turn up," Miller said always turn up."

"And meantime, you'll just drift tide."

"I spose," Miller said.

Rick wanted to mention the Eng wanted to say something about M havior there as contrasted with his connected with the show. He sensed that anything about the class would trusion here, so he held his tongue, turned back to painting.

They left the school at about 9 lighting cigarettes when they were o building. They walked together to T nue, Rick in his street clothes now, in the dungarees, his leather jacket high on his neck.

"I get a train here, chief," he said

"G'night, Miller," Rick answered you tomorrow. And thanks for the ntion it, chief," Miller said, and ay, in English 55-206, there was the behavior of Gregory Miller.

er took the easy road that raised ned and didn't give a damn about Rick was not disappointed be-not surprised.

ck broke through was December two days before the Christmas happened in a class for which he no lesson at all. He had meant to on plans over the weekend, it be-ek which would be terminated by ement of the Christmas vacation ot home late Friday night after earsal. He'd spent all day Satur-husband, devoting more time to had in the past month. On Sun-parents dropped by, staying for Rick never did get to attack his bus Monday morning he hastily ext, picking out a yarn he thought e Fifty-First Dragoon. This is a thought. He had never read the but war stories were sure-fire ls. He'd read it to them, and then conversation around to his own ces, and that would, he hoped,

d.

21-206 with the announcement oing to read a story to them, and pted the knowledge gratefully.
d the text, cleared his throat, and at the story was written by Hey-He also learned that it was not a led the Fifty-First Dragoon. ead, a story titled The Fifty-First Rick felt a twinge of panic as ading aloud. The story told of ght named Gawaine le Coeur-was enrolled at a knight school not exhibit the proper spirit or knightly pursuits as jousting. In e's lack of enthusiasm may very n termed cowardice.
nt professor wanted to expel the headmaster had a better plan. He the boy to kill dragons.
n teaching the boy just that.
died and learned, and progressed ragons to papier-mâché dragons ragons. Each time he lopped off y dragons' heads with one expert x.
ve Gawaine a diploma and the called him in for a little talk.
o get out there and meet life," the said, in effect, "and life, as far as rned, is dragons."
ect of getting out there and meet-not appeal to Gawaine. So the promised something that would laying of dragons. He gave Gaic word, and the magic word was
.

ne had to do was repeat the magic nd no dragon could possibly hurt awaine went out to meet his first next day. The dragon charged at ng smoke and fire and Gawaine he word Rumplesnitz out before s ax and lopped off the dragon's

, he went out every day, and he ned without the ears of another
.

awaine—who had taken to drinks in the local tavern—went out t of revelry to meet his fiftieth dragon shook in his boots be-ine's fame had spread afar. Ga-d up to the beast, raised his battle-n lowered it again. The dragon, awaine was protected by an en-asked what the trouble was. And s forced to admit he'd forgotten ord.
, this was a fine kettle of dragons.
n charged forward, and Gawaine the magic word Rumplesnitz, but o time to say it. There was time
g his ax, and off came the dragon's

Now this was very confusing. Gawaine had not said the magic word Rumplesnitz, and yet the dragon hadn't harmed him. He went back to the knights' school and explained what had happened to the headmaster.

The headmaster admitted the truth. Rumplesnitz was not a magic word, it was Gawaine all along who was killing the dragons. The word just gave him confidence, that's all, and wasn't Gawaine glad that he finally knew the truth?

Gawaine wasn't glad at all. Why, all those dragons he had killed could have devoured him if he hadn't been just a little faster than they!

Gawaine did not rise at dawn the next day. At noon he was still in bed, trembling under the bedcovers. The headmaster and the assistant professor dragged him out of bed and forced him into the forest, where the boy met his fifty-first dragon, having killed fifty to date.

The dragon was a small one.

Gawaine never came back to the school. They found nothing left of him except the metal part of the medals which he always wore into battle. The dragon had even eaten the ribbons.

Gawaine's secret was never revealed, and he went down in the school's history as a hero. There still hangs a shield on the dining-room wall, and fifty pairs of dragons' ears are on that shield. The legend "Gawaine le Coeur-Hardy," and the inscription "He killed fifty dragons" is gilt-lettered onto the shield. The record has never been equaled.

That was the story, and Rick read it well. He was delighted with the story because it was a new experience to him as well as to the boys. But he was sorry in a way that it was not a war story, because it was decidedly allegory, and allegory was probably far above the heads of these kids.

He faced the unusually silent class and wondered just what he should do next.

"Well," he said, "that was a pretty good story, wasn't it?"

If your quest be beauty... EATON'S
FINE LETTER PAPERS

In trend-setting fashions...in Open Stock classics. At fine stores everywhere.

EATON PAPER CORPORATION PITTSFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS

DON'T LAUNDER YOUR HAIR..

Shampoo it!

...restore its natural oil balance with

CONTI CASTILE SHAMPOO

Harsh detergents "launder" away the precious natural oil balance of your hair. Let the pure imported olive oil in Conti Castile Shampoo restore natural softness, life and luster. See how beautifully your hair takes and holds its wave, how easy it is to manage, with no harm to hair coloring. Conti Castile lathers instantly...rinses quickly...in all types of water. It is the outstanding choice of leading hair stylists.

CONTI

CASTILE SHAMPOO

made with olive oil

J. B. WILLIAMS COMPANY, GLASTONBURY, CONNECTICUT

"Yeah," the kids said, and he could tell they meant it.

"All about a knight who kills dragons, right?" he asked.

Finley, a kid near the back of the room, said, "He didn't really kill those dragons."

"What do you mean, Finley?"

"He was cheatin'," Finley said. "He had a magic word."

"What was the magic word?" Rick asked, and the class chorused, "Rumplesnitz!"

"It wasn't no magic word," Bello shouted. "He was just killin' the dragons his own self."

"Now, I don't understand that," Rick said, pleased with the response. "If it wasn't a magic word, why'd the headmaster give it to him?"

THE class was silent for a few minutes, and then Shocken said, "'Cause Gawaine was scared. He was a coward."

"But he did kill fifty dragons, and you just told me Rumplesnitz wasn't a magic word."

"Sure, he killed them," Finley said. "But he was cheatin'."

"Was he cheating? Remember now, there was no magic word."

"So what?" Finley sneered. "He thought there was a magic word."

"Yes," Rick said, beginning to get a little excited now, surprised that they had garnered so much from the story. "That's just it. Gawaine thought it was a magic word. And did that help him kill the dragons?"

"Sure," White said. "He scared of the dragons. If he don't have the magic word, he run away. He thinks it's magic, so he feels strong. He thinks he can kill any old dragon and the dragon can't touch him. That's why he needs it. Otherwise, he's a coward."

"How do you know that?" Rick asked the class.

"Well, once he finds out the word ain't magic," Daley said, "he gets et up."

"And is that why the headmaster gave him this magic word?" Rick asked, praying the response would continue. The kids were alive today, and he responded to them the way they were responding to him.

"That principal, he's a smart cat," Davidson said. "He knows Gawaine need something."

"What does Gawaine need?" Rick asked. "What's the word for it?"

"Con——" Daley started.

"Yes?"

"Confidence," Daley said triumphantly.

"Ah-ha, that's it," Rick said. "Confidence." He paused and made a sour face. "But that doesn't seem real," he said. "I mean, do you really think a word could give someone the confidence he needed?"

"Yeah, sure," Speranza said belligerently.

"How?"

"Well . . . like sometimes I'm scared before we take a test or something, an' I say three Hail Mary's, and I feel O.K. after that."

"It gives you confidence, is that right?"

"Yeah, sure," Speranza said.

"But still . . . a word like Rumplesnitz. I mean, after all, Hail Mary is a prayer. Rumplesnitz isn't a prayer."

"I don't think," Padres said slowly, "thees word means that. I mean, I don't think Rumplesnitz ees suppose to be nothing. You know what I mean?"

"Not exactly," Rick said. He was tense and tight, and he knew now that the kids were really discussing this thing the way it should be discussed. He heard Padres say:

"Thees Rumplesnitz, thees ees a fake, you know? The Hail Mary, that's real. Rumplesnitz, it don't mean nothing. Thees Gawaine, he fooling heemself."

The kids were squirming because they all had something to say. They didn't call out because they wanted this lesson to proceed in an orderly fashion. They were enjo they felt something of the sar was feeling, and they wanted t ideas.

"But I thought this story w knight who kills dragons," R watch told him there were three the period, and he wanted to wanted them to realize that the thing while it meant another. asked.

"Yeah, it was," Finley said.

"And only that? Just a kn dragons?"

"Well, you could twist it a said. "Then it becomes everyb just Gawaine."

"You mean the story has a m asked.

"Sure. It tells about fake wo you don't need them. If you' quick, you can kill dragons—r like that, you know?"

"Yes," Rick said, "exactly. A a better one because it tells a sec cause it gives a message, and b only about a cowardly knight?"

"It's a good story," Bello sai

"And will you remember th story that tells two stories at the story that sage?"

"What ranza aske

"An al said, and word on Someone said, "Tha good stor the bell so

He sat thinking, through, through, the kids n desk while second-pe in. He wa to try a re same story period cla go, thinkin I've broke broken thr I've reache

And wh to his hall end of the second period, he wa kids in his seventh-term classes. H at least a dozen times on his way first floor, and each kid made quest: teach us about the fifty-fi

He would teach them now, he teach them because he'd broken that was half the battle. He woul the same story, and then he wo his seventh-termers, and everyth all right.

But he didn't give it to 55-206, give it to his seventh-termers, messenger found him and told mother-in-law had called, and th been taken to the hospital in lab

THE green canopy of the hos out for the sidewalk. White lette LENOX HILL HOSPITAL, added trance sotto voce.

He noticed these things, and Anne, and he cursed because it pened while he was at home. Th the large entrance. The girl beh was on the phone, and he waited She put down the phone at last, a "Mrs. Dadier."

"Maternity, sir?" the girl aske

"Yes, my mother-in-law just c

"One moment, sir." She cor papers on her desk. Then she sa the delivery room now, sir."

"How long —— I mean . . Bradley here?"

"Yes, sir."

"Will you let me know —— H I find out?"

"The doctor will come down livery, sir."

THREE WHITE DOVES

By JOSÉ GARCIA VILLA

I whisper at the temple of your love,
O my sweet, soft one.
I send three white doves
Out of the sky of my soul
To carry my fire to you.
Three white doves—
Love, Song, and Rest.

In the coolness of your breasts
My three white doves
Will find a nest.

He took her hand, and she clung to it tightly. He kissed her damp forehead and there were suddenly tears in his eyes and he leaned over the table and held her close, and she pressed her cheek to his and he could feel the tears on her skin also.

"It was terrible, darling," she said, half sobbing and half laughing. "Oh, Rickie, it was really very hard."

"Do you feel all right?" he asked.

"I feel tired," she told him. "Oh, Rickie, I'm so glad it's over, so glad." She laughed sleepily, and then she bit her lip, and the tears came again.

"And you feel all right?"

"Just tired, darling. Darling. I want to sleep for a year."

"All right, honey, you go to sleep."

"No," she said, "no, don't go. Please don't go yet, Rickie. Wait until they chase you."

"All right," he said.

"Did you see the baby?" she asked suddenly.

"Honey, I think you ought to get some sleep. I think ——"

"It's a boy, isn't it?"

"Yes."

"I'm glad. I knew you wanted a boy." She smiled and closed her eyes, and he thought she was asleep for a moment. He made a slight movement away from her, but she opened her eyes and held him tight. "Does he look like you, darling?"

"I—I don't know," Rick said.

"I'll bet he does. Oh, he was so much trouble, Rick. The little stinker." She laughed and then said, "Are you happy, Rick?"

He was ashamed of the tears that ran down his face, and he buried his face in her shoulder. "Yes," he said, "I'm very happy." He held her closer to him and said fiercely, "Anne, I love you so much, so terribly much."

"I know, darling," she said soothingly.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 155

7 reasons

why you'll look lovelier the instant Creme Puff kisses your skin

1. It's new.. a complete make-up! Creamiest base and sheerest powder!

2. Puffs on in seconds! Stays lovely for hours!

3. Reflects light...brightens away lines and shadows!

4. Contains lanolin! Good for your skin!

5. Never streaks, cakes, turns orangey! It's Max Factor's secret blend.

6. Feels fresh, light, so smooth.

7. Seven luscious complexion-true shades!

Hat by Mr. John • Diamonds by Staal

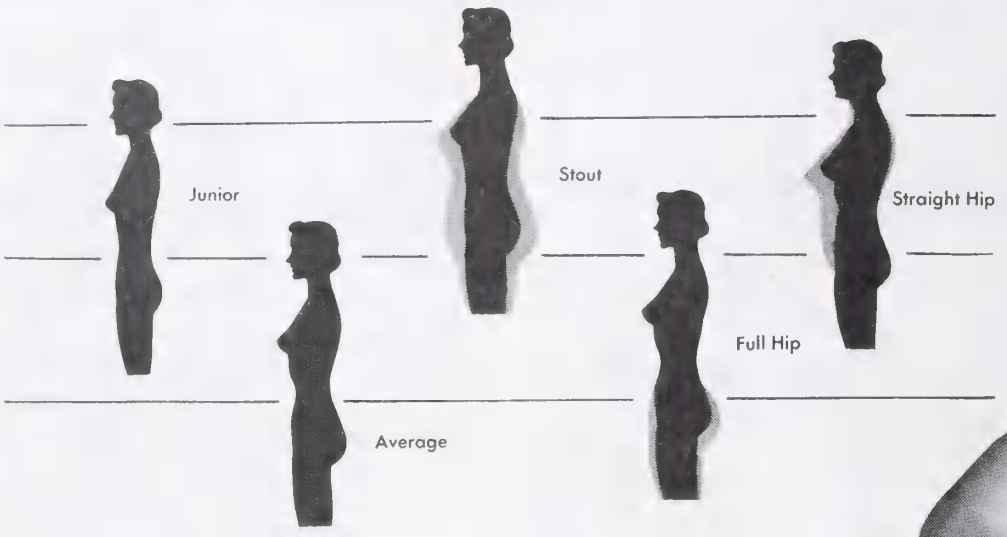
the new complete make-up

Creme Puff*

made only by MAX FACTOR Hollywood

$1.25 plus reduced tax

Star-studded mirror compact



Golden-tone (refillable) compact, $3.75 plus reduced tax

the make-up that keeps its promise

*Creme Puff (trademark) means Max Factor Hollywood creamy powder make-up

From Formfit ... a beauty question of top priority

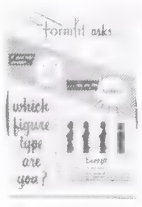
Which figure type are you



47 out of every 100 women are dissatisfied with the way their bras and girdles fit, according to a recent, impartial study. To assure you perfect fit, Formfit makes a wide range of styles and designs for every figure type.

You cannot look or feel your best in a bra or girdle that does not fit correctly. And, because no two women have exactly the same figure, no one type of bra or girdle can fit all women perfectly. That's the reason 47 out of every 100 are not satisfied with the fit of these garments.

No matter what your figure type, there's a Life Girdle and Bra to fit you as if custom-made . . . to slim, smooth and support you to your own individual requirements. For Formfit brings you the widest selection of girdles and bras in the world!

So, if you are one of the 47 out of every 100 who are not satisfied with the fit of their girdles or bras, decide now to change to Life by Formfit. Discover how easily the lovelier figure you've dreamed of is yours . . . and with wonderful comfort, too. Because Formfit's personalized fit means an entirely new revelation in underfashion comfort! There's a Life Girdle and Bra for you at any of the better stores. Try them—and see the difference!

Life Girdle #1590 . . . beautifully slimming design in nylon taffeta and French-type leno elastic. 26 to 34, $16.50. Others from $7.50. Life Hidden Strip Bra #515 . . . new-design stitched underbust with uplifting sewn-in strips. 32A to 42D, $4.00. Others from $1.25.

FREE! "Your Figure Type—What To Do About It." This new Formfit booklet shows how you can determine your figure type, and how to make the most of it. No cost or obligation. Mailed in plain envelope. Write to The Formfit Company, Dept. F-54, 400 S. Peoria Street, Chicago.

Life BY Formfit

THE FORMFIT COMPANY, CHICAGO, NEW YORK

NUED FROM PAGE 153

the back of his head idly, and t for a few moments, and then click of the nurse's heels. Her e want her to rest now," gently, urse knew what had happened

omorrow," Rick said.
darling," Anne said. "Is my n all right, just sleepy. Tell her k."

e tomorrow? You will, won't leaned over and kissed Anne en the nurse wheeled the table idor.

e the next day.
her in a private room even originally arranged for a semi-hey felt it would be better for hout seeing another mother and When he came he brought a uet of roses.
the bed. She was still pale, but been combed and it framed her gold. She looked very pretty he looked tired.
about the hospital and about didn't like, and then she asked, e the baby, that's what I'd like r all, creation is something——"
"
't do every other day. The least lo is ——"
"
d talking and m curiously.
ick?"
is dead," he oping to les-at way. "The l him. It was lt, Anne. It sometimes."
iet for a very long time. She did him. She stared at her hands the white sheet and finally she d.
" she said. "Please forgive me,

in his arms because she'd begun
t the sobs racking her body.
" she kept repeating. "Oh, Rick, forgive me."
oney," he said desperately, want-p crying, wanting to comfort her wing how, "we can try again.
" he said, unconsciously repeat-Bradley's words. "The baby was normal. It was just an accident."
eel so ashamed. The things I t you, and now this. I can't even by right, Rick. I'm so sorry and Rick."
now, Anne. Come on, honey, it's eve me, it's all right, Anne."
ve me, Rick? Do you love me?"
v I do, Anne."
ck."
, darling."
r what I thought? About those and Lois Hammond? Rick, I'm could die. Rick, please ——" es, darling?" he asked gently.
im about the notes then, and he a tremendous hatred attacked ment, a hatred for the unknown but the hatred disappeared beld not afford the luxury of hate cause the honest emotion inside ething that hatred would never vas all over, when she'd purged doubt and the suspicion and the , "Hold me, Rick. Hold me close, d he tightened his arms around silent then. He thought about the oy, and he didn't know what he except this emptiness within him.

agine how Anne felt, because she one who'd had the baby growing eding on her blood, a part of her, and now to lose it. Because he wanted to take her mind off it, he began talking, and he told her about The Fifty-First Dragon, but he did not tell it well because it didn't seem to matter so much now.

She listened, and she was pleased, but he could see that she was still thinking about the baby. So he kept talking until it was time to go, and then he kissed her and left her. He wandered down to the elevator trying not to hear the proud fathers everywhere around him.

He walked out into the street, knowing he should go home, not wanting to go home, not knowing what to do with himself. He wondered if he should go back to school the next day, realizing the next day was Wednesday the twenty-third, the day of the Christmas Assembly. He finally went home, and when he spoke to Doctor Bradley on the phone that night, the doctor advised taking Anne out of the hospital the next day because there would be a lot of visitors.

So Rick stayed out of school all day Tuesday, and he stayed out of school Wednesday, too, missing the Christmas Assembly.

He took Anne home on Wednesday the twenty-third, and he didn't think about anything but her on that day.

He didn't go back to Manual Trades until January fourth, when the Christmas vacation was over, and by the time that Monday rolled around, everyone in the school had completely forgotten The Fifty-First Dragon.

It was almost like greeting his classes again for the first time. It was almost exactly like starting from scratch.

The size of a man can be measured by the size of the thing that makes him angry. —J. K. MORLEY

The door to Room 206 was locked when Richard Dadier reached it for his fifth-period English class on January fifteenth. He tried the knob several times, peered in through one of the glass panels, and motioned for Santini to open the door. Santini, sitting in the seat closest to the door, shrugged his shoulders innocently and grinned his moronic smile. Rick felt a sudden flow of anger.

Easy, he told himself. Easy does it. He reached into his pocket for the key, and slipped it into the keyhole. Swinging the door open, he walked briskly to his desk. A falsetto voice somewhere at the back of the room rapidly squeaked, "Daddy-oh!"

Rick busied himself with his Delaney book, glancing around the room, flipping cards over as he took the attendance. He turned over the last card and waited for them to quiet down. They never would, he knew, never.

REACHING down, he pulled a heavy book from his brief case. Without warning, he slammed it onto the desk.

"Shut up!" he bellowed, thinking, I'm beginning to sound just like Halloran.

The class groaned into silence, startled by the outburst.

"Assignment for tomorrow," he said flatly. "In the blue book read the first ten pages of Army Ants in the Jungle."

"Here in the class?" West asked.

"No. At home."

"Whut page?" Miller called out.

"Two seventy-five."

"What page?" Levy asked.

"Two seventy-five," Rick said. "What's the matter with you?" He turned rapidly and wrote the figures on the board. He heard a chuckle spread maliciously behind him, and whirled quickly. Every boy in 55-206 wore a dead pan.

"There will be a short test on the homework tomorrow," he announced grimly.

"Another one?" Miller asked lazily.

"Yes," Rick said, "another one." He glared at the boy. "And now," he said, "the test I promised you yesterday."

A hush fell over the class.

Rick began chalking the test on the board. He turned and barked over his shoulder, "All books away. Antoro, hand out the paper."

This is the way to do it, he realized. I've figured it out. The way to control these louses is to give them a test every day of the week. Write their fingers off.

"Begin immediately," Rick said in a businesslike voice. "Don't forget your heading."

"What's that, that heading?" Belazi asked.

"Name, official class, subject class, subject teacher," Rick said wearily.

"Who's our subject teacher?" Belazi asked.

"Mr. Daddy-oh," West said quite plainly. He sat next to Miller, his stringy hair hanging over his pimply forehead. An insolent smile perched on his mouth, and Rick looked at the smile and at the hard luster of West's eyes, and then he turned his attention to Belazi.

"Mr. Dadier is the subject teacher," he said. "And incidentally, anyone misspelling my name will lose ten points."

"What!" West complained, outraged.

"You heard me," Rick snapped.

"Well, how do you spell Daddy-oh?" West asked, the smile curling onto his mouth again.

"You figure it out, West. I don't need the ten points."

"Don't worry, teach', I can spell your name all right," West said.

Rick bitterly pressed the chalk into the board. With the chalk squeaking wildly, he wrote out the rest of the test.

"No talking," he ordered. He sat down behind the desk and eyed the class suspiciously.

A puzzled frown crossed Miller's face. "I don't understand the first question, teach'."

Rick leaned back in his chair and looked at the board. "It's very simple. There are ten words on the board. Some are spelled correctly, and some are wrong. If they're wrong, you correct them. If they're right, spell them just the way they're written."

"M'm-m," Miller said thoughtfully. "How do you spell the second word?"

Rick leaned back again. "Just the way you want to," he told him. "You're taking this test, not me."

Miller grinned widely. "Oh. I didn't know that, chief."

"You'll know when you see your mark, Miller."

He remembered the day h after the Christmas vacation. Miller stopping him in the hall him he'd heard about the ba'by He'd stared at the boy and t both halves of his character could be an angel in a Chris could express concern over the son, and the half that raised h room. He had given it up as a thanked Miller for his sympath the boy. He knew what to exp now. Even after the show, and the long talk he'd had with th road. That was what he wou easy road was the hell-raising of-the-boys road. And I'm t road, Rick thought bitterly.

He sighed and made himself the desk, and then he looked ou

When did I give up, he wond start taking the easy road? Or Yes, I've given up. No, I haven

But I have, I have. And w baby was born, when my son w fore that? No, before that was Dragon, and oh what a lesson give me a lesson like that once teach for the rest of my life. O one kid got something out of i point to one and say, "I showe if I could only do that, but whon

I've shown no one. And after to Miller, all my big talk about easy roads, it's Miller who's now we're both on the easy roa and a fake teacher.

"Keep your eyes on you Belazi," he cautioned.

Everyone is a cheat, a poten was right. We have to keep them They should really hire a polic be funny, he thought, if it wer How long can you handle garb ginning to stink yourself?

"All right, Belazi," Rick "Bring your paper up. I'm s points from it."

"Why? What did I do?" Be

"Bring me your paper."

BELAZI reluctantly slouched the room and tossed his paper was a big boy with a sinewy, bi and he stood with his thumbs tops of his dungarees as Rick –5 on the paper in bright red.

"What's that for?" Belazi as "For having loose eyes."

Belazi snatched the paper fro slowly started back to his seat.

As he passed West, West lool of the room. His eyes met sneered, "Chicken!"

"What?" Rick asked.

"I didn't say nothing, teach' innocently.

"Bring me your paper, West

"What for?"

"I heard what you said, We bring me your paper," Rick tol Right this minute."

"Aw, bring him the paper, smiling good-naturedly.

"What the hell for?" West "What the hell did I do?"

"Go on, Artie," Miller said him the paper."

"I don't see why I should," the smile gone from his face n

"Because I say so, that's wh tightly.

West's answer came slowly, p supposing I don't feel like?"

"Look, Artie," Miller said.

"Keep out of this, Greg," "Just keep the hell out of it, un

Miller's eyes opened wide i the smile clung to his mouth. T in the room were suddenly int

Rick walked crisply up the a beside West. "Get up," Rick s

"I don't see, Mr. Daddy-o should," West answered. He p name with great care.

"Hey, Artie," Miller said, "wh

"Get up, West," Rick interru and say my name correctly."

tastier coffee!

—the modern coffee made especially to give you consistently better flavor than ground coffee!

New Nescafé is actually an improvement over ground coffee . . . tastier, cup after cup! Like home-made coffee, it's percolated. But Nescafé's scientific controls bring out the consistently fine flavor no home-brewed coffee can match. Then an exclusive jet process transforms this perfect coffee into gems of Nescafé. Just add water, you have delicious coffee! Nescafé costs far less than ground coffee, too. Start today to enjoy this modern coffee . . . tastier new Nescafé!

All Coffee— nothing but Coffee!

new Nescafé®

© 1954 The Nestlé Company, Inc.

…u know your own name, Mr.

…d snapped out and grasped West …of his shirt. He pulled him to his …tearing the collar. West stood an …than Rick, squirming to release

…d crushed tighter on the collar. …e slight rasp of material ripping. …nto the hateful eyes and spoke

…ce my name correctly, West,"

…had grown terribly quiet. Along- …is eyes wide, the smile gone from …, Miller sat and watched.

…t me to pronounce your name, …sked politely.

…d me."

…, Mr. Daddy . . ."

…nd lashed out, slapping West …cross the …felt his fin- …gainst hard …blood leap …pper lip in …son smear, …widen with …then nar- …iately with …natred.

…the knife …view. Long …, it caught …nlight that …ough the …windows. …away in- …eying the …with re-

…you intend …hat, West?" …s exception- …e mused. I …htened, but …calm. Ex-

…ne a little …ou'll see," …l.

…that knife, …said.

…nd get it,

…k a step …West and …arm swing …orth in a …arc. West's …rd.

…Rick caught …or out of the …eye. Some- …hind him! …stinctively …hing into a …h. The boy …his head, and Rick struck again. …it was Belazi, the kid who'd been …ing. Belazi dropped to the floor …on the hard wood. Rick looked at …an instant. He turned quickly to

…that knife, and give it to me now,"

…into the boy's eyes. West looked …gerous. Perspiration clung to his …head. His breath was coming in …s.

…seemed to catch its breath to- …one moved to help Belazi, who lay …the floor. West backed away and …forward, passing Miller's seat.

…over, West. Hand it over."

…ped retreating, realizing that he …who held the weapon. He stuck …ction knife out in front of him, …air with it. His back curved into a …e crouched over, head low. Rick …und and waited. West advanced …his eyes fastened on Rick's throat, …and moving constantly, murder-

…, you stupid bastard," he said. …get the knife. Come on, you dumb …nd get it."

Rick wet his lips and watched the knife, and West paused suddenly and searched Rick's face. He began speaking softly.

"See the knife, Mr. Daddy-oh? See the pretty knife? I'm gonna slash you up real good, Mr. Daddy-oh," West told Rick, "and then I'm gonna slash you some more. I shoulda done this right from the start. I shoulda realized that you was too stinkin' dumb to take a hint, Daddy-oh."

The chair, Rick suddenly remembered. There's a chair. I'll take the chair and swing. Under the chin. No. Across the chest. Fast though. It'll have to be fast, one movement. Wait. Not yet, wait.

"Ever get cut, Mr. Daddy-oh? Ever get sliced with a sharp knife? This one is sharp, Mr. Daddy-oh, or are you too stinkin' dumb to know that?" Hypnotically, advancing, closer and closer, his voice a whisper, his eyes gleaming hotly.

West, Rick realized. West. Not Miller. West was the one. West told Small. West complained. Oh, God, it was West.

"I shouldn'ta played games, Daddy-oh," West said. "Your kind only understands a knife in the ribs. Well, you gonna get it now. And then you're never gonna bother us no more." He smiled and advanced, and Rick backed away down the aisle. "Your wife get them notes, you bastard? Richard Dadier, 1935 East 174th Street. I shoulda come there in person. I shouldn'ta played games with notes and complaints. I shoulda come to your house and give you the knife right then."

Anne, Rick thought. Oh, West, so it was you. So you were the rotten bastard who did it. You, West. He backed away down the aisle, and his thoughts were jumbled. The empty seat in the third row. I'll lead him there. I hope it's empty. Empty when I checked the roll. I can't look, I'll tip my hand. Keep a poker face. Come on, West, follow me so I can crack your ugly skull in two. One of us goes, West. And it's not going to be me.

"No, sir, Mr. Daddy-oh, no more games. I'm through with games now. And I'm through with your tests. Just gonna fix your face so nobody'll wanna look at you no more."

One more row, Rick calculated. Back up one more row. Reach. Swing. One—more—row.

The class followed the two figures with fascination. West stalked Rick down the long aisle, stepping forward on the balls of his feet, waiting for Rick to back into the blackboard. Belazi rolled over on the floor and groaned.

And Rick counted the steps. A few more. A . . . few . . . more.

"You shouldn'ta hit me, Mr. Daddy-oh," West mocked. "Ain't nice for teachers to hit students. No, sir, it ain't nice at all. Not at ——"

The chair crashed into West's chest, knocking the breath out of him. It came quickly and forcefully, with the impact of a striking snake. Rick had turned, as if to run, and then the chair was gripped in his hands tightly. It sliced the air in a clean, powerful arc, and West covered his face instinctively. The chair crashed into his chest, knocking him backward. He screamed in surprise and pain as Rick leaped over the chair to land heavily on his chest. The knife clattered to the floor, and Rick pinned West's shoulders with his knees and slapped him ruthlessly across the face.

"Here, West, here, here, here," he squeezed through clenched teeth. West twisted his head from side to side, trying to escape the cascade of blows that fell in rapid onslaught on his cheeks.

West shouted, "Greg! The knife! Get the knife!"

The knife! Rick suddenly remembered the fallen weapon. Where's the knife? What happened to ——

Sunlight caught the cold glint of metal, and Rick glanced up expecting to find Miller there, expecting West's friend. Belazi stood over him, the knife clenched tightly in his fist. He grinned idiotically, his lips parting over rotten teeth. A shout came from the class, and a hiss seemed to escape West's lips.

Rick kicked at Belazi, feeling the heavy leather of his shoe crack against the boy's shins. West was up and fumbling for Rick's arms. A sudden slice of pain started at Rick's shoulder, careened down the length of his arm. Cloth gave way with a rasping scratch, and blood flashed bright against the gray tweed.

From the floor, Rick saw the knife flash back again, poised in Belazi's hand ready to strike. He saw West's fists, doubled and hard, saw the animal look that had come on Belazi's face, and again the knife, threatening

HOW WOULD YOU SAY IT?

Edited by John M. Henry

You can tell when a man is the boss of his home. The other members of the family are careful to break their decisions to him gently.

RAYMOND DUNCAN
in Ellaville, Ga., Sun

If at first you don't succeed, you are just about as dumb as the next fellow.

DICK CONWAY
in London, Ohio, Press

A frustrated woman is the wife who finds an unmailed letter she gave her husband to mail six months ago, in the pocket of the coat that has been home during that period to have a button sewed on it.

DALE AHERN
in Decorah, Iowa, Journal

"I have no trouble at all in refolding road maps, and furthermore we always come to the nicest motels just about the time we want to stop for the night," says a passing tourist whom we detained in conversation until we could memorize his license number to turn over to the FBI un-Americanism detail.

BILL VAUGHAN
in Kansas City, Mo., Star

You've reached middle age when you know how to take care of yourself and intend to begin, most any day now.

MERLE FISH
in Marathon, Iowa, Republic

Betty Crocker of General Mills says:

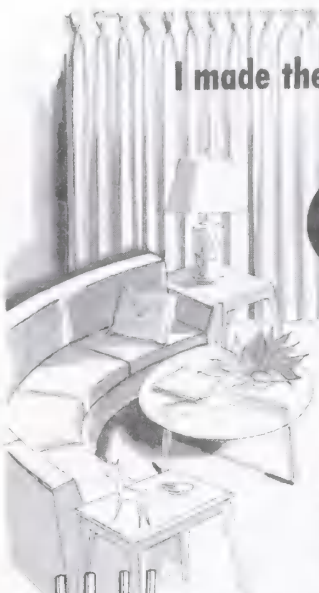
"SOFTASILK CAKE FLOUR

is the Glamor Ingredient that assures you higher, lighter and more delicious cakes!"

Simple, inexpensive ingredients give you real glamor cakes when you use Softasilk, the Glamor Cake Flour. Only the Top Twelfth of the entire nation's wheat crop is good enough for Softasilk. And it's so easy...so economical...to produce a cake masterpiece with Softasilk. Betty Crocker recipes use Softasilk as the glamor ingredient. So, for best results in "LoveLight" Cake, use SOFTASILK and WESSON OIL.

Betty Crocker of General Mills

You'll find Betty Crocker's "LOVELIGHT" CHOCOLATE 2-egg Chiffon recipe in every package of Softasilk.



CHOCOLATE-FLUFF FROSTING RECIPE

Mix together in well-chilled bowl: 2 cups whipping cream, 1 cup sifted confectioners' sugar, ½ cup cocoa, dash of salt. Beat until mixture is stiff enough to hold a point. Split each "LoveLight" layer into two thin layers. Spread Chocolate Fluff between all four layers, on sides and over cake. Store in refrigerator until used.

Each package of SOFTASILK CAKE FLOUR makes up to 6 glamorous cakes.

I made these lovely draperies so quickly with

Conso Bestpleat

The Secret?

CONSO'S new

NIP-TITE

Pleater Hooks

If you use pleater tape—as millions of women do—you will go overboard about the new NIP-TITE Pleater Hook, which guarantees crisply professional and truly permanent pinch-pleated draperies. Without Nip-Tite there is absolutely no other way to achieve this customized look!

so easy — so fast — so inexpensive

Just stitch Conso Bestpleat pleater tape to the top of your fabric—insert the amazing NIP-TITE hooks—and hang.

Gone forever are flat, uneven, sagging pleats. In their place are uniformly beautiful, knife-like pleats that stay that way! No need to sew or tack pleats, with NIP-TITE.

Remember, ONLY CONSO has NIP-TITE Pleater Hooks. Ask for Bestpleat, with the super-strong woven-in pockets, and NIP-TITE wonder-hooks in drapery departments everywhere.

* PAT. APPLIED FOR

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Send for the ingenious "1001 Decorating Ideas" Edition #11—just off the press. 64 pages full of up-to-the-minute, practical ideas and directions. Send 25¢ in coin to Dept. LJ-10.

CONSOLIDATED TRIMMING CORPORATION • 27 West 23rd Street, New York 10, N. Y.

Tiny BURNS MAY LEAVE Lifetime Scars

Apply Fast 4-Way All Around Help

Soothing, cooling OIL-O-SOL for minor burns. Helps: relieve pain; fight infection; prevent blisters; speed healing. At your druggist MOSS'S

OIL-O-SOL

WIDE SHOES

C to EEE, Sizes 4 to 11 "GILLIE"

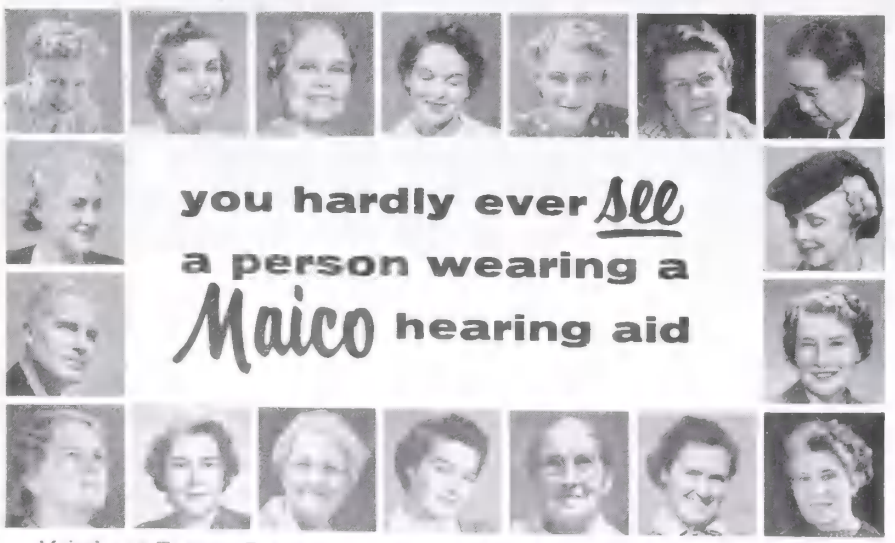
6.95 Black Suede Red Calf Trim
Russet Suede Luggage Calf Trim

Money Back Guarantee
Write For Free Catalog

SYD KUSHNER • Dept. L-J • 733 South St., Phila. 47, Pa.

Don't Neglect Slipping

FALSE TEETH



Do false teeth drop, slip or wobble when you talk, eat, laugh or sneeze? Don't be annoyed and embarrassed by such handicaps. FASTEETH, an alkaline (non-acid) powder to sprinkle on your plates, keeps false teeth more firmly set. Gives confident feeling of security and added comfort. No gummy, gooey, pasty taste or feeling. Get FASTEETH today at any drug counter.

MONEY...

In Your Spare Time

You can earn extra money by selling subscriptions in your spare time. Why not write us for details?

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
461 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Penna.

you hardly ever see a person wearing a Maico hearing aid

Maico's new TRANSIST-EAR hearing instrument is meant to be heard—not seen! TRANSIST-EAR weighs only about an ounce! The lovely case comes in colors to match your hair. Held securely in place by a barrette it eliminates forever the unsightly and inconvenient dangling cord . . . no cord shows on neck or body when you wear Maico's newest hearing instrument—TRANSIST-EAR.

So tiny, so feathery-light and convenient, TRANSIST-EAR hides in a woman's hair . . . yet none of its vibrant tone quality is lost.

Men too can wear "hearing on the head" conveniently and inconspicuously with a small band that fits under hat or cap.

See your Maico dealer.

Maico Minneapolis, Minnesota and sharp, drenched now with blood, dripping on the wooden floor.

The noise grew louder and Rick tried to rise, felt pain sear through his right arm as he put pressure on it.

He's cut me, he thought with panic. Belazi has cut me.

And the screaming reached a wild crescendo, hands moved with terrible swiftness, eyes gleamed with molten fury, bodies squirmed, and hate smothered everything in a sweaty, confused, embarrassed embrace.

"Lee him alone, you fool!" Miller was shouting.

Leave who alone? Rick wondered. Who? I wasn't ——

"Lousy sneak," Levy shouted. "You dirty lousy sneak."

Who? Rick thought. What ——

Miller seized West and pushed him backward against a desk. Rick watched him dazedly, his right arm burning with pain. He saw Morales smash a book against Belazi's knife hand. The knife clattered to the floor. Belazi's hand reached out for it and Santini, the smiler, stepped on it with the heel of his foot. The knife disappeared in a shuffle of hands, but Belazi no longer had it. Rick stared at the bare, brown spot on the floor where the knife had been.

Whose chance is it now? he wondered. Whose turn to slice the teacher?

West tried to struggle off the desk where Miller had him pinned. Erin brought his fist down heavily on West's nose. He wrenched the larger boy's head back with one hand, and again brought his fist down fiercely.

A slow recognition trickled into Rick's confused thoughts. Through dazzled eyes, he watched.

Belazi scrambled to his feet and lunged at him. A solid wall seemed to rise before him as Carter and Antoro flung themselves against the onrushing form and threw it back. They tumbled onto Belazi, Carter's red hair flashing wildly, holding Belazi's arms, pommeling him with excited fists.

They're fighting for me! No, Rick reasoned, no. But yes, they're fighting for me!

His eyes blinked as he struggled to his feet. Belazi and West were subdued now, and Rick looked at them briefly and then said, "Let's—let's take them down to Mr. Small." His voice was very low.

Antoro moved closer to him, his eyes widening as they took in the livid slash that ran the length of Rick's arm.

"Man, that's some cut," he said.

Rick touched his arm lightly with his left hand. It was soggy and wet, the shirt and jacket stained a dull brownish red. He looked among the crowd of faces around him, and found Miller, and their eyes met, but he could read nothing on Miller's face.

"I—I think I'd better take them down to Mr. Small," he said.

He stared at the boys, trying to read their faces, trying mostly to read Miller's unsmiling face. He wondered if he should thank them. If he could only hit upon the right thing to say, the thing to cement it all.

"I'll—I'll take them down. Suppose you—you all go to lunch now."

"That sure is a mean cut," Kruger said.

Then Miller came out of the circle of faces. He stepped forward, and chose his words carefully. "Maybe we should jus' forget the principal, chief, huh? Maybe we oughta go to lunch."

Rick looked at Miller, and aga met. He did not pretend to und knew only that West had stepped Miller had drawn, and Miller ha sented with a choice. He could eitl the line with West, or he could hel West back over that line. He ha help Rick. He had fought for hi the fight was over, and throug fathomable code of his own, he w ing on Rick again.

Or was he?

THERE was something strange eyes, and the smile that usually d face was not there now. His eyes tive and his entire body seemed t ward, tensed, waiting. He did not from Rick's face, and those e pleaded with a mute intensity. R him, and he did not understand then abruptly he realized that M chosen the easy road when he' fight aga Gregory made a for once had led h hard road

And no another Rick weig fully. It things a l he just sen to lunch a about Bela It would t say, "All just forget then go ba ing the wa to teach lat be easy, kids wou had a goo Dadier shown hin fine guy b all about getting West in easy.

When spoke, he Miller. H speak ster mandingly have bee working alongside was simply explaining a job tha done.

He said, "I'm taking them dov and Miller said nothing, and then "I have to."

Miller continued to stare at hir ment, and the circle of faces seer together, and Rick wondered if he wrong choice. And then one o broke into a smile, and that face w Miller's.

Miller said, "Sure, Mr. Dadier. he shouted, "All right, le's break

The circle held for just a momer shoved Belazi and West ahead knowing whether to expect resista But the boys parted to let him th Rick walked past them with his h

He was not surprised to hear a v him pipe in a high falsetto, "Oh You're a hee-ro."

But a second voice shouted, "C mouth!" and Rick smiled as he s the corridor with Belazi and We him. He remembered what he earlier, before the fight, rememi he'd thought about just one kic that's all, one kid he could point "I showed him the way," and make it all right, if he could only s

And so the smile mushroomed face, and he walked down to Sm smiling all the way, smiling happ the second voice he'd heard had Gregory Miller.

The heartbreaking hesitation of Lincoln, the troublesome doubts and perplexed questionings, reveal as nothing else could the simple integrity of his nature. He must go forward, but he must carry the people with him, the North as a whole, the border states if possible, even the rebellious South if charity might suffice. Though in arms, they were Americans, and their hearts must be brought to willing allegiance; how otherwise could a democratic people emerge from the bitterness of civil war? He was not made for a dictator, and blood and iron he accounted poor cement to mend the sundered democracies. He trusted the better impulses of men to prevail in the end, because with Jefferson he believed in the essential justice of the plain people. In this faith he exemplified his democracy. Not a great political thinker, he was a great leader because he never forgot that he was one with those he led.

VERNON LOUIS PARRINGTON
Main Currents in American Thought (Harcourt, Brace and Company, Inc.)

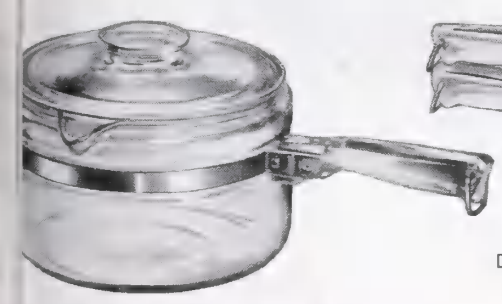
) easy to wash clean when it's

PYREX®
WARE



Food particles, odors, flavors don't cling to clear, sparkling PYREX Ware!

DISHWASHING'S a lot easier when you have clear, sparkling PYREX Ware! Even the stickiest foods slide right off that smooth, hard surface. And it's non-porous, so it won't absorb cooking odors.

PYREX Ware is wonderfully strong and durable, too—it keeps that sparkling, brand-new look even after years of the hardest everyday use.

To make your kitchen life a whole lot easier, look at the many helpful items on this page. Then go to your favorite housewares store and pick out all the beautiful, work-saving PYREX Ware you need!

ooking, serving and storing are easier, too, with clear, sparkling PYREX ware

meware Saucepan. 2-qt., $2.75; 1½-qt., $2.50; 1-qt., $2.25

Flameware Double Boiler. 1½-qt., $3.95.

Flameware Teapot. 6-cup, $2.25.

Flameware Percolator. 9-cup, $3.95; 6-cup, $3.45; 4-cup, $2.75.

an see what's cooking in l-clear PYREX Ware! ok faster, too—and brown nly. What's more, you can ve and store in the same ch saves you lots of time vashing.

dsome, durable PYREX re on top of your range—kling PYREX Ovenware—clusively for oven use—for ur baking. You'll find it's r, thriftier way to cook!

Ovenware Knob-Cover Casserole. 2-qt., $1.00; 1½-qt., 89¢; 1-qt., 79¢.

Ovenware Oven Roaster. 3-qt., $1.39.

Ovenware Utility Dish. 1½-qt., 69¢.

Ovenware Mixing Bowl Set. 3 bowls. 1-qt., 1½-qt., 2½-qt., $1.39.

Ovenware Round Cake Dish. 8¼ inches, 59¢.

Ovenware Pie Plate (plain). 8½ inches, 39¢.

Ovenware Measuring Cups. 32-oz., 79¢; 16-oz., 59¢; 8-oz., 29¢.

s only one PYREX BRAND ware, a product of Corning Glass Works, Corning, N. Y.

"PYREX" is a registered trade-mark in the U. S. of Corning Glass Works, Corning, N. Y.

VISIT THE CORNING GLASS CENTER CORNING, N. Y.

You just can't match the wonderful taste of good hot oatmeal

Ask yourself. What other breakfast cereal—hot or cold—tastes as downright delicious as Quaker Oats? And gives you so much good nourishment?

You get more protein from oatmeal than from any other leading cereal. That's why Quaker Oats helps adults keep fit—not fat. Helps children grow strong, healthy bodies.

People eat more oatmeal than any other breakfast cereal. It tastes so good. It is so good for you. Isn't it time you treated yourself to good hot Quaker Oats?

America's most popular cereal
. . . hot or cold

Mother's Oats and Quaker Oats are exactly the same

Quick as coffee! Cooks in only 2 minute

All you do is pour Quick Quaker Oats into boiling water. (Or start it in cold water for extra creaminess.)

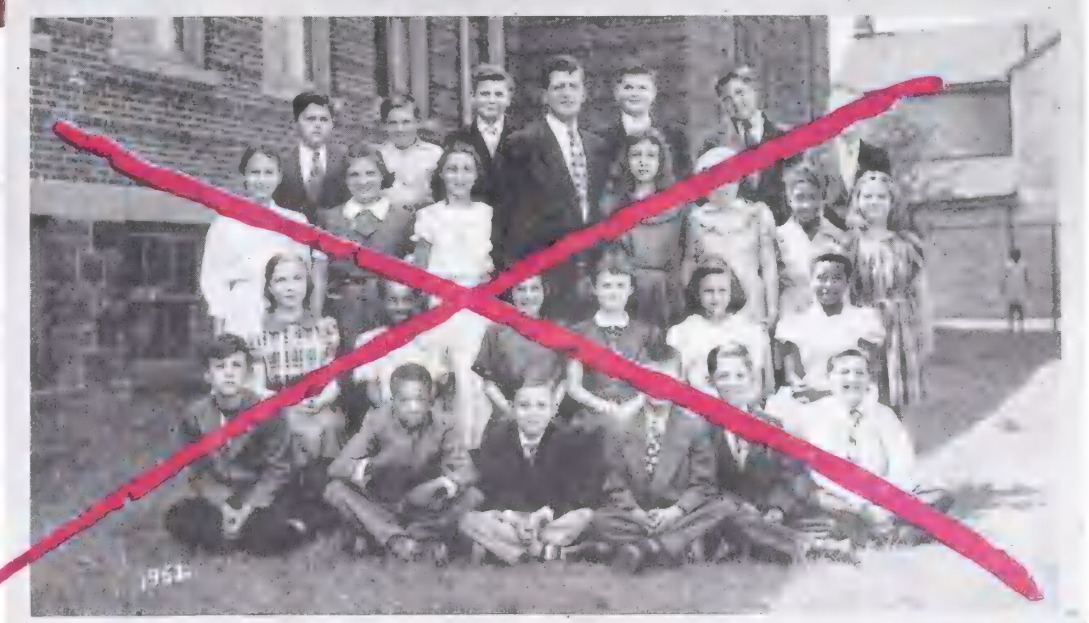
While the coffee's perking, your o completely cooked—creamy-smo cious—in just 2 minutes.

QUAKER OATS

"I QUIT TEACHING!"

By BETTY COE SPICER

PHOTOS by DAVID LINTON



Ed Hough, of Trenton, N.J., is a city teacher who loved his work but had to leave it.

"I ALWAYS made myself a promise that if anything in my life ever lowered my human dignity I was going to quit it," says red-haired six-footer Ed Hough.

Even if he was quitting a job people called him a natural for—teaching—a job he'd always wanted to do more than any other?

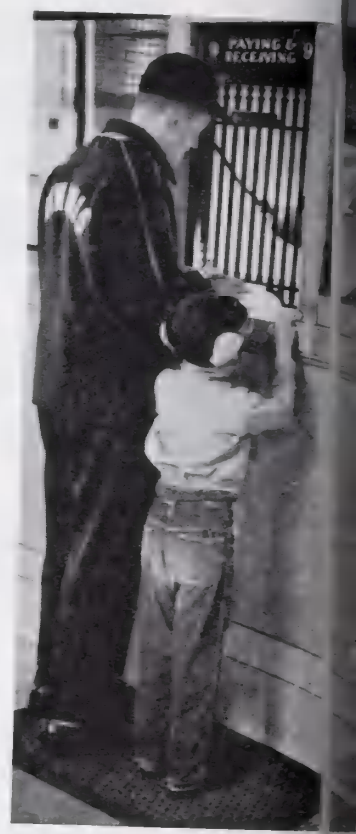
"Quit it or fight it till I die." Ed has an easy grin, but his expression is thoughtful now as he looks through the window to the yard where his three-year-old twin sons are working out a construction problem involving identical bright blue toy steam shovels. "You remember we had a flash snowstorm just before Thanksgiving last year?" he asks. "It was a bad one and it hit without warning. Well, in a way that snowstorm made up my mind for me. Dennis, my oldest boy—he's six—came to me and asked me for snow boots so he could go outside and play." Ed turned back from the window. "I couldn't get them for him. Maybe that's not a big thing, but when a man puts in years educating himself to be a teacher and has five years of teaching behind him, he ought to be able to buy snow boots for his kids without wondering where the money's coming from. I kept hoping something would happen so I could stay in CONTINUED ON PAGE 163

d runs a 6-pump Calso gas station in Trenton. ex-teacher helps as manager. In schools, Ed 700 a year; at gas station he'll clear at least t the change cost Ed a dream of half a lifetime.

Young HOW AMERICA LIVES

taught fifth-graders at McClellan School, grew up rby, knew neighborhood problems, and put in more n a 9-to-3 schedule working them out. "Ed was a rn teacher," friends and neighbors tell you, troubled.

Nobody said "Hold on." It would have made a difference.



The nation lost a teacher. Ed gained a better life.

More home life. Teacher Ed's "free summer" never existed. Last vacation was 8 years ago. Now, incredibly, he and Lilli have time together, time with children, even time for parties.

More conveniences. Houghs rented run-down house for $48 a month. With friends, they still marvel over new home in Levittown, Pa. ($61.50 a month), and its equipment that works.

More money. In teaching ... refereed for $7.50, bought milk ... for babies at $7.49, had a ... over for Lilli. All that's ...

ticipation. Lilli says, "He's id 'no' to a need." Conscien- Ed heads civic groups, aids ves, serves in Naval Reserve.

ED FROM PAGE 161 teaching. nd dollars a year would have he difference. But nothing did o I thought I'd better quit this ll probably die fighting it."
't only the snow boots, of here was also the expense of home instead of renting an in- t thirty-year-old farmhouse. t food budget got tighter still nd his family left the farm with le garden and chickens. "We lly know how badly Ed was until we left the farm!" dark- li, his wife, adds ruefully. Per- of all there was the long list of jobs Ed had to take to keep up ills his $3700-a-year teaching uldn't cover; everything from snow in the winter to officiat- eball and football games, swim- track meets. He has been a

CONTINUED ON PAGE 206

More self-respect. New clothes for Ed, when wife and children had to go without and wear shabby old things, was a decisive blow. It bothered Ed so much he resigned. First item on new shopping list: clothes for five.

More house. Shower, freezer, new furniture—nothing is taken for granted. "We keep looking to be sure it's there."

More present. As father, Ed can now provide. As citizen, he's disturbed by a question: "Who'll teach my sons?"

Young
HOW AMERICA LIVES

More leisure. Teacher Ed studied nights, part-timed as referee, salesman, snow shoveler to add to $308 monthly income, fought exhaustion meeting bills. For first time, he has days off.

More future. With $1000 raise, he could have kept his job. This year, Ed figures he'll up his earnings $2000.

Bob teaches at Woodrow Wilson, big rural high school with 54 on faculty, 1320 in student body. Bob checks in at 8:30 A.M., as 26 yellow buses wheel in pupils from 30 miles around.

Bob's wife, Clara Belle, taught at same school for last two years t income, netted $111 a month after taxes plus sitter to care for 3 c Soon there'll be 4; she's resigning. Devoted students gave her a

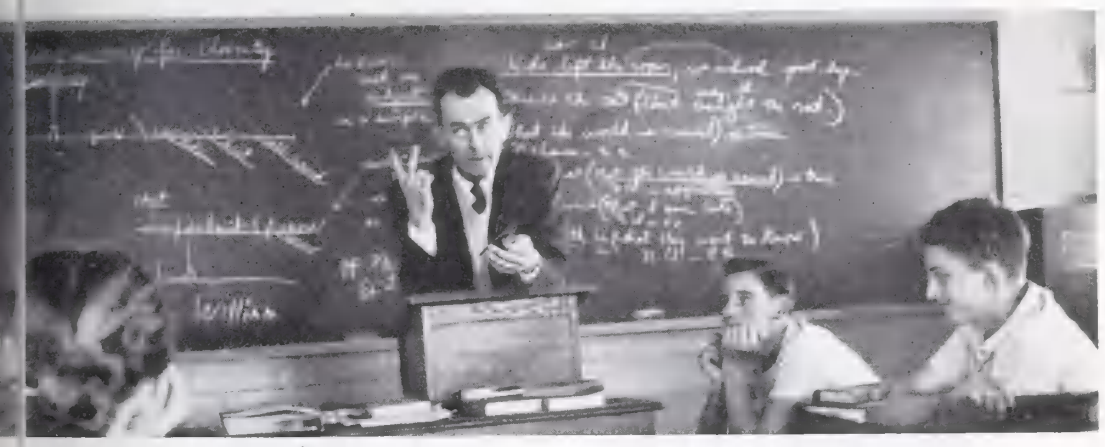
"TEACHING IS MY LIFE"

By JEAN TODD

PHOTOS By ERICH HA

Bob Hart, of Verona, Va., is a rural teacher who says, "My place is here."

WHEN pretty Clara Belle Hart came down the attic stairs one night recently, having just told Suzanne and little Mary Jane a bedtime story of Proserpine and the Pomegranate Seeds, she discovered her tall husband and her small son side by side on the green sofa. Bob blue eyes serious behind scholarly glasses, was listening critically while eight-year-old Bobbye read about Tommy and His Pumpkin Vine.



"Look at that!" Clara Belle said. "Bob teaches high-school English all day long, and then he comes home and teaches third-grade English!" But Bob, looking up from the book, said reasonably, "It's only natural; I'm a teacher and I like teaching."

Bob's obvious pleasure in his work explains why he is satisfied to make what he calls "a contented living" teaching at a rural high school in Virginia, although he must forgo certain luxuries to do so. His present salary ($3400 a year) is the highest he can expect to make as a "collegiate professional" with fifteen years' experience with a master's degree he would earn a scant $100 more. Supporting a family, buying a house and maintaining the "decent standard of living expected of teachers" is no easy task; each summer Bob substitutes in the Verona and Fort Defiance post offices to supplement his salary, and two years ago Clara Belle found it necessary to turn to teaching herself, in order CONTINUED ON PAGE 16

Young
AMERICA LIVES

Jane (3), Suzanne (5) and (8) grow up with books. In Bob's own family of twelve, ld chose between two mules on or a start to college . . . The mules had few takers.

"Grammar man" Bob is chairman of English department, teaches five classes a day, knows all his students by name and disciplines them with humor. "It's a good feeling to work with young minds. You place service before profit in your work."

Home was bought when half built for $5000. Harts put in a bathroom three years ago, just finished children's rooms—"By borrowing, although we really don't approve."

Bob gardens till dark. Back yard yields peas, tomatoes, Lima and snap beans Clara Belle thriftily puts up.

In land where cattle draw top prices, teachers don't. After 15 years' work, Bob earns $65 a week.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 164 to ease the financial strain. But even though Clara Belle isn't teaching this year (the fourth Hart child is expected in a few weeks), Bob says confidently, "We'll manage somehow"; and any suggestion that he might turn to a more lucrative field is met with polite amazement. "Bob's gift is in teaching," Clara Belle says; and Bob adds firmly, "My place is here."

Here means many things: the broad Shenandoah Valley sheltered by the Blue Ridge Mountains on the east, the Alleghenies on the west; the tiny hillside cottage colorful with flowers and bursting at the seams with children and laughter; the large busy high school which holds all Bob's enthusiasm for the day, all his hopes for the future. "I wouldn't want to teach anywhere else," Bob says. "Wilson High is a rural school; I was a country boy and can understand the problems of country children. I remember how it was to milk the cows, water the mules, get up at dawn."

Early rising is natural for Bob even today, and for his family as well: brunet, violet-eyed Suzanne, excited over her first year at school; young, newly independent Bobbye, mentally reviewing for a spelling test; blond cherubic Mary Jane, "insisting on being fully clothed like the rest of us, even though she's not going anywhere!" Clara Belle hustles the family to the kitchen table, serves a hot hearty breakfast; by eight is waving her three "scholars" off down the steep, dusty road.

Although classes at Wilson High officially start at nine, Bob is due there at CONTINUED ON PAGE 209

Bob faces teachers' ironic dilemma: s[tudy] is a luxury he can't afford. A sum[mer] spent in courses for master's degree could u[sh]er salary only $100 a year—and mean g[iv]ing up summer job that pays $[6]0.

While Bob sometimes becomes tense, Clara Belle usually takes schedule in stride. Teaching dismayed her at first: "I had to learn to be stern." Placidly, she handles church and P.T.A. work, budgeting and heavy housekeeping.

Why be Silver Shy?

IF YOU have to juggle your silver place settings to make sure guests get the matching pieces . . . you're silver-shy.

And there's really no excuse for it today. A complete set of 1847 Rogers Bros., America's finest silverplate, can be yours so easily . . . so reasonably.

You'll cherish your 1847 Rogers Bros. through the years, for it's made to serve you a lifetime. Forks and spoons are reinforced with extra silver at the point of extra wear. Knives have seamless hollow handles that will not split or leak.

Of course you know there are many grades of silverplate. Some even have the "Rogers" name. But none brings you the heavy, over-all plate of pure silver . . . the deep-cut design of 1847 Rogers Bros. And every piece of 1847 Rogers Bros. bears the time-honored IS quality trademark of The International Silver Co.

A service for 8—52 pieces—can be yours for as little as $79.75, including chest. No Federal tax. Only $1.00 down.

So visit your silverware store. See why you shouldn't be silver-shy.

A product of The International Silver Company

HAROLD

A few pieces of good furniture acquired one at a time, some Victorian heirlooms and homemade accommodation pieces, make this young-marrieds' room attractive and comfortab

How much charm will $200 buy?

By HENRIETTA MURDOCK

Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

Young HOW AMERICA LIVES

"IF I had my great big living-room window and the floor provided for, I wouldn't worry so much about making do with what furniture I already have and a few new pieces," said Lillian Hough as she surveyed the living room in her brand-new home.

And she was right. A pretty wall color, a rug to cover a nondescript composition floor, and fresh draperies immediately give a room personality and charm. But with windows requiring a minimum of 12 yards of material and an asphalt-tile floor which she felt had to be covered, the prospect of the expense of these two projects seemed staggering at first. However, Lillian Hough overlooked the possibility of denim, a decorator's economy fabric today; and the availability and economy of the new fiber rugs, strongly woven and interestingly textured, was also news to her. Her 12′ x 15′ rug in a glowing turquoise cost only $87.95. The striped cotton denim cost 75 cents a yard, and by limiting its use to side draperies a substantial saving in yardage was achieved. The split-bamboo blinds were $3.60 each and added a certain distinction to the window treatment, as well as not cutting off the much-needed light in the room. Already the sunny yellow walls, turquoise rug and brightly striped curtains have lifted the room right out of its impersonality.

Now for the furnishings. The eighteenth-century-style desk already owned by the Houghs was their best piece of living-room furniture and so was given the center of attention in front of the window. The club chair and sofa are basic types bought to last until the children grow up, with slip-covering from time to time to refresh the effect. The Victorian chairs are secondhand, and the rush tray an inexpensive expedient for a coffee table.

From now on the furniture in the Hough family will be bought one piece at a time with a view to quality and permanence. Until these purchases have been made they will make do with home-carpentered items such as the magazine stands at either end of the sofa, so simpl nailed together that even a beginner could attempt then These stands also serve as lamp tables. The copper ju and Italian pottery vase were fitted with lamp adapte and fresh plastic shades.

Cost of Basic Furnishings Newly Purchased

Rug 12′ x 15′	$ 87.95
2 Victorian chairs @ $35.00	70.00
18 yds. striped denim @ 75c yd.	13.50
20 yds. turquoise denim @ 75c yd.	15.00
6 yds. red denim @ 75c yd.	4.50
6 yds. gold denim @ 75c yd.	4.50
2 matchstick blinds 36″ x 72″ @ $3.60	7.20
2 prints @ $5.00	10.00
	$212.65

ron most brics without sprinkling

WITH THE NEW G-E TEAM AND DRY IRON!

IT'S TWO IRONS IN ONE!

GE STEAM & DRY IRON

USE IT AS A STEAM
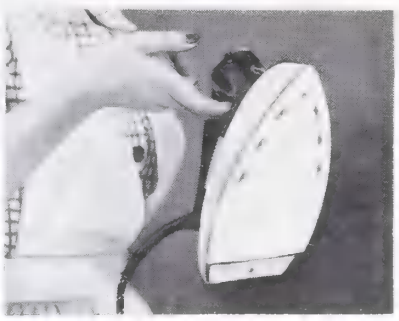
IRON!

1. IRON WITHOUT SPRINKLING . . . everything except heavy cottons, linens and starched fabrics! The steady flow of steam moistens fabrics, saves you the time and work of sprinkling, and of ironing pre-moistened clothes.

2. INSTANT STEAM! Drop by drop, water falls onto hot soleplate . . . flashes instantly to steam. Steam stops automatically when iron is placed on heel rest. Uses tap water in all but extremely hard water areas.



3. PRESS LIKE A TAILOR! Press suits, skirts and sweaters without a damp pressing cloth! You can see where to put creases, so you press perfectly! Save money on pressing bills—you can do it at home, professionally.

E AS A
RY
ON!

1. FOR HEAVY COTTONS, LINENS and starched fabrics, use it as a dry iron. Just press the button to change your steam iron to dry—no need to let iron cool down or even empty the water! You make the change instantly!

2. LIGHT, LIGHT WEIGHT! Only 3¼ pounds! Weighs less than a woman's purse. Means easy handling and less work. Larger soleplate—more than thirty square inches—covers wider ironing area in fewer strokes.

3. NO MORE SCORCHING! Visualizer Fabric-dial gives perfect heat for whatever fabric you're ironing! See it at your G-E dealer's today! General Electric Company, Small Appliance Division, Bridgeport 2, Connecticut.

ther wonderful irons at aler's: G-E Visualizer Iron G-E Budget Iron ($9.75*), ravel Iron ($14.95*), G-E ravel Iron ($12.50*).

Progress is our most important product

GENERAL GE ELECTRIC

One end of 8′ wide porch is now a sitting room, the other end a dining area. Fireside chairs are peel (around $10). A fiber tray ($6) set on a luggage stand ($3) makes a coffee table. Bookshelves are planks on brackets. Map is wallpapered to a board.

Young Home-Builders

Young HOW AMERICA LIVES

The Bob Hart family winterizes a porch to expand a small house for a growing family.

By MARGARET DAVIDSON

HARTS' cottage, in Verona, Virginia, was bursting at the seams. But little used was a screened back porch, 8′ wide and 30′ long. To add living area, while watching every penny, Bob decided to invest up to $750 to convert the porch, a sum he could afford to pay back at $25 a month. Bob admits himself "no great shakes as a handy man," but is gifted in having a carpenter as friend. The friend, who between jobs has often worked for Bob and Clara Belle for a low $1 an hour, again agreed to help. The project: a 21′ section of porch was to be walled in to become a sitting-dining room, leaving a 9′ section open as an entry to the house. Also to be built was a tile-and-brick fireplace for heating during the mild, short winters.

The three new porch walls are plywood-paneled (the fourth adjoins the house, is asbestos-shingled and needed no work). The fireplace is small (30″ wide), with no ornamenting. The floor was covered in linoleum. Total cost came to $756: chimney and fireplace material and labor, $249; electrical work (center light, three double convenience outlets, two switches), $24; supplying and laying linoleum, $65; construction (including carpentry work and materials), $418. Furniture came from the house and from sales. And a mellow, snug new room is happy result.

Big advantage of a view (here the Shenandoah Valley): porch-room needs little decoration. Casement windows are new; blinds were cut from an old porch blind. Clara Belle sewed cotton stripe draperies, moved dining-room furniture to porch. Between here and sitting-room area children have space to play.

...r lotion
...ntifically
...ears
...ead!

Immediately smooths, whitens "Detergent Hands"

Rough, puffy "detergent hands"—Of all leading hand lotions, only new Angel Skin has this special formula to counteract the drying chemical action of detergents, help prevent irritation

...lutionary
...softens and
...uticle that
...ngnails.
...mes soft

...s and arms—
...goodness of
...l Skin restores
...r, softness to
...iscolored elbows.
...y flakiness on
...lders, face

...ickiness! Angel Skin is a new kind ...tener—has no gummy "thickener" ...t your hands. All of Angel Skin's ...ess goes in at once

89¢, 49¢, 25¢, plus tax
(Slightly higher in Canada)

Chapping actually heals Roughness clears—right away
Blotchy redness fades out Split cuticle skin smooths

Like most women, you probably dread to put your hands into harsh detergent suds. You just know how your hands will look afterwards—red, rough, puffy! Now—to meet this urgent problem of "detergent hands," Pond's has developed a new lotion to give your hands immediate relief. It's revolutionary new Angel Skin!

Unlike other leading hand lotions, only Angel Skin has this new kind of formula specially designed to neutralize the drying chemical action of harsh detergents, help prevent irritation.

For new Angel Skin gives more than just superficial smoothing. Angel Skin's rich goodness penetrates deep down to the living skin tissue—where roughness, redness and dryness begin. It actually heals chapped skin!

Smooth on Angel Skin . . . feel it disappear! Angel Skin contains no gummy "thickener." All of its richness goes into your skin at once—never leaves a trace of stickiness!

Get fragrant, creamy-pink Angel Skin today. Many women tell us they buy two bottles—one for the dressing table, another for the kitchen sink—so they'll always have Angel Skin within easy reach!

MAGNIFIED SKIN DIAGRAM SHOWS ANGEL SKIN'S DEEP-SOFTENING ACTION

ANGEL SKIN penetrates the outer skin surface

Gives immediate help to living skin tissue where chapped redness and roughness begin

Angel Skin
by POND'S

JUNIOR®

YIPE!!

GANGWAY! I'M A ROCKET SHIP!!

POOR MR. KIDDER! HE ALWAYS FORGETS TO WATCH OUT FOR JUNIOR

COPYRIGHT 1954, THE CREAM OF WHEAT CORP.

COME INSIDE, MR. KIDDER, AND HAVE A BOWL OF "CREAM OF WHEAT." IT'LL MAKE YOU FEEL BETTER

JUNIOR! PICK UP MR. KIDDER'S LETTERS!

I WANT SOME "CREAM OF WHEAT," TOO...IT'S YUMMY!

WE EAT A LOT OF "CREAM OF WHEAT" AROUND HERE, MR. KIDDER. IT HAS VITAMINS AND MINERALS. IT'S HOT AND NOURISHING...AND IT HELPS GIVE US STRENGTH!

WHERE IS MY MAIL?

IT GOT DIRTY, SO...

I'M WASHING IT FOR YOU SEE?

BETTER HAVE ANOTHER BOWL OF "CREAM OF WHEAT," MR. KIDDER. IT'LL BE READY IN JUST 5 MINUTES!

THE MAIL'S DRY NOW, MR. KIDDER

I'LL BRING MY OWN "CREAM OF WHEAT" WHEN I COME BY TOMORROW...

HEY! LET ME OUT OF THIS MAIL BAG!

YOU'RE RIGHT! A HOT CEREAL IS BETTER FOR YOU!

EAT HOT "CREAM OF WHEAT"®

INSTANT QUICK CREAM OF WHEAT

REGULAR CREAM OF WHEAT

DI PIETRO

By LILLIAN HOUGH

Teache

Ed's raise in salary hasn't changed our eating family still calls for favorite dishes of teac

When a long-time friend heard that the JOURNAL would be printing some of my recipes, her first reaction was, "Be sure to give them our Hamburger Bean Pot Soup, Lill. It brought us both through the hard years."

This delicious soup makes a little ground beef go a long way. Rather than make meat balls, I crumble the meat, throw it in, and anyone who gets some is lucky.

HAMBURGER BEAN POT SOUP

Wash 1 cup dried marrow beans. Add to 3 quarts water and bring to boil. Boil 2 minutes, remov let beans soak in the Then simmer beans 20 No. 2 can tomatoes, 1 c 1 carrot, cubed, 1 ¼ cup uncooked rice, onion, 1 beef-bouillon spoon salt and ¼ tea Brown ½ pound gro tablespoon hot sho soup to boil, add m simmer 1 hour. Make

Ed loves a home-baked pie or cake for dessert. On the farm I used to do a lot of baking, and there's still nothing I'd rather do on a rainy day. But because of my weight problem, I don't bake often now. I decided I'd just have to remove the temptation.

I have a favo that I like t thin with fr This recipe is it is so mo moist for a se day, if you c the house th.

POUN

Cream ⅔ cup garine and l very thorc smooth and looking. Ad eggs, one a beat well. S cups flour, baking powder and ¾ Stir dry ingredients alternately with ⅔ cu with 1 teaspoon va overmix. Pour into 8 greased loaf pan and b erately slow oven, 325°

HANS KNOPP

elping mother ake rolls is a favorite ndoor sport on ny afternoons.

Pets

By CLARA BELLE HART

ripe hunting again. Now I've stopped teaching, e' ess money but more time to bake and experiment.

E's practically nothing that nd e children don't like. That fie verything—puts the joy in ke he work out of cooking on ec udget.

re y amazing how much va- he can be when a little ham- is xed with a whole f agination. Bob t ink he's eaten u ess he has had so 's always there wh .

F I' BISCUITS

ar skillet sauté ¾ no ed onions in 2 bo s salad oil. Then c chopped green a 1 pound ground Sa until meat is , a an 8-ounce can o ce, 1 No. 2½ can pe 2 tablespoons ed arsley, ⅛ tea- pper, 2½ tea- t, ⅛ teaspoon ounce can whole- n, and 1 table- spoon vinegar. For added flavor you may add a clove of garlic, crushed. Simmer for ½ hour. Serve shortcake style with hot, split biscuits. Serves 4 to 6.

Young HOW AMERICA LIVES

This is the time of year
for pork in our family, and here's one of our favorites.

SAUSAGE-SAUERKRAUT CASSEROLE

pound link sausage until emove from the skillet and p sliced onion in 2 table- the sausage fat. When the tender, add 1 No. 2 can , 1 No. 2 can sliced apples and 2 tablespoons brown sugar. Place alternate layers of sausage and apple-sauerkraut mixture in a 1½-quart casserole and top with a few sausage links. Bake in a hot oven, 400° F., for ½ hour. Serves 6.

Take half a melon, for instance...

ONLY

SARAN WRAP

will keep it so fresh, so long . . . so easily!

IT CLINGS BY ITSELF... just press it in place, it stays

IT'S MOISTURE-PROOF... keeps odors in their place, too

IT'S CRYSTAL-CLEAR... you can see everything you wrap

See MEDIC

Critics call this the most dramatic television show of the year! See it Monday evenings at 9, EST . . . NBC-TV.

Saran Wrap is a product of The Dow Chemical Company. Midland, Michigan

DOW

"Try My 'Can't-Fail' Recipe for Gorgeous Coconut Pie"

says Marie Gifford, Armour's Home Economist and pastry authority.

Make this Toasted Coconut Pie with Ease and Confidence

You'll enjoy making this beautiful pie because it brings you so many compliments. For the cream filling and meringue, use your own favorite recipes. Or, follow the can't-fail recipes in my new Pie Booklet, offered you free, below.

To make sure your crust is tender and flaky, use Armour Star Lard. And follow my quick 5-minute Pie Crust recipe. This better lard has more shortening power than any other type of shortening! It needs no refrigeration. It blends like magic.

Quick 5-Minute Pie Crust Recipe

Measure 1½ cups of all-purpose flour. Sift with ¾ teaspoon of salt. Add ½ cup of Armour Star Lard. Blend with flour until mixture resembles coarse meal.

Add 2½ tablespoons of tap water. Mix lightly and form dough into ball. Roll out on pastry cloth to thickness of ⅛ inch or less. Fit into 9-inch pie pan. Trim and crimp edges—prick all over with fork. Bake in 425° F. oven 12-15 minutes.

Pour cool cream filling into pie shell. Top with meringue, sprinkle with ¼ cup of coconut. Bake quickly at 425° F. 5 to 6 minutes.

FREE! NEW PIE BOOKLET. 32 wonderful pies. Many helpful hints. Write to Marie Gifford, Dept. 146, Box 2053, Armour and Co., Chicago. We will appreciate it if you include a carton top with your request.

America's Perfect Pie Shortening

Armour Star Lard

MISS DOVE AND THE MATERNAL INSTINCT

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 64

temptations might beset them "upon life's stormy sea" (i.e., in junior high school), they would cling to the ideals of their first alma mater. Every mother who heard them (even the rare, candid soul who considered her own darling's eligibility for graduation a minor miracle) grew damp in the eye.

"The men and women of tomorrow," murmured Lester Knight, Jr.'s, mother. Like her son, she had a gift for appropriate platitude.

Mrs. Rigsbee, sandwiched between Mrs. Knight and her own young sister, Jincey Webb, suppressed a sneer. "What does anyone expect them to become? Yaks?" she whispered to Jincey. It was obvious to Mrs. Rigsbee that, except for favoritism, her Fae Patricia would have received the cup.

JINCEY shrugged. What dull, provincial lives these women lead, she thought. Never tasting glory or despair. Moving about in their little orbits from market to P.T.A. to country club to market. Merely motorized vegetables! She raised her lovely eyes to the ceiling. At least I have suffered. I have lived!

At the tail end of the line came Miss Dove. She walked with her usual measured tread. She wore her usual dark dress. Her face was impassive. Her eyes—those dispassionate, undeluded eyes that could strike terror to mamma and moppet alike—were cool and gray and perfectly dry. She looked precisely as she always looked. But the mothers, regarding her through a haze of emotion, saw her with a difference. She was no longer the terror who had haunted their school days—who had made them wash out their mouths with soap when they chewed their pigtails or used inelegant language; who had forced them, through dread of her silent contempt, to sit still until the bell rang no matter how badly they needed to go to the bathroom; who had known, though she hadn't stooped to question their word, when they were fibbing. She was not even the cold-blooded monster who had, later, remained unenchanted by their own children's infantile graces—by Sistie's bashfulness, and Bubbie's imperfect articulation, and the adorable way Jackie-Boy stomped his foot, like a regular little man, when his will was crossed. She was Woman Bereft.

For the sixth-graders were leaving her. Each one irreplaceable and differing from all other children as star differed from star, they were marching straight out of her life as sixth-graders had marched, June after June, for thirty-five years. They would never return.

"Poor Miss Dove!" the mothers sighed in silent unison. "Poor chickless, childless Miss Dove!" Sentiment drew them together into one yeasty lump of compassion. Forgiving the miscarriage of the cup, Mrs. Rigsbee reached for Mrs. Knight's hand and squeezed it. Tenderly she laid her other hand over Jincey's.

Jincey withdrew her fingers. She lifted her head in a delicate, fastidious way, as if to hold it aloof from banality. On her pale face was the expression of languid hauteur that is natural to a young beauty whom tragedy has touched.

Miss Dove noticed Jincey. It would have been difficult not to notice the girl's head with its red-gold hair that seemed to give off sparks like a cat's fur stroked in the dark. Miss Dove noticed, as well, that Thomas Baker noticed, and that his eyes appeared dazed.

Miss Dove was not pleased. She was acquainted with the details of Jincey Webb's disappointment. She could imagine (though she could not imagine allowing herself to wander into such a predicament) that to be publicly jilted was galling to the self-esteem. But she gave short shrift to the wan weeds of melancholy. If Virginia—for Miss Dove believed in calling people as well as facts by their proper names—would stop mooning about in an atmosphere of broken orange blossoms, play-acting and walling her eyes, then she might reap some benefit from experience and enjoy a fuller, saner life.

As for Thomas Baker—surely a qualified surgeon, accustomed to the stern realities of sickness and health, could keep his mind from meandering in the maze of a girl's red hair. Surely he must realize that those distracting tresses had done Virginia harm. If her mother had kept them braided, the nonsense of beauty and glamour would never have begun. (Miss Dove reflected complacently upon her own hair—washed once a week, brushed night and morning, and screwed into a sensible bun out of folly's way.) And if Thomas wished to contemplate something other than his profession he might well consider the flippant attitude—that sad family failing!—that his young brother had recently displayed upon the platform.

But though Miss Dove was alert, though she did observe the marvelous hair and the doctor's eyes, she remained unaware of the sticky emotion oozing toward her from the matrons. Her condition in life, Miss Dove believed, excited universal envy. That other women should pity her—and especially women who depended upon the protection of men and who, with the advent of maternity, lost the power of reason and replaced system with a vague, yearning sort of mawkishness that they held sacred and called instinct—would have seemed incredible. Had she guessed the preposterous truth, she would not have laughed. Miss Dove had no sense of humor. That touted faculty she regarded as morally vestigial and, like the appendix and the tonsils, apt to breed trouble. She looked through air as clear as glass upon the human scene; in it she saw much that was right, much that was wrong, and nothing that was funny. No, Miss Dove would not have laughed. She might, however, have come to a full stop in the aisle. She might have stood there, sweeping her impudent sympathizers with a gelid gaze that would have left them little doubt as to her opinion of mothers.

Since she did not guess, she continued her stately progress as rear guard of the graduates. The position was of her own choosing. Seven years before, a disconcerting thing had happened at Cedar Grove. The last child in line—a girl called Jincey whose angelic countenance and pellucid hair had moved most minds to poetry—had whipped a water pistol from her frilly bodice and had shot the boy preceding her in the seat of his trousers. Other guns had appeared as if at a signal. The graduates had broken rank. They had rioted through the building, leaping desks, drenching bystanders, and singing, instead of the school's inspiring anthem, a ballad known as Pistol-packing Mamma. Since that unhappy day Miss Dove had deemed it prudent to let the children know that the eyes of decorum were upon them, aft as well as fore.

Now, nineteen and wretched, Jincey recalled that occasion. She smiled, remembering the surge of daring, the intoxicated leap toward freedom. And she remembered, also, the disciplined years that had, paradoxically, given her the heady moment of bravado. Miss Dove did not provoke her to pity. Jincey saw her as the symbol of a bygone era when life had been unchancy and plain as the map on a wall. She remembered how the t as a yardstick, had touched the g earth, turning it slowly to illustri dictable, diurnal revolution upon i Jincey experienced again an old, d conviction that if you obeyed the l sneezed in your handkerchief, and hand for permission to speak, anc margins even—that globe, and a sented, was certain to be your oyste

For the first time in weeks it Jincey that a broken heart was a c thing to lug around.

Miss Dove followed the class in The mothers arose. They fanned with their programs. "It was the er thing," they said mournfully, "b now we'll have the children all to all day, all summer!" Then, starin down a tunnel of ninety hot, unbro intensive maternity, they added as their optimism, "Poor, dear Miss D

"It's nice to see you here, Jinc mean so much to little Fae," M said. "That green dress with your Her glance was caressing, as b glance cast by a fruitful married wo a girl whose hopes were blighted, patronizing too. Lester, Sr., was the glance said. He didn't own a Adam's apple was prominent, he s his jokes were ancient. But he had when he said he would—waiting a

"She came to please me. She pie," Mrs. Rigsbee said, giving he affectionate spank. "We're driving club for lunch. You can get a swim bath, Jince. I put your things in the Jincey felt smothered, crippled, b solicitude. And to be called "a cuti more than she could bear. "I belie Thanks all the same," she said. She the resolve and the words that clot simultaneous, "I want to go see M

Before her sister could argue, caped and went her way.

"Hi, Ellen. Hi, Jane," said Dr Baker to Mesdames Knight and "This makes me feel my age. You here in parentis and me in loco!"

"Wasn't it sad?" said Mrs. K bawled at the song. And poor Miss "'Poor'?" Thomas demanded. "S me stiff the way she always did. I sweating—perspiring—and wonderi a clean handkerchief." He took a chief from his pocket—it was qui and mopped his brow. "No. She'll 'the terrible' to me, and nothing el

"But she's old, Tommy," plea Rigsbee, "and lonely. Year after y people's children leave her forever!"

Thomas thought he could enc equanimity a lifetime minus the co the affected Fae Patricia, the pompo Jr., his own ebullient sibling, Sterli other twelve-year-old. But he did his unorthodox sentiment. He was, a young physician with his way "Wasn't little Jincey with you?" employing an elaborately casual hadn't seen her since she was Fae's spotted that fire-engine hair!"

"She was here. It's the first time able to drag her out since ——" Mr finished with a wave of her hand. ' off to speak to Miss Dove."

"A palpable error," Thomas s could have waited and spoken to raised his left eyebrow in the cocks dening, irresistible manner of th bachelor who doesn't underestimate

BACK in her classroom—her cas were—Miss Dove sat at her big de raised dais and closed her eyes. E five rows of lesser desks stood tenan blackboards were washed clean of dr isthmuses and peninsulas. The sa were shrouded in oilcloth. But Miss not closing her eyes against the s these things. She was trying to visuali

CONTINUED ON PAGE 176

NEXT MONTH

"It seems to me that you're getting big ideas," Alfred Wayde said.

"What sort of ideas?" asked Willis.

● His father laughed harshly. "Like marrying the boss' daughter, and you don't want to marry any boss' daughter. You're trying to be something you aren't. Maybe you'll end up like a Harcourt . . . but you'll never be a Harcourt."

John P. Marquand's distinguished new novel

SINCERELY, WILLIS WAYDE

begins in the November JOURNAL

Baked Pork Chops

Hunt Style

Make 'em your way...or make 'em our way...

*but make 'em delicious

with Hunt's Tomato Sauce!

enjoy this delicious dish using either recipe for baked chops, or the delicious at's the nice thing about Hunt's Tomato so handy to have in the kitchen! And ily's going to love its wonderfully rich avor. For Hunt's Tomato is all tomato, just right. No starchy fillers, no "soupy" t's why men really go for it.

se delicious chops. And then use your cooking skill and add Hunt's Tomato Sauce to your stews, meat loaf, casseroles. It helps you gain flavor for your cooking!

4 pork chops (1½ lbs.) fat
⅓ cup finely diced celery
2 tablespoons brown sugar juice of ½ lemon ½ teaspoon salt ½ teaspoon mustard ⅛ teaspoon pepper
2 cans Hunt's Tomato Sauce
½ cup water

Brown chops in fat. Place in shallow greased baking dish. Sprinkle with celery, brown sugar, lemon juice and seasonings. Pour Hunt's Tomato Sauce and water over chops. Cover and bake in moderate oven (350°F.) 1¼ hours or until chops are tender. Makes 4 servings.

Hunt-for the best

RECIPES FOR YOU! One on the back of every can of Hunt's Tomato Sauce — at your food store.
Hunt Foods, Inc., Fullerton, California.

Just 1½ ounces

and it's an all elastic Flair

BRAND NEW SHEER FLAIR WEIGHS LESS AND DOES MORE THAN ANY OTHER KIND OF BRA

Very different! All sheer nylon with Gossard's exclusive body-contour strap. Lightest finish ever with a single anchoring elastic band—not bound or binding. And Flair's all-elastic design lifts as nothing else can. A, B, C cups. White and just $3.95

other Flair bras from $3 at leading stores and shops or write us, we'll tell you where

Gossard

Youthful Line of Beauty

THE H. W. GOSSARD CO. • 111 N. CANAL ST., CHICAGO 6 • NEW YORK • SAN FRANCISCO • ATLANTA • DALLAS • TORONTO

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 174

the twoscore children who had left her. For six years she had pruned and polished and molded them and had sought to blow into their clay the breath of purpose. Now they had passed beyond the aid of her precept or example. She did not wish them back. She wished only to be sure that they would do well without her. But she had to wait and see. Miss Dove was like an author whose book was on the press, like a flight instructor whose cadet had departed on a lonely mission in the sky. For weal or woe, her job was done.

But as the author ponders the merits of his third chapter, as the instructor wonders about forced landings, so Miss Dove tormented herself with questions. She thought first of Fae Patricia. The child was tractable and honest, but she had given herself a great many airs today as she'd recited Kilmer's poem. Did I teach her enough humility? Miss Dove wondered. Enough common sense to withstand the adulation of a fatuous mother and many fatuous men? Miss Dove thought, with a pang, of Fae's aunt, Jincey Webb.

Jincey had been a likely child. Not intellectual or original, but thoroughly nice—cheerful, obliging and amenable to suggestion. Though she had been subject to animal spirits (witness the "pistol-packing" episode) she had, deep down, recognized the beauty of discipline. Her sense of order had been innate. Her notebooks had been things of sheer delight. And her posture had been superb—spine straight, head erect, feet planted on the floor. And then, within a few years of her leaving Cedar Grove, something had happened to the girl. Everything about her—her complexion, her figure, her direct eyes and, most demonstrably, her hair—had taken on a kind of burnished symmetry that had dazzled the beholder. Worse, it had dazzled Jincey. At the state university she had been elected "Sweetheart of Sigma Chi." She had won a talent show and had gone to New York, where she had got a small job singing TV commercials—though her voice was slight. Soon her engagement had been announced. She was to marry the scion of a wealthy family. She would have a Mediterranean honeymoon aboard a private yacht. She would live, when she returned, in a penthouse—a twelve-room cottage with a terrace and a lily pool built in the sky above Manhattan.

She had come home for the wedding. She wanted it to be in the little stone church where she'd been christened, with all her old friends there to bless her.

But two days after Jincey had arrived at home her fiancé had eloped with a night-club entertainer. He had not apprised Jincey of his intention. She had heard it, a fait accompli, on a radio gossip program.

No one is wicked enough to wish to appear wicked.
—QUINTILIAN

MISS DOVE had not been greatly astonished by the turn of events. She had seen a photograph of the defaulting groom and had noted a shiftiness in his eyes, an overfullness indicative of petulance about his mouth. What had astonished her had been Jincey's behavior. The girl had not conducted herself with the poise and pride that should have distinguished an alumna of Cedar Grove. She had wept and wilted. She had secluded herself in her sister's house, where she had allowed close friends to dab her forehead with Eau de Cologne. She had not—though Miss Dove would have phrased the matter with more urbanity—had the guts to spit in the eye of circumstance!

Was there something more I could have done, Miss Dove asked herself now, before the girl was twelve?

She sighed and considered the case of Sterling Baker. It was odd and discouraging how an idiosyncrasy could run, like warped thread, through a whole family. Thomas, Andrew, Randolph and Sterling—Miss Dove had taught them all. They all had cleft chins. All had fine muscular control—they could wiggle their ears and raise one eyebrow without twitching the other. They were all quick to learn and responsive to ethical values. None of them knew how to lie. But, try as she had, Miss Dove had never been able t love for clowning. And, of cou no help from their mother. " serious soon enough," that woman was reported to have them to fate and the terrible Mis

Recalling Mrs. Baker's remar pursed her mouth as though she

THERE was a hesitant step at Jincey Webb stood on the thre morning, Miss Dove," she said.
that of a well-instructed child, uninflected. It made her unch seem fancy dress put on for a ma

"Good morning, Virginia," sa

Jincey advanced. Her green sound reminiscent of wind in g shook off a peculiarly unacader
Like a homing pigeon Jincey w
the third seat in the third row.

"This was my place," she said

"Will you sit there now, Vi Dove said politely.

Jincey took her seat. "The roo empty," she said.

Miss Dove was not adept at si

Jincey made another try. "Lik

Miss Dove said nothing.

"It doesn't smell the same, e said. "Remember the boys' corc dirty and sort of cheesy at th week? And wet sneakers?"

Miss Dove maintained her sil cuss odors, especially in referen or clothing, she considered coar

"Is that the same map?" Jinc pointed to the large map of the up for the su
the blackboar Dove. "Is orange?"

"It is a new Dove said. " ple."

"I liked th Jincey said. "I world."

"Cartography is a fluid art,
Dove.

With the flat of her hand Ji her hair back from her forehead.
that in moments of perplexity lo Miss Dove," she said, and her
"tell me what to do!"

Miss Dove was not at a loss. Sh in three short words. "Do your du

Jincey's eyes glazed with tea your duty when your world has er

"You are nineteen, I believe Dove. Her statement was devoic Miss Dove had been nineteen w world had ended. Ended and father had died, leaving her as mother, two little sisters and a debt. Miss Dove's whole life of se dresses and loose blowing hair like the pendulum of an unwour Miss Dove had gone on. She ha hair out of the way. (She could st the feel of the silken stuff in he how, when she'd pulled it fiercel her temples, her skin had strainec
She had squared her slender shou sponsibility. She could rememb world. It was a charming memory tale read to a sleepy child. But th was real. Whether she was happy not ask herself. She was strong.
ful. She was Miss Dove.

"This is how it was," Jincey sa Miss Dove all that had happened of it was wicked. All of it, as Mi surmised, was a chronicle of vani cence. She told of meeting Mi Stork Club. "He spoke to th
French," she said, "and wore a cur

She told of the places he had dine. "Did you ever drink cham Dove?" she asked.

"No," said Miss Dove.

"It tastes like cider," Jincey sa effect is different." She told of ments Michael had paid her. She proposal. ("You are my rainbow had said.) She was on the verge o

CONTINUED ON PAGE 1

Flannelette to keep you comfy...

advice to keep you smart!

ke a princess, feel warm as wonderful flannelette . . . one ear's fabric favorites. Such rints, such coziness . . . with ity, durability.

Feel like a pauper one washday later! Flannelette deserves its reputation for shrinkage. One sudsing, and size 16 can shrink to 12 . . . unless it's labeled "Sanforized"!

Dress-length shirt! New, come-into-my-parlor type flannelette in smart, comfortable shirt-dress style. Always in fashion, cut this year along slim, tapered lines.

Shirt-length dress! Oops—your short-sighted buying is showing! If you had looked for the "Sanforized" label, your cotton would never have shrunk out of fit . . . out of style.

ye in pajamas as cute as a ear. Designed for warmth, buttoned neck and tapered s cuddle close to protect her he kicks the covers off.

Bye-bye looks and comfort. A cuddle becomes a tight squeeze when shrinkage sets in. So, whenever you buy cottons—especially flannelette—look for the label "Sanforized"!

Moral: No matter where you buy,

no matter how much you pay, always check to see if it's a "Sanforized" cotton

ESPECIALLY IF IT'S FLANNELETTE!

Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc. permits use of its trade-mark "Sanforized," adopted in 1930, only on fabrics which meet this company's rigid shrinkage requirements. Fabrics bearing the trade-mark "Sanforized" will not shrink more than 1% by the Government's standard test.

This is the quicker Wesson way to start digestible frying...

You start by pouring light, s oil—Wesson Oil. No lost m out and melting solid shorte too—pour just what you ne waste a drop.

Wesson Oil gives you an ex safety for light, digestible fry Wesson heats hotter without costliest solid shortenings. when fat smokes and burns down—harming your fried fo fries so safely—you can enj foods at the same meal!

You'll taste the difference, t fry with this pure vegetab There's a fresh delicacy in special lightness you'll find kind of shortening.

WESSON "FRENCH F S"

Cut potatoes into strips ⅜-i ⅜-inch thick. Pat dry with pa Fry until light brown in deep heated to 385° F. (For ext potatoes may be soaked in co hour before frying.) Wesson I to be light and digestible.

SKILLET BURGER BA S

Burger Balls:

- 1½ pounds ground beef
- 1½ teaspoons salt
- 1 slightly beaten egg
- ½ cup dry bread crumbs

Sauce:

- ¼ cup Wesson Oil
- 1 cup chopped onion
- ½ cup chopped green pep
- 1 clove garlic, minced
- 2 8-oz. cans tomato sauce
- 1 tablespoon Worcestersh
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1 teaspoon celery seed
- Dash of pepper

Combine ground beef, 1½ te egg and crumbs. Shape into bal in diameter. Brown in skillet i Oil, remove from skillet. In cook onion and green pepper utes. Add rest of ingredients, ing. Add meat balls; cover, a minutes. Makes 6 servings.

America's Favorite

for Frying, Salads, Chiffon Cakes, Stir-N-Roll Pie Crust and Biscuits

Wesson Oil

SEE "HAWKINS FALLS" — NBC-TV NETWORK MONDAY THRU FRIDAY

NUED FROM PAGE 176

he had experienced when he'd is arms, but at that point Miss
r.
Virginia, is the sine qua non of Dove said.
told of the evening when the vs had come over the radio.
ent black," she said. Tears er cheeks. She looked very ap-ry pretty, and about ten years
y I had a telegram. It said, you can understand.'"
" asked Miss Dove.
y sobbed. "I still can't. Can said Miss Dove. "Have you a Virginia?"

aid Jincey.
on her desk, Miss Dove took a tissue. Like a queen stepping throne to distribute largess, vn from her dais and gave the
She returned to her desk.

her eyes. She blew her nose.
do—exactly?" she asked. She ls and waited to be told.
Miss Dove knew the answer.
m was uncomplicated when
ely. And yet, she hesitated. To ctly what steps to take toward as apt to weaken him. It deis inalienable right to trial and s tonic to the character. But d the claims of childhood upon ting in her old place. And she er handkerchief.
Miss Dove said quietly. "First, n to your sister's house. Enter fall upon your knees, and give Heavenly Father."
incey gasped. "For what?"
ing you from a fate worse than Dove said. The expression, utrecise, calm accents, sounded or melodramatic.
?" Jincey echoed.
," Miss Dove repeated flatly.
that the young man to whom your affection discovered that you had altered."
d, dumb with misery.
wever, an honorable avenue of uld have requested you to re-his commitment."
to cry again.
choose to take that honorable Dove said. "Why?"
w," said Jincey.
tell you," said Miss Dove. Her . She might have been explain-ice between longitude and latiecause he was a cad, a coward low principles."
Jincey. She sounded as if she blasphemy. But over her face ression of exquisite relief. "I must be something wrong with lay in a rashness of judgment,"

e. "His lay in dishonor." She the distinction sink into the isness. "And then, after you l gratitude to the Power that a disastrous alliance, you must luty to your neighbor and your-find a useful occupation."
k I could teach?" asked Jincey.
not," said Miss Dove. "But spheres of service."
a nurse."
," Miss Dove agreed. Nurses
d. Their shoes had low, solid ir hair! Miss Dove thought ap-ncey's hair tucked into a net and starched white cap.
er a nursing order," Jincey said l become a nun." She laid her aceful gesture of renunciation,
m.
is about nunneries?" Thomas ded from the doorway. He ed and breathless, like a doctor s arrived in time to countermand ription.
ning, Thomas," said Miss Dove.

"Good morning, Miss Dove," said Thomas. He came into the room, a tall, lean young man with a humorous mouth, a steady eye and a stubborn chin. "Why, Jincey!" he exclaimed, affecting surprise. "Holy mackerel, kitten, you're all grown up!" His tone implied that fact to be arranged primarily for his benefit.

"So are you," said Jincey.

"Naturally," said Thomas. He was twenty-seven. He had fought in a war and studied medicine and was on the staff of the local hospital. Of course he was grown up. "But it's rather odd of you. Though extremely becoming."

"Thank you," said Jincey. "It's nice you approve."

"The last time I saw her was before I went east to med school," Thomas told Miss Dove. "I was being separated from the Navy and she from Cedar Grove. She shot my brother Randy in the ——"

SIMULTANEOUSLY A BIRD

By HANNAH KAHN

Suddenly you stir, sensing me here,
and turn your head . . . your eyes hold mine in flight and something quivers in the moving air, something unsaid that underlines the night.

Intangible the thread that binds us two;
you, half asleep and I somehow remote as though I were a stranger watching you with time suspended on a single note.

And then you speak. I cannot hear the word and yet I think it is my name you call. . . .
Simultaneously a small dark bird invades the sky and in this interval
I am again myself and you are he deeply beloved and very near to me.

"Virginia cannot enjoy being reminded of that," said Miss Dove.

"It was very reprehensible," Thomas said. "You must be relieved, Miss Dove, to be finished with us Bakers. Sterling was mamma's last black lamb."

"Sterling has many sterling qualities," Miss Dove said with no intention of making a pun. "Except for his levity ——"

"Levity is a handicap," Thomas said. "I'm a martyr to it. I often think it's what's kept me single. I'm going fine with a girl, you know. Everything's leading up to Lohengrin. And then—just at the throbbing, tender moment—I can't resist a wisecrack!"

Jincey laughed. Her laughter was sweet bells in tune. She tossed her head. The dazed expression passed over Thomas' eyes.

"Sterling's behavior was inexcusable," said Miss Dove.

"He was giving me the SOS with ear jerks while Fae was reciting Trees," said Thomas. "I taught him to do that."

"It was rude," said Miss Dove.

"I'll speak to my mother when she returns from Boston," Thomas said. "She knows how to deal with smart guys."

"I dare say," said Miss Dove.

Thomas turned to Jincey. "Did you always sit there?" he asked her. "I was first in the first row."

Miss Dove looked at Thomas' old desk. All the Baker boys had sat there. She was aware of a constriction in her chest.

Jincey wrinkled her shapely nose. "Does this room smell different to you, Tommy?"

Thomas took a step toward her. He inhaled deeply. "And much better," he said.

Jincey laughed again.

Miss Dove deplored what seemed to be transpiring before her eyes. Jincey's new-found purpose was not yet proof against blandishment. In the Webbs the vein of romance ran as close to the skin as did the vein of comedy in the Bakers.

"I expect the hospital keeps you busy, Thomas," she said.

"Yes. It calls me now." He glanced at Jincey. "My car's out back. If I could drop you off somewhere ——"

"Fine." Jincey rose. "Good-by, Miss Dove. And thank you. I'll remember." (It struck Miss Dove that she'd forgotten a good deal already.) "I'll think about the nursing career. Maybe Tommy can advise me."

"I'll advise her very carefully," Thomas said with the utmost gravity. And suddenly, just before he left with Jincey, he gave Miss Dove a smile of such ineffable sweetness as she had never seen before. She remembered a metaphor, read somewhere long ago and scarcely thought of since that spoke of life—or was it love?—as "honey on the tongue."

Miss Dove took her flat-brimmed hat from a cupboard in the corner. She put it on without benefit of mirror. She closed the windows and drew the green shades down over the glass. In the dim, watery light the room looked mysterious, like a room in a dream. Miss Dove was not a fanciful woman, but for an instant she had a fleeting vision of children—familiar children and yet new—stirring in the shadows. All the end-of-the-year fatigue fell away from her. She felt elated and greedy for the future. It was a curious sensation. Perhaps it was what people meant by happiness.

I am fifty-four, she thought. I won't have to retire until sixty-seven. She paused, calculating. (A different kind of woman would have counted on her fingers.) If they didn't tarry—and recalling the smile and the laughter, she didn't expect they would tarry—then she could take the first child straight through to graduation. The child would need her. Jincey would be a doting dandling mother. She would rock her children to sleep and kiss their bruises and call them by baby-talk names like Punkin and Boo. Thomas, as a father, would cut a sorry figure indeed. A father who was a "martyr to levity." A father who "couldn't resist a wisecrack!"

And yet, Miss Dove reflected, possibly all that, along with shiny hair and silly shoes and pretty smells (for Jincey's agreeable scent still hung on the air), was part of a plan designed by an Authority she did not question. For if everyone lived upon Miss Dove's own lofty plane—if everyone perceived with perfect clarity the hard, serious truths of human life—then there would be no parents and no children. There would be only teachers.

In this magnanimous mood Miss Dove left her classroom. In the foyer of the building, under the picture of Galahad and his horse, the art teacher was serving refreshments to the graduates and their guests. Miss Dove moved among the mothers, greeting them graciously. As she approached Mrs. Knight she saw that lady slap a slice of coconut cake out of the hand of her illustrious son.

"Lester, Jr., you pig!" Mrs. Knight sputtered between clenched teeth. "You're going to be sick, sick, sick, and serve you right!"

"Good morning, Mrs. Knight," said Miss Dove. "I'm sure you are proud of Lester."

MRS. KNIGHT wheeled around. As she gazed up into the teacher's serene, cloudless, omniscient eyes—as she imagined a summer uncluttered with the care and feeding of children—pity was the least of her emotions.

But she managed to compose her features. She put her arm around Lester, Jr.'s, shoulders. "All that he is he owes to you, Miss Dove," she said.

Miss Dove inclined her head in acknowledgment of the tribute. "It is my rule," she said, "to regard my each success simply as one more challenge." END

Choose wall-to-wall carpet for a beautiful home as well as for your family's health

Only properly installed tight-fitting wall-to-wall carpet eliminates cold-bearing draughts. That's why so many thoughtful homemakers choose

Smoothedge®
TACKLESS CARPET INSTALLATION

No Tack Marks

Carpet is gripped from underneath. There are no ugly dust-catching tack marks. You'll have that smooth, tailored finish along moldings and up to doorways, hearths, and stairs—as pretty as the magazine pictures.

Send today for our free booklet. It tells you what to look for when you're buying carpet—besides giving you loads of hints on decorating problems.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED HEREIN
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

THE ROBERTS CO.
Dept. LH410
1536 N. Indiana St., Los Angeles 54, Calif.

Please send me my free copy of "Carpet As You'd Like It."

*Name*_____
*Address*_____
*City*_____ *Zone*____ *State*_____
Note: In Canada write Box 129, Weston, Ontario

NEW! COSCO® TRAY CART!

with the top that doubles as a serving tray!

● Dandy for parties, handy for countless household tasks! Five-ply COSCOAT woodgrain finish in blonde, gray or green. Chromium or smart black enamel on legs and handles. Rolls and turns at a finger's touch on 3" casters. 29½" high, 16½" x 23½". At department, furniture, hardware stores. Get yours now—and be sure it's Cosco. Accept no substitutes!

Model 8-W Tray Cart, $14.95*

*$15.95 Colorado and west.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY

In Canada: COSCO Products Ltd., Oshawa, Ontario

HAMILTON MANUFACTURING CORPORATION
COLUMBUS, INDIANA

COPYRIGHT 1954 ©

"My husband says that since we got our Club Aluminum I make the best fried chicken he's tasted. And I've noticed that low-heat waterless cooking cuts food bills because less meat shrinkage gives me more servings from everything I buy."

Mrs. W. A. Clare
1718 S. Edgefield, Dallas, Texas

Club Aluminum

HAMMERCRAFT WATERLESS COOKWARE

thick-cast to last a lifetime!

Always cooks better because even heat is spread quickly not only across bottom but to sides and top as well. For yourself or for gifts, see the complete Club Aluminum line at your favorite store.

CLUB ALUMINUM PRODUCTS COMPANY, CHICAGO 14

DIARY OF DOMESTICITY

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 40

worst bugbear has been laid to rest. We always plan to present the house with special gifts at Christmas and keep a fund especially for this. We feel the little house has sheltered us so steadfastly, we owe it gifts from time to time—and I admit they tend to be gifts that make life for us easier and more serene. Such a gift was the dishwasher—oh, most memorable of additions. Almost no single thing takes the drudgery out of homemaking as the dishwasher does.

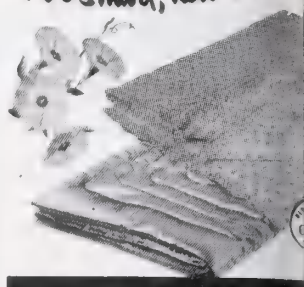
And now behold a new wonder—the electric incinerator, as unbelievable as roses in a snowdrift! In the country, rubbish disposal comes to be so acute that you can hardly bear it. Even in many small towns there is no rubbish collection. We have tried all kinds of dodges: burying it in big pits—always dug up the next night by the wild folk in the woods; lugging to the dump—a hazardous trip over shingle nails and tin-can covers up an entirely unrepaired road.

Often the burnable trash sits in the barn for days because it is too windy to risk a fire. Holly rushes about tossing eggshells and cottage-cheese cartons in her wake. Winter blizzards add to the trouble, for rubbish knows no season.

Now the anniversary of the paying off of the mortgage is celebrated by a tidy little affair about the size of a television set which sits calmly in the cellar, hooked up to the furnace flue. It runs by electricity (though it can be had with gas for those who have gas). And it reduces everything except cans and bottles to a fine small ash, which you pull out at the bottom in a drawer!

A happy family is but an earlier heaven. —SIR JOHN ROWRING

Like the freezer, I know this incinerator will pay for itself in a short time. The freezer ate up its purchase cost so fast we never did get it figured out how. Our new friend will save hundreds of trips to the dump, the flat tires from same, the gas, the shortness of temper; does away with the fire hazard of any outdoor burning, saves hours of housework, and is a health protection besides.



I guess now all that's left is for some big-hearted manufacturer, bless them all, to invent a thing that will take down curtains, wash, starch and iron them and rehang them while I am walking in the woods observing nature!

Tiki and Teddy devote their time to rushing through the leaves; the black and white of Tiki and the red-gold of Teddy look dramatic in the whirling tawny drifts. Above them the blaze of sugar maples illumines the sky. Tiki and Teddy are like schoolboys. When Tiki is studying his lessons—bringing in that leather object—Teddy decides he wants to do the same thing. When Teddy is heeling and sitting, Tiki runs to heel and sit with him. This complicates Jill's training considerably, especially as Jonquil is also jumping up and down at the door and Holly is squeaking like a boat pulled on shingle.

Everybody wants to be Obedience-trained at the same moment, and then no matter who has been taking the hurdles, everybody knows when the lesson is over and they converge at once on the refrigerator. So they all get rewards and, being dogs and not humans, they are all happy.

After supper, we have a last race in the leaves. The sight of nine dogs running as the moon rises is a most beautiful thing for eye to look on. The wine-dark air, the lighted fire of the great maples, the lesser lantern of the fireplace shining through the windows of the old white house, these seem wonderful to me as I follow the dogs with my pedestrian feet. Tiki (High Heritage) flies past, Teddy (Especially Me) swings like a kite after the flying shining Irish. The others run, run, run.

I walk, but my heart runs too. END

For smart, new Bedroo

PICK TAYLOR-M
QUILTS & COMFO

See Taylor-Made's beautiful new Sanidown quilt-spreads. So lovely day-time beauty and just-right co nights. A variety of other valu styles in bright, wash-fast prin bound edges.

Enjoy Taylor-Made's new all-v Glory satin comforter — a warn beauty in lovely two-tone combina elastic corner straps. Many othe covers, all moderately priced an beautiful.

Other Taylor-Made products i layer-bilt batting, new contour typ tress protectors and famous Mo mattresses.

At your dry goods or depart

TAYLOR BEDDING M
SINCE 1903

SAVE MONE
WINDOW DECORA

Mrs. R. P. Polk, Shaker Hei

"I SAVED $46 the Cameo De Estimates for m windows were Thanks to Cam my own decor saved the diff

CUSTOM-FIT EVERY V in your home with CAME
DE LUXE Slip-Cover® CU
AND FLIK DRAPE

Custom sizes at ready-made at stores everywher

SEND 10c FOR CAMEO'S DO-IT GUIDE TO WINDOW DECORA CAMEO DECOR-CHAR

CAMEO CURTA
BOX 952E, New York

$1.95 KIT MAKES $3.5

What a wonderful gift idea- to give to others for "do-it-y With pair of gloves you get ing yarns, needle, pattern, anc One basic size to fit all ha make, fun to wear—get $1.9 Kits in 6 different designs a work and notions departme $2.00 for No. 10 Harlequina —sent by return mail postpa Glove Casuals, Dept. L10, 5 New York 36, N. Y.

FALL FLING

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 85

185° F.—about 6 hours, allow- nutes per pound. One half hour is done, cut the rind off and aking a pattern of diamonds or with cloves and season with d ½ teaspoon sage. Increase and finish roasting. Remove nd garnish with parsley and bles.

n have applesauce, cranberry served fruit such as plums, sh-plum jelly. Be sure there's ard about, and a jug of d fresh cranberries and 1 and cut up, using the coarse d grinder. Mix with ½ cup or and if you taste you'll know ½ teaspoons ginger and 1 cup . Chill. This makes 4 cups.

NBERRY RELISH

mbination. This refers to mush- n—or as I call them, string— they are tied up with a string, d the French are so thoughtful and slice them, and so do we. h the beans," and you all know s. So here is a casserole with e mushroom hobnobbing to- ce

N-EAN-AND-MUSHROOM CASSEROLE

l mushrooms, sliced, and 1 , sliced, in ½ cup butter or 1 ¼ cup flour and cook until his to 2 cups milk, warm but nd 1 cup light cream in the nd don't let it alone for a min- irred.

nd sharp Cheddar cheese, ⅛ sco, 2 teaspoons soy sauce, 1 ½ teaspoon pepper and 1 sodium glutamate. Simmer e is melted.

kages frozen Frenched green water until just tender. Drain. mushroom sauce and one 5- ter chestnuts, drained and o a casserole, sprinkle with ½ d, slivered blanched almonds. tes in a moderately hot oven it bubbles through the top and casserole has been prepared ome cool, allow 35 to 40 min- roughly through and bake as e.

a hurry, you may substitute ns sliced mushrooms and two whole green beans for the n items. For the sauce, sub- und jar ready-to-use cheese heese, reduce milk to ½ cup teaspoon.

late, they say, and we hear it are never too late to learn. ut I wish it applied to other e on time, and something hap- me. Something stops me from am going to hurry now to tell too late. about a different kind lled Savory Toast. Read on and y.

AVORY TOAST

nd butter or margarine. Mix easpoon thyme, ¼ teaspoon spoon salt and ½ teaspoon ork into the butter or marga- er fork. Cut slices of bread in e or in strips and spread with ace on a baking sheet. Toast own in a hot oven (400° F.) minutes. These make a sea- onable addition to the appe-

CADO DRESSING

¾ cup salad oil, ¼ cup wine lespoons lemon juice, ½ cup vocado, ¼ teaspoon dry mus- tard, ¼ teaspoon sugar, salt to taste, ½ tea- spoon grated onion, a dash of pepper and 1 small clove garlic, crushed. Beat all together with a rotary beater or in your electric blender. The blender makes a smoother dressing. Makes 1½ cups. Pour some over crisp salad greens, endive and sliced red on- ions separated into rings. Toss all together.

Give it the raspberry. Once upon a time, as the old fairy stories begin, a man had an idea. He wasn't the first man to have an idea, but this was so revolutionary that it stood out like a sore thumb. It was the idea that came to pass and emerged as "frozen food." The man's name was Birdseye, and I was among the little group that was the first to taste those fruits and vegetables in treatment new, anyway. And this is why anywhere, any time, you may have al- most everything to eat that grows on land or in water. And so in any season you may have dessert ——

RASPBERRY-SHERBET RING

Pack 1½ quarts raspberry sherbet into a ring mold. You may make it, which is easy, or you may buy it, which is a good deal easier. Freeze it until firm. Just before serving, dip ring quickly into warm water. Unmold on your best company serving plate. If it gets broken, don't worry. Someone may give you a handsomer one. Fill the center of the mold with chilled drained canned black sweet cherries and frozen pineapple chunks, nicely thawed. Dust the top of the mold with shredded coconut.

Well, I guess this is enough of my fall fling, and I should love to hear about yours.

Your ANNIE.

A few shakes of Ac'cent make vegetables taste garden-fresh!

A few shakes of Ac'cent and meats are meatier . . . chicken tastier . . . vegetables garden-fresh. You see, Ac'cent is nature's own way of restoring and intensifying flavors lost during shipping, storing and cooking foods. Ac'cent, monosodium glutamate in its pure crystal form, is as easy to use as salt. Just shake it on meats before cooking . . . vegetables while cooking . . . salads before adding the dressing. And taste the fuller flavor right away. Remember, a few shakes of Ac'cent will make you a better cook. Get Ac'cent at your favorite store today . . . start making good foods taste better.

In 1-lb. Gourmet . . . 8-oz. Economy . . .
4-oz. Home . . . 1-oz. Introductory Size.

makes food flavors sing

Ac'cent®

PURE MONOSODIUM GLUTAMATE

Ac'cent International, 20 N. Wacker Drive, Chicago 6, Ill.

TELL ME DOCTOR

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 43

The doctor rummaged about his desk and produced a copy of a medical magazine. "Here is a report of a woman of twenty-three who had the onset of menstruation at twelve and irregular menses until she was twenty-one. After being married for one and a half years, menstruation ceased—not due to pregnancy, however. An operation for appendicitis at about that time revealed normal ovaries and an infantile uterus. Physical examination gave normal results except for atrophic—meaning shrinking—changes in the vaginal lining. Hormonal treatment was begun and the first course resulted in the return of menstruation. Basal body-temperature readings, however, did not indicate ovulation. Following the third series of treatments, this patient became pregnant in the next cycle. Later she delivered a child successfully, after which cyclic menstruation was resumed.

"Your history closely parallels this one up to the time when this young woman first received active treatment. We shall hope that the subsequent history will also prove similar."

"That would be wonderful! I remember you said that the treatment of infantile uterus some years ago wasn't very satisfactory."

"Doctors certainly did not know as much about endocrinology two decades ago as they do now. They have been working on the problem of infantilism for many years, however."

"I am beginning to feel very hopeful."

"Then again I must caution you that I cannot promise anything. All I can say is this: the uterus which shows only an arrested development reacts favorably to hormone stimulation, and can often be made to menstruate and otherwise function. It is important to recognize this condition in the young, adolescent female, and I think that if the methods of treatment which we have today had been available when your menstrual function first failed, it probably could have been corrected at that time. Any adolescent who fails to menstruate at the appropriate time should have a thorough examination by a competent gynecologist."

"Of course I am anxious to know what you are going to do for me, Doctor."

"The first thing will be to place you on a reducing diet. Not a drastic one, which might lead to sudden loss of weight for a short time, followed by a gain equally rapid when the first enthusiasm wore off. When we have succeeded in getting your weight down to that of a normal young woman of five feet five, we will start the hormone therapy. Your ovaries, although smaller than I would expect, are far from minute in size. I consider this very much in your favor. I am hopeful that we shall be able to stimulate them to increased hormone production so that they will activate the uterine lining into a state approaching normalcy. You see, there is a difference between the uterus which fails to develop in early life and one in which development begins but becomes retarded."

"There is one thing which puzzles me. You say my uterus is undersized—of the infantile type. If I should be fortunate enough to become pregnant, after all the treatment I am to have, would it be big enough to hold my baby?"

"In other words, would you be likely to abort?"

"That is what I mean, Doctor."

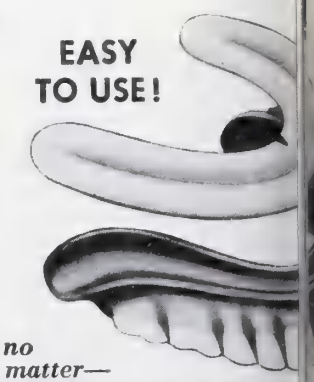
"Well, I can't guarantee against that, Mrs. Dill, but I do not think it is likely. You see, the normal nonpregnant uterus is relatively tiny in comparison to the pregnant uterus at term—its capacity enlarges several hundred times—and I don't think it would make too much difference about the initial size."

"Suppose I don't get pregnant after all this treatment I am going to have?"

"Sterility is quite another problem. You must not forget that you might have been sterile, even though you menstruated regularly from the time of puberty. If you can be made to menstruate and ovulate, you will have a good chance for pregnancy, provided your husband is fertile. That is an entirely different subject. Let us solve our present problem first, if we can."

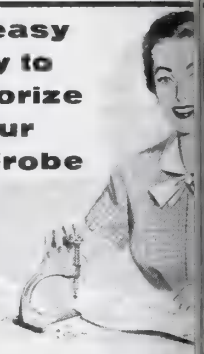
"I am ready, Doctor."

Another article in this series by Doctor Safford will appear next month.



MUST WE SEND OUR CHILDREN TO PRIVATE SCHOOLS?

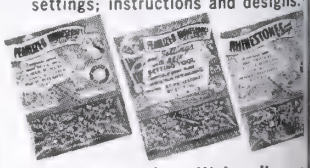
CONTINUED FROM PAGE 63



behind this type of promotion is that "the whole child" is benefited if he is not allowed to experience failure; so he is promoted to the next higher level in order that he may stay with his companions of the same chronological age without having mastered the material of the grade level he is leaving.

As he passes on from year to year, the gaps in his foundation increase until he finally reaches "high school," where the teachers are told they must take him where he is and not where they think he ought to be in order to profit from high-school work.

The curriculum has been adjusted to the abilities of the slow learners in so far as possi-



no matter—
HOW POORLY YOUR PLATE
HOW OLD YOUR PLATE IS HOW LONG IT HAS HURT YO EZO Dental Cushions are guaranteed to PERFECT FIT
COMPLETE RELIEF LASTING COMFORT
or money back by retur
EZO Dental Cushions help gums due to ill-fitting plate them FIT! . . . lets you E money returned.
$1.25 for 16 uppers, $1.25 —or send $2.50 for EZO PRODUCTS COMPANY, Box 9306, Philadelphia

with the new Walco
Rhinestone
Now Walco has made it even simpler for you to glamorize your own collars, sweaters, blouses, gloves, bags, belts, all your accessories with beautiful Walco crystal rhinestones and pearls. As easy as using a stapler, you can apply the most intricate, luxurious, professional looking designs. The Walco setter is not a toy or sheet metal stamping; it is made of precision parts . . . solid, all-metal arm.

Rhinestone Setter Kit
A complete kit containing: rhine 160 crystal rhinestones and pea settings; instructions and designs.

See the complete Walco line rhinestone, pearl and setting refil leading variety, notion, trimming ment stores.

Walco BEAD CO., DI
37 WEST 37th ST
☐ Enclosed is 25¢ for generous rhinestones, settings and literature
Name
Address
City State

is very little that can be found
m. The problem, in many cases, rderly conduct on the part of the ents. If they do not become re-ey sink into a state of apathy.
n portion of the human race is in learning from books, pressure and compulsory-attendance laws hese young people antagonistic ers, who are to them the symbol they hate. They take revenge on orce them to stay in school by iserable for the teachers and for ustrate from a group of pupils I in a class in high-school English.

ublesome boy in the class (who almost unbearable for teachers es for years) worked in a flower vacations and weekends. He was work and was giving satisfaction er. He begged his parents to let ool and work full time in the Failing to get their consent, he ucceeded in making life a hell on teacher and his classmates. Anr of the class had worked on a the summer, had loved it and main on the farm, but he also he consent of his parents, so he tted the first troublemaker. One er so happy as when working as a key" in a filling station, but he ed the privilege of following his ions. I could cite innumerable and girls who would have been had been allowed to do work e with their abilities and inter-thing they all had in common studying from books.

gedies and near tragedies are t by overly ambitious parents.
of one marking period, a big,
-old boy—good and conscienlow learner—on receiving his re-h consistently low grades burst llable sobs and said that he home because his parents would him. I could not quiet him and him to the school infirmary and he care of the school nurse while his father to come to the school.
ke it clear that unless he could n and be proud of him because t character, he was in danger of together. I believed that the boy a state of despair that he might life unless the tension was eased.
y the condition in which he had , the father seemed to grasp the they left with the father's arm around the shoulders of his boy. In many cases, however, parental pride predominates over parental love and sympathy. Disheartened teen-agers sometimes resort to suicide.

Another boy, with an I.Q. of 84, who has a bright older brother in college, and who has been made to feel that it is a disgrace not to go to college, comes to me regularly with the query, "Mrs. Struve, how can I get smart? I gotta go to college." How would you answer?

An excellent carpenter is doing some work for me. When he has to communicate with me, his wife writes his letters for him. He was lucky enough to escape compulsory school attendance and learned his trade by the apprenticeship route. He has no inferiority complex; he knows that he excels in his line of work just as a good letter writer does in his. He is one who literally sings at his job. Until we lay aside the false and snobbish attitude that all learning must be book learning and develop a sense of pride in any kind of job well done, we are going to produce rebellious, unhappy misfits, who will vent their unhappiness and sense of frustration on all around them.

The policy of passing students on without requiring them to meet standards is deleterious to bright pupils as well as to slow learners. Many of the bright pupils get by with so little effort that they fall into lazy habits. There is not sufficient challenge to stimulate them to effort. Deep respect is due to those boys and girls whose ambition and desire for knowledge motivate them to achieve a high degree of excellence in their scholastic endeavors in spite of the fact that they could get by with little effort if so inclined. To their everlasting credit, there are many such students, who are the real reward to the teachers for their dedication to a difficult job.

Other offenders against young people are the employers who insist on a high-school diploma as a requirement for employment. This demand has caused the schools to drop practically all requirements for high-school graduation except that a pupil has sat in a class for a certain number of hours. If the young person has to have a high-school diploma to get a job, say the educators, the schools must give him one. The employers have defeated their own purpose, because the high-school diploma no longer has any meaning for many young persons other than that they have spent at least twelve years in a schoolhouse. Why not give the nonacademic young person a chance for a job and dismiss him if he proves unsatisfactory?

There was a time when a high-school diploma could at least serve as a character reference. This condition, unfortunately, is no longer true. It is practically impossible to have a student expelled from school now, because the administrators argue that no matter how vicious a young person is, it is better for him to be in school than on the streets. (The question of his harm to other young people is passed over.) The maladjusted students have found out that they will be passed along regardless of achievement or conduct. Consequently, these young people take greater and greater liberties each year. In instances like these, high schools are substituting for reform schools, and normal well-behaved children must be neglected because of the time-consuming struggle to keep under control these insolent and froward young people.

Now I am not advocating putting these young people out on the streets to run around in unsupervised gangs. I am advocating setting up standards. After every possible effort has been made to teach the retarded students the reading skills necessary for further progress in academic subjects, by means of remedial reading classes, individual attention, and any other methods of awakening the interest of such pupils, then I believe we should sift out those students who are unfit for, and totally uninterested in, an academic education. I would favor placing them in training centers for which they are suited, such as trade schools, conservation camps, farms, or other projects

"I haven't slept a wink over it. How could a wolf look enough like a grandmother to fool Little Red Ridinghood?"

Look in the nicest homes and you'll see how Royledge makes shelves so much nicer!

Add that fresh, crisp look to your home this delightfully simple way...choose the Royledge shelvings that express the personality of your home! Kitchens, playrooms, linen closets fairly bloom with Royledge! Makes housework easier, too...Wipes clean with a damp cloth, will not fade or curl.

Royledge is edging and lining all-in-one; comes regular or X-tra width for wide, wide shelves. Now at your favorite Variety, Supermarket or Department Store . . . shelf magic at pennies a package!

Select from DOZENS of SMART PATTERNS

DESIGNED FOR Royal LIVING EVERY DAY!

Royal Lace Paper Works, Inc., Brooklyn 1, N. Y. (A Subsidiary of Eastern Corp.)

Now break the painful grip of muscular

BACK ACHE!

Product of Bristol-Myers

CONTAINS 3 DOCTOR'S-PRESCRIPTION INGREDIENTS . . . PLUS SOOTHING LANOLIN

When muscle strain or over-exercise leaves your back stiff, sore and aching . . . get deep-down relief with new, greaseless Minit-Rub!

New Minit-Rub combines 3 pain-relieving prescription ingredients with soothing lanolin —in a special vanishing cream base.

So its medication starts action faster—faster than greasy rubs, faster than pain tablets! And unlike harsh-irritant rubs, new Minit-Rub won't burn your skin—yet its penetrating heat sensation relieves pain even deep-down.

Use new Minit-Rub for muscular aches, pains, strains—and as a chest rub for cold miseries, too. All drug counters, 39¢ and 69¢.

Greaseless! Stainless! Applies like Vanishing Cream!

Makes Skin Lovelier

as Pimples* Clear Up

Softer, Smoother Skin starts in 7 days . . . or money back!

Hundreds of doctors use and prefer Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Here's why:

Cuticura Soap, alone of all leading soaps, is superfatted—the mildest, best kind of soap for the skin. And emollient Cuticura Ointment actually improves your skin as it helps clear up blackheads, oiliness and *externally caused pimples. In 7 days you'll see the start of thrilling new softness, radiant new tone.

Use Cuticura Soap several times daily, Cuticura Ointment at night. You'll get the "all clear" sign in record time! Get Cuticura at your druggist today!

Cuticura

NEW! For faster results, use new "invisible" Cuticura Medicated Liquid during the day, under your make-up. For generous trial size bottle plus sample of Cuticura Soap send 10¢ to cover mailing cost to CUTICURA, Dept. LH 10, Malden 48, Mass.

where they can be taught to live useful lives and to acquire some means of earning a livelihood. There they would have a chance to achieve a sense of satisfaction in doing what they are suited for. So that mistakes could be avoided and justice done, I would see that such decisions were never made on the basis of one examination. A series of achievement and aptitude tests, using all known methods of measuring a child's abilities, performances and attitudes, could be administered over a period of four or five years. Moreover, I would advocate giving such a child a yearly opportunity to re-enter the academic world if he could show that his interests or his aptitudes have changed. The large number of juvenile delinquents in school today shows that the regular type of school is not able to deter them from unsocial activities. I believe that the establishment of the CCC during the depression years was one of the wisest moves ever made in this country and that it is a plan that should be continued in normal times. [Where the project was real and contribution was actual, the Civilian Conservation Corps programs were a success. They were not successful when young men felt that they were doing "made work" which had no real social utility. Ed.]

Among the institutions set up for training the young, there should be college-preparatory high schools for young people capable of going on to higher institutions of learning. Entrance to these schools should be based on total school record and examinations in academic subjects. The training given in these high schools should be equivalent to that given in the best private schools. There would be many disgruntled parents and students, at first, because of the rejection of nonacademic youngsters, but people have a way of accepting conditions when they m all have to face sooner or limitations. Since the exam open to all young people, justifiable complaint of un tion. To avoid that injustice be given continuing tests Parents who still insisted intellectual children to c schools could send them to p pay for their education. Ge should continue to be prov not seeking college-prepara

It is my sincere belief tha cational practices are failing character or happiness and will be disastrous to our c know personally any teache the practices they are require of us believe that by keepin that pupils who receive high are meeting established st teaching them to evade truth that, by setting up unrealis able goals, we are developing alities who will break down w fronted with the demands teachers, however, are afr voices in protest because t They are reluctant to give u they have spent years in prep uncertainty of getting into teachers have given years to selves to teach, they want to want standards established a help, however, must come and influential laymen. T magicians; they cannot trans into a genius; they could, proper conditions, do much child than they are doing no

LET'S ATTACK THE PROBLEMS . . NOT THE SCHOOLS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 57

the total number was not too large, a good teacher was able to do an amazing job through flexible grouping for different kinds of activities. In larger schools the possibilities for improving learning through appropriate grouping are increased greatly.

DR. GRISWOLD: Most of what has been said regarding teaching in elementary and secondary schools applies with equal validity to teaching in universities. This is a relative problem. Many a professor has said to me, "I wish I could pitch it to the best students." But he has fifty students, has to try to reach them all.

Question: How can this grouping according to ability be made more acceptable to parents and children?

DR. WOODRING: I believe Mr. Laramy suggested the answer by what he is doing in his junior-high school. In mathematics classes children are divided into sections on the basis of demonstrated mathematical ability. In English or language studies they are divided on the basis of their special ability in that area; in music, the same. They are divided on the basis of ability in each subject, without any social distinctions being implied. A child might be in the top group in mathematics, in the middle group in English, and so on.

MR. LARAMY: Parents do not object to that kind of grouping. They appreciate the effort that is being made. I have a youngster in the eighth grade who can read at only about the fifth-grade level—and he is placed with our slowest-reading eighth-grade group. His mother tells me he is happy in school for the first time because now he can compete with others at his own level.

DR. HOHMAN: When parents of certain children having difficulty in school consult me, I ask them, "How would you like to go out and do nuclear physics at Los Alamos?" I tell them I know what would happen to me—I would g very short time. "Therefo can't do nuclear physics w pieces and your child can' work without going to piec any question that we do p by pushing beyond capacit

MR. LARAMY: That's righ should be stimulated and enc way to do their best work. B have push and it good.

Culture is simply the hospitality of the intellect. Your mind is open to new ideas and large views: when they enter, you know how to receive them, and to entertain, be entertained, and take what they have to offer without allowing them to dominate you. —TOM KETTLE

DR there in the still! push everyt curric any in or dif I am I hear schools provide little encoura ing Shakespeare and Milton hand, we must realize there ar who can get little meaning fro

DR. GRISWOLD: Certainly individual differences into think there has been too muc out of Shakespeare and Milt and the more difficult types of the false assumption that nob good out of them. This mater down process has come fron tudes in the schools and from confused standards and out of fear of political reprisals in ou

DR. CHASE: Yes, of cou schools today claim to be me needs; but in far too many won't find any differences in th set or in the experiences the ch ing. I think the biggest challe our schools is to put success w of every child, but make him to grasp it. When we confuse su choose how much support you want instantly

. . . anytime
with djst to firm support ni working

. . r to medium or light pport when playing or dging — or for that "girdle feeling anytime

. . r to take care of those r dic changes in your n?.

Id you can have a truly adjustable ur tion . . . and, as a result, the os omfortable one you have ever or You will find them on sale at tt stores everywhere . . . priced or 7.50 to $16.50 . . . and worth e comfortable cent. Available at ac g stores everywhere.

ind out the facts about gure control . . . send for this free booklet.

CAMP

H AMP & CO., Dept. L10, Jackson, Michigan oc of Scientific Foundations for Daily Wear and at cal Supports for the Medical Profession.

with mere promotion to the next grade, we blur the satisfaction of genuine achievement. You even hear the children say, "Well, I passed, but I didn't really deserve it." They take no satisfaction in it themselves.

Question: What one skill or attitude would you consider essential in achieving an education, Doctor Griswold?

DR. GRISWOLD: Well, that is hard to answer when you reduce it to one, but I would say the most essential skill or attitude in achieving an education is, quite obviously, a desire for it. Nobody ever learned who didn't want to.

DR. CHASE: I agree, but if you say, "What skill?" and want a simple answer, then I would say, "Reading." But I would want to add the ability to think, to apply critical judgment, to discriminate among different sets of values. The school's first task is still the intellectual development of the child, though this is related to other kinds of development.

DR. HOHMAN: I would stand firmly on reading. If a child can learn to read and distinguish the meanings of words, he will have accomplished the most. Certainly the minimum objective of elementary and secondary education is to teach the maximum number of children to read with ease, interest and understanding.

Except for a tiny percentage of children who have brain damage, I believe that all children can be taught to read. There certainly are a large number of children who can be taught to read but are not.

DR. GRISWOLD: I should say that teaching maximum numbers of children to read with ease, interest and understanding was a minimum objective if not the minimum objective. The schools generally are not accomplishing even this minimum. Objective tests do not prove reading ability. They are highly impressionistic and unreliable. The only reliable test is the written essay, and that is practically extinct.

DR. WOODRING: The child should learn to read well as a part of his elementary education. This is surely one of the minimum objectives of education and one on which nearly all educators will agree, with the possible exception of a small number of the extreme lunatic fringe in progressive education. If we can agree that reading is one of the more important things, and then can agree that some things done in the school are less important, we will be ready to give more time to reading.

Most children could learn to read better than they do if they read more—the really good reader is usually a child who does a good deal of reading at home as well as at school. Maybe it would help if more parents had the fortitude to turn off the television set occasionally despite the child's protests.

DR. HOHMAN: Doctor Woodring, how far do you think we have gone wrong in largely omitting drill in various subjects? My own feeling is that much of adult life concerns drill—doing a routine job over and over again.

DR. WOODRING: Drill is of some use in learning skills, but in grasping bigger ideas it seems to me of very little value. If you mean by "drill" the same thing I do, I do not see that drill is very valuable in studying literature and history, for example.

DR. GRISWOLD: I think drill is absolutely essential in reading, writing and arithmetic.

DR. HOHMAN: Would you call mathematics a drill subject?

DR. GRISWOLD: You bet!

DR. HOHMAN: Well, by drill you at least learn the business of doing things you don't like to do.

DR. GRISWOLD: And if you don't face that sometime, you are not going to have an educated man. There is no compromise.

Question: What is important in education? What ought to be taught?

DR. WOODRING: We seem to be in agreement here that the proper use of the English language ought to be taught and that it is an important aspect of education, but there are some people in education who would apparently question that. There has been a growing philosophy which holds, not that English isn't important, but that other things are equally important.

The most important things are those which lead to other things that are important. Reading is important because it opens the way to all things that have been written. Basket weaving, I would think, is considerably less important, because it doesn't open so many doors, although I can quote college catalogues that give credits for basket weaving. Also, the important things for the school are the things which the school can do best. Religious education is important, certainly, but in the public schools we have excluded the teaching of specific religious points of view—not because the teaching of religion is unimportant, but because we feel it is the function of another agency.

At the elementary-school level, the three R's—the basic skills—are important. That's obvious, because without them the child can not progress. At the secondary-school level those studies that enable us to live intelligently and make decisions are important and ought to be taught.

DR. GRISWOLD: I favor more thorough preparation for the liberal arts, and more thorough liberal-arts training for the teachers themselves, who will thus, I think, be much more disposed to communicate the ambition for learning and the purposes of learning.

The ultimate purpose of all schooling is self-education, as I understand it. Each teacher tries to give his students the utmost momentum to continue to educate themselves when formal schooling is over. That is the root of a liberal education.

Question: Well, if certain things are to be taught, do we just push a child through school, at no time making him really prove that he has learned them? Shouldn't he be penalized for not mastering these subjects, just as he will be penalized in life after school? If a student is failing, say, in seventh-grade subjects, shouldn't he be flunked out of school?

DR. WOODRING: The trouble is we have to keep him in school under present laws. Maybe the laws are wrong.

DR. HOHMAN: But we don't have to keep him in the kind of schools we have now.

Question: Does this mean that we are confusing education with merely being in school—with so many years of attendance? Shouldn't we either change the schools or change the laws?

DR. WOODRING: In many states, including my own, a high-school diploma means that you have attended school for twelve years.

DR. HOHMAN: Is that education?

DR. WOODRING: No, I think not. It seems to me we could give a diploma with honors, meaning high achievement; a passing diploma; and a certificate for twelve years' attendance.

DR. CHASE: I wouldn't solve the diploma problem by having three kinds. I think this only makes it worse. It has been tried, and it doesn't provide a solution. Possibly the diploma will become merely a certificate of attendance, and maybe that is where we are now.

I think we need an individual certificate that tells with some explicitness what the achievement of each child is, and does it in positive terms. Now, if the child's chief distinction is that he has taken more interest in keeping the school grounds clean than any other child, I would put that on the certificate; but I would also indicate his reading level, his mastery of mathematics, and so on, so the employer or college could look at the certificate and get a meaningful picture of the individual's achievement and current stage of development.

DR. WOODRING: For the lower third of school population, or possibly 20 per cent, high-school education with anything like the traditional set of standards is impossible. The question is, what are these children going to do between the ages of thirteen and seventeen? We can hardly turn them loose on the streets and they can't get jobs.

DR. HOHMAN: They could be taught useful skills. I am certain that we could train a lot of slow learners in such occupations as carpenters' helpers, farm workers, plumbers' helpers, assistants in garages, and many other occupations, if we devoted some of our education to the vocational training of these slow learners. At the present time education for many of these slow learners is education by failure. We promote them year after year until they reach the age when they are permitted to quit school. They then leave having failed to achieve any skills in the academic subjects because of their lack of capacity and they have been given no training for the jobs for which they are capable.

DR. GRISWOLD: Yes, that's right—why vocational training has a great role to play.

DR. WOODRING: Henry Ford said once that 70 per cent of the jobs in his factory could be learned in two hours. Any jobs that most of these students will ever be able to fill do not require four years of vocational training. Suppose you are going to pull a lever or punch a button all your life. What vocational training do you need for that?

MRS. WHITE: I think we also must take into account education for leisure and recreation if we are going to make a fundamental, early step toward the prevention of juvenile delinquency and dissatisfied, neurotic adult life.

MR. GOULD: Doesn't this come right back to reading? What better training for leisure and recreation is possible thi read? The treasures of all the v to readers.

MRS. WHITE: Agreed! Now I ask a question of Doctor Hoh parents help?

DR. HOHMAN: There was a t a little less so now—to exclu from the school curriculum. T told, "You must not try to teac read, because if you do you wil our methods." Am I overstating of the parent, Doctor Chase?

DR. CHASE: No, we certainly that period.

DR. HOHMAN: Teachers sha involving parents is importa would be better if we had par tions separate from parent-t izations. Parent-teacher orga dominated by teachers—and scared to death of their o Schools are so dominated by s istrators that any teacher is a cize the school system in any of losing his job. The whole of group is on the defensive and to resent any possible criticis out. I find nearly all teacher for a return to some kind teaching fundamentals so t can be backgrounded with ta further knowledge in school.

It would amaze you to see the average schoolteacher is say something that will offen intendent or principal of th the teachers that I talked to terrible defects in present-d and yet none of them would c ing it out loud.

MRS. WHITE: Well, I am her vidual and I speak as one. Of cc and do not speak for my scho teacher must conform to the p school system, as any employee i to his employer's policies; and a also recognize his position as an the public. He is therefore ofte put into practice his own ideas. we know that large primary cla expensive, from a stark human point, and that small first-g (twenty to twenty-four) could foundation to the whole schoo but this will not happen until p influences school policy. I have change the subject—maybe scared—but, Doctor Chase, wh say about the responsibility of

KENFLOR
TRADE MARK

...the new Vinyl tile that stays "Beauty-Smooth"

Colors shown above: Quaker Grey, Ruby Red, and White Peony with Feature Strip, ThemeTile and Matching Counter Tops

Easier, Quicker to Install Yourself... ideal over wood floors

- greaseproof
- easier to clean
- quiet underfoot
- exclusive ThemeTile
- Feature Strip
- matching counter tops

At last, a floor that's stronger, yet easier to install ...longer wearing yet so flexible it "gives" with the movement of wood underfloors! Amazing new KenFlor gives you the toughness of pure shining vinyl bonded to a pliant felt cushion. Its "Beauty Smooth" surface resists miles of scuffing, grinding footsteps...defies grease and stains. You'll seldom have to scrub KenFlor, you'll wax it only to add extra sparkle.

KenFlor is also available by-the-yard for floors and matching counter tops.

See KenFlor at your Kentile Dealer's now. Find his name under FLOORS in your Classified Phone Book. In Canada, T. Eaton Co., Ltd. You can install KenFlor yourself. An average 8'x10' tile floor costs you approximately $26.50

KENFLOR
TRADE MARK
VINYL TILE
BY THE MAKERS OF KENTILE

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Carry it home by the carton... install it tile by tile

Kentile, Inc., 58 2nd Ave., Brooklyn 15, N. Y.

KENTILE * KENCORK * KENRUBBER * KENFLEX * KENFLOR *REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

"He goes to art school."

: Well, mothers are the strongest of education, but some teachers ls have found there is strong pres-me mothers not to have too exards for anything. You mustn't cal education too rigorous—t catch cold. You mustn't be too other respects, because it might Johnny's social life or injure his rnal interest sometimes expresses protecting the child; this usually d to the highest development.
Shouldn't a strong educational ident in its own methods, ignore
e?

ing washes all dishes as fast,
sily as TUFFY®

e only TUFFY is tough enough ub crusted pans, gentle enough sh finest china and silverware ashes finest china.. takes od faster than mops, dishrags, et TUFFY never scratches.

crubs pots and pans...
stubborn, crusted foods that
h. No food sticks to TUFFY.

ashes silverware...digs out sticks in fork tines. Then inses out clean, fresh as new.

TUFFY
scrubs yet esn't scratch ever smells—never sours
because it rinses clean

U. S. PAT. NO. 2,601,771
. CO., CHICAGO; TUFFY OF CANADA, LTD., TORONTO

DR. GRISWOLD: May I speak up for the women? What Doctor Chase says is doubtless true. Women have more influence upon our educational system than men do—much more. The whole educational process begins with them—in the home—and depends more upon their example and active encouragement than almost any other factor if it is to continue until it becomes self-sustaining. This is the strongest argument I know of for higher education for women. The more girls I see entering college and taking full and intelligent advantage of that opportunity, the greater faith I have for our educational system.

Question: Doctor Chase, don't you think we should face up to the fact that we are keeping many children in school longer, I gather, than they can be taught in school?

DR. CHASE: I think we ought to face up to situations where it is clear the youngster not only isn't learning anything useful but is learning things that are detrimental to himself, as well as engaging in activities that are detrimental to the learning of others. There are cases, I think, where the youngster could learn more from an occupation than from being kept in school. Formal education should be terminated, or reduced, for each individual at the point where it becomes evident that continued learning would be better motivated by work responsibilities than by remaining in an educational institution. Because of the wide range of individual abilities, schools must provide widely differing sets of experiences. They must also make it possible for each child to have a continuous development by moving at his own rate, rather than being dragged along so fast that his feet seldom touch the ground, or held to a midget's gait when he is able to take giant strides.

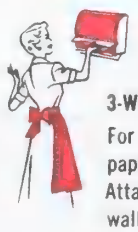
Somehow we have to get the American people to have a new concept of the role of the teacher. We have to get them to understand what is involved in quality education. I think if the issues were clearly drawn, our citizens would be against neglecting either the bright or the dull child. They would choose, instead, to strive for the optimum development of each child.

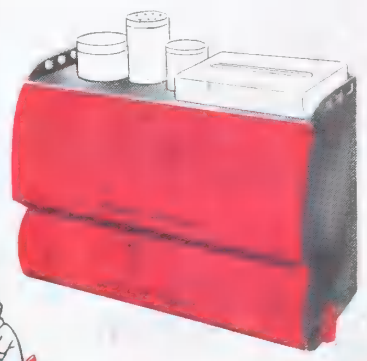
This would mean earlier termination of formal schooling for some than for others. Not only are we failing to group instruction on sound educational bases, but we are not using the right bases of selection for higher education. By and large, we know how to do these things much better than we are doing them, but we have not developed sufficient public understanding to provide support for more enlightened policies.

DR. GRISWOLD: I agree profoundly with what Doctor Woodring and Doctor Chase have said. Both of them have been in closer touch with the school system than I have, though I have been in direct contact with the products of that system since I started teaching in 1930. Of course you can't force-feed education to anybody. Motivation is of basic importance. I don't regard the universities or the liberal-arts colleges as perfect. I know that some teachers' colleges are doing a better job with the liberal arts than many a so-called liberal-arts college. However, I think the liberal-arts colleges have an important contribution to make to the whole of education which they haven't been making in full, a contribution in keeping with their particular traditions and character. I think they should try harder to infuse that character and that motivation into the process of secondary education, for that is where higher learning begins.



Mass-production methods of education are deplorable and we have suggested many reasons why they exist. One other reason is that we are not spending nearly enough on education. (We ruled out discussing money before policy, but I would like to rule it back in here at the end.) We can afford to spend two or three times as much as we are spending on education today without denting our national economy—I would demonstrate that simply by comparing the amount we spend on education with what we spend on cigarettes, cosmetics and liquor. The best kind of education, generally speaking, is the most costly kind, but in the long run it is the cheapest. As a nation and a civilization, we cannot afford to do without it.

END



Dress-Up
Your Kitchen
with BeautyWare by LINCOLN MATCHED ENSEMBLES

Make yours a BeautyWare kitchen —and enjoy the extra smartness, extra features and extra convenience of these quality kitchen essentials. Be sure to get a complete ensemble at your favorite store.

3-WAY DISPENSER WITH SHELF
For paper towels, waxed paper and aluminum foil.
Attaches to any type of wall without nails or screws!
Chrome $6.98
Chrome and color $4.98
Copper $5.98
Decorator colors* $3.98

DOUBLE-FEATURE BREAD BOX
Built-in wooden slicing board for bread, cake, sandwiches.
Removable inner-shelf.
Chrome $11.98
Decorator colors* $5.98

4-PIECE "STACKABLE" CANISTER SET
Stack them many different ways to save space! Holds 5 lbs. flour, 5 lbs. sugar, 1½ lbs. coffee,
1½ lbs. tea.
Chrome $9.98
Decorator colors* $4.98

*red, yellow, white, blue and green

STEP-ON BEAUTYCAN WITH BUILT-IN "DE-FUMER" Chlorophyll "De-Fumer" kills odors! Watertight inner-pail, smooth-working step-on feature.
Chrome, 14 qt. size $9.98
Stainless steel $10.98 to $12.98
Copper $10.98
Decorator colors*
$4.98 to $7.98

Chrome Wastebasket $4.98
extra-tall Chrome Wastebasket $6.98

Chlorophyll-treated
WAXED PAPER WASTE BAGS
"Hang-Up" Package of 50 $1.49

Prices slightly higher West and Canada

Be sure it's BeautyWare . . . look for the name!
LINCOLN METAL PRODUCTS CORP., Brooklyn 38, New York

THIS KITCHEN IS THE FAMILY CE

Entering kitchen from living m, you look past range to sewing center beyond. Double en range has cooking units at le, space freeing right oven top as wor. On facing wall is refrigerator ext generous 10-cubic-foot model it, a hardwood counter serves r work space or snack bar, has de- under chairs, a window facing out over paved terrace and be ya

"I'D like cooking and dishwashing," said a friend of mine, "if I weren't lonesome when I did it." Her answer, and maybe yours, is a combination kitchen-playroom-sewing room—and hobby room!

She and her husband have grown children, so hobbies now take the place of baby watching: horticulture, jewelry making, woodworking, sewing, painting and entertaining are favorites. Still, the kitchen could serve just as well for a young mother with toddlers or homework-age children, because there's so much sit-down space for work and play, so much leeway for watching over things.

We'll tour to see all that's going on. But let me tell you first how easy it is to keep up! Her floor of vinyl-asbestos tile, counter tops of red linen-weave plastic, metal cabinets, clay wall tile and curtains are all washable. The only aids not in the kitchen are down a short flight of steps—an upright freezer, an automatic water heater and an electric incinerator to handle garbage and wastepaper disposal. Admiring it all, it came to me that here's a kitchen as bright as tomorrow carrying on the great tradition of grandmother's day, when family and friends all made a kitchen the true heart of home.

Here you face living-room entry; stone wall is the back of a fireplace (there's a door at its left). Kitchen cabinets of steel have gay blue baked-on finish. At right, sink below mirror has an extra covered compartment with a drain for collecting garbage. And next to it, a front-opening dishwasher leaves counter space continuous.

STUART

Kitchen has cooking area at right. Through middle of room runs a 7′-high partition (peaked ceiling of the room is 16′ high). Partition separates cooking area from laundry center on left. At far end of room is the hobby center.

While she sews in kitchen, he does woodworking nearby. In her corner, a high cupboard holds dressmaker dummy, iron and board, sewing supplies. From table at right, cork-topped shelf folds out; patterns can be pinned in place for cutting. Sewing machine, when closed, fits under table. A clay-tiled stand holds her African-violet collection.

Near laundry center is the hobby sink. This work sink, handy for flower care and paintbrush cleaning, is stainless steel set in durable clay tile; under counter there's storage space for vases, tools, art supplies. In right end, ventilated clothes hamper wheels under counter, right next to washer and dryer. Ideas for you?

YOUR CHILD CAN LEARN TO READ

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 63

concentrated instruction in reading, he might have thought himself "stupid" and behaved that way throughout his life.

Other youngsters from the St. Louis public schools, sent to the language-arts centers because they are the most seriously handicapped by reading failure, progress more or less slowly; but given time and individual attention, they all learn to read. They can learn, and the glory they take in it is something to see. A chubby, red-faced boy breezed into a center one icy day last winter, puffed, and said, "Boy, comin' here, I just about almost got nearly run over by a truck—just when I'm learnin' to read too!" A Korean veteran who only a few years ago learned to read at the language-arts center located in the Ashland elementary school returned on leave to tell Supervisor Kay Ware, "I'm not a prayin' man, but I sure thank God for sending me to you."

There are many reasons why more children are not taught to read well. One of the most glaring is the number of children most teachers are required to teach. The average number of children per teacher in the St. Louis public schools, a typical big-city example, is 38, but some schools in the most crowded districts have classrooms crammed with as many as 58 children. Superintendent of Instruction Philip J. Hickey recognizes this situation is absurd as far as the teaching of reading or the teaching of anything is concerned. So do most school administrators, in St. Louis and elsewhere. As one put it, "Packing forty, fifty children in one classroom for five hours a day is costly to everybody and it is inhumane. If we did it to a similar number of young animals—say, puppies or tiger cubs—we would expect some of them to die of frustration or to be killed by the others."

Nevertheless, determined teachers and school administrators in a few cities—of which St. Louis is one—have inaugurated strong reading programs, usually in conjunction with reading clinics, and achieved remarkable results. Remedial reading teachers, able to give individual attention to each slow reader, have demonstrated repeatedly they can teach the poorest reader to read tolerably well. In practically all cases, a good reading teacher can bring a retarded reader up to the reading level of his age group—and often with dramatic speed. The problem is to extend this same success to include the large groups of children of varying degrees of ability to be found in every classroom.

Few public-school systems have reading clinics, and even in localities where reading clinics exist, they offer no real solution to the problem of retarded readers. The five well-staffed language-arts centers in St. Louis reach directly only a small fraction of the number who need help among an enrollment of some 90,000 in the city's public schools. They also, however, give demonstrations and advice to regular classroom teachers and provide in-service training in the teaching of reading. Regular classroom teachers may work in a center for a year, then return to serve as key workers in the teaching of reading in their various elementary schools. This function of reading clinics, though little developed, is the one which Doctor Kottmeyer believes holds most promise. It is, in effect, applying the remedy to the teachers.

Assignments to clinic internships were at first not joyfully received by all teachers. "Other teachers in my school said they pitied me," one clinic assistant reported, "beating my brains out trying to teach these kids to read after everybody else had given up. But now I am loath to think of leaving all my special pets at the clinic and going back to a regular class where I can't have any." As the reading program in St. Louis has developed, work in connection with it has taken on a special prestige and is coveted by many teachers.

"At first some teachers in the system were doubtful that we could teach some of the non-readers to read," Doctor Kottmeyer notes. "Now they concede we'll sweat it out with them. We'll teach them to read."

The unique development in the St. Louis reading program is the plan for special third-grade "classes of twenty." Thirty-nine such classes have been set up in the St. Louis elementary schools to concentrate on teaching the basic skills—reading, spelling and arithmetic—to third-graders most deficient in these tool subjects. These classes are taught by selected classroom teachers, usually those with clinic experience, who will eventually return to regular classroom duties. In this manner Superintendent Philip Hickey hopes to get more teachers with special training in teaching of reading scattered throughout the St. Louis system—to the extent that, eventually, special classes of twenty will be unnecessary. "It would be ideal," he says, "if all classes had only twenty children. But to limit all classes to 20 students, however, would require almost double the number of teachers presently employed in St. Louis, and greatly expanded facilities.

The third grade was chosen for the classes of twenty because the end of the third grade marks the "great divide" in children's schooling. Until then, children are not expected to learn much on their own from books. The teacher is "with them" in the learning process constantly, helping them to acquire some of the skills that will enable them to learn independently. But in the fourth grade and thereafter, history, geography and other books with many specialized words are placed in their hands. If they are not equipped to handle them, they are likely to fall further and further behind, despair of ever catching up. Unless these deficiencies are remedied early, it is likely the child will have difficulty with all school work, misbehave in class, get the attention he craves from the teacher and so on.

In the classes of twenty, with [illegible] teachers concentrating on teaching the basic skills, the children's progress in reading, spelling and arithmetic zooms. Many children who have been unable to read at all learn to read at the third-grade level in a few months. Most children develop their proficiency in basic skills in from four months to a year, depending on their [illegible] not so spectacular, but much faster than they had been. As they acquire the tools of learning, behavior problems disappear.

What makes the new techniques the teachers use in the St. Louis language-arts centers and in the classes of twenty produce such remarkable results?

"Nothing mysterious, nothing magic," Miss Ware says. "What it is, is common sense and phonetics, I suppose. Of course, we individualize first and vary our approach according to the individual. And in the centers, individual attention counts for a lot. Most of these children are sure they're dumb and can't learn. It takes time to get over that, they do."

According to Doctor Kottmeyer, "Most children are at first eager to learn to read. Perhaps ten or fifteen per cent pick it up naturally, that is, without phonetic training. The rest have to be taught, or as they are given to understand they can't read, they will learn not to read, and hate reading."

Some children will learn to read, regardless of how they are taught or whether they are taught at all. Nothing can stop them. Nothing can keep the rest can be jerked to a standstill in a variety of ways, and most reading specialists agree that a variety of methods must be used to motivate and to teach children with varying abilities and attainments that are found in every classroom. There is no one sure cure for poor readers except the right kind of teaching.

"We know that each child must be encouraged to read beginning at his present level of achievement," Doctor Kottmeyer says. "Whether it is nil, you begin there. This is not new. There is no other point to begin teaching. We know that if a poor reader is given things he can read, he will improve. If he isn't, he probably won't get any better and he may get worse."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 192

"Wait for me, kids—I just remembered this is the day of the week I put Drāno in all the drains!"

Witches may be flying high—but dangerous sewer germs still are lurking in every drain. And germs breed in muck that liquid disinfectants can't budge. Drāno's churning, boiling action dissolves the muck—and keeps drains germ-free and free-running. Make one day a week—Drāno day. Put Drāno in every drain for about a penny a drain. Makes septic tanks work even better. Get Drāno at your grocery, drug or hardware store. Also available in Canada.

There's nothing like Drāno . . . to keep drains free-running and sanitary.

PRODUCTS OF THE DRACKETT COMPANY, CINCINNATI, OHIO

"Oops! Who's been cleaning the mirror with Windex Spray?"

Doesn't everyone? Handy Windex Spray cleans all kinds of glass surfaces "twinkling-clean"—and cleans them twice as fast as ordinary glass cleaners. SWISH—spray it on! WHISH—wipe it off! And it's good to know there's no waxy film left to attract dust. Important, too. Windex Spray is such a thrifty buy, specially in the 20-oz. size. Get Windex Spray at your grocery, drug or hardware store today. Also sold in Canada.

So quick, easy, thrifty, it outsells all other glass cleaners combined!

MOMENT BEFORE

By HELEN HARRINGTON

Who could know beneath this glossed veneer of clothes in fashion, our eyes carefully meeting, your coolly handled lighter and my clear,
brief thank you, how hard our hearts are beating?

Who could know we press against the hour (aware already of all that we are missing) when we—of one intent—shall seek a bower where we can be alone and kissing?

ATE shows you a 30″ automatic Gas range with a giant 24-inch oven. Does everything a big range will do, yet takes up far less space in your kitchen.

It's old stove round-up time... time to change to the smartest range anyone could own ver was a better time to buy a new automatic Gas range. And there never er ranges for you to buy. They bear no more relationship to that relic in hen than the new cars bear to a 1908 Maxwell. Actually, no other kind of as fast, as deft, as perfectly controlled . . . why, the new Gas ranges even nselves on and off automatically, bake whole meals while you're busy e. For the last word in cooking, make sure you get Gas. For substantial n purchase, installation and operation, make sure you get Gas. Nothing comes close to it. See a "round-up" of all the new "CP" automatic Gas t your Gas company or Gas appliance dealer's.

AMERICAN GAS ASSOCIATION

Only Gas gives such matchless performance

ne modern fuel for automatic cooking . . . refrigeration . . . water-heating . . . house-heating . . . air-conditioning . . . clothes-drying . . . incineration.

RED CROSS
Cotton Balls

For removing nail polish removing make-up

applying home permanents

For { beauty care baby care
first aid use

RED CROSS
COTTON BALLS
Johnson & Johnson
sterile

Johnson & Johnson

No connection whatever with American National Red Cross

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 190

Teacher Charlotte Robinson, in charge of the class of twenty at Ashland School, says she uses a variety of approaches in teaching reading. Her special class, as are all classes in the elementary schools, is divided into groups of children according to their levels of achievement. She works first with one group, then another. Hers is a demonstration classroom which other teachers and other interested persons can observe from a little gallery with large glass windows that permit them to see without being seen. Much of what goes on looks like drill.

"It is," Doctor Kottmeyer admits, "but it is drill with a purpose, constantly moving toward reading material scaled to their ability and experience. And in speaking of phonetics, you always have to say what kind of phonetic training and how it is given. 'Phonetics' is a naughty word some places, like the word 'drill.' What we use mostly is a variation of isolated phonetics, always associating sounds with words, then give the children stories that interest them with words they can read."

A favorite story of reading teachers, which Doctor Kottmeyer hopes has no basis in fact in the St. Louis schools, concerns a novice primary teacher working under the critical eyes of her principal for the first time. It was, as usual, a large class—some 40 children—and the young teacher skillfully handled reading exercises with three groups, the Robins, the Red Birds and the Blue Jays. But that, the principal noted, accounted for only 28 children. "What about the rest of these children?" he asked. "To what group do they belong?"

"Oh," said the young teacher, "they're the Impossibles. I never read with them because they're impossible. Stand up, Impossibles!"

She held a not uncommon philosophy, as reflected in the practices of many public schools today, but it is not, Superintendent Hickey insists, the spirit of St. Louis, however short they may fall of their high goals.

THE SUMMER CHILDREN

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 51

her crib. Nina was ten days early this time, so that three weeks in all had been chiseled from Ward this summer. He'd be standing at a window of his campus office now, and facing up to the long months without his sons.

Faye had stopped in front of a wavy dresser mirror. She stood looking in at the second Mrs. Wallace, with her candid eyes and short tossed hair, but what she was thinking about was Ward's somewhat glamourized first wife.

"Starring Nina Spender." She murmured it frowningly. It was true that Nina had appeared in a Grade B television play or two some time ago. She'd done a few commercials for the network Quentin Spender was with too. On the whole, the theatrical work hadn't come to much.

Faye stood on for a moment trying to assay the boys' New York lives. The Spenders had a good-enough address. The small bedroom the boys shared near the kitchen didn't necessarily have to be a maid's room. It sounded as though the children played about the lobby and rode the elevators of the big apartment house at times. They seemed to get their own cold-cereal breakfasts on occasion. Well, small-boy prattle. Faye tried to shake it off. She heard more of it than Ward did, and she had to keep deciding what to screen.

It is better to be nobly remembered than nobly born.
—RUSKIN

One thing she had gathered this summer caused her eyes to darken, hurrying outdoors now to round up Timmie and Kev. Kev had said that they didn't need baby sitters at ages eight and nearly seven, not with old Danny on the elevators at night. Faye tried not to think of the unpredictable way Tim's stomach kicked up at times. She had to put Kev's troublesome sleepwalking out of her mind too.

Nearing the tree platform Ward had built, she began to smile faintly again. The Wallace boys were like corn in a corn popper this August. They reeled about the place overcome by laughter and their shouts went up like rockets among the trees. Timmie hadn't had one of those upsets Nina was blaming on an allergy in weeks. Kev had had but one bout with the sleepwalking all summer.

Next June they would probably come back withdrawn and quiet and unsure of themselves again, though. She rested her weight against the rope ladder rather helplessly. What she had to remember was that she was dealing with a high-strung pair.

When she called her news it set off a wild scramble among the leaves. The brown, small bodies bumped excitedly against her, going up the path.

"Mommie, mommie, Nina," Tim experimented; and "Back to school," Kev said hazily. "Back to the uranium mines." This was the summer that Kev watched to see how his grown-up phrases were going over and Faye had often to control her lips.

"—— glass of milk and a cooky." She herded them. "We'll tell Cornelia about our guest for dinner. Baths and a rest, then. You'll be up later tonight."

"Uncle Quent." Kev's mouth still showed traces of milk and crumbs when he stopped dead in front of her on the stairs. "You forgot to tell Cornelia he was coming to dinner, too, didn't you?" His hand began to make small grabbing movements on her arm. "You said Mrs. Spender, but you didn't mention anything about Mr. ——"

"For h-h-him"—Tim plumped himself down on the steps—"the c-coffee has to be b-b-black as night, it has to be th-thick as thieves, it has to be h-h-hot ——"

"Take it easy," Faye said gently. She shooed them upward. "Your Uncle Quent isn't coming until late tomorrow or early Sunday." Washing lake water out of their hair in the bathroom, she had an opportunity to hold their heads close, rubbing them with towels. She was a lady getting her three-ring circus ready for the road now, and feeling more sharply unhappy over it than usual.

"You said Uncle Quent late Saturday or early Sunday ——" Kev had jumped to catch the shower rod and he dangled, the line of concentration back between his eyes. "Now what would your guess be? There's the regatta this weekend, a spectacle which he might not wish to miss out on. Moreover ——" Kev hung, lost in his vocabulary.

"My guess is late Saturday for your Uncle Quent." Faye was patient. As easy a transfer as possible each fall was her goal and Ward's.

"The boys' mother can't get into the Lodge this weekend." She had got that far with an explanation to Cornelia in the kitchen when she saw that the girl was standing still and looking at her.

"But the Lodge isn't more than half-filled, ma'am," the girl said. "My sister works there."

Well, the gullible Wallaces. Faye held her rueful smiles back until she was settled on her own bed for a half-hour rest. The Nina Spenders of the world could tell them anything. Lacing her fingers over her eyes to shut out the light, she found that the smiles were hard to hold on to. It must be something awfully important to bring her barging in here. She had a helpless wish to protect Ward. There was a feeling of wanting to protect the little boys too. That must have come of having been a down-East schoolma'am.

If you need more money, Mrs. Spender, please give Ward some time. When the textbook catches on —— When old Doctor Parks retires —— Nina had taken Ward over the hurdles many times. The boys' specialists tended to have Park Avenue offices. Their clothes had Hollywood labels. A summer camp in her own area had been one of her pet schemes for keeping the children from Ward. She might there-

Shop here fo
FLINT-W
Read about wonderful new Flint-Ware o
Select your Flint-Ware from the comple

...the only cookwar
GUARANTEED FOR
Lovely Flint-Ware was designe Loewy, and every piece com gift-boxed! Sets from $18.9

EKCO
FLIN

...the greatest names in Ekco Products Co., Chicago 39, Illi from Ekco Products Company (Canad find fault with the Hackett's Faye opened her eyes to look at rsely furnished room she was in.

e was weather-beaten but com-boys had sun, air, good swim-od farm food here. They had all that Faye and Ward could crowd
d in swim trunks or dungarees, rs of fishing, sailing, or tramping ith Ward.
nothing smart about it, though.
ped a little. If you mean to talk ions for next summer don't upset it so soon. Please don't. As the and more companionable he ——

She was up, and punching helplessly at her pillows. It would be best for her to concentrate on the practical side of getting the boys off. Raincoats, cameras —— She checked things on her fingers. Paints, games, fishing rods ——

Last year Quentin Spender had refused to take the fishing things. He'd walked around to where Ward was trying to fit tackle boxes into the car and had said in a clipped voice that there was no room for them. Nina had put on a rather overemotional show of sympathy with Tim, but the racing car engine had cut it short.

A lady always conscious of her audience. Faye swung around to put her feet on the floor, but her eyes remained shadowed. Mrs. Spender always flaunted her ownership of the boys. It was hard to pin down one's doubt about her. This is just late August in the Wallace house. We'll shake down.

Out in the living room, it seemed just as hard to get away from her thoughts. Ward's first wife seemed to have pushed into the cottage ahead of time. The girl who came to dinner, Faye thought apprehensively. The girl Faye Wallace didn't actually know very well. The one who could still cause something wincing to break through Ward's guard at times. This promised to be one of the times.

Faye's troublesome sense of fairness kept her hurrying away from her impressions. Nina had come early to the Lodge two years ago. There had been three days of the ostentatious displays of possessiveness. When Ward wasn't about, the shows had been put on for Faye. Bedtimes and naptimes had gone by the board. The rules of sensible eating had been thrown out the window. The children had literally been swooped upon with toys and treats and emotions. Faye had started to hear Ward's steady voice at her shoulder on one painful morning of watching.

"The time to look that unhappy, Faye," he'd said quietly, "will be if the boys ever fail to jump into the act." He'd been trying to smile.

Faye had a deeply tired feeling that her day would not account for. At five o'clock she was spooning food into small Janie on the porch. Under a playful exchange with the baby she searched frowningly for some way of tiding Ward over the coming weeks. The cottage was threatening to rock now with the excitement of the two boys. They were helping Cornelia with her dinner. She was being remarkably patient.

Six then, and six-thirty. The baby the boys called Janie the Sleephound was back in bed. Faye gave her charges a final check. She had helped Tim gather table flowers and had debated with Kev the merits of pink candles over blue. There was to be pink ice cream for this gala evening. Timmie had coaxed out of Cornelia one of her famous ribbon cakes.

The lurching bus came along the lake road even later than usual. It was after seven when Tim and Kev began to jump up and down on the steps. The reunion of Nina and the children took place at the side of the road. Faye waited on the porch and the bus driver stood patiently with boxes and bag. If Ward had been there he might have murmured something like "Lights, music," with his accustomed dryness. Perhaps Ward's remarks helped him with the sharp unhappiness. Faye didn't know. She could only swallow hard this time.

Nina kept cupping one small face and then the other with her hands. Her eyes searched over the boys like those of someone back from a long banishment on a far planet. Her restraint would break then in a deluge of hugs and kisses. She came up the steps rather dazedly then, with the two of them clinging to her.

Her smile for Faye was a little like a grimace at first. Faye had no difficulty placing hers. It was the one she had used for certain mothers who didn't know they were sending their opened diaries to school.

Hostess and guest murmured polite things indoors. "That frightful Plymouth House in town ——" Nina's eyes clung to the boys. "It was so sweet of you to rescue me." Her voice trailed away. She went slowly to her knees between the two children, busy with their gift boxes. "They look marvelous—but marvelous. As brown as two coffee beans," she exulted. She got up again. She stood, looking tired from her trip. "I'll freshen up a little, Mrs. Wallace, if I may."

The boys showed her to her room. The show was put on on the stairs, this time. Nina leaned to nuzzle Timmie's face and her fingers moved rather desperately in Kev's thatch of curls. Mine. They're mine. She seemed to be asserting it fiercely. At his desk in town was a good place for Ward to be on this evening.

When Mrs. Spender came down she had changed into a filmy gray-and-yellow print only slightly unsuitable for a Hackett's Lake evening. She held a huge foam-rubber doll by one foot and she seemed to wade through small boys. Ward might have taken a skeptical view of the scene by the crib. Nina placed Janie's new doll carefully beside her while the boys tiptoed and giggled softly. She touched the sleeping baby's cheek.

It was Timmie and Kev's supper party then and they whooped it up. Cornelia's good farm fare almost made up for the motley collection of china and silver. The sun dipped farther into the lake. Color spread over the water. The boys lighted the candles.

Ward had been right, of course, and Nina had something on her mind. She wasn't eating much, but seemed merely to be going through the motions. At times she forgot to

CONTINUED ON PAGE 195

EW! VANADIUM STAINLESS STEEL

INT-WARE

with the invisible

Radiant Heat Core

les All Other Cookware Old-Fashioned!

ver before been a cookware like beautiful e! It cooks like magic—faster, more m any other kind! And it cleans like ually washes like a dish!
re is triple-layer steel. The secret of its agic is its middle layer—the invisible eat Core. The red arrows on the sauce-show you how it spreads heat—not just bottom, but up and around the sides, you perfect waterless cooking!
derful Radiant Heat Core is sandwiched o layers of vanadium stainless steel—the secret of Flint-Ware's cleaning leans with no scouring . . . gleams with g!
get Flint-Ware wherever fine house-old in the United States and Canada.
selections from the pieces illustrated osite page. Flint-Ware is the only cook-d it's guaranteed for 15 years.

"Store-Away" Covers, just flip covers over and store right in your Flint-Ware for easier hanging or stacking.

reatest names in housewares!

EKCO ®

FLINT

EKCO PRODUCTS COMPANY, CHICAGO 39, ILLINOIS • ALSO AVAILABLE FROM EKCO PRODUCTS COMPANY (CANADA) LTD., TORONTO

NEW CORN

NEW COLOR—NEW FLAVOR—NEW PROCE

You can see the difference—taste it, too

The corn on the left is as fresh-looking and fresh-tasting as vacuum-packed corn could be until now. On the right you see a new miracle—the new Niblets Brand, quick-cooked by a new process in 1/5th the time. Result: new natural color and flavor found before only in fresh-picked corn.

New "fresh-flavor" process makes new Niblets Brand look fresher . . . taste fresher than any canned corn ever did before

NEW PROCESS

NIBLETS

WHOLE KERNEL CORN

Green Giant Company, headquarters, Le Sueur, Minnesota; Green Giant of Canada, Ltd., Tecumseh, Ontario
"Niblets" Brand Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. ©G.G.Co.

Now—a new way to enjoy the new corn

NEW PROCESS NIBLETS® MEXICORN®

corn with sweet red and green peppers

JED FROM PAGE 193

r share of small talk. She Timmie with an almost pain- Her eyes left them for peri- king out over the water, and st in thought. Faye began able.

ou get? she chided herself a u had to turn Janie over to a our fancy stomach?" Nina Tim, and gave the side of his unch. She listened closely to The . . . night patrol?" Her cated Kev and she watched ively again. It was as though sleepwalking might be com- ne weeks." She said it a few ly.

been trying to attract his n. "What is it, baby?" She protest rose in a high wail. it!" He pressed his face very ner's and an urgent flood of him. "Eimmit to Reh-tom, om," he babbled. Kev joined es sputtered and crackled in Eimmit, Vek to Eimmit, Vek droned rapidly. The Wallace of a space ship now. Their osed and their hands moved inary dials. Salt dishes spun oons twirled.

f laughter that was pure tex- caped Nina. She hushed it She quieted the children, and "That Outer Space routine." quivering a little. "I'd for-weeks." Faye was laughing ever did get used to her Outer t burns him to a ——" Nina nmie's hand again and she ers nervously. "Did you tell we're going down to the car- e'll go on to the bingo game ht won't matter." She looked at one late night would do no ed them go down the path ke road. The flashlight Nina a steady-enough course, but about the boys' middles had . Faye went back into the cot- me of the children's things l of repair. She brought the the side porch and simply at the darkness.

the sound of Ward's car even ut their way upward from the curve in the road. He had an especially easy and quiet way of driving the most aged of vehicles and he'd turned this one off the road and had snapped the light switch almost before she had got to the steps. He walked softly, too, and she watched his white shirt front and the blur of his face approach in the darkness. There was a difference about the way Ward held his shoulders tonight. He'd kissed her then, had taken a rather close look at her face. He picked up one of the small shirts, dropped it.

He said, "Is everything under control?" and "How's my Janie?" and "Where are they?"—sitting well out of the circle of light and getting out a cigarette. "Carnival." He got up restlessly. "Bingo, eh? I began to wonder what I had let you in for, Faye." He moved nervously about. "I'm always afraid that if I don't fall in with any new bit of skulduggery she'll —— Well, I'm afraid of losing even more time."

"We're all right. I haven't found out anything for you, that's all. Ward"—she bent over the mending—"the Lodge isn't nearly filled."

"That doesn't surprise me. Mrs. Spender is a lady who finds it hard to tell the truth. Avoiding it is a matter of principle with her. Any time you come upon me jumping up and down and cheering lustily it's a safe bet one of the boys has come through with the unvarnished in a pinch. They're wonderful kids, just now. What's going to happen to them is—it's anybody's guess." The ending was blurred. He went in to look at the baby and when he came back it was to sit with elbows propped on his knees and fingers in his hair. "—— don't see what she could pull just now ——" He seemed to be picking up his thoughts.

"She's been busy eating up the boys with her eyes, so far. All of us, really." Faye said it thoughtfully. "Don't go back tonight, Ward."

Ward said that he had to go back. One reason he had come out was to get the boys' bags down from the garage loft for her, and he moved off to take care of that chore. Faye knew that Ward ate sketchily in the cafeterias about the school and she went into the kitchen to fix something for him.

"Spender's planning to get here late tomorrow doesn't mean anything, you know." He sat at the kitchen table then, eating the hot chicken sandwich Faye had fixed and drinking hot strong coffee. "He may come next week or next month or he may be tooling up the lake road right now. They wouldn't go on without . . . seeing me."

"They'll have to stick to their plans just once, Ward."

"Not that bird. Not Mr. Hypertension."

"I think he's just sort of mercurial." Faye said it helplessly.

"My impression is ——" Ward's lips closed on it. He sat still, looking down at his plate. "Well, no H-bombs from Nina, as yet."

"She seems distraught."

"This is news?" He choked a little and then reached across to take Faye's hand. "Don't look at me that way," he said. "I'm all right. Just wondering why ten extra days in a Manhattan heat wave for a couple of small fry. I offered to take them down the weekend before school opens, but no—she was bent on coming out here."

He finished a piece of berry pie, and said that he felt better. "I'll get started," he decided. "It's late. She'll be keeping them out half the night, as usual."

OUT at the car they managed to laugh a little. It wasn't the gayest sound in the world, but it was better than nothing. Ward stood looking up the road along which the bobbing flashlights would come. "I want to see the scalawags again, Faye. If there's any change of plans call young Hoskins, won't you? He'll get a message to me."

Faye watched until the taillights had disappeared around the curve. She had scarcely begun to set the kitchen to rights when the erratic tinkling of the party-line phone began. It was Quentin Spender calling from the Lodge. He wanted to know where he might find Nina, and Fay told him. She edged in a few hurried questions of her own.

Ward's hunch had been correct, of course. The Spenders would be leaving for New York in the morning. Nina's husband had said that he would like to get started about nine or nine-thirty. He had called New York. Something unexpected had come up at his office.

Faye moved mechanically, swiftly. She gathered books, games and records and stacked them beside the bags. She pulled clean garments from the back-porch line. She called Hoskins and was explicit about her message for Ward. He was to come out early in the morning, well before nine. The boys' stepfather hadn't sounded in the mood for detours.

Spender's car dropped Nina and the boys sometime before eleven. Faye heard the children clatter rather stumblingly up the steps. They came down the narrow hall to her bedroom and stood blinking sleepily. They proffered some of the carnival loot.

The big ball was for Janie. The garish sofa cushion was Faye's. The fringed tie and ornate wallet were for Ward's birthday, coming in a week. "We won't be here for the birthday." Tim leaned more heavily against her. He seemed unconscious of the hang-over sobs which jerked him.

"Dad will call you up," she said. "How will that be?" She put a finger under Timmie's chin and tilted his swollen face up.

"Tim got sick and he cried, too, like always," Kev explained it patiently.

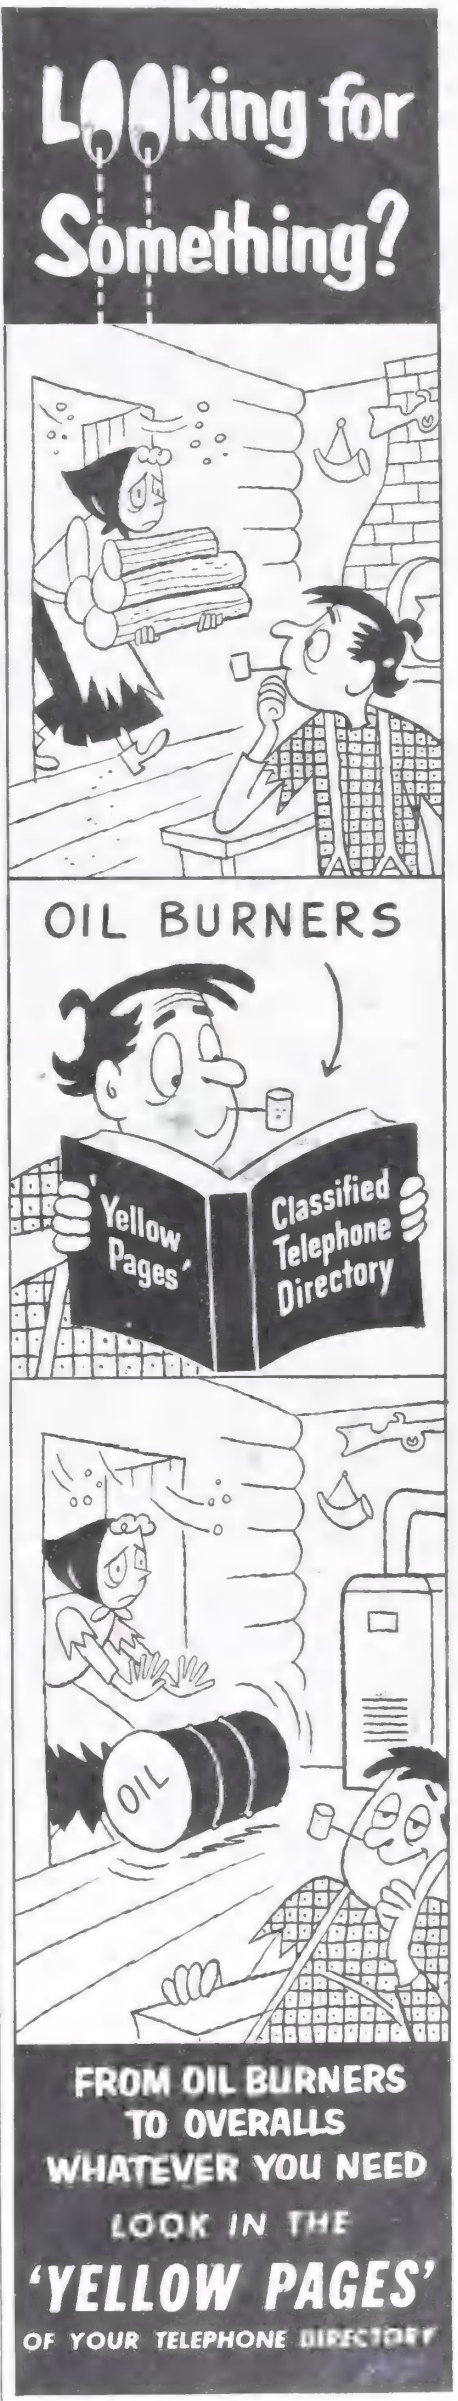
"What's a little thing like that?" Faye's arm closed about the smaller boy. "Tim and I never mind getting sick and then better again before anyone can say Jackie ——"

"I hope they're not disturbing you." Their mother's voice came from the shadows outside the door. She must have slipped up from a farther listening post down the hall. Faye was conscious of a rush of irritation.

"Quent managed to bribe his way into the Lodge somehow," Nina said haltingly. "I thought you might not mind if I stayed on here. I . . . wanted to put Timmie and Kev . . . to bed tonight."

"Of course," Faye said mechanically. "You're welcome to stay."

"I'd like to come down and talk to you a little then, if . . . it's not too late."



"Of course, Mrs. Spender." Faye moved about the living room uncertainly, waiting. She went out to the porch, and sat with a sweater thrown about her shoulders.

When Nina came down she was holding a light coat closely about her throat. She huddled back in one of the shabby wicker chairs as though she might be very cold. Or very lonely. Faye gave her a puzzled glance. Quentin Spender comes in and upsets ——

"It's getting late." Nina's voice broke in hoarsely. "I'll try to hurry. I thought I would have more time, but Quent has to be back. It doesn't take time to know about you, I guess." She passed a hand over her eyes. "You're Ward's sort, aren't you?" She said it to herself. "I wanted to ask"—she swallowed hard—"I wanted to ask if you would be willing to

"But you don't have to choose between me and a career. You can go right on working."

REPUBLIC'S
Polly Flex
HOUSEWARES
THE GREATEST NAME IN PLASTICS

Products of Distinction HOME USE - GIFTS

CAKE COVER AND PLATE

Keeps large layer cakes, pastries, etc., fresh. Cover locks to plate—perfect seal. Guaranteed not to chip, crack or break. Use plate to serve. Made of flexible polyethylene.

Guaranteed
UNBREAKABLE

DISH PAN

All polyethylene flexible dishpan. Will not corrode, dent, chip or rust. Reduces dish breakage. Leaves no black marks on sink or porcelain drainboard, no scouring abrasives necessary—finish of sink preserved.

Will last a lifetime.

FOR SALE IN ALL LEADING STORES

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Write for catalogue on other Polly Flex items.

© 1954 REPUBLIC MOLDING CORP. • 6465 N. AVONDALE AVE. • CHICAGO 31, ILL.

FALL PROFITS!

You can enjoy Fall profits this year by joining our staff of independent representatives. Send a postal to the address below, and you will receive complete details about our offer. No obligation.

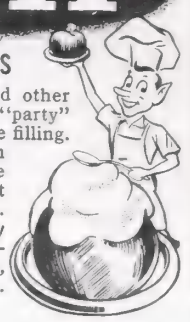
CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 463 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS

Watch his eyes light up when you serve . . .

KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS

"—it's the Quality Pack"



FREE! Big Recipe Booklet. Send name of your food store to Keystone Mushroom Co., Coatesville, Pa. Fancy Mushrooms at a popular price

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

MARSHMALLOW fluff

The TOPS of TOPPINGS

Transform baked apple and other ordinary desserts into "party" treats. Grand as a layer cake filling. Children love it on graham crackers, browned in the oven. The ideal ingredient for more exciting desserts. Write for FREE "Yummy Book" of desserts, illustrated in color, Durkee-Mower, Inc., Dept. L10, Lynn, Mass.

New Miracle Jelly...

CUTS OVEN GREASE Like Magic!

JUST SPREAD ON EASY-OFF . . . WIPE GREASE OFF . . . OVEN SHINES!

No scraping! No steel wool! No razor blades! No ammonia! Even hard-crusted, baked-on grease wipes right off, leaves oven, burners, racks, grills, walls sparkling clean! Try new Easy-Off! In 8 oz. and 16 oz. jars.

LOOK FOR FREE BRUSH ATTACHED

EASY-OFF OVEN CLEANER

"As your family and guests will attest
All spaghetti and chili is best
If you'll just use MEXENE
As your seas'ning routine
To give food added flavor and zest!"
Pepita Mexene

MEXENE

CHILI POWDER SEASONING

keep my boys all year. All the year." She repeated it in a sick fashion, her eyes closed. "The whole year. Practically . . . always."

"Mrs. Spender ——"

"Wait." Nina got up and moved down to the shadows at the end of the porch. She stood with her hands thrust into the pockets of the coat. "Timmie and Kev are so fond of you," she said. "It seemed you must be fond of them, too, because children know. They know too much about how people feel about them, I think. I had to come in and see, though." Her hands began to work.

"Mrs. Spender," Faye said shakily, "Ward and I would be the happiest ——"

"I know about Ward." The voice was so dry that it rasped a little. "It was you I had to know about. I'd want you to think." She came back slowly. She stood stiffly beside Faye. "The boys won't be cute in a baby way too much longer. They'll make mistakes, and get into trouble. And it will be worse." Her voice broke its guard. "Worse with Quent." She breathed it fiercely. "I'd see them watched and stop-watched even more. Cut down with quips. Nervous and frightened until I can't . . . take it any longer." Nina turned from Faye with a slight moaning sound. "I tried every way to make it work." She was controlled again. "Every way. He never touched one of them before tonight. You and Ward will have to believe that."

Faye was murmuring things. She didn't know what. She didn't know that any of them were being heard. "We'd be the happiest pair on earth. Every year the parting has been harder." She was up too. Her hand was on Nina's arm and her voice was concerned.

It takes you to make an argument. —ANNA FAYE

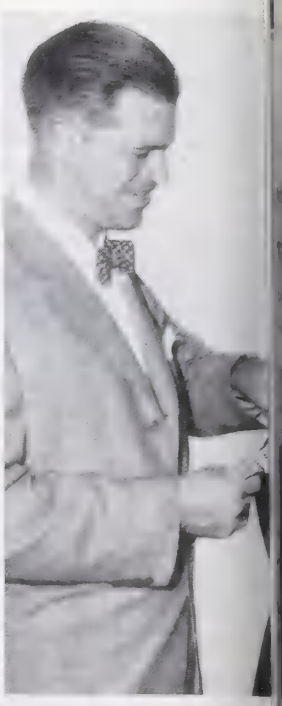
"Ward and I expect the boys to make mistakes. We expect it." She stood silent and helpless then. "It's cold," she said. "Let me bring you something hot."

"I meant adoption." Nina huddled over the coffee Faye had brought. "That or legal guardianship," she said tonelessly. "Ward will know. I'll give him a power of attorney. You'll tell him to hurry, won't you? I might go home and forget things. Things like Kev's searching for Ward in his sleep last fall." She looked miserably at the darkness. "Things like trying to stop their coming here, to learn to act like—like children."

"—— skiing and coasting and skating." Faye went on with her helpless murmuring. "They'll belong to a gang. The bicycles fly in squadrons over Faculty Hill, the space capes whipping. You'll come. You'll come often."

"Yes." Nina mumbled it meaninglessly. "Yes, of course. Thank you."

Ward reached the cottage before eight in the morning. The Spenders left at nine. Nina said good-by to the boys beside the car. She cupped their faces in a familiar way, placing her cheek against Timmie's, against Kev's. She smiled reassuringly at them.



The boys' chatter was a little subdued, up in their bedroom, and Faye searched the bags for their swim trunks. "Mother's taking us to Florida for a Christmas vacation on her own if she gets enough money," Kev confided.

"I'm sure she'll get enough money, Kev." She was handing Tim his trunks when she saw the bruises. It was as though a man's fingers had caught and twisted Tim.

"You did not stand on Uncle Quent's golf bag." Kev corrected his brother with infinite patience. "You tripped over it and he caught you from falling. Mother said so."

"We'll cover it." Faye pulled a T shirt swiftly down.

Ward's face was quiet and shining. He was oiling a reel. It was when he looked up that Faye saw the faint shadow far back in his eyes. "We can afford to be generous about visits," he said slowly. "If things break right and the boys get down to my prep school, they'll be near New York. Where are they, Faye?" Ward's voice was hushed and the shadow went. "This thing's ready now." END

Young mother wins fi

Governor Pins on Prize-Winn

Mrs. Fred Elias not on ribbon in her first cook at last year's Michigan but Governor William sented the award. And prize winners, Mrs. E Park, uses Fleischmann Yeast. "It keeps for mon "And it's so easy to use Fleischmann's Active the speediest, handiest can buy it in thrifty 3-p "Thrifty Three's" are n cal, easier to store. Whe home use the best. Get Active Dry Yeast.

Get the New "Thrifty Three"

Herb-

BOUILLON

Now in New PLASTIC JARS

Reusable, Non-Shattering Jars! 12, 50, and 100-cube jars containing America's Largest Selling Bouillon Cubes—the low-calorie, high protein taste treat!

The PURE FOOD COMPANY, Inc.
Mamaroneck, N.Y.

Try our Westchester Deviled Chick

Monroe FOLDING BANQ

If you are on the Kitchen Com Church, Lodge, Club, School, et you will be interested in this Banquet Table. Write for Cata discounts to institutions and orga

MONROE CO. 115 CHURCH ST.

THE REAL YOU

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 49

nind if I sit down beside you for or five hours?" he asked, settling to her on the couch. "I can tell like it here."

s widened. She tucked one trim der her and almost reverently slipper. The magic was working made such an impression with dwich' before," she said wonder-ems to work better than om."

ou do crossword puzzles?" she never it says 'mystic ejaculation' s om."

remember," he said, "but I'm not rossword fan."

not a fan," Jody told him. "In of hate them. But I can't seem to of the paper in peace till I finish
d. Those blank squares look so renyway, you learn lots of things—instance. Not that I know why it's be so mystic. So far I've never conjure up anything with it."

wards off evil," David suggested.

she agreed thoughtfully; and be-was passing up no chances, she l, om—just for luck." She picked of sandwiches. "Here, for one who ungry, you're not eating much."

ungry," he said. "It was just that irst person I've met tonight, or ht for that matter, who has found sychiatrist without saying, 'Oh,
e afraid to talk to you for fear y mind.' It makes a person sort of face was almost wistful.

hed. How could she be afraid was wearing enchanted slippers!
e with me. It would never even d to me that after spending all out people's problems for twenty our you'd want to give it away our spare time."

o right—except about the twenty
ur. I'm still in residency training, olite way of saying pauper. Don't —I like my work. But eight hours alyzing neuroses is enough. After o relax with normal, well-adjusted

ust how you feel," Jody said sym-She hesitated. Well, why shouldn't to him her own secret pet annoylippers were making her say the Real Her felt.

ter of fact," Jody said, plunging in "that's exactly the way it is with tant to the assistant food editor of Magazine. All day I test exotic make beautiful displays of frosted under glazed roast duck for color
s. So after hours I don't even want out food, and if anyone mentions e I get a wild impulse to brain chafing dish. I guess that's really ious of me, but I can't help it.
've ever been in I get railroaded eshment committee. Just once I'd with the entertainment, but oh no!
stuck in the kitchen."

inal," he said, "to put a beautiful out of sight in the kitchen."

utiful?" Jody said. "Why, doctor, see a psychiatrist."

that moment the plumpish lady from across the room. "Jody, n't had a chance to talk to you all I do want you to tell me exactly d those marinated oysters in the Hearthside."

ed inwardly. Then she felt a strong her elbow pulling her to her feet.
ove to tell you about the oysters," saying, "but the fact is we're just e have another engagement and lready."

le their good-bys, David whisking ore she had a chance to think.
treet they paused and he looked e top of her head. "Narrow es-aid.

"On you that shining armor looks good."

"Never let it be said that David Winston would abandon a damsel in a pot of marinated oysters. Come on. I'll buy you something to eat—something plain," he added hastily.

"I'd like that. Could we go to a drive-in?" Jody asked.

They ordered hamburgers and settled back to wait.

"I'm afraid it's clouded over," David commented, peering up at the sky.

"I noticed," Jody said, "and I'm sorry. It would have been such a lovely night to sit and listen to the stars hum." She looked out anxiously, but the sky was unpromising.

David touched her shoulder. "Did you say 'listen to the stars hum'?"

"Certainly," Jody said. "The music of the spheres. Haven't you ever heard it? It's a sort of blue-green hum." She was startled to hear herself saying it, but tonight she was telling David all sorts of things she had always felt inside but never, never told anyone before.

"Oh." David made a whimsical grimace. "I see. Well, I can't offer you any humming stars tomorrow afternoon, but if you'd settle for strumming violins, I was going to ask you to go to a concert with me."

Jody said, "I'd love it."

"And Tuesday we could have dinner together. There's a little French movie I couldn't think of anyone to take to, until tonight. And I really should practice up on my French."

"Sunday afternoon and Tuesday?" Jody tried to sound dubious.

"It's not that I'm trying to monopolize you," he said; "it's just that I'm trying to take up all your time."

Jody sighed with happiness.

The rain started before they reached Jody's apartment house. The windshield wipers

Pineapple Juice invites you with Nature's most refreshing flavor

CANNED TROPIC-FRESH

This golden drink goes great with everything you like...with popcorn and sandwiches, cookies and doughnuts and cheese. Any time you're thirsty is the time for Pineapple Juice! Keep several cans chilling in your refrigerator always ready to serve for refreshment occasions and regular meals. Better make sure now that your kitchen "PINEAPPLE SHELF" holds all 5 forms of canned Pineapple. No eating time can be routine with Nature's most refreshing flavor!

PINEAPPLE GROWERS ASSOCIATION, San Francisco

To enjoy all the glorious flavor of Pineapple Juice, chill and shake well before serving chunks of canned Pineapple (bite size) are fine for fruit servings, to sauté with lamb chops or a roast, for hors d'oeuvres, as cake decoration tidbits of canned Pineapple are favorites for salads, fruit cups, to sprinkle on puddings and cereals crushed canned Pineapple, good to eat "as is," also makes flavorful meat sauces, jams, pies, cookies, puddings, icings, shrubs

I told my husband I wanted the finest!

All my friends recommend KitchenAid—now I am a fan and here's why:

- KitchenAid will take an entire dinner service—even pots and pans—and wash perfectly without the need of a pre-rinse before loading!
- It will do an amazing job on even the hardest-to-wash pieces. Lipstick, sticky foods, tough grease—even egg and dried milk—completely disappear!
- Dries like a dream! All your glassware, every piece of silver, comes out spotless, ready for table use.

I agree! And here's why:

- It's made by Hobart—the most famous name in equipment—in fine hotels and restaurants everywhere in the world!
- And only KitchenAid has the exclusive, professional Hobart Revolving Wash Principle that actually power-washes all your tableware...most thoroughly!
- KitchenAid has a unique dual-strainer system that positively prevents food particles being sprayed back on tableware.
- Only KitchenAid gives you an entirely separate motor and blower fan to force hot air over tableware for positive drying action.

Bright Kitchen Idea Your KitchenAid
in Stainless Steel!

If your kitchen is finished in colored enamel, stainless steel or natural wood, you can order your KitchenAid in sparkling stainless to match or blend at only very little extra cost. Ask your nearby dealer.

For information, write Dept. KL, KitchenAid Home Dishwasher Div.,
The Hobart Mfg. Co., Troy, Ohio
Canada: 175 George St., Toronto 2

KitchenAid
The Finest Made by Hobart

World's Largest Manufacturer of Food, Kitchen and Dishwashing Machines

clucked companionably as they drove up. David stopped the car, tilted her face up to his and kissed her gently on the mouth. His hand on her cheek was warm and strong and she thought, Oh, David, please like that as much as I did.

She pulled away reluctantly. "I had a lovely time, David."

"You'll get wet," he said. "Put my coat around your shoulders."

"It's my shoes I'm worried about."

"I'll carry you," he offered.

"No, I'll take them off. I love an excuse to wade through puddles barefoot. When I was little that was my favorite sport."

David frowned. "You might catch cold."

"In August? Don't be silly."

"A hot bath, then, the minute you get in?"

"At this hour?" Jody's tone was incredulous. "With Gog and Magog just waiting for me to commit some little indiscretion like waking them up with running bath water so they can have me evicted?"

"Who on earth are Gog and Magog?" David demanded.

"Two ogres who live in the apartment below me," Jody said. "They pose as retired spinsters and call themselves the Misses Cunnicott, but they aren't fooling me. They're monsters, crouched to spring."

"Now, Jody, how could anyone feel that way about you?"

"I detract from the refinement of the establishment," Jody quoted primly. "I used to play the phonograph. The landlady finally gave me the word about my taste in music. I had a record of the Ritual of Fire Dance that particularly sent them into a frenzy. Nice girls, you see, listen to wholesome numbers like To a Wild Rose." She slipped off her shoes.

David shuddered. "Protect me from nice girls. And any time you feel like sending someone into a frenzy, here's my phone number." He ruffled her hair, turned up his collar against the rain and slid out of the car to help her.

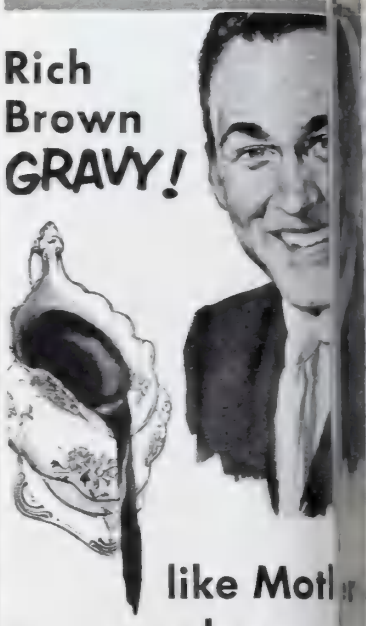
Out of breath from skipping all the way up two flights of stairs, Jody leaned against the inside of her door and sighed rapturously. "He likes me! David Winston likes me!"

She danced across the room and put her shoes, her lovely frivolous shoes, on the closet shelf and closed the door. She slipped into a pair of scuffed, flat-heeled moccasins and turned to cross the room, but midway she stopped abruptly as if there were some leaden thing inside her.

"Or does he?" A minute ago she had been so sure. As he left her downstairs David had said her hair shimmered with a million misty raindrops, but now in the mirror it just looked damp.

Whyever had she thought David would like her? She didn't know anything about his

IT'S AS EASY AS

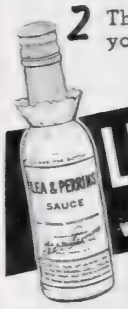


1-2-3 . . .

to finish your Christmas shopping in just a few minutes. Yes indeed! Even though Christmas is still three months away, you can complete your shopping right NOW . . . by giving the gift that's sure to please—a subscription to LADIES' HOME JOURNAL!

You know what pleasure each issue brings. Why not spread that pleasure among your friends? Your Christmas cheer will be remembered throughout the year!

Just fill in the handy order form that appears in nearly every copy of this issue and mail it TODAY! If you prefer—we'll gladly bill you in January. An attractive card in your name will announce each gift in the Christmas mails.



Rich Brown GRAVY!

like Moth... used to mo...

1 Brown your flour FIR... stirring in ungreased ... over low heat.

2 Then be generous wit... your...

LEA & PERR... THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE SA...

Add the ze... like to meat and fish dis... soups, sauces with this ... old favorite!

FREE Recipe Book, "Dishes Men Like." Lea & Perrins, Inc., 241 West ... New York 13, New York, Dept...

The RU... of Your Drea...

Direct to You from the... OLS... Fac...

SA... up...

SEND US ... RUGS, CLOT...

No matter where yo... for new, FREE Olso... Decorating Book in colo... Anniversary GIFT Offer. L... valuable wool and material in ... ed, worn rugs, clothing, etc., are reclaime... new, sterilized, shredded, pickered, bleach... merged, blended with choice new wools, ... then redyed, respun into rug yarn, ... and woven in 3 Days into deeper ... textured, new, Reversible

BROADLOOM RUGS

... fine enough for any home. Double Wear. (9x12 weighs 46 lbs., not 32.) Choice of 52 colors, patterns, any width. Seamless up to 16 ft., any length.

Solid Colors	Early American	Leaf
Two-tones	Oriental Designs	Floral
Tweed Blends	Embossed effects	Ovals

FACTORY-to-You. Satisfaction guaranteed. Over 3 million customers. We do not have agents or sell through stores.

Mail Coupon or Postcard for

FREE RUG & DECORATING B... IN COLORS—and GIFT

Name.....

Address.....

Town..... State...

OLSON RUG CO. Dept. E-69, Chica...

d she even talk intelomorrow?
an idea. She slipped fen minutes later she g with summer rain,
r arm.
ndred strokes on her me, propped up both de with the bed lamp o bed. She tore the e book and read its atisfaction: Psychia-dy. It was the only ry the all-night drug-corner had in stock, ood one. The author name and so many

book at random and Three pages later she n bed.
elieve that others are to do them wrong are ng from delusions of gog," Jody gasped.

ey were plotting to
"
er. Every word con-at what she had told r neighbors below
nto a paranoid pat-
t hot.
k told how to over-
on. On the next page
d in horror and she

a senseless act which e must perform even ish not to do so.
ssword puzzles! They
n. And two minutes eyes on David, she old him she ought to nation she chose an-

f advanced psychosis, ear things which do st. These imaginary lled hallucinations.
r listened to the stars

r and buried her face evening, every word ad shown David she eurotic.

book on the floor,
ed and ran to the shed the sweep of back from her fore-in the mirror. To neath that forehead tively teeming with bances! She bent her eyes. They were ng-lashed and wide-med to her now that maniacal gleam she before.
hy couldn't I have ut?" she wailed. Of
't have helped noticsted she was. Maybe had asked to see her t her too dangerous

have, she thought.
make him forget how to make myself into personality he likes.
The Real You in-saw Mrs. Peabody! lly wasn't fair. How body know about incts?
for the concert the Jody looked at her eeled shoes on the d blushed. Thank s at least one secret om David—that she enchantment. The ed to her to be a balanced state.
chose another pair—
umps with sensible

medium heels—so that whenever she was tempted to say something silly she could look at them and remember.

She greeted David sedately, in honeyed tones. "Good afternoon, David. What a delightful day to be going to a concert! I've truly been looking forward to it."

He gave her an odd look. Well, it did sound soupy, but it was normal and that's what he liked. And Jody Marsh was going to be normal all afternoon if it killed her.

As she locked her door David said, "Do Gog and Magog take afternoon naps, or may I talk out loud in the hallway?"

Jody looked stricken. "The Misses Cunnicott are really very nice little old ladies," she said. "And they do need their sleep. I don't know why I was so rude about them last night."

David's expression changed. He seemed almost—well, rebuffed. Or disappointed?

All afternoon Jody weighed every word before she spoke it. She spent so much time ruminating that she didn't have much chance to say anything, but at least she wasn't revealing any dark secrets about herself. Her conversation consisted mostly of yeses and noes and I-really-couldn't-says. Pretty soon David stopped talking, too, and the afternoon ended in a rather glum silence.

I'm not doing it right, she thought desperately.

"It's a lovely day, isn't it?" she tried brightly as they walked up the steps of the apartment house.

"I think we covered the weather pretty thoroughly."

So easy...another GOLD MEDAL SUCCESS for you...

4-SQUARE FUDGE CAKE!

"Made double-rich with your own good ingredients!"

"It's a home-made cake... extra easy and extra good for lunch box or fancy dessert. Make it with America's favorite flour and take a bow for your Gold Medal success. And it will be a success... for this is a 'Kitchen-tested' recipe... perfected with Gold Medal 'Kitchen-tested' Flour—your key to expert results with everything you bake."

Betty Crocker
OF GENERAL MILLS

4-Square Fudge Cake

1 3/4 cups plus 2 tbsp. sifted GOLD MEDAL Flour
2 cups sugar
*2 tsp. baking powder
1/4 tsp. soda
*1 tsp. salt
1/4 cup soft shortening (such as Crisco or Spry)
1 1/2 cups milk
1 tsp. vanilla
2 eggs (1/3 to 1/2 cup)
4 sq. unsweetened chocolate (4 oz.), melted
1 cup chopped nuts

Heat oven to 350° (mod.). Grease well and flour 13x9½x2" pan. Sift dry ingredients. Add shortening, milk, vanilla. Beat 2 min., med. speed on mixer or 300 vigorous strokes by hand. Scrape sides and bottom of bowl constantly. Add eggs, cooled chocolate. Beat 2 more min. Stir in nuts. Bake 40 to 50 min. Cool. Serve with ice cream or your favorite icing.

• • •

Omit baking powder and salt with GOLD MEDAL Self-Rising Flour.*

For altitudes over 3000 ft., write Betty Crocker, Box 100, Minneapolis, Minnesota for recipe adjustments.

"David," she said timidly, "what time will you call for me Tuesday?"

"Tuesday?" He seemed discomforted. "Oh. Well, about six-thirty, I guess." And he all but fled.

One more chance, Jody thought as she dressed on Tuesday night. Her hair was brushed satiny and she smelled of summer flowers, but there was a cold scared lump somewhere in the middle of her.

The evening was, if anything, more dismal than Sunday afternoon. And when he left her at the door he seemed relieved. He said nothing about seeing her again.

It was all over. Jody slumped down miserably on her bed. I muffed it, she said to herself. I may as well put him out of my mind. "And heart," a little voice inside her head whispered. "Yes, and heart," she agreed. There, she was talking to herself—a bad sign if there ever was one, but what difference did it make now?

Suddenly she saw something winking in the darkness of her open closet. There, catching the moonlight from the window, were her shoes—her magic slippers! She went over and ran a wistful finger along the slender straps. Well, why not—why not put them on? She couldn't make the grade as the sensible type anyway. She might as well wear them, and be her old natural self: neurotic—and happy. She put them on and looked down at her feet. That was when she heard it. A kind of blue-green hum! She ran to the window and looked out at the sky and then at her watch. Exactly midnight—she was just in time.

Scarcely touching the steps, she ran lightly down the front stairs and out into the yard. She chose a flat rock to sit on and tilted her head up to the sky.

"One—two—three," she began to count slowly. "Four—five ——" She had reached seventeen when she heard a voice at her elbow.

"What, may I ask, do you think you're doing?"

She turned and there, incredibly, was David. "I'm sublimating—and if you want to make something of it go right ahead!"

David's jaw dropped. "You're what?"

"Sublimating, sublimating," Jody cried sharply. "You're a psychiatrist. You know all about those things."

"I don't get it." He sounded dazed.

"It just so happens we are in the middle of the Perseid meteor shower," Jody snapped. "It reaches its maximum at midnight tonight and you can see at least one shooting star every minute. It's quite a display!"

He squinted up at the heavens and back. "But what's with this sublimating?"

"I bought a psychiatry book the night I met you. I realize my interest in astronomy is a substitution of interests. I study the stars because I'm frustrated in love."

"Jody, honey"—David shook his head—"you've got bats in the belfry."

"Oh, David," she wailed, "I know it! I'm positively fraught with neuroses!"

And the whole story came tumbling out.

David rocked back and forth beside her, laughing till he choked. Then at the sight of her tear-streaked face, he sobered and gently wiped her eyes.

"Listen to me, dopey child," he said. "Nine years I've been studying to be a psychiatrist. I've got two more years to go before I can even practice on my own. A book you bought at a drug away you start diagnosing y

"But the book said ——"

"I don't care what the book has all those symptoms in so wouldn't be normal if you one symptom becomes so your life starts to revolve aro serious. Like having those sta and start telling you you're

"Oh, David, are you sure?

"Very sure, Jody. Those fu yours are what make you dif one else in the world. They're tonight. I got to thinking, y changed so much overnight. clock striking midnight and too late to come back and was wrong."

Jody gasped. Midnight! T hour!

"Stop trying to be well ad telling her, "and start being real you! As far as I'm conce kind they ought to set the sta

Jody clasped her hands. mean it?"

"I certainly do. It's norma crazy. Take me, for instance— a wacky little girl who prowls at midnight listening to the st

He started to laugh again. Jody cried. "Do you want to w Magog?"

David pulled her into his her, not gently at all this time.

"Eighteen, nineteen, twe rapidly. "Twenty-one, twent three—four—five—six ——"

"Hey, what are you doing?

"Counting shooting stars, never saw so many all at seven, twenty-eight, twenty-ni

"Jody," he said softly, dra to him, "you've got your eyes

IN E-Z UNDIES AND SLEEPERS

Your youngster's unhampered motions, happy comfort are pleasures to see in E-Z knit cotton underwear. Labeled by child's weight as well as size . . they fit perfectly! Shrink-resistant, sturdy, sensibly priced . . they've been applauded by mothers for generations.

A. E-Z boys winter weight shirt, 2 to 8, 69¢; 10 to 16, 89¢. Boys winter weight shorts* 2 to 8, 69¢; 10 to 16, 89¢.

B. E-Z girls winter weight vest with EZ-ON neck and nylon reinforced binding. 2 to 7, 69¢; 8 to 14, 89¢. Girls panties.* Nylon reinforced cuffs. 2 to 7, 59¢; 8 to 14, 69¢.

C. E-Z shirt with EZ-ON neck. 3 mos. to 3 yrs., with pinhole-sealing diaper tapes, 59¢; without, 50¢. Infants double thickness panties.* Nylon reinforced cuffs. 1 to 3 yrs., 50¢.

D. E-Z 2-piece sleeper* with EZ-ON neck. 6 mos. to 4, pastels, $1.79; with print top, $2.00. Extra pants, $1.00.

E. E-Z boys ski-type pajamas.* 4 to 10, $2.49; 12 to 16, $2.98. Girls sizes, 4 to 8, $2.25; 10 to 14, $2.69.

*With heat-resistant elastic

E-Z

SHOP WHERE YOU SEE THE E-Z OVAL

E-Z MILLS INC., NEW YORK 1, N. Y.
Also at leading stores in Canada

E-Z UNDERWEAR AND HOSIERY FOR INFANTS AND CHILDREN, MEN AND WOMEN

LIBERTY AND CONFORMITY IN AMER

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 18

Thus underneath the turbulence of American politics and the clash of political ideas, there is a strong instinctive sense, related to personal and national self-preservation which sets limits. One can think and say anything one likes, but always "provided." Provided that one is not aiding or abetting the activities of a "hostile foreign power"; provided that one is not seeking to "overthrow the Constitution," the frame that holds so many disparate elements together, and that, in America, is crown, tradition and "togetherness." Hence, also, the constant patriotic emphasis, the truculence toward any disparagement of America, the worship of certain American heroes, notably the "Founding Fathers."

The "spy scare" is related to another fact about the United States. This nation is an area of continental size with no internal frontiers, within which anyone who once enters and is cleared through his entrance port with an unchallenged visa can move at will. Applicants for visitors' visas are casually screened in the consulates where they apply for them. Although screening of applicants for immigration visas is more thorough, they are not difficult to obtain, if one is in an unfilled quota, and properly outfitted with affidavits. And the creation of these affidavits is a regular industry of organizations wanting to introduce persons into this country for their own purposes. It is far easier and takes a shorter time to become a citizen of America than to naturalize oneself anywhere in Europe.

Once inside the United States, the alien enjoys far more freedom of movement than he does in any European country. Unless he runs afoul of the law, he can move from Maine to California and from the Canadian frontier to the Mexican without ever being asked to show a passport or compelled to register with the poli[illegible] I'a[illegible]nd out of England for thirty y[illegible]ndon hotel where I usually sta[illegible] employees rec[illegible]nize me immediate[illegible] nc[illegible]er by long-estab[illegible]shed contacts with influentia[illegible]ritons in all parties. But, like every other alien, with the police every time I c dence.

Furthermore, the alien who with an obviously un-British more likely to attract attenti here. A witty naturalized citize an "American" as someone w a foreign accent and has Thousands of aliens enter Ar every year, slipping through frontiers between Canada an the U.S.A. Few of these entrar espionage or subversion, but on assume that some of them ar country would so assume.

Nor is our Government so na that spies and subversives can requiring them to fill out swor that they are not this or that. T done is that we cannot deport a of his ideas, but we can legally perjury.

Our European friends really stand the difficulties of policing country, a union of forty-eigh with its own police system, wh not naturally suspicious of thos look or speak like "native-born The difficulties comprehend f tracking down subversives. The prehending native and alien cri of whom keep on the move or d out ever being caught. And if the FBI is more vigilant than S or the French "Deuxième Bure taken. This country will never state" as long as its citizens an freedom to move without per checks.

Thus America, with its unic moves between liberty and confo the sw[illegible] of the pendulum ha suf[illegible]ie[illegible] wide to create di plu[illegible]to subversion and a

Lucky Baby—
s Mommy uses OHNSON'S
EY POWDER.

t. oothest, silkiest powder in
o. A few sprinkles at each r nge will chase away prickd afes . . . keep your baby
. appy. Sixty years of use ed its quality and purity.

THE DECLINE AND FALL OF AUGIE SHEEAN

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 69

to be a lumberjack in Canada. A bunch of us are."

"They're lovely things."

I decided to like him. "Maybe you can get a pair and come along. Canada needs good men."

"It's not for me. I'm going to be a priest."

I stared at him in awe. He looked a little like a priest at that, with his large, Irish face and dark clothes. "You've got a vocation?"

"My mother's been prayin' for it. Everything my mother prays for comes true." He crossed the index and middle fingers of his right hand. "She and Saint Joseph are just like that!"

"Don't you want to be a priest?"

"Ah, I suppose so. But a fellow has no say in it. The saint has never refused her a thing in his life. She lights the candle every morning, and whatever she wants she gets. It's hard to believe."

It was. It was especially hard for me to believe that Mrs. Sheean could get prompt, efficient service from such a busy, high-level, heavenly executive. Although Joseph was my patron saint, I rarely prayed to him. I was then working on the theory that if you really wanted anything done you should go to someone who had, as it were, less paper work. I had great devotion, that year, to Saint Polycarp.

I was about to mention this to Augie, when Mrs. Sheean loomed up in front of us.

"Hello, me buckos." Mrs. Sheean had a deep booming voice and a figure like an uptilted dirigible. She stared at my boots. "Did you join up with the Army?" she asked me.

"They're lumberjack boots."

"A small, skinny thing like you a lumberjack? With a fine name like Joseph, it's a priest you should be. I'll say a few prayers for you."

"No, don't!" I said quickly.

"Well, you needn't shout, lad. If I can't help your soul, perhaps I can perform a corporal work of mercy. Drop by with Augustine after school, and I may find a little something to fatten you up." She waved cheerily and floated up the street.

"Augie," I said when she left, "if your mother likes Saint Joseph so much, how come she christened you Augustine?"

AUGIE scratched his head. "'Tisn't too sure I am, but I think at one time she was very fond of Saint Augustine. Then she found out a few things about him she didn't like and turned pretty cool. You know, those are lovely things, those boots."

After school, Augie reminded me of his mother's invitation. We found Mrs. Sheean in the kitchen, cutting a large chocolate cake.

"Sit down and eat up, boy," she said. "Don't stint yourself. You're not Jerry Clarke, praise God." Jerry Clarke, Mrs. Sheean went on to explain, was a miserly atheist who lived near her when she was a girl.

"Scrawny and mean he was. Came to a bad end. Said he'd prove there was no God. Ran into the chapel during Mass one morning, and let loose a string of blasphemies." She smiled. "He burst into flame."

"Was he hurt?" I asked.

"Ran screaming from the church and collapsed on the steps, burnt to a crisp. When they stirred the ashes the one thing left of him was a small pool of melted gold. It was the only good thing the little blackguard ever did—God rest his soul. There was enough gold there to repair the steps. Have another piece of cake."

I ate a good bit of Mrs. Sheean's cake in the next month or so and heard a good many of her stories. The cake was always chocolate and delicious; the stories were always bloodcurdling and moralistic. I became quite fond of Mrs. Sheean.

I BECAME fond of Augie too. Everybody did. He was a friendly, easygoing kid and within a few weeks he was one of the most popular boys in the neighborhood.

Mrs. Sheean's reception was more mixed. No doubt, everyone agreed, she had her good points. She was very nice to Augie (she bought him the boots right off) and she was always cruising forth to nurse at a sickbed or mourn at a wake. Yet she dispensed this spiritual largess with an irritating, hearty aloofness. She may have had good cause for her exalted attitude. It turned out to be amazingly true that every prayer Margaret Sheean made was immediately answered. For didn't Annie Brophy, whom the doctors had given up for dead, recover when Mrs. Sheean gave the nod to Saint Joseph? And when she predicted that Corny Hughes (who hadn't seen a sober day in fifteen years) would lay off the hooch, didn't he come down with a liver complaint and have to give up the bottle entirely? Mrs. Sheean had only to mutter a request as she lit her morning candle and the thing was as good as done. Corny Hughes never forgave her for it.

As a matter of fact, Mrs. Sheean's morning devotion became something of a parish scandal. The vigil lights in front of the statue of Saint Joseph were placed in diminishing rows, like racked billiard balls, in an ascending brass triangle. The red one at the apex of the triangle was Mrs. Sheean's. Every morning after eight-o'clock Mass she'd kneel for a few minutes at the prie-dieu, then light the candle. If it had been already lit by some lesser suppliant, Mrs. Sheean would pinch it out before relighting it, then light the usurper's candle farther down the line. This caused a great deal of talk, but nobody tried to do anything about it.

Augie's piety was a little less manifest. He regarded his ordination as a fait accompli and, like any good priest, he was in church more often than most of us, refused to listen to the mildly irreverent stories that sometimes made the rounds, and had a tendency to spot virtue in everything. It was when he began to spot the virtue in Doris Clooney that all the trouble started.

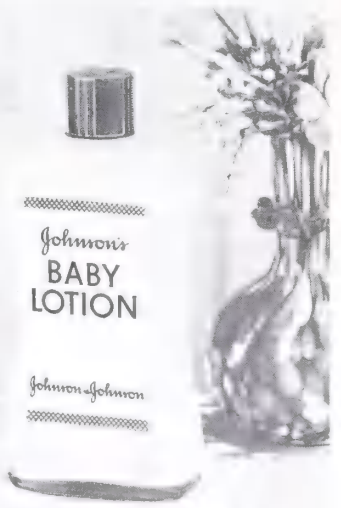
Doris Clooney, another Eighteenth-Streeter, was the Clara Bow of the eighth grade. A plump, flirtatious girl, she wore longer hair and shorter skirts than any other girl in the class, and there were occasional rumors of cloakroom kisses with Lindy Geoghegan, her steady boy friend. Lindy, a tall, slow-spoken kid who was in the eighth grade for the second time, always wore a black imitation-leather flier's helmet. He was mad about Doris Clooney, and although he lived in the oppo-

THE AMISH MADONNA

By VIRGINIA ESTERLY DUNBAR

Over the county roads,
Along the squares of brown,
The dark madonna rides.
Praise her in the black gown.

The horse's crescent hooves
Mark on the earth a hymn
That mounts on wings, like doves,
For the child's delight. Praise him.



The fields of tented corn,
The yellow pumpkins' piled Autumnal heaps adorn
The way of the girl and the child.

The black immaculate rig
And its slight freight proclaim
The animate root. The twig
Has holy fruit. Praise them.

Lucky, Lucky Baby—
his Mommy uses
JOHNSON'S
BABY LOTION too!

Scientifically formulated to prevent irritating rashes. New extra protection for delicate skin. Rich in soothing lanolin. Smooth it all over body after every bath. Give your baby the benefit of this new extra care.

site direction he carried her books up Eighteenth Street every day.

Augie and I frequently walked behind them, and when we did it was hard to get a sensible word out of him. He looked like a man walking underwater; he inched along with his eyes blurred and his lips contorted into a large, rubbery smirk. Then one day Doris smirked back.

I don't know exactly how it happened, but pretty soon Augie and I started walking home with Doris and Lindy. Lindy and I never said much, but Doris—who, it appeared, had developed quite an interest in religion—kept chattering to Augie about sacramentals and church ceremonies and what a noble life priests lead. What he saw in her was beyond me. I thought Doris Clooney was fat and dumb.

It wasn't a completely compatible quartet, and it broke up on the last day of our October retreat.

Sister Mary Rita had just told us about a Belgian peasant girl who was possessed by the devil. When the devil took over, this girl would turn black, float twelve feet in the air and tell off-color stories in Ancient Assyrian. She became the talk of the eighth grade.

"I'd call it," Doris Clooney said as we walked up the street, "a truly awe-inspiring story." That's what sister had called it.

Augie was about to answer when Lindy cut him off: "I'd call it a lot of junk."

"Lindy Geoghegan, that's blasphemous!" Doris said.

"Twelve feet in the air? I don't believe a word of it."

I decided to come to Christianity's rescue. "I jumped from a twelve-foot diving board last summer," I said. "Twelve feet isn't so high."

"It's not bad for such a short take-off," Lindy said.

Doris giggled; Augie frowned; Doris turned prim.

"Come on, Augie," she said, pulling him ahead, "let's not associate with these heathens."

From then on, Augie and Doris walked home alone together. Or rather, Doris walked Augie home. He and Doris would stop and chat when they reached Augie's house; then, as I approached (I always followed a block behind) Doris would smile, blow him a kiss and saunter up Eighteenth Street.

I was a little hurt about all this. I couldn't understand why she should be sore at me. She wasn't, Augie explained; but a wonderful thing had happened. Doris had discovered that she, too, had a vocation; she wanted to be a nun, but she was constantly bothered by worldly thoughts. It did her good to tell Augie about them.

There are two ways of exerting one's strength; one is pushing down, the other is pulling up.

—BOOKER T. WASHINGTON
"Booker T. Washington": Basil Mathews (Harvard University Press).

Doris started calling Augie her "dear, dear friend," and wouldn't so much as pass the time of day with poor Lindy Geoghegan.

Augie's spiritual work of mercy came to an abrupt end on a snowy day in mid-November. When I started up Eighteenth Street, I was surprised to see Augie and Doris still standing in front of his house. Mrs. Sheean, who suddenly appeared on the front steps, was even more surprised than I. I couldn't hear what she said, but I saw her right arm come up and make a slow rigid arc until it pointed due north. And I saw Doris bundle her books under her arm and flee into the storm. As I came closer, the thunder of Mrs. Sheean's voice rumbled around my head, and the compasslike arm swung in my direction.

"You're to come in here, too, young man. It's time you learned about things."

I walked up the steps. She put one arm around me, the other around Augie, and pushed us ahead of her into the kitchen. Mrs. Sheean stood in the center of the room, flushed, silent and swaying violently. Then suddenly:

"What's her name?" she bellowed.

"Doris Clooney," Augie muttered.

Mrs. Sheean stopped swaying. She stood stock-still, dropped both hands to her sides and threw back her head.

"I'll tell you a few things about your friend Miss Clooney. I know her type well, and a bad type it is. All satin and Satan and hanging around in low dens with gangsters and sailors with their slick, patent-leather hair." (Lindy's helmet? I thought.) "Oh, sure, s
'Come on, it won't matter. V will it make?'" Mrs. Sheean in thought was Doris' voice. It c of mincing boom. "'Sure it difference, dearie. Who'll see banged on the table. "I'll tell y
you. There's the cherubim'll s seraphim, and all the saints
God, and the good Saint Jo Unperturbed by this unorthod Sheean went on, "But no! S won't matter."

Just what wouldn't matter w to either Augie or me.

"I don't know about the you here," Mrs. Sheean continue you, Augustine, you have a m you come near that flapper ag of me general intention when I saint tomorrow."

That was enough for Augie might have been deaf and du attention he paid to Doris didn't see though. Sh Geoghegan
mier than e

I though found out D a real voca he'd feel re n't; when I called me little prattle to stop both he took to more often

As I came from the confessi day afternoon, I saw Augie kne statue of Saint Joseph. The bur sent bright flashes of colored across his forehead. His lips and his face had the desperately one who is doggedly and unsuc to get a word in edgewise.

I waited on the church step out. "Guess what?" I said. "V the first thing we'll do when woods is clear out a space f Augie was supposed to be the chaplain.

"God of Virtues!" he said.
hear the end of your silly, bralla?"

"I just wanted to tell you."

"You told me. Now must tagging after me? Sure I'm sick you and your plans. I'd appr didn't come near me again."

This was the beginning of a me. I got so mad at Augie that invite him to my birthday par

The birthday parties that m for me came fairly close to be was born on the twenty-sixth and although the party was the from the family, I usually woun share of the neighborhood Ch

I didn't see Augie from the a closed for the holidays until t

"Mamma cut it out in no time!"

WISS SHEARS and SCISSORS

You can make the prettiest party clothes and school outfits by using the proper tools. Wiss shears and scissors cut like a dream. Also, they give everything you make such a beautifully detailed and finished effect!

WISS DRESSMAKERS' SHEARS—with bent professional-type handles for easier, faster and more accurate cutting. No. 127, $4.00.*

WISS SEWING SCISSORS—invaluable for sewing projects, gift-wrapping, cutting string, flowers. No. 815, $3.00.*

WISS EMBROIDERY SCISSORS—for finest needlework. Also handy for ripping, cutting notches, snipping threads. Feather-light with slender blades, sharp points. No. 764, $2.60.*

WISS PINKING SHEARS—(not illustrated) easy to use, give a ravel-resistant decorative finish to the widest range of fabrics, in both single and several thicknesses. 3 sizes, 5½" to 9" $4.25 to $8.95.

These Wiss items available at notions departments, better hardware and cutlery stores.

*Prices slightly higher Denver and West.

J. WISS & SONS CO. · NEWARK 7, N.J.

Manufacturers of Shears, Scissors, Pinking Shears, Metal Cutting Snips and Garden Shears

OTHER VIEWS, SIZES AND PRICE OF VOGUE PATTERN ON PAGES 76 & 77

Vogue Design No. 8437. One-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c. For 3⅞ yards 39-inch material with nap for version with short

8437

...n I went down to learn if he ...the party. I found him and his ...tchen. Augie was eating a piece ...ke and his mother was telling ... about the specter of a bad ...to say Mass every night in the ...at bog. She stopped short when ...t of me. Augie didn't even look

... she said. "Did somebody steal ...e door?" Mrs. Sheean wasn't ...th me these days either. ...o be thirteen on the day after ... having a party and I wonder ... come?"

...he might," Mrs. Sheean said in ...ht was a sweet voice. "Who all

...ole gang."

...iss Clooney be making her ap-

...w. Maybe. I guess so."

...ure Augustine has no desire to ...ou, aroon?"

... answer.

... Mrs. Sheean said, "he'd call ... of the angels, and the devil him- ...ly take possession of his soul."

... kely that Augie would attend. ...gh. The party had been going ...n hour when I had to leave a ... the Tail on the Donkey to ...orbell. It was Augie.

...y to say hello," he said.

... come in for a minute?"

... not dressed at all." He had on ... knickers he wore to school.

...s I am," I said, pointing to the ...s that were my favorite Christ-

... no gift. I'm sorry about that. ...er things."

... I said. "I'm glad you could ...r thought your mother would

... I told her I was going to church ...he."

... her?"

...d me. The woman has never ... have surprised me at all to ...ack and float twelve feet in the ...rrible price to pay for a bit of ... cake.

...ot only managed to keep his ...peared to be having the time of ...inning first prize in the treasure ...nt piece which he gave me as a ...l a funny jig, sang a few Irish ...s, in general, the life of the ...ce, however, did he speak to ..., and she acted as if she weren't ...om with him.

...al, just when the party was get- ...ne girl interrupted the fun by ...ame of Post Office. I started ... my older sister, Kathleen, ...ys and girls at opposite ends of ... began giving out the numbers. ... like this," I told Augie. "It's a

... philosophically. "No matter. ...oon, and we may as well be ..."

...d finished with the girls and ...s. Just as she was telling Augie ..., Doris Clooney popped up out of

... she said, "but I can't seem to ...e."

..." Kathleen said.

EGAN must have overheard, for "Thirty-two" the first time he walked over to him, turned her m kiss her on the cheek. Lindy his place looking a little dis-

... in the center of the room smil- "Thirteen," she purred. It was ...er.

... losed her eyes, leaned back her ... tened her lips with the tip of her ...ngue. Seeing her waiting there ... a warm, sweet cloud filling my ...heart were dissolving in a mist of ...e first time in my life, the game ... me.

Augie stood up. He was having a terrible time trying to be polite. He stumbled awkwardly toward Doris; then, just as he was a shadow's breadth away from her, he let a wild, unearthly shriek out of him, wheeled around and raced out the front door.

Doris Clooney jumped back, and everybody laughed and yelled. I grabbed my coat and took off after him.

When I reached the street he was a block away from me, running like a man possessed. I would never have caught up with him if he hadn't turned up the steps of the church.

When I arrived, panting, at the church vestibule, I could see Augie kneeling before the statue of Saint Joseph with his bent head cupped in his hands. As I debated whether to leave or stay, Augie stood up, leaned forward and blew out the top vigil light. I could have sworn that every light in the church went out, and a fierce, joyous terror surged up in me. Augie strode toward me and would have passed by if I hadn't reached out and grabbed his shoulder.

"Augie," I whispered, "you'd better go back and light it."

"Not a bit of it," he growled. "Those two have made life miserable for me long enough."

I said a quick prayer to Saint Polycarp. Augie marched out and I followed slowly.

"Come on," he shouted, "let's get back to the party." He walked ahead a few steps and waited for me to catch up to him. "By the way," he said, "that number Geoghegan called. It was thirty-two, wasn't it?"

"It was twenty-three," I said.

"That's odd. I could have sworn ——" He broke off when he saw the smirk on my face. "Why, you sly little rogue! You wanted to keep it for yourself?" He laughed and gave me a playful punch on the arm.

Then suddenly, for no reason at all, we ran madly up Eighteenth Street, laughing like lunatics, our boots clacking against the brick pavement like the sound of cloven hoofs. END

I CAN MAKE ANYTHING BECAUSE MY

AUTOMATIC NECCHI DOES EVERYTHING!

Even without touching the machine you can do these lovely stitches.

Appliqués

Automatic embroidery

Straight, zigzag, embroidery . . .
NECCHI does every stitch of the work . . . without attachments!

From first stitch to final finishing touch, you can sew everything, easier, quicker, better . . . on the amazing Automatic Necchi—and you don't have to be an expert.

Your Necchi quickly pays for itself with the money it saves you on every kind of family sewing.

You can't afford to buy any sewing machine until you have tried and compared the "does everything" automatic Necchi. There is a Necchi to suit your budget; straight stitch model BC is only $98.95

Sews on buttons, makes buttonholes, mends and darns

Smocking

Monograms

AUTOMATIC

NECCHI

WITH THE WONDER WHEEL

Parts and services available at 2,300 dealers in the U.S. See phone book for authorized dealer.

FREE BOOKLET: Send for 24-page illustrated guide on "How To Select a Sewing Machine."

NECCHI, Dept. O442
164 West 25th Street, New York 1, N. Y. or 464 McGill Street, Montreal, P.Q., Canada

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Replacement or a refund of money if not as advertised therein. Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping and certified by U. S. Testing Company.

© 1954-Necchi Sewing Machine Sales Corp.

He needs your love—

your wise care too

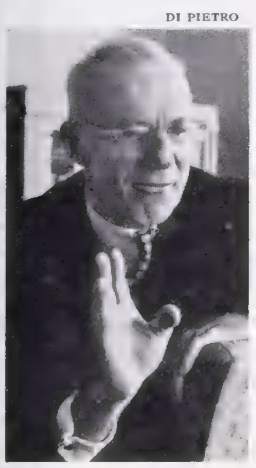
One Daily Comfort You Can Give Him Is This Softer Tissue

▲ In so many ways he depends on you. On your fond him build confidence . . . on your thoughtful care to physical comfort. One practical way you can add to your and contentment is by choosing his bathroom tissue carefu it is truly soft, truly gentle to his thinner baby skin.

◀ Held close in your arms, he enjoys the comforting sof own special baby towel. He will appreciate the gentle t new ScotTissue too. So soft and gentle against his thinn strong to resist tearing and shredding . . . quickly absorbe thorough cleansing. "ScotTissue," t

The New ScotTissue comes to you at no increase in ▶ price. The generous 1,000-sheet roll gives you greater value—goes further, lasts longer. Choose the tissue that's "comfy" for baby, economical for the whole family—New ScotTissue! Another great Scott value.

1,000 SHEETS—OVER ½ MORE THAN THE 650 SHEETS YOU GET FROM MOST OTHER TISSUES



Softer than ever—2 ROLLS OF SCOTTISSUE

EQUAL MORE THAN 3 ROLLS OF MOST OTHER TISSUES

Dr. Spock Talks with Mothers

When should you call the doctor?

By BENJAMIN SPOCK, M.D.

DI PIETRO

Dr. Spock says: "If a child is so carefully watched that he never has an accident, he is being fussed over too much. If bones may be saved, but his character will be ruined."

A MRS. WARREN of New York writes, "I hope you will find it possible in one of your articles to give young women advice on when to call the doctor. Due to the doctor shortage, an attitude about calling a doctor has grown up that I think is penalizing the infants of this country. Mothers feel guilty about calling the doctor. In spite of the fact that you and others have repeatedly warned that a sniffle and a sore throat and a slight temperature can mean almost anything from a cold to scarlet fever, too often mothers do hesitate because they are afraid of seeming foolish and overanxious. I nearly fell into the same error a few weeks ago when my seven-year-old had those same symptoms, which were accompanied by a severe headache. It was the headache that made me resolve to get the doctor, and the result was what he called 'aborted meningitis.' Thanks to sulfa and very quick action on my doctor's part, my youngster was not very sick."

I agree vigorously with Mrs. Warren that a mother who is worried about her child's condition should telephone the doctor and not stop to wonder whether he will think it unnecessary or whether she will feel embarrassed. But if we agree on this, it only shifts the question, for many mothers, to "When should I be worried?"

The first problem—and it bothered me all the time I was writing my book—is that no two mothers are alike, naturally, and that even if a doctor could lay down a fairly safe set of rules for one parent, they wouldn't work safely for another. To take a couple of extreme examples: If I were writing only for very worrisome, overly conscientious mothers I'd want to keep reassuring them that a lot of symptoms that sound scary usually don't lead to anything serious: pain behind the ear early in an ear infection usually doesn't point to mastoid disease in the ordinary sense; pain in the abdomen only occasionally means appendicitis, and so on. But at the opposite extreme are the very, very casual mothers. If they read those same statements they'd understand me to say that pain behind the ears doesn't mean anything, and that children never get appendicitis so you don't need to pay attention to abdominal pain in them.

As a matter of fact, most parents shift from overly worrisome with their first child, to overly casual with their third or fourth, which is natural and wholesome. I can still remember a generally sensible mother who called me about her fourth child's illness, saying, "I hate to bother you, but Jenny has been pretty sick for three days now with fever and headache. Do you suppose you need to see her?" Those two symptoms together are enough to make a doctor at least think of the possibility of meningitis. I tried not to sound as alarmed as I felt and rushed out in the middle of office hours to make the home visit. (It wasn't meningitis.)

It would be handy to be able to tell parents that low fever doesn't mean much but that high fever is always more serious. But it isn't true. To be sure, a lot of serious diseases like pneumonia, meningitis, peritonitis, mastoiditis usually have high fever, but all of them can occur with only low-grade fever. And roseola infantum, an infection of early childhood, which isn't serious at all, has typically a steady fever of 104° for three or four days before the rash breaks out.

It's worth remembering that in the early months of infancy the body tends not to react with much fever, even in the more dangerous infections. Then, with most children, somewhere around one or two years of age, a change takes place. Now the body develops a tendency to react with high fever at the start of all kinds of illnesses, mild as well as serious. Most parents know this from their own experience. A common story is that the child seems entirely well in the morning, has lost some of his appetite and pep by lunch, and has 104° at the end of the afternoon. The doctor is called, finds little in his examination except perhaps a slightly red throat. Within a day or two the fever is gone and the child is well or has only a running nose. In other words, the mildest of colds, sore throats or "grippe" is likely to stir up quite a fever at this age. By five or six or seven years of age most children are getting out of this high-fever-over-nothing stage. They're now more likely to start their colds and sore throats with little fever, and when they do have fever it's more apt to mean something.

In many individual illnesses you can say that the height of the fever in the beginning of the disease is much less important than what the fever is doing after a few days. A fever that begins to climb several days after the start of an infection often shows that the disease is getting worse or that a complication has developed, whether or not there was fever at the start. This is particularly true of colds and throat infections: the increase in fever or the return of the fever raises the question whether the cold has spread to the ears or down into the bronchial tubes (bronchitis or pneumonia, especially if there is more cough) or into the urinary system ("pyelitis") or into the sinuses or neck glands. In other words, I'd make a flat statement that any fever that went up or came back after the second day would make it imperative to get in touch with a doctor.

But aren't there any other clues for the guidance of sensible parents, particularly those who live many miles from a doctor and who can't reach him by telephone? I don't think there are any that can be relied on completely, but there are a few that may help somewhat. I'd put first the general appearance of the child—how "sick" he looks, how prostrated, how different in appearance and behavior from his usual healthy state. If a child looks and acts sick, I'd try much harder to get a doctor to see him or to bring him to the doctor than if he is eating and playing as usual—no matter what his fever.

Next I'd like to list several particular symptoms that occur during colds that always call for prompt medical attention. Perhaps the commonest is earache. Not because ear infection is always serious—in most cases the child recovers without serious trouble. But untreated ear infection sometimes drags on and, when prolonged, it may leave a degree of permanent deafness. Yet when treated promptly with one of the modern drugs, ear infection can usually be stopped in its tracks. There is no excuse for neglecting it.

Another symptom calling always for quick attention is hoarseness of voice or tightness of breathing. To be sure, hoarseness is most often a sign of only a mild laryngitis that comes to nothing, and tightness of breathing is most often due only to a mild temporary "croup." But hoarseness and tightness, especially if accompanied by fever, may be signs of a more dangerous laryngitis and bronchitis that call for vigorous treatment.

So far I have been discussing colds and throat infections and their complications. These together cause probably nine tenths of children's illnesses. Another group are the stomach and intestinal infections which show themselves particularly in vomiting and diarrhea and which are fairly common in the first couple of years of life. Here again I'd say that the most important sign that an infection is serious is that the child seems changed in appearance or is prostrated. I'd also think it was more urgent to call a doctor if the symptoms increased rather than decreased on the second or third day.

There are, of course, dozens of other diseases that affect various parts of the body, which are too complicated to discuss and most of which are too rare to be remembered. Mrs. Warren had the bad luck to run into meningitis, which is very infrequent. She sensed, if she did not think it out, that headache, especially severe headache, is uncommon in the early years of childhood and should always be looked into promptly. Her child probably looked sicker, too, than with most infections. It's the unusual appearance that should alert the parent—and it usually does.

Abdominal pain is complained of at the beginning of many infections, and the young child probably means nausea in many of these cases. Stomach-ache is also common in children with feeding problems and with other worries. Appendicitis is certainly rare compared with these other causes. But it's potentially serious enough so that abdominal pain should be looked into, especially if it's an unusual complaint for this particular child and if it continues for an hour or more. (A pain that lasts a few seconds and then goes away for good is not appendicitis.)

At this point do you feel like saying, "It all sounds too complicated and yet too incomplete to be helpful; and I doubt if I will remember it the next time my child is ill"? I think that is the normal reaction. Parents aren't meant to be diagnosticians. Doctors in training don't just learn a list of diseases and their symptoms and then expect to make diagnoses. They spend four years in medical school and perhaps several more in residencies, studying the body, the bacteria that invade it, the actual organs that have been invaded, the laboratory tests for the disease, the textbook descriptions of the variations in symptoms that different cases show, and then they examine and treat dozens of cases in the hospital. By the time they enter practice they should be thoroughly familiar with pneumonia or ear infections or appendicitis, in all their usual forms, from a dozen different angles. And even so, doctors usually feel that their judgment would be so poor trying to diagnose and treat a member of their own family that they practically all turn to other doctors for such help.

Then how can a parent with no training be expected to go very far in deciding what's serious and what isn't?

I know well how apologetic parents become when calling a doctor, particularly if they themselves doubt the seriousness of the illness. I think they should do their best to get over that apologeticness. But even if they feel it's probably a foolish call, they should call anyway. Otherwise I don't see any point in having a doctor. Usually the doctor doesn't mind a "foolish question" the way the parent imagines. Even if a mother is sure that the doctor will be grumpy about this call she should call anyway, if she is concerned. Obviously the child's health is more important than the doctor's or the parent's feelings.

Although he cannot answer letters personally, Dr. Spock will be glad to hear from readers and will discuss in these pages problems of general interest.—Ed.

this Nitey Nite® is NEWS

Nitey Nite
again brings fresh styling to sleepers. This 1954 model fits without fasteners and it GROWS!

- new, rubber-surfaced Gro-Loc belt holds shirt inside, permits sleeper to lengthen a full extra size.
- new, patented, neckline gives plenty of pull-over head-room.
- new, patented, Bootee foot provides more comfort, longer wear.

Sturdily tailored of soft, fleecy, pure cotton fabric, it's Perry-ized for shrink-resistance. Every gay songbird color is absolutely sudfast. Sizes 2-8. Other styles 00-4; 4-14.

thread for thread . . . dollar for dollar . . .
Nitey Nite REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. is your best buy

NITEY NITE SLEEPERS, PERRY, N. Y.

"I QUIT TEACHING"

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 163

jockey," a fuel-oil salesman and "ironically enough, a bill collector." He has never had a vacation. That long summer holiday often cited as one of the rewards of a teaching job was also a time when he had to find jobs to cover the two months when he wasn't getting salary checks. All those extra jobs meant that Ed had no time to spend with his family, and he and Lilli both knew that wasn't right because the boys were growing up and they needed him.

"It's all right to talk about dedicating your life to teaching," Ed says. "But the day comes when you have to think about your own kids."

Twenty-eight-year-old Edward Hough sent in his resignation from Trenton, New Jersey's, McClellan School, effective the first of February. It meant turning his back on the ambition of half a lifetime, losing the daily companionship of friends who were teachers, too, giving up the long-term security of a teaching career for a job he didn't know much about. He raised the necessary capital, went to work operating a six-pump Calso gas station at the busy intersection of Prospect Street and Stuyvesant Avenue in Trenton. He has four full-time and five part-time employees, a weekly payroll of from $275 to $300. "This year I'll gross $120,000. If I can make just 8 per cent of that stick to me, I'll make $10,000 a year." He isn't figuring on $10,000 this first year—perhaps two years from now. But he feels that the $5200 to $6000 he will make this year is a lot better than $3700. As a teacher he might, twelve years from now, be making $6600.

When friends stop by the station they may have to wait for Ed to fill a gas tank, check a car on the grease rack, put a final polish on a wash job or listen to a salesman's efforts to sell him a machine that cuts car keys in a matter of seconds. He bought the machine. It's a traffic maker and Ed is out to build his new business with the same thoroughness he gave to teaching his class of thirty-one fifth-graders. Looking at Ed's grimy hands and the heavy blue coveralls he wears, a friend asked, "How can you do this greasy job when only a few weeks ago you were a promising professional man?"

"I TOLD him," Ed says, "that I can do it because now I can go home and hand Lilli a few bucks and she doesn't have to worry about making half a pound of hamburger stretch to cover two meals." When a concerned relative questioned the dignity of running a gas station, Ed said, "I reminded her that my grandfather was a butcher, and he didn't worry much about the dignity of that. Sure, I miss teaching. It's what I was trained for. I like kids and I get along with them."

A boy comes in with the punctured tube from his bicycle tire. "Excuse me, Mr. Hough. Can you fix this?"

"Sure." Ed carries the tube into the shop, the boy trailing him and answering questions about activities of his Scout troop.

Carefully stored away, Ed has a package of letters his fifth-graders wrote him when they heard he was giving up his teaching job. The words vary, but in each note the same: the kids miss him. They left, they wish him luck in his ne the parents wrote, too, maybe that Ed wasn't just a nine-to-thr McClellan School is in an old part of Trenton, and Ed, who many blocks away, sometim lunch with kids whose parents collected clothing to distribute the youngsters to football and he was umpiring, others out to day of games and a hot-dog r teachers put their own money classrooms," he says. "I'm r bows for that."

ONE of the part-time jobs Ed the Delaware Valley United was good at collecting pledge and sometimes forgot about. energy caused some of the influ men der "was "kill so l teach "It's when Sever offe work ent b area Calse part Henr is als Nava felt t actly tive to c pur stati it so cou dow thou and with that was to d too. Thir for T ante too. day he c coul the ner, a movie (they saw Knigh Table) and for sodas afterwar day," Lilli recalls, "and the all eaten out together like taurant." And at Easter all had trim new blue suits and "Bow ties, too," Scottie says his out in the Easter picture the boys dressed for church. outfit herself, everything new ing a gay red coat very becor fair skin, sparkling brown ey When Ed was teaching, mos budget went into keeping him never did think that was fair was necessary. "Ed was tea neighborhood. He had to set kids who often didn't get a go their own parents."

Ed Hough was a senior at 1943 when he met vivacious was the youngest girl in a far father, a traveling Baptist mi she was five years old. Her work running an apartment delphia. As a child Lilli reme embroider tiny rosebuds on c nearby doll factory. When sh moved to Trenton. Lilli was

HOW THE HOUGHS SPEND THEIR MONEY EACH MONTH

Ed figures his income will be $5200 to $6000 this year, at present takes salary of $100 a week.

Food and household supplies	$125.00
Clothing	25.00
Payment on house (interest, insurance, taxes, principal)	61.50
Fuel, light, water	25.00
Telephone	8.00
Insurance (life, hospital, car)	35.00
Medical and dental	10.00
Recreation	5.00
Church	5.00
Furniture and appliances (including payment on freezer)	50.00
Car expenses (family car—business takes care of $25 expense on Ed's service car)	10.00
Dry cleaning, shoe repair	5.00
Child-care fees (sitter)	3.00
Children's school expenses	1.00
Club dues	1.00
Magazines, newspapers	6.00
Savings fund	10.00
Income taxes	18.00
Total	$403.50

or Fast
ADACHE ELIEF!
u'll say a-Seltzer®
BRAND
ONDERFUL!

ATORIES, INC., ELKHART, INDIANA

LL LEATHER GOODS WITH
ax Mel-O-Wax gives leather a rich, mellow lustre & keeps it lovely. Use Mel-O-Wax Neutral to clean, polish, soften & (so important) preserve leather handbags, luggage, the family's shoes & leather clothing, upholstery in homes & cars. Trust your finest leather goods to Mel-O-Wax, leather's finest care. Used & recommended by tanners & manufacturers for over 50 years.
Write for free Leather Care folder & name of dealer nearest you. Mel-O-Wax Products, Inc., Wynnewood, Pa.

DO IT YOURSELF!
Make your own costume jewelry, realistic flowers, useful & decorative gifts. OUR catalog illustrates easy-to-make projects, all necessary materials. Send 10c for your copy NOW!
HELART STUDIOS ST. PETERSBURG FLORIDA

DE SHOES
utiful Shoes With Arch Comfort
C TO EEE • 4 TO 11
Spectator 7.85
FREE $1.39 NYLON Hose with each pair
Black or Brown Suede with Alligator trim
Write for New FREE CATALOG WIDE Footeee's INC.
d Orders Dept. L-11S. 8th St., Phila. 6, Pa.

pretty and very popular. When she first saw Ed he was captaining the team at a swimming meet, wearing a red-and-black team sweater, the red of which clashed fiercely with his carroty-red hair. "Who could miss him?" Lilli smiles.

Ed had little time or money for dating. If he was going to be a teacher he had to get through college and he had to earn the money for it himself. His mother died when he was nine. "My father was a nice guy who just couldn't cope with things sometimes, and at those times couldn't stay away from the bottle. He worked as a foreman for the Reading Railroad." Ed's sister was older; his young brother was often ill with rheumatic fever; there wasn't much close family companionship. Ed says, "I saw myself as a 'have not' and I wanted to be a 'have.'" At fourteen he was working part time in a warehouse to buy clothes to wear to school. "I was tall and strong for my age. I couldn't compete socially or financially with more secure kids, but I could compete scholastically and athletically, so that's what I did." The swimming team was the only afterschool activity he made the time for.

"Lilli made me feel I was important to her," he says. "Right from the start she's looked after me. When we were in school and I didn't have any money for clothes, she was knitting socks for me, making over a pair of her brother's trousers. And her mother ——" He breaks off and grins. "My mother-in-law's a real doll. She treated me like a son; fed me; sent me money to come home on leave when I was in the Navy. I guess that's what I was missing most in my life—a family that really liked me and wanted me."

Five days after he graduated from high school Ed was in the Navy. He was sent to Bainbridge, Maryland, for boot training. As a member of a Navy V-12 training group he had one semester at the University of Pennsylvania, two semesters at Princeton. He was assigned to the USNR Midshipman's School at Fort Schuyler, New York, for four months. The day after he was commissioned an ensign—at nineteen one of the youngest officers in the Navy—Ed and Lilli were married.

March 16, 1945, was all pretty hectic as Lilli remembers it. "If Ed got his commission that day we could be married. If he didn't, we couldn't." They were married in a Trenton Baptist church, with Lilli in white satin with a veil. Two days later Ed was ordered to Miami. Lilli followed as soon as he found quarters for them. "We were luckier than a lot of people during the war," Lilli admits. "Most of the time I could be with Ed, or near enough to see him. Ed was sent to New Orleans, Gulfport, Boston, Norfolk. Our longest period of separation was four months, when Ed's ship, a DE, was on convoy duty."

A FEW days after their first anniversary, Ed was out of the Navy and back in the struggle to educate himself for a teaching career. "I would have liked to go back to Princeton," Ed says. "Princeton was really fine. But I didn't have the money. My father died. The only person who was helping me was my wife and she didn't have any money either." He went to New Jersey State Teachers College at Trenton, working at the inevitable part-time jobs when he wasn't studying. Lilli worked, too, until their first baby was on the way. For a time they rented a three-room basement apartment from Lilli's mother, who was managing an apartment hotel. While Ed was at the teachers' college they were eligible for one of the four-room prefab houses put up on the campus for students with families. Later they moved to a six-room farmhouse, six miles from Trenton.

"We didn't really notice the inconveniences of the farm at first," Lilli says. "The house was old, hard to keep clean and hard to heat in winter. The water heater was so much trouble to build a fire in that we had hot water only on Monday—laundry day. That day we all took extra-luxurious baths and scrubbed everything in the house."

But among the farm's clear assets were Lilli's vegetable garden and fruits for canning. An old chicken house was cleaned and restocked. "It was there, and we couldn't just let it go to waste." So there were chickens and fresh eggs. "Even when money was scarce we always had plenty to eat." But when the twins, Scott and Stewart, were born, the drawbacks of the old house became more obvious. The uncertain heating system, a leaky roof, a narrow winding staircase, all these were hazards for small and active children. A fading scar on Scottie's forehead still recalls vividly the terrifying day he fell, pulling a heavy bridge lamp down with him. The glass reflector globe shattered and Scottie was badly cut. Luckily, Lilli's sister had driven out from town for a visit. "I don't even like to think what might have happened if she hadn't been here," Lilli says. "I didn't have our car, and there was no phone in the house." As it was, Scottie lost so much blood before she could rush him the six miles to a doctor that she thought she was too late and Scottie would die. She doesn't remember clearly the hours that followed—only that they had made it in time and Scottie would live. "He had to have transfusions, and treatment for a long time, though, to build him up after losing all that blood."

Lilli had been pretty tired out before the twins came. "In spite of all the exercise I was getting gardening and doing farm chores, I gained eighty pounds—imagine! I could hardly get around." A month before the birth she was told definitely to expect two babies instead of one. Until X rays settled the matter there was even what Lilli describes as "a wild do interesting things in Mr. Hart's class—like seeing the movie of Julius Caesar when we studied it." And a pretty crinoline-skirted girl said seriously, "I've learned more about grammar than I ever thought I could!"

Bob is primarily a "grammar man" and his five classes of freshmen, sophomores and juniors (150 students in all) get thorough grounding in parts of speech, conjugation of verbs, sentence diagramming. "I don't want to ruin the English language for them," he says, "but they do have to learn it. Of course we study the classics too." Last year, to "liven up" the study of literature, freshmen listened to a recording of Basil Rathbone reading Treasure Island; sophomores wrote and presented a five-act dramatization of Silas Marner; juniors, after a survey study of American writers, wrote their own short stories. (One intriguing story had a plot worthy of Hawthorne, dialogue in the style of Hemingway.)

Disciplinary problems are rare and rarely serious. "I try to avoid situations that might get out of hand," Bob says, "and discipline my classes with humor. Oh, occasionally I send one of the boys to cool his heels in the principal's office, but mostly we have good times in classes."

"Good times" outside the classroom include various parties, picnics, class plays, choral concerts, assembly programs—most of which both Bob and Clara Belle attend. Bob is head of the English Department, and last year was freshman-class sponsor, both of which necessi-

PROVEN
by mothers! Checks diaper rash and odor!

Mennen Baby
Fold Easier — Only Curity has FOLDLINES.
Be sure you get full weight, full size Curity Diapers.
All Curity Diapers are wrinkle resistant and ravel resistant.

SEE THE NEW Curity NIGHT DIAPER
•
Mail the Coupon for Regular Diaper
KENDALL MILLS — Division of The Kendall Company, Walpole, Mass., Dept. J104
Enclosed is 25c (coins only) for full-size Curity Diaper and literature on Curity Nursery Products. (Only one diaper to a family.) Print clearly
Name _____
Address _____
City _____ State _____
Good in Continental United States and Hawaii.

Your children deserve good shoes and with Acrobat you can afford them

Acrobat
SHOES FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

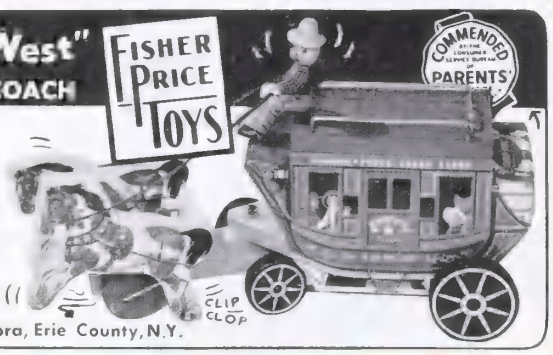
$4.95 to $6.95
according to size.

No shoes are too good for your children and when you choose Acrobat shoes, you can afford the best.

These shoes were designed by parents of active children who know the hard wear their own kids give to shoes. By careful study of wear-points and styling, they have made a combination of roomy comfort, durability and attractive appearance that the kids love. You'll like them, too, and so will the family budget!

See these new long-wearing Acrobats before you buy another pair of shoes for your children.

You can count on Friendly Acrobat Shoe Company
Division of General Shoe Corporation, Nashville 3, Tennessee

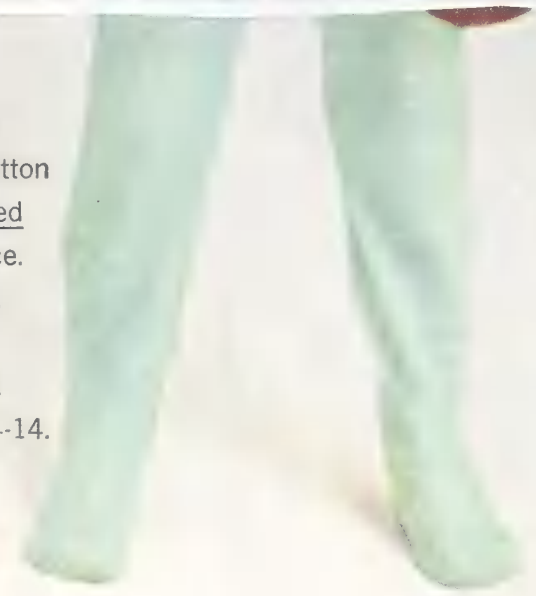


It's FUN to "play West" with GOLD STAR STAGECOACH

PULL TOY FOR CHILDREN 1-6

Colorful, authentic design sparks imaginations to absorbing dramatic play. A sturdy, wood pull toy full of FUN . . . galloping horses make "clippity-clop" sound, hinged top to coach and Gold Box, 2 mail pouches, 15½", $3.00 East, $3.25 South and West. AT ALL TOY COUNTERS or direct. Send for folder #47 of 23 push-pull toys for healthful, active play.

FISHER PRICE TOYS



COMMENDED BY THE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS' MAGAZINE

FISHER-PRICE TOYS, INC. East Aurora, Erie County, N.Y.

foot provides more comfort, longer wear.

Sturdily tailored of soft, fleecy, pure cotton fabric, it's Perry-ized for shrink-resistance. Every gay songbird color is absolutely sudfast. Sizes 2-8. Other styles 00-4; 4-14.

thread for thread . . . dollar for dollar . . .
Nitey Nite REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. is your best buy

NITEY NITE SLEEPERS, PERRY, N. Y.

twenty-four-hour period" in which the doctor thought he detected three heartbeats. "I don't know what we'd have done with three babies when we had things ready for only one!"

The Houghs' pride and pleasure in their handsome, sturdy twins and big brother Dennis is enormous. The boys all have Lilli's bright brown eyes and startlingly white teeth. If they keep on at their present rate of growth they're bound to match Ed's six-foot-plus.

One February night in 1952 Lilli and Ed were listening to a Trenton radio station when a contest was announced—write the best letter on "Why I think we should have a night out." They joked about their qualifications. Ed wrote a letter listing the things that kept them housebound—three small children, his own busy schedule, the strained budget. His letter won. Their prize: dinner and a show, plus a baby sitter. "We said it was our Valentine present to each other," Lilli smiles. "We didn't have anything else to give."

Ed graduated from the teachers' college in June, 1949, and in September he had his long-dreamed-of teaching job. The first day of school, Lilli recalls, he was up at six in the morning shining shoes that had been polished the night before, cramming his pockets with reminder notes to himself. When he came home that night he told her happily, "This is it. This is what I want to do."

He was teaching at the McClellan School, not far from the school he had attended as a boy. He knew that neighborhood and he knew its problems. As a child he remembers "seeing some pretty terrible things in that neighborhood during the depression. I think I'm the only one in my whole crowd who ever even graduated from high school. A lot of the boys I knew have prison records now." Because he did understand the problems faced by children of a poor neighborhood, he wanted to be a good teacher. He remembered some who helped and encouraged him not so many years back. There was Miss Emmons, who taught him in the sixth grade during the confused, unhappy year when his mother died. "She taught me a lot about balance and understanding," Ed says. He smiles and adds, "Taught me not to be a show-off too." In the eighth grade there was Mr. Gaug—"a fine athlete, a fair-minded man." There was Mr. Neuschafer, his swimming coach—"we're still friends." And when he was sixteen, Mr. Klinefelter gave him a book he asked to borrow. The book was Tom Paine's Age of Reason. It first confused and then fascinated Ed.

BECAUSE he did want to be a good teacher, he added to his already heavily loaded schedule the task of getting his master's degree in education at Rutgers. With his nine-to-three classes at McClellan, his late-afternoon job with the United Fund, the odd jobs as an official for sports events, this was a period so packed with activity that Ed sometimes couldn't allow even ten minutes for dinner. From September of 1951 he studied in the evenings, on Saturdays, and as much of the summer as he could manage. He was almost too tired to realize that he had gained his objective when, on June 6, 1953, he got his master's degree. Despite the heavy schedule he carried, he was elected to Delta Xi chapter of Kappa Delta Pi, National Honor Society in Education, chosen for high scholarship and his record in the field of education.

Ed is active in the Naval Reserve, serving as executive officer for his unit, which meets in Trenton one night a week. Th unit rated forty-second in th District. Today Ed will tell y first—fifth in the nation. They top spot nationally and feel that they'll make it this year. duty—a training cruise—tw "There have been times," he lived most of the summer on those two weeks of active d the two gold stripes of a lieu

IN September, 1952, the H new three-bedroom house in sylvania. After two years Lill the conveniences it has. No with that cranky and inadequa firing up that bucket-a-day st a ton-a-day!" Lilli says wry water once a week. "I figured into this house we were really in. "This was the first house in my whole life that had auto a good shower." Radiant heat house at an even temperature, the neatly planned kitchen ma day laundry simple. But even spending down to an absolute

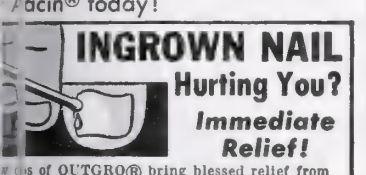
NEXT MONTH

"I go stale on normal routine. Dottie shares with me a feeling of satisfaction that was missing when I had a nice easy job with steady hours and two weeks' vacation."

● Young draftsman Barham Bobo left his $100-a-week "dead end" job to study at Georgia Tech for an engineering degree, in the process picked up a paper route (90 miles to be traveled each morning from 3 A.M. to 7 A.M.) to pay expenses . . . and a new routine goes around the clock at

THE PINK-HOUSE BOBOS

By JEAN TODD FREEMAN



HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES in the November JOURNAL

for an afternoon spent ump ball game—and pick up a milk for the kids on his way h end he umpired a double-head another game that night, repe ule on Sunday. He made almos didn't happen very often. "I strong of body and I could now, but how was I going to r older? The only reason we go because my wife is such a Lilli's practical—only I didn have to be practical all the tin

Busy as he was, Ed was stil problems of the new and grow he'd moved into. Until May served as president of the L Association, leading a fight fo conditions for the children, rates, stop lights at busy inters other residents to help rebuil farmhouse into a busy commu was so persuasive that house, labor were all donated. One Le "If Ed and Lilli were living in a hundred years ago, Ed wo you'd go to to ask 'Where d church?' or 'How do we rid th lessness?' He's a natural-born shame a person like that is lea

"A lot of people say it's a sha teaching," Ed says. "Maybe it's is fine for a single person—sa making $4000 a year. She's got her work is interesting and she well on what she makes. But with a family to take care of—t The married man just can't com has to meet a lot of requiremen patience, a willingness to absorb criticism—constructive criticism. A teacher is never through learning, there are always new techniques and you have to keep up. You're always going to school. When a teacher can't make a living at his job after all that—well, I feel injustice is being done to a lot of good conscientious Americans. There isn't anything more important than the education of our children, because they are the future of the country. And if the teachers ever sell us out, we're done." Ed speaks not only as an ex-teacher, but as the father of three boys, the oldest already in school. "A teacher needn't be coddled or sponged up, but as an individual he should be given recognition when and if it is due him—academically and financially. Nobody ever came to me and said, 'Ed, you're doing a nice job. I know it's hard, but if you can hold on a while longer maybe something can be done.' It would have made a lot of difference to me if somebody had.

"Take Walt, for instance." Walt is Walter Almond, Ed's manager at the station. Walt had three children and was, like Ed, a teacher. At thirty, after seven years of teaching, Walt was $2800 in debt. "An average of about four hundred dollars a year," he figures. Walt is another reason why Ed wants to make a success of his new business. "Walt left a teaching job to come in with me as my manager. If things are good for me they'll be good for Walt too."

Things are beginning to be good for the Houghs. Ed still works long hours. He alternates monthly with Walt working the night shift from 4 P.M. to midnight. Every other Thursday and Sunday he works all day—7 A.M. to midnight—so both he and Walt can have alternate Thursdays and Sundays off. Those free days give him time to spend with the boys, cut the lawn, work around the house or go on a family outing. "Lilli always caters to me on my day off," he says. "Lets me sleep late, fixes me a big breakfast with a fancy omelet or French toast—things like that." And though Lilli often waits up until 1 A.M. for Ed to come home from work, she likes the month that he works night shift because it means he can be home most of the day. The boys like it too.

The compensations for giving up his teaching career aren't entirely financial, but this year when the Houghs' anniversary came around, a big new freezer of the latest design was installed in the storage room off the kitchen. Lilli isn't greatly tempted by expensive clothes or jewelry, but she glows over gifts for her home. "Ed said he sort of went all out this year to make up for the anniversaries when he couldn't give me presents." And Ed's purchase of a 1939 car for use for transportation and service calls at his business (its $135 purchase price was part of his teachers' pension fund) leaves the family car, a 1950 sedan, for Lilli's use. She still regards this as a wonder undreamed of a year ago.

The whole family had a day in Atlantic City recently. (All tall buildings are "hotels" to the twins now, and all "hotels" are in Atlantic City.) The twins went along on a trip to New York. ("Trains go to New York!" they remember, and it isn't easy to convince them that trains go anywhere else.) Dennis was in school that day and couldn't go along, but a pocketknife with a chain that clips to his belt consoled him. There will be other trips. "I can take my family out to dinner, now, or on a trip to the zoo. Next spring when Dennis has his vacation from school I'll pile the whole family in the car and we'll go see Lilli's brother, in Florida." Ed's planning still has a little of the incredulous tone of a man who can't remember the last time he had a week off. "I don't think that's too much to ask."

Does he think anything can be done to make it easier for teachers like himself, men whose responsibility toward the needs of their own children must often conflict with their genuine desire to go on teaching?

He thinks that more young people of ability would go into teaching—and stay in it—if teachers could start in at a salary of around $3000 a year and be assured of reaching $6500 to $7000 in five or six years. He deplores the too-frequent lack of real co-operation between administrators and teachers. "That doesn't exist in all cases, of course, but sometimes in trying to give everybody what they want—taxpayers, students, parents, teachers, the school board—the administrator forgets the problems he had when he started out as a teacher. They're still the same problems."

Sometimes Ed feels that "the only people interested in education are the people in it." But mostly he tends to feel that the public just doesn't understand how bad things are with the teachers who hold the responsibility of teaching America's children. "If you could really get the facts to the people," he says, "I think something would be done. I've got great faith in people."

"TEACHING IS MY LIFE"

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 166

eight-thirty, and must remain half an hour after the last bell rings in the afternoon. "It's a standard joke among the faculty," he says, "that it takes thirty minutes to prepare for the day and thirty more to recover from it." The early arrival, however, enables teachers to avoid the long line of 26 school buses ("Looks like a huge yellow caterpillar!") which transport 1320 students to Wilson High each morning—some from as far as 30 miles away.

Seven years ago, Augusta County took over the abandoned buildings and grounds of Woodrow Wilson Army Hospital, converting it to Woodrow Wilson Educational Center. The center includes a technical school, a rehabilitation center, and the high school—which is one of the largest and best-equipped rural schools in the country, consolidating five smaller high schools, serving more than half of Augusta County, and employing some 54 teachers.

At first glance, the long, low brick buildings connected by breezeways and corridors appear to be an incomprehensible maze. But, aided by diagrams, new students are soon changing classes with maximum speed and efficiency. Bob says, "It's a wonderful arrangement; no stairways, no fire hazard because each room has an outside exit."

Walking down the corridor to his classroom, Bob calls nearly every student he meets by name, is occasionally followed by the teasing strains of "Heart of my heart." Students like Bob because "He makes us laugh a lot" and "He doesn't care if we horse around some—not too much, though." One rangy sophomore boy, typically garbed in neat jeans, sports shirt and dusty white bucks, said, "We do interesting things in Mr. Hart's class—like seeing the movie of Julius Caesar when we studied it." And a pretty crinoline-skirted girl said seriously, "I've learned more about grammar than I ever thought I could!"

Bob is primarily a "grammar man" and his five classes of freshmen, sophomores and juniors (150 students in all) get thorough grounding in parts of speech, conjugation of verbs, sentence diagramming. "I don't want to ruin the English language for them," he says, "but they do have to learn it. Of course we study the classics too." Last year, to "liven up" the study of literature, freshmen listened to a recording of Basil Rathbone reading Treasure Island; sophomores wrote and presented a five-act dramatization of Silas Marner; juniors, after a survey study of American writers, wrote their own short stories. (One intriguing story had a plot worthy of Hawthorne, dialogue in the style of Hemingway.)

Disciplinary problems are rare and rarely serious. "I try to avoid situations that might get out of hand," Bob says, "and discipline my classes with humor. Oh, occasionally I send one of the boys to cool his heels in the principal's office, but mostly we have good times in classes."

"Good times" outside the classroom include various parties, picnics, class plays, choral concerts, assembly programs—most of which both Bob and Clara Belle attend. Bob is head of the English Department, and last year was freshman-class sponsor, both of which necessi-

Curity®
DIAPERS
FULL WEIGHT • FULL MEASURE

Even baby has figured it out . . . if you cut down the cotton content in a diaper it will be correspondingly less absorbent . . . and less satisfactory in almost every way. You, and baby, won't be happy with anything less than the complete protection offered by full weight, full size, fully absorbent Curity Diapers. They fit better and wear longer, too. Remember, also, that Curity Diapers . . .

Wash Easier — Stains wash away.

Dry Faster — Indoors or out.

Absorb Fully — Thirsty surgical weave.

Fold Easier — Only Curity has FOLDLINES.

Be sure you get full weight, full size Curity Diapers.

All Curity Diapers are wrinkle resistant and ravel resistant.

SEE THE NEW Curity NIGHT DIAPER

Mail the Coupon for Regular Diaper

KENDALL MILLS — Division of
The Kendall Company, Walpole, Mass., Dept. J104
Enclosed is 25c (coins only) for full-size Curity Diaper and literature on Curity Nursery Products. (Only one diaper to a family.) Print clearly

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____
Good in Continental United States and Hawaii.

tate extra duties. Another duty, shared by the teachers, is that of supervising the students' recreational period held in the social center that was once an officers' club. After a hot cafeteria lunch (20 cents) Bob might spend fifteen minutes or so watching students dance, play table tennis, and do a brisk business in candy-bar sales over the wide counter that was once a cocktail bar!

Unless there is a faculty meeting, Bob is usually home by four. "The first thing I do," he says, "is wash the dust of the day off my hands—then I go out and get them muddy in the garden." (This summer, Bob had two gardens—he worked one for a neighbor—with peas, beans, Irish potatoes, onions, beets, cucumbers, corn and tomatoes.) Or he simply walks around the yard, admiring his healthy boxwood and roses, while the children vie for his attention: Bobbye pleading for a game of ball, Suzanne swinging to his hand and bubbling in her light excited voice, Mary Jane riding her squeaky tricycle and commanding, "Daddy, look at me!"

Clara Belle says, "Usually I go outside and push the girls in the swing or do something equally useless, but I have to start supper soon, or we lose the children to television!" At first Clara Belle worried for fear her "wonderful" neighbor would tire of the three small children rushing in, plopping down in front of her television screen, eating all her cookies; then she hit on a scheme by which the neighbor would hook her screen door if she was busy. "It's a wonderful idea," Clara Belle says. "If the door's hooked, they just run on home and we do something else and no one's feelings are hurt." (The neighbor, impressed by such thoughtfulness, said, "That's the first time a mother's ever begged me to lock her children out!")

Supper (served on the screened back porch if it's hot, in the kitchen if it's not) might consist of pork chops, squash fried with a little onion, salad, hot homemade rolls ("The children eat their weight in rolls!") a pineapple upside-down cake for de if we intend to live with Bobbye," says, "we have to have spaghetti or

Before bedtime, Bob likes to sit upright piano to play folk songs harmonizing to Clara Belle's sw prano while all three children chir Although Bob's formal training only fifteen secret music lessons in ("Dad found out about it and mad he wouldn't be without the pian it "a necessary aid to relaxation."

After the children are asleep, B to grade papers or plan future "pr Clara Belle sews or reads. ("I v consciousness when I read," she a that irritates Bob terribly—he ca easily.") The Harts seldom go o often they invite another coupl canasta and sample Clara Bel lemon-and-angel-food pie-cake); are expensive, and with their many they're grateful for quiet evenings teaches Sunday school, attend Association of University Women chairman of her church circle. Bo of the Verona Ruritan Club (w set out 4200 pine seedlings, insta street lights, paved two streets), his Sunday-school class, belong educational organizations, is a Cross and Community Chest driv and Clara Belle attend P.T.A. me son High and at Bobbye's school two years Bob has been "pronou Beverly Manor spelling bee.

"About once a month," says "Bob and I go over the bills to Harts budget "backward" ("W we have, and if there's anything rejoice!") but they have never b debt because "Bob cannot stand hanging over his head." Clara mizes by doing her own laund skillfully for food, and sewing most of the children's clothes, wine-colored robe and a gray c (which he wore until the collar v and did all the slip-covering in like to slip-cover; a chair doesn't or holler, and it's not one size and another size after," she say sewing for myself—the most c ever got for a dress was one I sharkskin, strapless, with a little zippers and all—it cost just eighty

In spite of careful economizin tle extra money; and Bob is s couraged, wishing he could pay the house, provide educational s children, buy Clara Belle "a w of clothes." But "I've always above profit," he says. "It's the do with children that keeps me

EVEN as a child growing up farm in North Carolina, Bob more in books than in barns. V ping "big brothers" to do the work, Bob was relegated to carr them, running errands, feeding he excelled in schoolwork, wa several clubs, was active in debat work, won the Balfour medal around student." Though his fa olute" in insisting that Bob perfo his stepmother, a schoolteacher sympathize with Bob's dreams.

Novie Sue Poole had organ year elementary school in Virgi ing in North Carolina when she ried the widowed Mr. Hart. " guiding light for us all," Bob s came, we all had a college educ twelve Hart children, seven wo through college, four are now tional field.) Partly through partly through a driving need thing connected with teaching, Wake Forest, where he graded worked in the cafeteria, mowe furnaces—and, after his grad his teaching career in a cou $97.50 a month.

"If I had married Clara Be says now, "I don't see how managed." Actually, when B

Baroness Pattern No. 5420 U.S. Des. Pat. No. 142075 (Rayon and Cotton)

Beautiful on your table—for every occasion! Forget everything you ever knew about lace tablecloths—and start a new life of gracious living with beautiful Quaker Lace. Quaker Tablecloths wear and wear—best idea in the world for everyday use. Easy to wash—and you sponge off most stains and spots in a jiffy—right on the table. Dozens of lovely patterns—wide price range to fit any purse. Quaker Lace Tablecloths come in cotton, cotton and rayon and fabulous Orlon* that needs no ironing. Priced from $5.95 to $54.95.

*Du Pont trademark

QUAKER LACE
TABLECLOTHS
"Remember, every day deserves your best"

QUAKER LACE COMPANY, Philadelphia 33, Pa.
Sales Office: 330 Fifth Ave., New York 1, N.Y.
Also makers of Quaker Curtains.

MADE IN AMERICA BY AMERICANS QUAKER

arger cuts,
s, abrasions...

he dressing
doctor uses...

se it's sterile
e moment of use

Sealed in individual envelopes

RED CROSS
ERILE GAUZE PAD
Johnson & Johnson

Apply with Red Cross Adhesive Tape

son & Johnson

nection whatever with American National Red Cross

Belle, he had taught school for four years in North Carolina, was bound for a new position at Augusta Military Academy near Verona. "The bus stopped," he recalls, "and a pretty girl got on ——"

When Clara Belle Ambler got on the bus, she was hardly expecting to fall in love. Her life (most of it spent in the Valley with her parents and her younger brother Jamie) had been rather sheltered; her dates carefully approved. Like many girls, she had planned "to go to college, teach for two years, and then get married—instead, I got married, then went to college, then taught!"

The disrupting influence on Clara Belle's life was the dark-haired young man who "got up and offered me his seat. Of course we had to talk; he was sitting on my suitcase!" Bob worked fast; before he got off the bus at Fort Defiance he had learned her name; before a week was up he had written for a date. "But mother didn't believe in pickups," Clara Belle says. "She had to ask my preacher to talk with his preacher before I could go out with him!"

During Clara Belle's sophomore year they dated steadily; the next year they were engaged. "I proposed on the spur of the moment," says Bob. "One minute we were carrying on conversation as usual and the next minute I asked her to marry me." Clara Belle claims she didn't accept immediately—"I knew I'd have to convince daddy. But when Bob promised to see me through college, daddy was won over."

THE day of the wedding (June 11, 1945) Bob and Clara Belle conducted Bob's stepmother through the Grand Caverns in Grottoes, Virginia; returned to Clara Belle's home for a big dinner party. "I remember eating fried chicken standing up," says Clara Belle, "because all the chairs had been moved out for the reception. Just as we left for the church, daddy said something I'll never forget. He whispered, 'Sister, you can still change your mind, you don't have to go if you don't want to.' But I wanted to!"

The ceremony was held at Augusta Stone Church, the oldest Presbyterian house of worship in the Valley, traditionally a place "to shield men's bodies from the Indians and their souls from the devil." Clara Belle says, "Bob had the shakes and I didn't think my maid o honor would make it down the aisle; but though I had butterflies, they didn't show. I generally don't get very excited."

She was excited enough, however, over their honeymoon in Washington, D.C.; hardly less thrilled to move into the upstairs apartment of historic Willow Spout Cottage (built in 1826 as a tollhouse for the first Valley turnpike) in Fort Defiance. Those were happy years: Bob enjoyed being "Major Hart" to the A.M.A. boys; Clara Belle adored the dances and colorful Sunday-afternoon dress parades. In the summers, Bob taught at nearby camps to supplement his salary while Clara Belle worked toward her home-economics degree at Madison College. Her last session in 1948 required residence at the home-management house—and she broke records by bringing her fifteen-month-old son to college with her! "That was quite a summer," Clara Belle recalls. "Bob was night watchman at a Baptist camp near the college; he'd rush over to the home-management house in time for lunch, stay to dinner, then rush back to his job. Also, we were excited about our new house!"

Clara Belle's parents, at that time living in Verona next door to a five-room cottage which had never been finished, had urged them to buy it. "Bob was attracted by the price—he couldn't have bought a house on a long-term plan," says Clara Belle. "But I had to be convinced. I saw none of its possibilities, just saw that square half-completed house on a shaly hillside."

Nevertheless, in the spring of 1948 the Harts took over the $2500 mortgage and agreed to pay the owner $2500 more; then they settled down to the task of making the house habitable. There was no front stoop, no outside shingling or inside plastering, no plumbing, no furnace, no woodwork or baseboards—"in short, not much of a house," Bob concludes. Clara Belle, recalling the days of the stove in the middle of the living room, the pitcher pump on the roofless back porch, the outdoor privy and the screenless windows, says today, "It wasn't so bad. Bob and I grew up on farms, were used to 'inconveniences.'"

"Working slowly, bit by bit," the Harts have done wonders with their tiny house. Now they have a bathroom, a cool screened back porch, two upstairs rooms for the children. They painted the walls themselves in clear restful shades ("We're not fantastic-minded")—subdued gray for the living room, light yellow for the dining room, mauve for the den ("I like mauve because it's neither this nor that") and hunter green for the bedroom. Hard-rock-maple furniture throughout the house is both pleasing and practical; Clara Belle's pride and joy is the New England china press which she discovered in a Staunton secondhand store. ("The dealer was so nice—he let us take a drawer home to see if it matched our set!") And Bob has worked miracles with the yard—after many doses of topsoil and fertilizer, the "solid shale" has yielded a flood of rosebushes, redbud, Japanese quince, assorted spring flowers and (best of all) rich green grass.

Plans for the future include a carport with a flat roof accessible from the living room; a retaining wall on the steep side of the house, topped with a wrought-iron rail and finished off with a lamppost. "But we can wait for those—we don't want to overextend ourselves

San Jacinto CONTEMPORARY in Sandalwood on White. Complete sets, open stock, serving pieces available.

TEXAS-WARE

with that textured look—it's break-resistant melmac®
dinnerware

A fresh fashion in dining – this San Jacinto Contemporary in MELMAC molding material. Superbly designed with a textured look for decorative accent. MELMAC is easy and safe to wash by hand or automatic dishwasher–safe, too, in children's hands.

Yellow on Dusty Rose Gray on White White on Sage Green

Replacement Guaranteed

Replacement by the maker, Plastics Manufacturing Co., guaranteed if any piece breaks, cracks or chips within two years in normal household use. Look for the Texas Ware guarantee—and be sure to look, too, for the tag that says MELMAC, sure sign you're getting the real thing!

MELMAC is a registered trade-mark of American Cyanamid Company, N.Y. 20, N.Y. supplier of MELMAC Molding Compounds to manufacturers who fashion high-quality dinnerware in a variety of designs and colors. San Jacinto Contemporary, shown here, is an exclusive design of Plastics Manufacturing Co., Dallas 10, Tex.

You and your lovely clothes are safe with Fresh

Are you always Lovely to Love?

You're lovely to look at . . . lovely to be near . . . only when underarms stay dry and odorless.

That's why lovely women use FRESH Cream Deodorant, always!

Tests in a leading university laboratory show that new FRESH with "Moisture-Shield" formula has up to 180% greater astringent action than other leading cream deodorants. And it is this astringent action that keeps underarms dry, free from odor. Use gentle, effective FRESH daily.

ONLY FRESH HAS THIS NEW "MOISTURE SHIELD" FORMULA TO KEEP UNDERARMS REALLY DRY!

Registered trade mark of The Pharmacraft Corporation. Fresh is also manufactured and distributed in Canada.

and then come up against some unforeseen crisis!"

Such a crisis occurred in December of 1950, a day Clara Belle remembers with horror. "I was addressing Christmas cards; Mary Jane, just sixteen days old, was beside me in the bassinet. Suddenly I realized she was breathing strangely." At the hospital, the Harts learned that their baby had a rare and dangerous diaphragmatic hernia. After a harrowing race across the mountains to Charlottesville, Bob and Clara Belle sat out the delicate four-hour operation, discovered later that Mary Jane's heart had stopped three times, was restored by massage each time. "If she's spoiled now," Clara Belle says, "it's because we so nearly lost her then." Mary Jane was truly a miracle baby: the hospital provided two interns free of charge to watch her every minute; the surgeon waived his fee; Colonel Roller (head of Augusta Military Academy) advanced Bob enough money to pay the hospital bill!

Then, the very next summer, while Bob was working as a substitute at the Verona post office, he had what was nearly a nervous breakdown. "I came home blind as a bat," he says. "All I could see was a brilliant glare—like sun on chrome." The doctor advised him to stop worrying and working so hard, to cut down on coffee and cigarettes. And right then Clara Belle decided to get a job, in order to ease Bob's financial worries. When Bob started teaching English at Wilson High, Clara Belle started with him, teaching home economics.

Today Clara Belle agrees with Bob that teaching gave her self-confidence. "Before Clara B. taught," Bob says, "she wouldn't stand up for her rights. Now, if we argue, she fires right back at me!" Teaching also made Clara Belle aware of money; she soon realized that her earnings ($111 a month, after deduction for taxes and child care) didn't amount to much. "I wonder," she says thoughtfully, "how long it will take people to realize they get exactly what they pay for. In this valley farmers pay enormous prices for the very best cattle: yet they underpay their teachers. Only the most dedicated men and women will continue to teach if they must sacrifice to do it."

But Bob says, "Oh, teachers get resigned—somehow it seems unethical to talk about low salaries, and we can't go out and strike. Besides, a good life is more imp money; and I'm happy here, teac at Wilson High, living in Verona build a home, you put more i money . . . when you have a fami roots too." And Clara Belle finish we don't really believe that the gra on the other side of the fence—l side of the mountain."

HOW THE HART SPEND THEIR MO EACH MONTH

Bob's salary for 10 mon teaching is $3400, his incon part-time post-office job totaling $4000. Clara Belle porary teaching income help for extras to improve the the remainder went into a savings fund.

Food	$
Clothing
Fuel, light, water
Telephone
Insurance—life and educational Medical and dental (includes insurance)
Church
Furniture and appliances
Car expense (20 miles each day)
Bobbye's lunches and Suzie's transportation
Bob's lunches
Club dues
House payments
FHA payments
Property, real-estate taxes
Federal income tax
State income tax
Charities
Total	$

PLAY CENTERS SUBSTITUTE FOR CITY STR

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 23

The play centers' creative program builds from day to day, month to month, even year to year. "We always have a lot of little isolationists in the fall," Miss Ayres says, "children who want the ball to themselves, or insist on having an adult's undivided attention."

Gradually these children grow more assured. Young Steve, a precocious cartoonist, draws a weekly comic strip for the Y.Y.C. Globe, a mimeographed newspaper which is one of the children's projects at P.S. 151. But Steve's mother worried because her son, at ten, had never learned to play ball. He couldn't learn on the street—where boys his age were already smoking and learning to gamble. Steve could not be tempted outside very often during his first year at the center. But the second year found him playing ball regularly.

Miss Elizabeth Black, director of groups in "creative drama," often sees the children working out personal problems in imaginative play. "I just can't say enough about the kids!" she exclaims. "I wish professional theater people could see them 'acting out' a story. With no scenery or costumes, but with all the imagination in the world, they transform a schoolroom into a dark cave or a high mountaintop in seconds." Hansel and Gretel, in jeans and cotton shirts, cower in the middle of the floor—and they are lost in the woods. They talk as they imagine lost children would, making up "lines" as they go. "Oh, Hansel," Gretel says, clutching his arm, "it's getting awfully dark—and the wolves will come. We must pray!" And to Hansel's unconcealed amazement (as well as Miss Black's) Gretel, who comes from a parochial school next door, falls to her knees and begins a long Catholic prayer. She rises and insists that Hansel pray too. Hansel, embarrassed, ducks his head, mutters, "Dear God. Don't let the wolves come. A hurries Gretel on into the story.

In 1953 the council added to its Teen Canteen, open five afternoo for the young teens (12–16), and community center for young adu

In the Y.Y.C.'s busy central off dren and young people are always in everyone's mind. Young artis and water-color paintings decorat provided by the Board of Educa under the direction of Miss Ayres ecutive secretary, Mrs. Muriel Ba five "office volunteers," each of w few hours a week, take care of t complicated records and business Committees working on special projects also work from the office ago recipes from eleven nation tested by council members in kitchens, then assembled in an attra let which brings a small but steady the center. A joint venture with t League is the annual Cooks' To York kitchens. Mrs. Francis A. publicity chairman, says, "Peop trigued with the idea that New interested in other women's kitch

Because so many share a feeling involvement, the Yorkville Youth "adventure in human relations" beyond all expectation, within a f

"We hear a lot of talk about j linquency," Mr. McCloskey p "Everybody knows what every should do—except themselves. In people are willing to work, day is inspiring to find such people, an cern, in the ugly school buildings is needed most."

CAN THIS MARRIAGE BE SAVED?

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 83

out the dead-and-gone past. e that is ruining my marriage. Eileen was born," Myra said. other-in-law has been doing to add a new member—my xclusive family corporation of ts to make Eileen into the er! Both she and Hobey seem fact Eileen is my daughter. If my mother-in-law in opera- Eileen was hers. Not satisfied with being a professional mother to her own two sons, she is now determined to be a professional grandmother to my child. Three times recently she borrowed Eileen for the afternoon on the pretext of giving me a little freedom, and each time she brought the baby back dolled up in a new, expensive and unnecessary outfit. Furthermore, I had to thank her or risk offending both her and Hobey. The way she carries on is perfectly fine with him.

"While I was in the hospital having Eileen, the whole situation began. This job opportunity suddenly came up for Hobey and the same afternoon he located an apartment for us. Or so I was led to believe. The truth is his mother found and chose the apartment and put in a hurry-up call for a decorator. When I brought Eileen home from the hospital, a brand-new nursery was waiting as a surprise for me.

"It was indeed a surprise! Hobey and I budget pretty strictly. I handle the bookkeeping; I used to teach math. We were planning to furnish the baby's room with a secondhand crib—used and handed on to me by my sisters—a cunning yellow bathinet, and an unpainted chest of drawers Hobey had promised to paint.

"I don't know what became of the chest of drawers. The secondhand crib had been returned to my oldest sister. The bathinet was on view, stuck off in a corner. It was hard to locate because of the chest, the new crib, a ribbony bassinet, ruffled curtains, pictures and a rug, bought and installed by my mother-in-law. Everything was in shades of pink. I was planning a yellow-and-white color scheme for our baby.

"I tried to be nice about the surprise," Myra said, "since I didn't want to hurt my mother-in-law, and judged she and Hobey didn't know how she'd hurt and upset me. Anyway, I didn't realize the nursery was the first step in a big campaign.

"Hardly a week goes by that my mother-in-law doesn't appear at the door with some new present for Eileen and a new flock of suggestions as to how I should rear her. I've had no chance to buy little sweaters or rompers or anything else. I'm always beaten to the gun. A few years ago Hobey's mother inherited a fairly large estate from her family. Hobey isn't mercenary—or I never used to think so—but it's hard for me to believe he doesn't sometimes think about that money. Personally, I wish my mother-in-law didn't have a dime. I don't relish her brand of generosity. I show it too!

"Last week I wasn't one bit nice when I was 'surprised' by a hundred-and-fifty-dollar baby buggy," Myra said. "For the past three months my mother-in-law has been saying Eileen needed a buggy, and I have been saying she didn't. There are no sidewalks in our neighborhood. Now Hobey insists I find a sidewalk somewhere to wheel the baby so his mother's feelings won't be hurt. He thinks my complaints are absurd, and my parents also think I'm foolish to complain of my mother-in-law's thoughtfulness.

"EVERYBODY seems to miss the point. What I'm really complaining about is the wrecking of my marriage, and the change that is taking place in my feelings toward Hobey. I'm losing my self-respect and my respect for him. Even our sexual relationship, which used to be fine, is being spoiled. It's hard for me to keep on thinking of Hobey as strong and masculine when he shows himself as weak and spineless and refuses to tell his mother that I'm his wife, that I come first with him, that I have rights. When I'm pushed around, I don't sit down and wring my hands and cry. I plot and scheme and try to figure mean ways of revenge, and I don't want to be like that. Hobey is driving me to it.

"He won't discuss his mother with me, but he does discuss me with her. They talk about my smoking, I know. Hobey disapproves of smoking and so does she. His father has to smoke in the garage. I've been put in the same position in my own home." Abruptly

. the one fragrance
a others . . . to wear ny ne, anywhere.
Pe me from 2.00 to 57.50
o Bouquet Tweed 1.50
Héric
PARIS LONDON
by e & Scott
FREE
GES ou get acquainted with -fo us fragrance by trying Cu special offer: a purse e of eed perfume free with of ene Curtis Spray Net.* *limited time only

naturally, it's Helene Curtis spray net
...the spray you know holds every hair in place softly... softly

With a mist so fine you can't see it...or feel it...SPRAY NET holds your hair softly in place...invisibly ...all day! Never a feeling of stiffness!

Helene Curtis SPRAY NET can be brushed out or rinsed out in a jiffy.

You can set your hair with SPRAY NET. Why wait for water or wave set to dry?

Neither rainy nor humid weather will undo your hair-do when you use SPRAY NET.

SPRAY NET is a breeze to use. As easy, in fact, as powdering your nose. And just as important to your appearance. Undone hair, you know, can be a girl's undoing.

New Fall hair-do? Use SPRAY NET to keep it softly in place. Even hair that has been let "run wild" all Summer will behave beautifully for SPRAY NET.

Dry hair seems LESS dry... because Helene Curtis has found the way to blend a remarkable spray-on Lanolin Lotion into SPRAY NET. Gives your hair the soft, soft touch of silk.

Buy SPRAY NET today . . . you'll be sold on it, we know, for the rest of your days . . . and nights.

$1.25 Regular size (4½ oz.)

Giant economy size (11 oz.) $1.89 both prices plus tax

Helene Curtis spray net BRAND

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

only Helene Curtis Spray Net contains spray-on lanolin lotion

AND to condition dull or dry hair ...bring it back to beauty with Helene Curtis lanolin discovery*
Regular size $1.25 New Large economy size $1.89 Both prices plus tax

have grapefruit instead

Worth its weight in health

Overweight comes from calorie-loaded drinks as well as heavy foods. So pick your drinks with care. A chilled glass of grapefruit juice quenches your thirst, perks you up, yet lets you keep your weight down, too.

You'll get lively, refreshing, Florida flavor and lots of vitamin C—one vitamin you need every day. Florida grapefruit is strong on vitamins, low on calories.

Don't overlook the calories that come in glasses. They can make the difference. Have grapefruit juice instead. And have grapefruit sections, too—in appetizing salads and desserts. Keep in mind—Florida grapefruit is low in calories, kind to your waistline.

Florida Citrus Commission, Lakeland, Florida

Can makes 4 big servings, less than 5¢ each. Keep pitcher chilled and filled

Ready-to-drink Florida Grapefruit juice in cans is a handy refresher

Luscious! Have them as is for breakfast or dessert. Have them in salads

FLORIDA
Grapefruit

Myra opened her purse, took out a cigarette and defiantly lighted it.

"Every chance I get when I'm not around Hobey or his mother, I smoke. Not long ago Hobey found my cigarettes hidden in our clothes closet, and we had a terrible fight. He accused me of deceit and I admitted it and said he was to blame. I don't consider smoking a high crime.

"Nor do I consider it criminal of me," said Myra, "to expect Hobey to give me a little co-operation and help in our apartment and our yard. He lives there too! Our patch of lawn is a weedy hayfield. No matter how I nag Hobey—I hate nagging—he won't do his part. If I ask him to put the baby's laundry in the washer, which is a ridiculously easy task, he immediately gets haughty and offended and sulks all evening.

"As boys Hobey and his brother had no household chores or duties. Their mother had old-fashioned ideas; she still thinks Hobey and Ben should sit in the parlor and be treated like kings.

"My mother-in-law's latest move is to offer to make a down payment on a house for us. I want Hobey and me to buy our own house, when we have saved enough from his salary and can afford a house. I want us to be independent and to stand on our own feet. I still love Hobey. Probably I will always love Hobey. But I just can't bear to live with a man who forever puts his mother's feelings and comfort and her standards ahead of mine."

Hobey Tells His Side:

"I don't understand this deal at all," said Hobey. Freckle-faced, considerably younger in appearance and manner than his twenty-four years, he cast a bewildered look at the counselor. "So long as Myra was working, she and my mother got along fine. It was Myra who pressed for a baby. I'm crazy about Eileen, of course, but I would have as soon postponed our family for a while. Now that we have the baby and should be contented and settled, now that Myra got her way, she says our marriage is on the rocks.

"She blames my mother, although my mother has been kindness itself to us. Myra's parents will tell you the same. Naturally my mother likes to do things for Eileen, but so do Myra's parents. Sure, they make less of a fuss, but they have other grandchildren. Eileen is the only grandchild there is on my side. My mother has had a hard life. Why shouldn't she be allowed to take a little pleasure in our baby?

"I'll admit my mother is inclined to be bossy at times, but Myra is no patient Griselda herself. In fact, she is quite a lot like my mother. I'd be afraid to let her find it out," he confided with an engaging grin, "but I have a hunch that may be why I fell in love with her.

"In college Myra was two years ahead of me—I run to muscles and she runs to brains—and after we got acquainted my sophomore year we did our studying together, with her as my scholastic cheering section. She worked her way through school the same as I did. She was cocky and independent—not drippy and weepy like so many girls—and such a darn good sport. Myra was my first and only girl; the only girl I will ever want. While we were courting she liked everything I liked, and everybody I liked she liked brother and my mother!

"The three of us—Ben and I—have always been close. Th Myra. She knew from the beg

"Myra's parents are fine p them. Her father is a good Jo like my dad. These days My my father partly to needle n wrangle about my mother, an pose, because she doesn't kn about him. The little I know ab and none of it is good—I h For my mother's sake—she is tive woman—I've kept my m

HOBEY hesitated a long mon

"Perhaps I should tell you, counselor, "something I have body else. My father has nice flashy façade, but inside there nothing five yea was se walked another stayed years. I years m to supp us, to b a father annoy mother me and Musket how we selves d years. S alike w My mo her wee a coppe her bur Ben an draw a thought took as We kn mother us.

"We together Since couldn' and k cook re in furni we had grill in and she on her derful even as Ben an by ours months would neighborhood restaurants an my mother would taste and t arrange meal tickets for Ben a permitted to change around q wouldn't get tired of the same ing was fun. My mother made necessary vitamins and calor after our health and rode her report cards; we had no fri approve.

"It was other kids' fathers how to play football and bas I'd had a father of my own a been a star athlete, instead varsity. Myra thinks I'm a w but I'm not. Most of my colle warming the bench; consequ ing job I've got now scares m

Sweat lightly dewed his for

"Myra seems determined t worries and all her squawk home in the evening, but I my worries to her. I have plen me to keep discipline among t Some of them are only a few than me, weigh more, and pla as well as I can. All of them first name. They don't first coach or other instructors. principal may hear about th

THE HEART IS A LONELY COMMUTER

By DAN G. HOFFMAN

The heart is a lonely commuter, traveling Past the look-alike homes on the hill.
On the other side of the club-car sill
Rusting axles and car doors
sprawl;
A crossing; a schoolyard; look over the wall
At the children dancing, reveling. . . .
Their joy is not for the lonely.

But the traveling heart (though far it roam)
At last will board the suburban train
And ride toward familiar walks again;
Again each evening will rediscover
That waiting to welcome their father, her lover,
Are those whose love for him makes home
The place that is never lonely.

ow!

ghtful forms of the in America's d fragrance

l Showers

ng-loved talc . . . silky-soft, ory smoothing and soothing the fragrance that's fresh as a the rain. Ask for April
ers. EGULAR Talc. 39¢

Deodorant Form
two-purpose" version of this s, agrant talc. Wonderful ingre-e been added for all-over dorant protection. Ask for Showers DEODORANT Talc. 50¢

Prices plus tax.

ERAMY
ERFUMER

tine and think it very odd, yet I haven't figured a way to persuade the students to call me 'Mister.' This is my first real job—I stayed in college nearly two years after my marriage while Myra worked—and success means a great deal to my future career.

"The other afternoon I was lecturing my students on the evils of narcotics, and somebody snickered. Then the whole gang began to laugh. I thought my job was going to blow up right there, that I was going to lose control, that the kids would stampede and walk out on me. Finally, they quit laughing and stayed. But when I got home I was still shaky. Our apartment reeked of cigarette smoke. In our closet I found Myra had hidden away a carton of cigarettes.

"I don't see how I'm to order my athletes not to smoke if they find out my own wife smokes. My objections to smoking are based on convictions. My father drinks; he also smokes like a chimney and swills coffee by the quart. I don't want to be like my father in any way whatever. If Myra loves me I should think she could give up the habit instead of continuing it secretly.

"Other evenings when I come home worried and tired as a dog," Hobey continued, "Myra has dozens of unnecessary chores stacked up for me. While she was working, Myra didn't expect all this co-operation in jobs I'm poor at and despise. Now that Myra is home all day, isn't earning and has plenty of time on her hands, she wants the floor scrubbed instanter or the grass mowed and stuff and stuff. I'm sure her sudden demands somehow tie in with her all-out campaign against my mother and my mother's beliefs.

"Maybe," suggested Hobey without much conviction, "if Myra would let my mother make a down payment on a house for us, I might feel different about working at dull chores around our place. I'm not fussy. Myra's untidiness doesn't bother me. The apartment suits me O.K. Even if I did happen to want a house, I know Myra wouldn't allow my mother the joy of making that down payment. She and I have never accepted any financial help from mother for ourselves. Not a penny.

"It does seem to me Myra should be reasonable when it comes to the baby, instead of acting ungracious and stiff as a poker over the gift of a buggy. I can understand so well why my mother is loading Eileen with all the needless trappings and frills. She has money now. She doesn't want her grandchild to miss out on any of the things Ben and I missed as kids.

"My mother is nuts about Myra; she's never said a word against my wife. She was glad I married Myra. It's Myra who does the beefing and complaining. When she criticizes my mother, as she now constantly does, it makes me feel almost sick. So I shut my ears and try not to listen.

"For a long while, I thought the change in Myra was due to Eileen's birth. That she was nervous and unwell. Now I know different. The doctor says she's physically fine. But when I try to put my arms around her, when I try to love her, Myra is cool and standoffish and almost invariably starts a quarrel that winds up on the subject of my mother. Last week, after the baby-buggy explosion, she proposed twin beds.

"In my opinion, Myra's attitude isn't sensible," Hobey concluded with a deep, troubled sigh. "In my opinion she is being unkind and unfair. I don't see why I should hurt my mother's feelings by rejecting her gifts to our baby. But my marriage is falling apart, and fast. If it comes to a choice between Myra and my mother—I sure hope it doesn't—I guess I will choose Myra. I do want back my sweet, loving wife. I want Myra and Eileen and me—the three of us—to be a happy family."

The Marriage Counselor Says:

"From our first meeting, I recognized Myra and Hobey as another of the many young couples who find it difficult to talk things over together calmly and objectively. By not confiding in each other, by not sharing their inner thoughts, hopes, worries, Myra and Hobey had built up barriers which fenced them off from a real marriage of the body, mind and Long-wearing full-fashioned Cannon nylon stockings in three proportioned lengths. Cannon 60's are your best buy, only $1.25; other Cannon stockings from $1, at your neighborhood store.

y Heads
ll Ace a wiz, d for "Hers"— t for "His!"

first choice for gsters, too Many t, brought up on
d Rubber Combs, they just can't scalp or tear hair every edge and polished satiny-Moderately priced
ividually packaged.
r all the family—
or away.
ard Rubber Co., N.Y.13.

ACE
RD RUBBER
OMBS

ER STRONGER • LAST MUCH LONGER

TWEEDIE FOOTWEAR CORPORATION • JEFFERSON CITY, MISSOURI

spirit. Communication, discussing common problems together, is vital to husbands and wives. It was foolish and almost disloyal—disloyal to his wife—of Hobey to keep secret his unusual family history, which explained a great deal to Myra—when she heard it. But Myra herself had indulged in childish complaining and had provoked useless quarrels instead of attempting to gain mature insight into herself and Hobey and the true nature of their misunderstanding.

"The loss of stimulation provided by her work as a teacher—the letdown following the birth of Eileen, with her and the baby marooned in an apartment in a strange neighborhood—caused Myra to feel sorry for herself and to go seeking trouble. In the person of her mother-in-law, she quickly found trouble. Myra's real emotional complaint, as we discovered in our consultations, was that she thought she wanted a strong husband. In Hobey, frankly, she hasn't got a strong, forceful man as a partner. This isn't surprising. Myra tends to be a dominating, managing personality—incidentally, her mother is too—and she instinctively chose to marry amiable Hobey, whose personality is somewhat like that of her gentle father. Similarly, Hobey selected a wife resembling his mother. With shared confidences and more understanding it seemed pretty obvious Myra and Hobey could recapture the love and attraction that originally brought them together and then work out satisfactory ways to complement and strengthen each other.

"It was almost inevitable that Myra and her mother-in-law—two 'likes' who loved the same young man—would clash. Hobey's mother was subconsciously endeavoring to hang on emotionally to both of her sons. I feel sure she didn't realize it. Nor was Myra aware of her mother-in-law's continuing influence over Hobey until she bore her child and gave up an absorbing teaching job. After all, during the first two years of the marriage Hobey was completing his colle Myra was supporting the fami the decisions. Hence, her ego a at peace.

"Eileen's birth gave Myra's m chance to bury her grandchild fection and thereby assume a m trol over her son's wife and ma was blissfully oblivious of the going on between his mother an perceived was his mother's gene ungraciousness.

"Not surprisingly, he was c the abrupt, bitter way Myra mother. It had long been Hob an unwise custom for an adul both himself and Myra as ch adhere willingly to standards la elders. His mother's standards w Hobey's job in the big high he, the youngest man on the fa easy and insecure—increased hi maturity. He was appalled at M he 'tell off' his mother. He had g being devoted to his mother, al failed to explain the reasons peace-loving Hobey, the soluti complaints was to shut his ears trouble would blow over. It wa tion. In this marriage, there ha much reticence and holding ba facts.

"When Myra was informed in-law's story, she acquired mo ing and sympathy for the old that point a family powwow of Hobey, his mother—was called, ing resentment at the plethora bined with the subtle interfer rectly sensed, was frankly discu mother was hurt and deeply first. But she is an intellig woman. She did want Hobey a be happy. She didn't want to with the son she loved, the da she genuinely liked and admir child she adored. Soon she ma re-entered Hobey and Myra's on a new basis. These days no small, is made to baby Eileen wi consultation with Eileen's mo gestions as to Eileen's rearing dropped to Myra. No unsolic offered.

"As soon as Myra was satis first with Hobey," the counse "and any wife is entitled to t other difficulties were swiftly iro Myra understood the strain of she slackened up on her housek Now she does her best to encour to act as his cheering section ag Hobey doesn't feel his manhoo a constant gnawing fear with h period he was pulled between t occasionally scrubs the kitche own volition. Not often, how Myra are both content for H their patch of the apartmen Saturday. Nothing more is exp Myra gave up cigarettes to plea "To break the monotony Myra and Hobey go out toge once a week, with the two gra ternating as sitters. Hobey h Myra to some of his high-schoo incidentally, he has learned his s him by his first name as an popularity—and he and Myra down roots and making friends munity.

"To my surprise, Hobey's mo for advice. She now has a job as is deep in garden-club activiti occupied and busy she is much in the welfare of her one and on Just ten days ago Myra telepho to announce she and Hobey hac enough money to make a dow a home of their own. As she wa she told me that her in-laws w dinner. Then, casually, but with Myra gave me the news that b now mentioned in her grandm

Editors' Note: This case history w condensed from actual records by DOROTHY CAMERON D

EVERY ENTRANT WINS IN NUCOA $150,000 CONTEST

WIN $10,000 CASH—First Prize

10 Second Prizes
10 Third Prizes
10 Fourth Prizes
200 Fifth Prizes

10 Bendix Duomatic Washer-Dryers gas or electric models Worth $499.95 each

10 Crosley Shelvador Freezers
Worth $449.76 each

10 Crosley Double-Oven Electric Ranges
Worth $357.07 each

200 Crosley Clock Portable Radios
Worth $49.95 each

AND EVERYONE A WINNER!

Certificate worth 1 lb. of NUCOA—FREE
Sent to every entrant! Enter this new kind of contest—you're bound to win a prize!
(One entrant per family)

To help you Win—
Facts about NUCOA

- New Nucoa is enriched for your family's health.
- Nucoa is digestible—even for babies, even for baby's first spread.
- Nucoa is natural goodness—made with sweet skim milk and fresh vegetable oils . . . two great foods from Nature!
- Just 2 ounces of enriched Nucoa gives your child 62% of his daily need for Vitamins A and D. Essential to good vision and health!
- Nucoa's golden Vitamin A color comes from carrots.

Here's all you do—Just complete this sentence in 25 words or less:

"New, enriched NUCOA is good for my family because . . ."

Enter now! Study these contest rules . . . all you need to enter come with the special Nucoa contest package. Get it today. Easy! Your easy sixteen words may win one of the 231 fine prizes!

You're bound to win! We are setting aside at least $120,000 to cover certificate-prizes. One mailed to every eligible entrant. And each worth 1 lb. of Nucoa.

Contest closes midnight, Nov. 6, 1954

TO ENTER—buy a package of NEW Enriched NUCOA®

GERTRUDE LAWRENCE AS MRS. A

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 66

My husband and I will be de-

" I found myself shouting, engagements for me. I can't o here, there and everywhere."

ou mean—here, there and every- retorted. "The Hughston Mc- friends. Naturally they want to band. Especially considering all s I've said to them about you."

peated what I had said at the even in Chicago I was still in subject to orders.

and the captains and admirals ferring all the time," Gertrude clipped sarcasm. "They must some time off. Suppose you de- f it to your wife."

hat for my part I'd be glad of a ve a little time alone with my riends and well-wishers and her would permit this.

she said with annoying sweet- ou must remember, all this is for my book."

copies of A Star Danced on the k one, opened it and showed me n: "FOR RICHARD."

is as much yours as it is mine," here's no need to be jealous."

lous." It my feel- ize that put her ngly on t. I was ent down und that had pre- banner ads pro- COME TO WRENCE. s played orchestra rtrude's s. I had

f being in a shopwindow, dis- blic view and public opinion. I e my uniform.

n of our table made it almost everyone to stop and greet us. who welcomed Gertrude most rving Kupcinet. "Kup" had long her very good friends.

panion that evening was a hand- ilored gentleman whose gray istinction. It was obvious that not know him. And equally ob- e intended to remedy this. She rd, pointedly drawing him into ion. Kup's lips tightened as he troduction Gertrude had made "Miss Lawrence, Mr. Fisher."

s manner was impeccable. There right amount of admiration in he told Gertrude that meeting of the high spots in his life. His ference to me was, I felt, to the p had introduced me as Com- ich, without reference to my s Lawrence's husband.

arming man!" Gertrude breathed when "Charlie," as Kup ad- and Kup moved on to their nder why I've never met him is fun, isn't it?" She was joyous as a child at her own birthday s, and I was sorry I couldn't stay of it.

What do you mean?"

is still on and I'm on duty, not said. "I told you I had to report rs tonight." I had, while we were dinner. Apparently Gertrude had my meaning. She stared at me, nger blue, but steely gray.

my watch and stood up. "I'll be as I can."

ll be when?" Gertrude demanded

I was angry too. Everything had gone wrong that day. I spoke brusquely: "I don't imagine it will matter much to you when." I said, "From all indications, you won't be lonely."

Her head came up.

"I don't intend to be," she snapped.

At twenty minutes past eleven I sprang out of my cab and pushed the revolving doors into the lobby of the Ambassador East. The desk clerk handed me a folded slip of paper on which was written:

Richard, I have gone on to Chez Paris with Kup and his friend.

Join us, if you feel like it.

GERTRUDE.

Ernie Byfield came over. I said, "Gertrude has gone to Chez Paris with Kup."

"Joe E. Lewis is playing there," Ernie said.

"What about this Fisher who is with Kup?" I asked Ernie. "Charlie Fisher. Gray-haired. Very smooth."

Ernie's lips pursed in a soundless whistle. "Is Charlie with them? With Gertrude?"

"Who is he?" I repeated.

"Did you ever hear of the Fischetti brothers?" Ernie demanded. "This is one of them—socially known as Charlie Fisher. This one is Al Capone's lieutenant, and since Capone's exit about the most powerful figure in Chicago's underworld."

Apparently, Gertrude's willfulness had involved her in a situation fraught with unpleasant consequences. My one consolation was that Kup had gone along; I could only hope that he would stay with them.

Chez Paris was doing big business. There wasn't a vacant table, and the maître d'hôtel shook his head before I had a chance to speak.

"Mr. Kupcinet expects me to join him. Tell him Commander Aldrich is here," I said.

The waiter was gone some time. I stood at the barrier trying to see Gertrude among the dancers. At last my eyes found her. They recognized the gray-haired man who held her close, guiding her with skilled grace which even in my mounting anger I was compelled to admit was superior to anything I could show. Gertrude was dancing as beautifully and as joyously as she ever did on the stage. You could not mistake that she was enjoying herself to the full. The spotlight played on her and her partner and a buzz of applause rose as the supper crowd recognized her.

It was inevitable, I realized, that many in the crowd should also recognize her partner.

Long legs have their advantages at times. Eluding the shocked protest and the restraining reach of the maître, I stepped high over the rope and strode between the tables onto the dance floor. There was no grace in the summary way I cut in on the exhibition dance team, but I was beyond caring.

Before I felt Gertrude's reaction I was aware of Charlie Fisher's aghast surprise that such a thing could happen to him. Evidently the spectators shared this feeling, for there was an audible gasp. Then a titter.

"Richard!"

Gertrude was struggling against my chest. In her white strained face her eyes were like sword points. I tightened my hold on her.

"You're getting out of here," I whispered between my teeth. "Now. Before anything happens."

"I'm not," she panted. "You shan't treat me like this."

"Be quiet."

"But that nice man. Kup's friend. . . . You're a boor. You're ——"

"Save the names till later."

I had steered her toward the entrance. I nodded curtly to the disapproving maître who

If we work upon marble, it will perish; if we work upon brass, time will efface it; if we rear temples, they will crumble into dust; but if we work upon immortal minds, if we imbue them with principles, with the just fear of God and love of our fellow men, we engrave on those tablets something that will brighten to all eternity.

—DANIEL WEBSTER

Gentle EX-LAX helps your child toward

HIS NORMAL REGULARITY!

AT BEDTIME give your child America's best-tasting laxative—chocolated EX-LAX. There will be no fuss because it's so pleasant to take.

IN THE MORNING he'll get gentle relief—the closest thing to natural action. No upset, no griping, no embarrassing urgency.

NEXT DAY—EX-LAX will continue to help your child toward his normal regularity. He'll hardly ever have to take EX-LAX again the next night!

Buy The New 65¢ Size—Save As Much As 37¢

Also available in 30¢ and 12¢ sizes

EX-LAX

THE CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE

©1954 Ex-Lax Inc.

MORE PEOPLE YOUNG AND OLD USE EX-LAX THAN ANY OTHER LAXATIVE

THIS GIANT 12-INCH REPLOGLE GLOBE makes homework easier!!

History and geography come to life when children can see what they are studying on a good globe of their own. A globe shows how all countries "rub elbows" with each other, helps them understand how location affects the history and life of people. Only a globe shows the world as it really is, with every country in its true size, shape and relationship.

And remember...the globe you buy now will be just as useful years from now. Over 98% of a globe never changes! Get your Replogle Globe now at your stationery, book or department store.

- Replogle 12" "Commander" Model—most popular globe in America.
- Same size used in most classrooms.
- 6,410 place names. 452 square inches of map surface.
- Washable map in 10 colors.
- Globe and "See the World" Book $8.95

Only this globe includes the 96-page book "See the World", a wonderful key to understanding all its uses.

COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE

Send for FREE WORLD TIME-FINDER Set the dial—compare time in major cities of the world

REPLOGLE GLOBES, INC., Dept. 3
1901 North Narragansett Avenue, Chicago 39, Illinois

Please send free World Time-Finder and full color literature describing Replogle Globes.

NAME_____
(Please print)

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____ ZONE_____ STATE_____

Smart, Colorful Walls Cost So Little

Super® Kem-Tone

the latex paint that's guaranteed washable!

For less than $10.00, you can get enough SUPER KEM-TONE for the walls and ceiling of the average room! And with SUPER KEM-TONE, you get colors at their loveliest. Hundreds of them . . . delicate pastels, gorgeous medium shades, stunning deep tones . . . all rich as velvet. It's so easy, too. SUPER KEM-TONE goes on quickly with the Kem Roller-Koater® . . . dries in an hour to the smoothest, loveliest finish you could want. After it has thoroughly dried, it can be washed repeatedly without losing its beauty. Even lipstick and grease marks wash off with ordinary household cleaners. It's guaranteed washable or your money back.

$1.73 QUART $5.45 GALLON

No Thinning
Just Stir and Apply

THE SHERWIN-WILLIAMS CO.

In Principal Cities from Coast to Coast

Super Kem-Tone and Kem-Glo are also made and distributed by:

Acme Quality Paints, Inc., Detroit; W. W. Lawrence & Co., Pittsburgh; The Lowe Brothers Co., Dayton; John Lucas & Co., Inc., Philadelphia; The Martin-Senour Co., Chicago; Rogers Paint Products, Inc., Detroit.

For Kitchens, Bathrooms and Woodwork throughout Your Home!

KEM-GLO®

Looks and washes like baked enamel. Resists steam, cooking spatters, grease, even boiling water and alcoholic beverages. Available in the same lovely colors as SUPER KEM-TONE.

lowered the rope. The cab I had told to wait was just outside. I shoved Gertrude into it and got in after her; my left arm pinned her against the seat while my right reached across her and gripped the handle of the door which she was trying desperately to wrench open.

As the driver let in the clutch he took an interested look in his mirror. "Dames," he said wearily. "You Navy guys don't know when you're well off. Why don't you stay at sea? You come ashore and tangle with some skirt and what does it get you? Trouble."

Back in our hotel suite the storm, brewing all day, broke in unrestrained fury. Taut as a stretched bowstring, Gertrude let fly at me the barbed arrows of her anger. I was crass, sullen, resentful, domineering.

I let her have her fling. My anger had expended itself in the brief moment it took to snatch Gertrude from Mr. Fisher's arms and in the relief of getting her and myself out of the night club without incident.

Gertrude continued to berate me for what she termed my crudity, my rudeness. "What must he think of you?"

I broke in: "That charming man is Chicago's Number One gangster."

She blinked. But it turned the spate of her wrath. "Oooh!" She whistled softly. "Really, Richard? Is he?"

"He is." I repeated what Ernie had told me about the Fischetti brothers. Gertrude's look of pleased wonder grew.

"I've always wanted to meet a gangster," she sighed. "And now, when I do have the luck, you barge in and spoil everything."

A totally new thought occurred to her and she exclaimed, "Richard, suppose he was armed. What if he had bodyguards there?"

"He probably did."

"You might have been hurt."

"You've been seeing too many movies."

"Richard—they might have shot you!" Her eyes became ineffably tender and blue. "Darling Mr. A," she breathed. "Whatever would I do without you?"

She ran straight into my waiting arms.

I let the telephone ring. Finally, when its insistence permitted of no refusal, I growled into it, "Commander Aldrich."

"Charlie Fisher," a low voice came back.

"Yes?"

"I just phoned to say I didn't know you and the little lady were married," the voice went on. "Otherwise, I hope you understand, commander, I wouldn't have presumed."

"That's all right," I said. Feeling that I owed the polite Mr. Fisher an apology, I added, "I hope you understand Mrs. Aldrich and I haven't seen very much of each other for the last couple of years. Naturally we want to be together all we can."

"Just what I'd feel if I was in your place," said Mr. Fisher gallantly. "About tonight, don't give it a thought. You and the little lady aren't to worry about anything as long as you're in Chicago. You have my word for it."

"That's very kind of you," I said.

"O.K., commander. My regards to the little lady."

With that Mr. Fisher retired, graceful to the last.

I HAD applied for one month's leave; this was granted and as soon as the conference closed Gertrude and I returned to New York. A month would have been little enough time for us, but we were not to have even that to ourselves in peace. The publicity to date was having its effect in an overwhelming amount of fan mail and inordinate demands for autographs, signed photographs and personal mementos. Although two secretaries were hastily installed to deal with the mail, Gertrude insisted on signing each letter herself.

I would have suggested Gertrude's leaving all this and going with me up to The Berries, but for the recollection of her remark to me in Chicago: "There's no need to be jealous." That still rankled. And though my momentary, and certainly quite normal, jealousy was gone, so that except for the physical nuisance involved I could laugh at the welter of excitement, broadcasts, interviews, I felt unwilling to say anything that Gertrude might interpret as a return of the emotion which had possessed me at our meeting in Chicago.

So we stayed on in New Yo the oppressive heat and the
that the days of my leave ticked

I undertook to help plow a wa mass of fan mail which literall apartment. It might be a means off to the Cape before my entire Gertrude welcomed my assista

Going through her mail, I of something which disturbed had been writing letters and sen —and unwittingly creating sentir ments among English, Canadian fighting men scattered all alon fronts and in veterans' hospitals homesick men had started wri had replied with characteristic warmth. In more than one insta been misinterpreted by her corre
romantic interest in him.

TRUE, the majority of letters from colonels and corporals; G cels were sent with proud disre were simply genuine expressions
But there were more personal bothered me; obviously, the wr idea Gertrude was married. I sh two to Gertrude with the observa had gone beyond the bounds sense. "But Richard!" she excla sent those boys friendly notes.
possibly take such letters seriou

"I couldn't—but what about they realize that all those 'darli part of the patter of the theatric

Gertrude appeared momentari
Then she said lightly, "Don't be s it, darling—it's all past. The war

The whole thing would pr ended there had it not been for insistence of one of her overseas suddenly turned up in New Yor the telephone one morning, I voice with a distinct Southern Miss Lawrence. I explained that M was not taking any calls, but tha glad to relay a message.

"Oh, she'll want to take this ca
"I'm afraid that's not quite po
"Now, look here"—the voice pressively—"you just go on and R—— D—— calling."

I repeated with a slight edge that I could not disturb Gertru fulfilling a heavy schedule.

"You just don't understand."
came irritatingly patronizing. "M is looking forward to my call. W corresponding back and forth fo

"And you don't understand"— was raising my voice—"that Mi has been corresponding with a young men in several Allied armi it was all very pleasant at the tim to morale, but now the war's Lawrence has returned to her ow gest that you do the same!" I sla the receiver and turned around to standing in the doorway.

"So it's censorship now, is it?"

"Not censorship," I correcte common sense. I am trying to from possible embarrassment."

"How very, very chivalrous!"
"Who was on the telephone?"

"Oh, one of your pen pals. A groped for a word that would
"dull-witted young man, R—— Gertrude bristled. "He's not he's very talented and intelligen poetry," she added defiantly. "Fr

"Dedicated, no doubt," I sai that modern Helen of Troy—M Lawrence."

Gertrude's head went up—a fa warning. "It happens that some dedicated to me—and it also ha would like to see R—— again." S toward the telephone. "Army I tions can tell me where to reach

I grabbed her wrist. "You're that phone!"

Eyes blazing, she tried to wr away. For a few seconds we strugg rising. The doorbell started ringin
It was one of the secretaries, a being a few minutes late.

ee Gertrude again until that I returned home. The apartd with people. This was hardly or us to pursue our differences. some decisive action had to be l Fanny Holtzmann to let me tment the following day.

d it necessary to have a serious rude. I preferred not to use our ere we might be overheard by nterrupted by visitors.

Fight it out in peace."

me along docilely enough. Mrs. y's motherly housekeeper, left e living room.

rtrude said rather too brightly. alk to you about the man who day—among other things. Not himself is very important."

ughed. It was a brittle laugh, d me. "Oh, Richard, don't tell g jealous again!"

d. "Not jealous. Disgusted."

" Her quick reaction told me ound its mark.

sted. You're supposed to be a , a responsible adult. You've things in your profession. Yet ehave as if you had no respect on in the world—no respect for no respect for your husband. In ve like a juvenile delinquent!"

on me, stony-eyed with anger. you presume to speak to me ard Aldrich?" she demanded.

n your husband," I shot back. u forget it."

ink that gives you the right to me? Give me orders? I'm not en, Commander Aldrich. How nyone that he shall not call me e me in my own home?"

is my home," I reminded her. d I are married, I'm the head of I want you to realize it."

you to know," Gertrude flared arried or not, I'll see whom I I like. And where. I don't need nage my life for me. I did it fully for some years before I Richard Stoddard Aldrich."

ow launched on the "high old she was to remind me several ears. It was worthy of the name. nd mine were strained to the . Gertrude blazed at me for atominate her. She accused me of eing a dog in the manger. Ac-, my behavior lately had been her—and an unpleasant one. of revelations, I retorted, what er conduct had revealed to me?

She chose to take this as an accusation of unfaithfulness. How dared I make such a charge against her? she demanded.

"I didn't," I shouted.

"You most certainly did." She outshouted me. With a gesture of total defiance she pulled off her hat and threw it at my face. I ducked. Her anger had risen beyond floodwater mark. I thought she was going to attack me with her bare hands. I caught them and gripped them tight while she struggled to free herself.

"Northfield . . . Northfield . . . Northfield!" I commanded.

It was so long since either of us had used our code word that it was the better part of a minute before its significance pierced Gertrude's rage. Then suddenly I felt her go limp. I gathered her into my arms.

In the peace after the storm ("It's so heavenly making up!" Gertrude sighed. That should have warned me. Stupidly, I ignored the signal.) we arranged to leave New York that same afternoon, leaving our worries and differences behind us, and go up to The Berries.

For several days our honeymoon at The Berries left nothing to be desired. But perhaps our quarrel, like a long spell of torrid weather, could not be dissipated in one storm, however violent. It continued to hover on our horizon. I was aware of its rumblings on Sunday morning when I answered the telephone and received a telegram which, in Dennis, is usually delivered in this manner. The message came from a man I had never heard of. He had forty-eight hours' leave in New York before sailing, and he counted on Gertrude's promise to spend part of that time with him.

I had thought we were clear of such difficulties. Gertrude had assured me of it. This new one was the final straw.

I determined not to give Gertrude the message. I got out my car and drove down to the village to pick up the papers. When I returned I heard Gertrude at the upstairs telephone.

Presently she came down, singing blithely.

"Darling, I have to go back to town this evening," she announced. "Just for two days."

"What for?" I inquired from behind my paper.

"I forgot all about an engagement I'd made for tomorrow. It's a party at the Stork that the publishers are giving for me."

"Is A—— going to be there too?" I asked. "He has leave. His ship is in port."

She stared at me. I stared back. The thought was forming in my mind: I've had enough.

Gertrude said slowly, "And do you have any other fascinating titbits of confidential information?"

I said that this was hardly confidential. A—— had telegraphed, and with a lack of reserve that reminded me of her. By this time

"Look, Herbert, do you mind if I just relax for a while, and don't use my personality?"

So Beautiful Everybody Wants It!

SUPER KEM-TONE Applikay

Newest Fashion in Wall Decoration!

You have to see dramatic, new APPLIKAY over SUPER KEM-TONE to realize how lovely it is! No photograph can reproduce its exquisite, subtle beauty. And once you see it, you'll want it for your walls . . . it's so beautiful, so distinctive. And so easy! With APPLIKAY . . . a completely new type of wall decoration . . . and a special new design-roller, you simply roll on the design and color you choose right over walls freshly painted with SUPER KEM-TONE, the washable latex wall paint. You need no special skill . . . the roller does the work. The APPLIKAY bonds itself to SUPER KEM-TONE, smooth as printed silk, and when dry both are guaranteed washable. Ask your SUPER KEM-TONE dealer to demonstrate APPLIKAY.

$2.19 Pt. $3.69 Qt.

Countless Combinations of Colors and Designs

The latex wall paint that's guaranteed washable

SUPER KEM-TONE

Flows on smoothly, dries in an hour to a beautiful, velvet-rich finish. The only effective base for APPLIKAY designs. Choose from hundreds of colors.

THE SHERWIN-WILLIAMS CO.

In Principal Cities from Coast to Coast

Super Kem-Tone and Kem-Glo are also made and distributed by:

Acme Quality Paints, Inc., Detroit; W. W. Lawrence & Co., Pittsburgh; The Lowe Brothers Co., Dayton; John Lucas & Co., Inc., Philadelphia; The Martin-Senour Co., Chicago; Rogers Paint Products, Inc., Detroit.

dozens of people knew that she had promised to spend part of his leave with him.

The idea that she had aroused my jealousy inspired Gertrude with the irresistible impulse to torment me. I realized this, but in my mood I was powerless to circumvent her.

"Thank you, darling, for reminding me," she said airily. "I'll invite him to the party. He can take me. There's no use asking you, since you seem to resent my literary career."

She avoided meeting my gaze, but I kept it on her unflinchingly.

"I want you to get this," I said, "because it's final. If you go to New York to meet that man, no matter what your pretense is, I'm through."

"What do you mean, Richard?"

"Just that." I answered. "Through." I stood up, feeling that, though it might seem pompous, what I had to say called for it. "No woman who has my name is going to go on as you are doing. I give you fair warning: if you go to meet that man or any other of your 'lonely hearts,' that ends things as far as we're concerned. I'm through. I won't live with a woman who treats our marriage lightly."

Gertrude had contained herself as long as possible. She burst out: "And I will not live with a man who suspects me constantly. Who does not trust me. Oh, everyone said it wouldn't work. They were right. The sooner you and I go our separate ways, the better."

"If that's your final decision," I said, "there's no point in any further discussion. Go to New York. Or stay here, if that suits you. I shall move to the Harvard Club."

Her face was working. Suddenly she turned and ran up the stairs. I heard her door slam.

In those days of gas rationing I could not leave the Cape earlier than by the evening train. I remained downstairs, prepared to go out of the house should Gertrude reappear. I felt frozen, dead. Yet my resolve was unshakable. There are limits to a man's patience and forbearance and Gertrude had pushed me to those limits.

Perhaps an hour passed. Then Doctor Harriet walked in. Her mien revealed that this was not a casual visit.

"Where is Gertrude?" she asked.

I told her.

"Ask her to come down," D said. "I want to talk to you both

If anyone else had said this, refused. But one did not refuse riet. At least, not easily. When hesitate she said with a firmne manded obedience, "Apparently someone talked seriously to you have been selected for the honor

I asked, "How did you know wrong?"

"Fanny Holtzmann telephone tor Harriet replied. "She said called her brother David and make a reservation for her at t added that she was leaving you don't usually meddle in my neigh she concluded grimly. "But in acting at the request of Gertru feel justified. Please ask Gertr down," she repeated. "What I wish to say to you together."

At first Gertrude refused to re quest. But affection for Do triumphed. Quiet, tense and regarding me, she came down an hands folded, like an obedient,

Doctor Harriet took off her polished them. I realized that sh her assignment difficult.

"This is the second World W through," she said at last. "The me that casualties are not confir tlefields." She pointed out that b and I had been at the front. We ing abnormally, under great tens confusion. We showed the effec were edgy, sensitive to slight quick to take affront. We were to make a wise and final decision affect our entire lives.

"It would be a pity for your n broken for no sounder reason th advised. "You are two fine, in ple. And you love each other. I of that. Are you so careless th throw away what you have b because of a temporary misun

I started to speak, but she ch don't want to hear the cause of t other quarrels," she said firmly.
that neither of you is right; nor
You are equally at fault; thoug different ways. That is someth talk over together, honestly and

"I ask just one thing of you.
promise me that you will try for along together. I ask that you n attempt during those twelve mo a basis of understanding. Not fo yourselves. Because you owe it Will you promise me that?"

GERTRUDE darted a tentative then started toward Doctor stretched out her arms silently

"I'm willing," Gertrude sai Richard is." Her face—now clea ment—was that of a bride tremu her marriage vows.

Her loveliness and sincerity ible. I strode over to where th in arm.

"I'm willing," I murmured.

Doctor Harriet joined my h trude's. I leaned over and kissed and the good friend who ha together.

"Now," she said, "I'm goin the house for the rest of the da discuss your problems for twen
Then you can start making a cl them."

Gertrude appeared troubled.
up the cause of our quarrel this said, speaking pointedly to Do not to me. "I do have an engag York. My publishers' publicity this morning to remind me o chose to think I wanted to go fo son; one which, it so happens, I about. That was what set us off me unjustly, and I was hurt and Embarrassment and shame

I had jumped to my own concl
the direction away from the tr

CONTINUED ON PAGE

ARCHITECT: WALTER GORDON, A.I.A.; PHOTOGRAPHS BY DEARBORN-MASSAR

In harmony with its background, this house borrows its materials from the countryside around it.

A HOUSE that flatters its setting

By CAROL L. MERCADO

Tall Oregon redwood trees provide a shady setting for this comfortable house; Oregon forests supplied the materials too. Rough-cut redwood-clapboard walls and cedar roof shingles are weathered to carefree tans and silver grays. Door and window frames are sparkling brushed aluminum; coral-painted doors and breezeway gates lend color accents.

Notice the generous closets in all the bedrooms, and the bonus storage space in entry hall, utility room and garage. See how the children's wing, to the right of the entry, is sound-insulated from the living area by strategic closet placement. The master bath, left of the entry, serves as guest powder room, too; twin lavatory basins cut down rush-hour traffic.

Long and low, the house tucks into a rolling hill which insures privacy for the outdoor living area. The terrace floor—slices of redwood logs embedded in sand—comes from the neighboring woods. Evergreen shrubbery banked on the slope makes a year-round picture framed by the breakfast room, kitchen, dining-room and living-room windows.

The use of local materials—stone from a nearby quarry, or bricks of native clay, or lumber from neighboring forests—helps any house to harmonize with its setting, and helps reduce building costs too.

e most exciting towel news in years—Cannon's new lighter, brighter look!

Eighteen lighthearted towel colors you can do beautiful things with!

Cannon Carefree Colors

They're airy, they're light, they're divine to combine! They bring a whole NEW look to your bath with every change of towels! Try Pink Whisper with Bronze Green. Or Smoke Pearl with Lightning Pink. Or create a harmony of three. There's no limit to what you can do, no matter what your budget. For every one of these wonderful colors comes in a wide range of patterns and prices—all with the famous Cannon quality. Generous sizes (to wrap you in luxury!). Jam-packed loops (to dry you in a jiffy!). Firm, tight weave (to wear practically forever!). All this and heavenly new colors, too, add up to the biggest towel value in years!

Cannon towels from 79¢ to $3.50

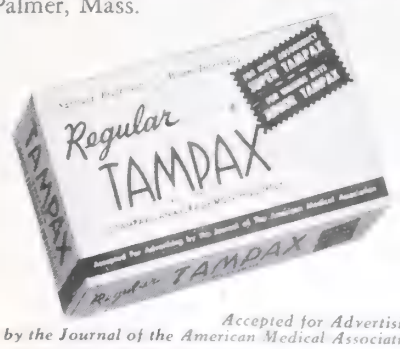
CANNON

Cannon Mills, Inc., 70 Worth Street, New York City 13
Towels • Sheets • Stockings • Bedspreads • Draperies



"You'd have thought I gave her a million dollars..."

"Betty was visiting my house, and asked to borrow some sanitary protection. Well, of course, I brought out Tampax; both mother and I use it. Turns out she'd been wavering for some time on a 'should-I-shouldn't-I' basis, and was really pleased to have an excuse to try Tampax. She had a delighted look on her face the rest of the day... kept saying 'I can't believe it—I can't even feel it—it's wonderful.' Ever since she's been almost embarrassingly grateful. You'd have thought I invented Tampax!"

It's nice to tell friends about Tampax—about its easy dispensability—the way it prevents odor from forming—and all the other advantages of internal sanitary protection. If you're happy about getting rid of belts, pins, and bulky external pads, why not share your enthusiasm? As you know, Tampax is available at drug and notion counters in 3 absorbencies: Regular, Super, Junior. Month's supply goes into purse. Look for Tampax Vendor in restrooms throughout the United States. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

TAMPAX INCORPORATED
Palmer, Mass.

Please send me in plain wrapper a trial package of Tampax. I enclose 10¢ (stamps or silver) to cover cost of mailing. Size is checked below.

( ) REGULAR ( ) SUPER ( ) JUNIOR

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 220

Gertrude and I went to New York together. That was a turning point in our lives. The year we had promised to Doctor Harriet stretched to seven. Before the twelve months of trial were up it seemed to me incredible that we could ever have said to each other with bitter finality, "I'm through."

Theatre Incorporated was a group of young men and women, intelligently and creatively interested in the theater. They had just been organized to produce first-rate plays for limited engagements on Broadway and in a few other cities, on a nonprofit basis.

Shortly after Doctor Harriet had figuratively banged our heads together, I was released to inactive duty. The Theatre Incorporated directors approached me as one who could contribute practical experience to the project and yet share and appreciate their enthusiasm for the theater. Beatrice Straight, one of the directors, had called on Fanny in an effort to get Gertrude to star in a play for the new organization. When Gertrude learned that I had accepted the post of managing director of the group, she immediately wanted to give it her enthusiastic support. I reminded her that she would have to forgo her usual salary and that she would be working under me.

"It isn't really working for you—but with you. And for something we both believe in. Let's do Pygmalion. I've wanted to play Eliza for a long time."

I believed that a comedy like Shaw's Pygmalion would be a fine starting point for Theatre Incorporated; Shaw accepted our offer, and we began to plan our production.

Gertrude was enthusiastically interested. Though her connection with Theatre Incorporated was limited to its first offering, Pygmalion, her interest in our plans and her pride in our achievements went on unabated as long as Theatre Incorporated existed.

During the play's run in Boston, mother joined Gertrude at the Ritz and had her first exhilarating taste of being related to a great popular star. At eighty-five, she began for the first time to understand my lifelong interest in the theater. The ultimate seal of her approval was granted when she invited Doctor Ward, Groton's Congregational minister, to be her and Gertrude's guest at a matinee. Only five years before she had been at pains to keep secret from her neighbors my connection with the theater, and my marriage to an actress.

Mother had an ingenuous and charming delight in lunching with Gertrude at the Ritz Carlton, where several of her Boston friends caught sight of her and were properly impressed. And in going shopping in the city, though her conservatism was disturbed when Gertrude insisted on buying her some becoming dress or hat. Gertrude's wily way of circumventing mother's protest was to tell her that the dress in question was just what Dowager Queen Mary wore.

Any presents Gertrude received that had an aura of age and quaintness were immediately set aside for "Mother Mary." Passing on gifts made to her was an incurable habit of Gertrude's. Thus, she once presented Fanny with a pair of earrings, saying, "You simply must take these. Somehow they remind me of you."

"For a very good reason," Fanny remarked dryly. "I gave them to you."

MOTHER spent the greater part of that winter in New York at Gertrude's urgent request. When Pygmalion closed its New York run and the company went on tour, she stayed on with me. I think Gertrude had the feeling that I should not be left alone, that I needed a home atmosphere after my years in the service. She left detailed orders with Helen Mahoney about serving mother's breakfast in bed, and surrounding her with the little luxuries that Gertrude herself delighted in. These included a bed jacket of billowy chartreuse chiffon. It came as something of a shock to see my mother, so attired, sitting up against the lace-and-satin pillows in Gertrude's bed, having breakfast from a tray, and without the excuse of a temperature or a broken leg to justify such indolence in her Puritan conscience.

The success of Pygmalion's first season made a coast-to-coast tour the following winter advisable. An innovation in this tour was a week in Mexico City. Gertrude wrote:

I rode to the Reforma Hotel in a car which looked like a hearse full of calla lilies. Looked longingly at the shops but decided to resist temptation until Richard arrives on Wednesday from New York. If his new play looks like a success we shall feel more affluent. . . .

I might have known what to expect. Four days in Mexico City had already given Gertrude ideas about buying silver, pottery, glass, rugs, baskets and souvenirs for everyone she knew. No matter how late she went to bed, she was up, and getting me up, at eight o'clock in order not to miss the market.

One day, more as a joke than for any other reason, I bought Gertrude a ring. It was just a band of Mexican silver with some Aztec symbols which the shopkeeper told us meant good luck, love, fidelity and happiness. Gertrude stood silent and suddenly solemn in the dark, low shop while I slipped the ring on her finger. I felt the silversmith's eyes on us both and I was confident he took us for a honeymoon couple. I am sure he did not suspect we had been married nearly seven years.

Part of Gertrude's constant fascination was that she never acquired that long-married, disinterested, bored, I've-said-everything-I-know-to-you-and-you've-told-me-everything-you-have-to-say-too-many-times manner. That she was as interested in me, and apparently as delighted to be with me, after nearly seven years of marriage as she was in that long slow spring of our first being in love, is something I was always grateful for.

Though the purchase of the inexpensive ring had been made in jest—she had teased me to buy her something as a keepsake—I believe we both realized that it symbolized a new state of our relationship. The twelve months' trial we had promised Doctor Harriet had passed and we were still together. The bond that united us had been strengthened. We knew each other better. We were more tolerant, more tender, less demanding.

Some months later—the day of the Boston opening of the Tonight at 8:30 revival—Gertrude suddenly missed the ring. Frantic search failed to turn it up. Gertrude telephoned the company's press agent and begged him to report the loss to the police.

As the detective questioned the employees around the theater, Gertrude roamed backstage restlessly. In the wings stood the bed which figured in one of the play rehearsed the night before. She covers, shook them energetical silver ring dropped to the floor.

She pounced on it with a joy press agent and the detective ran

"Is that what we've been looki detective asked. "That piece of Gertrude looked at him with a compounded of indignation and husband gave it to me," she said

DURING her engagement with corporated, Gertrude's salary w ably less than what she had been to earning. She found it hard this and to limit her expenditures Hazel was instructed to do wha to discourage Gertrude in her sho David Holtzmann was compelle strate with her from time to tim

After a scolding by David, Ger economize on food for herself an I would receive a letter such as th

San Francisc

Dear Mr. Aldrich: Hope you we will tell Mr. Holtzmann not to scold bills. My poor stomach can't take it Gump's and buy up all the antiqu and pyjamas and when the bill c office scold she says Hazel we mu one meal every day.

Now Mr. Aldrich the Lord mad meal a day girl, and no hot dogs m L wants us to save money on. I wrinkles in my stomach, and wrinkle ach show on face. She says all rig order what you like but only soup Mr. A I am no sea gull. I cannot eat go hungry, so I go hungry with her.

Where Miss L get the strength t I don't know. I asked Mr. Potter and see she eats good. I send back lo to Gumps and Magnin's so tell M please not scold Miss L. Sunday are going out on picnic and Mr. P some money and say buy some ham Business is good. Miss L misses y

M

One unceasing source of am Gertrude was the fact that Haz taken a course in embalming and for a Hollywood mortician. This stant joke between the two. W College conferred an honorary de tor of Fine Arts on Gertrude, amo and wires of congratulation which on her doctorate was this telegra

YOU KILL 'EM DOC AND I'LL BUR LO

The Cape Playhouse was reop 1946, with Pygmalion. Gertrude followed by Gregory Peck in The the Western World. It was tra Gertrude and me to give a party each visiting star during the ten-

"Let's do something different fo Gertrude proposed. "A clamb beach after the play. We'll have a whatever they eat at clambakes, around the fire and sing and tell

It was, of course, just another v picnic which Gertrude adored in accused her, "You're a frustrated

"I'm not a frustrated anythin torted. "You should know that darling. Long ago I determined off doing the things I wanted to d find more time and a convenient later on. The time and the oppor come. You have to take your tart passed. Otherwise, you'll miss t don't want to miss anything."

Gertrude entered into much of t young people connected with the She became an ardent promo square dancing which went on after the performance. Dick and summer jobs helping in the Play became Gertrude's regular escort t

When she did not come home bed before two o'clock, I would for keeping her up and dancing needed rest and sleep.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 2

SOLITAIRE

By BEULAH RIDGEWAY WINANS

Slowly she learned her lesson:
Life goes on
From day to day;
The sun still shines; birds sing while flowers bloom
And children play;
Filling the hours with countless trivial tasks
Helps one forget;
One even learns to smile and laugh with friends
Again, and yet
How can one find the armor to prevent
The tears that start
At sight of those stray foolish little things
That touch the heart—
Some solitary object that was once Part of a pair—
A small white glove, quite new, forlorn upon
A subway stair?

He: "I've been using Noxzema for three ay Sheila Walden of New York City. "It has nea my skin of small spots and blemishes* es y face feeling so much fresher and softer."

n: My skin gets extremely dry," says Janice f Greenwich, Conn., "especially during a f ason. But I use Noxzema faithfully and nu satisfaction. It helps my skin stay soft
th

Look lovelier in 10 days

with DOCTOR'S HOME FACIAL or your money back!

ew, different beauty care skin look fresher, prettier
s keep it that way, too!

r 't entirely satisfied with your com-
-h re's wonderful beauty news for you!
o skin doctor worked out a new cleansh and a wonderfully effective home r ine—all rolled-in-one! It helps your k resher, smoother, lovelier and helps p that way!

Why it's so successful!

v eauty care owes its amazing effective-t unique qualities of Noxzema. This g aseless beauty cream is a combina-
c ening, soothing, and cleansing ingref ed by no other leading beauty cream.
edicated—aids healing—helps keep k g fresh and clear!
e ss Noxzema actually washes off in water, helps smooth and freshen skin at the same time it cleans off stale make-up and dirt.

Feel the exhilarating tingle!

The moment you smooth on Noxzema, you feel a wonderful, cool, refreshing tingle. That tingle tells you Noxzema's beauty action is starting to work on your skin problem—helping your complexion look fresher, smoother, prettier.

Hundreds of letters praise Noxzema's quick help for dry, rough, flaky skin; externally-caused blemishes; and for that dull, lifeless, half-clean look of many so-called normal complexions.

Like to help your skin look fresher, prettier? Then, tonight do this:

1. Cleanse your face by washing with Noxzema and water. Smooth on Noxzema; wring out a cloth in warm water and wash as if using soap. See how stale make-up and dirt disappear. How fresh your skin looks and feels—not dry, or drawn!

2. Night Cream: Noxzema supplies a protective film of oil-and-moisture—helps keep skin looking fresh and lovely. (Pat a bit extra over any externally-caused blemishes. Noxzema is medicated to help heal them, fast!) Greaseless, too.

3. Make-up base: In the morning, 'cream-wash'; then apply Noxzema as a long-lasting powder base.

It works or money back! In clinical tests, Noxzema helped 4 out of 5 women to have lovelier looking complexions. Use it for 10 days. If you don't look lovelier, return the jar to Noxzema, Baltimore—your money back! *externally-caused

50% More NOXZEMA for your money (than in smallest sizes)

Limited time offer! Big 6 oz. jar only 69¢ plus tax, at drug and cosmetic counters. Enough Noxzema for months at a big saving!

Here's the fruit juice that gives you something extra!

Bright, delightful, good-tasting Sunsweet is the only prune juice that is uniform in laxative strength. Because only Sunsweet knows how to measure and control the mild laxative factor that nature provides in prunes.

And... Sunsweet is never diluted with non-laxative sweetening agents.

In addition, Sunsweet prune juice is the only fruit juice that brings you all the important minerals, especially blood-building iron and bone-building calcium!

Because Sunsweet Prune Juice gives you more for your money, it's your best buy! Try it today!

SUNSWEET PRUNE JUICE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 222

"I don't keep her up," he objected. "She's the one who keeps me up!"

"No matter," I stormed, "it's your duty to look after her. Hereafter, I want you to bring her home by twelve o'clock. Otherwise I'll put a stop to the dances."

My son regarded me pityingly. "Dad," he said, "you and Gertrude have been married eight years. Don't you know by this time that short of banging her on the head, you can't stop her doing anything she wants to do?"

Breakfast with Gertrude at The Berries was apt to be more exhilarating than restful. She usually arrived at the breakfast table having set half-a-dozen activities in motion and prepared to tackle problems of world importance.

Early in our married life she had assumed as one of her projects the task of changing my manner of attacking my soft-boiled egg.

"Why don't you do it properly, darling?" she inquired.

I am no more touchy than most men about wifely criticism of my manners, but Gertrude's tone carried the ring of the reformer.

"What do you mean—properly?" I demanded.

"As I do. As everyone in England does it."

I have listened to and read countless suggestions on the subject of improving Anglo-American relations. I have not much hope of the two nations' reaching and maintaining real accord until a moratorium is declared on criticism of each other's ways with knives and forks, boiled eggs, corn on the cob, and tea and coffee making. I pointed this out to Gertrude. Although she agreed with me, the agreement had no effect on her emotional reaction whenever she saw me break my egg in half and dump its contents into the larger half of the eggcup. Her nose would wrinkle with disgust. "Ugh!" she would exclaim, giving the monosyllable all the contempt she could pack into it. "How can you, Richard?"

My reply that I could because that is the way I had been brought up to deal with boiled eggs, the way my parents before me had met and solved the problem, and the way Joys and Aldriches had done since the first hen laid the first egg on the soil of Massachusetts, left her unconverted.

Similarly, I never saw her take up a knife, approach the tender egg upright in the small end of the eggcup and with one nonchalant stroke sever its end from its middle without an instinctive shudder. I fully expected to see the contents of the shell spattered on the wall of the breakfast room. That this never happened, and that the top of the egg always fell neatly into her plate, leaving the yolk exposed but intact, I put down as one m Gertrude's extraordinary taler

The letters usually arrived wh breakfast. Gertrude always ra stack of mail swiftly, looking fo Pam. After this her expectation from England. She maintained respondence with Evie Willia Hollis and several other devoted Boxie, who had been her dre pended on their love and loy responded to it by becoming British whenever she wrote to t an unconscious and instinctive r part. Pen in hand, she would as of a homesick expatriate, longin
the gaudy melon flower of comf America with me for the butterc amid the war-reduced and fra the peerage. The arrival of a let never failed to turn Gertrude's talgically toward the world she hind when she sailed for Am
She could not believe this did that it was not waiting for her like the sets and props of a play, out, dusted and put in place fo go on and for her to make her

The friendship between Gertru was the sort of relationship whi exists between sisters and which friction and an instinctive rivalry tual affection. It dated from th Gertrude was in the chorus of revue—one of André Charlot's tions. Polly, then married to a nessman, was reputed to have chorus herself a few seasons be phase of her existence was no sight and remembrance. No do was ingenuously flattered to be Polly in her Mayfair house. Sh Polly's financial security and envy. In her eyes Polly was a done well for herself. On her p improbable that Polly enjoyed p little actress who, at that time, w to attract favorable notice and lowing.

Through the years the friends on with a seesaw motion. And al undercurrent of unexpressed ri
Gertrude went up, becoming th
London's smartest set, a perso clothes, jewels, romances, pranks figured almost daily in the gos Polly's married security appeare stuffy in comparison. When her handle her own financial affairs se end of the seesaw down—even t and eviction—Polly's status rose ately.

"Can I show the kids your college yearbook, where it says 'Lady-Killer' under your picture?"

olly lessened almost to the t during Gertrude's successful sons in America just before we ay have been a forgivably tri-in her letter to Polly announc-ge and our plans. When Polly, orced her first husband, came announcement of her forthcom-to a handsome young man of e position in society, Gertrude moment. By all the standards ommon in which she was reared, out to move several squares who had only a Yankee ex-producer to match against the most awe-inspiring uniform in the British army and entry to the Mountbatten set. It was ironical that just when Gertrude and I were dropped from the Social Register, the gates of Burke's Landed Gentry should be thrown wide for Polly to enter on her groom's arm.

I can say honestly I do not think Gertrude entertained regrets whenever she heard from Polly during the next few years. I have every reason to believe that her life as Mrs. A satisfied her and gave her the greatest happiness she had ever known. Everyone who had known her for some time observed that she matured in those years; that some of her former reckless restlessness abated as she found herself. With that finding, her charm as a woman and her talents as an actress deepened perceptibly. A sense of this underlay her remark that she had "outgrown her former tricks."

After Gertrude arrived in London to start her Ensa tour, she dined with Polly. In Southampton later, she told me she felt a sense of guilt when she contrasted the way of life the war had forced upon her friends with our bountiful existence at The Berries. On her return to America, she immediately inaugurated an active personal parcel service not only to her old retainers, fans and theater associates but to her rich and titled friends as well.

In May of 1948, with no suitable play in immediate prospect, she was restless. She was never happier than when she was working, and always miserable, depressed and fearful when "resting" between plays. I suggested that she go over to London and Paris for a few weeks to see what the theaters there offered and to renew her friendships and contacts after the long break occasioned by the war.

When I met her at the airport on her return I saw at once that the trip had done her good. She was radiant, bubbling with news and frankly delighted to be home again. We flew immediately to attend the commencement exercises at Ithaca College, when the president, Dr. Leonard Bliss Job, conferred on Gertrude the degree of Doctor of Fine Arts. She was justly proud of this honor. Her irrepressible sense of humor never let her let me forget that in the academic world her doctorate gave her precedence over my Harvard A.B.

"And as Doctor Lawrence," she argued, "why shouldn't I invent a word now and then to fill a need? Like 'ethicasy'."

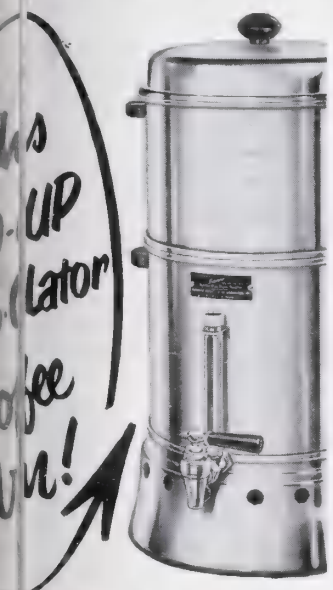
"I don't know about the ethicasy of this," she would write in all seriousness. And then be indignant when I questioned the "ethicasy" of the word.

SHE gave me in a series of rapid vivid flashes a picture of life in England after nearly three years of the Labor Government; not in statistics, but in facts in the lives of women like Evie "whose rents and rates are exactly double what they were. And coal between ninety-five shillings and five pounds per ton."

"How does Polly make out?" I asked.

"Oh, Polly manages to bear up," Gertrude replied. Her tone made me sure that Polly had pulled another fast one, leaving Gertrude (or so she felt) a few paces to the rear. Polly and her husband, she explained, had separated. Polly was living in the country, and not too far from an attractive and possibly not unwilling viscount. She had driven Gertrude to his moated manor house to have lunch.

"And to collect eggs and vegetables and fruit and cream and butter. And all these on a magnificent silver tray that took her eye."



She laughed, but I had the feeling that the viscount rankled. Not that Gertrude wanted him. Only, why should Polly edge up on the peerage in this manner?

That summer Polly wrote announcing that the viscount was now entirely willing. Her divorce was in process. Before many months she would don the coveted coronet.

"I can't bear it," Gertrude exclaimed indignantly. "Fancy Polly pulling off a trick like that. Polly a viscountess! And he's rich too." She glanced quickly across the breakfast table and caught my look which was more amused than impressed. The long-sustained rivalry between the two friends had always entertained me. But the comedy was lost on Gertrude.

"It's all very well for you to laugh, Richard, but it isn't funny. When I think of Polly, a peeress, and me just sitting here ——"

ARN
URN
Your Organization

s
UP Lator fee
n!

67,200 Already Given
elling M-K Vanilla!

rch ladies' group, school or club ly, easily, earn the new, better and up genuine Drip-O-Lator electric own above. How? Just by selling es of Marion-Kay Vanilla!

Anniversary M-K Drip-O-Lator urn
e and you get it simply by selling
M-K Vanilla.

200 organizations have already done g! Earning Drip-O-Lator urns this way is so easy you'll have one in your church or club kitchen before you know it! Start earning yours today! Just send coupon below.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

lla available in 6 oz. (Pure Flavor) (Super Compound), $1 a bottle.

ORDER BLANK

hip 60-
O-Lator (check K Pure;
er Com-

In check
der. No tion.

☐ CREDIT. Ship 48 bottles (check one) of ....M-K Pure; ....M-K Super Compound.
We'll send $48, within 2 months, and receive our 60-cup Drip-O-Lator in return.

free flavors to cover shipping charges.
rmation on earning china, tableware,
les, electric mixers, etc.

MARION-KAY
PRODUCTS CO., INC.
Dept. 19-A Brownstown, Indiana

EARN MORE! You can earn more to help take care of Christmas expenses this year by joining our staff of independent representatives. Send a postal to the address below, and you will receive complete details about our offer. No obligation.
CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 462 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

This was an opportunity for a tongue-in-cheek ribbing of Gertrude that I could not resist. In well-simulated wrath I brought my clenched fist down on the table hard enough to rattle the china.

"Say that again," I shouted.

"Say what?"

"That you're just sitting here ——"

"Well, I am. And what is it getting me? Oh, I can go on working, and meanwhile Polly is ——"

I pushed back my chair with a loud scraping sound and stood up. "That's enough from you," I interrupted. "So long as you feel so sorry for yourself I'll give you a present."

She stared up at me, startled. The mention of a present never failed to have an effect on her. "What sort of a present?" she demanded.

"What you seem to want," I answered, with a straight face. "Your freedom. Go back to London and beat your friend Polly at her own game. You're not the only member of the Aldrich family who has been working hard. I've been thinking I'd like a little vacation myself. A real change. Now I know where I'll go. To Reno. Six weeks out there will fix me up."

"Richard." Gertrude was on her feet too. "Do you know what you are saying?" Her voice deepened. It had the tragic throaty sound that never failed to make audiences quiver. "You're not going to Reno. Or anywhere else, without me. Are you out of your mind?"

"No, but I sometimes think you are," I told her. "If you don't outgrow this schoolgirl envy of your friend Polly, one of these days it will choke you."

The crisis past, she flashed me an impudent smile. "Darling, you don't know how it relieves my mind to discover we can still get mad enough to fight. Even over anything as silly as Polly's coronet. For months you haven't shouted at me once. You just bury your head in the paper and let me seethe."

I asked if by this she meant that she was satisfied to remain plain Mrs. Aldrich.

"If I ever come across someone like you with a fortune and a good title, I might consider letting you run off to Reno," she retorted. "Until that happens, please remember that you belong to me, Mr. A. And don't let any of the glamour girls think otherwise."

But though she could laugh at her former envy of Polly and assess this properly as a hang-over from her early days of struggle and insecurity, she was, I realized, genuinely homesick for England and more than a little anxious about her continued prestige in the London theater world.

It was more than ten years since she had played there. It was inevitable that she should wonder whether she was remembered, and whether her brilliance remained unchallenged. Greatly as she respected the position she had attained in the American theater, her appraisal of herself was made by her rating "at home." Her greatest pride was in belonging intimately to both countries, loving and serving each, with the fervent hope that the two would draw closer in mutual understanding and respect. She was always eagerly alert to anything that would increase my appreciation of England and the English—hence, I believe, the reason why she usually read aloud to me the letters she received from "home." Including many from former suitors who might have been surprised to learn that their tender messages were shared with me across the breakfast table.

Gertrude's delight in these proofs that she was not forgotten was unaffected and tonic. It did not interfere with her appreciation of the humor of what Eric Dudley wrote her shortly after the death of Gertie Millar, the musical-comedy star whom his father had married and who, as Countess of Dudley, had reigned over the segment of London society in which the peerage and the theater mingle. The earl had gone down to see his paralyzed stepmother a few days before she died, when she was barely conscious. "Darling," he said to her, "such millions of people send you love and good wishes." The old Gertie Millar gleam came into the dying woman's eye. "Oh, really," she said. "Any men?"

More and more, through that winter of 1947–48, Gertrude's thoughts turned to the idea of playing in London again.

Soon after we went to the Cape I received from Daphne du Maurier the manuscript of her new play, September Tide. She wrote expressing her hope that Gertrude and I might find it suitable for production.

We read the script together. "The part of the mother, Stella," Gertrude said thoughtfully, "I could play it. And I could make a success of it in London. Not here."

How much her desire to go home was influenced by the situation in which she and I then found ourselves I did not, and still do not, know. We were facing a problem which had never come up until then to threaten the secure happiness of our marriage. This was a problem which sooner or later almost invariably confronts every producer-husband of a star. It is one which has taken severe toll of marriages in the theater.

Let me put it this way: how does a wife who is a great actress, and thereby not immune to the subtle, if petty, rivalries of the theater, feel when her producer-husband stars an actress between whom and herself there has been rivalry, not only in the theater but in love?

Richard Myers and I were the production of Good-bye had engaged Madeleine Carr role, with Conrad Nagel. Ger the scripts of Goodbye My F tember Tide at about the same preferred playing the enchanti Stella of Daphne's play, in cl by Molyneux, to the Cong Goodbye My Fancy.

Nevertheless, I realized full liked the prospect of her husb Madeleine Carroll as his star.

In her autobiography, Gertr disarming frankness that Mad marriage to Philip Astley ca siderable heartache. This had 1931. For the eight years prio tain Astley of the Guards, k handsomest man in London," a close friend of the Duke of Prince of Wales), had been reg trude's property. They had met was having her first success. Th love instantly. Marriage was o tion; Gertrude was not divorced
she was no longer living with, F Hawley, Pamela's father. Even legally free to marry, marriage would have harmed Captain in the army and in Court circles

All this was many years past and I met. Philip Astley's marr leine Carroll was dissolved by year before Gertrude and I m year Gertrude had had opportu between a new love and an old chosen me, reason to thi Astley meant than first lo anyone.

The most completely lost of all days is that on which one has not laughed.
—CHAMFORT

It did not that Gertrud harbor any against Mad
I do not think scious of a certainly she did not express i the same, the prospect of Made starring in one of my producti her eagerness to return to Lon success there that would add liant achievement to her record

This is something which I women will comprehend. I am actress will understand.

On my part, it did not increas mind, as the plans went forwar duction of Goodbye My Fancy simultaneously with Gertrude's London in September Tide, to re ports of Colonel Astley's irresi and the fact that he was now w ties or other impediments.

Gertrude sailed early in Oct start rehearsals. Hugh ("Binkie was to produce the play and the ing was set for mid-December. I Gertrude to fly over for her ope possible, and to spend Christma few days before her sailing, she up to Groton to visit mother.

The countryside was at its maples scarlet and gold and the a dusty copper color against the sky. Mother loved that season Until well in her eighties she had long walks each fall to enjoy th would write Gertrude and me d ters, enclosing in each a presse
Now, close to ninety, she walke village post office and to church an autumn leaf—frail in appear holding on to its tree with summ

I had expected her to express proval of Gertrude's going so fa indefinite length of time; mothe she often said, in husbands and together, and staying put.

"It will do Gertrude good," sh sure it does not mean that she l Richard, or is less fond of the h made together because England to her. It was always 'coming when I would leave Boston and

Betty Crocker of General Mills

"Try my new kind of pancake...
Bisquick Puff Pancakes"

Twice as high Millions of tiny egg-rich bubbles puff my new cakes up twice as high as even the delightful pancakes you usually make with Bisquick.

Twice as light Puff Pancakes bake up twice as light as those you make the usual way. Richer flavor, too.

Chiffon Cake Texture
Never soggy inside . . . fluffy as chiffon cake all the way through. The delightful flavor of the hot syrup and melted butter just melt right down in.

Betty Crocker

New Stove-to-Table
HOT SYRUP AND BUTTER SERVER SET
only $1.00
with Bisquick boxtop Mail to: Hot Syrup and Butter Set, Dept. 685, 623 Marquette Ave., Minneapolis, Minnesota.

or a few days and come to felt I belonged."
did not seem very close, but I are abroad, Gertrude," my ied, "it might interest you to of Richard's ancestors. For ilies have been in New England ears, our roots are in England.

Aylesbury in Buckingham-refathers still lie buried there."
fully promised to look up our e drive home, however, I rethe promise. "You'll be busy
, "without scouring the coun-or ancient graveyards. I don't lly intended to do it, anyway."
shall do it," she replied indigr expects it. Since we can't be lo something especially sweet Christmas. She just gave me a hen we were in her bedroom.
e letter."
" I asked.
darling. The letter. The last ent of your great-grandfather the white iron fence in the y. Look!"
r handbag and showed me the and yellowed sheet, covered randfather James Joy's writ-w, my mother's most precious by right of being the eldest of
And she had given it to Ger-

d the question in my mind, ouching the pages with a rev-
"She said she knew I would care of it. I am to pass it on to when the time comes. Meanichard Stoddard Aldrich, wife he Family, I am Guardian of gay, but without mockery. I her suspected that our ap-ration contained germs of night develop into estrangenent separation, she had used ul means at her command to e feeling that she belonged to ne else.

ondon four days before the ember Tide at the Aldwych. and joyous expectancy sur-de on her first appearance in fore the war already was run-ever she went—in the restau-of the Savoy, shopping in ere she took me to choose to take home to Dick and for Barbara and mother—ed, greeted, smiled at with a er affection that did not leave had never seen anything like ed me quite as much as the extraordinary popularity of as Gertrude's own humility Though she was plainly not welcome, she was deeply af-e were tears in her eyes much they were happy tears. They the misty-blue of the forget-planted and tended at The sband," she said again and me to total strangers whose though friendly, glances up eight left me somewhat emhink you are?" I teased her.

? With me as Prince Con-don't mind, do you?"

t as long as I don't have to
s."
ce Consort was a foreigner," oughtfully. "But for her sake roper Englishman."
ions," I advised her. "Much ountrymen, and you, I still nary that in the three hunch my country has changed s to the greatest country on have not improved their house-heating systems."
t feel the cold so much,
u would learn to drink ——"

"—— scalding-hot tea," I finished for her. "After eight and a half years of marriage, haven't you given up hope of converting me? Though, if anything could change my habits, it's what passes for milk over here. It's as blue as the blood of a viscount."

"Of course, if you have no soul above your stomach," Gertrude said loftily.

Fanny arrived the day before Gertrude's opening. She descended from the plane with her usual imperturbability, carrying several paper-wrapped parcels.

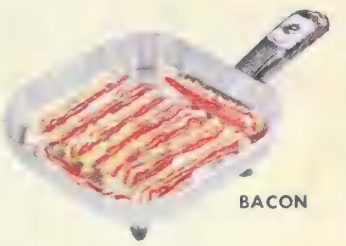
"Did you bring them, Fan?" Gertrude asked.

"Of course I brought them. I was awakened by a telephone call early yesterday morning," Fanny informed me. "It was Gertrude Lawrence Aldrich entrusting me with a most important mission. Would I bring a bottle or two of homogenized milk to London? Oh, yes, and a quart of chocolate ice cream too? 'Richard loves it,' she made sure to explain."

"You can have some real milk for breakfast, darling," Gertrude said, giving me the containers to carry. "You'll start the day right for my opening. No, I'll carry the ice cream."

It was a warmish, moist day, one of those unseasonable reminders of spring that add to the deceits of winter in Britain. The ice cream had been in the plane's refrigerator, but it was no longer frozen solid. After a long drive, we arrived at Claridge's after dusk. There the doormen in their evening livery of scarlet offered to relieve us of our plebeian packages. Gertrude motioned them away.

"No, no," she said. "We'll carry these ourselves." Swathed in mink, chin up, Gertrude swept across the crimson carpet that has received the footprints of the earth's royalties, serenely unaware of the dribble of melted chocolate ice cream that marked her trail.



The opening of September Tide will go down in London's theater history as the first gala first night since the beginning of the war. It was completely in the prewar tradition. I had known first nights in New York, exciting,

ENTIRELY NEW and SENSATIONAL Never Before An Appliance Like This

Sunbeam
CONTROLLED HEAT
Automatic FRYPAN

Everything You Cook will be more delicious because of Controlled Heat

BACON

HAMBURGERS

PANCAKES

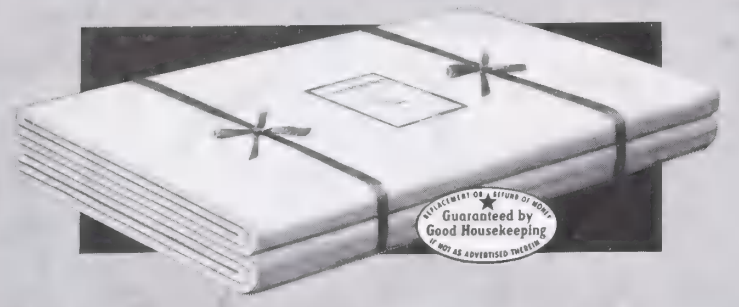
CHICKEN

You get eggs like this every time in the Sunbeam set at 300°

Here is what happens with uncontrolled heat
Eggs are seared around the edges, leathery on the bottom, blistered and tough with uncooked white around the yolks.

You get the perfect
Controlled Heat
for more delicious food by simply setting this dial

Marvelous New WATER-SEALED ELEMENT



You can immerse the entire pan in water for quick, easy washing

Now, with the new Sunbeam Automatic Frypan you can fry and cook at the correct controlled heat every time. The Sunbeam's highly accurate thermostatic control maintains the perfect heat for wonderful cooking and frying results without constant watching. The Fryguide, right in the handle, gives correct temperature. No guesswork. The shortening is always at just the right temperature, resulting in less grease absorption into the food. Plugs into any outlet. The new square shape permits you to cook 20% more in the same area than you can in a round pan. Use anywhere you wish, on any table because of protective bakelite legs. High dome covers of either aluminum or heat-resistant glass are available for fried chicken, roast, etc. See your Sunbeam dealer.

See Sunbeam appliances on these great NBC-TV shows: Sunday Night Color Spectaculars, "Ethel & Albert" every week, and HOME, the daytime "Magazine of Television." Consult your local TV schedule.

© SUNBEAM CORPORATION, Dept. 50, Chicago 50, Illinois • Canada: 321 Weston Rd., Toronto 9

ONE of the best sleeping habits to get into...

Thomaston Sheets

Available at your favorite store in dream-pastels and snowy white —a quality for every purse and purpose.
A product of Thomaston Mills ▪ Thomaston, Ga.

CORNS
also Calluses. Quick, easy, and economical. Just rub on. Jars, 35¢, 60¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co., Rochester, N. Y.
removed by MOSCO

ZUD Removes RUST & STAINS
from BATHTUBS · SINKS · bottoms of COPPER POTS TILE FLOORS · AUTO BUMPERS · METALS
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
FREE SAMPLE
Give names of your dealers.
ZUD is sold at Grocers, Hardware, Dept., 10¢ Stores
RUSTAIN PRODUCTS P.O. BOX [illegible] TAIN LAWN, N.J.

WHY NOT EARN MORE?
You can easily earn extra money by selling magazine subscriptions in your spare time. Thousands of our representatives made their start by asking for our generous commission offer. No obligation. Address a postal today!
CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
464 Independence Square Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania

OSTERMOOR
America's Quality Mattress since 1853

For over 100 years the name Ostermoor has stood for the utmost in sleep comfort.
OSTERMOOR & COMPANY, Inc.
Chicago 16, Illinois Bridgeport 4, Connecticut

nerve-racking occasions, but with none of the romantic, storybook quality that attended this one. I began to realize that Gertrude had missed something in all her successes in America. It was for this more than any other thing that she had longed to "go home."

I went with her to the theater where I met Evie, and Boxie, who was Gertrude's dresser as she had been years before. Two dressing rooms had been set aside for her and they were needed. Both were filled with flowers. Gertrude's eyes were moist. "They haven't forgotten," she said softly. After more than ten years, proof that she was remembered, loved, still a part of the old life, was like a blessing. It gave her strength and assurance.

"Kiss me, Richard," she said. "For luck. I'll see you after the play."

After the final curtain, the crowd waiting outside Gertrude's dressing room was eager, enthusiastic and confident that September Tide would run for many months. It had swept Gertrude on their shore and they had no intention of letting her drift away again, if they could prevent this. A distinguished man wedged close to my shoulder said as much to me. My reply was noncommittal.

"There's no one like her," the Englishman said fervently.

"No one," I agreed.

"It's high time she came home. America is all right. But her place is here. We need her."

My reply that I needed her, too, was cut off by the sudden opening of the door, revealing Gertrude smiling, her hands thrown wide in greeting, her eyes searching the throng of cheering, applauding men and women. They found me.

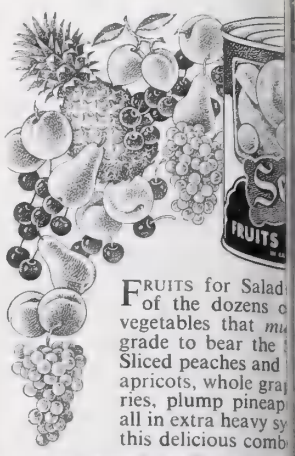
"Richard," she called. And instantly, "And Philip! So you two know each other."

I TOOK a long look at the man beside me. "So you're Philip Astley!" I said. At the same moment he was saying, "So you're Richard!"

That night, and later, during the three weeks I remained in London, I had opportunity to increase my spontaneous liking for Colonel Astley. Gertrude wanted us to like each other. She was pleased, I saw, that Philip appeared to approve of me. "He did so many kind things for me," she said. "When I would be in America he kept an eye on Pam in her school, and he would go down to see mummy and granny. And when poor Dad got into more than usual difficulties, Philip was wonderful."

There were other old friends of Gertrude's whom I came to like in those weeks. "They are my family," Gertrude said to me. "Darling, you know what it meant to you to have your family like me—Pam is all I have of my own blood. But Philip and Neville and Pickle are of my heart. Of course they have all wondered about you. I'm so proud for them to meet and like my husband."

With the assurance that her play would run in London until spring, Gertrude set about finding a furnished apartment. She never liked living in hotels, no matter how luxurious. "Flat-hunting and still adoringly yours," was the cabled message that greeted me on my return to New York early in January. The flat she finally settled on was a small one in Fountain House, Park Street, W.1.



Gertrude's letters were full of the number of invitations and requests for her services on committees that poured in on her. In addition to her work and her social and charitable engagements, she began sitting regularly for her portrait by Simon Elwes, which was hung in that year's Royal Academy.

Meanwhile her play continued to be a popular success:

. . . They fight with umbrellas to get into the matinees as though we had announced nylons going free. . . . We are hoping Their Majesties will come.

She was now, I saw, all Englishwoman and intensely royalist. I detected a slightly patronizing note in a letter written early in March:

Last Wednesday night I dined after the play at St. James' Palace with Sir Piers Leigh. He is Comptroller of the King's Household. We dined, about fifteen of us, in a charming cosy Adam room. Then all assembled in a circle in the drawing room where a lovely fire glowed. Why the

FRUITS for Salad of the dozens o vegetables that mu
grade to bear the Sliced peaches and apricots, whole gra ries, plump pineap
all in extra heavy sy this delicious comb

Sexto
Quality Fo

SEXTON pays a premium to get the choicest of the crop...such as these delectable, Blue Lake whole green beans from the rich fertile fields of the Pacific Northwest.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

John Sexton & Co., Sexton Square

Gebhar
CHILI POW RESEAL IT
the ORIGINAL

• The origin
Ancho-Chi cured in O
• No salt or It's all acti
• Grinder-fr
in glass!

GOES TWI
MADE IN Sunny San A

Gebhardt CHI San

Imagine me run errands

MODERN · F
E&J ADD THE WILL

Dealers Listed in Phone Book
EVEREST & JENNINGS, INC.

door? Word had come that they

he the door was quietly opened:
ny" Browning followed by the rs had told me he had a surprise was it.
ning evening. We danced—I with old songs with Carroll Gibbons lo. It was not until 3 A.M. that the dly went home. It was the first ad stayed out so late since the r . . .

ths which Gertrude spent in on reflection, one of those dis-of psychological readjustment
he examined and appraised, sciously, all the various per-ips in her life, including her n me.
one of those persons in whom of adolescence persists until life. This contributed as much n and charm as an individual er talents as an actress. Half n, her evanescent moods, as ell as her deliberate, play-acttalities, owning,
epend-on and r fiery underttle and riculous, nitigate simpli-s which play at hildish-uld be as ene swept ourage.
tion of divine he could and lift hts of months he and Maurier friendntinued

r Ger-Amer-ly from e later t I was uct the rtrude's during London. of Ger-
ss, her variability, her sense satisfaction. Gertrude talked nting to remain in England
."
this was a manifestation of a ng to escape the necessity of Our life together in America put away the childish things—s, the irresponsible ways which ier before we married and ated with England. It was the known there, away from the theater. It glittered in retrolitter temporarily put out of t that she was deeply dissatexistence at the time that she o become Mrs. A.

nced that one, and perhaps ason why Gertrude had been me and embark on a life so er former life in London, and was that she longed for some-reality which would give her express a part of her nat, most beautiful part—which ted and undeveloped.
ing of The Berries, in the outdoor life we lived on the with the Playhouse and its all in her relationships with my sons, Gertrude had found aved and needed.
fillment came increasing re-here came an obligation to be an adult. This she was not quite sure she wanted to be. At any rate, not yet. So she had evaded it by flight and by immersing herself in a world which did not expect her to be more than gay, charming, lovely to look at, romantic and amusing.

No one knew better than I Gertrude's chameleonlike adaptability to whatever environment she found herself in. It was beyond her power to resist the impulse to play up to whatever the group expected her to be. In realizing all this, I realized that our marriage was running in shallow water among reefs which I had not charted. I could not ignore the fact that strong influences—strong because they were of longer duration than our marriage and because they spoke a familiar and seductive language—surrounded Gertrude. They separated us more effectively than the Atlantic.

Just how seductive her return to the English stage and London society was proving, I did not completely realize until David Holtzmann came back from a trip to England.

"David," I remarked, "the austerity diet has streamlined you."

"Austerity my eye," he snorted. "Exercise, Dick. Disgustingly vigorous exercise. And, I might add, on your behalf."

I was understandably curious.

David went on: "I have explored every empty, drafty mansion in Mayfair. I have trudged with Gertrude up and down rickety stairs from Belgravia to Berkeley Square, inspecting studies for you and top-floor bedrooms for the boys."

"What on earth would I do with a study in Berkeley Square?"

"Gertrude has visions of you becoming an international producer—a theatrical Colossus with one foot in Piccadilly Circus and the other on Broadway."

This was a notion about which Gertrude had given me no advance knowledge. I could see, however, that her house hunting was a daydream in action.

"And did she say anything about coming back home?" I asked.

"No." He added quickly, "But she often said she wished you were there."

In the meantime, Gertrude wrote, telling me how busy she was with causes and benefits under royal patronage. Now and then a note of wistfulness crept between the lines: she was sending Ed some seeds for the garden; she did hope we had rain. Her next letter was written, she said, seated on the fire escape of her flat getting a bit of sun and with her back against the garbage pail. "Polly has her coronet and is now on 'er 'oneymoon, but I just love you. I get very tired and lonely at times. Can't you come over for a week?"

The obvious course was for me to go to England and try to persuade her to leave the play and return to America and me as soon as the terms of her original contract were concluded. But I did not wish to do this. First, because I always steadfastly refrained from interfering in Gertrude's career and from urging a course of action on her. Second, because I felt that for me to plead with her to return would be to defeat myself and our future. No, Gertrude must want to return. The initial impulse must be hers. For her to come back home for any other reason than that she wished and was prepared to accept all the responsibilities of our life together would leave the ultimate decision still in the air.

And so I replied it was impossible. It was as much as I could do to get a second playhouse at Falmouth in operation. Still my refusal to fly over "for a week" nettled her. Her letters were less frequent, and in each she was "terribly busy." . . . "The Prime Minister was begging me to go to Australia." . . . She thought of flying over to Paris for the weekend. . . . She had motored out into the country, and England was "an enchanted Isle, earth had nothing to show more fair. . . ."

The Fourth of July was the most important day in Gertrude's calendar. By being married on her own birthday, she had cheated her sentimental nature of having two separate occasions to celebrate. But by the same token she had created a day freighted with a double charge of emotional significance.

Under such circumstances, it was always difficult for me to find a present to match the caliber of the day. This year it seemed impossible, for any physical gift would have subjected Gertrude to the bother and expense of customs. I therefore sent her a check, suggesting that she choose her own present.

She made no reference to this when she replied, but in a note to David Holtzmann, which he showed me, she told him of the gift, adding the terse comment spread across the page:

"HOW ROMANTIC!!!"

After viewing those three indignant exclamation points, David did not have to urge me to

PUT IT THERE, LOVE

By GEORGIE STARBUCK GALBRAITH

Love puts the dove upon the nest,
And linens in the cedar chest.
A pair of wings upon a dollar,
And lipstick on the lover's collar.

Love puts the twinkle in a star,
The starlet in a Jaguar,
And fervor in the cat's miaow.
Love puts the wrinkle on the brow.
The young man's foot in Argyle sock,
And parents of the bride in hock.

Love puts the joker in the pack,
The obstetrician in the black,
At ends of letters O's and X's,
And in hot water both daft sexes!

"I didn't turn a dial,
I didn't watch a light,
and I don't need two hands to lift it and pour. . .
my chrome
MIRRO-MATIC
ELECTRIC PERCOLATOR
makes the best coffee you've ever tasted... automatically...every time...without waste!"

Chrome-on-aluminum, never needs polishing. Two separate heating elements, one for fast percolation, one that keeps coffee drinking-hot till poured.

If you mean completely automatic, say "MIRRO-MATIC." There are no lights to watch—no dials to set.

Get MIRRO-MATIC at department, hardware, and home furnishing stores, wherever dealers sell the finest aluminum.

$18.95
(West, 19.95)
8-cup with cord,
Fed. Tax Incl.

your best buy!
MIRRO
THE FINEST ALUMINUM

MIRRO-MATIC Electric Percolator
Polished aluminum. Same completely automatic features as in chrome model.
8-cup, only $12.50 (West. 12.95)
4-cup, only $ 9.95 (West. 10.50)
Each with cord, Fed. Tax Incl.

ALUMINUM GOODS MANUFACTURING COMPANY, MANITOWOC, WIS.
World's Largest Manufacturer of Aluminum Cooking Utensils

Mrs. Carolyn F. Gross, night operator in Berlin, N. J., telephone exchange. Awarded Vail Medal for "initiative and resourcefulness" in answering an emergency call.

Out of the Night Came a Call for Help

It was about two o'clock in the morning when the call flashed on the switchboard. A woman, in an excited voice, asked to be connected with a doctor: "My husband has had a heart attack and is very ill. Please do everything you can!"

Mrs. Carolyn F. Gross, the night operator, rang a doctor who had helped in a previous emergency. Then, realizing he was new in the area, she arranged to have the State Police meet him at a certain point and lead him to the house. She also telephoned the emergency ambulance service to speed oxygen to the stricken man.

When she called later to ask if there was anything she could do, a grateful voice said: "You've already done so much. The doctor says it's only because of you that my husband is alive."

EVER READY . . . EVER HELPFUL. Day or night, rain or shine, the telephone stands ready to help you—in the everyday affairs of life as well as emergencies. This swift, willing worker will run your errands, guard your home, save countless steps and valuable time and keep you in touch with relatives and friends. In office and home, these oft-repeated words reveal its value—"I don't know what I'd do without the telephone." BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM make one of those extravagant gestures, ridiculous to me, which so delighted Gertrude. I arranged to have a birthday-anniversary cake baked in New York. Then, after complicated negotiations, the cake was placed in the hands of an American Airlines steward who was to guard it as if it were the Koh-i-noor diamond, and deliver it to Joe Rile, of their London office, who in turn was to present it in person to Gertrude on her birthday.

I tried to reach her by telephone several times on the Fourth, but it was one A.M. on the fifth in Dennis, and six A.M. in London, when I finally heard her voice. After our greeting, I asked her how she had spent the day.

It had been gay, she told me. In the afternoon there was the July Fourth Garden Party at the American embassy. Then, after her play, there had been a dinner party at Larue's. Afterward, the guests had gone on to dance at the 400 Club. She had come home at dawn.

There was no mention of the cake. After a short pause, I ventured a hesitant question: "Anything else happen today?"

"Yes, something very nice happened," she replied. "It's about Philip."

"Yes," I said. I wondered what was coming next. I had tried not to let my mind dwell on Philip Astley.

"Well," Gertrude said, "he's married. I just heard it today and I've been celebrating. Such a sweet girl! She'll be a good wife for him!"

"And you've been celebrating with them?" I asked.

"No, not with them—but for them. I'm happy at the thought of them being happy together—like we are. We are happy, aren't we?"

"When we are together."

"Sometimes you act as if you don't want me back. I was alone—very much alone today."

"I never wanted you to go away. Or stay away," I said.

"I don't suppose you could come over and fetch me?" she asked.

"No," I said. "I think you'd better come back under your own steam."

"That's not a very cordial invitation. And it's very late. Let's say good night."

After a few more words, we hung up. I lay awake for a time, staring disconsolately around the empty room; then dropped off into a troubled sleep.

I was awakened by the overseas telephone operator: Gertrude was calling me from London. In a voice tremulous with ex announced that the birthday-ann had just arrived, a day late and s worse for wear.

"Darling, it was the nicest thin done," she said. "When I opene read your dear note, I knew I ha too long. And I knew that I didn any more. I thought I did. But I think that I belong completely but I belong to you—wherever

"When will you be back?" I

"I'll see. I must talk it over

Though, at the time, I though procrastination, it was only a fe that I received this cable:

SPIT ON THE BRASS. CLEAR TH THAT WOMAN OUT OF THE HO SHOW IN ONE MONTH AND COM

The special present she brou birthday, August seventeenth—w would be our birthday this year somer carved ship model. It wa brigantine, made by the stage d Aldwych Theater. Gertrude h whittling the ship and had arran it for me. She also brought painted copies of the coats of Aldriches, Joys, Hartwells and

"There isn't a viscount to them," I said. "Your friend P give them a second glance."

"Poor Polly," Gertrude sigh wasting a whole lifetime chasing wisp. I can't understand it."

"You understood it well enou get her viscount. Come to thi part yours!"

"Mine?"

"Of course. Aren't you the her supplied with rubber girdl aids all through the war? It w Lease; you gave her the tool an the job. You ought to rejoice m "I would if I really thought It isn't. Peeresses' robes are n happiness."

"Aren't you the least bit envi

"Of course not. I'd rather ha Aldrich than any item catalog Peerage!"

(To be Concluded)

Ask Any Woman

By MARCELENE COX

ONE thing which goes as far as it once did is a can of paint in the hands of a child.

The sweet, appreciative thing we don't say to those we love falls into the category of a letter sealed without the promised check.

A young girl who had overstayed her play period was asked if she wanted someone to walk home with her. "No, thank you," was the reply, "I'll be safe until I get there."

Life really gets down to business in an old house in the fall when, before the cat establishes his authority, the field mice make the annual attempt to take over cupboards and closets.

"Here comes Hulda!" mother used to say about a neighbor who lived near us. "Now we'll have to listen to all her troubles."

There's a story at a local seed company about the bride who came to buy two packets of succotash seed.

A girl seeking a higher education reaches the top when she graduates cum homo.

All vacationists arrive with resolutions and leave with the books unread.

All in an hour it happens: th are stripped bare, the first bre winter blows, and we know the ti come to pull ourselves togethe facts in the face and show the which we are made.

The first step in the educati wife in money matters is to g some.

Direct quotes from our favorite ing woman: "Here, you'll catch throw this African over you!" . . husband never left her a cent didn't teach her that money was thing." . . . "She's such a good m she sacrifices her children for h

Anyone who is afraid of lett conversation drop is liable to pic at the wrong time.

Love-scented babies are sweet-smelling.

The law of diminishing retu gins to work in reverse when t grandchild arrives.

only a great new pattern — but more . . .

It's today's NEW IDEA in silverware design!

South Seas in Community

Here is the truly contemporary pattern you've been looking for, hoping for! Different, daringly different, from yesterday's silverware! Each sweeping piece of South Seas is individually designed, newly proportioned, strikingly today in every detail. You'll love the new-idea free-form handles . . . the handsome new-size functional place knives and forks.

Surprise Introductory Offer if you act now! It's a special money-saving 54-piece South Seas* service for 8, in a de luxe anti-tarnish introductory chest. Don't miss this opportunity! See your jeweler today. Community* . . . the finest silverplate.

*TRADEMARKS OF ONEIDA LTD., ONEIDA, N. Y., COPYRIGHT 1954 ONEIDA LTD.

LOOK!
BRIGHT NEW PACKAGE!

CREATED BY PROCTER & GAMBLE

so easy to love—your Prell-washed hair!

so easy to have— 'Radiantly Alive' Hair

with PRELL SHAMPOO

SO SOFT, YET MANAGEABLE . . . SO SWEETLY CLEAN! Come-hither loveliness—that's what your hair has after a luxurious Prell Shampoo! It's caressably soft, yet so obedient! Yes, angel-soft, smooth as satin, glowing with that 'Radiantly Alive' look he'll love! And Prell leaves your hair really clean . . . fresh and sweet . . . and free of embarrassing dandruff! Prell is easy to use, too—so convenient. No spill, drip or break. Try Prell tonight—it's wonderful!

PUBLIC LIBRARY
Burbank, Calif.

JOURNAL

NOVEMBER
1954 · 35¢

THE MAGAZINE WOMEN BELIEVE IN

JOHN P. MARQUAND'S NEWEST NOVEL begins in this issue

•

GOOD MORNING, MISS DOVE
Complete Novel by Frances Gray Patton

•

SENATOR KEFAUVER'S
"Secret Weapon" is a "Political Pilgrim"

•

TELL ME DOCTOR

Soft touch . . .

easy-care comfort with brushed DuPont Nylon

When you want comfort . . . you'll love brushed Du Pont nylon. It's unbelievably soft, warm . . . lightweight. And because it's nylon, it holds its shape, is stronger . . . will wear and wear. And even soft, luxurious comfort like this is no problem to care for . . . with nylon's easy washing, quick drying and little or no pressing. So, look in your favorite stores for easy-care gowns, pajamas and bed jackets of new brushed nylon. Nylon is one of Du Pont's modern-living fibers.

DU PONT
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING
. . . THROUGH CHEMISTRY

citing new things are happening in DuPont NYLON

Both the hands of Mrs. Janice Mulcahey were soaked in detergents. Only her right hand was given Jergens Lotion care. The difference is remarkable! Jergens Lotion will work as well for you, or your money will be returned.

Found: A positive way to stop "Detergent Hands"

A national research laboratory* proves Jergens Lotion more effective than any other lotion tested for stopping detergent damage.

Recently, 447 women spent many weeks looking for a way to stop "detergent hands."

Three times a day, these women soaked both their hands in detergents. After each soaking, Jergens Lotion was applied to their right hands. Their left hands were not treated.

The results were astonishing. In just 3 or 4 days, left hands were roughened, reddened, even cracked and bleeding. Right hands were smooth, unblemished, soft, and white!

Many other lotions were tested the same way. Not one proved as effective as Jergens Lotion. Not even 100% lanolin did better (and no hand care contains more than 15% lanolin).

The famous Jergens Lotion formula, perfected over fifty years, positively stops detergent damage. This means it's ideal for roughness, chapping, and all hand problems. It's your guarantee of romantically lovely hands, no matter how hard you have to work.

If you haven't tried Jergens Lotion lately, now is the time. You'll find it a heavier, creamier lotion, with a pleasing new fragrance. It's never sticky or greasy. And it's still 10¢ to $1.00, plus tax.

*NOTICE to doctors and dermatologists. A summary copy of this independent research report is available to you. Write on your letterhead to The Andrew Jergens Co., Cincinnati, O.

Jergens Lotion positively stops "Detergent Hands"

Journal

Contents

November 1954

VOL. LXXI No. 11

Novel Condensation Complete in This Issue

GOOD MORNING, MISS DOVE, Frances Gray Patton . 66

Stories

SINCERELY, WILLIS WAYDE (First part of five), John P. Marquand . 58
YOUNG MAN WITH A WINDMILL, Dorothy Black . 60
THINKING MAKES IT SO, Elva Williams . 62
KATHERINE (Conclusion), Anya Seton . 70

Special Features

FROM WHOM ALL BLESSINGS FLOW, Dorothy Thompson . 11
GIRL SCOUTS TRAIN FOR ACTIVE CITIZENSHIP . 37
NEVER TOO YOUNG, Margaret Hickey . 37
TELL ME DOCTOR, Henry B. Safford, M.D. . 51
POLITICAL PILGRIM'S PROGRESS: KEFAUVER'S SECRET WEAPON . 64
Rosemary Jones
GERTRUDE LAWRENCE AS MRS. A (Conclusion) . 68
Richard Stoddard Aldrich
CAN THIS MARRIAGE BE SAVED?, Dorothy Cameron Disney . 85
DR. SPOCK TALKS WITH MOTHERS, Benjamin Spock, M. D. . 152
HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES: THE PINK-HOUSE BOBOS . 173
Jean Todd Freeman

General Features

OUR READERS WRITE US . 4
UNDER-COVER STUFF, Bernardine Kielty . 18
DIARY OF DOMESTICITY, Gladys Taber . 25
"AND EVERYTHING NICE" (The Sub-Deb), Edited by Ruth Imler . 31
MAKING MARRIAGE WORK, Clifford R. Adams . 34
FIFTY YEARS AGO ▪ JOURNAL ABOUT TOWN . 57
THERE'S A MAN IN THE HOUSE, Harlan Miller . 84
THIS IS A SLAMMER, Munro Leaf . 141
ASK ANY WOMAN, Marcelene Cox . 201

Fashion and Beauty

THE PARIS SCENE IN COLOR, Wilhela Cushman . 72
PRIMARILY BLACK, Ruth Mary Packard . 74
3 DRESSES-9 COSTUMES, Nora O'Leary . 76
WASHINGTON PORTRAITS, Wilhela Cushman . 80
MOTHER AND DAUGHTER WARDROBES, Nora O'Leary . 182 BEAUTY PRESCRIPTIONS WITH A MAN IN MIND . 186
Dawn Crowell Norman

Food and Homemaking

THIS DAY GIVE THANKS, Ann Batchelder . 82
LINE A DAY, Ann Batchelder . 86
"KITCHEN-LAUNDRY TO SUIT ME," Gladys Taber . 116
YOUNG HOME-BUILDERS, Nancy Crawford . 180
SOUTHERN SPECIALTIES THE EASY WAY, Dottie Bobo . 184
SHELF MAGIC FOR EASY ENTERTAINING . 212

Architecture and Interior Decoration

NEWS IN COLOR, H. T. Williams . 78
PLANNED FOR LIVING ON A SHALLOW LOT, Carol L. Mercado . 144
PRACTICALLY PERFECT, Cynthia McAdoo Wheatland . 188

Poems

STORMY NIGHT, Florence B. Jacobs . 16
NEW ENGLAND MOTTO, Robert P. Tristram Coffin . 96
SMALL BOY DRESSING, Georgie Starbuck Galbraith . 104
CARROUSEL, Jean Todd Freeman . 118
EMILY AND GOD, Jessamyn West . 135
FAMILY DRIVE, William Stafford . 147
KISSING KIN, Elizabeth McFarland . 155
SONNET FOR SUBTERFUGE, Frances Eleonore Schluneger . 164
TURNING TOWARD YOU IN THE DARK, Dan G. Hoffman . 171
RITUAL FOR TEARS, Frances Bragan Richman . 178
TO THE BELOVED, Sara King Carleton . 222

Cover Photograph by Wilhela Cushman

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Send your new address at least 10 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect.

Address: LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1954 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices: U. S., U. S. Possessions and Canada—1 Yr., $3.50; 2 Yrs., $6; 3 Yrs., $8.50; 5 Yrs., $11. Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America (except the Guianas)—1 Yr., $4. All other countries—1 Yr., $7. Remit by Money Order or Draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. Funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Donald M. Hobart, Vice-President and Director of Research; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

Journalities

, Willis Wayde, beginning on is the latest on the brilliant ovels by JOHN P. MARQUAND the others: The Late George . M. Pulham, Esquire; Wick- t; B. F.'s Daughter; So Little Time; Point of No Return; Melville Goodwin, USA). One of the greatest of contemporary American writers, John P. Marquand has been described as a "modern Thackeray . . . using his pen as a scalpel to explore social phenomena." ders finish a Marquand novel strong desire to discuss the rs, not the writer. (Is Willis a "complete heel," a victim, fellow who tried too hard to od?) This, we think, is proof literary achievement.

w that ELVA WILLIAMS' short inking Makes It So (page 62) upposed to be deeply philo- , but it started us to thinking. what we are because we think And who are those who obviously are not what they think they are? Does one think one is before one is? Is it better to be and be right than to think and think wrong? Well, the story is not like that at all. It's a love story, actually, told through the eyes of a precocious child, takes place mostly on ship- nding with a kiss beneath the Carrousel in Paris. And that's know, without thinking. Elva et as well as a short-story She lives in San Francisco.

ODD FREEMAN, a young and us Southerner who lives, dur- king hours, in the office next , wrote this month's How America Lives, The Pink-House page 173). "When I go mountain climbing," she claims, "I fall off cliffs. When I ride, my horse lies down in a creek and rolls. When I visit strange cities, I invariably get lost. I got lost in Atlanta, looking for the Bobos, finally stopped at the pink- est house in sight. n, discovered not the Bobos, t. Bernard and a little girl who t remember her name. She e a drink of water and a phone When I left, she invited me to ack and play with her again." n't believe a word of it. She's one, that girl, always wearing mask of superficiality.)

Provide this softer tissue for your family and guests

Newer, Nicer – the bathroom tissue thoughtful women choose

Gentle as facial tissue. Women who want the finest for their family and guests just naturally choose Soft-Weve. It's the newer, nicer kind of tissue . . . as gently soft as the facial tissue you keep on your dressing table

Two soft thicknesses, firm and strong, are the secret of Soft-Weve's gentleness and strength. In your own home, provide the comfort of this softer tissue . . . your thoughtfulness will be noticed and appreciated. Soft-Weve is another great Scott paper value, a luxury everyone can afford.

Our readers write us

Drools Over Journal

Sitchewa, Greece

Dear Editors: I have always accepted the JOURNAL like water and soap—ham and eggs—peaches and cream: just reached out and these things were always there—but—today there has been a new birth!

In this remote village, so very, very primitive in its rugged setting, I reverently opened my copy of the JOURNAL and wound up staring in wonder at that luscious chocolate cake. An uncontrollable moisture rose to my tongue—good old American slang terms it "drool."

In a section where our wonderful country is a dream—where backbreaking drudgery is a woman's heritage—the girls look in wonder and longing at the cosmetic ads—the models in lovely summer styles, so far removed from the dark, rough texture of the native peasant dress here.

May God's countenance continue to rest upon us, make us aware and worthy of our great nation.

Sincerely yours,
MRS. VICK PAULOS

How to be Photographed

San Francisco, California

Dear Editors: Most of us fear to face the camera, reluctant to have it record the years. As a result, family records are incomplete and we deny our friends pleasure. Yet with a little preparation you can have portraits that are flattering and glamorous. May I share with other readers a few tips I recently learned the hard way?

Choose a modern photographer. If he asks you to "watch the birdie," get out of his studio.

Please follow some of my excellent photographer's advance suggestions as to make-up, clothing and hair styling, as I did on my second trip. (The first time I had thought I wanted to "look natural." Instead, as you see, I "looked dreadful.")

1. Have your hair cut and shaped "up" for a more youthful line. Don't have a fresh permanent.

2. Don't wear black; it kills your skin tones. Wear white, light gray, pastels.

3. Don't select extreme clothes that "date," or splashy prints.

4. Think of the people for whom the pictures are taken. They may expect to see you in different ways, as mine did, so take along several costumes.

5. Allow your face to be "retouched" in advance by the studio make-up girl, or bring your own make-up and do it this way:

6. Smooth out "bags" with skin-tone foundation. Spray a film of liquid make-up; it photographs better than powdered skin.

7. No rouge—but your own lightest lipstick applied to the natural shape of your mouth.

8. Shape eyebrows and darken them and lashes with mascara even if they're dark to begin with.

9. Rhinestones give more "sparkle" than diamonds.

10. Get the photographer to use a filter for at least one "starry-eyed" picture.

Change your attitude to one of anticipation rather than dread. After all, you're going to have fun. You're not going to the dentist, you know. You're going to have your portrait captured for posterity.

You, me and Mona Lisa!

Sincerely,
IRENE HAMMOND CORPÉ

CONTINUED ON PAGE 6

First I tried "l ing natural," but

Mother and edit
wanted me youth

Husbands like glamou

Dash for my theater g

IVORY SNOW

fest possible soap

for baby's things

...for yours, too

. for everything you wash with special care . . .

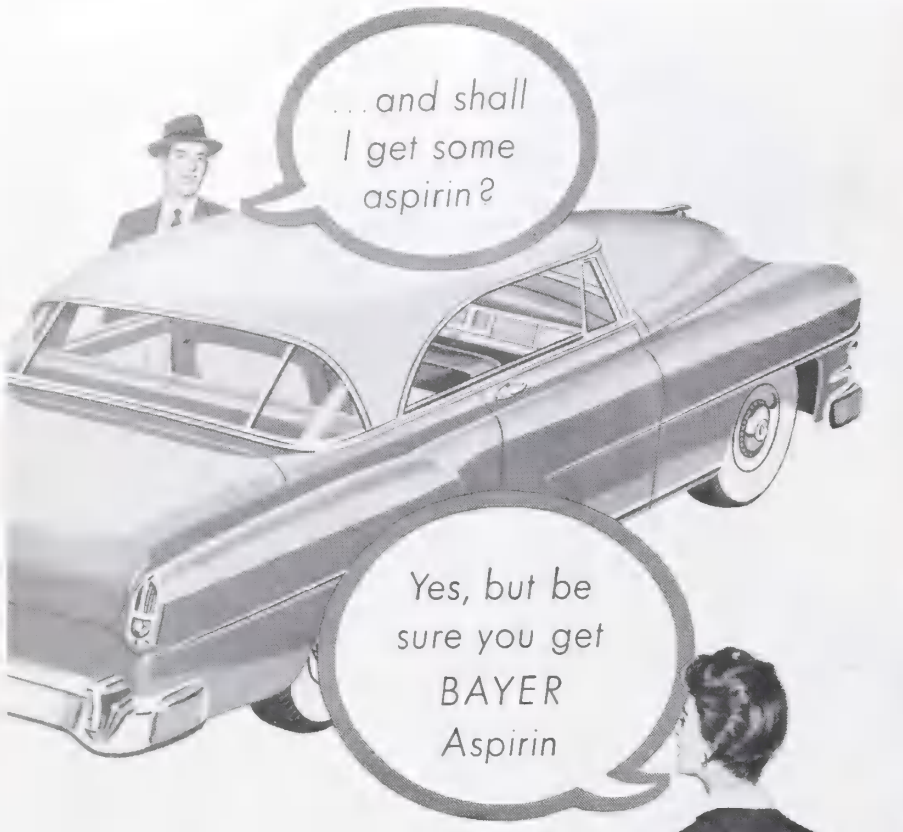
by HAND OR MACHINE!

DIAPERS . . .

baby clothes, there's no soap ivory-safe Ivory Snow. It leaves far softer than detergents or g washday soaps, free from its that chafe baby skin. And, anulated for efficiency!

LINGERIE

stays lovely far longer with Ivory Snow care. It pampers colors, keeps white nylons so white, leaves woolens so softly fluffy, too. Ivory Snow is the safest possible soap you can buy for fine hand washables.



NICE MACHINE WASHABLES

like blankets, luncheon cloths, and curtains thrive on the special care they get with Ivory Snow. It's the only soap both Ivory-safe and in the efficient granulated form you prefer to use in your washing machine.

99 44/100% PURE®

only soap both IVORY-SAFE and GRANULATED for efficiency

She insists on BAYER Aspirin because she wants the BEST

—even though it costs a few pennies more!

To get the fast relief you want when you are suffering from a headache—or the pains of neuritis or neuralgia—take the pain reliever preferred by millions—Bayer Aspirin.

As you can see by dropping a Bayer Aspirin tablet in a glass of water, it starts to disintegrate almost instantly—so fast you need a stopwatch to time its speed! It does the same in your stomach. And that's one reason why it relieves your pain quickly—makes you feel better fast.

When you buy aspirin, don't look for a bargain. Remember that the best always costs more. So be sure you are getting the best—buy Bayer Aspirin.

Get the BEST—get

BAYER® ASPIRIN

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 4

Marriageable Club Members

Washington, D.C.

Dear Margaret Hickey: I was amazed to find an author in the JOURNAL advising young women who want to marry to "get out" if they belong to a women's club. Do you think that is sound advice?

As you know, we have about 100,000 Juniors in the Federation and many of them are not married. I think these young women are more marriageable than the girls whose only interest is self.

Surely, membership in a women's group is an advantage in meeting outstanding young men who are also interested in community service. I have known many young women who met their future husbands through working for their favorite community project.

It seems to me that the author of How To Be Marriageable was striving to make an impression without knowledge of the program of the modern women's club—which is out to do a job for the world, the nation, the community and the family, and which works on the local level with many types of men's organizations.

Perhaps the JOURNAL can find space for my protest, in the interest of fair play.

Very sincerely yours,
MRS. THEODORE S. CHAPMAN
President,
General Federation of Women's Clubs

▶ Author had "social" groups in mind. ED.

Shortsighted of Congress?

Bainbridge, Ohio

Dear Ladies' Home Journal Editors: This year's tax-reform bill will permit a $600 deduction for working mothers to cover baby-sitter costs, if the combined husband-wife income is no more than $4500 yearly. May I ask just whom that is supposed to benefit? The prevailing rate for baby sitters in my area is 75 cents per hour. In order to work, a baby sitter is needed at least ten hours a day to cover the eight-hour working day of a mother. Could you tell me just who, making a salary of $4500 a year, or $375 average per month, or $86.34 per week before taxes, could afford to pay a baby sitter $37.50 per week or $1950 per year? This limit is extremely unfair to working mothers.

I am just one more R.N. with two children who cannot afford to work; therefore another nurse must be trained to take my place at ever-higher cost. After I bought uniforms, paid for their laundering, paid for my meals, for transportation, the cost of meals for the baby sitter, I would then be faced with an even greater problem. We would be placed in a higher bracket than the $4500 total and lose all benefit.

I am a fairly recent graduate (1952) and many of my own class have children now. We are just a few of the many R.N.'s who will possibly never work a day longer in our lives. We are a total loss to our profession, to our schools that tried so long to turn out good nurses and therefore alleviate the extreme shortages in the nursing field.

Is there nothing I can do to change this situation?

Sincerely,
LEAH L. COOPER, R.N.

▶ Many former teachers anxious to relieve shortages, while not needing as many sitter hours as nurses, did the same simple arithmetic—concluded "business expense" tax exemptions for women were still largely a future dream. ED.

Do-It-Yourself International Relations

World Literacy, Inc.
New York, N. Y.

My dear Mrs. Brewster: The fact that the women of Wisconsin have been working together—Jews, Catholics and Protestants—is a great step forward. The money you wish to give we shall use for printing.

We have been writing and publishing books for the new literates. Some of these books are on agriculture, some on sanitation, some on child care. We are getting one out now, on What to Feed Your

CONTINUED ON PAGE

NOW!

2 delightful forms of th
TALC in America's beloved fragrance

April Show

1. The long-loved talc . . . silky-luxuriously smoothing and sooth . . . with the fragrance that's fresh garden in the rain. Ask for A Showers REGULAR Talc. 39¢

2. New! Deodorant Form
Exciting, "two-purpose" version of famous, fragrant talc. Wonderful in dients have been added for all-d body deodorant protection. Ask April Showers DEODORANT Talc.

Prices plu

by CHERAMY
PERFUMER

Learning is fun with HOLGATE'S famo ROCKY COLOR CON

What fun your favorite to will have, stacking the 6 bright-col discs on their spindle... unstackin tipping them over! Holgate's R Color Cone helps develop impor eye-hand coordination; aids in per tion of size relationship. Chew-s color-safe. Pediatrician-approved. children 6 to 18 months. $1.00 Prices higher in

HOLGATE TO TRAIN AS WELL AS ENTE

FREE Folder showing large assortmen Holgate Toys available at your favorite s or direct from Holgate.

HOLGATE BROTHERS CO.
Kane, Pa., Dept. L-114

*Name*_____
*Address*_____
*City*_____ *Zone*____ *State*_____

rtest Fiberglas you've ever seen for game rooms . . . by CAMEO.

es: not a touch of ironing, here . . . not even at ruffles.

Dazzling in the sun . . . CAMEO'S Fiberglas draperies keep their fresh glow.

No ironing...

ıot even a "touch" at hems with Fiberglas curtains and draperies!

ligh and dry in 7 minutes without a touch of ironing . . . Fiberglas curtains and draperies re wonderful! They have so many ways of brightening your life. They open your home to ght and sunshine . . . yet seclude it from the world outside your picture window. A whole indow wall of them can be washed at home because they never shrink or stretch . . . can live the sun because their glowing colors are specially selected to resist fading. All this . . . and o mildew, no fire, too. Owens-Corning Fiberglas, Decorative Fabrics, New York 22, N. Y.

CAMEO'S "no-ironing" wonders at smartest stores everywhere.

OWENS-CORNING

FIBERGLAS

Your hair is romance...

keep it sunshine bright with White Rain

You know it's true—the most delightful beauty asset you can have is lovely hair. Hair that's bright to see, soft to touch, as fresh as a playful spring breeze—the kind of hair you have when you use the new lotion shampoo that gives you results like softest rain water. For White Rain sprinkles your hair with dancing sunlight. And with sunshine all around you—love and laughter follow after. Love and laughter . . . the essence of romance.

Use New White Rain Shampoo tonight and tomorrow your hair will be sunshine bright!

FABULOUS LOTION SHAMPOO BY TONI

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 8

Family. We usually write them in English first, then translate them into Hindi and try them out on the villagers. If the village women respond to this one, we will print it after our artist illustrates it.

We are now writing another book on We, the Government, showing what the vote of one man and one woman can do. For, as you know, all men and women who are twenty-one years old and over may vote in India—and 84 per cent of them cannot read or write.

Remember all that you give will be put to work at once, and will help all the communities of India, for Hindus, Muslims, Christians, Sikhs, all must learn to understand America.

Just now I dictated a letter to a woman in Iowa, suggesting that she follow your plan.

Cordially your colaborer for Christ,
FRANK C. LAUBACH

THE MAGAZINE WOMEN BELIEVE IN

Activated by busy Mrs. Brewster and Doctor Laubach's JOURNAL letter, Wisconsin interfaith women began more than a year ago to collect approved magazines and 10c shipping donations. JOURNALS FOR INDIA, with government help, has now delivered many tons, accumulated funds to help print World Literacy's Hindi books. Mrs. Brewster's minor headache—women won't give up their JOURNALS.

Miss Pacifier, 1954

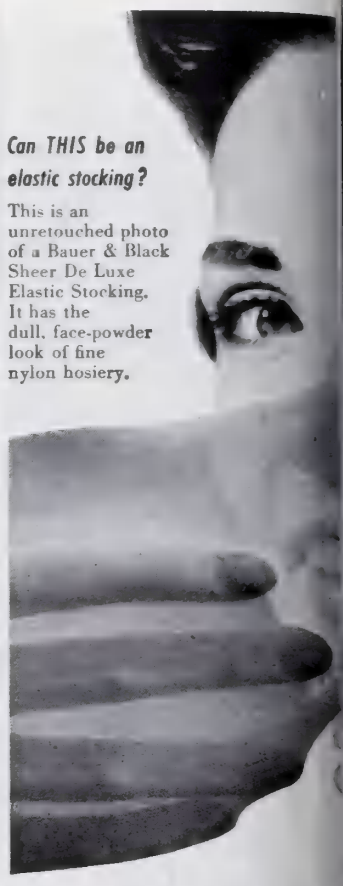
Paris, Kentucky

Dear Dr. Spock: After reading your article on pacifiers in the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, I decided to drop you a note to tell you of my success. Rebecca had the colic and I think the pacifier helped her immensely. She is now six months old, and still uses it, but not as much as she did.

Sincerely,
MRS. LARRY BRANNON

Back in style.

In Praise of Husbands



Hudson, New Hampshire

Dear Sirs: I work daily with women from many walks of life and I sometimes wish I could hear more praise and love spoken for the "man of the house." I'm very sure that he would value it, don't you agree? All your How America Lives articles, too, deal with women's efficiency. In our family I find that my husband is by far the more efficient and I wonder if any other women feel this way.

My husband is a very happy combination of carpenter, electrician, plumber, cabinetmaker, homemaking partner, cook and, last but not least, father.

When I think of all he does, I know I just couldn't get by without him. If it sounds as if I'm bragging, well, so I am. I just wish the world knew what a wonderful husband, father of my children, manager of our home I'm married to. Since you're my favorite women's magazine, you're elected to hear instead.

Sincerely,
CONNIE STINCHFIELD

Can THIS be an elastic stocking?

This is an unretouched photo of a Bauer & Black Sheer De Luxe Elastic Stocking. It has the dull, face-powder look of fine nylon hosiery.

who'd have believ

elastic stockings

could look so she

Now you can keep VARICOSE VEINS because Bauer & Black nylons look like fine hosiery on your leg

Now, no one but your doctor wi you wear elastic stockings.

New Bauer & Black nylons sheer, you can wear them witho hose. Still, veins won't show t They're fashioned to fit smoothly and instep.

And, because they're fashione assure the kind of support doct ommend. Open toes to prevent Easy to wash. Quick drying. Light a

Any wonder that more wome Bauer & Black elastic stockings t other brand?

BAUER & BLACK
Nylon or Cotton Elastic Stockings

send for free booklet

BAUER & BLACK, DEPT. LH-11, 309 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago 6, Ill.

Please send me your new free booklet about veins, "Comfort, Relief and New Leg Beauty."

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ Zone____ State____

HERE IS THE FINEST flatware of its kind made by silversmiths with a 130-year tradition of superb craftsmanship behind them . . . stainless steel that meets the exacting standards of the costliest tableware.

Like all International Stainless, TODAY requires no pampering or polishing. Its lustrous velvet finish is scratch-resistant and needs no special care in normal use.

Ask your silverware dealer to show you this lovely new International Stainless pattern. In its rich weight and perfect balance; in the round, deep spoon bowls; in the hollow-handle knives with forged steel blades, you'll find modern beauty and functional design at its best. The price of a 5-piece place setting is $8.00.

Special Introductory Offer

A 16-piece Starter Set for just $19.95 (4 knives, 4 forks, 4 teaspoons, 4 salad forks or dessert spoons). Ordinarily these 16 open-stock pieces in the TODAY pattern sell for $26.34. So you save $6.39 in buying this combination. The Starter Set is attractively boxed, and will make a lovely gift. But see it now—this introductory price is for a limited time only.

For the name of your nearest dealer, write International Stainless, 169 Colony St., Meriden, Conn.

Lenox "RHODORA" lovely for a lifetime, so wise for now

Even for casual entertaining, you will create this gracious atmosphere of tea-time at an Embassy . . . if your china is magnificent Lenox . . . if it's Rhodora! Lenox produces only one quality of china . . . whether it is made for United States Embassies around the world or for your table.

Brides are so wise to start with Lenox. Because this famous china has lifetime quality, it withstands daily usage and outlasts any "compromise china." Lenox is easy to acquire by piece or place setting; most stores extend convenient budget payment service.

It pays to start with the finest, with lovely Lenox . . . you'll enjoy it all your lifetime.

"RHODORA" delightful, timeless pattern. Gold is 24 kt. 5 pc. setting (dinner, salad, butter plates; cup, saucer) $23.95. Do see the wide selection of distinguished Lenox in leading stores.

• • •

For pattern-price leaflets in color, the informative "Reference Book of Fine China," plus name of your dealer, send 25¢ to: Lenox Inc., Dept. L-65, Trenton, N. J.

Lenox China

WORLD'S FINEST...FOR LIFETIME ENJOYMENT

Executive Editor, Mary Bass

Managing Editor: Laura Lou Brookman

Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kiefty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Dawn Crowell Norman, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary, Barbara Benson, Glenn Matthew White, Donald Stuart, Ruth Imler, Tina S. Fredericks, Helen Everitt, Peter Briggs

Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Margaret Hickey, Betty Kidd, Ruth Mills Teague

Editorial Associates: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Shapley Matthews, Alice Conkling, Joseph Di Pietro, Anne Einselen, Elizabeth Goetsch, Nancy Crawford, Cynthia McAdoo Wheatland, Rosemary Jones, Nelle Keys Perry, Adrina Kayaian

Assistant Editors: Victoria Harris, Alice Kastberg, Virginia Price, Dorothy Anne Robinson, Jean Todd Freeman, Elizabeth McFarland, Eileen Sharpe, Albert Serwazi, Dolores Knapp

Editorial Assistants: Lee Stowell Cullen, Patricia Martin, Aileen Dowd, June Schwartz, Gretchen Wehler, Babette Brimberg, Joyce Posson, Nancy Terry, Flora Casparian, Betty Jo Ramsey, Constance Holland, Helen Schofield Lukacs, Alberte Wright, Simone Smith, Betty Coe Spicer, Carol Mercado, Elizabeth Hart, Hazel Owen, Mary Margaret Conte, Ann C. Smith

Because a growing group of young graphic artists has helped to make the past ten years the most exciting decade in the history of printmaking, New York's Museum of Modern Art has assembled an exhibit, Young American Printmakers, now touring museums throughout the country.

Toledo-born artist William A. Smith, whose lithograph Calcutta No. 2 was featured in the exhibition, has been a world traveler with sketchbook. In China with OSS, he sketched vigorously; later visited India, where he was struck by the anonymity of its robed figures. Here, in a street scene, he captures a haunting mood of mother and child huddled in shadow but lit with an artist's skill and compassion.

From whom all blessings flow

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

THE religious significance of Thanksgiving Day has faded for many Americans along with the sense of the wonder and miracle of life, which seems to grow dimmer the farther one is removed from Nature. It was not until this past summer, when a family born and reared in New York City spent a fortnight's holiday on our Vermont farm, that I fully realized how remote from the sources of life millions of our people are—that there are children who have never seen a cow, or watched the hay for its winter fodder go into a barn, and grownups who have never picked a flower, observed vegetables of every variety go into a house by the bushel to be frozen or canned, watched a boy walking down from the henhouse with a basket of eggs and realized that eggs do not originate in boxes on grocery counters.

The division of labor which has so greatly added to general prosperity has something to do, I think, with the decadence of gratitude, of which virtue Thanksgiving is the festival. One certainly has a stronger sense of gratitude for food that has been grown, raised and packaged on land conditioned and worked by one's own household, against the hazards of weather and the unavoidable disciplines imposed by Nature, than one does for that which involves no greater effort than a trip to the market. Almost everyone labors for his food and that of his family, but most people do so by exchanging the labor of factory or office for the labor of others in the fields. The one fears he may lose his job; the other, that he may lose his crop. The security of the one depends upon factors actually or theoretically within human control: upon the way the economy is organized, upon the responsibilities assumed by the state, upon the stability of outlets for production. These factors affect the landsman, too, and increasingly, but beyond them are others outside human control, since man cannot command the rain to fall or the sun to shine according to his whim or desire. Science has taught him how to condition the soil to higher production, and how to protect his animals against disease, but only up to a certain point. He may, by proper labor and concern, make two blades of grass—or a thousand—grow where one grew before, only to lose it all by a month of daily rains at the moment when it should be cut, or see it desiccated by uninterrupted drought. This accounts for the fact that the totalitarian "planned economies" have invariably failed at organizing agriculture. The countryman thanks God and not the state for a beautiful day, an abundant crop, a healthy and prolific herd or flock. Even though he may never set foot in a church, even if he would deny having any "religion" at all, he knows that over and beyond his own efforts and those of his fellow workers he owes his well-being or his misery to something not humanly created or controlled, to an order of things as wondrous and mysterious as his own birth and death. He may thank the Creator or curse Him, but he knows, at least, that the latter is futile, for he is nevertheless in God's hands.

If the sense of gratitude is diminishing as I believe it to be, virtue is diminished thereby. Cicero called a thankful heart not only the greatest virtue but the parent of all the other virtues. I challenged that when first I read it, thinking courage the chief of the virtues and their parent, but later reflected that gratitude is ever the banisher of discouragement, remembering also that Shakespeare has Viola say in Twelfth Night—expressing, one believes, his own conviction:

"I hate ingratitude more in a man
Than lying, vainness, babbling drunkenness
Or any taint of vice. . . ."

But toward what and for what do we feel gratitude?

We are taught that we should be grateful for benefactions bestowed upon us by others, for the sacrifices in our behalf of our parents or friends, and for those things that set us apart from others as more successful than they.

Yet in all these gratitudes there is some trace of impurity. If benefits are bestowed upon us, may not the generosity of the giver be corrupted by the anticipation of equal or greater favors in return? Or does not the gratitude tendered often express, as La Rochefoucauld cynically said, "a secret desire of receiving greater benefits in the future"? If our parents deprive themselves of every pleasure, or even of CONTINUED ON PAGE 14

Frozen Fruit and Angel Food Cake

You get an especially high, light and luscious cake with our new Betty Crocker Angel Food Cake Mix. Just the cake to serve with frozen raspberries, blueberries, strawberries, peaches—and ice cream or whipped cream.

Canned Fruit and Ginger Bread

This pretty shortcake is easy as easy. Just Betty Crocker Ginger Bread Mix—with whipped cream and well-drained, canned fruit cocktail. Ginger Bread tastes fine with other canned fruits, too—peaches, pears, pineapple or fresh fruits like bananas.

"Cake 'n Fruit

says Betty Crocker

"for the Fourth Meal!"

"Hello, there. Want some entertaining i That's what we call these easy things to for the Fourth Meal, when the folks drop somebody's hungry along toward the end evening. Easy as easy—with one of my Crocker Cake Mixes and your favorite fr

I hope you stock up regularly on all seven Crocker Cake Mix flavors. They bake light-textured, good-to-have-on-hand cakes, folks often even bother to ice them. They just serve them with any of fruit—fresh, frozen, canned or dried. Or with milk or or ice cream or anything you like with cake. Start wit entertaining ideas on this page—but don't stop here. It to think up new ways to serve cake—now that you can a perfect cake so long as there are Betty Crocker Cake in your cupboard. Do try them all!"

Betty Cro
OF GENERAL MI

Now Being Sold in Canada

Dried Fruit and Honey Spice Cake

This shortcake is easy—and inexpensive. Just melt butter and brown sugar in the bottom of your baking pan. Arrange cooked dried apricots and prunes in a pretty pattern. Pour in a batter made with Betty Crocker Honey Spice Cake Mix (easy directions on the package). Bake in an oblong pan, 13" x 9½" x 2".

…sh Fruit and Cake Fingers Try this for your next party—a tray of fresh fruit surrounded by dainty finger-length slices of assorted cake-mix cakes.

Betty Crocker says: "I guarantee

…perfect* cake every time you bake

…ke…after cake…

after cake!"

…ERFECT? Yes, I DO mean per-…t. You be the judge. If a cake you …ke with a Betty Crocker Cake Mix …ess than perfect, mail the box top … Betty Crocker, Box 200, Minne-…olis, Minn., and General Mills will …d your money back!

NEW

make ready-to-use starch INSTANTLY for 1¢ a quart

(medium starch solution)

Discover the ease... the economy of NIAGARA instant laundry starch

The woman who switches to Niagara is a very special sort of woman... strictly a 1954 model! She likes the new ways, the quick ways, the easy ways to do things. And she's an expert on getting more for her money.

When you buy Niagara you are not paying for water. You do not have to carry home heavy bottles. You just swish Niagara Starch in cold water...it's ready to use...instantly!

And Niagara is the only starch that dissolves instantly in cold water... and STAYS DISSOLVED. It is pre-cooked, gives you perfect results ...no white streaks or spots, even on dark cottons. Next time... NIAGARA for you.

Just swish NIAGARA in cold water... it's ready!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 11

necessities, for our welfare, do they not put us under obligations that burden us with a feeling of guilt, or with fear that repaying them will be beyond our capacities? Or are not these sacrifices something of the nature of an investment? If we have more worldly success than others, does not pride and self-satisfaction enter into our emotions, with the mental comment, "After all, I have earned it"?

It seems to me that the purest gratitude is felt for what one has had no part in earning; or responds to a debt impossible to repay except to life and society in general; or pours out to benefactors who have no personal interest in their beneficiaries. Pure gratitude is thankfulness for what we get free, regardless of our deserts. The unthankful heart is the one that takes such gifts for granted; who never applies the words of the old hymn:

> "Count your blessings,
> Name them one by one,
> And it will surprise you
> What the Lord hath done"— and is seldom, in fact, surprised.

Health, for instance, is, in general, something one is, or is not, born with. Those who enjoy it are not always or necessarily indebted even to their parents, but to the circumstantial combination of chromosomes inherited from many ancestors. Last summer, to speak personally, I celebrated my sixtieth birthday and the birth of my first grandchild, John Paul Sinclair Lewis. In looking back over my life I count as its primary blessing the fact that but for one serious illness I have always been well; that though an inveterate reader I have never had to wear glasses; that I sleep soundly, do not tire easily, and can still swim the half mile across the little lake in Barnard, Vermont. What have I done to deserve sixty years of the unabated energy and pleasure in existence usually associated with youth? Absolutely nothing. I fervently thank God for it; and if I could pick one particular blessing to be bestowed upon my tiny grandson, it would be that one.

The only way to regenerate the world is to do the thing which lies nearest us, and not hunt after grand, far-fetched ones for ourselves.

—CHARLES KINGSLEY
Letters and Memories

A country-bred child, I cannot remember when the wonders and beauties of Nature did not fill me with ecstatic joy: the splendid silent stars; the great and various trees—the violet trunk of the beech, the slim and shining elegance of the birch, the motherly protective maple, the apple dressed in spring as for a confirmation and bowed with fruited splendor in the fall; the stream singing out from the dark woods with their carpets of arbutus, ground pine and a hundred forms of fern, ever lively with scampering feet and birds' cries.

What did I do to deserve this loveliness? Nothing at all. And whom shall I thank for it? Thank God.

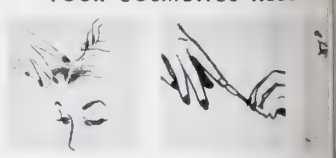
The beauty and magic of art! Beethoven, Bach and Mozart did not compose for me; the great masters of painting never heard of me, nor cared; Shakespeare did not sing his lyrics nor write his sonnets for my ears, yet all are mine, along with access to the wisdom of two thousand years, and the company of wits whom no salon can assemble, all for the mere effort of opening the pages of a book that I can obtain in any public library. My gratitude pours out to these, whom I can only repay by helping to keep their memory green for the benefit of others.

Is poverty a curse? I say a modest poverty is a blessing. Not grinding poverty nor squalid poverty, but the limited means that require one to do things for oneself, to curb

CONTINUED ON PAGE 16

"You sure a head st with Q-Ti

Is that little "loudspeaker" your nursery getting all the s safety it is possible to get? The one way to make sure beyor shadow of a doubt. Buy 'Q-T rely on 'Q-Tips' and nothing



More doctors and mot have used 'Q-Tips'

... more babies have cared for by 'Q-Tips'

... than all other cotto swabs combined!

- sterilized by the best hospit
- swabs can't loosen or leave l
- "silkenized" super-refined co
- trusted over a quarter of a c

YOUR COSMETICS NEED 'Q-

Apply your make-up as profess als do — with 'Q-Tips'. It's the neat, easy way to bleach tiny hairs, erase smudges, swab nail preparations on or off.

Q-TIPS

Also availab

Q-TIPS ®... Made by Q-Tips Inc., Long Isl Toronto, Canada • Paris, Fr

The new 1955 Kelvinator Automatic Washer gives you two separate automatic washing cycles: "FINE FABRICS" so you can wash dresses like this beautiful nylon matte jersey, safely and confidently . . . and "REGULAR FABRICS" for washing heavy loads like denim work overalls, without watching or working. And it's impossible to make a mistake. Kelvinator's exclusive "Tel-a-Fabric" signal lights show you the washing cycle selected.

y! A brilliant New Washer that's totally automatic...with Two complete a hing cycles: 1. for heavy washes, 2. for fine fabrics and smaller loads.

The New 1955 Kelvinator

by JOAN ADAMS
Kelvinator Institute for Better Living

We of the Kelvinator Institute would like you to see a new and better way, a totally automatic way to get clothes sparkling white, sparkling bright. For the l new 1955 Kelvinator brings you, not automatic cycle, like ordinary washers, completely separate automatic cycles.

It's like having two entirely separate Automatic Washers

e dial to "regular fabrics" and you set the shing cycle for your heavily-soiled laun- rn the dial to the "fine fabrics" setting have another completely automatic short cycle for your sheer dresses, nylons, nd frilly things . . . and for smaller mid- ds. This new cycle saves you almost half and water you use for the regular cycle.

We'd like you to see Kelvinator's exclusive Shampoo Washing. It begins with a half-tub of water and the full amount of soap or detergent, washing away most stubborn dirt and grime; see X-Centric Agitation, the new and different kind of agitator action, one continuous vibrating motion that's far gentler, completely safe for all your clothes. We'd like you to see Overflow Rinsing float dirt off over the top of clothes, not down through them; see gentle spin-drying remove 25% more water than the most efficient wringer.

See Kelvinator's beautiful new, matching 1955 Automatic Dryer

It frees you from the weather, from lifting, hauling, and hanging up clothes. It's the only one with all three safety features of safe temperature, safe cylinder, safety door. See this new 1955 laundry team at your Kelvinator Dealer's now.

Now—two separate automatic cycles on one dial give you totally automatic washing of all your clothes . . . new savings in time, soap and water. Kelvinator's exclusive "Tel-a-Fabric" signal lights show washing cycle selected. Back panel on both washer and dryer has full-length fluorescent light for easier sorting of clothes. Write for the new free Institute booklet, Wonder Ways With A Wonder Laundry, Kelvinator, Dept. X, Box 302, Detroit 32, Michigan.

'Sanforlan' Wools Wash!

Wools labeled "Sanforlan"
won't shrink out of fit...stay soft as new

Now, even wool dresses wash—when they're labeled "Sanforlan." Buy them ready made, or make them of "Sanforlan"-labeled yard goods.

Sweaters, wool jersey blouses wash like a breeze without blocking—socks need no stretchers—when they're labeled "Sanforlan."

Look for children's woolens that wash easily—baby things that never shrink, get hard or matted—because they're labeled "Sanforlan."

Wool robes, slacks, skirts, shirts, jackets come out of soap and water the same size they went in when they're labeled "Sanforlan."

BROUGHT TO YOU BY THE "SANFORIZED" PEOPLE

Sanforlan®

Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc. permits use of its trade-mark "Sanforlan" only on woolen fabrics or garments which have been treated by procedures approved by this company and which meet its rigid requirements. When washed in accordance with recommended procedures for wool garments bearing the trade-mark "Sanforlan" will not mat, felt, or shrink out of fit.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 14

desire for luxury, to use one's hands and wits and fully employ such gifts as one has. I thank God I was not born rich, and am not afraid to end my days in the very modest circumstances in which I began them.

Is love ever deserved? This extraordinary predilection of one person for another, a woman for a man, a man for a woman, and both for a child? And friendship? Who can repay the confidence, understanding and fidelity of his friends except by friendship? The coins of pure gratitude are not minted, yet they perpetually return to their donors and pass to others. They are in constant circulation. And who can be happy who is not grateful?

"Thanksgiving" is the great American harvest festival, and although as such it is by no means unique to America, and is, indeed, of origins dating back to remote antiquity, no other modern state designates a specific legal holiday on which to give thanks to God for benefits received, observe family reunion, and eat a larger-than-usual midday dinner composed of a traditional menu.

The American festival dates back to the original settlers of New England, who set apart a day for thanksgiving immediately after their first harvest in 1621. President Washington established Thanksgiving Day in 1789, following a practice already set by the Continental Congress, and every President since—and since 1858 the governors of all the states—have similarly proclaimed it.

One may well imagine that the men and women who arrived in Plymouth after a long, wretched and hazardous journey, to build rude cabins for shelter and win their sustenance from land cleared in a wilderness and inhabited by savages, had reason to be grateful for mere survival. The inscription on the Plymouth Rock monument tells us that they buried their dead in common graves that the Indians should not know how many of them had perished. Since they were God-fearing people whose perilous adventure had been sparked by the passion for religious liberty, the survivors discerned the hand of God in the harvest that assured that they would not starve during the icebound winter, and thus gave thanks to the Creator of Nature, Father of Mankind, and special protector of those who place their faith in Him.

Let us then give thanks: for all our unearned increments—for the earth under our feet, the stars over our heads, and our vast and fertile homeland; for love and friendship, for beauty, for the great store of riches created for us by others; and for the miracle of life itself, praising the sublime Creator from Whom all blessings flow. END

STORMY NIGHT

By FLORENCE B. JACOBS

The wild gale rose; black rivers poured on misty glass, and pine Boughs twisted off like orchard grass took down the power line.

We got the lamps out. Yellow light lay soft as primrose bloom Across the kitchen, spread its pools half through the sitting room.

Each corner rounded in with dusk,
dressers loomed twice as tall,
And once again my childhood walked in shadows on the wall!

Relieve the PRESSURE o
Rheumatic Pa

● Doctors generally will tel rheumatic pain may be la caused by pressure. Sensitive are irritated. Local areas be tender and swollen.

Now get blessed relief—fas rubbing Absorbine Jr. on the swollen areas. It actually counteract pressure which ma causing your misery. It qu warms, soothes throbbing pain Get Absorbine Jr. today at favorite drug counter.

W. F. Young, Inc., Springfield, Ma

ABSORBINE

WIDE SHO
Beautiful Shoes With Arch
C TO EEE • 4 TO 11
Spectator 7.85
Black or Brown Suede with Alligator trim
FREE
Write FREE
MONEY BACK GUARANTEE!
MAIL ORDERS RUSHED
Postage Paid on Prepaid Orders WIDE Foote
Dept. L-11 S. 8th St., P

Turknit®
Baby Goods
Shower Gifts

Bibs
Towels
Wash Cl
Bath Rob
Bath Bla

PUTNAM KNITTING CO., BOX L, COHO

Miracle Cushio
Holds False Te Tight and Firm
Eases
Sore Gums

Snug Denture Cushions are a triumph of science, a sensational new plastic relining that gets rid of the annoyance and irritation badly fitting false teeth. Snug eases sore, gums due to loose fitting dentures. Appl few minutes, makes the wobbliest pla firmly in place—gives perfect comfort. E on-the-cob, steaks, apples—talk, laugh please—plates "stay put," firmly, solidly. H to gums or dentures.

Snug re-liners can last from 2 to 6 Stays soft and pliable—does not harden a plate. Peels right out when replacement is No daily bother with adhesives. Get Snug Cushions at your druggist today! 2 liners per or lower plates $1.50. Money back if isfied. If your druggist cannot supply yo $1.50 check or money order to Midland Ph Co., Dept. 7, 76 Ninth Ave., New York 1

MADE BY SWIFT

so you can feed your dog as well
as you feed your family

PARD HAS THE

ood Beef Taste

DOGS LOVE!

can. Then watch! You can tell by its aroma and meaty-—and your dog's tongue quickly tells him—Pard has the e of beef that all dogs love! • And Pard has so many t are good for your dog, too! • Protein-rich beef variety d nourishing beef fat. Vitamins, minerals, every kind of ntial to a dog's health and well-being. • It takes men who t, it takes Swift, to make a dog food as good as Pard!

SWIFT & COMPANY

NUTRITION IS OUR BUSINESS

FACTS ABOUT PARD YOU SHOULD KNOW:

* There's as much nourishment in one can as there is in a human dinner of roast beef, mashed potatoes and green beans.
* Pard is a complete dinner. 11 generations of completely healthy dogs have been raised on Pard and water alone.
* Pard is extra-rich in beef protein, beef fat, vitamins and minerals–everything dogs love and need. It contains no "fillers."

Here's the fruit juice that gives you something extra!

Bright, delightful, good-tasting Sunsweet is the only prune juice that is uniform in laxative strength. Because only Sunsweet knows how to measure and control the mild laxative factor that nature provides in prunes.

And . . . Sunsweet is never diluted with non-laxative sweetening agents.

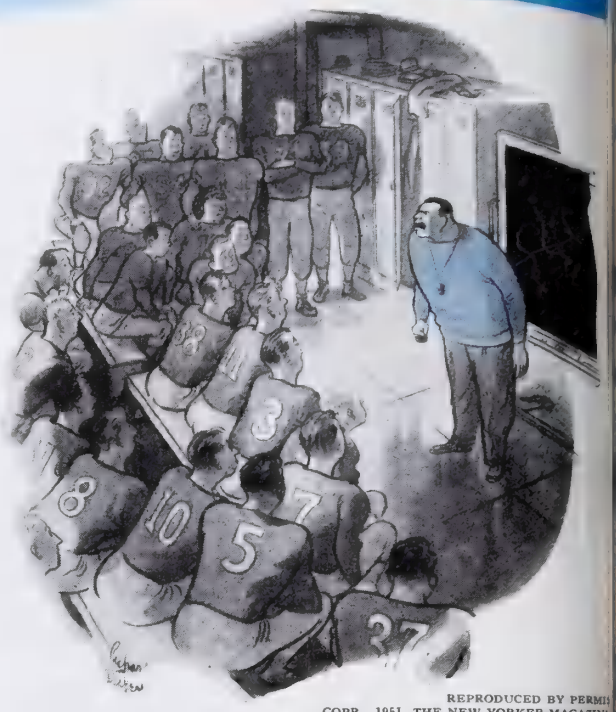
In addition, Sunsweet Prune Juice is the only fruit juice that brings you all the important minerals, especially blood-building iron and bone-building calcium!



Because Sunsweet Prune Juice gives you more for your money, it's your best buy! Try it today!

SUNSWEET PRUNE JUICE

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

REPRODUCED BY PERMI
COPR., 1951, THE NEW YORKER MAGAZIN

"The student body's counting on you, the alumni's count ing on you, I'm counting on you, and tomorrow I wan you to go into that examination room and pass!"

WE don't do anything publicly about getting a husband in this country, but they do in Paris. On St. Catherine's Day, which is November 25, all the seamstresses over twenty-five and unmarried (which constitutes spinsterhood in France) put on their fanciest hats and parade the streets of Paris while the men look on. Sometimes they surround a man and kiss him, but whether or not this lands any of them at the altar is not on record.

In this country November is the man's month, the month of football, of Saturday-afternoon heroes, and not only heroes but subs and scrubs and bench warmers—the ones who can only wait and pray. In SAY IT AIN'T SO!, a book of sports anecdotes that came out last year, Mac Davis tells about Knute Rockne, who used to sharpen up his football players with questions a cated as a math quiz. One aft shouted, "Our ball, third quart down, two yards to go at midfi would you do?" pointing strai third-string quarterback. "M the startled lad. "I'd just slide bench to get a better look a play!"

■

If you're thinking about n on this Election Day, on th that a single vote is not impo me tell you what I read (Science Monitor, I think). Jefferson was elected Preside vote in the electoral college. Quincy Adams. Also Ruth Hayes. Hayes' election was and referred to a congressi toral commission. There h

CONTINUED ON PAGE

COLLIER'S

"Wouldn't it be better, dear, if we could get a picture of someone else voting for you?"

Ross tells you why ream is a joy
cook with, too!

FOR ream Sauce

, best way yet to make sic sauce perfectly—t a single lump!

FOR
ooth Gravy

mps ever—and so lus-
—when you follow the us, easy Pream recipe!

OR mier Soup

her flavor, add 3 or 4 oons of Pream to your e canned soup.

New easy, thrifty way to "cream" your coffee!

PREAM

THE DELICIOUS 100% DAIRY PRODUCT IN POWDERED FORM

Not a substitute! Pream is a true dairy product—made entirely from fresh, sweet cream and other milk products—powdered for convenience. Nothing added!

Never sours! Never "turns"! Keeps indefinitely while sealed. When opened for regular use, it stays fresh tasting to the last spoonful on kitchen shelf or in your refrigerator!

So economical! Pream costs about ⅓ less per serving than coffee cream!

Less calories! When you Pream your coffee, every cup contains only about half as many calories as if you used coffee cream.

Instant dissolving! Just put a spoonful of Pream on top of your cup of hot coffee or tea. Stir . . . and enjoy! Get Pream today!

The new way to "cream" it is to Pream® it!

SEND FOR FREE RECIPE FOLDER

Simple, fast Pream ways to make these three standbys more luscious—plus dozens of other work-saving Pream cooking ideas—are yours in the exciting new Pream Recipe Folder! Just fill in and mail this coupon, now!

To: Sally Ross, Pream Test Kitchen
Box 959-B, Columbus 16, Ohio

Please send me FREE Pream Recipe Folder.

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ Zone_____

State_____

Pream is available also in the Dominion of Canada, Alaska, and Hawaii.

©1954, M & R Dietetic Laboratories, Inc., Columbus 16, Ohio

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 18

one vote. The man who cast that deciding vote for President Hayes was a congressman from Indiana, a lawyer who was elected to Congress by a margin of just one vote; and that one vote was cast by a client of his who, though desperately ill, insisted upon being taken to the polls. By just one vote California entered the nation as a state; also by one vote, Idaho, Oregon, Texas and Washington.

Speaking of politics, Justice William O. Douglas has concocted a fine book, AN ALMANAC OF LIBERTY, made up of brief essays, one for every day in the year, in which he comments on matters political, religious, social and historical.

On November 11, 1647, for instance, Massachusetts provided that every town having 100 or more families or households should have a grammar school supported by the taxpayers. This was the start of our public-school system, and the idea of an educational system, universal, free and available to all the people, rich and poor alike, was revolutionary. No other nation ever had such an institution. And three centuries later, Justice Douglas adds, it is a stranger still to the bulk of the people of the world.

•

Pearl Buck fans will be pleased to know that she has a new book out: MY SEVERAL WORLDS, about her childhood in the missionary home in China, about her married life in a northern Chinese village, about life in America after trouble began to brew in China, about writing and about her garden.

Mary Ellen Chase* has also written autobiographically. THE WHITE GATE, one section of which came out in the JOURNAL (Old-Time Christmases in Maine—December, 1937), is about her childhood in Maine. Good New England stuff.

The Chases, though well-to-do people for those days and those parts, seldom had the doctor. On the arrival of a new baby, however, the doctor was sure to be called. Cash outlay for a new life was never questioned, says Miss Chase, since it was inevitable. Her father paid the doctor $5 for each child, which, with two follow-up visits to her mother and the baby at $1.50 each, made the purely monetary cost of her sisters, her brother and herself, she reckons, $8 per child.

■

The JOURNAL's own Richard Pratt has now produced THE SECOND TREASURY OF EARLY AMERICAN HOMES. It is just as fine as the first Treasury, which sold over 250,000 copies, the greater number of which, I have heard, were bought by men. Is it the house builder in every man, or the historian?

•

Children's Book Week, coming up this month, is one of the worthiest of the national "weeks." Its aim is to show parents and teachers the best of the year's output in children's books. This year there will be big spectacular book fairs in Chicago, Washington, Cleveland, Little Rock and San Antonio, with 1000 to 3000 books on exhibition. Next month, with Christmas in mind, I hope to list the pick of the lot. . . . It is salutary for us all to know about these books, to offset the you-know-what-kind of books that are overwhelming our children, and the you-know-what-kind of program that comes all too often over the air.

•

I am right now reading a top-notch detective story: THE BLACK MOUNTAIN, by Rex Stout, with Nero Wolfe and Archie Goodwin and an international plot. I can't wait to get back to it! END

How you can keep your skin dewy-smooth, with non-stop softening action of Tussy Moisture Cream

If you could cry because your skin looks dry ging, use this remarkable anti-dry, anti-age
You see, it has a continuous softening action.
one creaming a day with Tussy Moisture is almost like having a fresh facial every

Why is it so different from the cream you're bly using now?

Largely because it contains "Humidine," with special beauty oils. Hour after hour, "Humidine" brings invisible, softening moisture the air, right to your skin!

Follow the arrows for beauty . . . over-night. At bedtime, stroke Moisture Cream up and from throat to forehead; and around your eyes. Now, tap fingertips gently all over your face. The cream sinks in, its moisturizing action and the oils make dry lines, crow's feet and frown lines . . . less and less conspicuous. Leave it on all night: you'll see that even crinkly neck skin is smoother, younger!

For dewy beauty all day, dab just a dot of Moisture Cream on forehead, nose, cheeks, chin and throat. Blend it in. You'll be amazed at how much smoother your make-up goes on, and how much longer it stays on.

Faithful users of Tussy Moisture Cream have creamed away "years" from their looks. You can, too. It's only $3.

Complete "BEAUTY DIET" for dry skin . . .
Follow this simple routine planned especially for dry skin.

Cleanse with Tussy Emulsified Cream, $1.25
Brace with Tussy Dry Skin Freshener, $1.00 Beautify with Tussy Moisture Cream, $3.00

prices plus tax

Here's how we made your Holiday dinner with

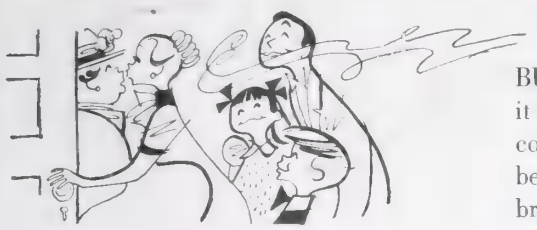
Butter-Baked Turkey

"It's snoopin'-good," says Debby, my little helper as she helps herself while I'm adding butter to the stuffing.

FIXING HOLIDAY DINNER can be fun, even with fourteen coming! YOU were coming . . . and so many more of our friends. The turkey must be perfect! I had boasted about butter-baking turkey. Now I had to prove what butter-baking could do. Debby was bouncing with excitement. "We're going to butter-bake-a-turkey! Butter-bake-a-turkey!" she sang while she pulled butter out of the refrigerator. "An' it's going to be goooooood!"

BUTTERY STUFFING—we made that first. We had three large loaves of four day old bread, with crust cut off, diced half-inch size and toasted. I had one-half cup onion all minced (didn't want Debby weeping over that) but I did let her swizzle it around in ½ cup melted butter in the skillet until the onion was soft and yellow. Then I added 1½ cups melted butter to the bread along with the cooked onion. Then ¼ teaspoon pepper, 1 teaspoon salt, 1½ teaspoons poultry seasoning, and the whole thing tossed together.

"How about bites?" Debby and I had to feed and fend off Junior while we stuffed, trussed and buttered the turkey.



"He's buttered all over," Debby cries ecstatically (and so is she) when I put the bird in the oven.

LACING AND TRUSSING our noble 24-pound bird was strictly my job, with a big hush-hush on the youngsters until I finished it. And then we patted soft butter all over the turkey, with extra dividends of butter for drumsticks, breast and wings. "Makes it taste good," said Debb, "an' . . . an' . . ." "Keeps the turkey from drying out . . . saves the juices," I told her.

BUTTERED ALL OVER, our turkey went onto the rack in our shallow roasting pan, breast up, proudly, and covered, top to toe, with cheese-cloth dipped in melted butter. I always bake my turkey slowly—never higher than 325°—sometimes 300°. Easy does it. I find that roasting slowly at low temperature helps to keep the turkey from shrinking, and makes it tender and juicy.

"Let me butter him this time," says Dad. "I like the drumsticks golden brown the way butter makes 'em!"

"Doesn't it smell good!" As we flew to the door to greet our guests the fragrance of butter-baked turkey preceded us.

BUTTER-BAKED—our turkey certainly was! Every half hour I'd pull it forward and Debby would brush melted butter onto the cheese-cloth covering it. And every half hour that buttery fragrance grew better and better! Of course, we peeked! And we just squealed over that golden-brown goodness. Now I could answer your ring at our doorbell with confidence. The turkey Debby and I butter-baked for you was perfect!

OUR HOLIDAY DINNER—Spiced Tomato Juice with Sour Cream Topping; Butter-Baked Turkey with Onion Stuffing; Pineapple Rings with Cheese Blossoms; Butter-Candied Sweet Potatoes; Minted Buttered Peas—Pimiento Corn; Old-Fashioned Cranberry Sauce; Celery Curls, Radish Roses, Olives; Hot Rolls with Butter Balls; Ice Cream with Holiday Fruit Sauce.

It takes 4 pints of cream to make each pound of butter! No wonder turkey and other holiday foods taste so much BETTER WITH BUTTER.

Homemaker service and research for the public supported by dairy farmers across the nation.

AMERICAN DAIRY ASSOCIATION

"Voice of the Dairy Farmer"

20 N. Wacker Drive ▪ Chicago 6, Illinois

HAPPIEST DRINK YOU'LL EVER FIND IS EASY-TO-SERVE

Pineapple Juice

NATURE'S MOST REFRESHING FLAVOR

CANNED TROPIC-FRE

Playtimes or mealtimes—whenever folks are thirsty—glasses of golden Pineapple Juice never fail to "hit the spot". Keep several cans chilling in your refrigerator so it's always ready to serve. And shake each can well before pouring so you enjoy all the glorious taste. In this wonderful juice, as in canned Pineapple fruit cuts, Nature stores her most refreshing flavor!

SLICES
of canned Pineapple mak fruit servings...glamorize main-course meat dishes.
taste wonderful broiled!

CRUSHED
canned Pineapple, good to is", also helps you make de pies, cookies, puddings, ici sundaes and sauces

CHUNKS
of canned Pineapple—bite are fine for fruit cups, to sa with lamb chops or a roast hors d'oeuvres, as cake dec (Pineapple TIDBITS are sma

PINEAPPLE GROWERS ASSOCIATION, S

ary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

Aladdin and Sister like the same chair.

e year draws in, the deli- light is brief, daybreak is splendor. Being troubled what Don's friend calls ," I got up and watched an . It was around four that I ng about in the bed worry- those things left undone ave been done. I went to heated milk, popped in a utter (never mind the cal- nd a grating of fresh pep- sipped the steaming brew color born in the deep sky. First the paling to sil- soft apricot, then the deep the sun came up, I went nd slept long past break- ybe, I thought, we should awn and go to bed at dusk! ber days in New England too, filled with muted col- with haze and lingering air is so full of peace—is mmer's work is over and t some strange quality in ho knows? But we tend to race afternoons, watching Irish rushing about; we hrough the valley at night, dly by the dark pond and ut the fish down under, t the hook.

ving has changed a great ne. The freezer purrs along keeping our harvest safe; er does the dishes while we lewood fire; the automatic s out the laundry ready to nd the electric incinerator l the rubbish; not to men- ers and coffee makers and —so many marvelous inf course, that equipment is as the service on it. Before Stillmeadow, we once had nge shipped from another duckling in and five hours out raw. Jill opined the ad been damaged in ship- led a serviceman. buy it from us?" she was

n fried meats and eggs for we got that range fixed— ugh, it only needed a new

So when we settled down at Stillmeadow we bought equipment we knew the dealer would stand back of!

Our freezer man, for instance, lives twenty-five miles away; the road can be awfully slippery on a snowy winter night, but he will come any time we call, bringing cartons for the precious freight in case the freezer takes too long to fix. The freezer is not the most glamorous model. But we have trust and confidence in it and that adds up!

Americans are wandering people; they move a lot. Most families carry their household belongings along with them as they move. When papa is transferred from Simsbury, Connecticut, to Deep Bend, Idaho, off go range, washer, drier, ironer, and all the rest of the magic appliances. It occurs to me a blanket guarantee of service in any location would be a fine thing.

And of course there just aren't enough good servicemen available. Everyone wants these aids to easy living. Fortunately, most of it wears like Gibraltar and seldom goes wrong, but occasionally it does, and then is when a trained first-aider is important.

Now Thanksgiving comes again, and it is time to count our blessings, and say our prayers that evil in the world may diminish. I love this holiday, for I like to sit down and just think of all the good we do have. Often we are so busy, we forget to count the blessings.

At Stillmeadow, as we gather around the trestle table, we rejoice in the grandchild asleep upstairs—who may wake up and yell any minute, of course, but there she is, alive, and plump and rosy and marvelous. We are thankful for the family's being together. I have special thanks for the good neighbors we have, and for George, who always turns up in time of trouble, and the boys at the market who say they will run out with anything if we get those awful colds this winter. No trouble at all.

Then I am thankful that we can go to church in America freely, read what we choose, speak our minds safely (although this freedom has been much menaced of late). We can vote according to our wishes. We have opportunity for education.

The children sit quietly while grace is said, but I note they lift knife and fork

Next time you break the seal on a crisp, new pack take a moment to think of all the fun...all the promise of excitement the little package holds!

BRIDGE

All-time strategy favorite of keen players. It's today's version of the "trump" games improved and refined by every generation since Henry VIII.

HEARTS

is an easy game to learn, with more opportunity for skill than most people realize. An excellent game for youngsters vs. oldsters.

CONCENTRATION

played with the pack spread out, face down. A game small fry excel at, and usually trounce their parents. Wonderful memory builder and rainy-day occupation!

CRIBBAGE

Favorite duel of wits for more than 300 years, combining luck and skill in absorbing entertainment. Think of it when you want a good game for two.

CANASTA

One of the most exciting of all the new Rummy games. Easy to learn, fun to play for hours. Samba and Bolivia are two interesting variations.

156 great card games old and new, in the 256-page "Official Rules of Card Games." Send 15¢ in coin with your name and address to Dept. L-2, The United States Playing Card Company, Cincinnati 12, Ohio. In Canada, send 25¢ in coin to International Playing Card Co., Windsor, Ont.

Every game's more pleasure with Congress Cards, the luxury, gem-colored packs whose edges flash like gold! Exclusive, satin-smooth Cel-u-tone Finish—supreme in deal and shuffle.

CONGRESS PLAYING CARDS

WHITE MAGIC
by HATHAWAY

Curtains of New Hathaway DACRON Marquisette are always the loveliest, truest white—never look dingy even at night.

They are a miracle of resistance to wrinkles, to sun and heat deterioration and stand up crisply to countless easy washings. Wrinkles will hang out, but just a whisper of ironing will bring these curtains to immediate perfection.

Woven by Hathaway, the leading weaver of fine sheer curtain fabrics, it is the finest DACRON marquisette you can find. Be sure to look for the HATHAWAY label.

CURTAINS OF HATHAWAY DACRON*
marquisette

*Du Pont's polyester fiber
Du Pont's acrylic fiber

FREE! ALL ABOUT CURTAINS
Hathaway Mfg. Co., Dept. L 114,
New Bedford, Mass.
Send for this free booklet of decorating ideas. Shows how to use standard curtains to achieve beautiful effects.
Name.....
Address.....
City.....State.....

in a trice as soon as it is over. They are, I reflect, just as hungry now as when they were little and all went out to romp in bunny suits after dinner was over!

I like to go down to the pond in late afternoon and sit on the one bench not yet put away for winter. The water is dark as polished ebony, it is tranquil. A few late leaves drift on it going nowhere. The little emerald frogs are gone, tucked away, I hope, safely dreaming of spring. Summer birds are away, winter birds not yet crowding the feeders.

The woods lie deep and still; my unicorn may be there yet, but I think it likely he seeks the Elysian fields with the golden fall of leaves in October.

When I walk back to the house, I stop in the Quiet Garden to pick a few leaves of ivy for the old brown sugar bowl. The thyme has a cinnamon color now, the apple mint is furred down close to the earth. The ivy leaves are bronzed here and there, the hue of antique coins.

Turkey soup simmers in the pot over the open fire. The children like it best of all, I think. It is a stout soup, for the dressing is in it, and the rich brown gravy, and plenty

The astonishing thing about the human being is not so much his intellect and bodily structure, profoundly mysterious as they are. The astonishing and least comprehensible thing about him is his range of vision, his gaze into the infinite distance, his lonely passion for ideas and ideals, far removed from his material surroundings and animal activities; for which he is willing to endure trials and privations, to sacrifice pleasures, to disdain griefs and frustrations; for which he will stand till he dies, in the profound conviction that if nothing be worth dying for, nothing is worth living for. —W. MACNEILE DIXON of turkey, too, and sometimes a few leftover tiny peas or carrots. Served in the big willow tureen, it sends forth such a savory goodness. Hot corn bread goes well with it, golden and crispy, and for dessert rosy apples and a dish of cheese. A slice of apple spread with Port Salut is a fine finish to Thanksgiving's goodness.
The Human Situation

I note that Holly has eaten a whole tomato out of hand, as it were, while I was watching the soup. She just reached up and helped herself and neatly munched it down to the very last seed. I decide that we must keep her in tomatoes; she must need the minerals or whatever that lurk in tomatoes.

When the fire burns low and the candles gutter, and the word-game board is put away, the dogs all go out for a last run, and then troop back in and settle for the night.

Jonquil likes the green chair, and it suits her tawny gold. Tiki tucks in on the red chair—and his black and white is fine with that, I reflect. Little Sister is snugged down on the bed in a neat, small ball. The big Red covers the long settee by the fire completely! The cats stay close to the warm hearthstones; it is never too hot for a cat.

As I snuff the candles and push the logs back in the great fireplace, I am glad that this house has room for dogs and cats. I wonder whether the first family who lived here in those long-gone days had room in the house for maybe a rabbit hound and a couple of calico cats.

The deep silver of the moonlight falls through the old bubbly windowpanes. The night is so still, peace walks in the meadows of our New England valley on this Thanksgiving night.

God's grace is on our land, let us be thankful. END

He's right, you know — and mighty important, too.

For Sanitized vans and equipment provide extra protection against germs, insects, mildew, mold and odors while in transit. Upholstered furniture, rugs, draperies, bedding and clothing are kept clean and safe in the United moving van . . . just as they would be in your own home.

This hygienic protection — Sanitized — is one more reason why discriminating people choose United moving service.

If you're planning to move, call your nearest United Van Lines' Agent. He will carefully "PRE-PLAN" every detail . . . free you of all work and worry . . . assure you a prompt, orderly move in a Sanitized van — at a cost no higher than ordinary moving service.

United Van Lines, Inc

PACKING CRATING STORAGE

More Than 450 Agents U. S. and Canada

Look Under "Movers" In Phone Book Nearest United Van Lines' Agent

How long since you've tasted real cheese?

Miss Wisconsin is real cheese. A glorious natural cheddar as real as Thanksgiving—and as enjoyable. The reason Miss Wisconsin tastes so good is this: it's made from cream-rich milk and it ages naturally and leisurely for as much as a year or more. No wonder it's so completely different from any quick-made process cheese!

ARMOUR STAR ®

Miss Wisconsin

tural CHEDDAR CHEESE

ALSO MISS WISCONSIN SHARP CLUB, SWISS, BRICK AND BLUE

Miss Wisconsin Natural Cheddar comes from the Wisconsin River Country folks who cut it into neat wedges: sharp-aged, medium-aged, or mild . . . just right for your apple pie tonight. For free recipes, write Marie Gifford, Dept. 203, Armour and Company, Chicago 9, Illinois.

Not just another "cosmetic" lotion ——

It's scientifically years ahead

Actuall

Amazing effects right away

Instant "corrective" softening —— not just superficial smoothing!

This new Angel Skin by Pond's has a formula scientifically years ahead—developed directly from new medically-important discoveries of how the skin works to heal and protect itself.

Based on this new knowledge, Angel Skin now brings never before relief for rough, red, dried hands. New Angel Skin actually heals chapping.

Doctors now explain that the skin is constantly rebuilding its softening protective cloak against normal "wear and tear." Trouble comes when skin is exposed to cold and wind—to harsh soaps and detergents. Then skin can't rebuild its vital substances quickly enough to prevent damage.

Scientists who developed Angel Skin have found a way to "match" these much-needed substances of the skin's protective cloak.

The secret of Angel Skin's quicker, deeper softening

When you smooth in Angel Skin, you are replacing —instantly—vital substances that the skin itself is working to rebuild! Skin may take hours—but Angel Skin acts instantly, the moment its rich goodness touches your hands. It—counteracts harsh alkali action of strong soaps and detergents—as no old-style lotion can!

relieves dry chapping from cold and exposure penetrates more quickly for deep, deep softening

For you who want to read more about this new scientific data on skin, full details are given in the box in the next column.

You feel its penetration! No sticky coating left on your hands!

So different from old-style lotions with gummy "thickener" that leave skin sticky-moist—new Angel Skin's rich goodness goes in to your skin at once.

Women report amazing improvement in their hands after using Angel Skin. They tell us—

"I haven't had red or cracked skin since I've been using Angel Skin."

"Most satisfactory! Nice fresh fragrance . . . leaves hands soft, soothed. No after-stickiness."

"Wonderful quality of healing my chapped hands —far better than my other lotion."

"The most effective hand lotion I've ever used—it really beautifies."

"Leaves the skin 'Angel' soft!"

Today—get fragrant, creamy-pink Angel Skin by Pond's. Keep a bottle on your dressin another, as many women do, in the k it's always within reach after you do di yourself how Angel Skin smooths, whit heals chapped skin. Only 89¢, 49¢, 2. (Slightly hig

Vital new facts about huma explain Angel Skin's quicker softening

The skin's "protective cloak" contains l fluids—moisture and oils (sebum)—wh tists now know, normally have a hig tration of hydrogen ions.*

Exposure to harsh soaps or deterge the concentration of hydrogen ions. chapping begin. Exposure to cold and out skin—is the other common cause o chapping.

Each condition aggravates the other

Angel Skin contains not only exclu softening lubricants; it also contains needed hydrogen ions in each drop—t replace instantly the skin's normal, hig tration of hydrogen ions.

This is why Angel Skin heals chapp old-style lotion can.

*Scientists use the term pH to indicate the degree of concentration. Angel Skin is the only leading hand pH rating allied to the pH rating of human skin. Sci this is one reason for Angel Skin's faster, deeper penetrat

Dried-out "detergent hands"—Angel Skin is specifically designed to meet the problem of today's strong detergents —it's the only leading lotion with this remarkable formula that neutralizes the harsh alkali action of detergents

No stickiness—put on gloves right away! Unlike old-style lotions, new Angel Skin has no gummy "thickener" that coats your hands. Angel Skin contains an ingredient that speeds penetration—its richness goes in to your skin at once

Roughened legs and heels—The healing ri Angel Skin by Pond's smooths dry, scratchy sk rough callouses that pull snags and runs in your Use new Angel Skin to keep your skin silky a eals chapping!

rotective cloak" damaged—vital substances lubricants destroyed by cold, exposure, the action of detergents. Your body can't rebuild lubricants fast enough—old-style lotions do the alkaline-correcting help needed

Angel Skin's corrective softening—designed to instantly replace vital substances needed in skin's protective cloak. Angel Skin's effective new formula is "medically-matched" to skin's own softening lubricants. This is why Angel Skin heals chapping

Angel Skin

by POND'S

Modern Space-saver Console in blond oak with 2 pull-out shelves. Requires little floor space, provides maximum storage room. Model #C-128. $69.95

Ask your Santa for one of these handsome new Lane chests

If you're a woman with storage problems or a girl with future plans . . .

you'll want to put a Lane Cedar Chest at the very top of your Christmas list.

As a beautiful piece of storage furniture, a Lane will keep blankets and woolen clothing fresh and fragrant—safe from moths and dust—as no other storage method can. What a step-saving convenience it is to have ample storage space right where it is needed!

As "the gift that gathers more gifts" a Lane is soon filled with fine trousseau linens and dainty lingerie—all the lovely things a girl collects for the home she'll be so proud of some day.

Drop a hint to your Santa—send him to your favorite furniture or department store where he'll find exactly the right Lane Chest for you. And you might mention this: Just one nice garment saved from moths can pay for a Lane!

Lane is the only pressure-tested, aroma-tight cedar chest. Made of ¾-inch red cedar in accordance with U.S. Government recommendations, with a free moth-protection guarantee, underwritten by one of the world's largest insurance companies, issued upon proper application. Helpful hints for storing are in each chest. The Lane Co., Inc., Dept. E, Altavista, Va. In Canada: Knechtels, Ltd., Hanover, Ont.

ALSO MAKERS OF LANE TABLES

LANE CEDAR CHESTS

Over 100 styles and finishes. Many at . . . $49.95* Eastern

$5.00 higher in the West due to higher freight costs—slightly higher in Canada.

LIVING ROOM

Unusual Modern Chest in blond oak. Deep drawer in base. Model #2852. $79.95*

FOYER

Handsome 18th-Century Chest in mahogany with self-lifting tray. Model #2601. $59.95*

LIVING ROOM

Space-Saver Chest. In blond oak. Opens at top, drawer in base. Model #3100. $59.95*

Modern Chest in Seafoam mahoga self-lifting tray. Model #3086. $69.9

LIVING ROOM

Distinctive Console in mahogany. Has two pull-out shelves. Model #C-123. $79.95*

BEDROOM

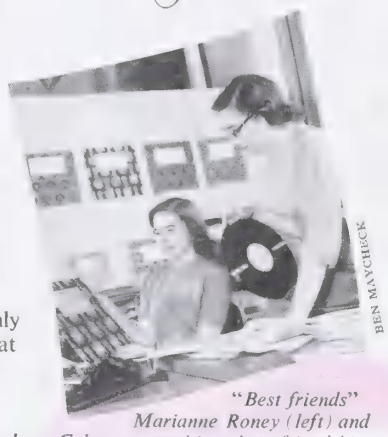
Blond Oak Chest with convenient self-lifting tray. Model #3081. $49.95*

LIVING ROOM

18th-Century Chest in mahogany. Full-length drawer in base. Model #2221. $79.95*

DINI

Stunning Lowboy. Blond oak, dra base. Model #2920. $79.95*



"And Everything Nice"

TANA HOBAN

When a girl meets a snip or a snail or a puppy-dog tail that's different—she needs all her sugar and all her spice and . . .

THESE two 1950 Hunter College graduates are the originators and sole personnel of Caedmon Publishers, which makes recordings of contemporary authors reading from their own works. (Laurence Olivier's reading of his tribute to the late King of England was their first record.) To keep costs down the girls do all the work: contact the authors, cut, wrap and mail the records—even design record covers.

"Sometimes we fight," Marianne admits, "but only because we're tired, or because we'd like to scream at some of our business contacts but think it safer to scream at each other. Each of us does what she has time to do. Everybody tells us that this is inefficient; but then, everybody told us that it was suicide to go into this business. They were wrong both times. Basically we get along because we like each other—and because our taste in men (unlike our taste in the arts) is different!" There's a not-everything-so-nice side to friendship too: the misunderstandings that arise when self-righteousness, possessiveness—or a boy—steps in. If you're overly critical of a noisy friend, for instance, without trying to help her ("Do you think we're attracting attention?") are you living in such a tiny way you can't make any mistakes? Or if a friend "isn't as friendly as she used to be," are you having new experiences too? And if a boy "comes between you" are you making lots of friends, a first step in becoming datable too?

BEN MAYCHECK

"Best friends"
Marianne Roney (left) and Barbara Cohen are making their friendship and a college idea pay off: they're creating a "third dimension in literature."

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER

hough at sixteen she "felt a teacher ust someone who knew more than I did," star Debbie Reynolds is now a No. 1 friend former studio teacher, Mrs. Lois Kelley.

OF life-loving Debbie, Mrs. Kelley says, "She was the kind of youngster who would yell for both teams to win." And Debbie's enthusiastic learning from Mrs. Kelley went far beyond the books—how to set a table, appreciate a painting, face a problem. Now retired, Mrs. Kelley's always on hand for advice or criticism when Debbie wants it.

If you're another Debbie—a girl who finds studying as easy as eating a sundae and as much fun—you may dread becoming a teacher's pet or a brain; if you're just a good average student, you may dread a subject or a teacher who seems to "pick" on you.

If a girl with a Debbie-type dilemma is loyal and friendly to her classmates, recognizing their abilities and success, she needn't ever hide her head; if a girl thinks she has a grievance with her teacher she must use hers. A head-to-head discussion at some prearranged time is for her. (Not before, during or immediately after a class.) Any teacher, busier than any traffic cop, always turns out to be very human off her beat.

LAST October the Treasurer of the United States, Mrs. Ivy Baker Priest—scheduled to speak at the National Safety Congress in Chicago—lost her voice, but found an able stand-in, her ghteen-year-old daughter, Pat. Pat's impromptu lecture on een-age driving ("A few wild ones give us all a bad name") mpressed her listeners that in January, when her mother scheduled for Appropriations Committee hearings and a ch before Florida businesswomen, the women asked for got Pat as a substitute.

her and daughter enjoy each other. "She likes people, so —it's wonderfully satisfying," says Mrs. Priest. They swim er and compare clothes notes. Mrs. Priest, at one time a dent-store buyer, admits Pat keeps her dressing young, g hair styles.

ow-how of intricate Charleston steps and pantomiming esult of mother's coaching. Pat's pantomimes—and ewing—placed her on the Washington, D.C., TV show, s Session, and helped her to decide to major in radio and n at junior college.

mother and her teen-age daughter, however, don't are a mutual interest in clothes because at times they h other completely unreasonable.

gh it's perfectly normal to have mixed feelings about your other—or anyone else you love—it's perfectly crazy to encourage them. About clothes, for instance. What's to prevent the I-want-to-buy-my-own-clothes girl from doing some cashless shopping—choosing the coat and the suit she'd like, then bringing her mother around later for official approval? Perhaps, if her judgment's good, she can push for independent purchases of minor items. It's been done.

MARTHA ROGERS

U. S. Treasurer Priest (right) and stand-in daughter, Pat.

EVERYBODY—teachers, boys, girl friends, boys, parents, boys—likes a girl who is sugar and spice and everything nice. You can be that girl, for a girl has

Sugar

if she can say "Thank you, I had a wonderful time" to the hostess at a party but manage to include her date in a second-later sideways look . . .

if she can invite a pretty new girl to join the gang for lunch . . .

if she can excuse herself from an animated group to talk to someone (not necessarily a boy) standing alone at a party . . .

if she can admire a boy's sense of rhythm if his sense of step isn't too steady at a dance . . .

if she can squelch a nasty rumor by asking for the source—then forget all about it . . .

if she can rise to the defense of a "strict" teacher . . .

if she remembers the birthdays, nicknames, and triumphs of her friends and her enemies . . .

and Spice

if she can momentarily refuse a fourth date with a boy if she doesn't want him (or anyone else) to think they're going steady . . .

if she can smile when caught mispronouncing a word . . .

if she doesn't mind being called stuck up because she walks, correctly, with her head high . . .

if she owns a little-boy shirt with ruffles . . .

if she never apologizes for the fact that she doesn't smoke or drink . . .

if she'll push a peanut across the floor with her nose—or do anything ridiculous demanded by the rules of a game or the spirit of a party . . .

The SUB-DEB • Edited by

Ruth Ormler

AVON bring

Quaintance Harmony

Miss Fluffy Puff

The Three Bears

Bright Night Perfume

ristmas home to you

Avon Gifts have been a family tradition at Christmas time since 1886

This year . . . over a hundred useful gifts of fine cosmetics and toiletries, beautifully packaged and attractively priced, for every man, woman and child you know.
And it's so easy and convenient to do your Christmas shopping the Avon way
. . . in the comfort of your home, with the help of your Avon Representative.

Your Avon Representative will be calling on you. Welcome her!

Fragrance Rainbow

Cotillion Duet

Fashion Jewels

Men's Plaid Travel Kit

Avon cosmetics

RADIO CITY, NEW YORK · PASADENA, CALIFORNIA · MONTREAL, CANADA

CALL WESTERN UNION OPERATOR 25 FOR YOUR AVON REPRESENTATIVE

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS,
Pennsylvania State University, Department of Making marriage work

A joke's a joke—sometimes. But there's a cause, and a cure, for malicious "teasing."

Teasing That Hurts

"AFTER twelve years, I'm no longer hurt by my husband's teasing. I pay little attention to anything he says, or to stunts like pretending to be drunk or to have lost his job. I still don't understand what's practical or joking about a rubber snake in the bed or knots tied in my clothes. But it's even harder to understand his teasing our son and daughter to hurt and humiliate them. At eleven, Sally worries about being too big for her age. His gibes and nicknames like 'family heavyweight champ' reduce her to tears. Bill's lost interest in sports since his father started ridiculing and imitating his clumsiness. Nothing they do or say is safe from his 'humor.' How can I protect them, and keep them from hating their father?"

In every household, feelings are sometimes hurt by kidding that goes too far. But if the painful joke is not repeated, it is soon forgotten, and no lasting harm is done.

But the kind of teasing this wife describes is almost certainly meant to hurt. Her husband's jovial manner cannot conceal his purpose. His repeated thrusts at sore spots are intended to cause discomfort and pain.

Early in marriage, a man's jokes and his wife's sensitivity may produce episodes painful to both. In their eagerness to please each other, he learns to spare her feelings, and she not to take offense when none is intended.

But after twelve years of marriage, attitudes and behavior are less readily modified. This husband's habitual teasing is firmly established, and its causes deeply rooted.

In my opinion, the malicious tease, man or woman, adult or child, always knows when his teasing hurts. What he doesn't know is why he enjoys it.

His methods give the clue. All are designed to build him up by belittling others. Sarcasm, ridicule, "playful" imitations of a lisp or odd gesture are meant to equalize a situation in which he feels inferior.

Teasing that starts out innocently can get out of hand at home, as in the classroom or office. If not promptly restrained, human relationships are likely to be permanently damaged. Specific corrective measures must be worked out to suit the circumstances. But the same principles apply no matter what the setting or who the offender.

Remove the reward. The object of malicious teasing is to hurt. When it doesn't achieve its purpose, it seldom persists. This is why you tell your children to ignore the teasing of playmates. By your own example, you can help them make light of their father's teasing. When he makes a joke at your expense, try to join the laughter, then change the subject. If you and they can take it lightly, his teasing will be less painful, and less frequent.

Remove the cause. He wants to be sure of his own worth, of your love and respect, and of his place in the family circle. You can't be expected to express admiration when you or the children are smarting from his pranks. But in peaceful interludes, be quick with praise, generous with affection and sparing with criticism. If you can build him up, he will feel less need to tear you down.

Provide distractions. Teasing often starts to relieve boredom, for lack of "something to do." Keep the conversation going, suggest games, plan projects. Idleness is dangerous when spirits are high. If necessary, break up the group.

Cultivate your own sense of humor. You can take responsibilities seriously without being solemn. Some well-meaning wives take the joy out of family life by being too fearful of good-natured kidding. If you are hypersensitive, you may teach your children to be touchy and easily hurt. The person who can't take a joke suffers unnecessarily—and often judges too harshly.

Shared laughter deepens the sense of comradeship and belonging which is the essence of family life. Both male humor and childish pranks may often seem inappropriate and unnecessary to you. But by joining the fun, you can encourage the family to laugh together. Then you will find it easier to know how to discourage teasing before it goes too far.

Do You Build His Confidence?

It's easy for a man to stay in a rut his wife makes for him. In many little ways she can support his ego, or undermine it. If she constantly belittles him, he gradually accepts her estimate of his worth. The questions below will help you to determine whether you build him up—or down.

Do You —

1. Cheerfully adjust your wants to his earnings?
2. Suggest that he isn't the man he was?
3. Find much to praise, little to criticize?
4. Urge him to be like somebody else?
5. Kiss him just because you want to?
6. Point out his luck in marrying you?
7. Always have time to talk to him?
8. Imply he would be helpless without you?
9. Praise him before the children?
10. Compare his easy life with your hard one?
11. Compare him favorably with other men?
12. Complain about his manners and disgusting ways?
13. Praise him for helping around the house?
14. Take credit for his success?

Odd-numbered questions should be answered yes, even-numbered no. With ten or more right answers, your husband can be sure of your faith in him. But with fewer than eight right answers, he has little reason to believe you love him, even though you do. Find ways to show your appreciation and affection. Both his personal happiness and his business progress are at stake.

Watching His Health

THE average wife would deny indignantly that she neglects her husband's health. She probably doesn't, when he is actually sick. She nurses him devotedly and does all she can to make him comfortable. She caters to his needs as well as his wants. No steak and French fries for him if the doctor ordered a soft diet; but she makes the soup and custard as tempting as she can.

But it is equally important to see that he follows a wholesome routine when he is well. Men are apt to be careless or ignorant of basic health rules that women take for granted. Don't forget that on the average women live six years longer than men. The suggestions below are simple, but vital. Neither you nor he can afford to ignore them.

Watch his weight. Overweight is a menace; if he has a tendency to put on pounds, help him control it by revising your menus and removing temptation. Substitute a bowl of apples for the dish of candy or nuts. But unexplained loss of weight is a danger signal; don't delay finding and correcting the cause.

Supervise his diet. You can't order his meals away from home, but perhaps he will accept your advice. In any event, plan the meals you serve to provide the elements needed for health. But talk about them as appetizing food, not medicine or tonic.

Provide time for rest. Some husbands are chronically tired because their wives schedule too many activities for evenings and weekends. Remember that he can't let work slide the day after a late party, and that his schedule doesn't provide for an afternoon nap.

Encourage him to relax. Don't begrudge him an occasional evening or weekend afternoon to do as he likes. But far more important, try to understand, appreciate and lighten his burdens. Under the terrific pressure of financial responsibilities and business competition, many men endure a greater strain than their wives know. Relieve his money worries as much as you can by thrift, good management and by moderation in your requirements.

Above all, maintain a home atmosphere of calm, serenity and contentment. If he can manage to forget his worries at night, he can cope with them more easily in the morning. He will be healthier, and you will both be happier.

Encanto

rhapsody in color —

Y ı've never seen china so beautiful
— ou've never seen china
s durable — as Encanto in F NCISCAN fine CHINA. Superb c ftsmanship — achieved by no other p ters — fuses Franciscan's strong, p rl-toned, china-body with china
o subtle nature colors, then encircles tl m with gleaming platinum.
Encanto is a luxury to own — e nomy to buy. It sturdily resists t hazards of use and will be yur delight and pride—
r rning . . . noon . . . night —
t ough years to come.

e table is set with the new Encanto Dawn.
ading from top down the other colors
: Magnolia — Twilight, Birchbark, llow, Spruce — Sandalwood — Teak and gnolia. Also available in White th gold band or platinum band.
ace Setting $17.75; $13.75.

Franciscan fine China

GLADDING, McBEAN & CO., LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

You don't have to be Lauren Bacall to have a movie star complexion

that's the beauty of LUX

With a few words by me
Lauren Bacall

Lux is so very kind to your skin—especially to the "supersensitive" areas around your eyes, nose and mouth.
That's why Lauren Bacall, like 9 out of 10
Hollywood stars, uses Lux every day.
How about you?

I've used Lux since my modeling days in New York

Lauren Bacall's complexion is worth money to her—for professional reasons. But your complexion is worth as much to you—for personal reasons. That's why it deserves the same good care Lauren Bacall gives her skin . . . daily Lux care.

Just about ever since Hollywood was, Lux has been the screen stars' soap. 9 out of 10 of them use it every day—both at the studio and at home.

I don't believe I've ever seen any other in a dressing room out here

But you don't have to be in movies to want a soft, smooth complexion that looks wonderful even close-up . . . the kind of complexion movie stars keep with daily Lux care.

Lux care is very kind to your skin. It's so gentle that even the supersensitive areas around your nose, mouth and eyes, stay soft and moist. (Try Lux and see.) Then there's the Lux lather—rich, thick, gently penetrating . . . it cleanses your skin thoroughly, then rinses away completely.

—this is what I like best

Lever Brothers unconditionally guarantees everything said here about Lux (or you can have your money back). Remember, all the movie star complexions aren't in Hollywood. Start using Lux regularly and you'll be on your way to having one yourself!

... aren't you going to say anything about that wonderful perfume?

9 out of 10 Hollywood stars believe in it and today more women all over the world use Lux than any other complexion care.

Lauren Bacall starring in "WOMAN'S WORLD"
20th Century-Fox Production in CinemaScope COLOR BY DE LUXE LABS

Girl Scouts train for active citizenship

. . . Las Vegas, New Mexico

Never Too Young

By MARGARET HICKEY

A BIT of philosophy always held by the Girl Scouts is that no one is too young to be an active citizen. One of the newest ways the organization is fulfilling this pledge is through a project of practical citizenship called "My Government Badge."

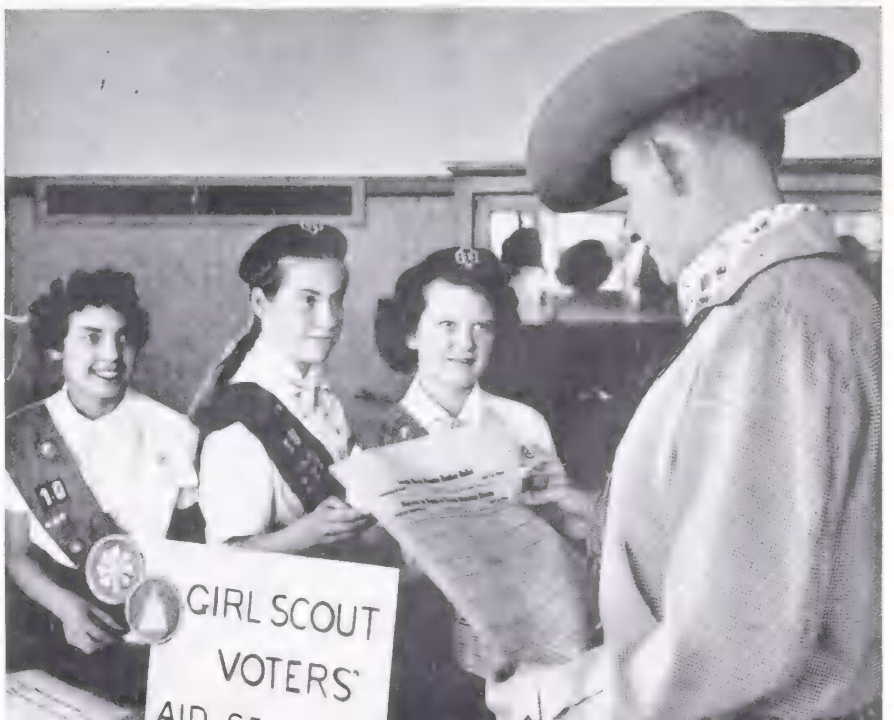
All over the country groups of intermediate Scouts (girls aged ten to thirteen) are studying firsthand the duties and obligations of United States citizens. The activities in Las Vegas, New Mexico, described in the Public Affairs Department this month are typical of those in many other communities, where girls promise, on their honor, "to do my duty to God and my country, to help other people at all times."

Last year, Troop 81 in Garden City, New York, the first to work on the "My Government Badge," invited a member of the League of Women Voters and a civics professor to explain voting procedures, registration and elections. Then the girls read about the functions of their local government at their public library. With this background of information they visited the mayor and other public officials and actually saw how each helped run the city. Many girls said they understood for the first time the importance of the citizen in selecting the right official for the job. When election day came all the girls enthusiastically distributed fliers and talked with their neighbors, urging them to vote—in some cases accompanying them to the polls. Several girls served as baby sitters while mothers with small children voted.

An important phase of the citizenship-badge work is good attitude. Do I study difference of opinion about public issues? . . . Do I stand up for the right of other people to have their opinions? . . . Do I go out of my way to welcome new citizens to my community? . . . Do I respect other people's property and public property? are some of the questions the girls seriously ask themselves.

Many troops have been active in voters'-aid work for several years. In October, 1952, Chattanooga, Tennessee, Girl Scouts, in co-operation with the League of Women Voters and the American Heritage Foundation, distributed 20,000 pamphlets in their neighborhoods. The leaflets, entitled, "X-ercise your X," told voters in a few concise words how to mark their ballots.

"My Government" is just one of several citizenship projects open to the 2,060,000 Scouts. A total of 113,847 girls last year earned the "My Troop," "Active Citizen," "My Community," "My Country" and "My Government" badges—learning how to get along with other people and studying the historical background and social structure of their community and of the country. All these projects were carried out under the guidance of leaders (many of them mothers) whose unselfish volunteer work puts them, too, in the class of "active citizens." END



To most people in Las Vegas, New Mexico, that pounding spring rain is a welcome sight. Since 1948, drought has seared the country, and even the city park has grown dry and brown. But to twenty-seven little green-uniformed girls gathered in an office overlooking downtown Grand Avenue, the rain presents a threat to a project dear to their hearts this early Saturday morning. Inside, the one-story office building is brightly lighted, colorful with its display of tall posters reading LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS—GIRL SCOUT VOTERS' AID SERVICE, and sample election ballots printed in two languages—Spanish as well as English, since New Mexico's heritage is Spanish and Las Vegas is really two cities, Old Town and the City. Every few minutes one of the little girls runs to the big window and peers out anxiously at the usually busy street where the pavement is now wet and gleaming under the downpour and only a few people hurry along, heads bent against the driving rain.

Then suddenly, as often happens in the Southwest country, the storm is over. The girls rush to gather up pamphlets and baskets filled with stringed tags reading "I will vote, how about you?" More people appear on the street now, and the girls go out to make sure each has a pamphlet and a tag prominently displayed on lapel or coat collar. Another group of girls piles into a station wagon parked at the curb. Directed by Mrs. John Horns, voter-information chairman of the League of Women Voters, they check on a city map the area where they will distribute their information door to door. "Don't forget to tell the ladies about not having to dress up to go vote," a young voice calls. "It's all right to go with an apron on."

As that group drives away, a rancher in boots and broad-brimmed Stetson walks into the nearby Public Service office to pay a bill. A Girl Scout dashes over to explain that the office is closed. One hand goes into the basket she carries and comes up with a tag. "But let me give you this reminder to vote in the primary on Tuesday," she says breathlessly. The rancher looks down at her, grins and takes the tag.

You might stop serious young Crystal Simpson and ask why it is so important for people to vote in this primary election. Crystal is one of twelve girls of from ten to thirteen years of age in Girl Scout Troop 10, and Troop 10 has been very busy qualifying CONTINUED ON PAGE 40

GEORGE KEW

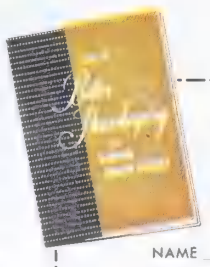
Rancher Albert Atkins, who wants to vote for the best candidate, carefully studies, while Girl Scouts explain, the sample election ballot in Las Vegas, New Mexico. The girls—too young to vote now—are training for citizenship responsibilities later on.

LOOK WHY MORE FINE COOKS

USE ALUMINUM UTENSI

MARION McCARROLL, nationally syndicated women's page editor

This noted home economist tells millions of housewives how to get the most healthful, as well as the most appetizing meals. She finds aluminum utensils make possible cooking methods that keep more nutrition in foods.



Here she prepares a sizzling platter of baked, stuffed sea bass, with de luxe tomatoes and varied raw relishes.

BASIL RATHBONE, distinguished star of stage and screen

A gourmet who delights Hollywood friends with his cooking : Rathbone offers lobster thermidor on grill broiler accompanied green salad (with his special dressing) and grated cheese.

He recommends aluminum utensils when preparing meals to b discriminating palates.

GET THE FACTS! GET THE RECIPES! Booklet tells you how to get more healthful, better tasting foods with less effort and less fuel costs. It also gives "how-to-do-it" tips on everything from preparing special dishes to easy ways of keeping your aluminum cookware looking like new. It will be valuable in helping you select new cookware for yourself or for a gift, or in getting the most service from your present utensils. Recipes for the dishes illustrated are yours for the asking, too. Send this coupon to ALUMINUM COMPANY OF AMERICA, Dept. 1969L, Pittsburgh 19, Pa.

Dear Alcoa:

Send me booklet . . . . ☐

Send me recipes . . . . ☐

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ STATE _____

COOKWARE CA

COOKWARE CARN
November 8th to 1

This colorful little ten popping up in good h stores all over the cour for it. There you wil best buys in cooking

AN EVER BEFORE

Free Booklet Shows That Only Today's Longer Lasting, Better Looking Aluminum Cookware Delivers Superb Meals at Lowest Cost

TTINELLA, housewife

ousewife is often an expert cook, too. Mrs. Pettinella has aditional American Thanksgiving dinner. Her roast turkey, es and cranberry sauce are supplemented with a colorful and lad. Like millions of homemakers, Mrs. Pettinella prefers kware because of its durability and budget-saving price.

CHEF JOHN MANUAT, of the Hotel Pierre, New York

Chef Manuat prepares his renowned dishes for world travelers and smart New Yorkers. He uses aluminum utensils because they protect the flavor of his subtle "taste creations," like the rum ba ba shown here. The cake is filled with ice-cream balls and topped with Bing cherries. Over all goes the rum sauce, and it is served with coffee from an aluminum pot.

ME for those important ls, your favorite house- ment is showing an ex- of aluminum utensils— cookware buys. You'll ng and new strength that num cookware a favorite for a lifetime. You'll ase of handling that num so much preferred eavier types of pots and matter what brand you pick, you'll know that the most nutritious meals can be enjoyed by you and your family . . . because it's aluminum.

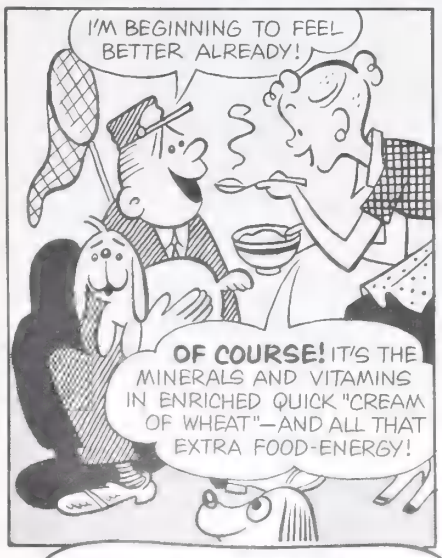
Best of all, you'll be glad to see that the many improvements in today's aluminum utensils are yours at wonderfully low prices.

So be sure they're aluminum. Aluminum does the best job of cooking, at the lowest price, of any fine-quality utensil.

THE CRAFTSMANSHIP OF YOUR FAVORITE UTENSIL MANUFACTURER IN

ALCOA

ALUMINUM



IS YOUR BEST INVESTMENT

COPYRIGHT 1954, THE CREAM OF WHEAT CORP.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 37

for the brand-new My Government badges they wear carefully stitched to their green shoulder sashes. Today Troop 10 is being assisted by a younger troop, No. 7, as part of the smaller girls' community-service work. Along with those proudly worn badges, Troop 10 also won a store of valuable knowledge about how their city of more than 14,000 operates, plus a real interest in learning to be good—and informed—citizens.

This interest really began when the girls heard Mrs. Guy Burris, of the League of Women Voters, speak on primary elections at one of their meetings. She explained that primaries are different from other elections: you don't actually elect; it is a party affair with the party selecting its candidates to run for office against candidates chosen by the opposing party. Some people register as nonpartisan voters, and these people cannot vote in the primaries. "She didn't talk like a grownup talking to kids," Crystal says. "She talked as if she knew we'd understand." Crystal persuaded her mother—a nonpartisan—to change her registration so she could have a say in selecting candidates to run in the November election.

Her mother, Mrs. Audrey Simpson, a local newspaper reporter, says, "I am pleased at Crystal's interest in civic affairs and proud of what she is doing to help." Other parents phoned their approval. "I didn't even know what precinct we lived in until my daughter came home and told me," one mother said.

Local problems the girls were most concerned about were garbage disposal and park beautification. The League of Women Voters has been pressing for a city garbage collection for seven years and is now trying to create public interest through the girls. Two years ago the city bought a garbage-collection truck for $7000, but never put it into operation. Citizens still had to hire private haulers, use back-yard incinerators or carry garbage to a dump. Smoke and open dump were both public nuisances. It was easy for the girls to see why something had to be done about the brown, dried-out city park too. Their Scout cabin is in the park.

Troop president Alice Rose Stern brought that matter up at a recent meeting. "Those trees are going to die if they don't get water soon. Couldn't we carry buckets of water to them?" Another Scout suggested, "Maybe my father could bring water in his truck." The girls took the problem of saving the trees home for family discussion.

Troop leader Mrs. Arthur White saw to it that the girls had chances to see their city government at work. At a city-council meeting they watched four council members, the mayor and a special surveyor huddle over a city map plotting out a master sewage plan.

Brown-haired Wanda Watson was especially interested. Wanda lives in a section recently annexed to the city, where the sewer lines have not yet been extended. "I guess I never really thought much about it," she says. "But sewers are pretty important. They affect the health of all the children." She can bolster this generality with personal experience too. "Our septic tank doesn't work very well and every night I have to carry the dishwater outside to dump so the tank won't run over."

At the police department the girls questioned Chief Matt O'Brien, "Why does it cost fifty cents to license our bicycles?"

Lively, fresh-faced Gail had another point. "I have to pay a dollar for my dog's license. What happens to that money?"

Chief O'Brien explained carefully that if a licensed bicycle is stolen the police have a much better chance of finding it than they would have if it were not licensed. The same

CONTINUED ON PAGE 42

We build statues of snow, and weep to see them melt. —WALTER SCOTT

KERNEL NUT OF BRAZIL SAYS

HOLIDAY TIME IS BRAZIL NUT

Fill the nut bowl with s crunchy Brazil Nut

New crop Brazils are here! Buy handy cellophane bags and kee on hand in your kitchen!

CAKES, PIES, COOKIES, can dozens of main dishes are ma delicious—more nutritious with Brazil Nuts.

Try Brazil Nut Turkey Stu

Just add one cup of chop ground Brazil Nuts to every of bread cubes. Gives turkey marvelous new flavor!

FREE — 79 other fascinating recipes. Write: Brazil Nut Associa LH-9, 100 Hudson Street, New Yo

JOLLY TIME BEST YOU EVER ATE

NEW

FAMOUS CHEFS'

MENU MARVI

Sexton Quality Food

Now, for the first time can enjoy a whole lon of succulent entrees con and ready to serve, packed the same famous Sexton

Chicken Chop Suey, Sp Rice, Chicken Fricassee, Stew, Chili con Carne, Ch a la King, Spaghetti in Sau

Ask for Menu Marvels a ter independent food store

John Sexton & Co., Sexton Square, Cr

Actual size

New!

Morton Salters!

Ready-filled shakers for kitchen and table

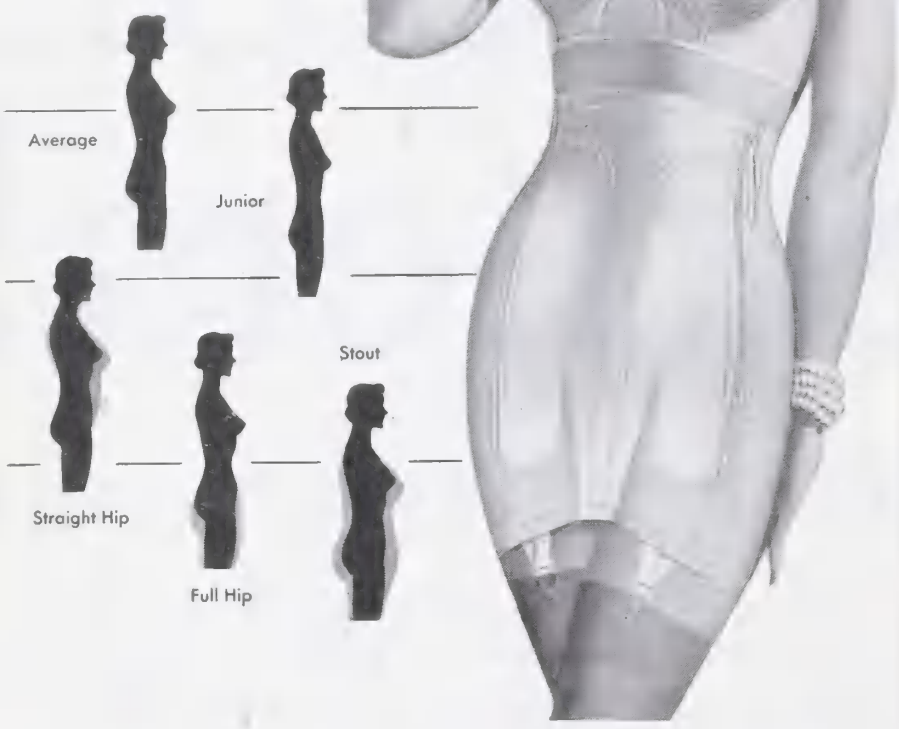
What a convenience!

No more shakers to clean and fill! When they're empty, just throw them away. Plastic shaker top twists open to shake or pour . . . twists shut to seal out dust. Sturdy, moisture-proof, foil-wrapped containers.

So handsome, such simple design, you'll use Morton Salters right on the family table. They're real space savers, too, in the kitchen and medicine cabinet.

Next time you shop, look for Morton Salters! Iodized or Plain.

on Salters join the us Morton family!

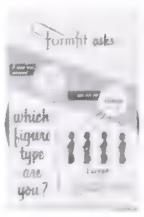


ou can buy Morton Salt enient ways: (1) in the r big round package . . . Morton Miniatures, 1½ tall, that come 6 to the picnics and lunch boxes in new Morton Salters, hes tall, packed 3 to the Look for them all at od store!

When it rains it pours

Formfit asks a very personal question...

Which figure type are you?



47 out of every 100 women are dissatisfied with the way their bras and girdles fit, according to a recent, impartial study. To assure you perfect fit, Formfit makes a wide range of styles and designs for every figure type!

Because no two women have exactly the same figure, no one type of bra or girdle can fit all perfectly. That's why 47 out of every 100 are not satisfied with the fit of these garments.

No need for you to wear a girdle or bra that's almost right. Formfit brings you Life Girdles and Bras in a vast variety of styles for every figure type . . . styles to slim, smooth, and support you to your own individual needs.

So, if you are one of the 47 out of every 100 who are not now satisfied, try a Life Girdle or Bra next!

#1675. Life Girdle shown. Figure-making design in rayon satin and leno elastic. $12.50. Other styles from $7.50. New Life Romance, #566 shown. Features Nylo-Braid for a lovelier uplift. $2.00. Other styles from $1.25. Also available in Canada at slightly higher prices.

FREE! "Your Figure Type—What To Do About It." This new Formfit booklet shows how you can determine your figure type, and how to make the most of it. No cost or obligation. Mailed in plain envelope. Write to The Formfit Company, Dept. F-54, 4018 Prairie St., Chicago.

Life by Formfit

THE FORMFIT COMPANY
CHICAGO, NEW YORK

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 40

is true with lost pets. "Finding these things takes time and money, money you girls are helping to contribute."

Gail can understand that a dollar isn't much when you see it as helpful insurance for the return of your dog when he's lost.

They asked about the curfew which says that young people have to be off the streets by 10 P.M. unless accompanied by an adult. Some of the girls thought that wasn't fair. Verna, a bright-eyed eleven-year-old, seemed satisfied with the chief's explanation that it was all right for her and her friends to leave a late movie alone, provided they went directly home. "What we're trying to do is to give a real service to you and your families, not just enforce the law." He went on to explain to the girls about calling the police if they were ever bothered by strangers too.

The girls visited the fire department, where they saw the need to extend the station building and driveway so both fire trucks could get out at the same time. A bond issue has already been passed to take care of this. To little Carol, younger than some of the girls, the best part of that was watching the firemen demonstrate how fast you can slide down that shiny brass pole in the firehouse when the alarm goes off.

At the next meeting, Mrs. White was anxious to find out what the girls had learned. Although one little girl giggled that "the best part was the soda-pop party afterward," she surprised Mrs. White by remembering—from their visit to the county clerk's office—election dates and how to register.

Mrs. White is pretty proud of her troop. And the girls regard her more as a sort of troop "mother" than a troop leader. Sometimes shy of possible teasing from their own families, they often bring their personal problems to Mrs. White. They like the way she "forgets to be bossy" and "never talks down to us." They like the fact that she "doesn't fuss," sometimes forgets things, just as they do. Alice Rose tells you, smiling, "Once she locked the door key inside the Scout cabin and had to drive back into town to get another one!" They like the way she looks too. She smiles a lot and there are little laugh lines around her eyes. She is a member of a Saturday night square-dance club, and after troop meeting she generally teaches the girls a lively new dance step because "it's good for them after sitting in school all day."

Nothing will ever be attempted if all possible objections must first be overcome. —SAMUEL JOHNSON

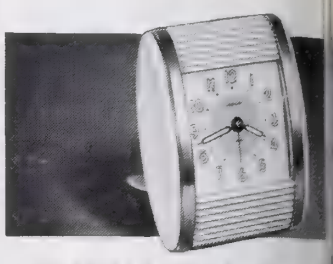
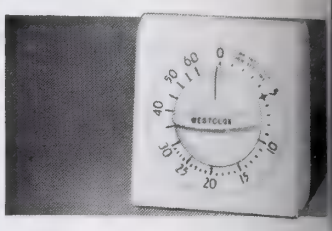
It is through Mrs. White and other volunteer leaders that scouting—which has no office or paid professional Girl Scout worker—is growing in Las Vegas. All official Scout bulletins are routed through regional offices in Dallas, Texas. Neither the Scouts nor the League of Women Voters is very old in Las Vegas, but both are taking on new vitality by working together. There are 10 established Girl Scout troops with 150 girls. The League's membership has grown to 50 since its beginning in 1947.



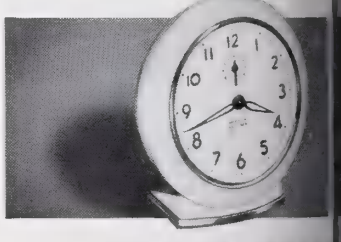
Mrs. White, who helped organize the local League, went into scouting when Troop 10 lost its leader and was about to disband. Her daughter, El Jean, eleven, had just "flown up from the Brownies" and Mrs. White couldn't disappoint her, or the ten members of the "orphan" troop. She got the Girl Scout handbook and all the material from national headquarters that she could find, and began studying. Other mothers helped. It was a letter from Mrs. John G. Lee, president of the national League of Women Voters, in Washington, D.C., that suggested the "My Government" project.

Another volunteer leader is Mrs. A. E. Ball, petite, reddish-blond mother of a Girl Scout



CONTINUED ON PAGE 46

Wherever you go... whatever you



Westcl keeps y on tim

TRAVALARM SPRING-DR You can take it with you! S front and easel back close u a clam. Tucks easily into of bag. Luminous dial, of c Ivory or walnut finish. $7.

LOOKOUT TIMER. Tells "time's up" on any pr Stands on own base or mou wall. Easily carried from rc room. White, red, yellow, Only $3.95—no federal exci

BABY BEN SPRING-DRIVEN AI Popular "little brother" c Ben. Quiet tick. Cheerful adjusts to loud or soft. Bl ivory finish. $5.95. With nous dial, a dollar more.

LASALLITA SPRING-DR ALARM. Daintiest of We . . . only 3 inches high. Quie Dust resistant. Ivory case color bezel and ring. Bell Only $4.50. Luminous, $5.

Prices do not include tax and are subject

WESTCL

made by the makers of BIG La Salle-Peru, Illinois

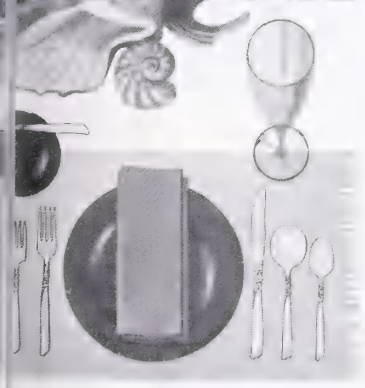
Products of GT Corpor

Community

esents SOUTH SEAS

. . . today's new idea in design!



NEW TAPERED TIPS!
Just one example of costly finishing!

NEW FREE-FORM HANDLES!
Distinctive, and perfectly balanced in the hand!

NEW DESIGN ACCENT!
Deep-sculpted, the lovely motif complements the sweeping handle.

NEW PROPORTIONS!
Each piece is newly designed . . . more functional!

*TRADEMARKS OF ONEIDA LTD., ONEIDA, N.Y. COPYRIGHT 1954, ONEIDA LTD.

More than a great new pattern! Here, at last, is the silverware pattern that says good-bye to yesterday! That fits today's living, today's entertaining! Contemporary? Yes! Timeless? Beautifully so! You'll love the sweep of each newly designed piece of South Seas! You'll be proud of the look of the newly proportioned, free-form handles . . . the handsome, new-size functional place knives and forks. And because you've shopped for and love good modern, you'll be 'specially pleased at South Seas'* low price. Dinner services for 8 from $59.75. Community*. . . the finest silverplate.

Use it right from the jar.
It's creamy-thick!
Absolutely different!

SPOON IT into hot

Millions agree: "The most exciting discovery in years

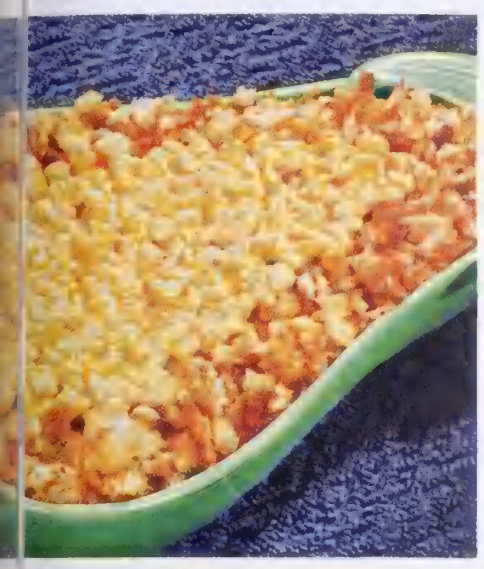
Kraft's Cheez Whiz

for scores of cheese treats...fa

SPOON IT onto hot broiled hamburgers. Kraft's Cheez Whiz melts the moment it touches hot food. And the flavor—a tantalizing cheese goodness! Serve on split buns with onion rings and a pickle.

HEAT IT in a double boiler or pan over low heat for a glorious cheese sauce. In Parkay Margarine, heat whole, cooked shrimp, chopped pimento and chopped green pepper. Serve on toast points with hot Cheez Whiz.

SPREAD IT right from the jar on shredded whole-wheat crackers. Cheez Whiz, created by the famous Kraft Kitchen, is perfect for all kinds of snacks and sandwiches, either hot or cold. Get a jar—you'll use it a dozen ways.



HEAT IT in a small saucepan over low heat or in a double boiler and pour that golden goodness over hot sautéed eggplant slices. Grand on seafood, noodles, rice, too! You've never had a cheese product with so many uses!

HEAT IT for this wonderful luncheon or supp
Hot, hard-cooked eggs on toast points topp plenty of hot, satin-smooth Kraft's Cheez W garnished with strips of pimento. Try it real s

EAT IT for cheese sauce or SPREAD IT for snacks

T to hot, cooked whole kernel corn. Sprinkle ted bread crumbs around the edge of the Ike 10 minutes in 350° oven, while tantalizz Whiz melts through and through the corn!

SPREAD IT right from the jar on sliced icebox rye bread. Garnish each slice with a tiny onion or whole stuffed olive for a jiffy-quick snack tray. Or serve Cheez Whiz and crackers "help yourself" style for TV snacks.

HEAT IT in a small pan over low heat or in a double boiler to pour over hot, cooked broccoli. Really elegant flavor! Kraft's Cheez Whiz makes all sorts of vegetables into special treats. (Goodbye coaxing 'em to eat vegetables!)

ver well-drained hot, cooked onions. Kraft's starts to melt the moment it touches hot it into hot, cooked drained macaroni, too.
ot split baked potatoes. Easy, good!

n a hot waffle and serve with crisp bacon for upper. You'll find dozens—yes scores—of Whiz tricks your whole family will love!
hey dip into that jar every day.

HEAT IT in a small pan over low heat or in a double boiler and pour over hot cooked and diced potatoes. Toss lightly. Top with paprika. Try Kraft Cheez Whiz spooned into hot mashed potatoes, too. That's really delicious!

HEAT IT in a small saucepan over low heat or in a double boiler. Pour that speedy, golden cheese sauce over toasted tomato and bacon sandwiches. This amazing new Kraft's Cheez Whiz comes in 1-pound and 8-ounce jars.

SPREAD IT for all kinds of sandwiches. For this one: Kraft's Cheez Whiz on one slice of rye bread; the second slice is spread with Kraft Prepared Salad Style Mustard topped with boiled or baked ham. Something mighty good!

SPOON IT onto a casserole of hot baked beans and toss 'em lightly until the Cheez Whiz melts. Scrumptious! You'll find so many quick Cheez Whiz tricks you'll say: "How did we ever get along without it?"

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 42

and a Brownie. With her family, she moved to Las Vegas from Michigan last November. By January she had helped to form a brand-new troop of twenty girls. In April she was elected president of the local League of Women Voters. In May she attended the national League convention in Denver. She had to hurry to get back to Las Vegas in time for her Tuesday-afternoon Scout meeting—she had promised to help her girls make ribbon-rosebud corsages for Mother's Day. She loves her new duties.

Mrs. Junius Evans, mother of a Brownie, as well as a younger daughter and son, has been helping five new troops get started. "I wouldn't trade my daughter's scouting experience for anything we could give her," Mrs. Evans says positively.

The expansion of scouting has enlisted teachers too. Through the constant urging of Mr. Blas Lopez, a school principal in Old Town, the community contributed $50 to help three new troops get under way. These are the first in Old Town, the original Spanish settlement which was the hub of the community until the coming of the Santa Fe Railroad in the 1880's.

Mrs. Joe Barela, a fourth-grade teacher in Old Town, with both Scout and Brownie daughters, has been meeting with a new troop of twenty-four ten-year-old girls in her classroom right after school. It meant work and time added to an already busy schedule, but somehow Mrs. Barela felt more than repaid when, at the very first meeting, one little dark-haired girl who had waited a long time to be a Scout recited with shining eyes and no faltering over words, "On my honor, I will try: to do my duty to God and my country, to help other people at all times, to obey the Girl Scout Laws."

A good man does good merely by living. —BULIVER

Both Scout and League members get help from Las Vegas' Highlands University. Scouts studying nature life and music are invited to visit the biology and music departments. The dean of men, Ray Farmer, recruits physical-education majors as assistant troop leaders for summer camp. Meeting space on the campus is always available. Mrs. J. L. Johnson, a faculty wife newly arrived in Las Vegas from Missouri, was recruited to head up a brand-new intermediate troop "almost before she had her suitcases unpacked." Mrs. Johnson had never done any Scout work before, but other Scout leaders got together to coach her. This, plus diligent study of the Scout handbook, has made it possible for her own daughter, Karen, and twenty-three other girls to "fly up" from Brownies into intermediate scouting.

Little Anna Marie Montoya, of Troop 7, didn't have to urge her parents to an interest in civic affairs. Her father, Arthur Montoya, a new city councilman, is already very serious about his job. A civic volunteer (mayor and council posts are unsalaried), Mr. Montoya ran for council for one reason—to push the proposed 1½-cent cigarette tax to finance a youth recreation center. "Every person should get interested in government," he feels. "I myself have so much to learn—still it is fine to know that our young people are being taught early in life."

Blond teen-ager Eleanor Spiess echoes his feeling, and what she says may speak well for the ability of Las Vegas' future voters to decide issues on the basis of real knowledge. "I wish we could all go to Washington and see how the national Government works, now," she says eagerly. "Just like we're doing here in Las Vegas." It certainly seems to bear out the conviction of Mrs. Junius Evans, past president of the city's League of Women Voters, that, "Children's early impressions stay with them—perhaps our work with these girls will have more real influences than any other thing we do." END

JUST One Shampoo

... and your hair grows lovelier

Conti's olive oil castile restores the NATURAL OIL BALANCE of your hair

Harsh detergents "launder" away the precious natural oil balance of your hair. Let the pure imported olive oil in Conti Castile Shampoo restore natural softness, life and luster. See how beautifully your hair takes and holds its wave, how easy it is to manage, with no harm to hair coloring. Conti Castile lathers instantly...rinses quickly...in all types of water. It is the outstanding choice of leading hair stylists.

CONTI
CASTILE SHAMPOO
made with olive oil

Triple Comfort Relief from ACID INDIGESTION

*1 Reduces excess stomach acidity with instant alkalizing action.

*2 Settles and soothes your upset stomach.

*3 Relieves that uncomfortable stuffy, too-full feeling.

Alka Seltzer BRAND

AT ALL DRUG STORES

MILES LABORATORIES, INC., ELKHART

Walking Ease for Troubled FEET!

Dr. Scholl's SHOES

Combine Style Distinction with Real Foot Fr

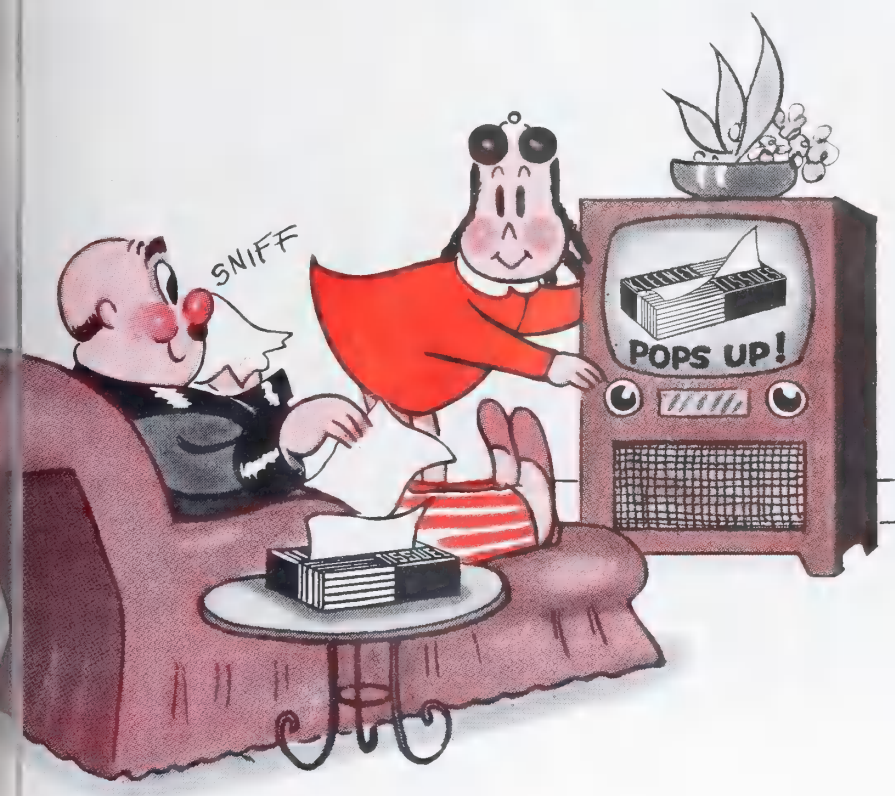
You'll quickly discover what real ease is like when you step out in yo pair of supremely comfortable, foot-fi Dr. Scholl's Shoes. Made over Dr. scientifically designed lasts, their gl foot-cradling fit makes them ever to your feet. No "breaking-in" dis

Dr. Scholl's Shoes are made in all all types of feet — Women's, some st to 13, AAAAA to EEEEEEEE; Me to 16, AAA to EEEEEEE. Expertly Dr. Scholl's Foot Comfort® Shops a and Department Stores in principal not obtainable locally, write for catalo 411, Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Chicago 10,

SAVE ON YARN

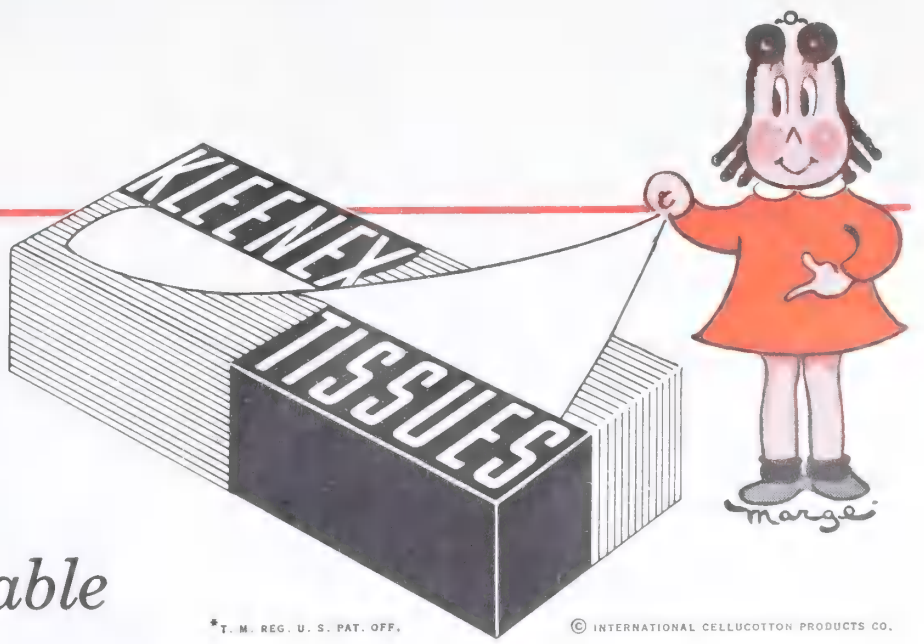
Latest Novelty and Regular Yarns for Stoles, Jumbo Sweaters, etc.

Get LATEST STYL and BIG COLOR C over 300 actual Send 10¢ (refunded



WONOCO YARN CO., 371 Grand Street, New York

d you ever?



By LITTLE LULU

en you come sneezing home and grab for tissues—ever find tissue Grandma offers is the "try n' get me" kind?

But Kleenex tissues meet your sneeze with "up and at 'em" vigor!
So sturdy—soft—disposable, they're flash-quick on the trigger!

Be thrifty—Buy quality

Buy Kleenex

t, strong, completely disposable

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

© INTERNATIONAL CELLUCOTTON PRODUCTS CO.

The new "Swing-Needle"

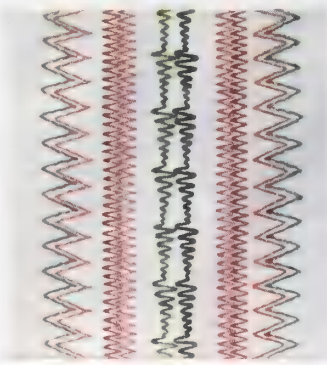
SINGER Automatic

does 101 stitch variations as simply as it sews a straight seam

The secret - the Automatic has "FASHION Dis

HERE IS truly the most versatile, the most advanced of all machines—an automatic Swing-Needle machine that takes hard work, handwork, and guesswork out of your sewing!

No counting stitches. No tricky adjustments. With the Automatic you get a set of "FASHION Discs," each marked with a picture of the type of stitch it produces.



Just slip the Disc you want on your SINGER Automatic. Then watch your machine turn out either arrowheads, dominoes, scallops, zigzags, or any of 101 stitch variations—completely automatical

It's a marvel for decorative wo Discs also save you hours on every dressmaking, from overcasting se shaping scalloped collars.

Finest straight stitching, too Disc will also do the basic, perfect stitching that is so essential to ho ing . . . the kind of stitching for w SINGER Machines are famous th over. See this new all-purpose Au . . . discover the most nearly hum ing machine ever designed.

Cabinet or portable. The new SINGER* Automatic Sewing Machine comes in black or eye-rest beige—in your choice of modern or period cabinets, or trim, easy-to-carry portable case.

De luxe in every way, it's built with true SINGER dependability and backed by the nationwide service only SINGER can offer. The famous SINGER course of personal sewing lessons is included at no extra cost.

New Twin Needle lets you sew in two colo

In addition to the regular needle, you a exciting new Twin Needle.

It lets you sew with two different co at once—as easily as you sew with a sin You can use it with any "FASHION* D gorgeous two-color effects, shadowed n toned embroidery, smart edgings.

A great new machine in the SINGER family —

- The SINGER Straight-Nee
- The SINGER Swing-Needl
- The SINGER Slant-Needl

* Don't be misled. SINGER sells and services its products only through its company-owned SINGER SEWING CENTERS, identified by the Trade-Marks SINGER and red "S" on the window, and listed in your telephone directory only under SINGER SEWING MACHINE COMPANY.

There are more than 1500 SINGER SEWING CENTERS coast to coast . . . and more than 5000 SINGER service cars always ready to bring SINGER service right to your door.

SINGER SEWING CENTE

THERE'S ONE NEAR YOU TO SERVE YO

*A Trade-Mark of THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY. Copyright, U.S.A., 1954, by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY. All rights reserved

All the above stitching was done on the new SINGER Automatic.

Sleeping pretty...

because you love nice things...

MARTEL

Gown #8921. In Dawnglow Pink, Blue Horizon, Cloud White, Mimosa Yellow, Seafoam Green. 32 to 42, $10.95. In 44 and 46, $12.95. At fine store and Van Raalte makes the nicest—Sweet dreams are practically guaranteed in this daintily embroidered gown. Fashioned of our very own nylon Philmy®—just opaque enough, just light enough to lend itself to all the little niceties, the fitting details that are so unmistakably Van Raalte! No small coincidence, this—for in all the world of wonderthings, only Van Raalte creates all their own tricot fabrics and laces, sees that each finds its way into the just-right design. That's why it's always nicer to buy Van Raalte—for that certain quality of loveliness. Why not see for yourself?

LINGERIE ▪ GLOVES • HOSIERY

MUNKACSI

Tell me Doctor

Editors' Note: There are many questions which women would like to ask a trusted physician, but there is not always the opportunity. In a continuation of this series, Tell Me Doctor, Doctor Safford will answer some of these questions which have been sent to him by readers. The questions are all real but the names are fictitious.

By HENRY B. SAFFORD, M.D.

...ld you kindly give me some information about artificial menopause? ...r five years old and recently ...n hysterectomy. I would like ... what to expect now."

...surprised, Doctor," the middle-... remarked quietly. "For a while ... I was due to have one of ...-of-life babies' one hears of ... gave that up when I realized ...strual periods had not stopped ...ntrary, had increased. Are you ... can't possibly be pregnant?"

... Gill. I will go a step further ... would be extremely hazardous ...ry through a pregnancy, even if ...ent."

...nly recourse is surgery? What ...e done, Doctor?"

...e obliged to have your uterus ... perhaps your ovaries as well— ...l generative organs. What you ...e is an artificial menopause." ...fess that I have been dreading ... of the change of life. Will it be ... the reason that it will be ar-

... it is possible that it may be ...ferent. I think I shall have to ...me to explain because a knowl-...o expect will help you, in more ...e."

...ertainly appreciate that, Doc-

... then. Nature has dictated that ...ive period of a woman's life ...ound numbers, the thirty years ...ges of fifteen and forty-five. She ...iod when her complex glandu-...s reached the climax of its de-...sulting in the phenomena of ...d menstruation, a regular ... of these two events normally ...ue for thirty years.

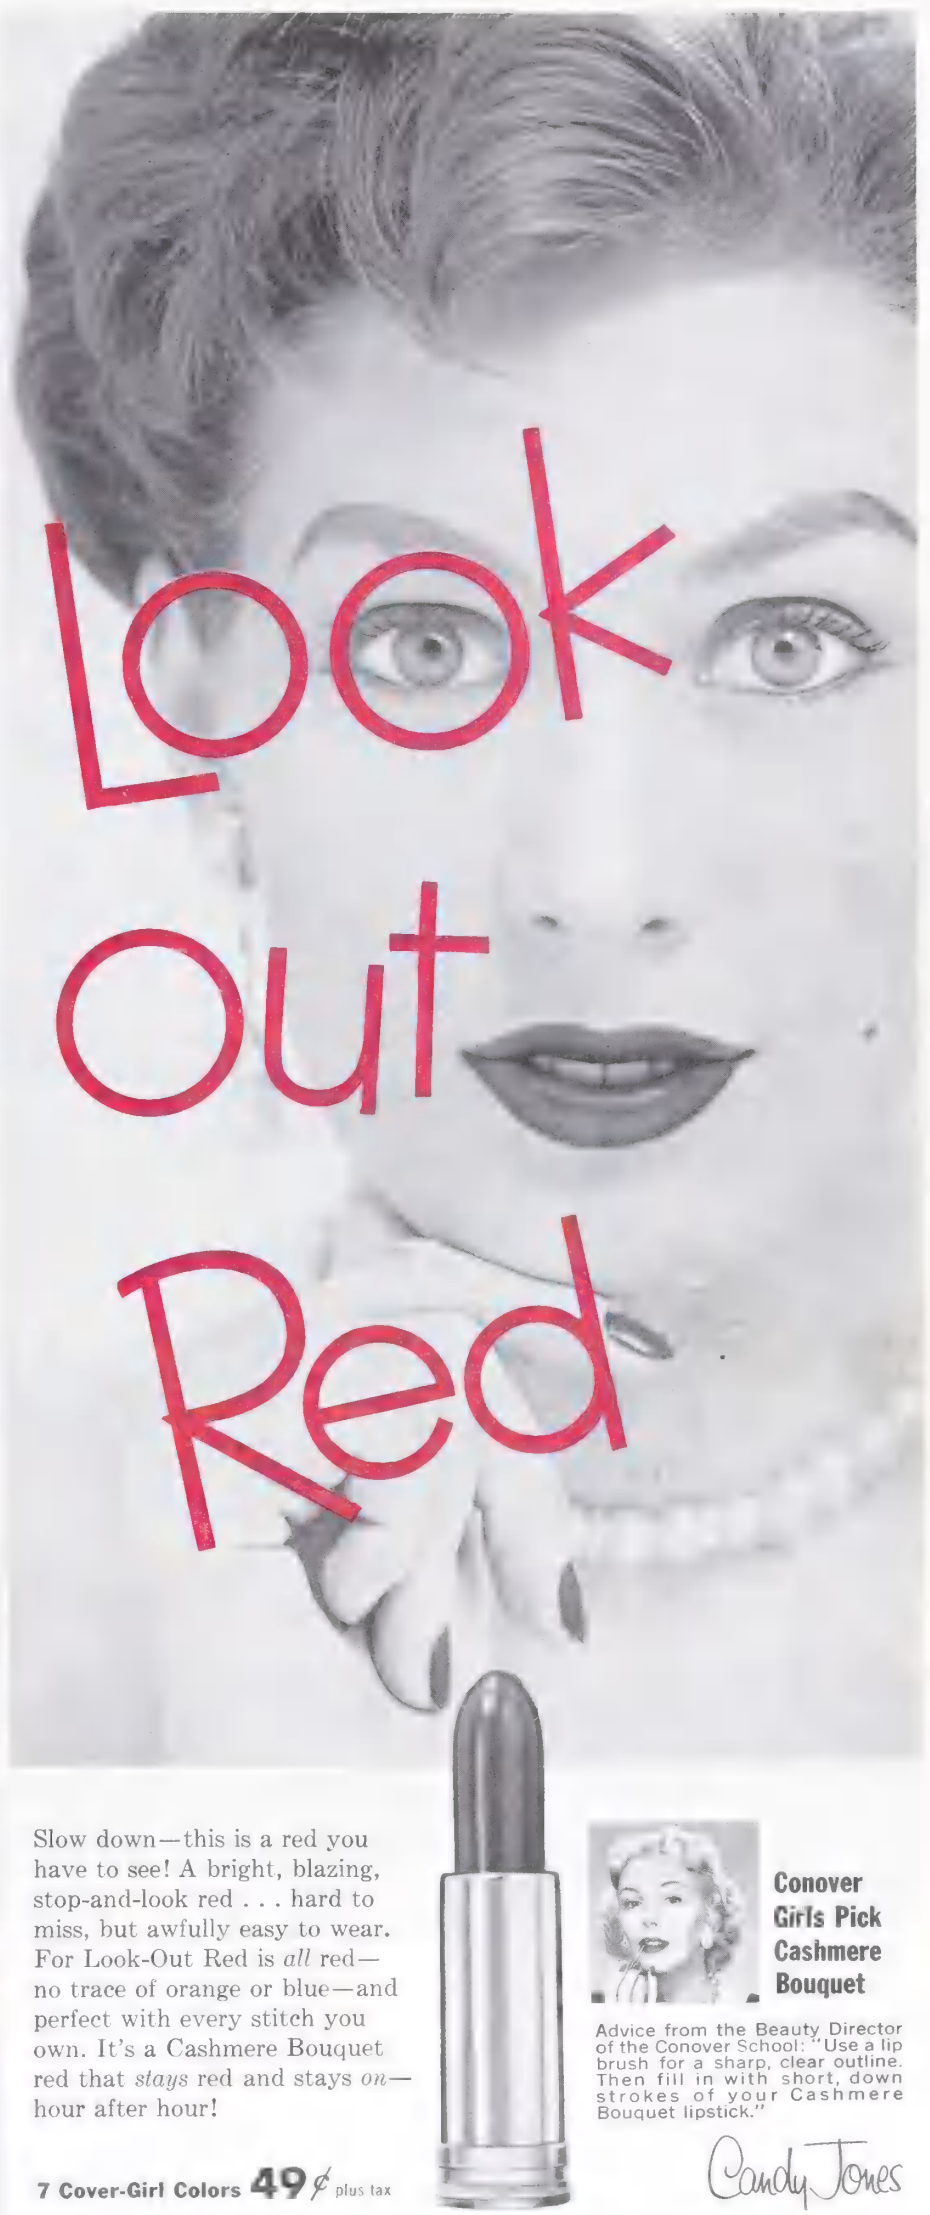
..., marked changes begin to take ...e structure of the ovaries, lead-...ight be characterized as ovarian ... changes are retrograde and ...cant as those attending the on-... The menstrual cycle is broken ...y abolished. Finally the ovaries, ...clining in activity, become ... lose their function.

...ately attuned glandular system, ... several members, failure of function in two of them is bound to have an effect, at least temporarily, upon the others. During the two or three years ordinarily required for a new balance to be effected, any or all are capable of producing symptoms which may be apparent to a greater or lesser degree."

"That's the change of life, isn't it? Does this come suddenly or gradually, Doctor?"

"There are a number of different patterns, all within normal bounds. Sudden cessation of menstruation is one way, but by no means the predominant one. More common may be a flow gradually decreasing, while the cycle remains unchanged. Or the menstrual periods gradually may come further apart, ceasing entirely for several months only to recur again unexpectedly. There are all sorts of variations."

"I've heard a great deal about the horrible symptoms some women undergo—heart trouble, hot flashes, obesity, frigidity and even insanity."



"There is no denying that some of these things may be uncomfortable to endure. I warn you to remember, however, that the mental poise of the individual makes a great difference in how she may be able to withstand them.

"Take the subject of hot flashes. This is one of the commonest symptoms and is due to the fact that the heart and circulatory system are acutely sensitive to the newly acquired hormone deficiency. Some women, however, do not appear to experience this phenomenon at all. When it occurs, it is because the tiny blood-vessel branches become more fragile and may be able to contract and dilate spontaneously. When these changes take place in the skin, they cause the sensation of hot flashes. Occurring in internal organs, they may be responsible for palpitation and headache, abnormal perspiration, rapid heartbeat and shortness of breath. This is not heart failure, you understand, but it is often alarming to the one who has to bear it. These are real symptoms, not imaginary, but are tolerated differently by individual women.

"Then there is a tendency to obesity, particularly noticeable in the abdominal wall, on the buttocks and thighs, at the back of the neck, under the chin and on the arms. It is not necessarily accompanied by a significant increase in weight, and it is difficult to control by diet, exercise, massage or medication. It is due to redisposition of the body fat and does not affect all individuals."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 53

...new book, The Intimate Problems of ...ing several chapters which have not ... Journal, has been published by Haw-...c., 70 Fifth Ave., New York 11, N.Y.

Slow down—this is a red you have to see! A bright, blazing, stop-and-look red . . . hard to miss, but awfully easy to wear. For Look-Out Red is all red—no trace of orange or blue—and perfect with every stitch you own. It's a Cashmere Bouquet red that stays red and stays on—hour after hour!

Conover Girls Pick Cashmere Bouquet

Advice from the Beauty Director of the Conover School: "Use a lip brush for a sharp, clear outline. Then fill in with short, down strokes of your Cashmere Bouquet lipstick."

Candy Jones

7 Cover-Girl Colors 49¢ plus tax

cashmere bouquet

INDELIBLE-TYPE LIPSTICK

Super-creamed to Keep Your Lips Like Velvet

Announcing... strong, durable 34-piece PYREX® Dinnerware Sets

Completely beautiful... beautifully complete... service for six

New PYREX Dinnerware has proved its remarkable strength in laboratory tests. For example, cups were actually used to hammer heavy 3-inch nails into boards!

Handy Cupboard Storage Rack. This sturdy rack has been designed for compact and convenient storing of this set on standard cupboard shelves. This special rack is packed with each 34-piece set.

Your choice of two beautiful decorations—Regency Green or Royal Burgundy borders banded in 22-carat gold. Complete set—with handy cupboard storage rack—$27.95

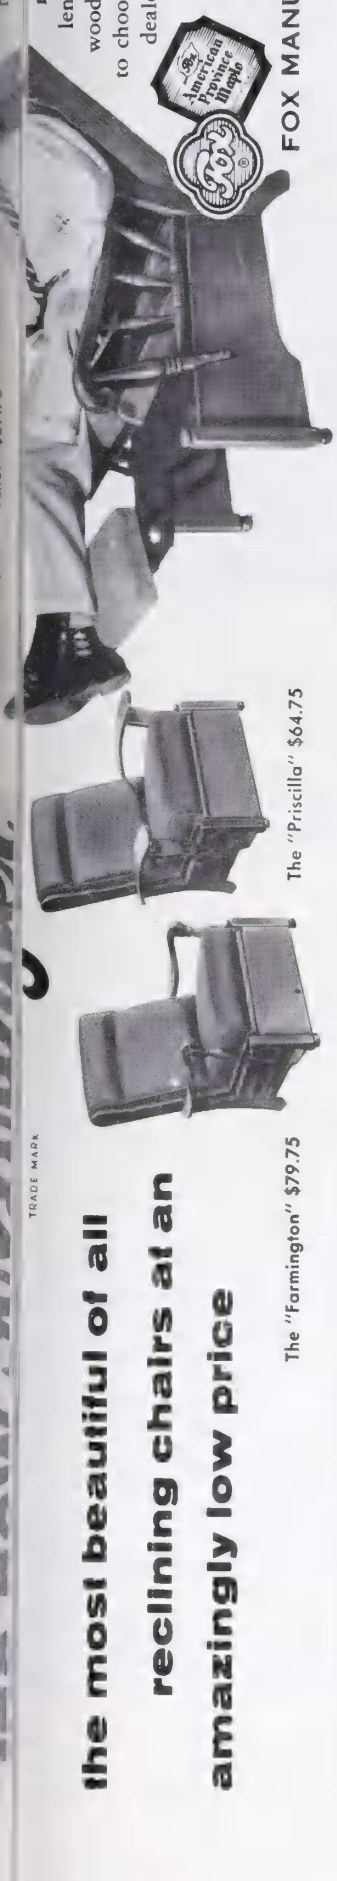
NOW YOU CAN have wonderfully strong PYREX Dinnerware in two lovely, new 34-piece sets with complete service for six.

This new PYREX Dinnerware is so beautiful you'll use it proudly whenever company comes—yet it's sturdy enough for three-meals-a-day family service. It's equally as heat-resistant as famous PYREX Ovenware. There's no surface glaze to crack, chip or craze. And it never grows dull, because that sparkling beauty goes all the way through.

Take your choice of two handsome, traditional decorations—either Regency Green or Royal Burgundy borders banded in 22-carat gold. Get the complete set—plus an added bonus of a smart, handy cupboard storage rack.

See these two beautiful new PYREX Dinnerware sets at your favorite store.

There's only one PYREX BRAND ware, a product of Corning Glass Works, Corning, N. Y.



"PYREX" is a registered trade-mark in the U. S. of Corning Glass Works, Corning, N. Y.

relaxation — beautiful, hand finished cabinet woods to lend charm and grace to any home. Graceful open wood arms for free flow of cooling air. Smart styles to choose from. Write for name of nearest store if your dealer can't supply you.

As low as $64.75 TERMS AVAILABLE
Slightly higher on the West Coast

FOX MANUFACTURING CO., DEPT. LHJ, ROME, GA.

The "Priscilla" $64.75

The "Farmington" $79.75

the most beautiful of all reclining chairs at an amazingly low price

TRADE MARK

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 51

"I don't think I would worry too much about that, Doctor. I think most people get fatter as they get older."

"Yes. Most of them do not exercise as much, and many probably eat more. Now, I think we have spent enough time talking about the normal menopause. Let us consider your own case, which will be an artificial menopause—or, more exactly, a surgical one."

"You said that I would have to lose all my internal generative organs. I can understand why I wouldn't menstruate after that. Would I also have all those other symptoms directly after the operation?"

"I am not certain of that, Mrs. Gill—not at your age, which, I believe you told me, is forty-five. It is possible that Nature already has been preparing your system for the change which is due to take place. It would be different for a woman twenty years younger."

"I suppose if I were that young you wouldn't advocate operating at all."

"I would avoid such a sweeping procedure if it was at all possible, but there are conditions such as endometriosis, for instance, which might demand radical surgery."

"But can't something be done to make these symptoms easier to endure?"

"Indeed, there can. Hormone therapy of the menopause is one of the most valuable contributions of science in the present decade. If you decide to have this operation—and I believe you will find yourself in serious trouble if you do not—we shall start at once with hormone-replacement therapy."

"I believe I would almost be reconciled to the operation if it was not for the danger of frigidity. I have heard so many stories about this happening to women after such an operation, and their husbands' being tempted to find sexual gratification elsewhere."

Censure is the tax a man pays to the public for being eminent.

—DEAN SWIFT

"I am glad you spoke about frigidity because it is much misunderstood. In the first place, it has been pointed out by competent authority that, once a woman has arrived at sexual maturity, the urge for sexual intercourse is almost wholly psychological and not dependent upon hormonal secretions. This is proved by the fact that estrogenic treatment for a diminished sex urge is entirely futile. A statistical study of such operations showed that, among women under forty, only seven per cent experienced a diminished sex urge. Five per cent reported an increase, while there was no change at all in eighty-eight per cent.

"Remember, too, that your husband will be getting older, and that it is well known that many men undergo something akin to a change of life. Also, the sexual urge is likely to fade earlier in the male. Never allow yourself to feel that, because you may have noticed a few gray hairs, your femininity and sexual activity have departed—or your physical attraction; this will not be the case. The next twenty years should be among the best of your life."

"I believe I understand, Doctor. There is one more question and I want you to tell me the truth. Do you think there is any chance of my going insane?"

"Not the slightest. I will not say that it is impossible for an individual with an inherited mental instability to become psychically unbalanced through long-continued worry—over anything, for that matter. Also, during the change of life, whether normal or induced, there sometimes occur symptoms of nervous origin, such as dizziness, insomnia, drowsiness, which could be magnified tremendously by a naturally nervous, high-strung woman to the point where she might goad herself into believing she was losing her mind. You are not that type—I am convinced that you will neither brood nor exaggerate."

"What you tell me is very reassuring, Doctor." The patient drew a long breath. "I will be ready when you are," she said. END

Take your favorite cheese, for instance...

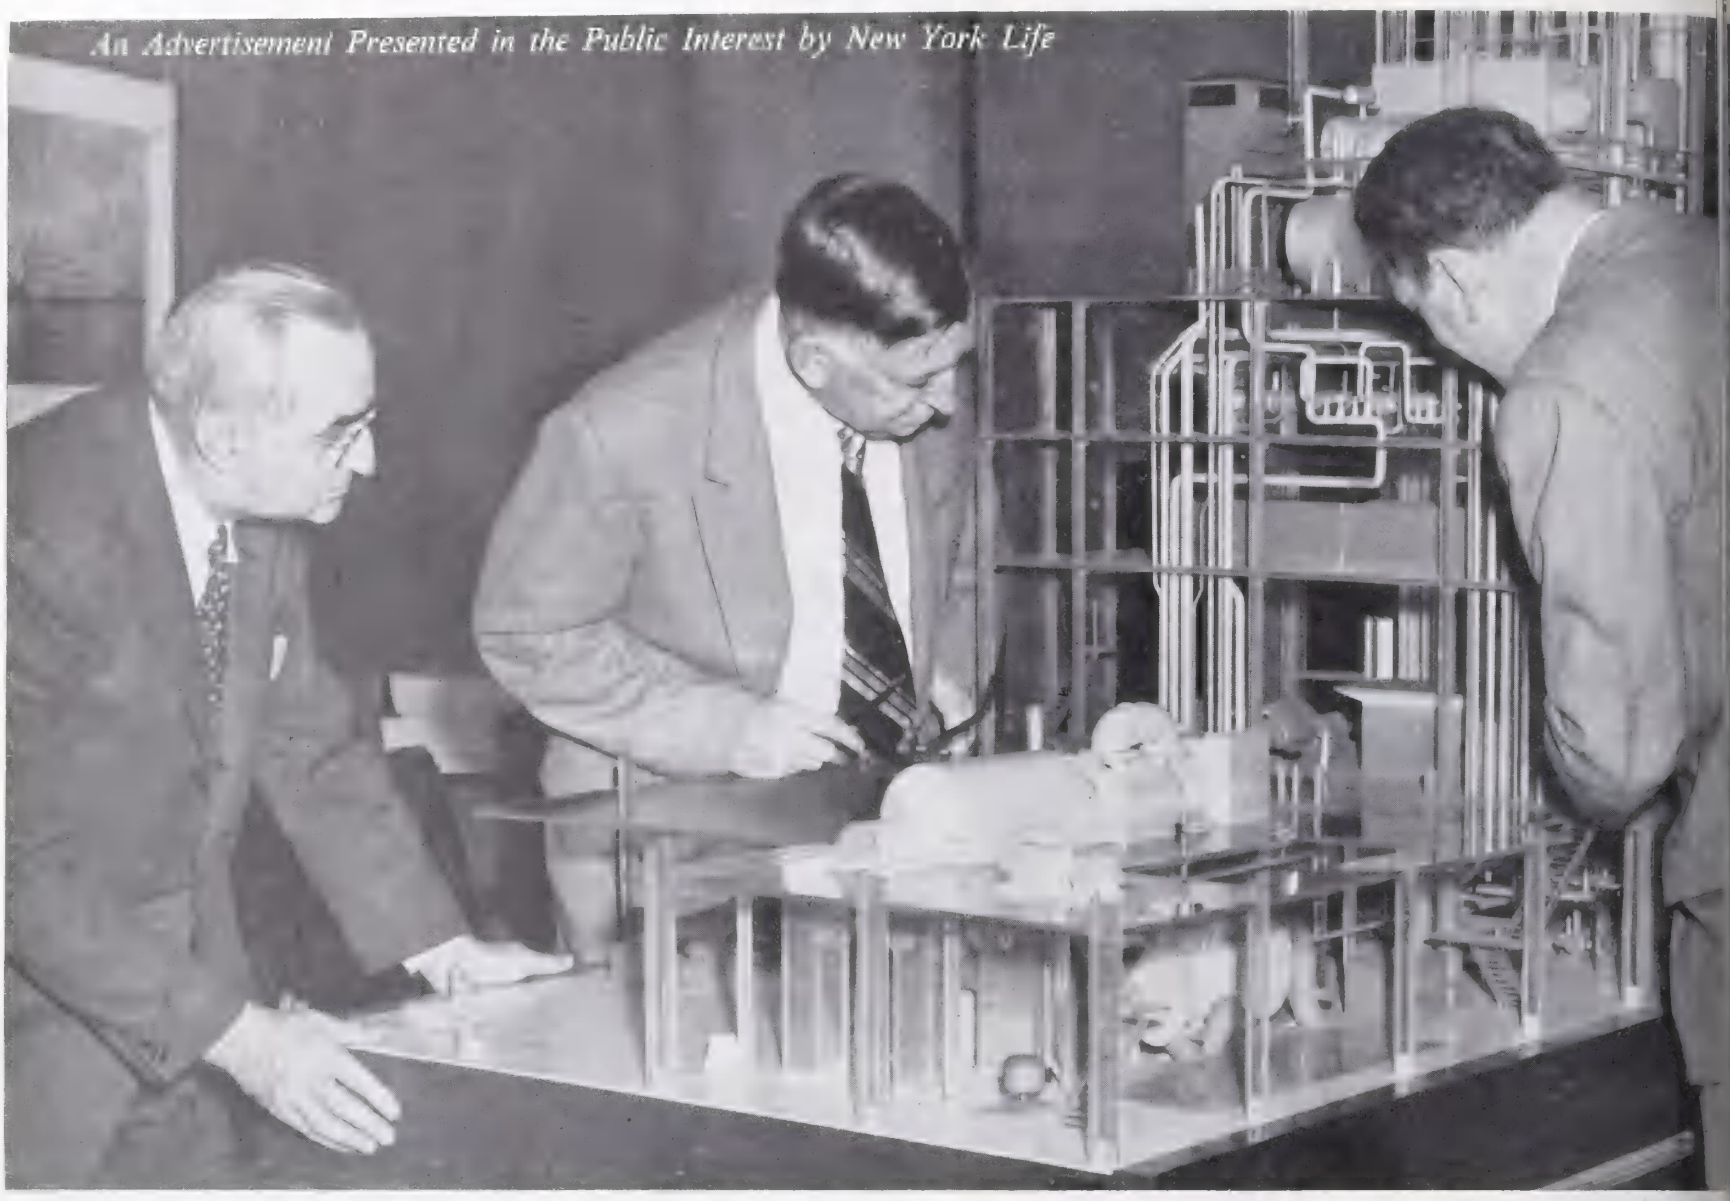
ONLY

SARAN WRAP

will keep it so fresh, so long . . . so easily!

IT CLINGS BY ITSELF... just press it in place, it stays

IT'S MOISTURE-PROOF... keeps odors in their place, too



IT'S CRYSTAL-CLEAR... you can see everything you wrap

See MEDIC

Critics call this the most dramatic television show of the year! See it Monday evenings at 9, EST . . . NBC-TV.

A product of The Dow Chemical Company, Midland, Michigan.
Also available in Canada.

DOW

Courtesy: Combustion Engineering, I

Sometimes, salesmen work for over a year to close a single sale. But that contract may amount to millions of dollars which makes the time and effort well spent. Above, for example, a highly trained sales engineer points out the features of a multi-million-dol power installation, using a model which in itself cost over $10,000 to construct.

SHOULD YOUR CHILD BE A SALESMAN?

by Robert A. Whitney

PRESIDENT, NATIONAL SALES EXECUTIVES, INC.

(As told to OSCAR SCHISGALL)

IN THE year 1754—twenty-two years before this country declared its independence—seven of the British Colonies sent representatives to a meeting in Albany, New York. They were a distinguished group, with Benjamin Franklin among them; and they drew up a plan whereby the American settlers would have a Congress, a President, and other features of an independent government—all under the rule of the British King.

When the representatives took the plan back to their colonies, however, it was unanimously rejected.

So they launched a selling campaign, selling the people of America the idea of a democratic government headed by a Congress and a President. In the long run of history this selling campaign was so successful that a new Nation and a new concept of human liberty grew out of it.

At the risk of sounding over-exalted, such are the terms in which I like to think of salesmanship: a profession that operates at the highest level of human endeavor.

I realize there are those who still consider selling as the simple transaction of handing an article to a buyer in exchange for some coins. If all true modern salesmanship were as unimaginative a vocation as that, our warehouses would soon fill up with unsold merchandise; our factories would have to cease production for lack of outlets; our economy would come to a standstill. For, as has so often been pointed out, no item of production is profitable until it is sold.

Because selling merchandise to the consumer is what keeps industry active, I see salesmen as key-men in our economy. For selling has become far more than inducing somebody to buy a specific article. It has become the art of creating a nation-wide, even a world-wide, desire.

Make people want something, and they will flood your plant with orders: that is the philosophy that animates modern selling.

We built the world's greatest automotive business not only by the selling of individual cars, but by making millions of people want to own cars.

A great deal of selling is done on an "across-the-desl Here, the salesman's chief selling tool is his knowledg his belief in the merits of the product or service which the television industry not only by selling creating a nation-wide desire for TV.

I could go over the roster of all American indicate what I mean when I say selling has key factor in our modern economy.

ins why selling now offers one of the highest atials in our time. The last census of the of Commerce showed that there are more ng above $5,000 in the selling profession ther; three times as many, indeed, as among second most prosperous group! Today one scores of salesmen who earn $100,000 a
.

rdly surprising. Never in its history has the es offered greater opportunities to those mericans who sell. Why do I say this? For ons:

untry now has more money to spend than it before. At the consumer level it is spending billions a year.

a is growing at the rate of more than 11,000
y—which means the needs and wants of ional people must be satisfied daily by in-ng.

f the 37,000,000 married couples of this oung couples—married less than 13 years—children. These families demand thousands in every conceivable field of production. It salesmanship which created this demand.
en will be able to reap the reward.

y years of intelligent selling techniques—in ide marketing, advertising and general pro-merica has been conditioned to want the latological advances; the most recent miracles
s, of transportation, of better home com-
, a prosperous America demands the latest t, and today's salesman will profit hand-that demand.

ans, many of whom now work only 40 hours ss, have more leisure than ever before. And s, among other things, time to look around ides, those very leisure hours have created a rket for hobby goods, musical supplies, do-quipment, and a thousand other wants for laxation.

considered, we see that the selling profession
e threshold of its most rewarding years.

, in variety of opportunity, in flexibility of t is unmatched by any other profession. The of today can make selling exactly what he e—a job of selling some specific article or a ideas and desires to an entire nation. And ation will rise in ratio to his efforts.

thing I must point out: A selling career is holly symbolic of American free enterprise.
competitive market is the mark of true
-of man's right and privilege to compete on with his fellow men. If you require proof to his thought, simply remember this: There nen in Russia! In the Soviet States, where dictates even what one may buy, there is no mpetitive selling.

ago, when a group of members of the es Executives attended a sales convention in of the world's leading statesmen came to sessions. He listened quietly as speaker after of American ingenuity, enterprise, methods.
e and said that he'd always thought mass was the secret of America's greatness—but er countries had mass production, too. He was because we enjoyed working hard and

To bring to American homes the marvels of comfortable living we know today, salesmen first create a demand, then satisfy it. With the aid of intelligent advertising and promotion, appliances, clothing, home furnishings and a myriad necessities and conveniences are sold to the public on a personal basis in the nation's retail outlets.

because we had huge natural resources—but other countries including his own could boast of those, too. But listening to all the speakers, that day, he had finally discovered what really makes America great—we make people want things!

What, in my opinion, are the qualifications for being a successful salesman in our day? I would list several:

1. Imagination. By this I mean the ability to deal with unexpected situations in effective and original ways.

2. Curiosity about people. A salesman must enjoy knowing people, studying them, understanding what they require for greater enjoyment of life.

3. A broad, diversified education—by which I mean an education that creates widespread interest in many facets of living. And salesmanship is a continuously educational process which enables the salesman to always meet new challenges. It is never static.

4. Enterprise—that quality some of us call energy, the determination to get ahead.

5. Integrity. A salesman's greatest asset is his personal honesty.

As to the compensations of a selling career, they are many indeed. Apart from the dollar-and-cents profits, there is always the great satisfaction of achievement. For every new sale is a tribute to a salesman's ability. The field is infinite in its variety and its rewards.

I think every salesman has the right, in our time, to regard himself as a member of a great and overwhelmingly important fraternity—the fraternity of men who are trying to sell not only consumer goods of all kinds, but great philosophic concepts of democracy as well. And compensation comes in true relation to the standard of selling which a man chooses for himself. Here is one field in which nobody has ever set a limit on potentials!

nylic

HOW TO HELP YOUR CHILD PREPARE FOR ANY CAREER

Whether your child is a toddler or in his teens, you are the keystone to whatever career he is to build. Your task is to inspire, guide and make possible. In the course of building his career many people will make contributions: teachers, researchers, specialists of many kinds.

One specialist—and his training and devotion to duty earn that title for him—is your New York Life agent. It is never too soon to enlist his aid—for he can help you to make sure that the future you plan for your child will become a reality.

Booklets available on other careers

This article on Selling is one of a continuing series on career opportunities for young men and women. Thus far, similar articles have been prepared on Newspapering, Law, Medicine, Accounting, Teaching, Architecture, Aeronautical Engineering, Public Service, Farming and Chemistry. Each is available in booklet form and will be sent to you on request. You'll also find additional help in our free booklet, "The Cost of Four Years at College." Just write:

NEW YORK LIFE
Insurance Company
51 Madison Ave., Dept. 11-J, New York 10, N.Y.

The New York Life Agent in Your Community is a Good Man to Know

ELEVENTH OF A SERIES OF ADVERTISEMENTS PRESENTED TO HELP GUIDE AMERICA'S CHILDREN TO A BETTER FUTURE

For easy days...

Perfect Rice Without Cooking!

1. It's prepared instantly. Just add Minute Rice to boiling water!
2. It's trouble-free. No washing! No boiling! No draining! No sticky pans!
3. It's foolproof. White, fluffy delicious rice—perfect every time!
4. It's just plain good eating—the easiest way to round out a well-balanced meal!

Product of General Foods

Journal About Town

Gossip about
people you know,
Editors you like,
and what goes on
in New York

ifty Years Ago in the Journal

I AM no longer a political acci-dent," boasted the winner of ıe November, 1904, presidential ection, Theodore Roosevelt. (He ıd already spent three and a alf years in office, finishing out ıe assassinated McKinley's rm.) Jack London wrote The ea Wolf; Dick Powell was born Mountain View, Arkansas; ıd down East in Maine, farm-s were cutting ice to be shipped Florida in schooners the fol-wing June.

Soup is taken from the side of ıe spoon, never from the end, cept by men with mustaches," dvises the November, 1904, OURNAL.

Trites the Lady from Philadel-ıia: "Guests at luncheons, teas ıd receptions wear hats and re-in their gloves while merely par-king of refreshments. They re-ove the gloves when seated at a ble and served a meal."

ealth tip: "Pulverized char-al is too harsh to be used abitually as a dentifrice."

Five on a Farm on $770 a Year: reakfast the year round consists a cereal, meat and potatoes, ffee and milk and either eggs or ckwheat cakes and sirup and it."

A wise plan for a woman with full figure is to have all her derwear made on yokes fit-d well down over the hips and stened in place with large rset hooks," believes the sew-g expert.

Girls of sixteen wear high-laced ack kid shoes with lighter kid ps and ankle-length shirtwaist wns."

The hot curling iron is re-onsible for much injury to ıe hair. Try rolling up the ir and fastening the curls ith hairpins."

I am in a quandary," writes a OURNAL reader. "I have lost my sband and do not know whether wear a bonnet or a hat. I am rty-five but look younger." An-er: "Wear a veiled chiffon toque."

STUART

Amid surroundings reminiscent of the first Thanksgiving Day, dressed to match the setting, Cynthia Wheatland enjoys an early Thanksgiving feast.

THERE are certain writers, photographers and members of the Food Department staff upstairs who have already had one Thanksgiving turkey. And it couldn't have been in a more traditional setting—namely, Old Sturbridge Village, in Massachusetts, a little period town with country stores and workshops from the past and people in colonial costumes. You'll see some of the old dishes and tableware more closely on pages 82 and 83, so carefully chosen for their dates that when Cynthia Wheatland, in proper clothes for the occasion, sat down to dinner, she had to watch which spoon she reached for—"lest I be ten years ahead of time," was how she put it. The only modern note was young David Treadway's joke just after Cynthia had tied on his napkin. "Grace!" he sang out, and started right in.

Speaking of period towns, if anyone asks you what you want for Christmas, you can say The Second Treasury of Early American Homes, which Richard Pratt has just done in collaboration with Dorothy Pratt. In it are all the fine old houses you have been seeing in the JOURNAL since the first Treasury came out five years ago, and some you haven't seen. All in color, of course, and with the emphasis this time on the wonderful early interiors. Sells for $12.50, published by Hawthorn Books, Inc. The first Treasury, selling out within two weeks of publication, went on the best-seller list.

Judy (A Star is Born) Garland gets her shirttail ironed.

PAT CLARK

Newest, biggest and prettiest book in our reception rooms is the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL BOOK OF INTERIOR DECORATION, by Elizabeth T. Halsey. There are 233 JOURNAL-size pages (lots of color pictures) filled with practical, usable information and advice about furniture, textiles, floor covering, color, lighting and many, many "how-to-do" ideas. Along with several JOURNAL editors, the Metropolitan Museum, the Brooklyn Museum, Yale University and others assisted. The decoration book, on sale November 1, costs $6.95 in bookstores. Or you can order it from Dept. 1707, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, with a bill to be sent later if you wish. (Pennsylvania residents must add seven cents for sales tax.) If you want a whole year of the JOURNAL and the Book of Interior Decoration—a handsome Christmas gift, indeed—the price is $9.77. When you place your order, be sure to list the names and addresses of the persons to whom you would like gifts sent. If you specify, Christmas orders will be sent direct to your friends along with an attractive gift card timed to arrive in the Christmas mails.

Honorable mention: to Anna Perrott Rose, a bronze Christopher medallion for her story Frightened Boy, which appeared in this magazine in May. She also wrote Jimmie John. Remember?

Peter Briggs had been telling Judy Garland about an actress he was taking to a party, who, after she seemed all fixed to go, had her maid bring the ironing board to press her skirt as she turned slowly around—then didn't sit down at the party. "Must be why this picture came today," said Peter, "of Judy having her shirt ironed for A Star is Born."

There's a good reason why this month's cover looks like Paris—Wilhela Cushman photographed it there in the gardens of the Tuileries. The fiacre was brought from the Champs Élysées. The girl wearing Christian Dior's cobalt-blue coat is Suzy Parker, an American living in Paris and loving it, making her living at both modeling and photography.

Make a note to see a collection of portrait dolls that may be coming your way—33 sculptured and costumed figures of all our First Ladies of the land from Martha Washington to Mamie Eisenhower. Ethel McLean, the sculptress who made and dressed them, took Dawn Norman and Dottie Robinson over for a preview. Many of the materials she used, she said, were from the original gowns. Thirty-three wives, thirty-three Presidents. "But I thought Buchanan was a bachelor," said Dottie. "He was," said Dawn. "But don't you remember? Wilson was married twice."

SOL LIBSOHN

Dawn Norman and Dottie Robinson look over "First Ladies" dolls.

Anne Einselen, guiding genius of our newly named Discovery Department for hitherto unpublished authors, remembers "the shriek of pure delight" that welcomed Frances Gray Patton's first story, The Terrible Miss Dove, back in 1946. Anne showed us the readers' reports on it, an unbroken series of yeses up to Hugh Kahler's "Yes, indeed! One of those stories I'll never forget!" And nobody at the JOURNAL has ever forgotten or will ever forget The Terrible Miss Dove. The newest story about her, Good Morning, Miss Dove, this month's complete-in-one-issue book condensation, is the October selection of the Book-of-the-Month Club, the first of the Discovery Department's many discoveries to achieve that distinction. It has also been chosen by the Reader's Digest Book Club and bought for filming by 20th Century-Fox.

Sincerely—Willis Wayde

"You're getting ideas about marrying the boss' daughter," his father said harshly,
"trying to be something you're not.
Maybe you'll end up like a Harcourt — but you'll never be a Harcourt!"

Here, in the first of five parts, begins a distinguished new serial

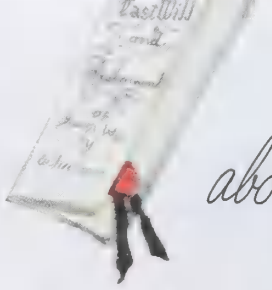
By JOHN P. MARQUAND

WILLIS WAYDE, just before he went to sleep, could shut his eyes and see every detail of the Harcourt place. He had never owned it and had never coveted it, but as his father might have said in engineering language, it did serve as a base of reference. In engineering when you set out to make a map, you started running your line and reading off from some fixed mark, and in life, too, everyone possessed some solid starting point. The Harcourt place and everything around it was like this for Willis and, whether he liked the idea or not, it meant more to him than any place he had ever owned or rented.

Though it was customary for people in Clyde, Massachusetts, to think of the Harcourt Mill and the Harcourt place as a part of Clyde, this was inaccurate. The Harcourt place and the mill were three miles upriver in a community known as Mill Village. The mill buildings were on the riverbank. The house stood on higher ground overlooking the small community, a typical picture of early industrial New England.

Willis first saw the Harcourt place late one afternoon in August, 1922, when he was fifteen. He and his mother had arrived in Boston in the morning. As long as they were in Boston, his mother said, they might as well spend a few hours seeing the sights, because it was a very historic city. There was a train for Clyde at three o'clock in the afternoon, leaving the North Station. They would send their trunks across the city by baggage transfer, and check their two suitcases in the parcel room of the South Station. His mother would buy a map of Boston at the newsstand and she would go to the restaurant and order breakfast while Willis arranged about the transfer company and carried the bags to the parcel checkroom. Willis was big enough to carry the bags, instead of tipping a porter, as long as they weren't traveling with his father, and looking after the suitcases and the trunks would be an experience for him.

"A map of Boston won't cost as much as giving something to a porter," his mother said. "We'll really be getting the map for nothing."



Even at half past nine in the morning it was very hot in the old South Station, and the heat covered his face with a sheet of moisture and his hair, under the old Stetson hat his father had passed on to CONTINUED ON PAGE 91

Copyright, 1954, by John P. Marquand

"I can talk to you better than anyone else," Bess said. "Maybe I love you.
But that would be awfully silly."

to kidnaping. He knew nothing about small boys.

bachelor, quite unaccustomed

Young man wit

Dr. John was a solemn young

By DOROTHY BLACK

DR. JOHN CLARE was very surprised when his Aunt Jessica died and left him a windmill. He had never known she had one. Neither, it appeared, had her lawyers, who wrote announcing the odd legacy.

"It came," wrote Mr. Puffit (of Diamond, Puffit and Tosswill), "as a great surprise to us."

Aunt Jessica had been a noisy and rather tiresome woman and her nephew had not seen much of her. She lived in Worthing. He lived in rooms on Campden Hill. He was a scientist, recognized, by those who recognize such things, as an exceptional man in his field of experimental physics.

The windmill could not have come his way at a better moment. Only that morning he had had a blazing row with his landlady. Once again there had been a black beetle in his milk jug. Doctor John did not notice much on the domestic side, but he was allergic to beetles. Hairs in the custard, thumbmarks on his pat of butter he let pass, but beetles, no. For his type of work he needed peace of mind. A row left him shattered and shaken, and he had of late had at least one a week. He would have given notice there and then, only he had no place to go, and he knew what happened to men who wandered round London with masses of manuscript and loads of books and no place to put them.

Now, thanks to his aunt, he had somewhere to go. The thought filled him with elation. Also, he felt ashamed that he had paid so little attention to her. Certainly not enough to merit a windmill. He wished now that he had taken the trouble to visit her more often, been more patient with her, taken her an occasional bunch of flowers. It is the old story. We think of it too late, and they are gone!

Their last meeting, he remembered, had been anything but a success. She was waiting for him on the steps of her boardinghouse, an ostrich feather in her hat, waving her arms to him in hilarious greeting as he came down the street, so that everyone looked at her. And she talked all the time in a very loud, rather shrill voice, so that everyone in the stuffy little dining room could hear what she said. What made it worse was she would talk of Vida. He was well rid of Vida, she said. A flighty girl like that would never make a good wife to a quiet man like himself.

"You want to find a sensible girl," she told him. "A girl able to take responsibility. You want a home and a family of your own, or you will get as odd as your uncle. It's in the family. What you want is to go about more."

It wasn't what he wanted at all. What he wanted was for his aunt to shut up. He remembered with shame, now, that he had practically told her so. And in spite of that she had heaped, so to speak, a windmill on his head.

He never wanted to discuss Vida with anyone. That was a chapter CONTINUED ON PAGE 204

ILLUSTRATED BY BARBARA SCHWINN

By ELVA WILLIAMS

DURING both the other divorces I was too young to know what it was all about. But now that I was fifteen, Mamma thought because of the publicity I should be away. "It might be embarrassing at school for Mona," she said. Mona—that's me. Meaning one. (Which goes to show what Mamma's intentions are about having more children no matter how many times she marries.)

It was decided, then, that Aunt Cindy and I, while Mamma was getting the divorce, would go from San Francisco through the Panama Canal to Antwerp. From Antwerp we'd go to Paris. By that time Mamma would have her papers and would fly to Paris and be waiting for us. She was taking the short way. Mamma always does.

Since it's happened twice now since papa, no one was very upset. You have to expect this kind of turmoil in the life of a film star. Aunt Cindy told Mamma she was going to wreck her life with all these marriages and divorces. But Mamma laughed that off and looked at Cindy in a worrying way. Because at twenty-six Cindy was still unmarried. At that age Mamma had had two experiences already. I suppose all this gives Cindy a feeling of being a little late.

Cindy had been all set to go to New York to study for twelve weeks with the world's greatest sculptor. But she had to cancel that to take me on the trip. "I had a hunch I wouldn't make it," Cindy said. "I wanted it too badly." Not that Cindy complained. She never does. Maybe she ought.

There's times, I think, when Cindy finds living up to Mamma pretty tough. Being the sister of a great star must cramp a woman's style, even though she's got a lot to offer herself. Cindy looks exactly like Mamma. But Mamma got there first. She's the original. Mamma's hair is no blonder than Cindy's. But she does something about it. And when Mamma walks you know it's a woman walking. But when Cindy walks, it's just to get there. Their figures are about the same, though Mamma has to practically starve to keep hers that way and is always pulling in her belt to show how much she's lost around the waist. Naturally, this gets people to examining her figure and finding it's pretty good. Being a sculptor you'd think Cindy would know all about how to draw attention to her own figure. But she never seems to remember to do it.

The ship Cindy and I were taking was a Norwegian cargo ship that carried only thirty passengers. Except for the sound of the winches loading cargo, there wasn't any commotion at all when we went aboard. No glamour, no excitement. Nothing like the time two years ago when we saw Mamma off from New York on the Queen.

"But it's a sweet little ship," Mamma said when she saw it. She was trying to cheer us up. Cindy and I both knew she wouldn't be caught dead on such a ship herself. She was wearing her dark glasses so that no one would know who she was. She pretended to be interested in the dining room and the salon and the bar. And when she saw our stateroom she exclaimed at its comfort. "Why, it's twice the size of my room on the Elizabeth," she said. She inspected the clothes closets and approved. Then she sat down and watched through the open door the passengers coming on board. Some of them we'd been told had been aboard since Vancouver and you could tell them at once from the newcomers because CONTINUED ON PAGE 214

akes it so

ew personality," said Mark...

She could feel herself changing...into someone beautiful, glamorous...

Kefauver's Secre

DAN

"The women did it." Mrs. King Jamison, state chairman of the Women's Division for Kefauver, pauses for conference with her candidate at courthouse rally in Cleveland, Tenn.

Weapon:

"You have to talk about issues," says Edna Jamison, "just as regularly as you have to get dinner or wash the dishes or perform any other task."

"I used to make fun of women like me," admits Mrs. King Jamison, "but now I know anybody who talks has influence, and I learned that Government is just good housekeeping."

THIS November election day in Tennessee holds no terrors for Mrs. King Jamison, an alert-eyed, soft-voiced "housewife and mother" of Jackson, Tennessee. And when Edna Jamison isn't worried, Senator Estes Kefauver doesn't worry either!

The battle for Senator Kefauver's re-election was fought in the hot summer months of June and July—and won on a very hot summer day, August 5, the date of the Democratic primary (when victory is tantamount to November election, in Tennessee).

Mr. and Mrs. Jamison and their younger son Frankie arrived in Nashville in late evening, after the hundred-and-forty-mile ride from their Jackson home, to look in on the victory scene at Senator Kefauver's headquarters in the old Maxwell House. The hotel's slightly faded last-century grandeur of gilt and mirror had disappeared completely behind crowds of jubilant, incoherent people.

Senator Kefauver, pulling his wife Nancy with him, pushed through the crowd to hurry Mrs. Jamison away with his other campaign leaders to a TV station. It was time for the first "statement."

The senator read his statement, and then Nancy, smiling wonderfully, was brought forward. "The women did it," she said with simple finality—and Mrs. Jamison's mind jerked awake. "I know—because I saw them."

"And now I want the people to see ——" Senator Kefauver was saying, and he took her arm to bring her forward. "Ladies and gentlemen, this is Mrs. King Jamison—our secret weapon!"

Edna Jamison was nearing the end of an adventure that had begun on a February night, six months before, in her quiet living room. Frankie, just fourteen (they'd celebrated his birthday two weeks earlier), was sprawled on the floor with a friend, playing chess. King was pulling at the inevitable cigar, now half smoked, and studying the newspaper.

Edna had been thinking about King, Jr., and "Kitten," Mr. Jamison's name for the bride of the family. It didn't seem possible that Ens. King Jamison, Jr., attached to the Eighth Naval District headquarters in New Orleans, had a bride of three months, and would be twenty-three this summer! They'd all gone down to see "the children" at New Year's.

Then the phone rang, and "long distance" asked for Mrs. King Jamison. A man's voice, in a pleasant drawl, said, "Edna, this is Estes. I really meant it when I said I wanted you to help me this summer. I want you to be state chairman of the Women's Division."

"But I'm not known!" she exclaimed, too startled to think clearly. Mrs. Jamison had first heard of the plan just two days earlier when Martha (Mrs. Tom Ragland), who directed the Women's Division for Kefauver in 1948, suggested that Edna "think about the state job"—suggested it so casually that Mrs. Jamison thought she was joking.

"I told Martha," she went on now to Senator Kefauver, "I couldn't leave King and Frankie to go to Nashville. I don't have a car and don't know how to drive. So many women are better known ——"

"I've thought of all of that," Senator Kefauver said, "and I still want you. Think about it, but call me as soon as you can."

Edna Jamison hung up the telephone and looked at her husband. "They really mean it. King!" she said. "What shall I say? What do you think?"

They talked it over. Next day Mrs. Jamison taught in Sunday school (the adult women's class she has led for thirteen years), attended church with her family, put Sunday dinner on the table, all in an abstracted way. That afternoon she called up a young lawyer friend whose judgment she trusted.

"What will happen to my 'causes'?" she asked. "You know how I've worked for the schools, and the League's educational program. I do believe in Estes—I have since he was first elected to Congress. But if I take on this campaign, won't I make enemies in Jackson?"

"You may—but not many, and they won't be enemies long," the lawyer told her. "Take it. In the long run it will be good for all your causes."

That night Edna Jamison thought of the map of Tennessee—ninety-five counties, hundreds of towns and cities, over three million people—all a blank to her except for her small home area. "I didn't know how to do it, but suddenly I wanted to find out—so much I forgot to be scared!"

Mrs. Jamison telephoned Senator Kefauver next morning and told him yes. Then she called Martha Ragland in Nashville. Martha was as delighted as the senator, and she and Mrs. Jamison arranged to spend a day together to talk over the new organization.

In 1948 Martha Ragland had resigned as state president of the League of Women Voters to organize the Women's Division for Kefauver, the first women's organization in politics in Tennessee's history. After Mrs. Ragland was elected Democratic National Committeewoman from Tennessee in 1952, she felt she should not take active part in the party primary, but her experience and know-how were to be invaluable to the new state chairman of the Women's Division.

Two days after her telephone talk with Martha, Edna Jamison got up at 2:30 in the morning to catch a Nashville bus—so her day would be as long as possible! Since Mrs. Jamison does not drive, buses were to be her stand-by in the months that followed.

"The campaign people in Nashville were shocked when they heard about my bus trips," she laughs, "but I've found I can make notes for a speech, answer

CONTINUED ON PAGE 208

King welcoming the state chairman back from campaign trip. "I haven't had a decent cup of coffee since you left," he told her. King helped paint and arrange office headquarters in their Jackson, Tennessee, home, and went with her on all long trips.

By ROSEMARY JONES

The whole town was aghast! Miss Dove—more dependable than the sea

By FRANCES GRAY PATTON

LIBERTY HILL was a small fresh-water town—not a hill, really, but just a modest rise in the land—where the streets were named for trees and heroes and a sense of life's continuity ran in the air. It was like a hundred American towns, smug and cozy, and it put its special stamp upon its own. People born and raised there—high and low, rich and poor—were neighbors in an almost cousinly way because their imaginations had been nursed on the same sights and sounds and legends and early ordeals. They had played in the same sunny fields and cooled off after the heat of their games in the same shade. They had grown up hearing the same courthouse clock tell the hours and the halves in a tone as timeless as time itself. They had all, for the space of a whole generation, been exposed at a tender and malleable age to the impartial justice and the calm, neutral eyes of the same teacher—the terrible Miss Dove.

This community of experience was absorbed, of course, into the stream of consciousness. It was so settled, so accustomed, that it seemed a manifestation of natural law. Like the dew on the grass or the return of morning light (that recurrent miracle that passes for a commonplace), it excited no wonder. But if the light had failed to return, if the voice of the clock had fallen silent—even in the night when it wasn't heard—then people would have remembered. And so when, without warning, the tenor of Miss Dove's existence was interrupted—when she was seen, at an hour when she should have been in the geography room at Cedar Grove School, being borne down the sidewalks in the direction of the hospital—then Liberty Hill fastened its hand upon its heart!

The Wednesday upon which Miss Dove took sick began in an ordinary way. It was April. The weather was mild. The sun rose at five-twenty-one, two minutes earlier than it had risen on CONTINUED ON PAGE 118

Copyright, 1954, by Frances Gray Patton. This is a condensation of the novel—Book-of-the-Month Club selection for October—recently published by Dodd, Mead & Co., Inc.

THE JOURNAL'S COMPLETE-IN-ONE-ISSUE CONDENSED NOVEL

Good morning

more punctual than the sun — had a very human weakness.

"Spine straight,
Miss Dove,"
Thomas warned her.
"Don't wobble about."
"It is not my custom to wobble," said Miss Dove.

Miss Dove

VANDAM

Charmed by the spa ing "Shall We Dance?" ene with Yul Brynner, her audience saw no t of pain or worry in Ge ide's last performance, th weeks before her de "She never gave les an her best. . . ."

COWLES SYN.

"What's the matter with us?" Gee asked. "We've been together weeks, and we haven't quarreled about anything! Are we getting adjusted, or just middle-aged? Anyway, it's strangely satisfying."

GERTRUDE LAWRENCE AS "Mrs. A"

By RICHARD STODDARD ALDRICH

CONCLUSION

I HAD hoped to have Gertrude with me at the Cape and in New York that autumn and winter of 1949. However, at that point Hollywood and The Glass Menagerie re-entered our lives. Shortly before Gertrude returned from her long engagement in England, feelers had been put out from the film capital to inquire if she would accept the role of the mother in a motion picture of the Tennessee Williams play.

I was opposed to her accepting the offer, and since she specifically sought my opinion, I made no bones about saying so. She had not been seen on Broadway since the record-breaking run of Pygmalion nearly three years before. I suggested that she take time to select a play to appear in that season. And I pointed out that there were a number of older actresses who might be thankful to get The Glass Menagerie role. Why should she, and the studio make-up department, struggle unduly to turn her into something she was not?

"I know, darling," she said to all my arguments. "Always Right Aldrich! But just the same, I feel I'd like to have a go at it."

It was, I realized, her uncontrollable impulse to respond to a dare. A lot of people would think she could not do it; and she would show them. "All right," I told her. "Go ahead if that's what you really want to do. But I insist on two things. First, they must write into the script several flash backs to show her as she was young and beautiful in her heyday, and as you really are. Perhaps you don't mind if you appear before the movie-goers of the globe made up with a wrinkled neck and sagging cheeks and a middle-aged spread, but I do."

"Richard!" Gertrude was out of her chair and across the room, studying herself in a mirror. "What do you mean—middle-aged spread? I don't bulge anywhere."

I grinned at her. "Exactly," I said. "Then why let anyone think you do? Art or no art. That's why I insist on the flash backs. It's a long time since you made a picture; not since Rembrandt with Charles Laughton in 1935. The audiences all over the world who will see The Glass Menagerie will be made up largely of people who never saw you. Let them have their first view of Gertrude Lawrence as she is."

Gertrude admitted the wisdom of this. "What is your other condition, darling?" she asked.

"That you take a small house in Beverly Hills. Have Hazel to look after you. I'll fly out to spend Christmas with you and as much more time as we both can manage. The picture should be finished by the first of the year and I can bring you home with me."

The plan pleased her. Characteristically, she began at once planning for us to drive home from California, as she had long wanted to do, stopping at motels and seeing what she called "the real America." Gertrude arrived in Hollywood early in October, and at once plunged wholeheartedly into preparing for her role.

Merle Reeve, the hair stylist, has said she never saw an actress work so hard and unselfishly to help bring about a characterization. "I don't look old enough," Gertrude would say. "Put more gray on my hair, and give me more wrinkles."

Copyright, 1954, by Richard Stoddard Aldrich.
The complete book is soon to be published by the Greystone Press

CONTINUED ON PAGE 157

Angus, her Highland terrier, watches and waits.

"I swore once that I wou love you till I die; it seems that I must keep a vow."

Katherine

CONCLUSION

By ANYA SETON

WHILE the duke was in Scotland Katherine was housed in the pilgrim hostel at Waltham Abbey. It was not for rest that Katherine lingered there two days but because Waltham was part of her penance. She spent hours in the abbey praying for the repose of Hugh's soul and asking his forgiveness.

There were no other pilgrims at the hostel. The revolt and its consequent dangers had quenched most folks' wish for the open road. Instead, the hostel housed several of the homeward-bound peasants.

Katherine sat apart from the others, who paid no attention to her. A penitential pilgrim in widow's weeds was a common sight. She was plunged so deep in her own misery that she noticed no one.

But on the morning that she intended to set forth again toward Walsingham, the voices of the men around the trestle tables aroused her attention. She heard them repeatedly mentioning the king. There had been a proclamation. The king was coming today to Waltham.

What was he coming for? cried a blacksmith. Why, to hand out the rest of the charters of freedom, of course, answered someone against a chorus of uneasy assent.

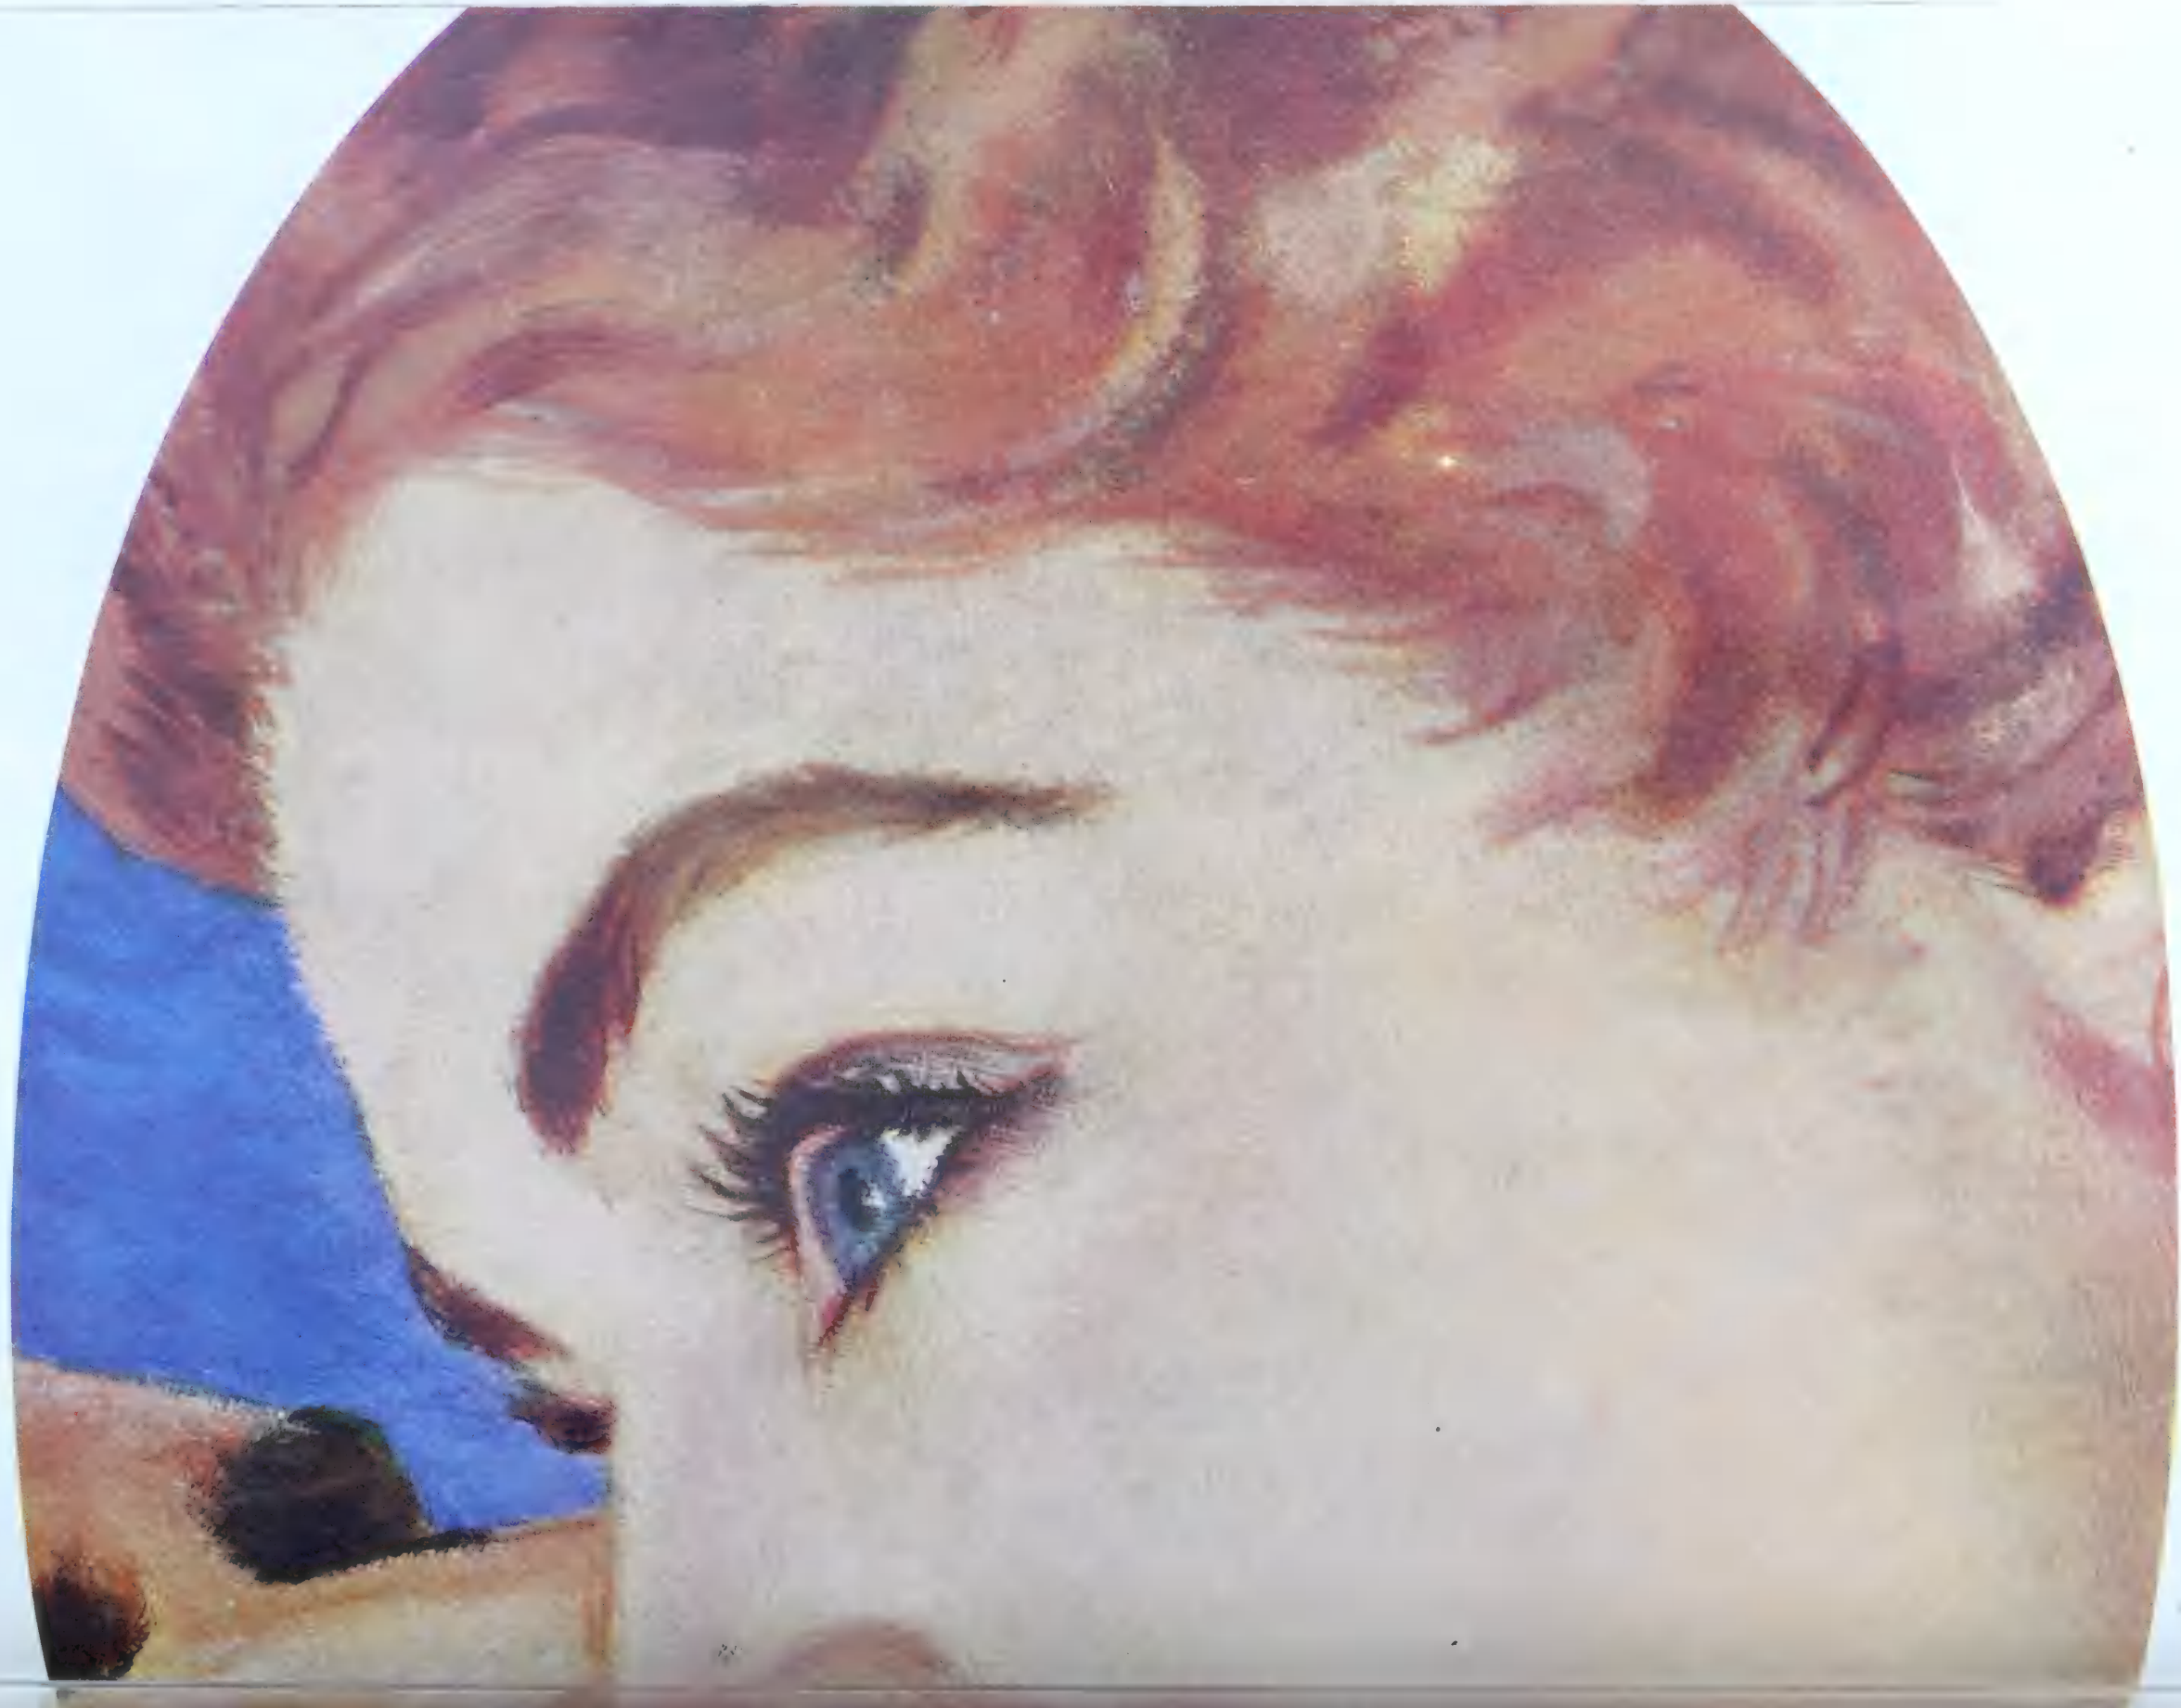
Katherine had no interest in the rebels now, though she had put to them one question on her arrival here. Had any of them taken part in the burning of the Savoy? They all said "Nay," except one Suffolk lad who proudly said that he had, and a rare fine sight it had been too.

"Did you see anything of a little maid with close-cropped hair, a lass of fourteen in a gray chamber robe?" she asked.

The Suffolk lad said "Nay" but also said that there was such a mort of people running about he wouldn't know one from t'other.

Katherine had thanked him with weary patience.

Suddenly now at mention of the king's name, Katherine's detachment was pierced by a forlorn hope. Might it be that Richard had heard something of Blanchette?



When the band of peasants surged from the hostel toward an open heath in Waltham Forest, Katherine followed, as did a crowd of villagers.

They waited long before they heard the royal trumpets and the pound of galloping hoofs approaching down the forest road. When Richard came at last, he galloped up among an army of four thousand soldiers. As he saw the group of peasants waiting, he shouted exultantly, "Here's another foul nest of traitors! Seize them!" CONTINUED ON PAGE 190

Copyright, 1954, by Anya Seton Chase. The complete novel was recently published by Houghton Mifflin Co.

ILLUSTRATED BY PRUETT CARTER

The beige of the future is pale blond—this tweed suit by Christian Dior with its longer-length jacket will last and last. The hat is edged with nutria to match muff and ascot.

THE PARIS SCENE IN COLOR

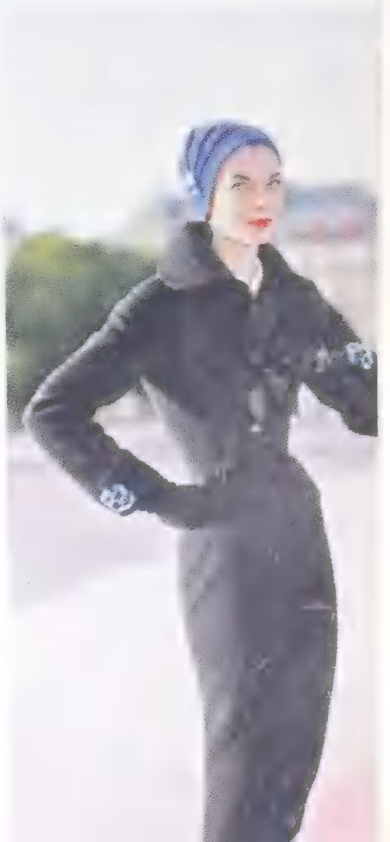
Gayest youngest wool in Paris (photographed on the Champs Élysées)—Balma Scotch-plaid dress with pleated skirt, basque edged with Persian lamb, beret and muff mat ing fur. The use of fur trimming is typical of Paris fashions for fall and winter,

The red of the hour is American Beauty red-red—this is Givenchy's coat lined with printed taffeta, over a violet suit.

Chanel makes clothes American women love—this beige wool-jersey suit is worn with year-round camel-beige wool topcoat.

Short-jacket suit in coral-red wool, smoothly molded (not sharply nipped), has universal appeal. Crushed velours hat, matching red. By Hubert de Givenchy.

PHOTOGRAPHED IN PARIS BY WILHELA CUSHMAN



Black-and-white—very nubby tweed suit, a significant fashion in the short-jacket silhouette by Balenciaga. Black velours hat.

This flecked beige-and-russet tweed suit with leather belt by Chanel can be country or city style. Worn with scarlet pull-over.

The fashion of coral-red corduroy in a tunic-length coat with new epaulet shoulders, by Balenciaga.

Paris' favorite fashion is black tweed. This exciting luncheon and dinner suit has deep neckline, big jewels. By Jacques Fath.

By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

PRIMARIL

Black tweed, fabric of the year, in a suit that answers every need, $69.95, by Alvin Handmacher, is worn with red velvet beret by Rex, a Persian-lamb ascot, and black velvet-and-patent-leather bag.

The coat that goes perfectly with a black wardrobe is two-tone black and red wool, $59.95, by Alvin Handmacher. American Beauty red wool jersey dress by Lotte, $45.00, is an all-day fashion. Black satin beret, $3.95, black velvet bag, $5.00.

BLACK

FUNDAMENTALS OF A WARDROBE,

BASED ON BLACK, SPLASHED WITH COLOR

HERE is fashion, and an unbeatable theory. The tweed suit is so versatile that it can be worn with sat blouse or sports sweater. One or two black dresses (plus imagination) look like ten. The coat s e new two-tone fashion. A wool dress can be any color, the color you love. Black lasts a long in, saves importantly, gives you the beautiful feeling of always having "something to wear." Step it up ith two or three colors at a time—pink, sapphire blue, flame, gold. This year's prettiest color additions: a multistrand necklace, a satin or velvet beret, soft velvet bag. By RUTH MARY PACKARD

The tweed suit skirt becomes a black-and-color costume with velveteen or jersey tops, to change through several seasons.

Black wool crepe jacket dress, by Olga Schwartz, keys accessories to time of day. Worn for afternoon with China-blue beads, pearls, white gloves.

Dancing-and-dinner dress has a full skirt, is rayon-and-acetate version of peau de soie, $39.95. Pink-ruby velvet purse, a medallion pin.

3 DRESSES = 9 COSTUMES

SHOES BY HERBERT LEVINE

SHOES BY BEN SOMMERS

GRAY WORSTED with jersey dyed to match makes a wonderful basic two-piece costume. Vogue Design 8419, 12 to 20. We show it with a crisp white linen sailor collar, No. 8469, adding a long striped silk-foulard tie. For evening, the worsted skirt, a strapless bodice of white re-embroidered lace, turquoise satin sash. Bodice, No. 7948; sash, No. 8405.

BLACK WOOL sheath pretty neckline, tiny sleeves h ways of looking. The pattern i wonderful shirt-jacket shown shocking-pink satin. Or you m

We love to make one dress do double duty—or, better still, triple duty.

A tweed jumper that can go to dinner, to town or to the country . . . a black sheath with a gay satin shirt-jacket or a plaid wool overblouse. A gray worsted skirt with matching jersey . . . or the skirt with a white lace bodice for dancing.

By NORA O'LEARY, Pattern Editor of the Journal

ROGER PRIGENT

...ıe dress with a tartan-plaid ...r blouse with a drawstring. ...re and jacket, Vogue Design ...9, 12 to 20. The overblouse, ...sign No. 8045*, 12 to 18.

© VOGUE

JEWELRY BY HATTIE CARNEGIE

BLUE TWEED jumper dressed up with gay jewelry and a matching blue taffeta sash makes a pretty dinner dress. Worn with matching tweed waist length jacket (we added a black lapin collar) it looks like a suit. For a sportier look, wear a blue wool jersey hooded blouse underneath. The jumper, Vogue Design No. 8460, 12 to 20; jacket, Design No. 8429; jersey blouse with hood, Design No. 8423.

Other Views, Sizes and Prices on page 162

Design No. 8045 is available by mail order only, from Vogue Pattern Service. Buy other Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order, from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Connecticut; or in Canada from 198 Spadina Avenue, Toronto, Ontario. Some prices slightly higher in Canada. (*Connecticut residents please add sales tax.) These patterns will be sent third-class mail. If you desire shipment first-class mail, please include 5c additional for each pattern ordered.

A career couple entertain here at evening. R grass-cloth walls, curtains of white silk gauz in gold. Rug is moss-green wool with natur keyed to walls. Sofa, persimmon cotton a threaded with gold. Pillows, grape rayon, eme
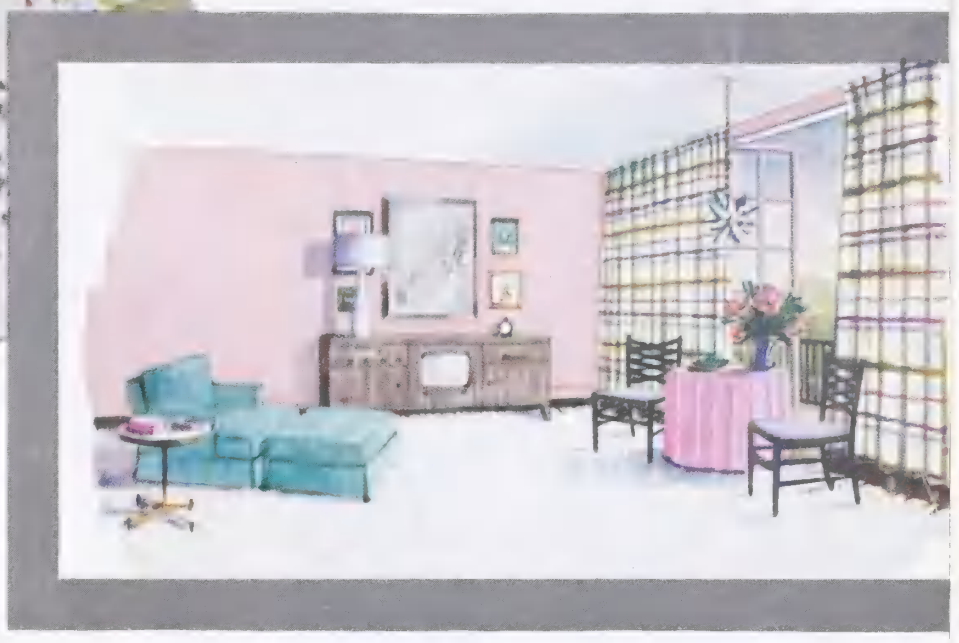
Other accents might be chartreuse felt, oyste

Room for young sophisticates

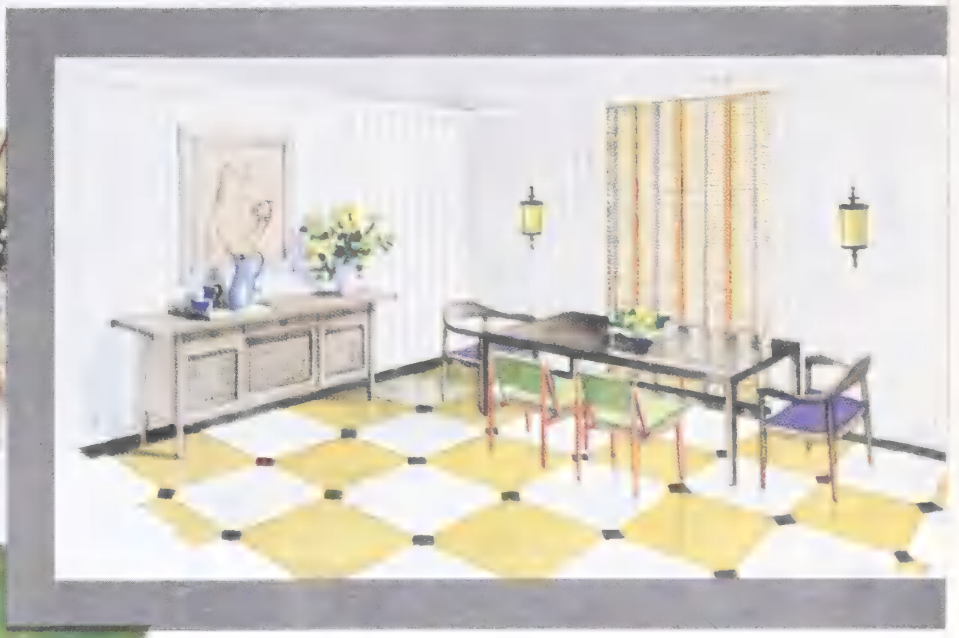
News in Color



Room where past and present meet

The family in this case wanted a modern room with traditional flavor. Walls are midnight blue. Draperies, organdy embroidered in white on white and crisply tailored. Rug, washable aqua cotton. Sofa's powder-blue fabric is printed in silver and black, a pouf is firecracker-pink silk and an easy chair violet velvet.

Sitting room for new marrieds mixes pink and plaid. Draperies are white silk, brilliant in multicolor design. Rug of fleece-white rayon is cotton-fringed. Hand-woven aqua cotton covers a chair, a café table is swathed in pink cotton tweed. Cyclamen silk and colorfully threaded blue linen are compatible too.



Room for the young in heart

Four room patterns in color create contemporary settings for today's homes.

T. WILLIAMS
the author

Room for good food and good talk

A country home uses white plank walls, floor of black, white and gold rubber tile. Accessories, two carriage lamps. Shade, split reed laced with gold thread and yellow, russet and black yarn. Furniture, polished wood. Chairs lacquered tangerine are upholstered in lime linen; alternates could be purple cotton, buttercup linen or a slim striped silk.

WASHINGTON PORTRAITS

Five busy, well-known women in the nation's capital, photographed in the type of fashion they wear most.

By WILHELA C
Fashion Edi

Mrs. Katherine G. Howard

As Special Adviser to the Federal Civil Defense Administrator, Mrs. Howard has many speaking engagements. This black silk faille with blue satin at the neckline is right for any hour, a fashion she can wear to the office and luncheons or meetings.

Madame J. Herman van Roijen

the wife of The Netherlands' Ambassador to the United States, wears this pale gray pleated silk-crepe dress to many luncheons and afternoon teas. Her hat is deep carnation-red velvet.

JOHN ENGSTEAD

er Ferguson

Senator Ferguson, of Michigan, finds a dinner dress one of her most useful fashions. This one is blue brocade.

Mrs. Herman Phleger

whose husband is Legal Adviser to the Department of State, entertains in her Georgetown home or goes to small dinners in short black ribbed satin dress, worn with a three-strand pearl collar.

Mrs. Marguerite Stitt Church

Representative from Illinois, practically lives in a suit, goes straight from the "floor" to dinner. Her favorite is a dark gray wool, worn with small velvet hat.

ARTHUR GRIFFIN

THIS DAY

GIVE THANKS

By Ann Batchelder

THIS year I wanted to do more than go back in my mind and heart to this feast of our fathers' fathers. The thought spurred me on to cross the covered bridge (and you know well my love for covered bridges) to Sturbridge Village in Massachusetts. A complete village it is, from church to country store and mill, restored to re-create for all who come there the life of the people in Colonial days. There in the tavern, so often the scene of special festivities in early days, we set our Thanksgiving, 1954, table, selecting authentic old pewter and china from the cupboards of the little village houses to bear our feast.

Turkey for dinner, and pumpkin pie. The old song "Dinner's ready in the dining room" is the theme song of the day. Sing it high, hum it low. Spices, of which to the New-England-bred nose no perfume of Araby is an equal, fill the warm air as it floats in from countless kitchens.

So in New England tradition, our Thanksgiving dinner is planned and you will add your own traditional touches. Most of us have them. The receipts themselves are of today, but they

CONTINUED ON PAGE 178

A BILL OF FARE

Fruit Bowl Celery and Olives Cranberry Juice
Fresh Oyster Soup
Roast Native Turkey
Giblet Gravy Corn-Bread Stuffing
Squash Mashed Turnips Buttered Onions Succotash
Baked Potato Cranberry Sauce Wild-Grape Jelly
Fresh Garden Salad
Cider
Corn Sticks Cream-of-Tartar Biscuits
Pumpkin Pie Mince Pie
Marlborough Pie Maple-Butternut Cake Fruitcake
Vermont Cheddar Cheese
Coffee Milk

STUART-FOWLER

There's a Man in the House

by Harlan Miller

I've just congratulated my Dream Girl on her new dress, because it dramatizes the girl instead of itself. . . . Most men I know admire a dress which says, "Golly, what a girl!" instead of, "Golly, what a dress!"

We agreed at the club round table the other noon that, all in all, Vilma Banky was probably the loveliest woman the movies ever misused; though a few diehard isolationists held out for Lillian Gish. (For the prettiest of 1954 our eleven votes went to eleven different actresses.)

I marvel at how skillfully my mother managed our household finances. . . . No matter how low my dad trimmed her household allowance, she always saved a few dollars he might borrow in a crisis; and no vegetable peddler could fool her on a muskmelon!

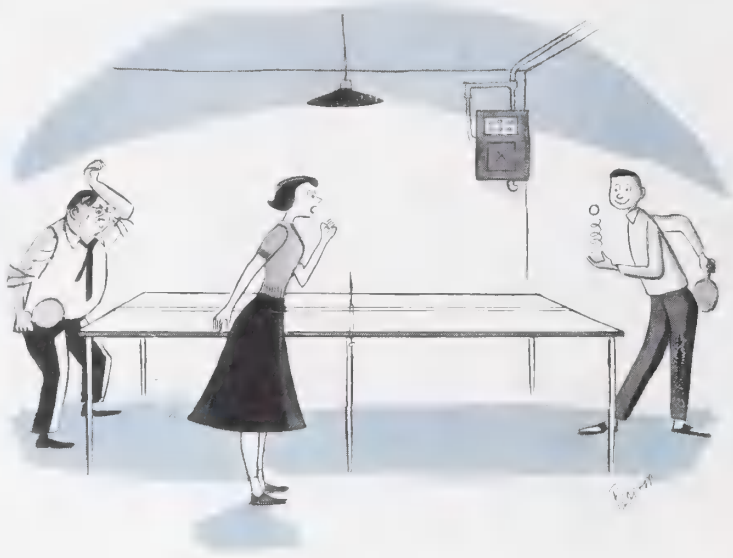
Why shouldn't people believe in mental telepathy? Why do I always get two or three phone calls just when I've lathered up my face to shave?

Some days the cruel pinch of tight elastic on my socks seems a more immediate problem than our foreign relations with—shall I say?—Pakistan. . . . In fact, as soon as I snip the elastic the Pakistan tension eases too.

Latest outburst of idol-worship at our house goes to our new automatic washer. . . . Our womenfolk are now everlastingly on the prowl for more things to wash, and claim there's a control on the machine which'll mend sheets and sew on buttons.

Ah, this brave new world! At a bridge table the other evening we calculated that we know twenty-three couples now divorced and fourteen people who've undergone shock treatment. (But we don't know anybody who wears a toupee or a glass eye.)

I've finally convinced my family I can't get over my "poor boy" complexes: against refrigerators left open too long; clothes not hung up, or discarded before they're well worn; leftovers not used up; lights left burning, houses overheated all irk me. (It's easier to humor me than argue.)



One of our legal eagles is proudly showing around a carbon copy of a letter he wrote our two U. S. senators.

"I told 'em to open a window in the Senate or repair the ventilation system," he says. "We smell something strange."

We debated hotly our town's high schools at lunch. "Who learns anything in high school, anyhow?" somebody asked.

"Well," said one of our wellborn luncheers, "I learned more at Exeter than I did at Harvard!"

My campaign for frankfurter, salad and ice-cream dinner parties is faltering, much as I wish we could entertain all our well-beloved friends at least once a year. "I'd have to get down all my best dishes," my official hostess argues. "Anyhow, good hot dogs cost more'n chicken."

"Remember, Keith, father is the champion. Nobody has beaten father. Nobody!"

I wish the romantic lingo of the collegians might be clarified by a faculty ruling. What are the symbols and ground rules for going steady, pinned, engaged, exclusive dating or catch-as-catch-can? Some stubborn parents remain curious and mystified.

Every autumn at home-coming we attend a buffet luncheon off the tailboard of a station wagon, tossed by one of my Dream Girl's campus beaux of long ago. . . . But if our seats happen to be near one of my college sweethearts, she suspects collusion.

One of our town's fortyish grandmas has gained a lap triumphantly on the infant's parents and on all rival grandparents in town: she's read clear through twice at least three books on baby lore and can quote Spock and Gesell from the hip.

"At last I've heard the inside story of all fourteen divorces involving my girlhood and college chums," confides Betty Comfort, repairing her nine-year-old's football helmet, "and eleven of 'em confess they wish they hadn't."

Our country-club philosopher blessed us with $3,000 worth of free psychiatric advice on the terrace.

"Modern man needs outdoor sport," he said, "and he needs books and music. Each is worth a thousand dollars a year against high tension."

So, a nickel in the jukebox?

I've now shot off $15 worth of shotgun shells, $9 worth of clay pigeons; so I'm as ready for the wild ducks as I'll ever be. . . . All except perhaps ordering a few home-grown tame mallards to pick up on our way home from our duck expedition.

"What a deal I've just put over with my wife!" reports Peter Comfort, winking as he tightens his son's handle bars. "We've agreed I'll help Junior with his manual training if she'll help him with his geometry!"

Vexed as I am by our youngest's lavish camera hobby, it'd be partly worthwhile if I could sneak a snapshot of him in his most characteristic pose, his head inside the refrigerator.

Our great state, long enamored of its concrete cowpaths, is now strong for a four-lane turnpike! And if we build a four-laner, our jealous sister states will take the plunge with six-laners. Just for spite.

. . . When I run across the boxful of my daughter's shorn red hair I used to save for a toupee,

. . . And Junior chooses my favorite phonograph records to take to college with him,

. . . Or our youngest gives me a tolerant junior-high nod of Jovian approval for something I've done.

. . . And my Dream Girl warns me I'm working too hard and kidnaps me in the middle of a sentence for thirty minutes of tennis,

. . . Then I'm glad her bonnie profile lured me away from my earlier dream of manning a lonely lighthouse.

Can this marriage be saved?

DON ORNITZ

SHE: "I haven't seen Gregory for nearly three years. My husband doesn't believe it. He is driving me crazy with his jealousy and suspicions."

HE: "With Gina's confession my world fell to pieces. She deceived me before our marriage. She will deceive me again."

One of the first lessons brides and grooms must learn is that they must create in their marriage new patterns based on the needs of the marriage, instead of trying to perpetuate old patterns they learned in childhood. People too often enter matrimony with great expectations—tailored to fit someone else, not this partner. Results of such miscalculations are evident in almost every one of the 15,000 consultations given each year at the office of the American Institute of Family Relations, 5287 Sunset Boulevard, Los Angeles 27, California, and in the thousands of letters received yearly from every part of the continent. The Institute's counselors are able to give effective help to 80 per cent of their clients, and the accompanying case history shows how one fine young couple were prevented from destroying their own marriage. The counselor in this case was Mrs. Carolyn Sichel. PAUL POPENOE, SC.D., Director.

Dr. Paul Popenoe

GINA TELLS HER SIDE:

"JOHN and I haven't exchanged a civilized or sensible word since the night I told him about Gregory," said twenty-one-year-old Gina, a bride of six months. She was hollow-eyed, haggard, her pretty face drawn. "I haven't seen Gregory for nearly three years. My husband doesn't believe it. He is driving me crazy with his jealousy and his suspicions.

"For the last four months, John and I have incessantly rehashed every detail of my past. Regularly each day I am put through a fresh cross-examination. The minute I get home from work John is off. He follows me wherever I go: to the kitchen while I unpack the groceries, prepare and cook dinner; after dinner while I am washing and drying the dishes. If I ask him to help with the dishes, he refuses. Then I get angry at his meanness and say so, but he always swings our quarrel back to the subject of Gregory and me and—himself.

"When I fall into bed, exhausted—it's way past midnight by then—John crawls in beside me, still talking. He shakes me to keep me awake. I don't average five hours' sleep a night.

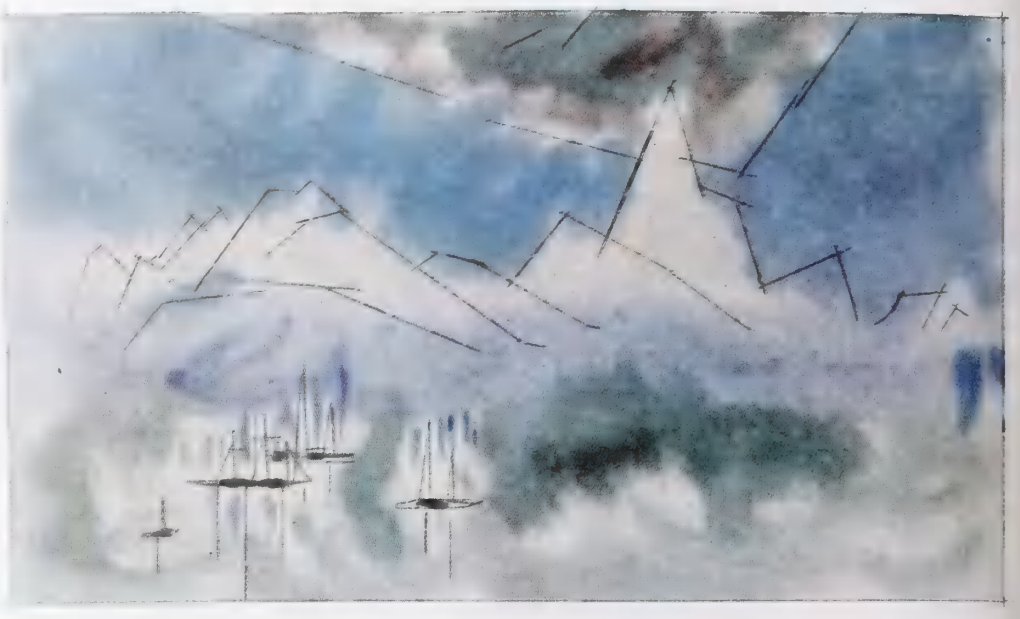
"I love my husband," said Gina, "but our present existence is torture. John has already made himself sick. Six weeks ago he was obliged to drop out of college and quit his job. Our doctor says his illness is mainly psychosomatic, but I think John is also taking too many thyroid pills. I'm healthier than John. So far I've been able to hang onto my job—I graduated from college last year, and since September I've been teaching music in junior high.

"The junior-high principal has complained of my inferior work and because I haven't attended any P.T.A. meetings. John won't allow me to be away from our apartment in the evening. If I'm fired from my job—I have only a temporary contract—I don't know what will happen to us. We spent all John's savings furnishing the apartment. I earn barely enough to meet our rent and buy groceries and pay for my piano lessons. John's father is rich, but he won't send John and me money, and in any case John is too proud to accept money from his father.

"I'm largely to blame for the mess we're in." Gina drew a long, painful breath. "I didn't play fair with John. How I wish I'd had the courage to tell him about my past before our marriage! But I was ashamed and I was afraid to risk losing John. If he knew the truth, I was afraid I couldn't hold his love.

"I did lose Gregory, you see. Losing Gregory after what we had been to each other was awfully hard on my self-respect and confidence, my pride. Giving all of yourself to a man who wants only a part of you is a—a miserable thing. When I met Gregory I was just seventeen—he was an ex-GI and a college senior and I was a sophomore—and he promised we would be married when he received his degree. I was dumb enough to believe him. Gregory lived off the campus; things happened and—well—we had an affair that lasted from Christmas until June. My college roommate used to sign me in for the dormitory bed check and rumple my sheets in the morning and Gregory drove me back to school in time for the breakfast check. I knew I was doing wrong, of course. My conscience knew. The June I was eighteen and Gregory got his degree he married somebody else and moved away.

"There's no use my explaining how I suffered the year I was eighteen," said Gina to the counselor. "For months I thought people could read at a glance what I had done and what had happened to me, as though there was a big scarlet letter pinned on my blouse. But nobody saw, nobody guessed. My parents are stern, religious people. I wasn't worried my father would suspect anything—church work is all that interests him—but when I went home that summer I was terribly worried about my mother. She noticed I was thin and jumpy, but blamed it on college. That summer at home, lying in bed and crying myself to sleep night after night, I learned to hate Gregory and I hated and hated myself.



"In the fall when I went back to school," Gina continued, "I refused to date. I thought boys could sense right off I wasn't innocent and I was determined not to turn into a promiscuous woman. I doubled my music courses—my teachers say I have a real future as a pianist if I keep on studying—and I made up my mind, since I probably wouldn't ever marry, I would have a career. When I did begin dating a year later, I was stiff and reserved and cautious about petting. I wasn't very popular, but I didn't mind. Every date was helping me to forget Gregory and get back my self-respect.

"By the time I met John," said John's young wife, "Gregory no longer seemed real to me. It was as though some other girl—not me—had slipped out of his apartment in the early morning and hunched down on the seat of his car to keep from being seen. I didn't even hate Gregory any more. I felt indifferent, neutral. Oh, I wish John would believe that!

CONTINUED ON PAGE 155

"I was afraid that if John knew the truth he wouldn't forgive me. I did lose Gregory, you see."

LINE A DAY

"WHITE WIND," by Lyonel Feininger

BY ANN BATCHELDER

1 Canapés belong to the beginning of a meal—in most cases, before it. I usually put first things last, but this time I'll fool you, as this is a humdinger of a beginner.

2 Peel and mash 2 avocados. Blend smooth with ⅓ cup French dressing. Add 1½ teaspoons salt, ⅛ teaspoon Tabasco, 1 teaspoon curry powder and ½ cup chopped Brazil nuts. Lay small thin slices of tomato on buttered toast rounds, cut the same size. Top with the avocado mixture and sprinkle with more chopped Brazil nuts.

3 The French like flattery—don't we all? To imitate is flattery, the best there is. Leading up to a receipt for doing something with apricots. Take a can of apricot halves and poach them in their own sirup, which you have flavored with almond.

4 Drain them and press two halves on the sides of a ball of vanilla ice cream. Set each portion on a large macaroon in a coupe glass. Cover with sweetened whipped cream perfumed with vanilla and almond and sprinkle with finely chopped nuts.

5 The relish tray should not be passed up when you are planning something different for the tried-and-true Thanksgiving dinner. Scoop out the centers of crisp radishes, stuff with a mixture of blue and cream cheese.

6 Another frivolity for this all-important meal, depending again on whether or not you like your traditions straight, has to do with the all-important cranberry. Open 1 No. 2 can sliced pineapple and drain without removing the slices from the can. Read on.

7 Soften 1 envelope unflavored gelatin in ¼ cup cranberry-juice cocktail. Heat and add another ½ cup cocktail and stir until gelatin is dissolved. Cool until thickened. Pour into the can of pineapple slices. Chill until firm. Remove from can and cut through between slices; cut slices in half. A nice garnish, too, for a cold-turkey platter come evening.

8 Deviled ham is an old sandwich stand-by—here it is again, with a new twist. Combine the contents of 1 can deviled ham (2¼ ounces) with ½ cup cottage cheese, add a little minced celery and a little pickle relish. Good on white bread, extra good on rye bread.

9 Do you ever hanker for lemon ice cream when it's out of season at the drugstore? Well, I do and often I'm not in the mood to make a batch in the refrigerator. On such occasions I stir grated lemon rind and juice into softened plain vanilla ice cream until it's just right in taste. Freeze until firm again. Wonderful as a sauce on hot puddings, too, in its soft state.

10 The main dish for Sunday-night supper is composed of 1 can shrimp and 1 cup canned—or cooked frozen—peas. Heat red-hot in a can of Newburg sauce. Serve on toast. Easily extended for any number.

11 Would you serve ham and hear your guests exclaim, "Why didn't I think of that?" Well, place a thick slice of tenderized ham in a shallow baking dish with a cover. Mix ½ cup orange marmalade with 3 tablespoons water, and pour it over the ham. Cover and bake at 350° F. for 20 minutes. Reduce oven temperature to 300° F. and bake, uncovered, another 20 minutes, basting occasionally with the sirup. Serve garnished with peeled orange slices—and yams go with this dish.

12 French chefs disdain to make potato cakes, as we do, with mashed potatoes. Instead, they grate raw potatoes, and to about 2 cups add 1 tablespoon minced onion, a little thyme, salt and pepper, and 1 beaten egg. Shaped into cakes and fried in deep fat, or baked on a greased griddle, these are a delicious meat garnish.

13 Satisfied Curiosity Department: Butter curls are made with a curling knife, by drawing the knife toward you on a block or stick or pat of cold butter. Dip the knife in hot water before making each curl. A lovely little curl is the result. Serve on a bed of ice.

14 On a famous French liner, a new way with potatoes caused more exclamations than a new starlet in Hollywood. Long large potatoes are pared. Then they are "peeled" round and round to make an unbroken curl. These curls are plunged into ice water. Then drained and dried. Read on.

15 Deep fat is heated moderately, the curls dropped in and cooked until tender but not browned. Then they are removed, drained, and again dropped into deep fat heated to the smoking-hot point, when the potatoes will puff and crisp. Drain, salt lightly and serve very hot.

16 Another potato dish worth any cook's attention is made with cold boiled potatoes. Dice them fine and to 3 cups add 1 cup canned sliced mushrooms and 3 small onions, sliced. Sauté all in butter or margarine, turning over and over until potatoes are brown and onions tender. Season with salt and pepper and serve hot.

17 A tuna dish comes to mind. Drain 1 can whole-kernel corn, add ¼ cup chopped green pepper. Arrange in layers in 1-quart shallow casserole with a 7-ounce can tuna, broken up, and 2 sliced hard-cooked eggs.

18 Make a sauce with 4 tablespoons butter or margarine, 3 tablespoons flour, 1 cup milk, 2 teaspoons prepared mustard, 1 teaspoon each prepared horse-radish, lemon juice and salt, 1 tablespoon grated onion and ¼ teaspoon pepper. Pour sauce over tuna, top with ½ cup grated Cheddar cheese and 1 tablespoon bread crumbs. Bake at 350° F. for ½ hour.

19 Another luncheon dish is composed to thrill the appetite as the sonata the musical ear. Sliced cold chicken or turkey, with ham, creamed, subtly seasoned, served in a macaroni ring and garnished with hot ripe olives and broiled mushrooms. Add a fruit salad, date muffins and coffee. Who could ask for more?

20 Little cupcakes made from my white-cake receipt, which I hope you have, are frosted in pastel colors. Concealed within each tender cakelet, like a tear in the heart of a rose, are bits of crystallized ginger, sultana raisins, a pecan or walnut half, the "insignia" of each decorating the top of each cake. Pretty as a picture, you'll find.

21 For the sweet-tooth set—and count me in. Raisin peanut panocha—and made as follows: Wash, drain an pat dry on a towel ¾ cup sultana raisins. Mix in a sauc pan 1½ cups sugar, 1½ cups light brown sugar, ¾ cu evaporated milk, ½ teaspoon cream of tartar and 1 tablespoons light corn sirup. Bring to a boil, stirrin constantly. Continue cooking, stirring often, unt thermometer registers 236° F. or to the soft-ball stag

22 Remove from heat and cool at room temperatur without stirring, until candy thermometer registe 120° F. or bottom of pan is comfortably warm to th hand. Add raisins and ½ cup crunchy-style peanu butter. Beat until candy holds its shape. Drop from ti of teaspoon onto waxed paper.

23 A treat for an epicure is cream-of-squash soup wit oysters. Cooked frozen or canned squash may be use Add 2 cups rich milk, 2 slices onion, salt and pepper t taste and a lump of butter the size of an egg. He together in double boiler. Stir well. More to come.

24 Add 1 cup scalded cream. Beat smooth. Now add dozen small fresh oysters with some of their liquor an heat until the oyster edges curl. Serve very hot.

25 The reasons for the going-together of certain flavo are as mysterious as the secrets of the Pyramids. Lemo with black-bean soup, for instance. Almond with peach or apricots. Cucumbers and tarragon with fish. An many others. Do you know the answers? Nor do I.

26 From the maple-sugar belt: Spread a baked ha with maple sugar instead of brown sugar. Baked ha repays oft-repeated basting; and included in the bast maple sugar will be found near perfection.

27 And when I spoke of the maple-sugar belt, I clea forgot to speak of one of the daintiest, most delicate an delicious of tea-table sandwiches. On whole-wheat brea cut into little rounds, spread cream cheese mixed wi finely chopped pecans and cover with soft maple suga

28 It's on my mind now, if you can get some fillets lemon sole. Grill them, season, make some herb butt for the sauce to pour over them, sprinkle with paprik and garnish with lemon quarters, and water cress.

29 SPECIAL TO YOU ALL: Once more I am "makin book." I make, you buy. That's the idea. Do you get i The plot is this, and it's more truth than poetry, as th say: It is a classified collection of the wisdom contain in Line a Day for the past several years, with new iten you haven't seen.

30 I hope to have my opus ready for Christmas. "Ho springs eternal," you know. It will be privately print in my state of Vermont. The format is new. You'll u it in the kitchen. And the parlor won't be ashamed it. Advance orders are now in order, with a dollar as companion, and should be sent to me. Your name an address are important. Be sure to send them, for "Received—thank you."

Your ANNIE.

...r the men in your life

Campbell's

4 great beef soups

VEGETABLE BEEF. It's man-sized eating (women agree!)—carrots, peas, potatoes, tomatoes and barley in a robust stock, with all you'd like of fine lean beef.

ONION SOUP. Thick with onions, tangy with Cheddar cheese, lusty with dark and wonderful beef stock. It's Onion Soup as the French have loved it through the years.

EE SOUP. Here's a meal in a bowl . . . gener- ...pieces of beef, finest garden vegetables and ...er barley, simmered with sturdy beef, spicy ...rings, seasoned with understanding.

BEEF NOODLE. Wholesome as a country kitchen . . . bite-size chunks of beef and golden egg noodles in full-flavored broth.

P. S. And don't forget Bouillon and Consommé.

SO QUICK—
SO NUTRITIOUS—
SO SIMPLY DELICIOUS!

Mrs. Anthony A. Bliss

This lovely young New York social leader lives most of the year in her charming country home on Long Island. A real beauty—slender, vibrant, and very fair—Mrs. Bliss has an exquisite skin. She says: "Every woman who uses water as part of her face care should know what a major difference a follow-up with Pond's Cold Cream makes in the texture, clearness, good looks of her skin. And a deep clearing with Pond's Cold Cream at bedtime is a necessity to me."

In these three hours your skin "dies" a little

Your most troublesome skin problems are apt to start in daily 1 to 3 hour "danger periods," dermatologists say. This is immediately after you wash your face. In washing away dirt, you also remove natural skin protectors. Your skin takes 1 to 3 hours to re-establish its defenses. Meanwhile, your skin is "un-balanced". . . open to problems:

Dryness . . . cracking . . ."shriveling"
Enlarged pores, coarseness

Had how women noted for their beautiful complexions keep free of these skin problems . . .

er each washing—"re-balance" your skin

rs have noticed—right after e more obvious signs of this no in your skin.

htretched feel of your face.

ıglakiness of your skin when you ın-th on your face powder.

e te first, small warnings of skin no" But in the 1 to 3 hours al's to re-protect skin, more ro ems can take root. Dryness.
g Oxidized secretions in pore-
-fi erunners of blackheads.

u avoid washing your face?
rs not," skin specialists say.
te each washing, 're-balance'
n stantly . . ."

n f outstanding beauty have ed ne need to "re-balance" their complexions after each washing—with an immediate application of Pond's Cold Cream. No woman can afford to ignore this need with the easy excuse: "But I'm too busy" or "I've let my skin go too long for results to show now."

60 times faster than Nature

You will see results—right away. This world-famous beauty formula promptly restores skin elasticity, combats dryness, flaking. Keeps pore-openings cleared, keeps skin texture fine and smooth. So easy—in 7 seconds you've smoothed the cream lightly over your face. Yet this one simple act "re-balances" your skin within one minute—at least 60 times faster than Nature. And, remember, a film of Pond's Cold Cream under make-up gives you continuing skin "balance" during the day.

A deep clearing at bedtime

Besides this immediate "re-balancing" after each washing, most skins need a thorough clearing every night. A deep Pond's Cold Creaming dislodges stubborn, water-resistant dirt. Stimulates circulation, awakens skin to its full beauty!

Do begin this simple, complete beauty care with Pond's Cold Cream. After each face washing—a quick "re-balancing." At bedtime — a deep Pond's clearing. You've probably never tried a treatment so effortless to do. Nor as quickly effective. You'll soon discover how effective, when friends say, "Your complexion is looking wonderful lately!"

These women are among the beautiful social leaders who use Pond's

S.A.R. LA PRINCESSE MURAT
THE MARCHIONESS OF QUEENSBERRY
THE DUCHESS OF RUTLAND
MRS. NICHOLAS RIDGELY DU PONT
MRS. WILLIAM RHINELANDER STEWART

The world's most famous beauty formula—never duplicated, never equalled. Get a large jar of Pond's Cold Cream today. Begin giving your skin perfect care with a perfect cream—quick Pond's "re-balancings" during the day after each washing; a deep, stimulating clearing with Pond's each night. More women use and love Pond's Cold Cream than any other face cream ever made.

The soft luxury of Vicara®

ZEIN FIBER

When Vicara, the luxury fiber, becomes a part of anything you wear, you become a part of a new world of soft luxury, deep, gentle comfort and enduring beauty.

To fluid, feminine jersey . . .
to pretty fancies of sweaters, V*icara* brings soft temptation of touch, of texture. Because V*icara* is resilient, it bounces back fast from wrinkles, refuses to sag or stretch after wear, washing or dry-cleaning. Because V*icara* is absorbent, you always feel comfortably warm, pleasantly cool.
And because it's the luxury fiber that improves the blend, you'll want more and more dresses, separates and leisure wear starring V*icara* . . .
softest fiber known to hand. The golden Vicara hangtag identifies luxurious apparel made of Vicara at fine stores
. . . everywhere.

Vicara®

Vicara, the luxury fiber, is a product of Fiber Division, Virginia-Carolina Chemical Corporation, 99 Park Avenue, New York 16, New York

SINCERELY, WILLIS WAYDE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 59

...e wringing wet. The restaurant was ...ither, even with the big fans on the ...ring up a smell of overripe musk- ... boiling coffee.

... sakes, Willis," she said, "you are ...ith perspiration. Get out your hand- ...d mop your face."

...n't sweat so," Willis said, "if I was ...aircut."

"...were," his mother said, "and you ... one yet."

... of Boston with a list of historic ...pread on the table in front of her. ...eal opportunity, Willis," she said. ...ng to see Faneuil Hall and the Old ...urch, where they put the lantern ...e belfry. Then we shall see the site ...on Massacre and then the old State ... then the Common. We shall then ...h the Public Gardens, and we shall ...ston Public Library. That ought to ... for the morning if we walk. It will ... to stretch our legs after the train."

... ey finally reached the North Sta- ...fter Willis had put the suitcases in ...bove them in the day coach, his ... him that it had been a delightful ...on, and something for him always ...er, but now it was time to put first ..., and she pulled "your father's" ...f her handbag.

...r what it will be like this time," she ...r father always starts by being en- ...and he's enthusiastic now about ...rcourt. I must say, it's very gener-

... who won't lie to a woman ...y little consideration for her ...s.
—OLIN MILLER

...Harcourt to let us have a house to ... on his place. Now, Willis, I want ...olite. I don't want people to think ...ude Western boy. Have you lost ...t comb?"

"...m," Willis answered.

..."t it out and comb your hair. You ... as a boiled beet. Are your shoes

..."Willis said, "awful tight."

..."u can take them off and rest your ...want to. No one will see you."

..."t I take my coat off instead, ...llis asked.

..."e said, "not in the train, Willis." ...was five minutes late. At least it ...wenty-one by Willis' Ingersoll ...n they got to Clyde.

...ly everybody knew about everyone ...e, because most Clyde citizens were ...with deep human interest—not ...aps, but indefatigable. It was only ... an authority should eventually ...could describe the first minutes of ...of Willis Wayde in Clyde. This was ...r, who for thirty years ran the bag- ...at the Boston and Maine Railroad

...en exactly the Harcourts' old Loco- ...h Patrick Flynn driving it, pulled ...ation. Mr. Harker was just getting ...eel out two crates of chickens on ...hen he saw there was someone else ...mobile with Mr. Henry Harcourt's ... was that new man working at the ...Mill, a kind of big-barreled fellow ...eyebrows and baggy pants. He re- ...the incident perfectly, because this ...d him "partner" and asked if the ... train was on time, and Mr. ... said it was bound to be late be- ...e soft place on the roadbed. The ...that his wife and son were expected ...r-sixteen and that they had been ...ite a piece. They had been coming ... from Oregon.

..."om Oregon?" Mr. Harker said. ...and other places," the fellow said.

It did not take a minute to get the chicken crates aboard the baggage car and there was nothing to come off except one light case for Fenwick's Dry Goods Store, so Mr. Harker could check on the passengers alighting. A gawky boy of about fifteen, wearing a Western ten-gallon hat, got out of the rear coach lugging two straw suitcases. He turned to help down a spry little lady who was on the steps behind him. Then this fellow Wayde shouted out "Hello, honey," and "Hello, Willis." Wayde kissed the little lady and shook hands with the boy; and Patrick Flynn didn't seem to know whether to treat the party like guests or like people just working for Harcourt.

"Say," Mr. Harker said, "you're working at the Harcourt Mill, ain't you?"

"Yes," the fellow said. "Designing engineer. If it helps you, my name's Alf Wayde, so you won't have to ask anyone."

He didn't belong around there and he wasn't friendly, but at the same time he was common just like you or me. He raised his voice just when the train was coming in.

"She's got a bad bearing," he said, "and her pistons need packing."

"Let's get going," Wayde said. "You sit in back with me, Cynthia, and Willis can sit up front. This is Mrs. Wayde, Pat, and this is Willis."

Patrick looked startled when the little lady shook hands.

"It's nice to know you," she said. "You shouldn't have hired this big automobile for us, Alf."

"I didn't hire it," Mr. Wayde said. "It's Mr. Harcourt's automobile."

Well, that was all there was to it. But anyway, Mr. Harker was the first one to lay eyes on Willis Wayde. You would never have thought that the young fellow would amount

7 reasons
why you'll look lovelier
the instant Creme Puff kisses your skin

1. It's new...a complete make-up! Creamiest base and sheerest powder!
2. Puffs on in seconds! Stays lovely for hours!
3. Reflects light...brightens away lines and shadows!
4. Contains lanolin! Good for your skin!
5. Never streaks, cakes, turns orangey! It's Max Factor's secret blend.
6. Feels fresh, light, so smooth.
7. Seven luscious complexion-true shades!

Hat by Mr. John • Diamonds by Staal

the new complete make-up
Creme Puff*
made only by MAX FACTOR Hollywood

$1.25 plus reduced tax
Star-studded mirror compact
Golden-tone (refillable) compact, $3.75 plus reduced tax

the make-up that keeps its promise

*Creme Puff (trademark) means Max Factor Hollywood creamy powder make-up

Now break the painful grip of MUSCLE ACHES!

A fine Bristol-Myers product

CONTAINS 3 INGREDIENTS PRESCRIBED BY DOCTORS ... PLUS SOOTHING LANOLIN

When strain or over-exercise leaves muscles stiff, sore and aching...get deep-down relief fast with new greaseless Minit-Rub!

New Minit-Rub combines 3 pain-relieving prescription ingredients with soothing lanolin —in a special vanishing cream base.

So its medication starts action faster—faster than greasy rubs, faster than pain tablets! And unlike harsh-irritant rubs, new Minit-Rub won't burn your skin—yet its penetrating heat sensation relieves pain even deep-down.

Use new Minit-Rub for muscular aches, pains, strains—as a chest rub for cold miseries, too. All drug counters—39¢ and 69¢.

Greaseless! Stainless! Applies like Vanishing Cream!

Gentle EX-LAX helps you toward YOUR NORMAL REGULARITY!

TONIGHT—If you need a laxative, take chocolated EX-LAX, America's best-tasting laxative. Take it at bedtime—it won't disturb your sleep.

IN THE MORNING—You'll enjoy the closest thing to natural action. No discomfort or upset. You'll soon feel like yourself again!

NEXT DAY—EX-LAX continues to help you toward your normal regularity. You hardly ever have to take EX-LAX again the next night!

Buy The New 65¢ Size—Save As Much As 37¢

Also available in 30¢ and 12¢ sizes

EX-LAX

THE CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE

©1954 Ex-Lax Inc.

MORE PEOPLE YOUNG AND OLD USE EX-LAX THAN ANY OTHER LAXATIVE

to much. He was just a hot, gawky, red-faced kid and he needed a haircut.

Later Willis came to realize that you could never tell whether Mr. Harcourt's chauffeur, Patrick Flynn, was sad or happy. You always felt that he was not at home in an automobile, which was understandable, since he had been the Harcourts' coachman until they had given up the carriage horses.

"It's an awful hot day, isn't it?" Willis said. "But it's hotter still in Kansas."

"Don't talk when I'm driving," Mr. Flynn said.

It was all like a foreign country. The street was lined with old-fashioned homes, all neatly painted and pretty close together. The trees were what impressed Willis most. He had seen elms before, but never so many big ones looking like green feather dusters, and not a leaf of them was stirring. Outside of town they passed a few small farms with fields bordered by stone walls. Then the road ran along the river for a piece, and all at once he saw a group of brick buildings and a high factory chimney. They turned left near the factory and began climbing a steepish hill, and a minute later Willis saw the dressed granite wall that marked the front of the Harcourt place.

When the Harcourt family, like other New England mill owners, had become suddenly rich during the Civil War, William Harcourt, Mr. Henry Harcourt's grandfather, had built the Harcourt place. While on a business trip to England, he retained the services of a British architect whose specialty was country houses, and consequently the Harcourt place always had a slightly foreign flavor.

When the Locomobile turned into the drive, the limbs of the beech trees that bordered it made a network of shadow over the freshly raked yellow gravel. Between their pale gray trunks Willis saw the mowed green fields on either side, with a sheep paddock in one space and then a duck pond and a summerhouse. It was quite a while before they came to the lawns and the terraced gardens. From there they turned down the back entrance past the greenhouse and past the stableyard, and for the first time Patrick spoke.

"This is the big house," he said, "and down there is the road to Mr. Bryson's house."

"Say," Willis said, "does Mr. Harcourt live there all alone?"

"He does," Patrick said.

The back drive had passed the kitchen garden, and Willis saw the garden house just at the edge of a grove of oaks.

"You get off here," Patrick said. He out of the Locomobile and opened t formally for Mr. and Mrs. Wayde.

"That's all right, Pat," Alfred Way "Willis and I can handle the bags."

"Mr. Harcourt told me to tell you, m Patrick said, "that if there is anythi need, to call Mr. Beane on the hou phone. Selwyn has left some grocerie you started, madam, and MacDon brought a few vegetables."

"That's very kind of Mr. Harcourt Wayde said. "Everything looks lovely we want anything Mr. Wayde can get Ford."

It was the first time that Willis ha that his father had a car, but now h Ford runabout standing in a small s neath the trees.

"Well, if that's all, then," Patrick s

"Yes, that's all," Mr. Wayde said. " Pat."

All three of them stood for a momen path looking at the garden house. I small two-story replica of the big hous of stone in the same Gothic style, an was a flower bed filled with deep petunias on either side of the front do

"Why, Alfred," Mrs. Wayde said, " a picture."

His father stood with his hands trousers pockets. "You come inside, Cy he said. "We've got a real place for o

Willis felt there must be some cat when they came into the small fron with its flight of carpeted stairs and wallpaper. On the right was a sittin with a big fireplace, all furnished wi chairs, pictures, lamps and everything was a big dining room on the left with oak gate-leg table and Windsor table and there was a kitchen ell with a fir stove and the table covered with groce vegetables.

"Do you like it, Cynthia?" his father

"Of course I like it, Alfred," she an "What's the rent on it?"

The corners of his father's wide tightened. "Twenty-five dollars," he s

"Well, maybe it's worth it," his moth "But can we afford twenty-five do week?"

"No," his father said, "twenty month."

Willis heard his mother catch her "Why is he only asking that? I don't se Mrs. Wayde began, and her voice ro higher note.

"I thought it was supposed to be our turn to cheer up the good-looking corporal!"

ght, Cynthia," his father said.
llis was looking over the bedroom e his for a long while, he heard a e front door.
as it, Alf?" he heard his mother
e front door had closed.
te from Harcourt," he heard his er. "He wants us all to come to do forget first times, particularly when you were young. The sun when they walked across the lawn ouse. The front veranda with its pillars was cool and shadowy.

only a second or two after ring-were a woman (ly a man)

a woman . . . I'd continue concerned about my after marriage as I was "dateing" days. I'd continue y clothes and accessories care . . . remembering is made up of many little things. Take perfume,
e. I wonder if a woman
w much the right fragrance er . . . how much it adds ninity . . . her appeal.
forget my first "whiff" of
ON. There was something t a man can't explain or that made the evening . . .
unforgettable. Since then it her favorite gift from me—
ys. anniversaries, and Christmas.
I were a woman—I'd try er that the right perfume is invisible thread that helps to nce alive . . . and I'd choose ce very. very carefully.

pagne hirt ication ORSAY

u'll find INTOXICATION—
amous perfume from France he world's fine stores. Should vailable near you we will be cept your introductory order.

RFUMS, 71 FIFTH AVENUE, N. Y.
Please send me the following: Pursette) @ $3.30 (Fed. Tax Incl.)
oilette @ $3.30 (Fed. Tax Incl.)

STATE
money order . . . no C.O.D., please.

ing before the heavy front door opened. An elderly man in a black tie and stiff white shirt had opened the door.

"Good evening, Mrs. Wayde," Willis heard him say. "Good evening, Mr. Wayde."

"Good evening, Mr. Harcourt," his mother said. "Isn't it a lovely evening?"

"It isn't Mr. Harcourt," his father said, and he laughed. "This is Selwyn, Cynthia. He's the butler here. Selwyn, I want you to meet my wife and my boy. You've heard me talk about them."

"Oh, how do you do, Mr. Selwyn," his mother said, and she shook hands with him. The scene was not embarrassing, because Selwyn showed no surprise.

"The pleasure is all mine, madam," he said. "If you will be so kind as to follow me. Mr. Harcourt and Mrs. Blood are watching the sunset on the west veranda."

"Mrs. Blood is Mr. Harcourt's sister, Cynthia," Alfred Wayde said. "This is my boy, Willis, Selwyn. Willis, you shake hands with Mr. Selwyn too. He's a good man to know around here."

The broad front hall led directly to another wide passage, which extended the full length of the house. This hall was carpeted with Oriental rugs. Its walls were lined with low bookshelves and gold-framed pictures. Willis had a glimpse through open doors of the drawing room and the library, and there was a clean smell to everything, of wax and flowers, that combined with a satiny sheen of woodwork to give a sense of complete security.

When they came to the open door of the west veranda, Selwyn halted. "Mr. and Mrs. Wayde," he said, "and Master Wayde."

There was a creaking of porch chairs as an elderly lady and a gentleman in a dinner jacket rose to greet them. Somehow he was not at all what Willis expected. Instead of being large, he was small and almost frail. His gray hair was brushed back from a high, thin forehead. His nose was straight and long, and his pendulous lower lip always twitched before he spoke, giving an impression that he was about to stammer, even though his words were always measured and precise.

"It's very kind of you to come to us at such short notice, Mrs. Wayde," he said. "It seemed to me that a dinner away from home might be a rest for you after such a hot day. I hope everything is comfortable at the cottage."

Mr. Harcourt smiled, and looked at Willis. "And this is your son, is it? What's your first name, Master Wayde?"

Willis cleared his throat. "Willis, sir."

"I'm glad to meet you, Willis. You must meet my grandson and granddaughter tomorrow, but first you must all meet my sister, Mrs. Blood. She's paying me her annual parochial summer visit. She wants to be sure we're not mismanaging the mill."

MRS. BLOOD was an inch taller than Mr. Harcourt, and her white hair, done in a pompadour, made her look taller still. She stood up very straight in her black silk dress with her pearls tied around her throat, and her diamond and sapphire rings glittered in the waning light.

"How do you do, Mrs. Wayde," she said. "My brother tells me you come from the West."

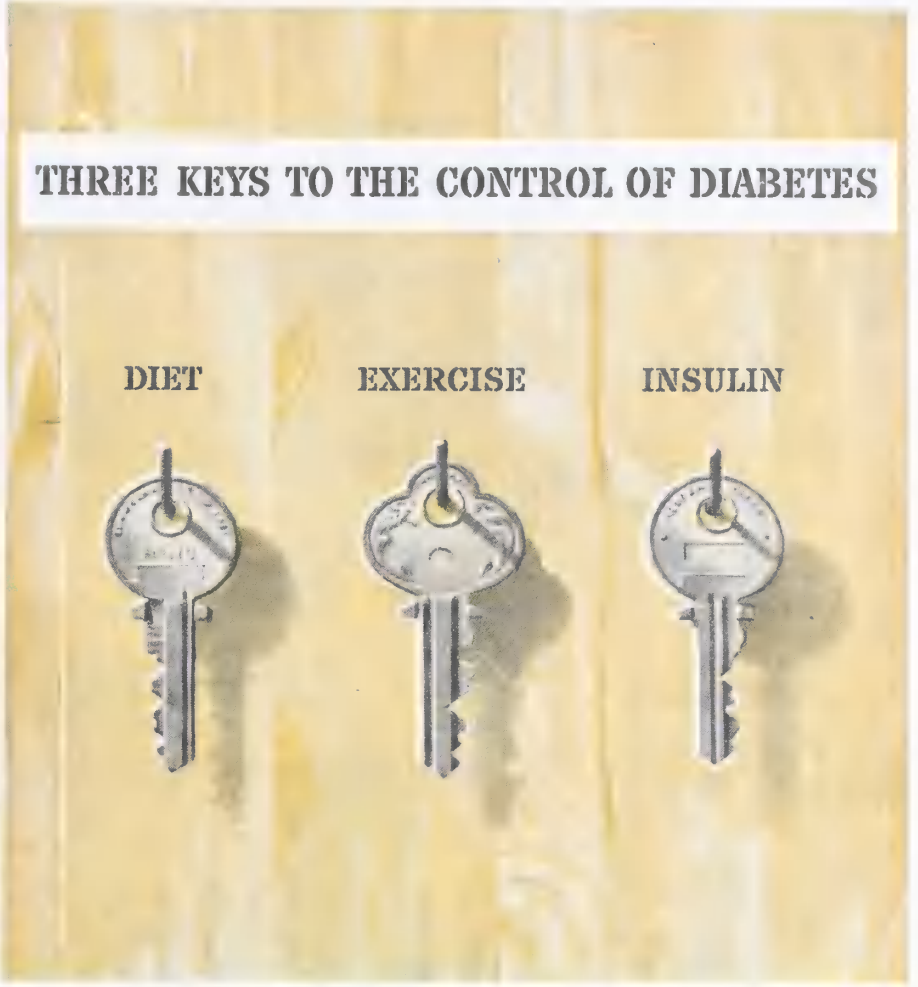
"Oh, yes," Mrs. Wayde said. "Kansas."

"Oh," Mrs. Blood said. "Kansas."

"What shall we have before dinner?" Mr. Harcourt asked. "Shall it be sherry or a dry Martini?"

"Oh, thank you," Mrs. Wayde said, "but I never touch anything strong."

Alfred Wayde laughed loudly. "Cynthia was born in a dry state," he said.



"My brother ignores the Eighteenth Amendment," Mrs. Blood said. "I should like some sherry, Henry."

"If it's all the same with you," Mr. Wayde said, "I could do with one of those Martinis."

When Willis sat apart from the rest of them after the sherry and the cocktails came, he did not feel gauche or shy, because in some odd way the house had offered its protection to him, giving him a feeling of being absolutely safe.

A large police dog walked slowly up the steps to the veranda, wagging his tail, and Willis patted his long head.

THREE KEYS TO THE CONTROL OF DIABETES

DIET . . . Many diabetics can successfully control their condition by following a carefully regulated but varied and nutritious diet. There is one basic rule, however, that all diabetics must observe—they must restrict their intake of those foods that readily change to sugar in the body.

EXERCISE . . . In the successful treatment of diabetes, exercise is essential because it helps keep blood sugar at a safe level. In other words, exercise helps "burn up" sugars and starches so that they do not accumulate in the system and cause distress.

INSULIN . . . This substance is indispensable in those cases of severe diabetes that cannot be controlled by diet and exercise. Thanks to the development of increasingly effective forms of insulin . . . as well as greater knowledge of the disease resulting from continued research . . . diabetes can generally be controlled more successfully than ever before.

It is estimated that one million Americans are known to have diabetes today. By faithfully cooperating with their doctors in using the three keys to diabetes control, most diabetics live full, active lives.

Studies indicate that millions of our people, who do not have diabetes now, are likely to develop it some time in the future. This is why it is so important to know the following facts:

1. You are more likely to develop diabetes if . . .
   a. the disease has occurred in your family
   b. you are middle-aged and overweight.
2. You should suspect diabetes if . . .
   a. you notice weight loss despite constant hunger and high food consumption.
   b. you feel constantly fatigued, thirsty, or urinate excessively.

Early in its course, diabetes may cause no symptoms at all. In fact, it may progress silently and damage your health before you are aware of it. This points up the necessity of regular medical examinations. The earlier diabetes is discovered and treated, the better are the chances to bring it under control.

Fortunately, tests for diabetes detection are simple, speedy and painless. Everyone should have periodic health examinations . . . including urinalysis. If the test shows sugar, your doctor can make further examinations which tell whether you have diabetes. If you have the disease, you and your doctor can work together to help control it. With proper precautions, your chances of living long, happily and usefully are unusually good today.

COPYRIGHT 1954—METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

1 MADISON AVE., NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.
1 Madison Ave., N. Y. 10, N. Y.

Please send me a copy of your booklet, 1154J.

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

"That's Benny," Mr. Harcourt said. "His real name is Benvenuto Cellini. He doesn't make friends with everybody."

"I get on pretty well with dogs, sir," Willis said.

"You and Benny and I will have to walk around and see the place tomorrow," Mr. Harcourt said. "Well, here's Selwyn. We'd better go in to dinner."

When the Harcourt dining table was extended, more than twenty people could sit at it comfortably. The dining room never seemed too small on these occasions, but conversely when the table was contracted to a small circle, as it was that night, there was never any sense of sitting in too large a room. The marble-top Chippendale serving table, the magenta brocade curtains drawn over the French windows, and the family portraits, and the silver service on the mid-Victorian sideboard only seemed to draw closer. Somehow the dining room was never formidable, even with Selwyn and a maid waiting on the table.

The meal was simple enough—cold consommé, guinea hen with bread sauce, and salad, and blueberry pie for dessert, and Willis was given a glass of ginger ale instead of wine.

"My brother says you can turn your hand to anything, Mr. Wayde," Mrs. Blood was saying to his father.

"Well, ma'am," Mr. Wayde said, "I've been thrown against a lot of stuff in railroading, building and mining. They all come down to pretty much the same thing in the end."

"What do you mean, the same thing?" Mrs. Blood asked.

"Making what you've got on hand do what it isn't meant to do," Mr. Wayde said.

"Alf is absent-minded about a lot of things," Willis heard his mother saying, "but never about machinery."

"I've noticed that myself," Mr. Harcourt said. "He's a great comfort to me at the mill. You see, I haven't a mechanical, only a business mind."

"Some people think Alf is lazy," Mrs. Wayde said. "When I first met Alf, I thought he was. It was at a dancing party at the Y.W.C.A. in Topeka."

Mr. Harcourt's lower lip twitched and then he smiled. "I'd like to know," he said, "how he ever got to the Y.W.C.A. in Topeka."

"Oh, a contracting firm was building some water works," Mrs. Wayde said, "and some of the young fellows on the job came to the dance. I guess Alf went because he'd lost all his money at poker the night before. I was teaching in the high school and living at the Y, and my sister Nell and I invited him out to the farm on Sunday with another fellow. He just sat on the piazza with his feet on the rail until the windmill broke down and we were out of water. Well, Alf got right up off the porch and climbed up the windmill. He came down with a broken cog or something, and asked where a blacksmith shop was. I said I'd take him down to Sawyer's and we hitched up the buckboard. Ned Sawyer's a Baptist and doesn't work Sundays, but Alf started up the forge himself, and he made a whole new cogwheel right by hand. It took him six hours and he was a sight when he got through, but he got the windmill going."

"Did you say you play bridge, Mr. Wayde?" Mrs. Blood was saying.

"Yes, ma'am, sometimes." Alfred Wayde answered, "but Cynthia would rather talk."

And Mrs. Wayde still was talking.

"If Alf's interested, he can do anything, but when he loses interest he drifts away to somewhere else. I hope Alf will like it here and I hope you'll like him, Mr. Harcourt."

"If I didn't, I wouldn't have let him have the cottage, Mrs. Wayde," Mr. Harcourt said.

"Now you've mentioned it," Mrs. Wayde said, "it isn't right charging us so little rent, but maybe Alfred got the figure wrong."

Mr. Harcourt placed his napkin on the table. "It's business, Mrs. Wayde," he said. "Not that I won't be glad to look across the lawn at night and see lights in the cottage. It's to my advantage to have you and your husband contented." His flat measured voice left no room for argument.

"There are difficulties in running any business. My son Bryson, whom I hope you'll meet later, will take over eventually, but in the meanwhile when the windmill breaks I have to fix it in my own way." He pushed back his chair. "Alfred, you and I might have our brandy and coffee in the library, and Willis can come with us."

"I ought to get back to unpack," Mrs. Wayde said, looking at Mrs. Blood. "Willis can take me home."

They had all risen from the table, and Mr. Harcourt smiled at Mrs. Blood. "It's early still," he said. "Ruth, please induce Mrs. Wayde to stay a little longer. You haven't had an opportunity yet to make her feel at home."

"Yes, Henry," Mrs. Blood said. "Please don't leave me alone, Mrs. Wayde."

As Willis followed Mr. Harcourt and Mr. Wayde into the hall, he heard Mrs. Blood speak again.

"Every time I visit my brother," she was saying, "he reminds me more and more of our father. When he speaks in that tone of voice, it's always best for you to do exactly what he says."

Willis' father followed Mr. Harcourt into the library, gazing curiously at the books and the moose head over the mantel.

"Sit down," Mr. Harcourt said. "Sit down, Willis. Will you have a cigar, Alfred?"

"Thanks," Alfred Wayde said, "I could do with a cigar."

Selwyn came in with a tray of coffee and brandy.

"Did everything go all right Three today?" Mr. Harcourt ask

"It's pretty well cleared out," A said. "We're going to need son struction under the vats, and a pressor."

"All right. I'd like to see thos tomorrow morning if they're rea

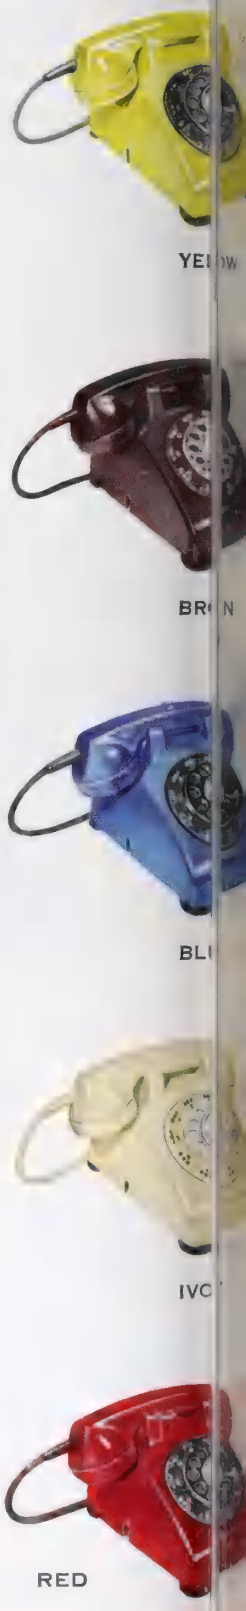
"They're ready," Alfred Wayd

"Good!" Mr. Harcourt said. "I looked at Number Three myself things were pretty busy in the Harcourt flicked the ash of his ci

Now...telephones to mat

8 new colors
to brighten your home

Setting by Lord & Taylor, New York



An array of stunning new Bell telephones in decorator colors to provide vivid accent or to blend beautifully into your own color plan for any room of your house. Available also in "Two-Tone" with base of red, green, gray or ivory plus contrasting jet black handset. Call your Bell telephone business office for details.

GRAY

BEIGE

YE ow

BR N

BL

IVO

RED

ty on the table beside him. "I'm laus patents. Bryson isn't going m going ahead."
nodded slowly. "You're not ny boats if you do," he said.
get into conveyor belting, and nts will put you on the ground
't ever be the Goodrich Rubber you'll have a process no one

Mr. Harcourt said.
forgot that scrap of conversaconveyor belts. Later when he understand its significance, he y they were living in the garden house. If it had not been for the Klaus patents, the mill would have lost business all through the twenties and would not have survived the depression, and it was his father who had advised the purchase.

Selwyn tapped softly on the open door of the library. "Mr. and Mrs. Bryson Harcourt are with the ladies in the drawing room," he said.

The long drawing room with its tall French windows looked over the south terrace. If it represented the late Victorian period of decoration, all its furnishings possessed their peculiar relationship. Its two crystal chandeliers from England, its mantel of Italian marble, its groups of chairs and sofas, and its ornate lamps—now converted from kerosene to electricity—were cumbersome taken by themselves, but they all added a personal quality to the room. It was one of those rooms that could never be imitated. And the people standing near the fireplace, even down to his mother and father, were part of the pattern.

"Mildred," Mr. Harcourt said, "you haven't met Willis Wayde yet, have you? Willis, this is my daughter-in-law, Mrs. Harcourt, and Mr. Harcourt. I'm sorry you didn't bring the children over, Mildred."

He spoke as though Willis were a grown-up guest, but then his manner always was the same with everyone.

"Happy to meet you, ma'am," Willis said.

If Mrs. Bryson Harcourt did not look entirely happy to meet him, nevertheless she managed to smile. She was tall and angular in her green silk dress, taller than her husband.

"How do you do?" she said to Willis, and gave his hand a strong quick shake. "I'm sorry I didn't bring Bill and Bess over, governor. I just didn't think about it."

She always called Mr. Henry Harcourt "governor."

"Hello, young fellow," Mr. Bryson Harcourt said. In many ways he was a picture of what Mr. Henry Harcourt must have been when he was younger. His clean-shaven face was tanned and he had a trace of the Harcourt lower lip, but his features always seemed less in focus than his father's.

"We can only stay for a minute, governor," Mrs. Harcourt said. "We just stopped over to see how you were."

"I'm bearing up, Mildred," Mr. Harcourt said. "We had Decker and the lawyers over at the mill today, Bryson."

"I was at Marblehead racing," Mr. Bryson said.

"Of course," Mr. Harcourt answered. "I should have remembered. How did you come out, Bryson?"

"Third," Mrs. Bryson said. "Almost second, governor."

"Mildred always hates to lose," Mr. Bryson said.

"Of course I do," Mrs. Harcourt said. "Married couples never ought to sail in the same boat. Bryson, didn't you tell the governor you weren't coming in today?"

"It doesn't make any difference," Mr. Harcourt said, "but see me the first thing tomorrow, won't you, Bryson?"

Those brief snatches of dialogue were a part of the façade with which the Harcourts always contrived to surround themselves. There were good nature and affection in the words, and even humor, without a trace of strain and no undertone of disappointment. It was only after Willis knew what the Klaus patents meant that he recalled that Bryson Harcourt had been racing at Marblehead on the day they were purchased.

His mother was the only one who noticed anything at the time. When they were walking home across the lawn to the cottage, she was the first one who spoke.

"Alf," she said, "they're not our kind of people."

"How do you mean, not our kind of people?" his father asked.

"They're not our kind of people," his mother said again. "There was something that made Mr. Harcourt angry."

"Who? Old Harcourt? He didn't act angry."

"I know he didn't. That's why I say they're not our kind of people. Alf, there's one thing I don't like."

"What don't you like?" his father asked.

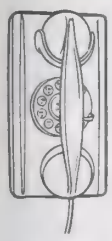
"Somehow he makes me feel we're all living here, Alf, on charity."

"Charity?" Alfred Wayde said, and he laughed. "Don't you believe it, Cynthia. I'm earning everything we get."

His mother's voice grew sharp. "Then why doesn't he pay you cash instead of giving us things?" she asked.

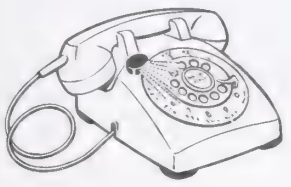
It was a good question and his father must have known it.

"Because he would rather give than pay," he said. "It makes some people feel better—giving than paying."



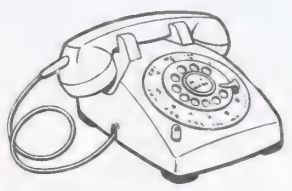
That answer of his father's was one of the wisest things that Willis ever heard him say about people. Mr. Henry Harcourt had to be the center of his world, and he was a very good one, too, until he died.

Willis was awakened the next morning by the whistle from the mill, which always blew at seven. He heard the thump of his father's feet on the floor of the bedroom across the upstairs hall, and then he heard his mother calling him to get up and start the fire in the kitchen. They were all following the familiar routine which had been created by other whistles in other places.



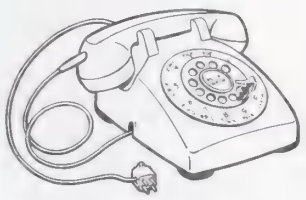
"What am I going to do if you take the Ford, Alf?" his mother asked. "I've got to get downtown and buy some groceries."

ur decorative scheme...



new conveniences for Bell telephone users

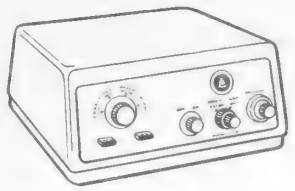
ELEPHONE: in rich ivory, in chromium. Takes up ng space. The ideal addi- elephone for kitchen and ; hall or rumpus room.



LIGHT-UP DIAL TELEPHONE: The dial is illuminated as soon as the handset is picked up. Easy to dial in dark or dimly lit rooms — bedrooms, nurseries, sickrooms, halls.

VOLUME CONTROL TELEPHONE: for easier hearing in noisy places. Control lets user increase volume as required. A boon for many people with impaired hearing.

CORD: lessens tangling, on furniture. The built-in s out easily — springs back short convenient coil. In ay, brown, black.



PLUG-IN TELEPHONE: plugs into outlets on patio, sleeping porch, shop — as additional telephone for occasional use. Also permanent extensions wherever you wish.

CUT-OFF SWITCH: pulling up the special knob temporarily cuts off extensions on same line, so no one elsewhere in home or office overhears your conversation.

CONTROL TELEPHONE: r, and six button models. possible combinations of and inside lines to meet me or business needs.

TELEPHONE ANSWERING SET: automatically answers calls when you're out, gives callers a recorded message and lets them leave a half-minute recorded message for you.

MANUFACTURING AND SUPPLY UNIT OF THE BELL SYSTEM

ese conveniences are being made by Western Electric—facturing unit of the Bell System. They will add to your ction in using your telephone. Call your Bell telephone ss office about moderate charges and availability.

New Armour Lard Gives Flakier Pie Crusts

—says Marie Gifford, Armour Home Economist and pastry authority.

Try this new, quick "PUMPKIN PUDDIN' PIE"

Now the first quick pumpkin pie with a stay-crisp undercrust! The secret? 5-minute pie crust recipe, the new no-cook filling, and Armour's New-Type Star Lard.

Unlike other lards, this New-Type Lard is mild-flavored, fluffy, non-greasy. Stays fresh with no refrigeration. Digests as easily as butterfat. Gives much flakier pie crusts than expensive shortenings.

For the flaky, stay-crisp undercrust, use my 5-Minute Pie Crust Recipe —on every tin or carton of Armour Star Lard. Bake as directed.

For the no-cook filling: Empty 1 box of the new instant butterscotch pudding into 1 cup milk. Beat 1 minute. Mix in thoroughly 1¾ cups canned pumpkin, ¾ teaspoon cinnamon, ½ teaspoon ginger, ½ teaspoon salt. Pour into baked pie shell. Refrigerate till served. Top with unsweetened whipped cream. For Holiday service decorate with a wreath of candied fruits.

FREE! NEW PIE BOOKLET. 32 wonderful pies. 32 helpful hints. Write to Marie Gifford, Dept. 147, Box 2053, Armour and Company, Chicago. A carton top will be appreciated.

The Modern New-Type Lard

Armour Star Lard

Alfred Wayde looked up vaguely from his coffee. "Someone from the other house will be going," he said. "Call up and ask."

"No," his mother said, "I don't want to be obligated, Alf."

"All right," his father said. "I'll be back at five and drive you over."

She said she wanted to get the feel of everything in the house and she could do that only when she was alone. She told Willis to go out and walk around and get used to the lay of the land, and keep away from the big house and not bother anyone.

It was quite a walk that Willis took that morning. The dew was still over everything and there was a smell of fresh-cut grass. When he walked down the road to the stables, the routine of the place was already starting. Two men were working in the kitchen garden and another was trimming shrubbery. A stoop-shouldered man with a blank and patient face was spraying roses in the cutting garden. It was Mr. MacDonald, the head gardener.

A stout man in blue overalls was standing by the gasoline engine in the pump house. He took one glance at Willis and then turned away. It was Mr. Beane, the estate superintendent. Like Patrick, the people on the place already accepted Willis as a fact, but they did not know where he fitted in any more than Willis knew himself, and they did not want to talk until they knew, but Mr. Harcourt's police dog felt differently. Benny wagged his tail and ran ahead of Willis toward the oak woods beyond the house.

It was possible to walk freely beneath the trees, but for greater convenience the place was interspersed with well-cleared paths called walks—the Brook Walk, the Pine Walk, the Hickory Hill, the Azalea and the Rhododendron walks. Without knowing its name yet, Willis walked down the Brook Walk with the police dog trotting ahead of him.

He was walking toward a bend of the path near the foot of a large white pine tree when the dog sprang forward suddenly and a girl's voice called, "Down, Benny." Willis walked around the turn and saw a girl somewhat younger than he, patting the police dog's head.

The girl wore a middy blouse and a blue pleated skirt, and her blond hair was done in a heavy braid. Her face was as freckled as his own and her eyes were critical. He never forgot their color—a sort of bluish green.

"How did you get in here?" she asked.

"I was just walking around with the dog," Willis answered.

"Well, he isn't your dog," she said.

"I know he isn't," Willis said. "He came along with me for company, I guess."

"Oh," the girl said. "You're one of the people that my grandfather gave the garden house to, aren't you? Beane said you were about Bill's age, but you're bigger. I thought you were a town boy. They sneak over the wall sometimes."

"I didn't sneak over any wall," Willis said.

"I DIDN'T say you did," the girl said, "and you needn't act angry. This is my grandfather's place, and it's my place, partly. At least my brother and I are going to own it someday. I guess you don't know who I am, do you?"

"I guess you must be the girl," Willis said.

"What girl?" she asked.

"The girl they were talking about at the big house last night."

"Oh, you were up there, were you? Well, my name's Bess Harcourt. What's your name?"

"Willis," he told her. "Willis Wayde."

"Did you know this brook is stocked with trout?"

"No," Willis said.

"He didn't tell you you could fish, did he?"

"No," Willis said.

"You could if I told you. Do you know how to cast?"

"Yes," Willis said.

"I bet you don't. Where did you learn?"

"Out West," Willis said. "There are a lot of streams better than this out West."

"I've got to study French with Mademoiselle this morning. Do you know French?"

"Not very much," Willis said.

"I didn't think you did, but we can go fishing this afternoon. Maybe I'll bring Bill. Meet me here at three o'clock and put on some old clothes. Where did you get those clothes?"

"In Kansas City," Willis answered.

"I should think you'd take your coat off anyway," she said. "Can you play tennis?"

"No," Willis said.

"Well, maybe Bill's tutor can teach you. He has a tutor from Harvard. Can you ride?"

"Yes," Willis said, "everybody can ride out West."

"I don't mean Western riding," she said. "I wish you had a haircut, and you wouldn't look so funny."

"You don't look so hot yourself," Willis said.

"It's none of your business how I look," she answered. "I'm not trying to look any way at all."

"Neither am I," Willis said.

"Oh, yes you are," she answered. "You're trying to show off. I'll be here at three o'clock, and don't keep me waiting."

NEW ENGLAND MOTTO

By ROBERT P. TRISTRAM COFFIN

This is New England, this the law:
The mother at her place gets up,
Puts back the china without a flaw
And gets herself a broken cup.

It will not do to use the rare
For common and the chance abrasions,
Keep best dishes cupboarded there
For red-letter, rare occasions.

A man would never wear his best Trousers when he went to plow
Or ever sit in the blue-serge vest
He courted in to milk the cow.

Save the best, make common do,
Put the nicest dress away Against a wedding day brand-new,
Against a coming funeral day.

"Bess," a boy's voice was calling, "Bess!"

"Oh, all right," Bess called back.

Of course it was Bill Harcourt who was calling. A second later Willis saw him, hurrying down the path, a slender, dark-haired boy in white duck trousers.

"It's all right, Bill," Bess said. "He's one of the people in the garden house. His name is Willis Wayde."

"Oh," Bill said. He looked at Willis quickly but not critically like Bess. "It's nice there's someone else around here," he said.

"We're going fishing this afternoon," Bess said.

"You and your fishing," Bill said. "All you want is someone to show off in front of. Come on, Bess."

Everyone had certain functions on the Harcourt place, as Willis learned without resentment. It was part of the order, he began to understand, that Patrick and Mr. Beane and everyone else should address Bill and Bess as Mr. Bill and Miss Bess, when they always called him Willis. On the other hand, Bill and Bess asked him around quite often to their house, but they hardly ever asked Mr. Beane's son, Granville, there. It was natural, however, that Willis and Granville became best friends, because they went to high school together. When anyone told him, as the town girls and boys frequently did, that Bill an court were stuck-up kids, Willis k was not so. Bill and Bess were from anyone else, when you got to They only led different lives.

The Bryson Harcourts alway Boston in the autumn and Bess w private school there, and Bill wer boarding school in Milton. M went to Boston, too, in late No the big house stayed open, and Bryson was always in it for a r every week. The Harcourts migh go, but the place and the mill there.

ONLY a day or two after he Willis saw Mr. Harcourt again. It time before school opened, with n for him to do except run erra mother. Willis had started out o his walks. He had seen the pond by the front driveway, and there swans there, floating effortlessly o water. While Willis stood on th largest of the birds glanced towa Willis called to him encouragin not the remotest idea of what mi until the bird made a hissing sou his huge wings and half flew and out of the water. Willis took a s backward, but the bird propelled i him, and Willis backed away agair

"Don't run," a voice behind hi

The swan still hissed and sprea and Willis turned and saw Mr. H

"Jupiter always loses his temp too near the edge," Mr. Harcour back in the water with the girls, have yourself." Mr. Harcourt wa toward the swan. "And you need gratuity every time you see me."

"I didn't mean to stir him up, said.

"The next time you come, th piece of bread," Mr. Harcourt sai certain members of my own family something and loses his temper i get it. I've just been talking on th for half an hour. That's why I'r nodded toward the driveway, an that the Locomobile was waitin haven't anything to do, why don down with me and see the mill?"

Mr. Harcourt could always pu ease. It was not charm exactly. It w the same with everyone.

He told Willis not to sit with Pa back with him, because, he said, the pleasure of his company. It long while later that Willis came t there was a reason for Mr. Harcou when Mr. Harcourt asked him w lived and where he had gone to sch really asking about the life of Al and it was not such a bad way t formation, as Willis realized late learned the same technique. If yo someone, even a boy, there had t change of confidence, and you about yourself in return for what y this required a deceptive sort of g a form of art which very few co and Willis never could be the art Harcourt was.

When Mr. Harcourt was a boy, used to drive with his own father t in a buggy drawn by a dappled gr had been run by steam instead o and coal barges were unloaded at gangs of Irish workmen. The hou little village of their own now. M touched on these matters casually Willis knew about them already.

The Harcourt Mill was running that morning. The hum and the came from its open windows and t smell of rubber from the vats c make it into a great machine, people behind that wire fence that it were moving according to its disc

When the Locomobile pulled up the mill, the gates swung back, bu court shook his head. "No, no," Patrick. "I'll walk around for a come back for us at lunchtime, P

CONTINUED ON PAGE 9

Why be Silver Shy?

DO YOU HAVE to take time out to wash silver between the courses of a dinner? If you do...you're silver-shy!

And there's really no excuse for it today. A complete set of 1847 Rogers Bros., America's finest silverplate, can be yours so easily... so reasonably.

You'll cherish your rich, gleaming 1847 Rogers Bros. through the years, for it's made to serve you a lifetime. Forks and spoons are reinforced with extra silver at the point of extra wear. Knives have seamless hollow handles that will not split or leak.

Of course, you know there are many grades of silverplate. Some even have the "Rogers" name. But none bring you the heavy, overall plate of pure silver... the deep-cut design of 1847 Rogers Bros. And every piece of 1847 Rogers Bros. bears the time-honored 1S trademark of The International Silver Company.

A complete service for 8—52 pieces—can be yours for as little as $79.75, including chest. No Federal tax. Only $1.00 down.

So visit your silverware store today. You'll never be silver-shy again.

A product of The International Silver Company

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 96

He stepped out of the Locomobile and nodded to the gateman.

"Stay close behind me, Willis, or you may get lost," he said, and he hurried past the trucks by the loading platform. No one seemed to notice Mr. Harcourt and Willis as they walked by. Mr. Harcourt always prided himself on never interrupting anything, and everyone there accepted his presence as a piece of everyday routine.

Mr. Harcourt walked through Sheds 1, 2 and 4 and through the pump shed and through Warehouse No. 1 to the shipping shed and then to the newer brick building, Unit No. 3, where they were installing new machinery. Except for sounds of hammering and the clicking of chain hoists, Unit 3 was quiet. A section of a boiler was being lowered to its foundation, and Willis saw his father in his shirt sleeves standing among the workmen, and for the first time in their walk Mr. Harcourt paused to watch.

"Easy, Joe," Willis heard his father saying. "Hold it." Alfred Wayde raised his voice to a shout.

"Is it coming down all right?" Mr. Harcourt asked.

"The boys are doing fine," Alfred said.

"Then don't stop on my account," Mr. Harcourt said. "I brought Willis along with me this morning."

"Oh," Mr. Wayde said, "hello, Willis. Let her down, Joe. Easy, easy." His father had no time for anything except for the problem in front of him.

"We'd better go to the office now. I don't think we'll be able to help them, Willis," Mr. Harcourt said.

The mill office building had been designed by the Boston architectural firm of Wentworth and Hynde, early in 1916. Representatives from a number of industrial plants had begun to visit the mill, and Mr. Harcourt had been the first to see the sales value of an impressive place in which to receive customers. Its large arched doorway and its small-paned windows with green shutters gave the mill office the appearance of a Federalist dwelling, as it stood by itself at the northwest corner of the plant on a carefully tended plot of lawn.

The interior, also, looked more like a house than an office. Mr. Harcourt had called in an interior decorator, who had furnished the main office with antique reproductions and often with genuine pieces of English Chippendale. The walls of the main hallway were hung with a collection of sailing-ship pictures, and the table in the directors' room was a Duncan Phyfe. If none of it had anything to do with commercial belting, it gave an impression of quality that was the basis of the Harcourt product.

Mr. Harcourt's mind was on this subject now as he walked into the main hall with Willis and nodded to Miss Minton, the receptionist, who sat behind a flat Georgian desk.

"How does this strike you, Willis?" he asked. "I've never seen why business should not be conducted in agreeable surroundings. Is Mr. Hewett in, Miss Minton?"

"Yes, Mr. Harcourt. He was asking for you," Miss Minton said. "Shall I tell him you're in?"

"Oh, no," Mr. Harcourt said, "I'll stop in and see him."

Mr. Hewett's door was open. Except for his neat brown suit and for his age—he was in his sixties then—Mr. Hewett reminded Willis of Mr. Beane at the Harcourt place. He was seated at his desk reading a report when Mr. Harcourt entered.

"Hello, H.H.," Mr. Harcourt said.

"Hello, H.H.," Mr. Hewett answered.

It was one of the old Harcourt jokes, that they both had the same first name and the same initials.

"This is Willis Wayde," Mr. Harcourt said.

"Oh, he's Alf's son, is he?" Mr. Hewett said. "Well, how does everything strike you, Willis?"

WILLIS cleared his throat. "It's pretty big to get an idea of it all at once," he said.

"Some people around here never do," Mr. Hewett said. "Will you draw up a chair and sit down, H.H.?"

"No, thanks," Mr. Harcourt said. "Is there anything I ought to know about, Henry?"

"Nothing this morning," Mr. Hewett said. "Decker is coming in this afternoon. Do you want me to sit in with you?"

"It might be just as well," Mr. Harcourt said. "Henry, Spinner Five is working all right now, isn't it? At least it sounded right."

"Old man Avery was sick that you noticed it yesterday," Mr. Hewett said.

Willis followed Mr. Harcourt farther down the hall, and Mr. Harcourt stopped at another open door.

"Go in, Willis," he said. "This is where I stay when I'm here."

Willis was surprised by the simplicity of Mr. Harcourt's office. It was larger, but its appointments were much simpler that the room of any other executive. Th desk, the old-fashioned carpet, th chairs around a bare pine table had from the old office of William Harc furnishings indicated dramatically Harcourt, as the head of the Harc could dispense with elaborate settin

Mr. Harcourt pointed to a chair desk and sat down himself on the sv behind it. Then he examined some front of him.

"EXCUSE me just a minute, Willis, and he read the office memoranda w centration that made Willis think t visible curtain had fallen between the

"Miss Jackman," he called, "will in, please?"

Miss Jackman had been his sec twenty years. She was gray-haired backed, with steel-rimmed glasses her look like a schoolmarm. Mr. smiled at her, but she did not return

"You've got me down for a p schedule this afternoon, Miss Jackn Harcourt said. "I'm getting old a time to turn around in."

"Yes," Miss Jackman said, "but y got the time today. You should ha earlier this

"Perhaps have," Mr. said.

"The bar you from Miss Jackn "Will you meeting on

"Yes," court answe I'll have lu club."

"Mr. Bry to see you," man told h

"What do now?" Mr. asked.

"It's abo Departmen

"Oh dear Harcourt s him to see house this there anyth

"Yes," Miss Jackman said. "N telephoned. She's very anxious to call her back."

"She called me here at the office shouldn't do that," Mr. Harcourt s get her for me in ten minutes. T Miss Jackman."

Miss Jackman strode back int office and closed its door sharpl cisively, and Mr. Harcourt smiled.

"I'm afraid Miss Jackman is disp me this morning," he said. "I wonde think of the Harcourt Mill, Willis, seen it. Would you like it if I got next summer in the school vacatio

"Yes, sir. I'd like it very much."

Hero worship is always natural You were always filled at that age filled wishes, and Willis was wishir that he could be exactly like Mr. court, without having the least idea a wish entailed.

Mr. Harcourt leaned back in chair. "From what I hear," he s family moves around a lot. I use change once myself, but now I'm the mill machinery, not literally tively. I suppose nearly everyone in some way eventually."

"I guess pa doesn't want to g Willis said.

"Your father has a creative n Harcourt said. "It's hard for anyo a mind like that to stay still."

"The last man pa worked for," "was a man named Mr. Harrod C ver. He's a pretty rich man, I gue you're acquainted with Mr. Cash.

"Yes, I know him," Mr. Har "He's a lot richer man than I am

"Well, he hired pa to get the wa silver mine of his," Willis said, "a

All these somberly moral people whose characteristic is renunciation completely forget what is essential. It is not morality, however indispensable and respectable that is. . . . The essential is the joy, the splendor, the magnificence of each man, of all men. Virtue is only a means. The essential is life—splendid life. There is no greater mistake than to imagine the Eternal looking with a pleased smile at these pale little virtues. What the Eternal loves is life—beautiful, powerful, intense—and everything which can strengthen it, make it last in the world, strong and active.

—PIERRE CERESOLE

bring out the natural beauty of your hair

If you really want to make your hair lovelier, you can do it, safely, easily in about 3 minutes.

From Noreen's 14 wonder-working colors you'll find just the shade that enhances your natural color, reviving its youthful, lustrous beauty or to blend in gray or streaked hair.

Try a Noreen beauty treatment. See for yourself how Noreen will keep your hair the way you want it from shampoo to shampoo...bright and shining instead of dull and drab.

At cosmetic counters everywhere.
Also professionally applied in beauty salons.
Available in Canada.

Noreen®

COLOR HAIR RINSE

h wanted him to run the mine, e mine wasn't a problem any er told me about that," Mr. "What does your father want lis?"

he to be an engineer too," Willis nt to be an engineer?"

Willis said. "I like making things, e machines apart."

Harcourt said, "it seems to me went regularly to school. I'm ou a secret, Willis. You can re- vant to, though I'd just as soon tween you and me. I happen to her is very exceptional in many o use you to keep him with us, Willis said.

Harcourt answered. "I'm going about your future this afternk he thinks much about my Willis said. "Pa thinks mostly ery."

er thinks about his son," Mr. "You'll know when you have wn."

, because the door to Miss ce had opened.

peak with Mrs. James now?" said.

right," Mr. Harcourt said.

two telephones on Mr. Har- ne for the mill and one for the ted up the receiver of the outriet," he said. "I've been mean- . I'll be in town on Tuesday— ng. . . . Yes, you can reach me . Why, that sounds delightful, we say the usual place at the . . . I don't really care what ryson think. On Tuesday, then. lear."

rt hung the receiver back and "Miss Jackman!"

an opened the door quickly. ll up the house in town?" Mr. "Tell them I'll be in town over and if Patrick's waiting I'll go neon now."

has asked you for dinner Tues- iss Jackman said.

Harcourt said, "I know. Will rs. Bryson and tell her that I'm n town, and you might tell her with Mrs. James."

t be better if you told her that s Jackman said.

Mr. Harcourt said. "Well, Willis, eaving now or your mother will st, and I want to thank you for ry pleasant morning."

town had a self-consciousness small towns that had been eral centuries. New and late always set apart. When Willis' the Ladies' Alliance of the Con- urch, she was always known from the Harcourt Mill; and en he joined the Dock Street Mr. Hewett's invitation, was as the Wayde who worked at seemed curious to Willis that on was slightly different from ents. The difference must have gh school, where he was always boys as "the guy," and by the ellow," who lived at the Har- He was never the smartest boy e dullest one either, and he had too late to be identified with group. Yet it was amazing how emembered about him when it while to remember.

Lewis, who retired as princi- de High School in 1927, dis- ered, even at the age of eighty, It seemed only yesterday, he at Willis and his mother called -school building on the day be- ned in September, 1922. He was ately by the young man's fine, earance. Often when Mr. Lewis tour before going home, he would find Willis still studying at his desk, and he remembered what Willis said, just as though it were yesterday. "When I work something out by myself," he said, "then I know it, Mr. Lewis."

It was strange when Willis heard this anecdote repeated that he could not remember a single occasion when he had stayed after school to study, except once when Miss Minnie Wilson had kept him there after she had caught him passing a note across the aisle to Susan Brown, and it was not his note either. It was a note that Bill Ross, now owner of the Ross Garage, wanted delivered to Susan Brown.

Miss Minnie Wilson, who taught English, remembered Willis too. When she kept him after school for passing the note Miss Wilson never forgot what Willis had said.

"You won't do it again, will you, Willis?" she had asked him.

"No, Miss Wilson," he had answered. "I won't do it again."

He had said it looking straight into her eyes. He was really saying that he had no use for any little flirt like Susan Brown and he cared for someone else, and she could tell who that someone was.

Willis Wayde never bought a soda for a girl, let alone Susy, except once when he treated Winnie Decker, Steve Decker's sister, to a strawberry sundae.

Steve Decker had been in Room 3 with Willis too. Willis' old man knew his old man out there at Harcourt's. That was why he had Willis over to the house sometimes, and once they were on the debating team together. The subject was "Should Capital Punishment be Abolished?" Steve also remembered the time when Willis had treated Winnie to a strawberry sundae. Willis had been asked to supper, and after supper Willis had said suddenly:

CONTINUED ON PAGE 103

Give her
Adventure in fragrance!

ESCAPADE

Dusting Powder and Toilet Water 3.00

Toilet Water 1.50

Escapade Perfume 15.00

A blending of subtle French genius with the bold, vivacious American touch
—this accounts for its very special style.
Lively, dry yet heady, defying classification, Escapade is—above all —Adventure in Fragrance.

Eleven Escapades designed to gratify all who give, enchant all who receive.

Not illustrated:
Purse Perfume 2.00 • Stick Cologne 1.00 • Body Sachet 1.25
Bubbling Bath Crystals 1.50 • Talcum 1.00 • Bath Salts 1.50
Dusting Powder 1.50 • "Petite Adventure", guest set 1.25

At leading cosmetic counters prices plus tax

SHULTON New York Toronto

WALK-TESTE

WATER-REPELLENT POPLIN RAIN-STEPS shown in two heel heights. The flats are set off by gleaming buttons and bows—fit most of your leather shoes. The heeled version—for more dressy appearance—turns a smart cuff to the rain. Tan, navy, grey, brown or black.

KOROSEAL RAIN-STEPS made of famous, longer-wearing, transparent Koroseal. Matching pouch. Flat or medium heels.

These smart, lightweight boots actually walked 3 miles a day to prove they really wear!

Day in, day out, in every kind of weather, testers walk these boots over a measured course. They walk them further and more than you ever dreamed boots could be walked. That's why "Rain-steps" stand up as well as stand out—they're proved in performance. When you draw on a featherlight pair at your favorite shoe or department store, you couldn't ask better protection or smarter styling. Yet they're so inexpensive (only $1.95 to $4.45) that it pays to own two pairs. Then the latex or the Koroseal makes a grand keep-handy pouch." The gay, colorful poplin can carry you through the year; it's an all-season boot so downright pretty that you almost hope for rain to show it off.

TEXTURE RAIN-STEPS reinforced at the cleats and on the soles. Flat or medium heels. Red, beige, blue, grey.

Rain-Steps

Made only by Hood Rubber Co.
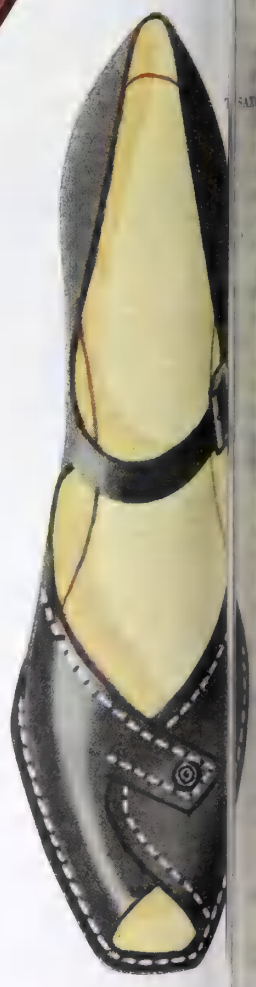
and B. F. Goodrich

THE DIXIE



Shoemaker's Pride

SHOWS IN FINEST TAILORING ON POLISHED CALF

THE CONTOUR

Somehow when you slip them on . . .
you glance down and admire something more than their neat, trim lines that look so nice with your suit. For in the superb simplicity of these tailored Red Cross Shoes, you sense the pride of the craftsmen who made them . . . and feel a little proud yourself . . . each time you wear them.

THE DAMITA

Red Cross Shoes

FEATURED IN CANADA AS GOLD CROSS SHOES

Largest-selling brand of fine footwear in the world

$8.95 TO $12.95

THE UNITED STATES SHOE CORP. RED CROSS SHOE

THIS PRODUCT HAS NO CONNECTION WHATEVER WITH THE AMERICAN NATIONAL RED CROSS

The United States Shoe Corporation, Cincinnati 7, Ohio. These shoes are manufactured and distributed as in Canada by B & L Shoe, Ltd., in England by Somervell Bros., Ltd., in Australia by "Gold Cross Shoes" (Aust.), Pty. Ltd., in South Africa by Eddels (S.A.), Ltd., in New Zealand by Duckworth, Turner and Co.

NTINUED FROM PAGE 99

ld it be, Winnie, if we went down tore and I was to buy you a s a fact that Wayde said "was,"
n those days.
ple began to remember the youth yde, whose names and identities ntirely forgotten. The debating senior dance, and the social eve-parish hall of the Congregational ch his mother made him attend, alf-remembered interludes. The supplied him with no love object an the London streets had sup-Kipling's soldier fresh from Manse he was on a higher plane far f Susy Brown or Winnie Decker.
f course, was Bess Harcourt.

the years that his parents lived urt place, his mother was always n October came.
going to the city any day now," ay, "and we can have everything
es."
what she always said in the au-ie must have known that they have the place to themselves.
ees were bare and the gardens
l for the winter there were always the big house and someone was ng there in court should lenly from never could when he e, and the ue with the urts. Some-would meet he other girls
iston school, e occasions pass by ply saying is," and he times hear ing to the es on the uld hear her he garden

ferent when or some of Bill's friends. Bill stop and introduce Willis to the d sometimes he would ask Willis in whatever they were doing.
ever worried that he did not fit ups, because when they were by and Bess and Bill were friends especial way, and they all knew ne's fault they were separated nces beyond their joint control.

ned the situation to him once in y that a girl of her age would—was always frank. Willis met her morning when he had gone to othouse grapes, which Mr. Mac-said he could visit any time as nt in and out quickly and always eenhouse door. He came face to s just as he left the greenhouse.
ring a pleated blue-serge skirt, a gray mittens, and a toboggan

he said. "What are you doing oking at the hothouse grapes," n't eat any," she said. "Mac-always tell. Where are you going

he said.
up to the pine woods to look for in the snow," she said. "Would me along?"
if you want me to," he said.
, I wouldn't ask you," Bess anry up. I'm cold standing still."
d to find the paths through the h the snow, but Bess knew them

ke going places with you, Willis," when there isn't anyone else

"Is that a fact?" Willis said.

"Don't be silly," Bess said. "When I have friends it isn't the same. They wouldn't like you and you wouldn't like them."

"Is that a fact?" Willis said.

He said it because it was an easy thing to say, and he could afford to be amused. He was older and his age put him in a superior position.

"DON'T be silly," Bess said. "I like you when I'm alone."

"All right," Willis said. "I've got my own friends."

It was pleasant in the pine woods. Beneath the trees the snow looked almost blue.

"Have you ever kissed a girl?" Bess asked him.

"Yes, I have," Willis answered.

"Oh," Bess said. "Where was that?"

"Back in Oregon."

"Oh, was she prettier than me?"

"Yes," Willis said, "and she was more grown up."

"Well," Bess said, "a lot of girls in my class have kissed boys."

"Is that a fact?" Willis said.

"I wish you wouldn't keep saying that thing," Bess said. "I've never kissed a boy. I suppose I'll have to sometime. Would you like to kiss me?"

"No," Willis said, "not especially."

"Well," Bess said, "go ahead anyway. I've got to kiss a boy sometime, and I may as well get it over with. Go ahead."

She shut her eyes tight and clenched her fists and turned her face up toward him.

"Well," she said, "that wasn't much."

"No," Willis answered, "it certainly wasn't."

"It's silly, isn't it?" Bess said. "But we can try it again sometime."

In March there was a rumor that Mr. Harcourt had gone suddenly to Florida. On Saturday afternoon Willis' father asked him to come down cellar to help while he attached an electric motor to a centrifugal machine that he had been working on for several weeks.

Some time before, his father had brought home a bag of potato chips, of which he was very fond, and, while eating them, he had begun to wonder whether it would not be possible to slice and fry bananas in the same manner. He had found that he could slice bananas and cook them in deep fat and the immediate result was satisfactory, but an hour later the banana chips became limp and spongy. Banana chips, Alfred Wayde had discovered, were deliquescent, and now he was thinking of some way to get the water out of them.

The device, which roughly resembled a windmill, turned by a small electric motor, was going to get every bit of water and excess grease from the bananas.

"What are you going to do next if it does?" Willis asked his father.

Alfred Wayde looked at Willis impatiently. "It doesn't make a bit of difference. I only want to see whether it will. What made you ask such a fool question, son?"

"I thought maybe you could patent it and sell it," Willis said.

"Well," Alfred Wayde said, "why should I? I don't want to go into the banana business. You'd better go for a walk and not ask any more fool questions."

It was half past five in the afternoon. The sky outside was leaden gray, but there was still plenty of light because the days were certainly getting longer. As Willis walked along he began thinking what the woods must have been like a hundred years ago, before there was any Harcourt place. He was very much astonished when he suddenly saw Mr. Harcourt walking toward him.

Mr. Harcourt was dressed in the black broadcloth coat with the fur collar that he

SHARE YOUR HOLIDAY JOY

send a CARE package overseas

SEND $10 TO CARE—NEW YORK

At your local Ben Franklin store

Ruth Barry®

FULL FASHIONED NYLONS

ask the girl who wears them!

Enjoy the luxurious, leg-flattering beauty of Ruth Barry nylons to give your legs that sleek, breath-taking look. You'll delight in their famous long-wearing qualities . . . their fashion-right shades—and at a price to please your purse!

You can also select crisp, dark heels with straight, pencil-line seams to enhance your legs.

For Extra Savings . . . Ask About
THE RUTH BARRY HOSIERY CLUB PLAN

Many Ben Franklin stores have a Ruth Barry Hosiery Club for you to enjoy additional savings. A record is kept of your hosiery purchases and, when you have purchased 12 pairs—you get the 13th pair at NO CHARGE!

SOLD NATIONWIDE IN OVER 2,200
BEN FRANKLIN STORES

FRANCHISED BY BUTLER BROTHERS • CHICAGO

Are you in the know?

Which solves your family gift problems?

☐ Charge 'em to Dad ☐ I.O.U.'s

You'd plant really different (and wonderful) presents under the family tree? Write I.O.U.'s! One to Mom, promising you'll take over some household chore daily—for 3 months. To Dad your pledge to deliver 20 shoe shines on demand. And Sis? She'll prefer the present to future service; get something glamorously "grown-up." But one day you can do her a service—by helping her to get the sanitary protection that keeps her confident: Kotex. Those flat, pressed ends prevent revealing outlines!

Could the life of the party be—

☐ Giggly Gert ☐ Choosey Sue ☐ Woozy Sam

If you really hope to see a new year—see who's driving, the eve before. The hand that holds the wheel holds your life—and the party's. So be choosey. Veto woozy or hot-rod minded drivers for a trustworthy guy who knows the safety score. To save other "accidents," remember Kotex. Gives trustworthy protection; softness that holds its shape.

For mistletoe bait, why not try—

☐ Formal flattery ☐ Gooseless lipstick

You, too, can be a Lorelei in your holiday formal—even if you're built on the lean and hollow side. A gently draped bodice, a gossamer stole, can make a dream dress perfect for you. So too, a girl's calendar needs should be exactly suited to her. That's why Kotex gives you a choice of 3 absorbencies. Try 'em! There's Regular, Junior, Super.

More women choose KOTEX® than all other sanitary napkins

®T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Which of these "steadies" does most for you?

☐ Romeo & Juliet ☐ Kotex and Kotex belts ☐ Moon 'n' June

Made for each other—that's Kotex and Kotex sanitary belts—and made to keep you comfortable. Of strong, soft-stretch elastic . . . they're designed to prevent curling, cutting or twisting. So lightweight you'll hardly know you're wearing one. And Kotex belts take kindly to dunkings: stay flat even after countless washings. Why not buy two . . . for a change!

usually wore when he motored from the city. He was accompanied by a slender, middle-aged lady whose hat and fur cape looked more like the city than the country. She was holding Mr. Harcourt's arm.

"Why, hello," Mr. Harcourt said. "Harriet, this is Willis Wayde, the son of my plant engineer. They're living in the garden house, you know."

"Oh yes, of course," Mrs. James said, and she smiled at Willis and held out a gray-gloved hand.

"Mrs. James and I have been motoring," Mr. Harcourt said, "and I suggested that we might stop for a cup of tea before returning to Boston. Won't you join Mrs. James and me in a cup of tea?"

"I guess I ought to be getting home, sir," Willis said.

They were acting as though the whole thing were perfectly natural, but Willis was sure it was not.

"Please come with us, Willis," Mrs. James said. "You look as though you need a cup of tea."

Patrick's wife, who always helped out in the winters, served tea in the library. The ornate silver service, which Willis had seen in the dining room, had been placed on a low table in front of the black marble fireplace, where three lumps of cannel coal were burning. It was the first time that Willis had ever seen the conventional serving of tea.

"Do you want me to pour, Henry?" Mrs. James asked.

"I think so," Mr. Harcourt said, "if you would be so kind, Harriet," and suddenly he laughed.

Mr. Harcourt looked handsome and younger when he laughed, and somehow Mrs. James looked younger too.

Mrs. James was seated before the tea table, her hands moving gracefully and quickly, and she measured out tea into the silver pot and poured hot water into the fragile cups to warm them and then poured the water into a silver bowl. Willis never again saw anyone who could pour tea and move all those things about as beautifully as Mrs. James.

Something inexplicable had happened that had made Willis feel perfectly at home.

Mr. Harcourt turned to the window, and Willis saw the lights of the Locomobile coming up the drive. "Dear me," Mr. Harcourt said, and he pulled a gold watch from his waistcoat pocket. "There's Patrick and it's six o'clock. I suppose we'd better leave, Harriet."

"It's been ever so nice seeing you, Willis," Mrs. James said. "I hope we'll meet again."

"You'll meet again," Mr. Harcourt said. "Willis is going to work for me at the mill this summer, aren't you, Willis?"

"Yes, sir," Willis said.

He felt tremendously happy as he walked down the passage to the front hall. You had to have a hero when you were going on sixteen, and Willis would have gladly died for Mr. Harcourt.

WILLIS was not surprised at all when the news broke that Mr. Harcourt and Mrs. James were married and had gone for a while to Palm Beach in Florida. He could not understand why everyone, including Mr. Beane, appeared surprised and unsettled.

He understood more clearly that he had been in the midst of an earth-shaking event, the next time he saw Bess Harcourt.

"You say you saw her?" Bess sai

"Yes," Willis answered. "She was house."

"She doesn't look like much, d Bess said. "She's just an old lady w money or anything. I don't know people get married and make thing everybody."

"I thought she was kind of nic said.

"THAT shows how little you kn said. "You don't understand be haven't got a single cent of mone father is a silly old man, and mom ing me embroider a pincushion her."

"Maybe I'll make some money Willis said.

"Don't be silly, Willis," Bess s "I don't kn like you whe that way."

"I don't c don't," Willis

"Well," H "as long as and there's n around, don' to kiss me, W

"No, not Willis said.

"Now, Wi said. "We're have a dance in the vaca mommy says ing to ask Ste and Winnie They are th of Mr. Decke yer, you kr I'll get mom you too. Plea Willis."

Willis had time at that in fact, he have a good ever he was the Bryson house. After Harcourt pickup supp brightly ligh room they r the rugs in th hall, and M turned on t graph.

Willis al have troubl steps, but M Harcourt went out of her way to s was doing very well. Mrs. Harcourt in a low voice to try to be especia Winnie Decker, who was a fattish girl in those days. Willis was sure t having a much better time than Ste who looked tall and sallow and sc

"Say," Steve Decker said to step outside and smoke a cigarett

Willis had never smoked in his would have died rather than tell Ste He was very glad to step outside w

"What are you coughing for?" S him. "Haven't you ever smoked a

"Oh yes," Willis answered, "lots

"These parties bore me," Steve sa time the Harcourt kids ask us to o man makes us go. Bill Harcourt i either, do you think so?"

"No," Willis said, "no, he isn't s

"And Bess, she isn't so hot eith you know what?"

"No, what?" Willis asked.

"She asked me to kiss her. She time she learned how to kiss a boy. do you know about that?"

Willis coughed again. "What do y

Willis could still feel the acrid s cigarette smoke. He could even the exact sound of a footstep behi the gravel drive. It was young Bill

"Hello," Bill said. "What are y ing out here?"

CONTINUED ON PAGE 10

SMALL BOY DRESSING

By GEORGIE STARBUCK GALBRAITH

He gets on half his underwear,
And sock in hand, he sprawls to stare
And stare through space. Anon he draws
The sock on slowly. Long, long pause.
Then he can't find the other sock.
His mother pleads, invokes the clock.
At last, at lengthy last he's shod
And shirted . . . now to sit like God
And contemplate what cloudy bournes?
Clad in eternity, he scorns
The adult madness, haste. Why bow
To clocks when it is always now?

New!

RICHER LATHER! INSTANT RINSING! SHINY-CLEAN HAIR! YET THIS NEW SHAMPOO NEVER, NEVER DRIES YOUR HAIR!

ew Woodbury Shampoo

OR BEAUTIFUL HAIR-DOS RIGHT AFTER SHAMPOOING!

ike every good shampoo, New Woodbury cleans eautifully. It makes your hair shiny and pretty. But it oes all this without drying out a single strand of hair. he reason is a special ingredient which helps preserve our natural hair oils. This means you can have per- ct, good-looking hair-dos right after shampooing not hours later). New Woodbury Shampoo gives remarkably rich lather, and rinses out quickly – even in hardest water. No special rinse is ever needed. We believe no finer shampoo is sold, yet this is such a popular shampoo, it can be priced much lower than any other quality shampoo. Right now, the big $1.00 size is only 59¢. See how clean and fresh a Woodbury Shampoo can make you feel!

new! deep

Tissue-Test proves it!

After you think your usual cleansing method has cleaned your skin, use a few drops of Deep Magic. Then look at your tissue. See all the clogging make-up that only Deep Magic can remove . . . Proof that Deep Magic cleans deep, deep down— where beauty begins!

magic

facial cleansing lotion by Toni

cl ans your skin up to 3 times cleaner than soaps or creams

now you can have a clearer skin

because you can have a cleaner skin. New Deep Magic actually deep-cleans your skin as much as three times cleaner than soaps or creams—without soap drying, without cream greasiness! It leaves your skin far cleaner, radiantly clear the very first time you use it. Lanolin-gentle Deep Magic actually replaces natural oils, leaving behind an invisible powder base.

Try Deep Magic today. See the wonderful magic it works on your complexion!

(60¢ and $1.00, plus tax, wherever cosmetics are sold.)

No other cleansing method leaves your skin

so clear - so soft - so radiant!

RED CROSS
Cotton Balls

For bathing baby's eyelids cleaning the diaper area applying baby oil or lotion

For { baby care beauty care
first aid use

sterile
Johnson & Johnson

No connection whatever with American National Red Cross

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 104

"Just resting," Steve Decker said, "and taking a drag on a cigarette."

"Oh boy," Bill Harcourt said, "give me one, will you?" Bill was always ready to try anything and his enthusiasm never died. Willis always had a warm spot in his heart for Bill.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Harcourt Mill occurred just after high school had closed in June and just before Willis started to work at the mill. The stockholders gathered at the Harcourt Mill and then met for luncheon at the big house.

Everyone was too busy to think of Willis Wayde. He wanted to keep out of the way, but curiosity impelled him to stand in the corner of the rose garden, where he could see the automobiles as they came up the drive. That was where Bess Harcourt met him and asked him, as she often did, what he was doing.

"You can see," he said, "I'm not doing anything."

There was no doubt that Bess was growing up. She was no longer the middy-bloused girl that she had been the previous summer. Her braid was doubled up now and tied by a ribbon, and she wore a gray sweater, and a red belt around her waist, but she still had her blue serge skirt and her sensible low shoes.

"Well, I'm not doing anything either," Bess said. "I guess they're fighting down at the mill. They all think grandfather's spending too much money. Aunt Emily was awful cross this morning. She was in the den with daddy before they went to the mill, and then Cousin Roger came, and then the Hayward cousins came. Mommy doesn't like the Haywards and I hate them. Let's go inside the big house and look around."

"No," Willis said, "we wouldn't have any business being there."

Bess looked at him thoughtfully. "You haven't but I have," she said. "If anyone catches us I'll say that I invited you."

"I'll stay here. You go if you like."

She took his hand and tried to pull him after her. "Gosh," she said, "you're twice as strong as Bill. I know a place where we can hide and see them through the banisters, at the head of the stairs. I did it last year."

He was sure he would not have gone if she had not said that he was twice as strong as Bill.

The front door stood open but there was no one in the hall, and not a sound except in the kitchen and the dining room.

The dining-room table was stretched its full length and there were turkeys and hams on the serving table beside the pantry door and heavy lace tablecloths and the green Chinese place plates, but the cut glass was what Willis recalled most clearly—that heavy, ornate glass of another age, tumblers and three wineglasses beside each plate, glittering like ice.

"They always have it for the meeting," Bess whispered. "I was going to have it someday, before he got married again." Then Bess drew a quick sharp breath. "Hurry. They're coming," and she reached for his hand.

He heard the sound of wheels on the gravel driveway. Bess still was holding his hand as they ran on tiptoe down the hall. In a second they reached the balustrade of the upstairs passageway that looked down on the hall.

It was not a bad place to hide, affording just room for them to sit close together on the floor and to peer through the banisters.

The whole house had suddenly become alive. Mr. Henry Harcourt had appeared, and Mrs. Harcourt was with him.

"Roger," he was saying, "I'm not sure whether you have met your Aunt Harriet."

He was speaking to a stout middle-aged man whose hair was so closely cropped that you could see the pink of his scalp beneath. He was so fat that he should have had the conventional jolly expression, but instead his round face had a petulant look.

"That's Cousin Roger," Bess whispered in his ear. "He owns a lot of stock."

"What's happened to Catherine?" Mr. Harcourt said. "I don't believe you've met your new Aunt Harriet, Catherine. . . . This is Roger's wife, my dear."

A tall lady with gaunt rangy shoulders came into Willis' line of vision.

"I've been looking forward to it," she said, "dear Uncle Henry."

"That's Cousin Catherine," Bess whispered. "She's nasty, and their children are nasty."

"And here's Will Browning," Mr. Harcourt said. "But you remember Will, don't you, Harriet?"

"He's the president of grandfather's bank," Bess whispered. "So he doesn't count, and there's old Decker, with spots all over his coat. He doesn't count much either."

The hall was filled with people now, shaking hands with Mr. and Mrs. Henry Harcourt, and then moving toward the living room.

"There come mommy and daddy," Bess whispered. "There must have been a fight at the meeting. You can tell because daddy's laughing too much. And here come the Haywards. Grandfather bought most of their stock, but daddy says they never miss a free meal. Everybody hates the Haywards."

"Doesn't anybody like anybody else?" Willis whispered.

"Of course not," Bess whispered back, "except when they take sides in a fight."

The group in the hall was growing smaller. Finally Mr. and Mrs. Harcourt stood alone near the foot of the stairs. They turned and walked toward the living room, and Willis moved uneasily but Bess shook her head.

"Don't," she whispered, "don't move. Here's grandfather coming back."

She had seen him before Willis had. He came across the empty hall and then he began walking slowly up the stairs.

"He must be going to the bathroom," Bess whispered.

Willis thought that it was a most indelicate remark. They could hear his footsteps moving nearer. Then they heard his voice right beside them.

"You can get out now," he said. "The show is over."

Willis heard Bess give a sharp gasp as he struggled to his feet. Mr. Harcourt was standing just in front of the niche that led to the window.

"It's all right," he said. "I noticed you up there," and then he laughed. "I used to watch it from here myself. Now if I were you two, I'd sneak down to the kitchen and tell Mary to give you some food. If she's cross, tell her it's my orders, Bess."

"Oh, grandfather," Bess said, "you're awfully sweet."

"Sweet as sugar," Mr. Harcourt said. "Well, Willis, you've seen the family. It may help you when you come to work for me next Monday. I'm putting you under o son in Building One. Beginning N and I will both be working for th He laughed and walked away.

Willis was almost sixteen the f he worked at the Harcourt Mill. with some of his schoolmates as Building 1, and then as an assistan the warehouse. The next summ graduated from high school, he w Buildings 2 and 3.

If his detailed knowledge of bel part that belting might play in a plant finally impressed a good people, he knew now that he cou father for this.

He never expressed this grat father until a long while afterwar the year 1948, to be accurate, Wayde was retired and living California. Willis had gone to the quick business trip by air.

It was late afternoon when Will development, called Canyon D'O D'Oro was one of those groups o dwellings that kept springing up rooms in California. There w planted hibiscus hedge in front, olive tree on the lawn. His moth dungarees and sneakers, was watc sprinkler when the taxi stopped. H white but she moved as fast as ev

"Willis," she said, "isn't it a lo It's just what I've always dreame

"Yes," Willis said, "it looks swe

"Your father's taking the car a She raised her voice to a commar "Alf, Willis is here."

His father appeared holding wrench. He had put on weight puffingslightly. "Hello, Willis," he tricks? Cynthia, you get supper, and I will sit in the breezeway."

As they sat watching the sun west, Willis thought of the sum Harcourt place when Alfred Wa came home from the mill together

"It's a long way since that Har Alfred Wayde said. "You were a You asked me the dumbest ques

"What question?" Willis asked

"If I knew so much about th Mill, why didn't I want to run it?

Willis did not answer, but it wa he still asked himself when he th his father.

CONTINUED ON PAGE

© B. A. AND CO., LTD.—"THE BEST CARTOONS

"How was I to know you were saving it for something?"

at WOOLWORTH'S America's Favorite Toy Store

HUBLEY TOYS

your youngsters all the thrills of LIFE-LIKE ACTION!

They haul, scoop, steer, retract . . . give the excitement of driving trucks and tractors, racing planes and cars. They're lightweight metal with noiseless, scuff-less, rubber wheels. Christmas favorites! Choose yours now on Woolworth's Lay-Away Plan, if you wish.

1. WINGS FOLD, WHEELS RETRACT ON NAVY FIGHTER! Ready to blast enemy, or be stowed on carrier. 4-blade prop spins. Plastic cockpit bubble. 8¾" wing spread. . . . . .98

2. NORTH WOODS TRUCK HAULS 5 GIANT LOGS! Truck lumber from a-way up North! Load stays in place with tough metal chain. 10" long. .98

3. SPORTS CAR LOOKS LIKE A FOREIGN MAKE! Even carries a spare on back, as European sportsters do! Realistic chassis. 9" long. . . 1.49

4. LINESMEN! GET THOSE TELEPHONE POLES UP! String telephone lines across the nation! Bell truck, trailer, pole, 3 digging tools. Winch works. 15" long with trailer. . . . 1.49

5. TRAILER-TRUCK DUMPS AUTOMATICALLY! Body springs up, tail gate opens when you push side lever. Knee action rear wheels take bumps in the road. 17" long. . . . 3.79

6. TRACTOR-LOADER SCOOPS, DUMPS DIRT! The scoop moves at a touch of the lever. Steering wheel turns front. Spring seat. 13" long. . . 2.98

F. W. WOOLWORTH CO.

At your nearest Woolworth store

Some prices slightly higher in West

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 108

"Boy," Alfred Wayde said, "I've never wanted to run anything except machines. A good internal-combustion engine is better than a man."

You could buy people who fiddled with machines, and the price of people who fiddled with men came higher, but Willis did not tell the old man that.

"Old H. H. was always monkeying with people. He couldn't keep his hands off."

"I owe a lot to him," Willis said.

Alfred Wayde laughed suddenly. "Still on the same beam, aren't you?" he said. "Listen, boy. I've told you we don't owe them one thing any more than the engine in my Buick owes anything to me."

There was such a thing as loyalty, but Willis did not bring it up. His mother was calling them in to supper, and he had not known that his father owned a Buick. He never would have owned one if Willis had not been more like Mr. Henry Harcourt than Alfred Wayde.

If Mr. Harcourt had taken an interest in Willis, he had always known where to draw the line between interest and partiality. Mr. Harcourt treated Willis the same way he treated everyone else, and when Bill Harcourt worked there for a month there was no way of telling that Bill was his grandson, except that Mr. Harcourt expressly told the foremen in Building 3 that Bill was lazy and not to let him get away with anything.

When Mr. Harcourt used to meet Willis on the Harcourt place, he hardly ever alluded to the mill, but he often asked Willis about his high-school studies. When Willis took his college-board examinations, Mr. Harcourt asked about his marks, and seemed relieved that Willis had not done badly.

Mr. Harcourt called on the telephone the Sunday morning after Willis had told him about his marks to ask if he might drop in after church. As he sat in the livi church clothes—his striped trous coat, his stiff collar and his seve made the rest of them look very s

"Say, Mr. Harcourt," Alfred "how about a little rye and ginge

"Not at the moment, thank y Mr. Harcourt said, "but don't you." Mr. Harcourt smiled. "I to say a few words about Willis. I planning to send him to college."

Willis saw his mother straight her stiff-backed chair. "Why, ye "we are hoping to, Mr. Harcou

"I'm delighted to hear it," M said. "I hope you're going to Harvard. Bill's going there next

"Well," Mrs. Wayde said, "A think it's too expensive a school

"Oh, I would hardly say that court said. "There will be expens It occurred to me last night tha of some help along those lines. Granville Beane to Massachuse would give me great pleasure t Willis to Harvard, Mrs. Wayde."

There was a moment's silence Wayde and Willis both looked at M

"That's very kind of you, Mr. she said, and she folded her han in her lap. "I guess Alfred and I a ent people. It will mean more to do this without help, and more t

Mr. Harcourt nodded. "Well," respect your point of view. Wh thinking of sending him, Mrs. Wa

"We haven't made up our mind Wayde said, "but we're thinking a University."

"Cynthia," his father said, aft court had gone, "why shouldn't o have sent the boy to college?"

"Because it wouldn't have been she said. "We're obligated eno Harcourts, living here, and I don't to be weak."

During that summer, whenever seen Bill and Bess their relationsh same as they always had been. after church he had fallen into t walking by the brook, and it ge pened that he would meet Bess the neither of them had ever made Then one Sunday in October, just started with college, everything ch

He saw Bess coming toward h the distance she looked the same a had, but not when she came near sudden Bess was all grown up, u able and unattainable. Her tawn pinned up in a knot, and she had her nose, which looked more like the Harcourt portraits than it ever

"Why, Willis," she said, "you someone else. You've got a new su haven't you? Where did you get it

"Downtown," he told her.

"Well," she said, "it looks it. W you like Boston University?"

"It's all right, I guess," he said.

SHE swayed slightly, from one other. "You were an awful fool, "not to go to Harvard when offered to send you. Nobody goes University."

"That's all you know about it,"

"You wouldn't look so bad if yo ferent suit," she said. "Do you reme I used to let you kiss me? It seem doesn't it?"

"You didn't let me, you asked said, "and you asked Steve Decker

"Oh, Willis," she said, "don't b ridiculous. Anyway, it was ages a

"It isn't as long as that," he said.

"But it seems like ages ago. We been awful fools. If I did it now, think you'd want to marry me or s

"I don't want to marry anybo

She smiled. "All you think about don't you?" she said. "Well, I su have to. Well, you can work for us when you get through with Boston U

"There are a lot of other places Willis told her.

"We'd like to have you," she grandfather says we need new peo

Helps Heal: "I've been using Noxzema for three years," says Sheila Walden of New York City. "It has helped heal my skin of small spots and blemishes* and leaves my face feeling so much fresher and softer."

Dry Skin: "My skin gets extremely dry," says Janice Miller of Greenwich, Conn., "especially during a change of season. But I use Noxzema faithfully and with so much satisfaction. It helps my skin stay soft and smooth."

Look lovelier in 10 days

with DOCTOR'S HOME FACIAL or your money back!

This new, different beauty care helps skin look fresher, prettier —helps keep it that way, too!

● If you aren't entirely satisfied with your complexion – here's wonderful beauty news for you!

A famous skin doctor has worked out a home beauty routine that helps your skin look fresher, smoother, lovelier—and helps you keep it that way!

Why It's So Successful!

Noxzema is a combination of softening, soothing, and cleansing ingredients found in no other leading beauty cream. It's greaseless—and it's medicated . . . to aid healing, help keep skin looking fresh and clear.

The Tingle Tells You! The moment you smooth on Noxzema, you feel a wonderful, cool, refreshing tingle – the signal that Noxzema is going to work, helping your complexion look prettier.

Hundreds of letters praise the way Noxzema helps rough, dry skin, externally-caused blemishes, and dull, lifeless complexions. You see results so fast. Start your Noxzema care tonight. Here's all you do:

1. Cleanse your face with a Noxzema 'cream-wash.' Smooth on Noxzema, wash off with a wet face-cloth – just as if you were using soap. Unlike most cold creams, Noxzema washes off with water!

2. Night Cream: Use Noxzema before going to bed. Pat a bit extra on any externally-caused blemishes. No messy pillow – Noxzema is greaseless!

3. Powder Base: Before putting on make-up, apply Noxzema. It helps protect your skin all day!

It works or money back! In clinical tests, Noxzema helped 4 out of 5 women to have lovelier looking complexions. Use it for 10 days. If you don't look lovelier, return the jar to Noxzema, Baltimore – your money back.

*externally-caused

50% More NOXZEMA for your money (than in smallest sizes)

Limited time offer! Big 6 oz. jar only 69¢ plus tax, at drug and cosmetic counters. Enough for months at a big saving!

ill?" he asked.
answered, and she laughed.
eone who has to work. Willis,
e when you're in the woods.
me now, don't you?"

said, and she moved a step ou do. I can tell you do."
ngry that she could tell, and ound her roughly.
said. "Willis, no." But she inst him. It was different times he had kissed her. "I I'm such a fool," she said, t here, as long as it's only wer, but they stood there for ther.

oth belong in other places," can't help that, can we?"
as the wisest thing that Bess d to him. Bess always had a nse, more than he ever had,

ad a warm spot in his heart
e often called it later, though that the personalized side of ch to him. He had no time r activities, because he come work for his degree in three es, he had to be careful of nt.
ny refinements of life from emporaries, he learned them lace and not at old B.U. Mr. model worth copying, and ot what Bess had said about utumn he had started off to erved the or of Bill nd he hit going to in Cam-clothing
e was alefore the dents who unds dis-that were d Willis ho made
ly. By the end of his third a Tuxedo, two good suits, nd two pairs of white flan-

Harcourts often during the ey always asked him at least rty during the holidays. It m as strange at all, until e had never been inside Mr.
house on Commonwealth
rch of his last year at B.U.
pressed some surprise about hen the Waydes had been at the big house, as they a month.
go back to Boston, Willis?"
I asked.
early train every Monday
, in time to get to a nine-why I've never thought of it court said. "If you want a nday evening, let me know And there's another curious e you in Boston, do we? We'll Tuesday night. Why don't t seven o'clock for dinner?"

r," Willis said. "I'd like to nice suit of clothes you have Harcourt said. "I always like

He hesitated for an instant.
dress on Tuesday, Willis. I ays do."

himself from saying that he ow, but nothing would have wearing it that evening.
alked that Tuesday evening
h Avenue the street lights, spheres in the dark, made all unnaturally large, and Mr.
was as large as any of them.
protected by an iron grille tibule paved with squares of a second glass door he marble-paved hallway.

"Good evening, Mr. Willis," Selwyn said. "I'm afraid Mr. and Mrs. Harcourt aren't down yet, but if you'll wait upstairs I'm sure they'll be with you in a few minutes."

"Whereabouts upstairs?" Willis asked.

"I'd forgotten you didn't know your way," Selwyn said. "Your tie is a trifle crooked. Would you care to have me straighten it?"

"I guess I'm not very good at tying a bow tie," Willis told him.

"It will come with practice," Selwyn said. "You look well in dinner clothes. Not everybody does. May I make one suggestion, Mr. Willis?"

"Is anything wrong?" Willis asked.

"I wouldn't say wrong," Selwyn said. "But I wouldn't wear a handkerchief jutting out of my breast pocket. Mr. Harcourt never does and neither does Mr. Bill. Mr. Bill and Miss Bess will be with us tonight—just the family. This way, Mr. Willis."

THERE was another broad hall upstairs, with the dining room to the left and a large sitting room to the right.

"They'll be down in a minute, sir," Selwyn said. "There's the bell, I think. That will be Miss Bess and Mr. Bill."

Willis heard their voices in the downstairs hall. Then he heard them running up the stairs.

"Hi, Willis," Bill said.

"Oh, Willis," Bess said, "let me look at you. You don't look like yourself at all."

Neither did Bess, for that matter. Her dress was a brilliant blue, and her shoulders were bare and her face was fresh and warm from the cold outside.

"I wouldn't know you either," Willis said. "That's quite a dress."

"What there is of it," Bill said, and he laughed.

"Oh, stop it, Bill," Bess said. "They're coming downstairs."

"How nice you three young people look," Mrs. Harcourt said, and Mr. Harcourt looked at them as though he were examining a newly acquired picture.

"Yes," Mr. Harcourt said, "you're quite right, Harriet. Bess, will you kiss your old grandfather? Willis, it's nice to see you in Boston, and, Bill, I was afraid they might need you at the club tonight."

"I'm afraid I'll have to leave right after dinner, sir," Bill said.

Willis did not know what they were talking about, but Bess smiled at him as though of course he knew. Mr. Harcourt rubbed his hands together.

"A pleasant ending for a busy day," he said. "I went down to Cohasset to see your Cousin Elridge this afternoon, Bess, and then I had a most rewarding tea party on the way home with your Cousin Lillian."

"I thought you didn't like them," Bess said.

"Well," Mr. Harcourt said, "can't you guess why I called on them then?"

"Did you want to buy their stock?" Bill asked.

Mr. Harcourt's face wrinkled into one of his broadest smiles. "Exactly," he said, "exactly."

"What do you want it for?" Bill asked. "Haven't we got enough?"

"Perhaps," Mr. Harcourt said, "but your Cousin Roger wanted it, and if Roger wants something ——" Mr. Harcourt left his thought unfinished. "Here's Selwyn. You're old enough to have sherry now, aren't you, Bess?"

Willis was proud that he had been allowed to hear this family gossip and he knew he had been deliberately allowed. Mr. Henry Harcourt never forgot anything when he handled people.

Bill excused himself directly after dinner, because he had to go back to Cambridge. When Bill and he shook hands, Willis saw that Mr. Harcourt was watching them both with a half-sad expression, and he did not speak until the front door closed.

"Everything always comes easily for Bill," he said. "It's hard on anyone when everything comes easily."

"You mean we've been born with silver spoons?" Bess said. "Well, it isn't our fault. Besides, you were born with a spoon yourself, weren't you?"

"Why, yes," Mr. Harcourt said. "It's something I've always tried to remember, and see you don't forget it either, Bess."

The Bryson Harcourts lived only a few blocks away on the water side of Beacon Street. When Bess said it was time for her to go home, it was only natural for Willis to ask if he might not walk home with her.

She wore a gray squirrel coat, and when they were on the street with the glass and iron doors closed behind them, Bess was like a stranger until she abruptly put her arm through his.

"It's funny seeing you here," she said. "You really look very nice in Boston."

"How did you think I was going to look?"

"I don't know," she answered. "Worse than you do, I suppose. You're not the way you are in the country."

"Well, you aren't either," Willis said.

"Of course I'm not," she answered. "Why should I be? Bill's been taken into the A.D. Club, you know. That was what they were talking about tonight."

"What's the A.D. Club?" Willis asked.

"That shows you don't know anything," she said, "but you look as though you did. What do you do here, Willis?"

"I go to B.U. and I study," he said.

"But you must know some girls."

I think it is good taste, and also good judgment, when a man prays for the sin of the people, that he should count himself in.

—JOSH BILLINGS

"Greetings to the family!"

If you can't be at a family gathering this Thanksgiving, your Flowers-By-Wire will represent you beautifully instead!
Delivery worldwide, telegraph-fast, is guaranteed by your F.T.D. Florist . . . even of last-minute remembrances. Be sure to choose the shop with SPEEDY and the famous MERCURY EMBLEM.

Phone or Visit
Your F.T.D. Florist

Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association, Headquarters: Detroit, Michigan

"I haven't time to know any girls," Willis said.

"That isn't so," she said. "You have time to see Winnie Decker weekends."

"Who told you that?" Willis asked.

"Steve Decker, of course. I see him at the dances. He's on the list."

"What's the list?" Willis asked.

"Oh, never mind," she said. "You must be hard up if there's only Winnie Decker."

It was only a short walk through that dark night, along Commonwealth Avenue and right on Clarendon Street and across Marlborough and then up Beacon Street, where the wind was beginning to blow hard across the Charles.

"Well, here we are," she said.

She stopped at the steps of one of those brownstone houses that still impressed Willis as more aloof and forbidding than any houses in any other city he had known.

"You might as well come in for a minute," she said. "Nobody's at home."

The hall lights were on and she turned on the lights in a small downstairs room that must have been called the reception room at the time the house was built.

"Thanks for seeing me home," she said.

Then perhaps before either of them knew it, or before they thought of it, they were in each other's arms.

"I'm an awful fool," she whispered. "Oh dear, I wish that things were different."

That man is a success who has lived well, laughed often and loved much; who has gained the respect of intelligent men and the love of children; who has filled his niche and accomplished his task; who leaves the world better than he found it, whether by an improved poppy, a perfect poem or a rescued soul; who never lacked appreciation of earth's beauty or failed to express it; who looked for the best in others and gave the best he had.

—ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON

Willis always admitted that his characteristics of aggressiveness matured later than they did in some young men. He had qualities of patience and a sort of modesty that combined to keep him from pushing ahead in any annoying manner. This probably explained why he never attracted a great deal of attention during the summers he worked at the mill, but later all sorts of people remembered him.

It was the business of Miss Minton, the receptionist, to remember everyone, and Willis was tall and handsome, with nice blond hair that always needed cutting, and there were girls in the office who used to say that they would like to muss up Willis' hair. Willis was popular but he was never fresh, the way Mr. Bill Harcourt sometimes was.

Mr. Hewett often said that he could have told plenty, if tact had not prevented him, about the goings on at the mill in those days. Henry Harcourt was having his troubles with Bryson, and Roger Harcourt was trying to shoot holes in everything and waiting for Henry to die so he could muscle in on the management; and Bill had no serious interest in the plant. Mr. Hewett had been surprised when H.H. told him that if Willis had a few more years on him he'd be management material. In spite of his age, H.H. had a mind that was twice as young as Bryson's. He was constantly playing with ideas to enlarge the Harcourt line and he was never afraid to spend money on experiment.

WILLIS was not aware of any of the upper-level stuff that was going on at Harcourt's in the summer after he had graduated from Boston University. He and Bill Harcourt and Steve Decker did odd jobs in the Sales Department and ran all sorts of errands, and Mr. Henry and Mr. Bryson Harcourt and Mr. Hewett were distant figures. Yet everyone knew that there was a cleavage of ideas, and that before old H.H. began planning expansion, the mill had been a comfortable family business that paid excellent dividends. Mr. Bryson never saw why it should not have been kept that way and Willis had one clear glimpse of that difference of opinion between Mr. Henry and Mr. Bryson.

During July both he and Bill were in the Sales Department helping one of the new assistants prepare a sales folder with photographs of the new Harcourt belting. They sat in their shirt sleeves side by side at a table.

"Say," Bill was saying, "here's a new one. Harcourt Oak-Heart. I never heard of that one."

"Oh," Willis said, "that's the general-purpose white belting."

IT seemed to Willis that Bill should have known that Harcourt Oak-Heart was one of the most stable features in the line. The binder threads in Oak-Heart were interwoven in such a way that ply separation was entirely eliminated.

"What's ply separation?" Bill asked.

It was difficult to do his own work and Bill's at the same time, but Willis knew a lot about Harcourt Oak-Heart, and he was starting to explain the whole thing when Mr. Briggs opened the door. He was holding a sales form covered with figures.

"Willis," he asked, "can you drop what you're doing?"

"Yes, sir," Willis said.

"Take this down to Mr. Harcourt's office, will you?" Mr. Briggs said.

The office building was beginning to grow cramped and inadequate. The Inventory Department had been moved outside, and the Engineering Department now occupied the vacant room. Things were quieter when Willis descended to the lower floor. There the illusion of the Federalist mansion still existed and the door to Mr. Harcourt's office was open as usual. Mr. Harcourt was seated in his swivel chair and Mr. Bryson Harcourt was seated near the corner of the desk.

"I only wish you'd tell me," Mr. Bryson was saying, "what on earth you think is going to happen here eventually."

Mr. Harcourt leaned back. "We've been over that before," he said. "It will have to be your problem eventually."

"Father," Mr. Bryson began, "I wish you'd try to see this from my point of view."

"Excuse me, sir," Willis said. "Mr. Briggs sent this down to you."

"All right," Mr. Harcourt said. "Thank you, Willis."

As Willis crossed the room and laid the paper on the desk, they were both looking at him uncomfortably.

"Well, Willis," Mr. Bryson said, "how's Bill getting along upstairs?" His voice was friendly. The façade was back in place.

"He's doing fine, sir," Willis said.

It was all one of those things one remembered only in view of what happened later. It was not Mr. Bryson's fault that he had not inherited the ability of Mr. Henry Harcourt.

When the five-o'clock whistle blew that afternoon, Willis' father asked if he wanted a ride home. He was still driving a model-T Ford.

"It's a funny thing," his father said, when they reached the driveway of the Harcourt place, "to be driving this can in these surroundings, but it runs all right."

"It ought to," Willis told him. "You take it apart and put it together enough."

"Say," Willis' father said, "you're working up there with young Bill. Is he any good?"

"He's all right," Willis answered.

"You know he isn't," his father said. "Not that he isn't a nice-enough kid. I wish you wouldn't play around with those Harcourts so much, Willis. It seems to me that you're getting big ideas."

"What sort of ideas?" Willis asked, innocently.

Alfred Wayde laughed harshly. "Like marrying the boss' daughter, and you don't want to marry any boss' daughter."

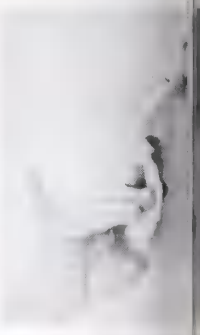
Willis felt his face redden. The Ford had stopped in the road by the garden house, but Alfred Wayde still sat with his hands on the wheel.

"I don't see how you got that idea in your head," Willis told him. "I'm not thinking of marrying anyone."

Alfred Wayde breathed deeply nose. "Don't act like I've bee you, boy," he said. "It's only some things about you that wor Now listen. No man ever thi about marrying. It just come when he reaches a certain age. your age I always liked girls, went seriously with anyone until mother in Topeka, and then it c the way I say. But I don't want lecture."

There were beads of perspirati Wayde's forehead and he rubbe across his face.

Beauty tric



the treat...

Revlon's new Non-Smear type "Lanolite" Lipstick.

the tr

Set the sheen and Dampen a COET in Press on lips. Do no COETS quilted cott don't "wad up" wh

PERSONAL PRODUCTS CORPORATION, MILLTOWN, N. J.

'd take a few drinks sometimes, y around and see some girls—group, I mean, not girls like ed his throat. "What girls, for he asked.

function to pick out girls for Wayde said. "What I mean are girls."

ing girls?" Willis repeated.

is," Alfred Wayde said, "I'm nical term, but I mean girls who e you back the same that you I mean is you ought to go me girls made out of the same ply as you. The town is full of pretty girls."

"Look," Willis said, "I understand what you mean, partly, but I don't have much time. I've been working pretty hard. I got through college in three years, you know, and I've been working every summer."

"I'll tell you what the trouble with you is," Alfred Wayde said. "You're trying to be something you aren't. You watch it, Willis. You keep on trying to be something you aren't, and you'll end up a stinker. You can't help being, if you live off other people."

"I don't get your point," Willis said.

Alfred Wayde leaned his elbows on the wooden steering wheel. "Listen boy," he said. "People are divided into two parts—people who do things and the rest, who live off those who do things. Now I may not amount to much, but I've had a pretty happy time, because I can turn out something. I can do anything in that mill that anyone else can do, and they all know it, boy. Well, maybe you'll spend your life living off other people's doings. Maybe you'll end up like Harcourt. I don't know. But you'll never be like Harcourt."

There was a good deal in what his father had said, and Willis realized it even then. He was listening to the age-old definition on management and labor, to a description of the chasm that always divided the creator and the entrepreneur, and of course his father had been right, but Willis could only put his thoughts in a single awkward question.

"But you like Mr. Harcourt, don't you?" Willis asked.

"Yes," Alfred Wayde said. "All his moving parts are greased. He knows what he is, and we get along, but he lives off me just the same. Now I'm going in to get a rye and ginger ale and you better have one, too, but just remember what I said."

Cynthia Wayde opened the door of the house just as they were getting out of the car. "What have you two been talking about," she asked, "out there in the sun?"

"I've just been telling Willis a few facts," Alfred Wayde said, "and now I'm going to give him a drink."

"Oh, Alf," Mrs. Wayde said, "you know Willis hardly ever takes anything."

"It's high time he started," Alfred Wayde said.

"Well, Willis isn't like you, Alf," Mrs. Wayde said, and she stood in front of Willis in the parlor while Alfred Wayde went to get the glasses and ginger ale. "Willis, I wish you knew some nice girls."

"Gosh," Willis said, "do you wish that too?"

The telephone rang in the hall.

"I'll go," he said, and it was Bess Harcourt calling.

"Is that you, Willis?" she said. "How about coming over after you've had your supper? The family's gone away to the shore."

"Why, thanks," Willis said, and in spite of everything he did not feel tired at all. "I'd like to very much."

Perhaps in some ways Bess was a reciprocating girl.

Bess was waiting for him on the driveway outside the Bryson Harcourt house. The brick Georgian house always looked to Willis rather like a country club, with its tennis court and its swimming pool. The last of the evening light was still in the sky when he saw it that evening, and it remained in his memory as a sort of dream of wish fulfillment.

Like the house, Bess in her cool silk summer dress was a part of that dream. They knew each other better, perhaps, than either of them knew anybody else. Nevertheless, he could never tell, when he met her, whether she would have good manners or none at all. She seemed almost shy that night.

"I feel awfully lonely tonight," she said. "It's too hot in the house. Let's go and sit by the swimming pool. It's awfully nice of you to come over, Willis."

"I always do, when you ask me," Willis said.

"Yes," she said, "I know."

THE pool was near the woods, and its water reflected the dying light in the sky. The pool was far enough away from the house so that no one could see them, and both of them must have known that this was their reason for going there.

"If you're lonely," Willis asked her, "why didn't you go down to the shore with your family?"

"You know why perfectly well," Bess said, and she laughed. "Don't you miss me sometimes?"

"Yes," he told her, "sometimes."

"It's nice to have a secret sin," Bess said, "and you're my secret sin. Well, what are you waiting for?"

She had stopped in front of the pergola at the end of the pool, where the reclining chairs were. There was no reason to wait any longer, and of course he kissed her.

"I'm awfully glad you're here," she said, "even if it isn't sensible." She sat down on one of the reclining chairs. "Move over close to me," she said. "I wish I didn't always like it when you're with me, and we can't go on like this indefinitely, can we? Or people will begin to talk."

"Yes, I guess that's so," Willis said, "but then, you asked me over, didn't you?"

She reached out her hand toward his. "You wanted to come, didn't you?"

"Oh yes," he said, "I wanted to."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 115

d beauty treats

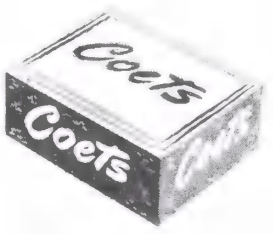
at... the trick

-up tints to rs!

For a smooth face, powder lavishly with a COET—wipe away excess with another! Carry COETS in your purse and have a fresh powder puff each time!

the treat... the trick

New Non-Smudge Nail Enamel Remover—by Revlon.



Saturate COETS, quilted cotton squares, with remover. Press firmly on nail. Hold for a few seconds. Then wipe off old enamel quickly, neatly!

oets®

Quilted Cotton Squares

Available at your favorite store . . .

Box of 40—23¢ Box of 80—43¢

Fast, easy way to clean pans

Whisks off scorch— shines pans fast.

There's polishing soap right in every BRILLO Soap Pad

No soaking! No hard scrubbing!

Cleans and shines pans—faster! The greasiest, scorchiest skillet is no problem for Brillo® Soap Pads! These sturdy, metal-fiber pads go after cooked-on food with vim . . . just zip off burned-on crust.

Every pad loaded with special polishing soap! Yes, Brillo not only cuts grease fast—it shines pans bright! Because the soap that's in every Brillo Soap Pad contains jeweler's polish! You'll find Brillo gives your pans, your oven and stove burners quick, easy, shiny clean-ups! That's because Brillo —of all types of cleansers tested—gives twice the shine in half the time!

BRILLO Soap Pads (re
Soap-filled pads
BRILLO Cleanser (gre
Pads plus cake of polish
Brillo Mfg. Co., Inc., Bro

Thriftier! 5 and 12 pad boxes—

Twice the shine—in half the

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 113

as long as you wanted to," and hand tighter. "I wish you could ound when I want you."

answer.

he said, "I've felt queer all day. lly old. I don't know why I can etter than anyone else. Maybe I t that would be awfully silly."

on sense made him agree with nd Bess Harcourt always had the ng exactly where they were.

wondering all day what's going us all," she said. "Daddy's nice, her stupid man, don't you think have the queerest feeling." Her l suddenly. "Promise me you y."

t want me around," Willis said, nt you," she said, and then her d lower. "There's got to be some- fter us, Willis."

eposterous remark, and his own qually preposterous.

I love you, Bess," he said.

" she told him, "I wanted you to t's utterly ridiculous." She stood "I know you can't change any- re than I can. If we have to be t's go walking in the woods."

sure that something serious was when he received a typewritten n brought up by one of Miss pists one afternoon a few days ing with Bess.

court," the memorandum read, know if it is you to call at eight o'clock Please answer ith Jackman."

ed up a pen- "Yes" on the e of paper. d a physical t bordered on as almost sure that the summons g to do with Bess, because in the court always heard and noticed is walked from the garden house use to call on Mr. Harcourt, he his hair carefully and had put on No matter what happened he was much as he could like Mr. Harning, Mr. Willis," Selwyn said. rt's waiting for you in his study." a pulse beating in his throat. said, and he smiled, "do you ng about me?"

s," Selwyn said.

kerchief in my breast pocket."

as to tell you anything twice," "as I heard Mr. Harcourt say Willis."

way Selwyn might have spoken to as no wonder that he always had in his heart for Selwyn.

urt was in his small study with rs in front of him. "Oh, here you he said. "I hope this does not m some more agreeable engage- wn, but close the door first."

ssed the room and seated himself 's chair. Mr. Harcourt looked frailer than usual.

intending for some time to speak ly, Willis. In a way I am going to on your discretion and to say ings of a highly personal nature, I rely on you not to repeat."

Willis said.

I have to rely on people," Mr. id, "and I haven't gone wrong speaking about you to Bess the g. I wish she were a boy. She has bility, I think, and Bill hasn't got gree?"

now, sir," Willis said.

you know," Mr. Harcourt said. le have a commercial instinct and t. Bill's like his father—not that l of them. It's something I have and something they haven't. It isn't only an ability to make money—that's an incidental part. At any rate, I think you have it."

Mr. Harcourt paused again, and Willis felt a strange tingling in his spine.

"Well," Mr. Harcourt said, "if the family hasn't got the instinct, we must find it elsewhere, Willis. Henry Hewett's a good man, but he's too old for any long-term planning. Briggs is all right in Sales but he's too nervous to take on anything else. It's a mistake to think you're going to live forever. Well . . . I'm calling in a management firm—Beakney-Graham in New York. I'm asking them to go over the office setup and recommend new personnel. You don't know why I'm telling you this, do you?"

"No, sir," Willis said, "I don't."

MR. HARCOURT stared at him for a moment without speaking.

"Because I'm thinking of taking you into my office as a sort of assistant, Willis. I'm going to need someone in about two years who is loyal and who knows me and knows the family. Bill is going to the Harvard Business School in the fall. I want to send you there too. I want your rough edges smoothed off. Bill can teach you a little. I know you've been watching him, and I can help you, myself, but most of it is going to be up to you. I hope you see what I mean."

Willis cleared his throat. "I see what you mean, sir," he said, "but I don't know as I'd be able to do it. Have you talked to my father about this, sir?"

"Why under the sun should I?" Mr. Harcourt said.

"He wouldn't like it, sir," Willis said, "and he wouldn't send me to any business school."

Mr. Harcourt coughed gently. "He isn't going to. I'm paying for this party, Willis."

There was something arrogant in the way he said it that Willis did not like even then. "No," Willis said, "I couldn't do that, sir."

At least for once he had looked Mr. Harcourt in the eye and had laid it on the line.

"All right," Mr. Harcourt said, "all right, if that's the way you want it, Willis."

Willis pushed back his chair and stood up. "But thank you very much for offering this to me," he said.

Mr. Harcourt said, "We haven't finished yet. Suppose we put it this way. It takes two years to go through the Harvard Business School. I am prepared to lend you three thousand dollars for your expenses, Willis, and you can give me your note for it at six per cent. You'll be working in the summer. I'll have it amortized out of your salary. I'm taking a calculated risk, but I do that every day. Do you like that better, Willis?"

"Yes, sir, but it's a lot of money."

"I suppose it is, from your point of view, but these things are always relative," Mr. Harcourt said. "Will you do it, Willis?"

It was the first decision that Willis Wayde had ever been obliged to make, and he liked to think that he did it rather well.

"Yes sir," he said, "I'll do it, and thank you very much," and then he cleared his throat again, "and I'll always try to do the best I can, Mr. Harcourt."

He meant every word of it. Mr. Harcourt laughed softly.

"You'd be a fool if you didn't," he said, "and I've never set you down as one. Well, that finishes our conversation. Let's go out and join the ladies, Willis."

His first instinct was to thank Mr. Harcourt and to say he should be going home, but instead Willis followed him down the hall to the living room. Even on that short walk he began to be vaguely aware that he had lost some sort of freedom which he could not name exactly and which he had not valued until he lost it.

He was not surprised when he saw Mrs. Harcourt and Bess seated on the living-room sofa.

"Well, Harriet," Mr. Harcourt said, "Willis is going to the Harvard Business School."

Mrs. Harcourt took his hand in both of hers. "Oh, Willis," she said, "I'm so glad. I know you're going to be a great help to Mr. Harcourt."

"I'm glad, too," Bess said, "but you certainly took a long time talking about it."

"Not so long," Mr. Harcourt said. "There'll be some more details tomorrow, Willis. I want to see you and Bill at the office at ten o'clock."

"I'd better be going home now," Bess said, and she smiled in a quick way like her grandfather. "You'll walk home with me, won't you, Willis?"

"Yes, of course, Bess," Willis said.

"Willis, dear," Mrs. Harcourt said, and he was startled. It was the first time she had ever called him "dear." "We want you to feel that you are a part of the family now, don't we, Henry?"

Mr. Harcourt put his hand on Willis' arm. "He knows that already," he said, "or he ought to, Harriet."

Willis knew that it was true. In some way, without the words being spoken, he had sworn some sort of allegiance in Mr. Harcourt's study. He had traveled a long way since he had stepped off the train with his suitcases and his Stetson hat six years ago, and he was sure that Mr. Harcourt had planned it. Mr. Harcourt had always planned everything.

(To be Continued)

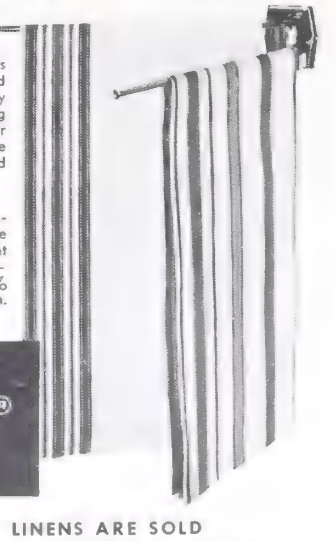
Wives are people who feel they don't dance enough.

—GROUCHO MARX

YOUR SHOPPING GUIDE to the Finest Colors and Fabrics in HOUSEHOLD LINENS

REFRESHMENTS—Hand Printed Pattern, 20-inch toweling.

CUT FLOWERS—Hand Printed Pattern, 20-inch toweling.



EARLY AMERICAN—Hand Printed Pattern, 20-inch toweling.

SPRINGTIME—one of the many beautiful "Topline" Table Cloth patterns hand printed on mercerized momie-weave cotton—now at your favorite store.

EVERYBODY knows that the Good Housekeeping Seal helps you find really good things for your home — and so does the Seal of the American Institute of Laundering. These dependable guides to wise shopping—applied to Startex hand printed table cloths, decorative towelings and hemmed kitchen towels—mean that famous Startex household linens are color-fast and measure up to rigid shrinkage standards. Incidentally, the Startex "Topline" patterns pictured here are but a few of the many colorful new patterns now on display at leading stores everywhere. See Startex today at your favorite dry goods or department store.

Pictured at left are swatches of three new hand printed toweling patterns—twenty inches wide—for making café curtains and other home decorations. See many other Startex hand printed patterns today!

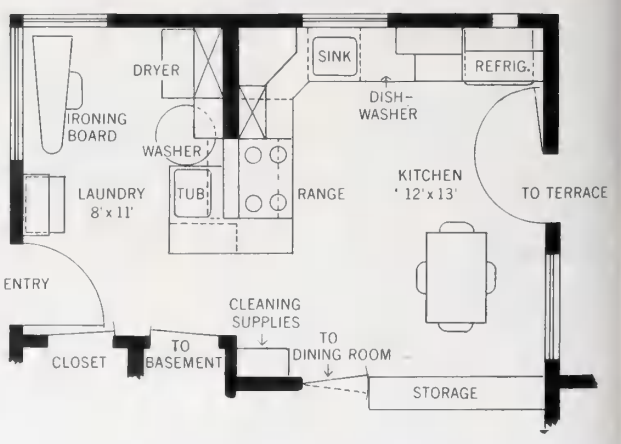
At Right—two of the famous Startex woven-stripe Kitchen Towels: the Giant Size 20 x 36 all cotton—and Grenadier Stripe, 75% Cotton and 25% Linen.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

STARTEX®

ASK FOR STARTEX WHEREVER HOUSEHOLD LINENS ARE SOLD

Look for the Startex trade mark on packaged Kitchen Towels and Dish Cloths in leading dry goods, department and chain stores; Towelings and Piece Goods by the yard; Hand Printed Towels and Table Cloths; Hand Towels . . . Startex Mills, 55 Worth Street, New York.



News: hard white plastic now practical for counters; baked-on finish for steel cabinets in favorite colors; venting hood over range serves both kitchen and the laundry beyond.

"Kitchen-laundry to suit me"

By GLADYS TABER

"WHEN we built our new Colorado home," said Mrs. B., "I knew exactly what I wanted—a kitchen and laundry in one room. I've lived too long in houses with 'afterthought' kitchens. Our architect was amused, but even he applauded the step-saving result we worked out." The result: a room 20′x13′ contains a complete laundry, a fine L kitchen, even a dining corner—and I applaud too! "Ironing," the lady told the architect, "won't be a chore if I have a view," and so she has, with windows placed to give a CinemaScopic sight of the Rockies as she works. For the rest of the laundry section, washing equipment is streamlined on one wall. Mrs. B. prefers a wringer washer and chose a model with good safety wringer and a pump to drain the water away. A gas-heated dryer beside it makes it unnecessary to wait for good weather before laundering. The laundry tub is a help in washing family woolens, doubles for garden clean-up jobs—and her two teen-age children use it for cleaning brook trout.

The kitchen is colorful and gay with steel cabinets in her favorite turquoise color. Even the floor is individual with 18″ squares of rubber tile in a random color arrangement in lilac, two blues and white. Pride of her work center is a two-oven range, a gas model only 36″ wide—"It gave space," she pointed CONTINUED ON PAGE 171

STUART-WILLIAMS

Snack table with plastic top and plastic-cushioned chairs brilliantly withstand hard wear. Roll-away doors cover pass-through to dining room, with china and glass shelves above.

Portable ironing table adjusts to sit-down or stand-up heights. When ironing, damp clothes go in hamper at right, finished ones on wheeled table or racks at left.

hamburger news! It's a meal in itself– and it's marvelous made with this born-to-be-better corn ☆

☆ grown from special seed we developed to give you sweeter flavor and extra-tender kernels in DEL MONTE Corn

You could husk a thousand ears of fresh, sweet corn and still not find the equal of the sweet, tender kernels tucked away in every can of DEL MONTE Brand Corn.

Reason being, DEL MONTE Corn is grown from our own special strains of seed...super seed developed to perfection over a period of 20 years.

Each kernel, each forkful, and each can of this custom-grown corn offers you the ultimate in delicious natural sweetness and thin-skinned tenderness. DEL MONTE's the brand. And your grocer has it.

ALL-IN-ONE HAMBURGER CASSEROLE

- 1 cup packaged rice (type pre-cooked by manufacturer)
- 3 tablespoons flour
- 1 teaspoon chili powder
- 1½ teaspoons salt
- ¼ teaspoon pepper
- 2 tablespoons butter or margarine
- 1 lb. ground beef
- 2 tablespoons finely chopped onion
- 1 No. 2 can DEL MONTE Tomatoes
- 1 can (12 oz.) DEL MONTE Golden Whole Kernel Corn

Grease a 2-qt. casserole. Measure rice from package and spread in even layer on bottom. Mix flour, chili powder, salt and pepper. Sprinkle ⅓ mixture over rice; dot with ½ tablespoon butter. Next, mix ground beef with onion and spread over rice. Repeat flour mixture and butter as above. Make a layer of the tomatoes, including liquid; repeat flour mixture and butter. Spread corn on top and dot with remaining butter. Cover and bake in moderate oven (350°F.) 45-50 minutes. Serves 6.

Try all 3 styles: Golden Cream Style, Golden Whole Kernel, White Cream Style el Monte

BRAND

your sweetest buy in corn

THE BRAND YOU KNOW PUTS FLAVOR FIRST

GOOD MORNING, MISS DOVE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 66

Tuesday—which was precisely what Miss Dove had predicted the afternoon before when, shining a flashlight on a plaster-of-Paris globe, she had demonstrated to the sixth grade the reason for the lengthening of the vernal days.

During the night a flock of robins had returned from their Southern winter resort (Miss Dove had told the first grade this was the week for the robins) and now they were busy pulling innocent angleworms from new-spaded garden plots, looking spruce and pompous and complacent—as if they knew they were expected and thought the worm-rich earth had been loosened expressly for their benefit. At seven, households stirred. Families, groggy from dreams, fought among themselves for the bathroom. Lost socks were hunted, ears were scrubbed, hair was combed, milk was spilled and the air was rent with squeals and remonstrances and the resumption of those domestic hostilities which, in general, keep personal identity alive. At seven minutes past eight—punctual as the sun and, unlike the sun, not varying with the seasons—Miss Dove descended the front steps of her house on Oakwood Street. At her gate she paused for a moment. She looked at three fat robins in her pansy border—not severely but strictly, as she might have looked at children to see how they were occupied; she observed, with a slight frown, a dandelion blooming out of place on her lawn; she lifted a critical gaze to the sky and, seeing that it was quite clean, gave a nod of approval. Then she opened her gate—it was an old gate made of wrought iron in a Victorian pattern of hearts and ferns, but it did not squeak because Miss Dove kept its hinges oiled—and began her morning walk to Cedar Grove Elementary School.

Jincey Baker saw her from an upstairs window. Jincey was eating breakfast in bed, not because she was ill or lazy but because she was going to have a baby any time now and she was young and beautiful and her husband liked to pamper her.

"There she goes, Tommy!" Jincey cried on that note of delight which was evoked in her by all sorts of trivial, commonplace sights. "Right on the dot!" She patted her stomach. "I wish little Whosit—the slowpoke bum—would copy Miss Dove and develop a sense of time!"

Tommy (Dr. Thomas Baker, surgeon) laughed. "It would be a strain, though, to have a baby like the terrible Miss Dove. Imagine burping it!"

"Do you suppose she ever was a baby?" Jincey said.

"No," Thomas replied flatly. "She simply emerged from her house one day—fully formed like Venus on the half shell."

"With her hat on?" said Jincey.

"Of course," said Thomas.

"And her mousy hair in a little bun behind?"

"I'm not sure," said Thomas. "You see, I have a unique distinction. I'm the only man in Liberty Hill who's ever seen the terrible Miss Dove with her hair down."

"Tommy!" Jincey clapped her hands. "You kept it from me!"

"Oh, I have my reticence," Thomas said.

"Tell me now," demanded Jincey.

"I'll save it for a long winter evening when we can't get a baby sitter," Thomas said. "I have to tear myself away now. I'll be home for lunch unless some rash fool bursts an appendix."

"Stop at the Burnhams' and pick up the bathinet they're lending us," said Jincey.

"Sure. And if anything happens—if you have the slightest twinge—don't dally. The hospital's alerted for you." He bent and pressed his cheek against her soft, sweet-smelling red hair. "Don't worry, darling."

"I'm not worried," Jincey said. "Are you?"

"Of course not," Thomas said with more than necessary emphasis.

He ran downstairs whistling an optimistic tune from Oklahoma! and thinking with remorse of all the prospective fathers he had privately jeered at. Those wan creatures with their stubble cheeks and dying-calf eyes, pacing the halls, needing a drink—they were his brothers now!

At nine minutes past eight Miss Dove crossed LaFayette Avenue. Old Mr. Porter, who had been her father's friend, saw her from his flagstone terrace where he his preprandial exercise. He ch watch by her. At eighty-two, Mr. an epicure of time. He relished it, u for its own essential flavor.

A few minutes later, from the wi dining room facing on Maple St Burnham saw Miss Dove go by. "F oatmeal, Davie-dear," she said to year-old son. "Miss Dove has pa don't want to be tardy."

"Oh, puke," said Davie-dear. "Th stinks!"

Polly flushed, but held her peace band, the Reverend Alexander Burn aware of a curious tingling sensat palm of his right hand and an almos sible longing to bring that palm dow in a series of blows upon the plumpe of his son's anatomy. He rose. "If cuse me," he said to his wife, "I mu my notes for meeting." He off to his st veling at hi straint.

Both the el hams knew gently nurtu dren rough lan a healthy sig of growth and ing of the e knew, further David, becau sembled one phael's cherub a minister's more need t for toughness must bow to and pretend n tice. All the b that.

At eight-two Dove crosse corner of M Grant wher Grove School brick, stolid one cedar left its ugliness. loway, the tr on duty, saw h looked as na nature," he later in a tone der. "I tipped and said, 'Goo ing, Miss Do she says, 'Goo ing, William.'"

By eight-thi two hundred children ranging in age from six to tw safely inside the school building. Ir home rooms they gauged, with the shrewdness of innocence, the variou of various teachers. How far dared today?

But as the morning progressed classes went, in turn, to spend minutes in the geography room w Dove, they dropped their restless spe

For Miss Dove had no moods. M was a certainty. She would be today had been yesterday and would be to And so, within limits, would they. S they would enter her room. Each chi pause on the threshold as its mothe ther had paused, more than likely (M had taught there for thirty-six yea would say—just as the policeman ha in a distinct, formal tone, "Good Miss Dove." And Miss Dove wo directly at each of them and reply, morning, Jessamine," or "Margar "Samuel." They would go to their a desks. Miss Dove would ascend to h lesson would begin.

There was no need to waste time liminary admonitions. Miss Dove's r as fixed as the signs of the zodiac. A were known. Miss Dove rehearsed the beginning of each school year, stating

CONTINUED ON PAGE 120

CARROUSEL

By JEAN TODD FREEMAN

As children ride upon the carrousel,
Enchanted by the painted steeds that flee
Through music-jangled night, caught in a spell
Of speed and laughter and calliope;

So I, my darling, dizzy with my love
Rode reckless, reinless through the spangled night
Rising and falling laughing, swept above
The sawdust ground that braced my frantic flight;

And all the world was carnival and mad
Until the plunging horses slowed, until
The tinkling music ceased. And were you sad
To walk into a night so sudden-still?

Tray top lifts off

8-W $14.95*

40-A $17.95*

COMMENDED BY THE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS' MAGAZINE AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Look! a whole sleigh-full of gifts to choose from!

COSCO®

METAL HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE

LIGHTEN HER WORK AND BRIGHTEN HER HOME . . . with a gift by Cosco! You'll find twelve handsome, handy gifts pictured on this page, and twenty-eight more on display at your favorite department, furniture or hardware store. Something for everyone in the family . . . priced from $3.45* to $20.95*. Choose yours now. And be sure it's Cosco. Accept no substitutes!

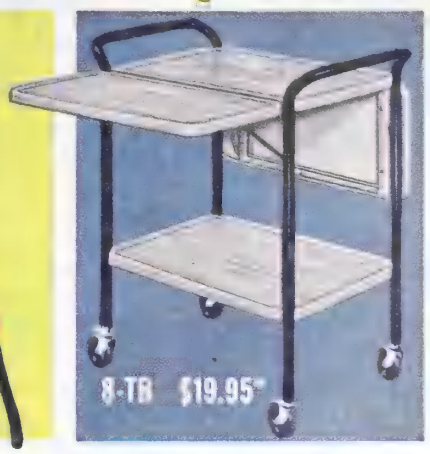
HAMILTON MANUFACTURING CORPORATION • COLUMBUS, INDIANA

© 1954

$7.95*

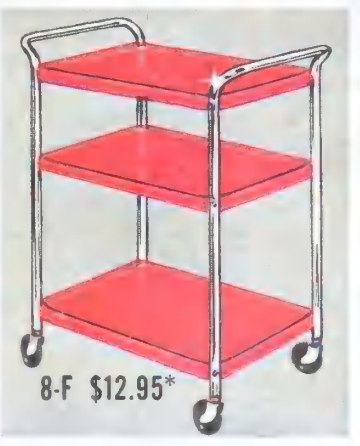
2-B $4.65*

5-D $4.95*



14-E $14.95*

4-A $8.95*



$12.95*

8-TB $19.95*

8-H $5.95*

8-F $12.95*

8-LX $10.95*

art: Top doubles as serving tray! 29½" x 23½". Chromium legs; five-ply COSCOAT finish, four colors. Also 8-WB: Black en- 40-A Posture Step Stool: Back adjusts or comfort! Foam rubber seat, 24½" high. y" steps; chromium finish; Duran uphol- colors. Also Model 40-AB: Black enamel Baby Jumper: Enamel finish; removable eat, three colors. 2-B Regular Stool: Seat, ll-enamel finish, two colors. 5-D Bathroom Stool: 15" high. Chromium finish, waterproof upholstery, five colors. 14-E "Convertible" High Chair: Converts to Youth Chair with removal of adjustable tray and footrest. Chromium finish; Duran upholstery, three colors. Also 14-EB: Black enamel legs. 4-A Step Stool: 24" high. Rubber-treaded "swing-away" steps. All-enamel finish, three colors. 4-MB Step Stool: Seat, 24" high. Rubber-treaded "swing-away" steps. Black enamel finish; Duran upholstery, four colors. Also 4-M: Chromium finish. 8-TB Drop Leaf Utility Cart: 29½" high. Top (leaves up), 23½" x 40½". Black enamel legs; COSCOAT wood-grain finish, four colors. Also 8-T: Chromium legs. 8-H Utility Table: 29" high, 16" x 22". All-enamel, three colors. 8-F Utility Cart: 29½" high, 16½" x 23½". Chromium legs; enamel finish, three colors. 8-LX Electric Utility Table: 29½" high, 16" x 22". Double convenience outlet, heavy duty power supply cord. Chromium legs; enamel finish, three colors.

*Prices slightly higher Colorado and west, and in Canada.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 118

calmly and dispassionately as if she were describing the atmospheric effects of the Gulf Stream. The penalties for infractions of the rules were also known. If a child introduced a foreign object—a pencil, let us say, or a wad of paper, or a lock of hair—into his mouth, he was required to wash out his mouth with the yellow laundry soap that lay on the drainboard of the sink in the corner by the sand table. If his posture was incorrect, he had to go and sit upon a stool without a back rest. If a page in his notebook was untidy, he had to copy it over. Of course there were flagrant offenses that were dealt with in private. In those instances the delinquent was detained, minus the comfort of his comrades, in awful seclusion with Miss Dove. What happened between them was never fully known. (Did she threaten him with legal prosecution? Did she beat him with her long map pointer?) The culprit himself was unlikely to be communicative on the subject. Afterward, as was duly noted, his classroom attitude was subdued and chastened.

Miss Dove had no rule to cover prevarication. A child's word was taken at face value. If it happened to be false—well, that was the child's problem. A lie, unattacked and undistorted by defense, remained a lie and was apt to be recognized as such by its author.

And in that room where no leeway was given to the personality—where a thing was black or white, right or wrong, polite or rude, simply because Miss Dove called it so—there was a curiously soothing quality. The children left it refreshed and restored. For there they enjoyed what was allowed them nowhere else—a complete suspension of the will.

Good teachers cost more, but poor teachers cost most.
—WAURINE WALKER

On this particular Wednesday the first-graders, whom Miss Dove gave a survey course in the flora and fauna of the earth, drew pictures of robins. They drew them in crayon on eight-by-ten sheets of Manila paper.

They did not draw them from memory. They copied the bird Miss Dove had drawn for them on the blackboard. They left an inch-wide margin, measuring it with a ruler, around each picture. (Miss Dove believed in margins—except for error!) All the first-grade's robins would look alike. Which was as it should be; Miss Dove was concerned with facts, not with artistic impressions.

She divided the second grade into activity groups. One group cut scenic photographs from old magazines and pasted them in a scrapbook. Another modeled clay caribou for the sand table. Still another drew a colored mural on the rear blackboard. The groups did not talk among themselves, asking questions and giving advice. They had no need to. Miss Dove had told them what to do.

The third grade recited the states of the Union. It was Miss Dove's experience that the eight-year-old mind learned best by rote.

At a quarter past eleven the fourth grade filed in. This grade was studying economic geography—the natural resources of different regions and their manifold uses in civilized life—and on Monday was to take a proficiency test prepared by the state board of education. Regarding these tests, Miss Dove's sentiments were mixed. She resented them as an intrusion upon her privacy and as an implication that the efficiency of her teaching was open to question. But she recognized in them, grudgingly, a certain practice value to the children.

FOR in every life—once if not oftener—there was a proficiency test. A time came when one was put to the proof. One stood alone. Certainly such a time had come to Miss Dove.

And on a plane more human than sublime, Miss Dove's vanity had always been flattered by the results of the test. Cedar Grove led the state in geography.

"You may utilize this period for review, children," she said. "Open your books to page ninety-three. Memorize the agricultural products of the Argentine pampas."

At that moment Miss Dove was first aware of a pain in her back. The pain was small in area, but it was acute. It thrust into her spine. It was so intense, so and so unexpected that she hardly it. It descended along her right Dove counted ten. The pain was e gone. It had been only a threat.

Tension, she thought. Nerve about the proficiency tests. She wa with herself. She despised wome nervous backaches. And after a wi sure she had imagined that stab her spine.

SHE slipped a rubber band from fifth-grade essay papers. She took and began to correct them. But mind stayed with the class that w She knew, for instance, when Vi who was disposed to daydreams, book and started gazing out th "Come back, Victoria," she said.

She heard when David Burnh and muttered something excee proper under his breath: "Hell a

"You will remain after class, D Dove said without glancing up.

"Yes, Miss Dove," said David.

At noon an electric buzzer, oper switch in the principal's office, shril Cedar Grove School. It was the lunch and "big recess." In almost children slammed their books sh their feet, sloshed their paint water a mass lunge toward food and free the geography room there was n Forty-three children sat quietly in t They did not look up. Their post perb. From this room they were becked or call chanical noises s principal's buz they acknowle sole authority w time, would spe

"Attention, p Miss Dove in voice of one wh be obeyed.

Forty-three children folded thei their desks and raised limpid eyes

"Close your books, please," said

Forty-three books were closed, n in the respectful manner due to bo

"The class will rise," said Miss

The class arose. So did its teache returned. It nibbled at a vertebra small rodent with sharp, burrowing it was bearable as most things are i sustained by duty.

Miss Dove continued standing th raised platform as she did at the e class period. (To sit down would weakness. And no teacher, Miss convinced, could afford to show she wished her pupils to show stre

"The class is dismissed," said Mi

Forty-two children, one by on scrambling or pushing—filed out in David Burnham remained stand aisle.

For an instant Miss Dove was let David go with the others—to with a reprimand or, at least, t punishment until next day. If she during the whole lunch hour — David's character was in her keepi

Miss Dove understood, quite David's parents did, the child's (She had taught other ministers' unlike them, she did not care whe loved or hated her. She cared on adhere to the rules.

David knew she had heard hi oath. He had meant her to hear it parlance he had "asked for it" an right to "get it."

Miss Dove looked at David. He neutral. Not contemptuous. Not She saw no hero in the aisle, and n either. She saw a nine-year-old bo gone a little further than he now wish

And what did David see as he lo at Miss Dove? How did any of M pupils, past or present, see her? On that would seem an easy question. nothing elusive about Miss Dove's a e News about World's Only Washer-Dryer all-in-one!

CONTINUED ON PAGE 12

photos of an atomic washday! n independent laboratory* au-ized by the Atomic Energy Com-sion to conduct research with ioactive materials!—atomic dence that the Bendix Duomatic sher-Dryer gets clothes cleaner an automatics that only wash thes, without drying them!

uclear Instrument and Chemical Corporation, Chicago, Illinois.

Lady, you never saw a washday like this before!

1 | RADIOACTIVE DIRT IS ADDED TO ORDINARY SOIL IN ATOMIC WASHDAY TEST

These pieces of cloth contain dirt radioactivated with isotopes from the Oak Ridge Atom Laboratories. That's so the Geiger Counter can measure the exact amount of soil in each washer-load.

2 | FIVE LOADS ARE WASHED IN EACH OF SIX LEADING AUTOMATICS

Atomic scientists put each machine through its washing cycle, following manufacturer's directions. Five loads are washed on different days. This tested the consistency of each automatic's washing performance.

3 | GEIGER COUNTER MEASURES DIRT LEFT IN CLOTHES AFTER WASHING

The Geiger Counter detects and measures deep-down dirt the eye can't see! Shows that the Bendix Duomatic Washer-Dryer gets out more imbedded and surface soil than any of the other leading automatics!

OMIC PROOF: IMPROVED BENDIX TUMBLE-ACTION WASHES CLOTHES CLEANER

Only a lucky neighbor who already owns a Duomatic—or your Bendix dealer—can show you why this amazing washer-dryer actually washes clothes 3 ways cleaner. For the secret is the Bendix Duomatic's new, improved Tumble-Action.

See the Exclusive Hi-Lift Deep-Surge Tumble-Action

Raises clothes higher, plunges them deeper than any other washing action! Washes your clothes as safely as by hand—but far more efficiently! Lifts, drops and flexes them in the suds more than 500 times in a 10-minute wash!

See the Exclusive Magic Heater

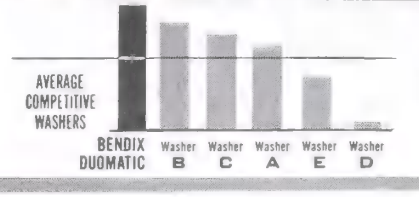
Other washers let wash water cool off—but not the Duomatic! The exclusive Bendix Magic Heater maintains the temperature of the water all through the washing cycle . . . keeps it extra hot for tough-job washing . . . gets your whole wash sanitary-clean!

See the Exclusive Triple-Rinsing and Flushaway Draining

After it washes your clothes, the Duomatic keeps them tumbling in two deep rinses and one flush rinse. Traps and flushes away the dirt so that dirty water never strains back through clean clothes.

Don't wait to get the full story of the world's first washer-dryer all-in-one. See your Bendix dealer or mail the coupon today!

Bendix Duomatic actually Washes 3 Ways Cleaner!



1 SURFACE SOIL REMOVAL
Fabrics came out of the Duomatic whiter, brighter—newer looking—than any of the other automatics washed them.

2 THOROUGH CLEANLINESS
The Duomatic washed clothes cleaner of both surface and deeply imbedded soil—by actual Geiger Counter test!

3 MOST CONSISTENT WASHING
No half-clean loads . . . no half-clean garments in the Duomatic! Every item in every wash came out cleaner every time!

urns into a DRYER automatically

After it WASHES your clothes!

Bendix Duomatic is the world's SHER-DRYER all-in-one! Takes nches of wall space—little more parate washer alone!
ad it and leave it. Your clothes t thoroughly washed . . . thoroughly rinsed . . . thoroughly dried. And all garments stay separated as they're gently blown dry. No balling, no deep-set wrinkles. Everything comes out ready to iron . . . or fold and store away . . . or ready to put on and wear!

ENDIX HOME APPLIANCES, Div. AVCO Manufacturing Corp., Cincinnati 25, Ohio

In Canada Bendix Automatic Laundry Appliances are manufactured and distributed by Moffats Limited, Weston, Ontario.

ENDIX DUOMATIC

washer-dryer... all-in-one

Now your choice of GAS or ELECTRIC DRYING

Please send me the new booklet that tells the complete Duomatic Story.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Mail coupon to:
BENDIX HOME APPLIANCES, Dept. C11
1329 Arlington, Cincinnati 25, Ohio

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 120

and it had, moreover, remained much the same for the space of a generation. When she had begun to teach geography, her figure had been spare and angular and it was still so. Her hair was more shadowy than it had been but, twisted into a meager little old-maid's knot, it had never shown much color. Her thin lips were still firm and innocent of paint; her large eyes were still naked (for Miss Dove retained perfect vision) and seemed still able to penetrate veil upon veil and to perceive, without astonishment, many hidden—and often unlovely—truths; her pale face never flushed with emotion—a slight pinkness at the tip of her pointed nose was the only visible indication of ordinary human blood's running through her veins. She wore round-toed black shoes with low, rubber-tapped heels. Her dress, of some dull-surfaced, dark material, was close cousin to the one in which she had made her pedagogical debut: it had the same long sleeves, the same high neck, and the same white linen handkerchief (or one very like) fluted into a fan and pinned to its left bosom. The handkerchief was not for use (Miss Dove did not cough or sneeze in public). It was a caution to Miss Dove's pupils that it behooved each of them to possess a clean handkerchief.

But there was more to Miss Dove. There was something that defies description. She had an extra quality as compelling as personal charm (which she did not have and would have scorned to cultivate). She gave off a sort of effulgence of awe and terror. But the terror did not paralyze. It was a terror that caused children to flex their moral muscles and to dream of enduring without a whimper prolonged ordeals of privation and fatigue. Sometimes if their ideal of courage was high it caused them to dare even Miss Dove's disapproval.

She had been under twenty when she had begun to teach—a reserved, hesitant girl whose deep romantic impulses had not yet caught fire. A girl who had felt calamity in one swift blow before she had felt more than a tentative "fluttering up toward joy." She had embraced her profession with the singleness of purpose that she might, under other circumstances, have bestowed upon matrimony, or foreign travel, or carving in stone.

Miss Dove was the eldest of three daughters in the first family of Liberty Hill. Her father was president of the bank—a witty, bookish man more amiable than provident. Her mother was a fragile woman who smelled of violets and had the kind of gentle beauty that "trembles over children sleeping." Her two little sisters were like their mother. Miss Dove was like herself. She had that innate appreciation of excellence that occurs, sui generis, in the morally elect.

The whole family admired her, but it was her father who—being a traveled man and, in a dilettante way, a connoisseur of human nature—perceived most clearly the special quality of his daughter. It was a quality that should not be tampered with. It was like the delicate glaze that distinguishes fine porcelain from ordinary tableware; like the bouquet of vintage wine; like the star in the heart of a sapphire. Accordingly he assumed responsibility for her early education. He taught her languages and the geography of the earth, ancient and modern. He read the poets with her—taking care to delete those passages that might offend her ear. He taught her to play chess and to dance and to ride (there was no girl in town who could sit a horse the way Miss Dove did) and he taught her to think well of herself. Above all Mr. Dove enjoyed expounding those lofty principles of honor and integrity that he truly worshiped (though sometimes from afar!) and that no one appreciated as his daughter did.

WHEN she was eighteen she was sent east to school for a year of finishing. The school was a good one built of gray stone, turreted like a castle and set among spacious lawns overlooking a river. Once a week there was a party to which select young gentlemen were invited. At one of these Miss Dove met a Princeton graduate student who was interested in archaeology. He was taken with her and she, within ladylike bounds, with him. She allowed him to call upon her. They sat on the lawn reading The Last Days of Pompeii and discoursing at intervals upon Greece and Rome.

The summer she was nineteen she "came out." She was presented to the simple, old-fashioned society of Liberty Hill in a simple, old-fashioned way. Her mother gave a tea party to which were invited not Miss Dove's contemporaries but her mother's own friends. In a white dress—a charming dress of imported muslin and lace insertion—and with her hair still down because her father had begged it, Miss Dove stood in the parlor and was introduced, in a new role, to the ladies. She was no longer a child with a child's privileges and limitations. She was a young lady—the grown-up daughter of the house.

By conventional standards Miss Dove was not pretty. She was too thin. Her nose was too pointed. Her eyes were too large for her face. But she had a look of elegance. And her soft, wavy hair caught the light like autumn water. She had the "threshold look" that young girls have sometimes and that can pierce the heart. She was flint waiting to be struck into flame. She might become anything at all, and whatever she did become was likely to be remarkable.

That evening her mother retired early. Miss Dove sat on in the parlor with her father. He had just received from his book dealer in

For Christmas Day and Every Day

Boontonware®

break-resistant melmac®

dinnerware!

Give Boontonware and you give pleasure every day of the year. Your choice of two smart designs—Boontonware Deluxe and Boontonware Belle—made of Melmac Molding Material so that they wash without wilting . . . in automatic dishwashers, too . . . and defy breaking, cracking or chipping. For your Christmas giving, choose a service piece, a starter set, or a complete family service, and you'll give lasting delight.

Replacement Guaranteed

Free replacement, either where you bought it, or from the Boonton Molding Company, if any dish breaks, cracks or chips in normal household use within one year from date of purchase. Look for the Boonton guarantee certificate—and look, too, for the tag that says Melmac, sure sign you're getting the real thing!

MELMAC is a registered trademark of American Cyanamid Company, N. Y. 20, N. Y., supplier of Melmac Molding Compounds to manufacturers who fashion high-quality dinnerware in a variety of designs and colors. Boontonware Deluxe and Boontonware Belle are exclusive designs of Boonton Molding Co., Boonton, N. J.

air-wick

proven

3 times as effective imitations

That's why air-wick is so more economical. It work like nothing else possib can. So don't fool aroun imitations. Kill unpleas cooking, smoking, and bat odors with a the deodoriz that made chl a household

*Independent research labor tests prove air-kills disagree indoor odors 3 as effectively imitations.

air-wick IS A TRADEMARK O SEEMAN BROTHERS, INC. ©1954, SEEMAN BROTHERS, N. Y., N. Y.

ong-sought copy of Marco Polo's took it to a table under a lamp. went to the piano. She began to nese waltz that her father liked. was full of roses and through the ws came the honey-sweet scent of new-cut grass.

som of her dress she had stuck a the young archaeologist. In it he to visit her in Liberty Hill. he wrote, "our friendship begun happy auspices will ripen into warmer."

something—a deepening quiet in behind her, or perhaps a half- —made her cease playing and d on the piano stool. Her father d forward with his face on his One arm lay flung out on the up, as if in a gesture of helpless ter the funeral, three days later, Dove learned that her father had yle to which his means had not . His family was worse than poor. ebt. And the debt was not an Mr. Alphonso Dove had lifted the bank.

r, her father's successor, told her other and sisters had gone to bed, rugged with grief.

't much," Mr. Porter told her ur thousand, give or take a few honnie must have been under confident he meant to repay it."

" said Miss Dove.

never know, do we?" Mr. Porter proposes; God disposes!'" er stole!" said Miss Dove. Her ed. Her eyes stared into space.

er behavior nor her words were rter considered womanly. He had red to comfort tears, to soothe ut this! He rallied to the defense ted.

we to judge?" he said. "He was his generosity ——"

" Miss Dove said flatly. Mr. Porderstand that she forced herself the face of truth. She was utterly her past was destroyed, for her ection made all her previous life—lly the high principles she had outh—seem sham. She knew she her grasp upon facts—nettles were—or be lost.

ed him. I respect his family," Mr. "I should regret having to dismother of her house."

st stay here," Miss Dove said. ust never know."

er felt himself pushed into the a villain who is unmoved by the widows and orphans in the cold. g business is like Caesar's wife," ut if you and I could concoct a "

nk of one," Miss Dove promised let you know tomorrow."

ext morning Miss Dove, the erstfortune, had taken inventory of s. She had two assets. She had a ority and a knowledge of geogvould teach.

she received aid in her project. insisted upon making her a perithout interest or record; he reimbank and she agreed to reimburse e times were in her favor. Liberty g been affably incurious about the d its environs, but the war in Eugun to trouble its composure. It splendid move—a modern, pro-e—thought the superintendent of ecure a specialist in geography for ry grades. Besides, his wife was a of Mrs. Dove.

of that summer while generals tegy in France Miss Dove mapped edchamber. To represent a classaid her father's chessboard—an ard of ebony inlaid with mother- a table by the north window. were desks. The ivory men were or hours on end, moving them board, speaking to them in unrms, she did what might be called "practice teaching." To the last detail she planned her procedure. The greeting to each class as it entered the room ("Good morning, Pawn," she said in a low, uninflected voice. "Good morning, Castle. Good morning, Knight,"), the ceremony of its dismissal, the rules and penalties and forms were all settled upon. The presentation of her subject matter was carefully considered. And just as carefully she considered how to impart the new and terrible knowledge that had come to her:

Life was not easy. Life did not excuse mistakes. Life demanded all the disciplined courage, and more, that one could bring to it.

She had written the young archaeologist that her recent bereavement would, of course, prevent her receiving him. If he had disregarded her letter—if he had come posthaste to Liberty Hill—well, who knows? Miss Dove was young. Storm might have taken her. But he wrote her a beautiful letter of condolence and forbore to intrude. He was not a Lochinvar.

In September Miss Dove exchanged her chessmen for pupils of flesh and blood. As she stood on the dais in the geography room, wearing her black mourning dress, her white handkerchief, and her small, tight, lusterless bun of hair, she looked very pale. But her pallor was that of purpose. She knew exactly how to proceed.

She kept her father's name clear of obloquy. She repaid Mr. Porter's loan, though that took twenty years. She saw that her sisters were suitably educated. She supplied her mother, through a long period of failing health, with every possible comfort and care and finally buried her with the circumstance that befitted a Dove of Liberty Hill.

In the accomplishment of these ends Miss Dove had denied herself much. She had ignored fashion. (Hair styles came and went—the spit curls, the overblown ear puffs, the boyish bob and the page-boy, and the pony-

now you can have stunning new

STEGOR* modern design

in richly gleaming

SILVERPLATE

with extra heavy XP-125 plating

With a fine flair for fitting smartly into the contemporary scene, Stegor by Gorham is simple, functionally designed silverplate. It introduces great versatility of use in plated flatware . . . its place size knife, fork and spoon fit both luncheon and dinner settings. All spoon bowls are designed with a full oval form, making them better for stirring, easier to eat with. Stegor's XP-125 plating means that it is plated with substantially more pure silver than the accepted standard for the finest silverplated flatware—not just at a few of the points of greatest wear, but over the entire piece, including edges of bowls and tips of tines. Dent-resistant, rattle-proof one-piece knife handles cannot come apart or develop unsightly seams.

In distinctive Pace II and Wheat II patterns shown. Open stock and in services for 4, 6, 8 and 12 from $24.95. Available on easy budget plans.

*Trademarks

Pace II* and Wheat II* patterns also in fine quality Stegor Stainless
Made and guaranteed by Stegor Division, The Gorham Company, Providence 7, R.I.

tail. Flesh-colored georgette blouses were all the rage, knee-high skirts, empire waists, the new look—she scarcely noticed them.) She had dismissed her dreams of travel. She had renounced her youth. Persons of Mr. Porter's vintage who had seen her riding a blooded bay mare or standing in white beside her mother winced at their recollections.

But Miss Dove did not wince. She regretted nothing. Deep within her, like a steady-flowing subterranean spring, was a sense of power. She had discovered that she was equal to her task. She controlled her own destiny.

Now, gazing at David Burnham, she realized that she had gazed at him long enough. His mouth was beginning to tremble. She wished to rein his spirit, not to break it. With her map pointer she gestured to the sink. "Very well, David," she said.

David went to the sink. He tore off a piece of paper towel, rubbed it on the bar of yellow soap and scoured his mouth. He returned to the aisle.

"You may be seated," Miss Dove said. "Open your notebook to a blank page, please."

Miss Dove walked to the blackboard. Each step cost her an effort. It was as if her right leg had forgotten how to move of itself and had to be consciously directed. She took a stick of chalk and wrote a sentence on the board in her neat, round, legible hand.

"Nothing is achieved by swearing," Miss Dove's sentence read. "Twenty times."

Twenty times was exactly right. When David had finished the cafeteria would still be open, though the supply of choice items on the menu—hot dogs and Eskimo pies—would be exhausted. It was Miss Dove's observation that whereas the punishment of a boy's palate had a salutary effect upon his behavior, the punishment of his stomach to the point of growling hunger often roused the brute in him.

She started back to her desk. She reached it in the nick of time, for now the pain gripped her in earnest. There was a crushing weight upon the lower part of her spine. A wave of giddiness swept over her.

She lowered herself into her chair. The pain lifted. But in its place was something more frightening than pain. In her leg, Miss Dove realized, there was no feeling at all. She tried to move it. It did not move.

For the first time since that evening in the shuttered parlor with Mr. Porter, panic seized her. She must do something. But what? She could send David for aid from other teachers, but her heart sank as she imagined those women fluttering over her, exclaiming, witnessing the humiliation of her weakness.

"David," she said. Her voice was hoarse.

David looked up from his penance. He saw Miss Dove's face pasty-white—with anger, he presumed. He gulped. "Yes, Miss Dove."

"Is your father likely to be at home?"

This was worse, thought David, infinitely worse. She meant not to beat him herself but to have his father do it in her presence.

Wildly David considered replying that his father had gone to New York or was in bed with pneumonia. But habit was strong. He told the truth.

"Yes, Miss Dove. Daddy's home," he said.

"I am indisposed, David," said Miss Dove. "I —— Will you go and tell your father? Ask him to call young Doctor Hurley."

David could scarcely believe his luck. "Do I need a permission slip from the office?"

"No," said Miss Dove. "My permission is sufficient. Mention this to no one. And, David"—her tone came close to pleading—"do not loiter. Run!"

David ran.

The pain had subsided, but Miss Dove noticed, with objective surprise, that she was trembling. Then, as she had before in times of transient trouble, she turned her mind to her lifework, which was eternal in character. She felt steady.

She stared critically at the second grade's mural. It was a jaunty effort, covering half the blackboard. It showed an expanse of snow, a row of igloos, a man, a dog and a reindeer (all approximately equal in size) and, in the background, the northern lights spreading a fan of garish colors—purple, green, orange and pink. Across the white field of snow—lest anyone entertain a doubt—was written in large red script: The Artic. Reginald Smith had written that; Miss Dove knew his sprawling hand. Tomorrow she would call his attention to his error in spelling and have him write the word divided into its syllables—"arc-tic"—three times in his notebook.

SUPPOSE she were not here tomorrow. Suppose—the palms of her hands grew clammy—she were never here again. But that was arrant nonsense. Except when the school itself had been closed because of blizzards or epidemics or a burst boiler, Miss Dove had always been here. She was not entirely proof against the ills of the flesh, but she managed to suffer them at convenient times. She had her colds during the Christmas holidays.

The pain must have been mechanical, she decided. A kink in a muscle. A sudden movement of a joint held stiff too long. And the numbness? But why should numbness be alarming? Feet went to sleep and woke again. Soon young Doctor Hurley would arrive. He would prescribe a tonic and a heating pad. He would warn her in the coarse, jesting way that she would accept from nobod she ought to kick up her heels, raise go on a three days' spree!

Doctor Hurley was seventy-two distinguish him from his doctor had delivered her and had been de a quarter century that Miss Dove "young." In his actual youth he radical—doubting the efficacy of purge and scoffing at the theory tha grew thick in winter—but the year lowed him. Beneath bluster he was, felt, a sound man. She trusted him

"A penny for your thoughts, M

LORRAINE ELLWOOD, the music tea in the doorway. She was a wispy thirty-four who had begun to fa knowing it in the crumply way of rosebud. She wore bangs and an dress with a dirndl skirt. She was f ing that she felt like a big sister to and although her devotion to ther cere—Miss Dove granted her that— not control them because she live level. She had, Miss Dove thought, than sense.

"Mona Leckford's engagement is bag," she chirped. "We're cutting a honor in the rest room. Won't you Miss Dove indicated the essa "Thank you, Miss Ellwood," she remembered her colleague as an gocart, but while on duty she di first names.) "Unfortunately, I am

"All work play ——" Lo gan and let her off.

"Be so kind as my felicitations Leckford," said M

"We'll miss y the music teach turned away. He went down the pat, like the feet child.

One should realize how infinitesimal is the importance of the best that one can do, and how infinitely important it is that one should do it.
—ANON.

Suppose, Miss Dove thought, l mind return to its gloomy speculat the doctor didn't pooh-pooh her c If she were really ill, if her stran sensations declared the close of her the buzzer had declared the clos morning's work—what kind of teac take her place in the geography room

Would it be a soft little person like Ellwood? Would it be a brash, heart the art teacher? Or worst of all—oh to think of!—would another Mona sit here on this dais, slumping, stifli behind a hand? A languid woman, M thought with contempt. A teacher w was not in her work!

There was a sound of footstep solid, masculine—in the hall. The Alexander Burnham hurried into t With him was Dr. Thomas Bake brought up the rear.

"Davie said you needed help, Mis said Alexander. "So I brought Tom

"Young Doctor Hurley is my ph said Miss Dove. Her tone implied th for a seasoned medical man and t fered, instead, the services of Thom was like being sent a troop of Bo when one had requested aid from th

"Davie told us that," Thomas said remembering the importance Miss D always attached to the delivery of "s message." He felt protective toward D illogically, toward himself. The famil was casting a spell upon him. The one blackboard, the map on the ot above all the mingled odors of chalk that permeated the air (Chalk smells forever and so do little boys, he thoug sense of discovery)—all these belied sage of time. He was eight years old, twelve at the most. He was facing th Miss Dove, who had accurately s through some clairvoyance of her own had a live garter snake in his trousers "Doctor Hurley is ill with bronchitis.

"The immoderate use of tobacco Dove said. She glanced at David,

CONTINUED ON PAGE 126

"For all casual dining I use Roylprints" (DISPOSABLE PAPER PLACE MATS)

Says Mrs. Charles Amory of New York and Palm Beach

Roylprints
Paper Place Mats

Take a tip from one of America's best-known hostesses and set your table with Roylprints. Stunning, up-to-date patterns in rich, full colors give each setting that smart, fresh touch that adds so much. And Roylprints end the fuss and bother of linens—and those high-priced laundering bills. Table setting is a matter of seconds, with nothing to wash or put away ever. Get Roylprints for pennies today at your favorite Variety, Supermarket or Department Store.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY

Royal Lace Paper Works, Inc., Brooklyn 1, N. Y. (A Subsidiary of Eastern Corp.)

DESIGNED FOR Royal LIVING EVERY DAY!

MANUFACTURER OF ROYLIES LACE PAPER DOYLIES AND ROYLEDGE SHELF LINING PAPER AND EDGING ALL-IN-ONE

hy sugar in reducing diets?

s based on important medical findings

healthy people the ood sugar level
elps regulate appetite len it's low you're most apt at more than you need

When it's high you're more uickly satisfied on less food fastest way to raise your d sugar level is to have e sugar, or one of the good gs that contain it

Here's why an 18-calorie teaspoonful of sugar may make it easier for you to turn down extra helpings that contain far more calories

ple have the idea that dieting means almost everything they like to eat.
k of 10 or 14 or 21 days of rigorous . of drab, uninteresting or one-sided
f lagging energy and constant hunger.

ult, all too often people who should dieting. All too often people who do e lost pounds right back again.

approach to diet planning authorities say that anybody who an lose surplus pounds—and keep -without making drastic changes in wn eating habits.

diets are easier to start on, easier to and easier to stick to because you go ting the foods you like. You do not food—you simply cut down.

ng as it may seem, one of your foods, sugar, can be one of the t can be one of your best helps down your total calorie intake!

ou include moderate amounts or the good things that contain your diet you actually take adf nature's own system of appel.

recently demonstrated at a leading where scientists found that, in ple, the size of the appetite is re-blood sugar level.

When your blood sugar level is low, you're hungry. You're most apt to eat more than you need.

When it is elevated you find it much easier to stay satisfied on smaller portions—to say "no thanks" to the extra portions that mean extra pounds.

Part of the foods you eat must be turned into sugar before the body can use them up as energy. Many foods, however, raise the blood sugar level so slowly that you may have already eaten too much before your appetite is "turned off."

Artificial no-calorie sugar substitutes have no effect on your blood sugar level. Since they do nothing to curb your appetite, you may find that, by using them, you are eating more calories than they save you.

Sugar, on the other hand, is assimilated into the blood stream and used as energy faster than any other food. It satisfies your craving for food faster than anything else you can eat because it almost immediately raises your blood sugar level.

Make Smaller Meals More Satisfying

That is why a nibble of something sweet between meals is permitted in the newer diets. It not only revives your energy, but helps you to keep your appetite within bounds at the next meal.

You may also use a spoonful of sugar in your coffee or tea, and may eat desserts that include sugar with lunch or dinner. The sense of satisfaction they give is far greater than would be provided by the same meal without sugar.

And whether you're overweight or just watching your weight, doesn't it give another kind of satisfaction to know that science now says you can have your sugar and your waistline, too?

SUGAR INFORMATION, INC.
Box 137, New York 5, New York

18 CALORIES

Surprise you that there are only 18 calories in a level teaspoonful of sugar? Compare this with the 2,500 a moderately active woman (123 lbs.) uses up every day. A 154-pound man requires 3,000 calories a day for normal activity.

All facts in this message apply to both cane and beet sugar.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 124

guilty, she suspected, of smoking in the boys' basement.

David slid into his seat and resumed his copy work.

"Quite likely. At any rate, he's hors de combat," said Thomas. "I happened to be at Sandy's when David came."

"Tommy's had excellent training, you know," said Alexander.

"I know," said Miss Dove. Of course she knew. It was she who had begun his training. It was she who, day after unremitting day, had drilled into him respect for industry, passion for exactitude, and the civilizing grace of inhibition. "Only ——" Only what? Only that for all his six-foot stature, his degrees and his accomplishments, he was still to her the boy who had wiggled his ears whenever her back was turned.

Thomas understood Miss Dove's hesitation. "Perhaps Miss Dove would prefer someone riper," he said.

But Miss Dove was not prepared to wound an old pupil's professional pride. Besides, she needed advice.

"I shall be glad of your opinion, doctor," she said. With succinctness and clarity, as though she were listing the chief products of the Great Lakes region, she described the symptoms of her malaise.

Thomas nodded. He mounted the low, raised platform, and as he did he had the feeling that he took the final and necessary step up from childhood to the plateau of adult authority. With the tip of his finger he touched a spot in the teacher's rigid back.

Sharply, Miss Dove drew in her breath.

"That's all," Thomas said. "Was it bad?"

"Yes," said Miss Dove.

"I was afraid it would be," Thomas said. "And your leg—there's complete absence of sensation?"

"My limb has gone to sleep," Miss Dove said. "As soon as I move about ——"

"But that's what we can't allow," said Thomas.

"Can't . . . what?" Miss Dove inquired. It had been a long time since anyone had proposed to impose his will upon her.

"Can't allow you to move about," said Thomas.

"What is your diagnosis?" asked Miss Dove.

"I haven't one yet," Thomas told her. "I'll have to get you to the hospital. Right away."

"Is that necessary?" Miss Dove demurred. "Young Doctor Hurley ——"

"It is quite necessary," Thomas said. "Right away."

"Next week, perhaps," said Miss Dove. By next week Doctor Hurley's bronchial tubes would doubtless be clear and his comfortable skill at her command. "At present I am very busy. I am reviewing my grammar grades for the state proficiency tests. They will be given on Monday."

"RIGHT away," said Thomas. His voice was flat. In it was the unyielding tone she had heard in her own when her patience was tried and she meant to brook no more nonsense.

"But the fifth grade is weak on the winds and the tides," she said.

"Miss Dove," said Thomas, "the decision is not yours. Medicine is my theater of command."

"Yes, Thomas," Miss Dove said meekly.

"Shall I call an ambulance?" asked Alexander.

"No! Please!" begged Miss Dove. With horror she imagined a siren shrieking down the street. She saw herself supine on a stretcher emerging from the portals of Cedar Grove School. "An ambulance is so conspicuous."

"I know," said Thomas. "Sandy and I could carry you to my car. That won't be so comfortable, of course ——"

"It will be quieter," said Miss Dove. "More discreet."

"Very well, then." Thomas said briskly. He wished to seize, before it changed, Miss Dove's submissive mood. "Now, Sandy ——"

"My hat, please," said Miss Dove. "My gloves and my bag. They are in the closet."

"I'll fetch them," said Alexander. But with his hand on the china knob of the closet door he trembled. He was about to penetrate an awful mystery. How often, especially when his conscience had been heavy, he had looked at that closet door and looked away! No one to his knowledge—no one except the terrible Miss Dove—had ever seen behind it. Speculation had been rife, of course, and everyone had agreed that the closet was an eerie place festooned with cobwebs and containing strange instruments of torture. Alexander opened the door.

The shallow whitewashed closet was uncluttered. From a peg beside the door hung a turkey-feather duster. On the floor were a pair of rubber gaiters and standing in the corner was a furled umbrella. From a shelf Alexander took Miss Dove's hat—black, small, straight-brimmed, a hat and nothing more—her long gold hatpin, her gray gloves and her handbag. He backed out of the closet, shutting the door quickly.

Miss Dove drew the gloves over her long, elegant fingers. In one hand she took her hat, in the other her pin.

Alexander averted his eyes. (It had been the consensus of his classmates that the teacher secured her hat by driving that pin straight through her cranium.) His gaze met Thomas' and asked a question. Thomas answered with a rueful shrug. His expression was grave.

Miss Dove's hat sat, level and s her head. She looped the strap of her arm.

"I await your convenience, gent
said.

The two men joined their four ing the sort of chair that childr play. They lowered it behind Mis

"Sit down," said Thomas. "Pu around our necks."

All this while David had be notebook, intent on escaping when he heard the doctor's strang and realized to whom it was ad looked up. His marrow was chill

Flint Kitchen Tool set, $13.95. Other sets from $5.95. 16 individual tools from $1.75.

Ekcoware stainless steel mixing bo

...the greatest names in housewares!

EKCO PRODUCTS COMPANY, CHICAGO 39, ILLINOIS

r and Doctor Baker had lifted Miss the air. She was sitting between heir hands, with her bony arms David wondered, could they en- ouch?) hugging their necks. Her l down.

y go, David," she said.

ss Dove," said David.

r regarded his son. "Were you use of your conduct?"

" said David.

r glanced at the board. His face he way—David remembered—it d at breakfast. "Have you finished copies?"

"I've done fifteen," said David.

"Do the other five," said Alexander. "Do five extra for good measure."

Miss Dove stiffened. This was the typical parental error. To indulge a child in his folly, gloss over his faults and then, in an outraged moment, to punish him excessively. "David has been diligent," she said. "He was interrupted to run an errand at my request."

"He has to learn ——" David's father began.

"It is I who deal with him here," said Miss Dove. "To borrow Thomas' words, this classroom is my theater of command. David may go."

"Yes, Miss Dove," said Alexander. He and Thomas carried their proud passenger into the hall.

Left alone, David began to weep. He wept because, being a child of sensibility, he appreciated the austere beauty of justice and was moved when a tyrant came to his defense. He wept because he sensed that the world was subject to change and because to be left to his own undirected devices made him feel forlorn. He hated himself for crying. He hated his tender nature. It was his dream to become a big-league pitcher or a space-rocket pilot like the heroes on the ready-to-eat-cereal boxes—who were never pictured in tears!

"Hell and damn!" he said aloud.

But the fine-flavored oath had lost its tonic property. It caused him to feel no bigger, no tougher, no less deserted. Why, he thought, shocked at the heresy to boyhood, the teacher was right! Nothing was achieved by swearing.

Down the central corridor of Cedar Grove School Miss Dove was borne aloft. The big front door was open to the brilliant day; the corridor was dim by contrast like the tunneled passage in a dream. From the teachers' rest room on the second floor came Lorraine Ellwood's thin true voice singing Always in honor of Mona Leckford; it sounded wistful and unreal—the ghost of a song. Yes, everything was very strange. And strangest of all was the fact that Miss Dove herself should move without the exercise of volition through territory where her presence had stood for law.

"Spine straight, Miss Dove," Thomas warned her. "Don't wobble about."

Miss Dove could scarcely believe her ears. "It is not my custom to wobble," she said.

THEY approached the door. Beyond lay the schoolyard—a piece of the large, uncloistered world—harsh with the glare of publicity. What would the children do when they saw her? Would they stare? Would they gape? (Miss Dove abhorred a hang-jawed child!) Would they giggle?

Alexander Burnham glanced up at her briefly. His eyes were full of concern. "You'll be all right, Miss Dove," he said.

"I am always all right," said Miss Dove.

Mercifully, although she was prepared to carry it off with éclat, Miss Dove was not obliged to run the gantlet of her pupils. A softball game and two or three vendettas had drawn the student body to the playground behind the school. On the front lawn only a flock of robins and one child, hidden among the boughs of the cedar, observed Miss Dove's departure.

The robins cocked their yellow eyes and continued pecking for worms.

The invisible child was Vicky Evans, the dreamer. She had climbed the tree for solitude. She was thinking up a story. And just as the elements of literature—an explorer lost among the mountains of the moon, a ruined castle, an enchanted princess—had begun to emanate from her mind, she saw something stranger than fiction. She saw two tall men carrying a woman between them. The woman was Miss Dove.

In her first surprise Vicky felt only a mild shock of that ineffable wonder that all children feel when events go topsy-turvy. It was the way she might have felt if she'd heard a white rabbit talking to himself or seen a baby turning into a pig. But as she watched the group move down the cement path through the schoolyard, she was seized by horror. Miss Dove was being abducted! She had been "drugged into submission"—that was why she did not scream!

The fact that Vicky recognized both the "abductors"—that Mr. Burnham was the rector of her church and Doctor Baker the surgeon who had removed her grandmother's gall bladder—did nothing to allay her fears. (She had learned from comic books that wolves employ many disguises other than the fleece of lambs.) Swinging from limb down to limb, she dropped to the grass. She raced across the lawn.

She plunged through the doorway and ran, with mounting terror, down the cavernous hall of the school. Her voice froze in her throat. When she saw five or six teachers descending the stairway, looking gay and sentimental, she began to howl.

"Vicky, darling!" cried Miss Ellwood. "Are you hurt, dear?"

Vicky shook her head. Between howls she made a burbling, unsuccessful attempt at articulation.

"Something's frightened her," Mona Leckford said with an air of perspicacity.

"Kidnapers!" Vicky managed to gasp. "They've snatched Miss Dove!"

The music teacher sat down upon the bottom step and pulled Vicky into her lap. "Sweetheart," she said, "you've been making up stories—nice little let's-pretend stories that belong in books. But we mustn't confuse let's-pretend with really-so, must we?"

Flint t Food Mixer, $4.95.

Flint Holdster set, $17.95. Other sets from $3.95. Individual knives from 89¢.

GIFT IDEA

Modernize . . . glamourize her kitchen with the right tools for every job . . . in sight and in reach!

ve t se wonderful Flint products by Ekco to spruce up ki en . . . ease up her work . . . make her say you ve gift" for choosing just the right gift!

F NT KITCHEN TOOLS The only kitchen ols good they're guaranteed for 15 years! The spat- is flexible it's like an extension of your hand. The rato asher has a unique design that mashes a potato one otion! Every tool is gleaming stainless steel, pre- on- ide to do its job to perfection! Be sure to get uir Flint! No other kitchen tools like them!

FLINT BEST FOOD MIXER So fast, it beats egg whites stiff in 28 seconds. Blends sauces, whips potatoes, or beats batter smooth with a few twirls! Stainless steel blades, lifetime nylon gears never tire your arm.

FLINT HOLDSTER SET The six knives you use the most — in a safe, convenient, decorative Holdster. Blades are finest hollow-ground, vanadium stainless steel. Set includes Roast Slicer, French Cook's Knife, Utility Knife, Paring Knife, Serrated Edge Bread and Ham Slicer, Steak Slicer.

AVA BLE BEAUTIFULLY GIFT-BOXED WHEREVER FINE HOUSEWARES ARE SOLD THROUGHOUT THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA.

"They snatched her!" Vicky sobbed. "I saw them!"

Then David Burnham came out of the geography room and told what had happened.

Miss Dove was not transferred to the doctor's automobile. Thomas decided against that for fear of jolting his patient. He discussed his decision, across Miss Dove, with Alexander.

"It's five blocks to the hospital," he said. "Can you make it, Sandy?"

"If you can," Alexander replied. He sounded offended, as though he considered the question a reflection upon his age (he was a few years the senior of Thomas).

"Good man," said Thomas.

"What of Miss Dove's comfort?"

"Oh, she'll be O.K. so long as she keeps her spine rigid," Thomas assured him. "And that's an old habit of hers."

It was odd, Miss Dove reflected, to hear herself spoken of in the third person as if she were absent or deaf. Odder yet, it was rather agreeable. For the fact that she was not consulted put her anxieties—for a brief interlude at least—at a certain remove. Like any pupil in the geography room, she had now to think only of her present duty and that duty was defined. She was to keep her spine rigid.

Back down the route she had taken in the morning she rode between her bearers. Along Maple through a shower of winged, coral-colored seeds some of which settled on her hat; up Oakwood, across LaFayette, past her own house to Elm where, half a block farther on, the hospital was situated.

The noonday hush was on Liberty Hill, but Miss Dove's progress did not go unnoticed. Polly Burnham was on her porch, awaiting her husband's return. She started forward when she saw him, but he warned her off with a shake of his head. He walked very slowly, she observed, keeping careful step with Thomas. She telephoned Jincey Baker.

Jincey called her sister and her mother-in-law. Within five minutes a score of persons stood, half eager and half afraid, at front windows. And when they beheld the awaited spectacle they felt betrayed as people feel when they first glimpse the outrageous fact that their parents are not immune to change but have been touched, as by frost in the night, with an intimation of mortality. If Miss Dove's strength could crumble, what of their own?

Law, embodied in the muscular bulk of Patrolman Holloway, was cruising the streets in a police car. The car drew close to the curb.

"Has there been an accident, doc? Is she bad off?" Holloway asked. He was abjectly devoted to Miss Dove, who had once shown him consequence when that had been what he needed. He pronounced "she" as if it began with a capital letter, like the pronoun of deity.

"I have the immediate situation under control, Bill," Thomas said. "Scoot over to the hospital and tell them that I want a private room. Say I'm not asking for it—that I'm telling them!"

"Yes, sir." With siren wailing the car sped off at sixty miles an hour.

Jincey Baker was in her front yard. She wore a full yellow smock. The sun gave an extra burnish to her hair. Her complexion had that glowing delicacy that blesses some women in the terminal weeks of pregnancy and there was a sprinkling of freckles—a touching, left-over grace of childhood—on the bridge of her exquisite nose. She looked like spring.

AFTER nearly a year of marriage, Thomas was not hardened to his wife's beauty. For a piercing instant he was oblivious of all else. He nearly stumbled.

But Miss Dove was not dazed. She noted only that the girl seemed to have outgrown the flighty butterfly airs that had made her first youth absurd.

"How d' y' do, Virginia," she said.

"How d' y' do, Miss Dove," said Jincey. She looked at her husband. "Can I help, Tommy?"

"No," Thomas said. He rapped out the negative, wishing to cut clear of the tenderness that threatened to unman him. "Just look after yourself. Don't do anything foolish."

Miss Dove approved. His tone had been unnecessarily brusque, perhaps, but what more appropriate advice could be given Virginia than a caution to steer clear of folly?

"We're almost there," said Thomas as he and his companion turned into Elm Street.

"If I may indulge my curiosity," said Miss Dove, "how long must I expect to be hospitalized? Overnight?"

"Longer than that," said Thomas.

"This is Wednesday. I should like to be in school by Mon[illegible] the latest."

"Not next Monday," said T[illegible] week from then maybe. Or a m[illegible] depends."

"Oh," said Miss Dove.

IN the front bedroom of the bu[illegible] abutted the hospital grounds Jo[illegible] Evans had just arisen from his c[illegible] as he was known generally, was[illegible] charm and unfortunate habits. [illegible] covering from a spree of consider[illegible] so—and what could be more n[illegible] poured himself a little "hair of th[illegible] took his glass to the window and [illegible] a salute to a new day and a new [illegible] kindled in the liquor. Fire, he tho[illegible] heart of a rare jewel. He was smi[illegible] what mawkishly, at his pretty cond[illegible] saw Miss Dove.

The sight unnerved him. Sever[illegible] the past he had been subject to va[illegible] holic fancies, but they had taken v[illegible] shapes suggesting snakes and legen[illegible] He had never seen anything like t[illegible]

"Con[illegible] Pearl," h[illegible] his wife, entering [illegible] bring hir[illegible] masked in[illegible] shire sauc[illegible] Pearl h[illegible] side. "W[illegible] Dove!" "Your te[illegible] Dove!" "You[illegible] too?" W[illegible] forehead with the [illegible] lief. "Bu[illegible] do you [illegible] got her?" "Ton[illegible] Sandy," "She mu[illegible] "Shen[illegible] than sick[illegible] The teach[illegible] a tragic[illegible] thought, [illegible] death—n[illegible] deeply. [illegible] in many[illegible] spects [illegible] Dove, b[illegible] mired he[illegible] stood [illegible] tude, pr[illegible] thority—was what Wes wished t[illegible] Often it was the appalling consc[illegible] the gulf between the ideal and the[illegible] sent him to the bottle.

"The time you won your town th[illegible]
They chaired you through the ma[illegible]" he quoted softly.

"What's that, darling?" his wif[illegible] anxious tone.

"Housman," he said. He set his [illegible] untasted. "I'm through with that,[illegible]

"Of course you are," Pearl said[illegible] said countless times. She did not [illegible] what passed through his mind (a[illegible] had been raised in another tow[illegible] knew that something had touched[illegible] ous, liberating spring in his nature[illegible] now—oh, for months with any[illegible] could bask in the halcyon weather[illegible] band's sobriety. "Can you swallo[illegible]

Absently, Wes swallowed the eg[illegible]

He continued to stare out the v[illegible] could now see only Miss Dove's[illegible] prim feet visible beneath the decen[illegible] uncompromising neck, the shape[illegible] as stiff and uncoquettish as a m[illegible] But upon his mind her pale se[illegible] stamped. The nose was superciliou[illegible] was lofty and calm. The eyes met, [illegible] with recognition, composure and c[illegible] the eyes of mankind's uncouth an[illegible]

However, as had happened [illegible] poetic temperament deceived him. [illegible] was not thinking of death. She w[illegible] of the proficiency tests.

But the hospital, like the the[illegible] schoolroom, is a world contain[illegible]

CONTINUED ON PAGE 1

NEXT MONTH

"The only difference between island entertaining and any other kind is that on an island guests stay all night or for two weeks—or a couple of years. Everybody always misses the last ferry. But any dinner can be stretched by the addition of noodles—and sleeping in the lawn swing isn't bad if you take two sleeping pills."

■ Betty MacDonald, author of The Egg and I, tells about living on an island in the Pacific Northwest ("There weren't any houses for rent and none for sale for nothing, which is what we had") with her husband, two daughters and assorted guests in

ONIONS IN THE STEW

Complete in the December JOURNAL, condensed from the book soon to be published by J. B. Lippincott Co.

Make cleaning less like work . . .

CHOOSE BRUSHES WITH

stay lively bristles

OF DU PONT TYNEX NYLON

TRADE-MARK

You'll whisk dust and moth flakes off winter things so much faster and easier — with a clothes brush bristled with lively "Tynex" nylon. For "Tynex" bristles stay springy . . . last longer . . . give you new-brush performance season after season.

And when housework's over, refresh and stimulate your skin to healthful beauty with a complexion brush that has firm, yet gentle, "Tynex" bristles. "Tynex" cleans easily, dries quickly; can be sterilized.

In addition, you'll find Du Pont "Tynex" bristles never get limp, never absorb odors . . . are ideal for any household or personal brush.

So, next time you buy brushes, look for "Tynex" — the bristles that carry the Good Housekeeping Guaranty Seal.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Look for Du Pont TYNEX nylon bristles

TRADE-MARK

when you buy brushes

"Tynex" is the new trade-mark for genuine Du Pont nylon bristles.

DU PONT

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING . . . THROUGH CHEMISTRY

Women Astounded By Make-Up Miracle On TV

DEL SHEDS 10 YEARS IN 10 SECONDS

Now Available For The First Time! — The Secret That Famous Screen, Stage, TV Stars Learned From Their Make-Up Artists

I FAMOUS AC-
S OOK SO YOUNG
A OROUS SO LONG?
an ey play parts 10, 15
ea younger than you y ally are? Why can a ld ar who doesn't look ge n the morning than a ld ousewife, successfully pa of a young girl?
ow common sense will
a ulti-million dollar
't held up because the es n the set with dark de her eyes or because s ean enough to make po out on her nose.

a -Up Can Hide
e ll Tale Signs

wa assumed that nature
vo es—or else that they h ke-up. But the truth p one cannot do it beke- must be translucent to t your skin show Ot wise, you'd look as re earing a mask.
ta used make-up alone,
c cles, blemishes, lines
ow

cr That the Stars
ec ned from Ma ke-Up Artists

all hey can't touch up ct film as they can a
h. they must touch up he elves. That's why the ar s in Hollywood had n ew cosmetic.
an make-up artist thinks in make-up, he first p dark circles, harsh in rfections. Then and d he apply make-up.
at eps stage, screen and st looking so young.

m r When Only es Used Lipstick?

be actresses used cake
l stick, eye make-up ar ong before the gen-ic d. And they never ro the housetops that d their glamour to sec s. s tell hates to give r l and most carefully ec But business is busiow t last, Charles Antell
th ecret cosmetic avail-v body. We call it
S.

The Cosmetic the Whole Family Will Use (Even Pop)

In the morning, if you're in a hurry, a touch of Charles Antell's Touch-Up Stik, a touch of lipstick — and your husband will look at you, instead of the morning paper.

For the beach, Charles Antell Touch-Up Stik will conceal unsightly broken blood vessels on your legs.

Teen-agers use Charles Antell Touch-Up Stik to hide the blemishes and pimples that always seem to pop up just before a date.

Men use Charles Antell Touch-Up Stik to cover shaving nicks, skin blemishes or even a black eye.

Your Friends Will Think You Found "The Fountain of Youth"

To look your glamorous best, blend your make-up over the Touch-Up Stik. Instead of looking more made up, you will look less made up—because it takes far less make-up to give you the smooth, even, creamy-looking complexion that every woman wants and every man admires. It makes your make-up ten times more effective.

Remember — Touch-Up Stik is invisible. People see the results — not the Touch-Up Stik itself. And it's actually good for the skin. The ingredients have been blended together with beautifying, softening lanolin. It will not flake, peel, crack or rub off. It will stay on until you wash it off or cream it off.

Seeing Is Believing

Many of you have seen the miraculous demonstration on TV where a model shed ten years in ten seconds right before your eyes. You know that a touch-up stick has been working for years for stars of stage, screen and radio.

Now, at last, it is available to you. Think of how you will look without dark circles under your eyes, harsh lines softened, freckles, scars, birthmarks and blemishes all made invisible. The kind of perfection you always felt was out of your reach is now as easy to achieve as putting on lipstick.

re test Beauty Revelation Since Lipstick

It looks like a lipstick and it's just as easy to use. And it comes in exactly the right shade to blend into your complexion invisibly. Just run the Touch-Up Stick lightly over the dark circles under your eyes, over the lines from the sides of your nose to the corners of your mouth. Cover a blemish here, a little scar there, even a birthmark or freckles or little red veins. In a matter of seconds, dark circles are gone — harsh lines softened — blemishes disappear. The face is now a smooth, even color because all imperfections are concealed.

ALWAYS TOUCH-UP BEFORE YOU MAKE-UP

WITHOUT TOUCH-UP STIK — WITH TOUCH-UP STIK

Make this miraculous difference as easily as applying lipstick.

Stars' Secret Now Yours During Limited Introductory Bargain Offer

Is it expensive? No. A Charles Antell Touch-Up Stik that will last you up to a year is only $2. But to induce you to try it now, to see for yourself how easy it is to shed ten, fifteen or even twenty years from your appearance, here is what we are going to do.

With each Touch-Up Stik, we are going to give you free a $1.50 bottle of Charles Antell's Liquid Make-up with Lanolin that matches your Touch-Up Stik. This is a revolutionary new kind of liquid make-up that has a natural affinity for the skin. That's why it stays on longer, looks better and is actually good for your skin. It needs no foundation under it, it needs no powder over it. It is the first complete make-up.

Now besides that, we are going to give you free a series of beauty lessons to teach you all the simple little make-up tricks of the make-up artist.

In other words, you get the $2 Charles Antell Touch-Up Stik, (up to a year's supply)—in your choice of the perfect complexion tone for your face, the $1.50 matching Liquid Make-up with Lanolin, plus the make-up lessons—for the cost of the Touch-Up Stik alone. Only $2.

This is a limited offer and may be withdrawn without notice. So act now!

MORE THAN YOUR MONEY BACK GUARANTEE

You must look 10 years younger in 10 seconds or you get more than your money back. Keep the $1.50 matching Liquid Makeup With Lanolin. Keep the Makeup Lessons. Send back only the Charles Antell Touch-Up Stik—and your full purchase will be refunded immediately, no questions asked.

Charles Antell

TOUCH-UP STIK

NOW AVAILABLE AT DRUG AND COSMETIC COUNTERS EVERYWHERE!

If your dealer is sold out, write to Charles Antell, Dept. A, Baltimore 3, Md., enclosing $2.00 plus 50c for handling and we'll mail your kit to you. Be sure to specify your complexion shade — Fair, Natural, Medium, Light Brunette, Brunette, Suntan (very dark).

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 128

turning on its own axis. In its atmosphere is some hypnotic or amnesiac quality before which ordinary life recedes. Even Miss Dove, with her high resistance to foreign influences, was affected by the spell. She approved of the hospital. Of its formality, its regard for order and its implacable determination to seem exactly what it was. She admired—though with initial reluctance—the authority exercised over herself.

She did not, of course, quite abandon her self-determination; she relinquished it into temporary safekeeping along with two possessions of value that she carried in her purse. One was a mother-of-pearl card case containing a dozen visiting cards upon which her name (plain Miss Dove without amplification) was engraved in chaste block letters. The other was a large, heavy-lidded gold watch that had been her father's. In this place she had no need to prove her identity (it was posted on the outside of her door) or to measure the passage of time. She lay becalmed in the present.

When Mr. Spivey, the principal of Cedar Grove School, called to express his concern for her health and to say he was assuming personal responsibility for her classes, he found her curiously at ease. Not once did she fix him with the Dead Sea gaze that had so often made him feel naïve in faculty meetings. Even when she touched upon the preparation for the coming tests—upon the fifth grade's confusion about the winds and the tides, for instance—she seemed neither tense nor haughty. Next day, with a catch in his voice, he told his teaching staff, "The old quarterback is resting on her oars!" (Like many men who employ athletic metaphor, Mr. Spivey liked a potpourri.)

The hospital, forewarned by Holloway, had been ready for Miss Dove. It was small by contemporary standards but big for Liberty Hill, and so new that its vanity was still intact. When word came that the town's perfectionist was bound thither everyone, from the superintendent down, rose to the challenge.

So gently that she felt only a twinge Miss Dove was deposited upon a bed. She looked up at solicitous faces. It was a new sensation for her who was accustomed to look down at faces from an eminence.

"I secured a special in case you wanted one," the superintendent said. "A 'practical' was the most I could do for day duty, but Mrs. Green is one of our best."

"I try to be," the nurse said, drawing a blanket over Miss Dove's knees. "Do you remember me? I was Billie Jean McVay."

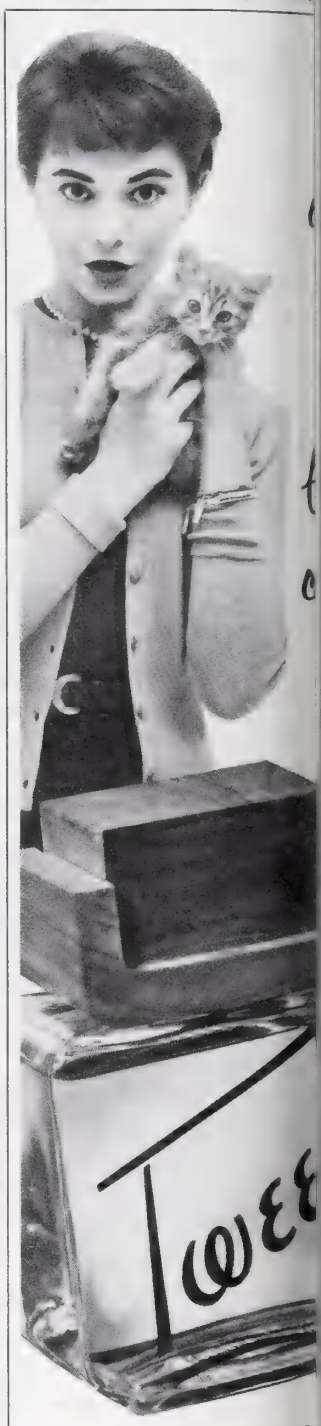
"Yes," said Miss Dove. She remembered Billie Jean very well. A sloe-eyed child who had been languorous at seven and who, at twelve, had troubled the air of the school with a suggestion—almost an aroma—of sex precociously in the ascendant. "I remember you, Mrs. Green."

"Of course I'm older now," Billie Jean said as if she'd read her patient's thoughts.

Alexander took his leave and Thomas, after a hurried consultation with the nurse, did likewise. There was an emergency case for him, the superintendent told him. The Knight kid—Lester, Jr.—had been admitted half an hour before with abdominal pain and a high white count. His mother was with him, in worse shape than Lester.

"I dare say," said Miss Dove. She could imagine how Jane Knight, nee Simpson, would behave under threat of a son's appendicitis. All the Simpson girls had been flighty and likely to go to pieces at examinations.

Thomas, who was also acquainted with the Simpson strain, laughed shortly. But immediately he sobered. "I'll see you later, Miss Dove," he said. He walked away without a backward glance.



Miss Dove did not feel abandoned. Thomas, she knew, had put her problems into the proper pigeonhole of his mind, much as she did with the problems of the third grade when the fourth grade trooped in.

"I'll take you up now," said Billie Jean. The bed was on rollers. Grasping it by the footboard, she propelled it to the elevator.

The nurse's skirts made a whispering noise—like water among reeds, she thought;

the light had an aqueous quality self seemed to be drifting in a b produced in her a rhythmic peac lapping waves, and the rhyth recollection. She remembered verse that one of her less rever composed back in the thirties.

Geoffrey Lyons, the parodist fat boy with a sullen and even countenance that had a discon lighting up suddenly, for no d son, as if a lamp burned under i
He had taken for his model sc the Arthurian legends—those e scribing the "lily maid," the fa

Tweed . . . the one fr above all others . . .
anytime, anywh
Tweed Perfume from 2.00
3½ oz. Bouquet Tweed
Lentheric
NEW YORK PARIS LONDON
Sweaters by Lyle & Scott
WE SUGGEST: You get acquainted this world-famous fragrance by the Helene Curtis special offer: a size bottle of Tweed perfume free purchase of Helene Curtis Spray •limited ti

I dreamed I lived in a house of mirrors in my maidenform bra®

Magic mirror on the wall...I'm the fairest of them all!
My curves are a vision from every angle. Yes, when it comes to multiplying a girl's charms...there's nothing like a Maidenform! My dream-of-a-bra makes a wonderland out of any looking glass!

The dream of a [illegible] bra in nylon taffeta or broadcloth, [illegible] AAA to AA cups for the teen figure, 1.75

iss Dove the grim, Miss Dove the Geoffrey had written. "Miss Dove
's Head of Cedar Grove!" ttletale prig had left the lines on s desk, hoping, no doubt, to wound and get the budding author into ut the prig had failed on both ss Dove had not been hurt. On the he had been mildly elated by the erself as an august being to be aparily lest her omniscient eyes turn ie. And certainly she would never ed to anger with an eleven-year-old
, later on, Geoffrey had become a she had felt gratified in a proprie-d had even consented to fly to New guest on the opening night of his
s. The play had been well cone had thought, though trivial in its ter.
m into which Miss Dove was s a small, blue room. Its window, on budding treetops and gabled ike a big framed picture.
e'll take off our clothes and then ore comfy," said Billie Jean. She umoring tone with steel behind it.
that she intended to assume com-noun 'we' is misleading," said Miss less you propose to take your

'
n tittered nervously, but refused to ted.
ved Miss Dove's outer garments, e and chemise and petticoat and ioned boned stays. She gave her a my ablutions this morning," des Dove.

tine," Billie Jean said, lathering
s flat, immaculate stomach.
ll, Mrs. Green," said Miss Dove.
ot, in conscience, oppose routine.
re's something to make our skin
eet. Your skin," Billie Jean said.
ed a few drops of emollient lotion ove's neck and shoulders. "Know k of when I put this on my pa-little can of talcum you gave me as in the third grade."
ond grade," said Miss Dove. Her gifts had long been standardized.
for second-grade girls. Girls in ade got celluloid thimbles.

d a picture of a lilac on the tin," aid. She pulled the bedclothes up.
you gave it to me you said some-r forgot. You said, 'This is to use ash your neck.'" ed no reflection upon you," Miss uickly. "That is what I say to all
s." take it personal," Billie Jean as-
'But it's funny what kids rememear you say that like it was ten
!" She emptied the bath water vatory drain and hung the washwel (neatly, Miss Dove observed, ners pulled out straight) on a rod.
d, still talking, to the bedside.
how some girls can't pass a cos-er without they spray themselves logne? Well, I couldn't bring my-that. I'd feel dirty. Everybody o queer!"
ndards are our own," said Miss was, she discovered, fatigued. She hospital regulations enjoined si-nurses—that they were required to ands for permission to speak.
Miss Dove's lips that were closed.
stuck a thermometer between that I don't care for perfume," attled on after a minute of grateful ng which she had counted her pa-

. "I guess every normal girl does.
by—my little Ava. She's going on
's crazy about my Lotus Lady."
w the thermometer. "But I tell her time she begs for it—I say, 'First, h yourself good!'"
murmured Miss Dove.
n, mistaking the monosyllabic for an exclamation of interest, hat's exactly what I tell her!" She read the thermometer and jotted down a figure on a small pad.

"What is my temperature?" asked Miss Dove.

"That's confidential information for the doctors," said Billie Jean. Apologetically, she patted Miss Dove's hand. "Even if I told you, you wouldn't know what it meant. It's in centigrade."

Miss Dove did not defend herself against the girl's bland assumption of her ignorance. "My question was indiscreet," she said.

"Oh, no! Not indiscreet!" Billie Jean protested. "All patients ask. But you know rules."

"Yes. I know rules," said Miss Dove.

"That Lotus Lady," Billie Jean said, as if eager to return to a safe subject. "Bill Holloway gave it to me. He said it smelled refined." She blushed shyly. "He's going to give me something else. A ring."

"An engagement ring?" asked Miss Dove.

Billie Jean nodded. "I feel like a dream walking! I've been a widow for five lonely years and now ——"

Miss Dove made an inarticulate sound of sympathy. Billie Jean, she knew, had gone west to work in a factory. She had been married there to a Mr. Green, who had met with some sort of untimely—and, perhaps, unseemly—demise. Billie Jean had returned home with a new name and a new baby and had become a practical nurse.

"And now," sighed Billie Jean, "I'm the happiest girl in the world!"

"But your life is full as it is," said Miss Dove. "You have your child and your work."

"A woman's life," said Billie Jean, "is never too full for a man!"

Miss Dove said nothing.

"Bill has you on a pedestal. He says you're his idea of 'genteel.'"

"I value William Holloway's opinion," said Miss Dove.

She voiced no idle politeness. She did value his opinion as she valued her own. That fact

The richer your lotion—the smoother your hands!

Trushay is richer in protective ingredients than any other leading hand lotion

Yes, Trushay's formula is extra-rich in beauty oils! That's why it gives your hands such perfect care . . . brings your skin new loveliness so many ways!

1. Applied beforehand, guards hands even in hard water!

2. Counteracts drying action of detergents, soaps—soothes irritation!

3. Rubs in easily, supplements natural skin oils!

4. Smooths those rough spots—elbows, knees, heels!

5. Makes a fragrant, luxurious body rub!

6. Comforts chapped, cracked, red skin!

7. Helps banish rough cuticle, eliminate painful hangnails!

8. Softens, beautifies—a quick, flattering powder base!

9. Trushay Lotion gives your skin that lovely silken smoothness!

JUST one day of using Trushay should convince you that no other leading hand lotion can do more to beautify your skin. Because no other is so rich in protective ingredients!

Trushay smooths right into the upper layers of your skin—supplementing natural skin oils. Delightful to use . . . no stickiness.

A heavenly body rub, a flattering powder base, Trushay is so versatile, you'll probably want two bottles—one for the kitchen, one for your dressing table.

TRUSHAY®
LOTION

A PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

would have startled the society of Liberty Hill in which Miss Dove was considered—not entirely without reason—something of a snob. But such snobbery as she had was not of the common variety that flies, like a homing pigeon, to money or prestige. She was a moral snob. And so, in his way, was William.

All the signs had been against the boy. He came from a home—if one could call it a home—that might euphemistically have been described as "underprivileged." He was an orphan who lived with his grandmother, a woman of unsavory repute, in a leaky shack near the gasworks. On his first day at school he had been barefoot. His hair had been matted and over one cheek had been the brownish stain of a fading bruise. He had held an elbow crooked as if to ward off a blow.

Mothers entering their pretty six-year-olds in Cedar Grove School had gasped. One, a Mrs. Holmes, had begged Miss Dove to keep her son on the other side of the room from William.

"I believe in democracy," she had said, "but I don't want Charlie to catch anything!"

"My seating arrangement is alphabetical," Miss Dove had told her coldly. But privately her heart had sunk.

It was wearisome enough to deal with raw but scrubbed first-graders from ordinarily decent families. An unwashed child from the criminal fringe of town posed a problem indeed.

And then William surprised her.

All the rules of manners and procedure that Miss Dove persuaded ("bullied," her critics said) the other children to accept, William took to his bosom. When he greeted Miss Dove at the door he did so in the accents of dedication. At her "Attention, please" he sat up straight and showed the proud poker face of a soldier presenting arms. He began to wash. Like a badge of honor he wore a clean handkerchief protruding from his breast pocket.

Miss Dove gave him Saturday jobs raking leaves or mowing grass. He performed these jobs with meticulous care and later, on her recommendation, he procured a paper route. He was the best paper boy in town. He was never late and he always laid the paper, folded, on the doorstep instead of twisting it and tossing it on the roof.

It was Miss Dove's custom to pay pastoral calls at the residences of her pupils, but she did not visit William's grandmother. In his case, she felt, the school and home had best remain apart.

So she never saw the squalid little house on the alley until William had been for years beyond her care. And then it wore a pitiful dignity. Upon its door was a sheaf of carnations. It was a house made significant for a day by death.

In a larger world than that of Cedar Grove, beset by temptations and not sustained by the classic simplicity of inflexible rights and wrongs, William had not done well. He had played truant. He had hung around poolrooms. Once he had been haled into juvenile court for shooting craps. And yet Miss Dove had not lost faith in him.

One day, when William was seventeen and had quit school, Miss Dove heard that his grandmother was dead. She had died under sordid circumstances. In a free-for-all fight over the rights to a debouchment of coins from a slot machine, someone had split her skull with a beer bottle. She was to be buried late that afternoon.

After school Miss Dove put on her hat and gloves and set out for the house of bereavement. On the listing lean-to porch were a few neighbors. Miss Dove bowed distantly to them. She walked straight to the door.

INSIDE, wearing an ill-fitting, evidently borrowed dark suit, stood William. He was a tall fellow now—thin, but with powerful shoulders—and Miss Dove thought she had never seen a more perplexed distress than that which marked his face. She extended her hand.

"May I offer my expressions of sympathy?" she said.

William took her hand. He straightened his shoulders. "Thank you, Miss Dove," he said. "Would you like to come in and see grandma?"

There was little Miss Dove would have liked less, but she followed William into the front room. There the remains of the disreputable Mrs. Holloway reposed in a cheap coffin. In death, Miss Dove was certain, the old woman had an aspect of decency that she'd never had in life.

"She did the best she could," said William. "She didn't"—he gave Miss Dove a glance of profound respect—"have my advantages."

"Her troubles are over," said Miss Dove.

"I hope so," said William. "Some say they're not."

Miss Dove rode with William to the cemetery, sitting erect in the undertaker's limousine. But when the obsequies were over she bade him farewell. "I will walk home," she explained. "I wish the exercise." Then she looked William full in the face and said in a clear tone that could be heard by all the lesser mourners, "I shall follow your career with interest." She went off, leaving him to decide, in that loneliness which is the true climate of decision, whether to respect his life or throw it away.

As it turned out, William was sensible. He joined the Army. After three years, honorably discharged and seventy pounds hea returned to Liberty Hill. Using his G tional allowance for living expenses, pleted his high-school education. Ther sound understanding of himself, he the field of law enforcement.

EACH morning when Miss Dove sa the intersection of Grant and Maple and solid, lifting his great, white-glov to halt traffic or beckon children ac street—she experienced a moment exhilaration. There was a man who and muscles functioned in harmony. A love with his work. For him, she kne liceman's lot was a very happy one.

Of his domestic lot, which he pla cast with Billie Jean's, Miss Dove certain. And yet, she remembered, Bi did wash her neck before applying sce was a straw in the wind.

"I've tired you," Billie Jean said rue always go yak-yak when I'm nervo see, Bill thinking so much of you and ing the terri—well, being who you ar flustered."

"That was natural," said Miss Dov

"A nurse has got no business be ural," said Billie Jean, rebuking her nurse should think of her patient."

Quiet reigned in the room. Miss laxed. Some thread that had always s taut, holding her fast to responsibility, to have snapped clean through. She cl eyes and let her mind bob up and dow cork on the surface of a pond.

Billie Jean fed her soup from a sp technician drew blood from her finger carried it away in tube. She scarcely

Through the floated the blithe ar relsome voices of released from scho floated from a sphere, from a point in time.

An intern came room. He was a shot man with a crew cut, bright pink che the gloss of appalling youth. In his wh and trousers he reminded Miss Do sixth-grader dressed up for the gradua ercises of Cedar Grove Elementary The stethoscope around his neck, hi rimmed glasses and his deep bass v seemed assumed like poor theatrical d

Billie Jean, as she leaped to her fee at attention and registered deference, a to be play-acting too. "Here's Doctor Miss Dove," she said.

"I am Doctor Baker's house officer," tern announced from somewhere lov visceral cavity.

Not knowing what a house officer w Dove reserved comment.

"I hope you're fairly comfortable," "I believe you're complaining of pai low dorsal region and of extended nu in the right leg?"

"I am comfortable, thank you," sa Dove. She added, "And I did not con

"We use the word in a medical se do a physical now before I take your h

"You?" said Miss Dove.

"A superficial one," he assured he fine points I'll leave for Doctor Baker."

Miss Dove sought words for protest been strange enough to take order Thomas Baker and to be washed b Jean; to lie here at the mercy of an child with a false voice was ridiculous.

But Billie Jean had unbuttoned t shirt. The doctor's stethoscope was against her chest. Submission was th part of dignity. Lights were flashed eyes, up her nose and down her thro blood pressure was tested. She was p in the ribs, in the solar plexus and in domen. When the examination was ov Jean retired from the room.

"Now we'll take your history," said Temple.

The questions he asked were person Dove thought, to the point of irrel However, she answered them.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 134

Not everyone can do great things, but everyone can do small things in a great way. —ANON.

Ac'cent brings out the fresh-picked flavor in all vegetables . . . fresh, canned or frozen! How? By restoring and enhancing the original flavor lost during shipping, storing and even during quick cooking. You see, Ac'cent is the stable form of pure monosodium glutamate, nature's own flavor-building ingredient. Use Ac'cent, as you do salt, on meats . . . fish . . . poultry, as well as vegetables. Does wonders to improve flavor in leftovers! Try Ac'cent today . . . you'll love it!

In 1-lb. Gourmet . . . 8-oz. Economy . . . 4-oz. Home . . . 1-oz. Introductory Size.

makes food flavors sing

Ac'cent®

PURE MONOSODIUM GLUTAMATE

AC'CENT INTERNATIONAL, 20 N. Wacker Drive, Chicago 6, Illinois.

PERFECT COCONUT CREAM PIES IN HALF THE TIME!

1. A new complete coconut cream pie filling! Even the shredded coconut is right in the box!
2. Wonderful plain—or add a tangy touch with a delicious red jam!
3. Perfect for pies—marvelous for puddings. Try some new Jell-O Coconut Cream Pudding and Pie Filling soon.

Vanilla
Chocolate
Butterscotch
Lemon
Coconut Cream

Jell-O is a registered trade-mark of General Foods Corp

The zesty tomato sauce topping is baked on!

FRENCH'S Worcestershire
does something wonderful for Hamburger Loaf!

FREE! NEW RECIPE LEAFLET
"How To Give Meat a Flavor Lift!"
The R. T. French Co.,
4028 Mustard Street, Rochester 9, N. Y.
Name_____
Address_____
City_____ State_____

- ✓ French's Worcestershire Sauce is a blend of rare spices, soy anchovies, tamarinds.
- ✓ Aged and mellowed for richer, more distinctive flavor.
- ✓ Now in an exclusive non-drip bottle. Costs less, yet no finer Worcestershire at any price!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 132

She had been born in 1898. Her mother had been nineteen and her father thirty-eight. So far as she knew, there had been no untoward circumstances attending her birth.

Yes, she had siblings. Two sisters much younger than she. They lived three states away now with growing families of their own. No, she had never been jealous of them. (Jealous of Flora and Dora! Those timorous creatures who jumped on chairs when they saw a mouse, and echoed their husbands' opinions!)

She had had the usual juvenile diseases.

She told Doctor Temple she did not suffer from headaches. She had no allergies. She was not often afflicted with respiratory infections. Her family tree revealed no epilepsy, night blindness, eczema or melancholy.

"What about your emotional life?" he asked.

"I beg your pardon?" said Miss Dove.

The doctor blushed. "Well—love, you know. And feelings of frustration. Inadequacy."

"I have never felt inadequate."

"The question was routine," he assured her. "Suppose we call your emotional life satisfactory?"

"That will be correct," said Miss Dove.

"Thank you, Miss Dove," he said. "Doctor Baker will be in later, of course. And if there's anything I can do ——" He hesitated. He smiled in an engaging, unprofessional way. "You and I are really old friends. In a manner of speaking, I've known you all my life."

"You have known me?" Miss Dove said. She scanned his face. It was vaguely familiar, but only vaguely.

"I'm Adams Temple," he told her. "My mother was a Liberty Hill girl."

"Angela Adams, of course," said Miss Dove. He had the same brown eyes, myopic and speculative, and the same conformation of the forehead—bulging over each eyebrow as if small, stubby horns were about to sprout through the bone. He had the same enfant terrible expression. "I should have known."

"Well, it's been a long time. Mother's family moved to Kansas when she was fourteen. But she remembers you."

"I remember her," Miss Dove said without marked enthusiasm. "She had an inquiring mind."

Angela Adams had been one of Miss Dove's first pupils and one who had taught her, indirectly, valuable lessons in the technique of classroom management. Her name being what it was, she had sat on the front seat of the first row. In the show-offy way in which most children enjoy turning cart wheels or flexing their biceps, Angela had enjoyed mental gymnastics. "Why" and "how" were her favorite words, and when Angela uttered them she was apt to look smug as if she thought, "This time I'll trip the teacher!"

Once, had she had the humility to leave well enough alone, she might have done just that.

MISS DOVE had been reading aloud from a book on the dietary habits of undomesticated animals. "Bears like honey," she read. "They are also fond of red ants which have a flavor similar to that of pickles."

Angela had waved her hand. "How does he know, Miss Dove?" she had demanded. "How does the author know what ants taste like?"

The thirty-nine other children in the room had fixed their trusting eyes upon Miss Dove, waiting for her answer. Then Angela, herself, saved the day. Brash with the imminence of victory, she had pushed her advantage too far.

"Did he eat an ant to see?" she had asked sarcastically. "Or did a bear tell him?"

The class had giggled. Ordinarily Miss Dove frowned upon laughter, but this time it fell like music on her ear. She directed upon Angela her steady, solemn, scrutinizing gaze.

The child blushed. She folded her hands.

"Never pretend to be silly, Angela," Miss Dove said at last. She waited until a hush settled upon the room. Then she continued to read from the book: "'The giraffe is a vegetarian. His long neck enables him to nibble the leaves of trees.'"

"She used to tell us stories about you," Doctor Temple said. "Mother said, too, that my Latin teacher in high school was like you. She kept us on our toes. Right now I could conjugate any verb, regular or cared to give me."

Miss Dove did not care to giv "I am honored by the comparis

"Of course she was more na than you," he went on.

And by what rule, pray, have the breadth of my mind? Miss D lently.

"It came from a surfeit of dea guess. Do you know what she sa I left for college?"

"No," said Miss Dove.

Doctor Temple grinned remin said, 'Good-by, Adams. Don't ideas!'"

Miss Dove saw nothing funn teacher's advice. She thought i cogent and particularly sound Angela. "And did you?" she as

DOCTOR TEMPLE laughed. "Ver mitted. "You know, there aren't

With a nod he was gone. A upon Miss Dove that for all his had told her nothing of her p tion. She said as much to her nu

"He's not in charge," said "You're Doctor Baker's private

"Then what is it"—Miss Do her mouth went dry—"what Baker suspects?"

Billie Jean shook her head. you what you need to know."

"I see no occasion for myste Dove.

"Don't try to see," said Billie do the thinking!"

Let us do the thinking! Us! B Vay, whose expression when she little boy had been that of a g veying the cherry on top of a but dae; Thomas Baker, the erstwh ear wiggler; and the complacen of Angela Adams! Oh, no. Miss thinking. It was the habit of a teacher's burden accepted long sloughed off for an instant! In room she drew the conclusio them out to her pupils who whole, without analysis, and wr between even margins in their

But this was not the geograp

Thomas did not appear unti By that time Billie Jean had be the night nurse, a dour, middl who was not a native of Liberty been trained (as she made k ately) to be a ward supervisor. was resting between positions Miss Dove's case as a favor t tendent of the hospital.

"I am interested in the theor she said.

"I see," said Miss Dove with to be impressed. The mental new nurse was probably greate Billie Jean, she reflected, but h was less and she lacked the hu the sign of true vocation.

Thomas breezed into the r dressed all in green. Green trou sleeved blouse and a green, tur his head. Miss Dove was startle wondered, been acting in a p brate the arrival of spring?

"This is the latest fashion room wear," said Thomas. "I eyes. Did you think I'd forgott

"No," said Miss Dove. She herself forgotten.

"I've been busy since I left said. "Just dull, run-of-the-m consumes time. First the K course ——"

"Lester eats imprudently ar said Miss Dove.

"He's hungry already," "We'll have him up tomorrow." Dove's hand a perfunctory dropped by to see that you w treated."

But Miss Dove did not inten cape so easily. "I should like to tions concerning my own state said.

"Why, certainly," Thomas the transparent disguise of ca

...e to recognize. "But I'm not sure ...them. Doctor Temple —— Did ...y the way, that he's Angela ...'

...ss Dove said indifferently, re...ecoy.

...r T...ple's findings had all been nega... told her, which was good. Her ...res...re—systolic and diastolic—was ...efr...ion of the eyes normal. Heart ...ut...paired. No palpable abdominal ...

...is ...our guess?" asked Miss Dove.

...'t ...ess," said Thomas. "Tomorrow ...d...exhaustive tests. By Friday I ...e ...e to speak with some degree of ...on. ...ntil then ——" He moved away. ...oo...he paused and his tone, though ...arr...d an undertone of command. "I ...pe... you, Miss Dove, to assume ...e ...docility."

...d...or," said ...ve...he closed ...s ...d surren... ...th...nevitable.

...eat...r changed ...ght...lext day— ...y-...vas raw ...t. ...t Cedar ...ch...the chil... ...e ...tless. Mr. ...all...a special ...

...'re...ll sorry to ...he...id, stand... ...th...podium, ...ov...is in the ...Bu...we're go... ...c...with our ...y...ork. Our ...ack...has been ...n...rimmage, ...goi...to sub for ...an...o call the ...ays...he would ...I...n't know ...ays...s well as ...S...whenever ...de...want you ...e. ...K.?" ...i...audience ...d. ...w...e all in ...ch...g togeth... ...

..." ...eral boys ...he...ands and ...im...inary fast ...

...in...gruously ...in...e geogra... ...n, ...l...found the ...as...d as their ...

...gh...orty-five ...gr...e filed in. ...ey...ough a bachelor, was a family ...ea...The first-graders were his pets. ...to...e them lollipops, to join in their ...re...ss, and to feel they loved him. ...y, ...en they greeted him, their faces ...o...ry smiles. Today they kept their ...an...orced him to keep his.

...st enter the room was a lisping, ...d...g...known to all and sundry as Sis... ...rna...y. "Good morning, Mithter ...' ...s said. ...I...ning, Sister."

...sh...her head. "Mith Dove callth ...be...she said. "And firtht you have ...me...my mannerth again becauthe I ...

...piv...cleared his throat. "Pronounce ...c...ectly," he said in a gruff voice. ...ke...ass. He twinkled at Sister. ...id...t return his twinkle. "Good ...lv...ss-ter S-spivey," she said.

...he...nainder of the class—excusing a ...of...s when he called Raymond ...'a...Susan "Peaches"—he did mod... ...ell...

...— Raymond—raised his hand. ...tul...ons," he said. ...ik...," said Mr. Spivey. ...re...elcome," said Raymond. He ...is...ds upon his desk.

The others did likewise. They all sat there, perfectly silent, with their hands—as Mr. Spivey told Miss Ellwood later—closed together like the wings of sitting ducks, and their wide eyes fixed on him.

"What do I do now, Raymond?" he said at last.

"You say 'Attention, please. The lesson will begin,' " said Raymond.

Step by step, grade by grade, Mr. Spivey was helped through the day.

ACTING on the principle that requires a captain to be the last man to leave a ship, Mr. Spivey made it his rule to remain in the building for a full hour after school was dismissed. Today he was surprised that the music teacher, Miss Ellwood, had stayed too. He met her in the hall. She wore a red rain cape of transparent plastic. Its hood cast a glow upon her complexion. Attached to the zippers on her boots were tiny silver bells that tinkled.

"Some third-grade moppets were making a dish garden for Miss Dove," she explained. "I stayed to help them. You know what store she sets on neatness."

"That was awfully nice of you," said Mr. Spivey.

"She taught me," said Lorraine. Her blue eyes were filmed with moisture. "Back in the dark ages."

Mr. Spivey understood that her reference to the far past of her childhood was intended to elicit from him a gallant contradiction. But à deux with a woman, he was a bashful man.

"I took her classes and I feel I've been through a wringer," he said.

"I'll bet you do!" cried Lorraine. With a dainty handkerchief that smelled of lily of the valley she dabbed her eye. "She was a fabulous teacher! I mean she is!"

The spectacle of this gentle creature—all tenderness and femininity—weeping for an old tartar was infinitely touching to Mr. Spivey. "You're right to say 'is,' " he said. "We must be positive and optimistic. I know Tom Baker is gravely concerned, but—'No game is ever over 'til the final whistle blows!' "

"Life can be so sad," said Lorraine. "There she was reviewing the fourth grade for the proficiency tests! And with no warning ——"

"I still don't approve of her didactic methods," said Mr. Spivey. "I believe in being pals with children. In classroom democracy."

"Oh, so do I!" said Lorraine.

"I don't approve of them," he went on musingly, "but I'll have to admit, they work! I figure it this way: Miss Dove is sincere. And kids are fair. You can't fool 'em. When they see somebody doing a good, sincere job, they know it. And they play ball!"

"It's so big of you to understand that."

"I strive for tolerance," said Mr. Spivey. Then he suggested that Miss Ellwood let him drive her home. On the way they might stop at the Grill and Fountain for a cup of coffee. He would like to discuss with her a paper he was writing on the problems of extracurricular activities in the elementary school.

"Oh, Mr. Spivey, that would be super!" cried Lorraine.

Thomas Baker once again brought Jincey her breakfast. He tried to maintain his usual bantering manner, but his humor was forced and distrait.

EMILY AND GOD

By JESSAMYN WEST

Emily wanted a voice of thunder
When she was young:
She with her words of wonder
Like bells rung.

Emily wanted to make God hear Whatever she said.
Emily spoke out loud and clear
To Him overhead.

"Emily," God said, "Emily, my dear,
Quiet words
Are almost the only ones I can hear."
So bees and birds

Emily sang, and clover and the sea.
Papa above,
Emily told, of Earth's infinity.
And of her love.

When Papa above heard Emily's words,
Quiet and spare,
"Emily," He said, "I've never heard Better songs anywhere."

Made for each other—sliced luncheon meat —and French's! For a delicious sandwich spread, chop 1 can luncheon meat, add 2 tbs. chopped sweet pickle and 3 tbs. French's Mustard. Makes 6-8 sandwiches.

A taste tempter for your lunchbox

FRENCH'S MUSTARD
does something wonderful for Sandwiches!

- French's pure yellow Mustard blends better because it's creamier . . . smoother.
- French's rich mustard goodness does not fade out in cooking.
- Get a jar tomorrow and see what a wonderful flavor difference French's makes!

FREE! NEW RECIPE LEAFLET "10 Ways To Tastier Sandwiches!"

The R. T. French Co.
1990 Mustard St., Rochester 9, N. Y.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

there's nothing like real Coffee

ten-cup model shown—$29.50

and nothing like a

UNIVERSAL Coffeematic

Only real coffee gives you that fragrant, full-bodied aroma that makes you impatient for the first sip. And you don't have to wait with a Universal Coffeematic—it makes ten full cups faster than you can boil an equal amount of water! Makes it to the strength you choose, signals when ready, and keeps your coffee at serving temperature 'til you're ready. It's completely automatic. Enjoy real coffee from a Coffeematic. $24.50

Coffeematic prices from

UNIVERSAL

LANDERS, FRARY & CLARK, NEW BRITAIN, CONN.

"Are you worried about me or Miss Dove?" asked Jincey.

"Both," said Thomas. "But I have to stop worrying about you." He took her hand in his. "I have to shut you right out of my mind."

"Can you?"

"Yes." He gave her a level look. "I am Miss Dove's doctor."

Jincey wanted to cry. She was not in the least alarmed about herself. She was, in fact, one of those fortunate women in whom pregnancy induces a euphoric illusion of immunity to mischance. But she had counted on having her husband with her during labor much as she might have counted on having him at a dinner party.

"Well," she said, "I have a doctor too. Sam Tillet will probably be relieved not to have you messing round."

"I'll speak to Sam," said Thomas.

"I'll speak to him myself," said Jincey. "In my interesting condition I'm still capable of using a telephone! Look, Tommy. Seriously, this is what I'll do. I'll move over to your mother's house today. Tomorrow, if I'm still navigating, I'll enter the hospital for the duration."

"That's a very smart idea," Thomas said, beaming upon his wife. She was ten years younger than he. He had married her for love—lighthearted love evoked by such charms as her coloring, the music in her laughter, and the exquisite balance of her flesh and bone—so that her gift for rationality, which he'd discovered after marriage, he thought of as a bonus he'd had no right to expect.

"I never was as stupid as I looked," said Jincey. She tossed her head. Loose tendrils of her tumbled hair glittered like delicate copper wires in the lamplight.

"Your hair's a halo," said Thomas.

"Miss Dove never thought so. She thought it made me vain and diverted little boys from their lessons—and she was darned right! Once, I remember, she took it in her hand and pulled it back and tied it with a little old piece of grocery string!" She crossed her arms as if to warm the recollection against her breast. "Only yesterday, Tommy," she murmured staring at the rain-blurred window glass. "That sweet, funny hat!"

The Thursday Bridge Club was as select and small as a bridge club could be. It was composed of four young matrons who took cards seriously. But today, at Mrs. Reese's house, the play was erratic.

"If you hadn't finessed the te made our contract," Mrs. Reese to her partner, Mrs. Knight. "Th good."

"I can't keep my mind on the Knight said. "I've been thougl Lester Junior's narrow squeak an paralyzed!"

"Is that what it is? Paralysis?"

"She can't move her leg. A rose
name ——"

"Tommy hasn't arrived at a dia
Mrs. Briggs, who, as Jincey Ba presumed to a knowledgeable air.

"What does he think?"

"Tommy's a clam," Mrs. Brigg he's deeply concerned. He tol morning that she'd have to manag baby with no help from him!"

"The poor child! If there's e woman needs her husband ——" sighed sentimentally.

"Jince has plenty of spunk," said. "She knows her duty as a do

"Besides, Sam Tillet is an excel cian," said Mrs. Reese.

"I saw her yesterday," Mrs.
trying to sound modest. "Miss Do

"How did she look?"

"Like herself," Mrs. Knig
"Only—well, different in a way plain. Gentler. Like an old lion w pulled."

"It breaks my heart to think o Miss Dove being gentle!" Mrs claimed.

"We saw her on her way to th said Mrs. Evans. "Tom and Sand ing her. Wes knew something seri pened. He acted like he'd seen a Evans said. Not being a born Lit she thought her husband's reac more important than the teach
"He'd been under the weather, you

Her companions nodded. They served Mr. Evans' antics at a rec club dance.

"—— and he was about to tak pick-me-up. But he didn't. He s egg instead."

"Maybe that will prove the turn his life," said Mrs. Reese. Her lost upon Mrs. Evans.

"I have faith that it will," de Evans, in whom faith died hard.

CONTINUED ON PAGE

"Just be patient, dear. He'll be taking us out to dinner pretty soon now."

ıorglass makes your dream-table come true!

ow you can enjoy the crystal brilliance of umous Sandwich-glass design tableware!

16 PIECE SET
ABOUT $2.29

24 PIECE SET
ABOUT $3.29

IMAGINE, owning a thrilling set of tableware...in the very replica of famous Sandwich glass... the kind you find in Museums and heirloom collections!

• Imagine possessing all this beauty, this very day! No waiting years to "save up". No need to buy a piece at a time. Anchorglass brings you whole sets of this magnificent glass tableware at amazingly low prices!

• And what a fabulous, impressive gift any of these complete sets will make. Each ready for your ribbon or card. Just choose the set you want from the Anchorglass display at your favorite store where glassware is sold—and they'll give it to you in a fresh gift carton.

▪ If your dealer does not yet have this new tableware in stock, he can get it for you by writing Anchor Hocking Glass Corporation.

ıncheon Set smartly packed in gift carton... about $3.29

ER PLATES • FOUR 7″ SALAD PLATES ▪ FOUR CUPS ▪ FOUR SAUCERS • FOUR 9½ OZ. FOOTED TUMBLERS
OOTED SHERBETS

ıcheon Set, FOUR EACH—CUPS, SAUCERS, DINNER PLATES, FOOTED TUMBLERS, ABOUT $2.29

6-Piece Table Set smartly packed in gift carton... about $1.19

SUGAR BOWL & COVER • CREAMER ▪ BUTTER OR PRESERVE DISH & COVER • OVAL RELISH DISH

9-Piece Water Set smartly packed in gift carton... about $1.49

ONE 2 QT. ICE-LIP PITCHER • EIGHT 9 OUNCE TUMBLERS

OTHER GIFT-PACKED SETS:

8 Dessert Dishes... about 79¢
9½″ Cookie Jar and Cover... about 79¢
3 Service Bowls (6″, 7″, 8″)... about 89¢
Salad Bowl and Plate... about $1.19
8 Sherbet Glasses... about $1.19
8-Piece Sherbet and Plate Set... about $1.19
8 Footed Tumblers... about $1.19

ook for the name Anchorglass

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

A PRODUCT OF ANCHOR HOCKING GLASS CORPORATION, LANCASTER, OHIO

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 136

was through forever." Her face was suffused with hope and happiness. "God moves in a mysterious way!"

This was too much for Mrs. Knight. "I don't believe for an instant that God was thinking of Wes Evans' habits," she said.

"Oh no! I didn't mean that exactly!" Mrs. Evans cried. "I'm dreadfully sorry about Miss Dove. You must all have been devoted to her."

"If we were we didn't know it," said Mrs. Reese. "She turned us to stone."

"Remember the poem Geoff wrote?"

"Remember the clean handkerchiefs and the margins?"

"The laundry soap?"

"Can anybody bound Russia?" asked Mrs. Knight.

"No. Not now," said Mrs. Reese.

The three women were drawn backward in time. They returned to a safe charted world where the air smelled of chalk, the colors were paintbox bright, the boundaries stayed the same, and all the ideas they could conceivably use were handed down to them, complete with punctuation, from a raised dais.

"I was counting on her to break Snookie of chewing her hair the way she broke me," Mrs. Briggs said. Then she began to cry. So did Mrs. Knight and Mrs. Reese. Mrs. Briggs fumbled in the pocket of her purple gabardine suit. "Damn!" she said. "I haven't got a handkerchief!"

"Take mine," said Mrs

"What would Miss D this?" Mrs. Briggs sniff age—having to borrow a

"And saying a great bi Mrs. Knight.

Mrs. Reese rose abru have to pull ourselves tog She went out to the kitc hot coffee and patty shel creamed chicken and—s was dieting—a dish of ginger in lieu of a heavy

The local Rotarians h for their weekly lunche Alexander Burnham had The shrimp cocktails had Suddenly Mr. Porter, founder and president en club and who saw no r dress the chair before floor, struck his knife aga tail bowl. He struck so blob of red sauce leaped fright, and landed upo tablecloth.

"Boys," said Mr. Por his full height, which v in spite of the stoop of considered opinion, afte observation, that a go man's heart is not in his wallet."

This remark was greet laughter.

But Mr. Porter had be witty. He beetled his b his long, gaunt old neck severely at his audience. water goblet.

"Before I proceed," voice that creaked with me propose a toast. T Miss Dove!"

The Rotarians drank. goblets down. They app on a common impulse, t in their chairs. They pla firmly upon the carpet. ened their backs. A few their hands.

In the hospital, und tests that Thomas Bak exhaustive and that w covered, certainly exha Dove did not imagine t created any stir of feeli Hill. Her joints were t small hammer. Her spi by a needle. In her bed from strange place to A machine was clasped and her brain waves rec bones in her body were Thomas was in co ance. Unless some em too complicated for handle, he promised t through all her tests.

"And Adams Temple He can handle most th "I'll be sorry to see hi

"He is not staying?"

"No. He's only temp ished med school at starts a Hopkins inter He's helping us out time. I gather his moth to get acquainted with

"His mother had mind," said Miss Dov

Thomas laughed. " you mean. Adams get himself at times." He t Jean. "And now, Mrs. cussion hammer, pleas

Thomas' attitude alt became aloof in a way Dove confidence. His w was directed upon his He was gentle. He wa did not apologize when to hurt her. Only once first spinal puncture—c wince with compassio

"A nut-rich, extra-flaky crust... so easy... so sure, with dependable Gold Medal!"

Betty Crocker
of General Mills

NUT CRUST

1⅓ cups sifted GOLD MEDAL Flour
1 tsp. salt
¼ cup chopped nuts
⅓ cup Wesson Oil
3 tbsp. cold milk

Heat oven to 475° (very hot). Mix flour, salt, finely chopped nuts. Measure oil, milk into same cup. Pour all at once into flour. Mix well. Press into ball; flatten. Roll between two 12" sq. waxed paper (to edges of paper). Dampen table top to prevent slipping. Peel off top paper. Place paper-side-up in pie pan. Peel off paper. Ease into pan. Flute. Prick well. Bake 13 to 15 min.

PUMPKIN CHIFFON

Fill with Pumpkin Chiffon (recipe in Gold Medal sack, or write Betty Crocker, General Mills, Minneapolis). Or use your favorite pumpkin pie filling recipe. Top with Reddi-wip.

• For this new STIR-N-ROLL nut crust and for everything you bake—depend on America's favorite flour. Gold Medal is the "Kitchen-tested" flour—tested in Betty Crocker's kitchens and in the kitchens of homemakers like you. Try it—enjoy "Gold Medal Success" every time.

Make it best with Pure-mild, Wesson Oil
Gold Medal
"Kitchen-tested" Flour
Real cream Reddi-wip

kers shrank from causing pain, nembered. It was a family trait. laze of her own pain she seemed boys again—Thomas, Charles, d Sterling! They all had dimpled did eyes and pink, mobile ears.) essed her thoughts Thomas gave npersonal look. And as the day eased to think of him as one of rs. She ceased to think of herself He was a doctor. She was a ill hung suspended on his. se of mingled triumph and dis- perceived all this. He had taken vith Miss Dove because he had her hand would do. He had won or ascendancy. But his victory weet.

of the examinations were far ging. Each test drew Thomas diagnosis he dreaded. But he re- odical and open to persuasion. d how to do that in laboratories rooms. He had learned it in the d learned it even earlier in the om at Cedar Grove School.

nal X rays, when he was helping ide the patient's bed back to her dent occurred to show him that as still Miss Dove.

ght, Jr., having accomplished overy of which callow youth is making full use of a wheel chair. ed from the children's ward and along the corridors, careening rs, and whooping with mirth at ch he occasioned to pedestrians.

arted for him ack when Les- ith freedom, air in his di-

Miss Dove said one was level perfectly us

ked his chai ed.

gave him a ok. "You may return to your id.

Dove," said Lester. His voice nurse with cap askew and ex- seized him, chair and all, and ay.

e smacks his jaws," said Billie Dove!" said Thomas. He bent d it not been for her eyes—the quenched the ebullience of Les- ould have kissed the pink tip of r of her room he left her.

w afternoon we'll talk," he said. want you to put all this business ind."

away before she could argue.

was banked with hothouse flow- ureau, the table and even in cor- oor they bloomed.

too many," said Miss Dove. "I white azalea. Later I can set it sheltered place. Please dispose "

s Dove," said Billie Jean. She appointed as a child.

ast be other less fortunate pa- uld enjoy them," said Miss Dove.

N brightened. The prospect of ough the wards playing Lady s to her taste. After she had com- t of her errands she sat down and fountain pen.

e cards," she said. "And I bor- stationery. If you'd like me to nk-you notes. I'd be glad to."

uld be obliging," said Miss Dove. f using Billie Jean as a social sec- velty. The notion of keeping her arm.

dictate them?"

d Miss Dove. "Use your discre- reen. Only avoid the fulsome."

was restful. The dwarf azalea bush e in color and line against the blue was no sound except for the spring rain murmuring against the window and for Billie Jean breathing hard (like a child taking a proficiency test) in the throes of literary composition.

"I've finished," Billie Jean said after a while. "I said the same thing to everybody." She handed a sheet of paper to Miss Dove. "Is it all right?"

Miss Dove perused the sample.

"Dear Mr. Porter," it read, "at the request of Miss Dove I am advising you that she is thrilled by your florial offering. The sympathy of friends brings sunshine to shut-ins. Cordially yours, Billie Jean Green, R.P.N."

MISS DOVE, being totally unendowed with humor, had no inclination to laugh. Her inclination, arising from established editorial habit, was to pick the letter to pieces—to point out its errors in tone and spelling. But something in Billie Jean's face—a look of vanity as innocent as spring flowers—deterred her.

"What does R.P.N. stand for?" she asked.

"Registered Practical Nurse," said Billie Jean. "How is the letter?"

"It is very"—Miss Dove sought a word that would carry truth without a wound—"very genteel."

The word was perfect. "Oh," said Billie Jean, "I'll tell Bill!"

"You may, Mrs. Green," Miss Dove said.

Billie Jean brought a damp cloth and washed her patient's face. She did it gently. She was a good nurse, Miss Dove reflected—more gifted in providing kindness and creature comfort than in verbal expression. She was a woman who had found her sphere.

"You know, Miss Dove," Billie Jean blurted out suddenly, "I'm not really Mrs. Green!"

Miss Dove said nothing.

"I took the name for little Ava's sake," said Billie Jean.

Miss Dove still remained silent.

"I was way out there in Detroit!" Billie Jean continued. Her tone was pleading.

"Virtue knows no geography," said Miss Dove.

"I was on the night shift," said Billie Jean. "It got me all mixed up. I'd never been anywhere before. Mamma was always careful with me—she never let me go on high-school hay rides or anywhere much except church socials. I wasn't very mature!"

"No," agreed Miss Dove.

"All the fellows wanted to take me out. I guess it went to my head. There was this one fellow—I didn't know he was married—that was wonderful to me. I—I gave him too much. In other words ——"

"You need not elaborate," said Miss Dove.

"He was so good-looking and big," said Billie Jean. "And I was so homesick. You know how it is!"

"I do not know how it is," said Miss Dove. "But I know that right is right and wrong is wrong."

"That's what Bill says. Those very words," said Billie Jean. "So little Ava came way out in Detroit." (She seemed to imply that the infant had been clever to manage to be born in that outlandish place.) "I could have left her for adoption. But—well, she was mine. And how did I know other folks would raise her right?"

"A child is a responsibility," said Miss Dove.

"So I brought her home and told that tale about my husband being killed. Mamma said she'd keep Ava while I worked. I talked to Reverend Burnham and Doctor Hurley. They got me into the practical-nursing course. So here I am!"

Miss Dove sighed. She was not astonished. She knew that in the great world, both in and out of literature, such things happened. And after half a Biblical lifetime in a public school she was immunized to astonishment Her sigh was for William Holloway.

"And why," she said, "did you confide in me, Mrs.—Miss ——"

"Billie Jean," the nurse said. "It was because you said that about the letter. I couldn't deceive you."

"Deceit is a tangled web," said Miss Dove.

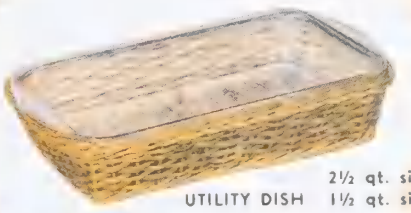
There is no good in arguing with the inevitable. The only argument available with an east wind is to put on your overcoat.
—JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL

"I had to tell Bill, too," Billie Jean said. "He's like you. A person you tell the truth to."

"Ah!" said Miss Dove.

"He was cut up," Billie Jean said. "He was furious. He didn't date me for a week. And then he said he'd marry me anyhow, but if he ever caught me doing anything unrespectable—even looking fresh at a fellow or smoking in public—he'd"—she paused dramatically—"he'd take his belt to me!"

Somehow Miss Dove felt sanguine as to William's domestic future. He was one of those elect who had the gift of authority and the nerve to use it. And Billie Jean was born to love a master.



As she fed Miss Dove her evening meal (asparagus soup and apricot whip) the nurse was silent. She was brooding, no doubt, upon Patrolman Holloway's strong right arm. At last she said, "I guess I'm one of those that have to learn the hard way."

"We all are, Billie Jean," said Miss Dove.

When the night nurse arrived she went about her duties more efficiently than she had. She maintained her air of being above the station in which she found herself, but her hands were gentler. Miss Dove noticed the differ-

CONTINUED ON PAGE 141

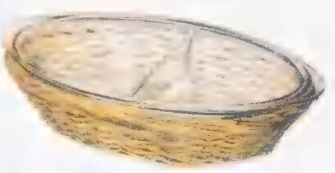
Exciting News!

2½ qt. size $2.59
UTILITY DISH 1½ qt. size $2.39

Glasbake BASKETWARE

2 qt. size $2.59
1½ qt. size $2.39
ROUND CASSEROLE

GUARANTEED... not for months, not for years but FOR LIFE

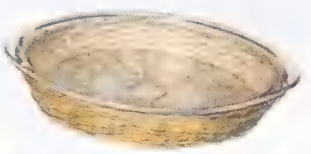


OVAL CASSEROLE 1 qt. size $2.29

IT'S TRUE! Glasbake Basketware . . . like all Glasbake products . . . is now guaranteed for life. If glass parts break at any time due to oven heat, Glasbake will replace them promptly free of charge. No other glass ovenware offers you a guarantee like it!

DEEP PIE DISH SET
Two 16 oz. dishes $2.49

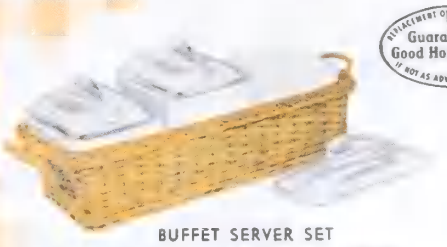
GLASBAKE BASKETWARE IS wonderful for baking and serving. Adds a festive touch to every meal you prepare. You bake in smartly-styled Glasbake ovenware . . . whisk dishes to table in charming imported baskets.



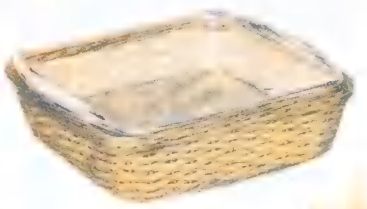
PARTITIONED DISH
1 pt. each side $2.59

SEE THEM ON DISPLAY at your favorite department, hardware or variety store. 11 lovely Basketware dishes from which to choose. All beautifully gift-packaged.

heat resistant Glasbake®



Designed for baking . . . Styled for serving

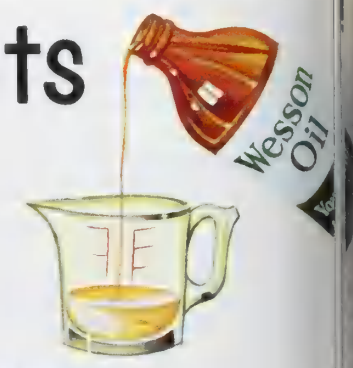


PIE PLATE 10½" diameter $1.99

McKEE DIVISION, Thatcher Glass Mfg., Co., Inc., Elmira, N.Y.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

BUFFET SERVER SET
Three 1½ qt. covered casseroles $7.95



CAKE DISH 9" square $2.59

FISH DISH
2 qt. size $3.95

Quicker way to start party treats —pour delicate Wesson Oil...

The New Luxury Chiffon Layer Cake
---with only 2 eggs

THIS IS "LOVELIGHT"— glamorous new 2-egg Chiffon layer cake. You make it with Wesson Oil—the shortening you pour to measure and never have to cream! Just 2 minutes batter beating with light, delicate Wesson Oil. It's the only shortening that gives you the airy Chiffon texture and delicate Chiffon flavor of a true LoveLight cake.

WESSON POPS CORN FLUFFIER. Even youngsters make extra fluffy, tender popcorn with Wesson Oil. No digging out solid shortening. Wesson pours to measure. Heat 3 tablespoons light, sparkling Wesson Oil in heavy skillet. Add ½ cup popcorn. Cover and shake. When popping starts, reduce heat; shake until done. Salt to taste. Delicate Wesson Oil coats each kernel lightly, distributes the heat evenly, so every kernel pops fluffy, crisp and delicious.

"LOVELIGHT" CHOCOLATE CHIFFO

Developed by Betty Crocker of General Mills

2 eggs, separated	¾ teaspoon salt
1½ cups sugar	⅓ cup Wesson Oil
1¾ cups sifted Softasilk Cake Flour	 1 cup buttermilk
¾ teaspoon soda	2 squares unsweetene chocolate, (2 oz.),

Sweet milk may be substituted for buttermilk in this recipe.*

Heat oven to 350° (moderate). Grease generously a with flour 2 round layer pans, 8″ by at least 1½″ d 1 oblong pan, 13″ x 9″ x 2″. Beat egg whites until Gradually beat in ½ cup of the sugar. Continue until very stiff and glossy.

In another bowl, sift remaining sugar, Softasilk Cake soda, salt. Add Wesson Oil, half of buttermilk 1 minute, medium speed on mixer, or 150 vigorous by hand. Scrape sides and bottom of bowl constantl remaining buttermilk, egg yolks, chocolate. Beat 1 more, scraping bowl constantly. Fold in meringue into prepared pans. Bake layers 30 to 35 minutes; 40 to 45 minutes. Cool. Split each layer into two Spread Chocolate Fluff between layers and over cake in refrigerator until used. Cut oblong cake in squar spoon Chocolate Fluff over each square for serving.

CHOCOLATE FLUFF: Mix together in chilled bowl heavy cream, 1 cup sifted confectioners' sugar, ½ cup dash of salt. Beat until stiff enough to hold a Refrigerate until used.

Table of adjustments for high altitudes: 3,500 to 4,500 ft. use spoon soda; 4,500 feet and over, use ¼ teaspoon soda. Increa temperature 25°. Bake layers 25 to 30 minutes; oblong, 35 to 40

AMERICA'S FAVORITE
for Salads, Frying, Stir-N-Roll Pie Crust
and Biscuits

Wesson Oil

SEE "HAWKINS FALLS"—NBC TELEVISION NETWORK MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY

UED FROM PAGE 139

ed its cause. The woman sus-t her patient was more than . Miss Dove was no longer a hoolteacher with a backache.
flame of fear leaped in her stant it burned steady, throw-to the amorphous shadows of Miss Dove refused to look pointed. Thomas Baker had put the whole business out of she had exacted obedience hat roles were reversed, she to exact it of her.
ough the night, and if she er dreams were of that child-ential kind—scarcely more a lullaby—that dissolve with iousness. She awoke to hear g the night nurse good-by and ain had stopped. Beyond her y was opalescent gray—the self.
passed quietly. Miss Dove d breakfast. The intern made stopped in, wearing a ruffled oking remarkably like a little aying at pregnancy with a pil-r her waistband. She had been hospital, Jincey said, more for of mind than anything. She past term. If nothing definite y Saturday night, Sam Tillet give Nature a nudge.

octor Tillet suggests will be n said primly.
said Jincey. "Right now he keep walking. I peeped in to o wish me luck."
a," said Miss Dove.
had left to continue her prom-an said, "I used to think she est, dumbest brat in Liberty really a good kid. She hasn't hardly seen her husband for days, and not a cheep out of her!"

"A physician cannot call his time his own," said Miss Dove.

"Nor an officer of the law either," Billie Jean added smugly. "It's like the old folks say. 'Men must work and women must weep.'"

"I consider that an effete philosophy," said Miss Dove.

"Oh, so do I!" agreed Billie Jean, who had no inkling of the meaning of "effete."

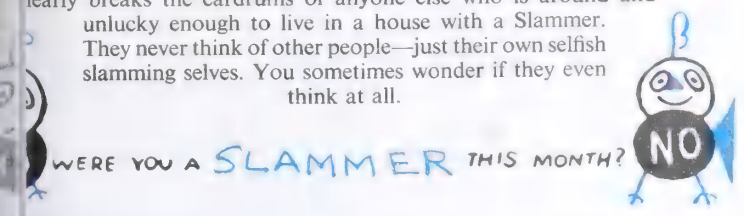
More blossoms arrived. There were two mixed bouquets from the florist (Miss Dove disposed of them) and the dish garden that the pupils of the third grade had made under Miss Ellwood's supervision. The dish was a biscuit pan filled with moss and bordered with ferns and hepaticas. In the moss was stuck a seedling cedar and nearby, in the exact center of the pan, sat a rectangular building made of red cardboard upon which the pattern of bricks had been marked in white ink.

"It's Cedar Grove!" said Billie Jean. "Oh, isn't it sweet!"

"Yes," said Miss Dove. As she examined the arrangement of the garden she saw something sweeter still. She saw a group of children absorbed in a task and aiming at perfection. She was aware of a constriction in her throat. "The ink work is laudably neat," she said. "You may place it on the window sill."

Just before noon there was a message from the hospital receptionist. Two out-of-town visitors wished to see Miss Dove. One had telephoned to ask permission. The other was waiting in the lobby.

"Who are they?" Miss Dove asked Billie Jean.

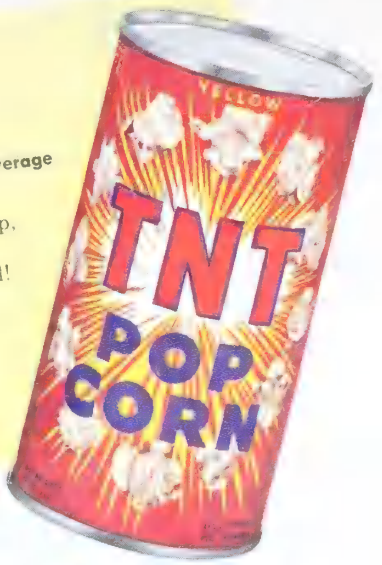


"Well, they're not birds of a feather as the old folks say," said Billie Jean. "One is Mr. Lyons, the writer from New York. The other is Fred Makepeace." She looked haughty. "I suppose you know where he resides!"

"I do know," said Miss Dove. Fred was an inmate of a prison camp. "I shall be glad to see them both. They are my former pupils."

By MUNRO LEAF

IF there is one person that a quiet, peaceful and happy household can't have around, it is a Slammer. Slammers never shut a door the way a civilized human being would. They give it a shove that almost breaks it off its hinges and slam it with a blast of noise that nearly breaks the eardrums of anyone else who is around and unlucky enough to live in a house with a Slammer. They never think of other people—just their own selfish slamming selves. You sometimes wonder if they even think at all.



Old Time "Popper Party"

1 can TNT White Hulless or Hybrid Yellow popcorn
1/2 cup Vegetable Oil
1/4 cup Melted Butter
Salt to taste
Your Favorite Beverage

This is lively popcorn, this TNT. Just heat it up, and there's a barrage of hot, buttery goodness... the likes of which you've never tasted! Notice those puffs--how big 'n fluffy--and fully popped. Isn't this the kind of "rare old fun" you should be enjoying tonight? Why not? It's as easy as reaching for the TNT Popcorn. Tender. Nutritious. Tasty.

9 quarts from only one can.

TNT FOOD PRODUCTS, INC., LAWRENCE, KANSAS

Adolph's

makes all meat more tender

To insure for tenderness and flavor use Adolph's whenever you prepare meat.

Available Seasoned (yellow label) or Non-Seasoned (red label) at grocers everywhere in U.S. and Canada.

Adolph's — the Meat Tenderizer reported in Reader's Digest

©Adolph's Ltd., Los Angeles 46, Calif.

Here it is!

THE PERFECT CAN OPENER

OUTMODES ALL OTHERS

THE Edlund FLAT-to-WALL

The only can opener with all 6 most wanted features—

- Flat-to-wall at all times. Can't wobble.
- Safe! No jagged edges and cut fingers.
- Bulldog grip! Never slips, even with oversize cans.
- Quick, easy, one-handle operation.
- Magnet lid-catcher built in.
- Rugged! Guaranteed unconditionally for 5 years.

GRANTED THE CAN MANUFACTURERS' INSTITUTE SEAL OF APPROVAL

At better Hardware and Dept. Stores!

Look for these other EDLUND Modern Kitchen Tools: Jar and Bottle Openers, Cap Removers and Egg Beaters!

Edlund COMPANY, INC.
BURLINGTON, VERMONT

Herb-Ox

Low in calories! High in protein! Rich in flavor!

Send for the Money-Saver Booklet!
Discover how America's Largest Selling Bouillon Cubes add flavor to 28 low-cost menus and recipes.

THE PURE FOOD COMPANY, Inc., Mamaroneck, N. Y.
Also manufacturers of WESTCHESTER CHICKEN PRODUCTS

MARSHMALLOW fluff

For PARTY SANDWICHES

Mix FLUFF with cheese and ginger, nuts, pineapple, peanut butter or marmalade as fillers for new, exciting sandwich treats. Spread FLUFF, too, on graham crackers and brown in oven. Write for FREE "Yummy Book," illus. in color, Durkee-Mower, Inc., Dept. L 11, Lynn, Mass.

JOLLY TIME THE BEST POP CORN YOU EVER ATE!

"Mr. Makepeace," said Billie Jean, with a flounce of her head, "was sure of his welcome. He's already come. If you don't mind, I'll wait outside." She walked stiffly away. Obviously, as the fiancée of a policeman, she intended to preserve herself from association with felons.

Fred Makepeace entered the room. He was a lean, sandy-haired man in the middle thirties. He was dressed in blue serge. A snow-white handkerchief protruded from his breast pocket. His shoes were polished to a luster. The hand he extended in greeting was scrupulously clean.

Miss Dove gave him three fingers, like a duchess. "How d' y' do, Fred," she said. (She would have preferred to call him "Frederick," but he had not been christened so.) "You may be seated."

Fred sat on the edge of a chair. He placed his hat—a dark gray Homburg—upon his knees and folded his hands upon its crown.

Having nothing to say, Miss Dove waited for him to speak. She studied his face. She found it remarkably unchanged. It was a smooth face, neither good nor bad. There was no malice in it and very little character. The eyes, blue and cloudless as a child's, were set too wide apart.

FRED was, she knew, serving a sentence for forgery and the theft of an automobile, and so must be counted among her failures. But she did not blame herself. Rational humility had always told her that the ultimate success of a teacher depended, in some measure, upon the material with which she worked. In the last analysis one could not go behind the hand of Providence.

And yet, in Fred's case, it was possible that neither she nor Providence had failed. Fred was a follower. When rules were made clear to him he obeyed them. It was only when he made independent choices—which an unrealistic society now forced him to make—that he invariably chose wrong. Miss Dove remembered how neat his margins had been. She remembered also the offerings of fruit that he'd brought her each Friday—polished apples and tangerines and heavy bunches of Malaga grapes—until she'd discovered that he stole them from a grocer.

"I'm not A.W.O.L.," said Fred.

"I am gratified to hear that," said Miss Dove.

"When I seen in the paper you was sick I went to my gang boss. 'Boss,' I says, 'the only teacher that ever learned me anything is in the hospital. I want a day off to go tell her I'm preparing to reform my ways.'"

"And he gave you leave?"

"Yes, ma'am. He says, 'Why sure, Fred. I know I can trust you.'"

"A compliment to value," said Miss Dove.

There was a tentative-sounding knock at the door and Geoffrey Lyons came in. In contrast to Fred's sober formality, his attire was loud and untidy. He wore brown flannels, a tweed jacket, a yellow shirt and a Tattersall waistcoat. His shoes were rusty.

"Miss Dove," he said, "I'm Geoffrey Lyons."

"I knew you, Geoffrey," said Miss Dove.

Fred jumped up. He grinned. "Recall the face, Geoff?" he asked.

Geoffrey whistled. "Old Babe Makepeace! The best slugger Cedar Grove ever had!"

"I hear tell you're doin' pretty good in show business," said Fred.

"Fred," said Geoffrey, "I'm on my way to Hollywood now. It's a rat race. What are you doing these days, Babe?"

Fred widened his blue eyes as if in mild surprise that anyone should be in ignorance of his situation. "Me?" he said. "I'm on the road." His tone was so unabashed that Geoffrey missed the import of his words.

"On the road? Acting or selling?"

Fred laughed. "Mostly diggin' with a pickax."

Miss Dove deplored levity. "Fred Makepeace is paying his debt to society," she said.

Geoffrey smiled at Fred and at Miss Dove. "That's a debt few of us ever pay."

"Exactly," said Miss Dove. She was thinking, Geoffrey guessed, of his last play, which had dealt in a frivolous way with a certain form of misbehavior.

"I got in a jam Christmas a year ago," Fred explained, "and had to pass a coupla checks

New Miracle Jelly. CUTS OVEN GREASE Like

JUST SPREAD ON EASY-OFF . . . WIPE GREASE OFF . . . OVEN SHINES!

No scraping! No steel wool! No razor blades! No ammonia! Even hard-crusted, baked-on grease wipes right off, leaves oven, burners, racks, grills, walls sparkling clean! Try new Easy-Off! In 8 oz. and 16 oz. jars.

LOOK FOR FREE BRUSH ATTACHED

EASY-OFF OVEN C

RITZ

There's a Ritz Cloth for every household cleaning purpose

On sale at leading hardware and departm

CLOTH

JOHN RITZENTHALER, 73 FRANKLIN S

CORN POP

EARN your own 3 quart family size c Popping kettle and hot plate bas gauge spun aluminum. Both cord and approved. This wonderful set can be yo three 2-year Ladies' Home Journal subs $6.00 each, or two 2-year Saturday Even scriptions at $10.00 each, or four 1-y subscriptions at $5.00 each.

All subscriptions must be sold outsid home at the full advertised prices. Both newals count, but not your personal or p subscriptions.

Write subscribers' names and address paper and mail with your own name and full remittance. Offer good in Continenta until February 28, 1955. Sorry, no corn may be sold for cash.

CURTIS CIRCULATION CO
711 Independence Square, Phila.

FALSE TEE

KLUTCH holds them

KLUTCH forms a comfort cushion; holds so much firmer and snugger that one can with greater comfort and security; in many as well as with natural teeth. Klutch constant fear of a dropping, rocking, chatt and 60c at druggists. . . . If your drugg don't waste money on substitutes, but and we will mail you a generous trial box.

KLUTCH CO., Box 5421K, ELMI

DO IT YOURS

BIG NEW CATALOG 10¢

Make your own costume realistic flowers, useful & de gifts OUR catalog illustrates make projects, all necessary m Send 10c for your copy NOW

3217 6th ST SOUTH SHELART STUDIOS ST

…y's name on 'em. Then I bor-
…rom a parking lot and hap-
…t."
…l Geoffrey.
…ulda let me off with a fine and …ntence," Fred said. "But I
…ere to look for the money and …robation. So I decided to pull
…it over with. I'm doin' twenty-
…the roads."
…roled for the day on his own
…aid Miss Dove.
…aid Geoffrey.
…eared. She was careful to look
…y. "Your time is up, gentle-
…you little Billie Jean McVay?"

…reen," Billie Jean said, with-
…is direction.
…me!" said Fred.
…ospital in the soft spring air
…tted together.
…ll see a lot of cheesecake in
…ed said wistfully.
…ect me," Geoffrey said. "I've
…six kids in Upper Montclair."
…ay!" said Fred. "I had a wife,
…ed without the ring of pleas-
…feller
…way!"
…ell, I'd
…n'. I'm
…camp
…st me
…ave no
…old the
…ted to
…r he'd
…horse
…down
…tarted

…u get
…thes?"
…'em
…ome,"
…ll." A
…d won-
…e the
…of a
…s face.
…e how
…?" he
…ove, I

…dded.
…ne bed
…er than
…oird—one of them robins on the
…ed to think she was Goliath."
…aid Geoffrey. He took out a …es. "Smoke?"
…e two?" Fred asked. "One for

…ck," said Geoffrey.
…red said. "Remember how we
…n the boys' basement at Cedar
… were the days, Geoff. We'll
… good again!"
…," said Geoffrey. "When you—
…g you, get in touch with me. I … put you onto something."
… thing," Fred said. "So long,
…egards to Marilyn Monroe."
…ched his old schoolmate walk
… how Fred hunched one shoul-
…ard off a chilly wind. He felt
…him that mysterious mood of
…ch is the courted darling of ev-
…knew, in his bones, how Fred
…had moved him to risk extra
…al servitude for a brief visit to
…od. He even understood him-
…t. Why had he wanted Miss
… when his first play appeared on
…timentality? Publicity? Ah, it
… than that!

…ally seeing it—but feeling it,
…he misty, low, tree-blurred sky
…Hill. In his mind a play had be-
…pe. It was the play he had al-
…write—a play woven of home-
…notions like love and nostalgia
…d fortitude. It was unlike the …ittering things that had brought
…was as simple as a Chekhov.

Geoffrey tossed his cigarette into the gutter. He returned to his brother's house, went up to his room, locked the door, and put a sheet of paper on the roller of his portable typewriter. He started writing.

At four-thirty or thereabouts, Billie Jean began tidying the room. She whisked about rearranging objects and flicking at imaginary dust in the immemorial fashion of a woman expecting important guests.

"Doctor Baker'll be here in a few minutes," she said. "I want things prettied up."

UPON the bedside table she arranged a pitcher of fresh ice water, two clean glasses and a stiff-backed loose-leaf notebook. "That's your chart," she said. "Everything's ready if he comes while I'm out. I'll just slip down to the rest room now and freshen my make-up."

So the waiting was nearly over, thought Miss Dove. And suddenly the protective apathy that she had assumed fell away. Without the least compunction—and realizing perfectly the breach of hospital etiquette—she reached for the notebook. She began to read her chart.

She was not a self-conscious woman. She rarely looked into a mirror and for many years she had been too busy weighing her impressions of others to speculate upon their impression of her. Now, before her fascinated gaze—neatly typed in the laconic, "unprettied-up" language of a medical man—was her own image as reflected in the mind of Adams Temple.

"The patient," Doctor Temple had written, "is a slender, fully developed female aged fifty-five, showing few of the usual senile changes, lying quietly in bed in no apparent distress, alert and collected."

She read the sentence again. It was too long for style, she thought, but style had not been what its author had striven for. It was grammatical. It was correctly punctuated. It was economically expressed. And as for the truth it conveyed—art could have done no better!

Billie Jean returned. She came and took the chart from Miss Dove's hands—gently but firmly, like a teacher confiscating a small boy's comic book. In her reproachful eyes was more sorrow than anger. "I'm surprised," she said. "I trusted you!"

"I'm sorry," said Miss Dove. But she was not sorry. The thing she had read had restored to her a sense of personal identity. Whatever tidings Thomas might bring she could receive as became a lady. Quietly, collectedly, and "in no apparent distress."

Thomas arrived accompanied by Mr. Porter.

The old gentleman refused a chair. "I can talk better on my feet," he said, "and I shan't stay long."

He stood leaning on his gold-headed cane, beetling his bushy brows, thrusting his pendulous underlip, and glaring at Miss Dove.

"I am not here in a private capacity," said Mr. Porter, sounding unctuous in spite of his creaking voice. "I represent the Rotary Club."

"Indeed," said Miss Dove.

"Indeed, yes," said Mr. Porter. "The club has voted unanimously to assume entire financial responsibility for the expenses of your illness."

Miss Dove opened her lips to speak. Mr. Porter silenced her.

"Wherever you choose to go for this operation," he said, "Rochester, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore—Rotary is behind you!"

"And if I decline the kind offer?" said Miss Dove.

HOW WOULD YOU SAY IT?

Edited by John M. Henry

Next thing, we suppose, will be that the fishermen will ask the Government for a guaranteed annual catch.
DICK CONWAY
in London, Ohio, Press

A guy who has a girl in every port will always be at sea.
RAYMOND DUNCAN
in Ellaville, Ga., Sun

If you want to find out a woman's age, ask her sister-in-law.
BERTHA SHORE
in Augusta, Kans., Gazette

An average man is one who thinks he isn't average. GEORGE BOWRA in Aztec, N.M., Independent-Review

have grapefruit instead

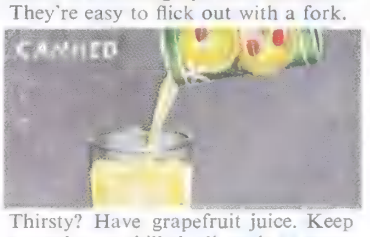
Worth its weight in health

Here is what you get from Florida sun-ripened grapefruit:

Lively tang that perks you up at the very first taste.

Vitamins—lots of them. Abundant "C", the buoyant-health vitamin your system can't store and needs each day.

Calories? Precious few. You can forget weight-worries and enjoy yourself.



Have grapefruit instead. A fresh-cut half—the new crop is in. Or luscious sections—ready-prepared in cans. Or grapefruit juice—comes canned or frozen.

FLORIDA CITRUS COMMISSION, LAKELAND, FLORIDA

Watch "Twenty Questions" on TV each week. Consult your newspaper for date and time.

Some of the best grapefruit have seeds. They're easy to flick out with a fork.

Thirsty? Have grapefruit juice. Keep several cans chilled, all ready to pour.

Low-calorie salads and desserts are a cinch with canned grapefruit sections.

FLORIDA Grapefruit

A flush swept over Mr. Porter's gaunt face. He pounded his stick.

"Who do you think you are to decline it?" he demanded. "Who gave you the right to insult your friends?"

"My dear sir," said Miss Dove, "if you wish my attention you must employ a civil tone. I am not to be bullied."

"Bullied!" Porter croaked. "You talk of bullying!" He turned to Thomas. "She's always been a stiff-necked termagant. Do you think my pride hasn't suffered, seeing the daughter of my friend penniless, working for her bread, wearing outlandish clothes ——"

"You have forgotten yourself, Mr. Porter," said Miss Dove.

"I have forgotten nothing," Mr. Porter rejoined. "I haven't forgotten that I made you a very civil offer once!"

Mr. Porter had once offered Miss Dove his name. That had been fifteen years before when he had still been a fine figure of a man—a vigorous sixty-seven—and a widower of a year's standing. He was rich. He was lonely. Miss Dove was undoubtedly lonely, too, and far from rich. What could have been more suitable?

Walking up Oakwood Street with a rose in his buttonhole and a spring in his gait, he had felt utterly sanguine as to the success of his errand. And then she had refused him. She had simply said no, thank you, and changed the subject.

Now, in this hospital room, the c that old moment was plain as a w face.

"The offer was generous," said M "but nonetheless ridiculous."

Mr. Porter trembled. His haw blazed. But he knew he could not s rage against Miss Dove. She had o something for him, consciously o sciously, that would always comma votion.

That had been in February, '33 month that still recurred to him in nightmares. There had been a run on All morning the lobby had been pac line of frightened customers had n ward the teller's window, withdrawi blood of trade. And then, bobbing a milling, muttering throng, Mr. Porte flat black hat and the pale pointed fa Dove. Her features were composed. tip of her nose was pinker than usua was owing, no doubt, to the frost outside. She spoke. Her voice was precise, level voice of the geography Cedar Grove School.

"Will you allow me passage, ple said. "I wish to make a deposit."

The crowd parted. The man at th the line—a man prepared to deman scrapings in the till—insisted that sh place. She deposited her salary chec month. It was a check for ninety-eig She took her time. She inquired as t of Mr. Porter's health and, with par into that of his wife, his cousins, his his nieces. She had just completed he tion when the courthouse clock str Banking hours were over. Mr. Por close the teller's window, lower t baize shade behind the glass, and pu in his hands.

By next day the bank had been ab vert a few of its intangibles into re but there had been, it transpired, no for doing so. The temper of panic ha

Since then, whenever he had hear speak of entertaining angels unaw Porter had thought of Miss Dove.

"I am sure your Rotarians intend fense," said Miss Dove, "but I am n ject of public charity."

Mr. Porter felt his fierceness deser was only an old man leaning on a c

"It isn't charity that Liberty H you," he said gently. "It is ——" He for a word that would satisfy he Gratitude? "It is respect," he said.

"That," said Miss Dove with an a cious noblesse oblige, "I shall accept qualified pleasure."

"Now," said Thomas, bringing versation back to medicine, "I've your case with Doctor Hurley."

"What was young Doctor Hurle ion?"

"His opinion concurs with mine," said. "You have a small growth on y that must, if possible, be removed."

"If possible?"

"If possible," Thomas said. "Until we can never be sure about the natu tumor."

"Oh," said Miss Dove. She unders was not so naïve as to fail to guess the doctor had chosen not to use.

"All you have to decide," said M "is who shall remove it and where!"

"Aren't you competent?" Miss D Thomas.

"Yes," Thomas said without h (Miss Dove liked men who did not p diffidence.) "But there are surgeons experience and reputation. I am not man."

He explained that he had not yet tain examinations which would qual a Fellow of the American Board of He had completed the residency in a teaching hospital and had expe amined, but financial considera tered his plans. His parents had educate. When he had been o position at the new hospital in Lib had felt obligated to accept it at o

CONTINUED ON PAGE 146

WILLIAM L. CRANSTON ■ THOMAS S. ELSTON, JR., ARCHITECTS; PHOTOGRAPH BY MASON WEYMOUTH

Planning house and land together can turn a problem lot into a prize

PLANNED FOR LIVING on a shallow lot

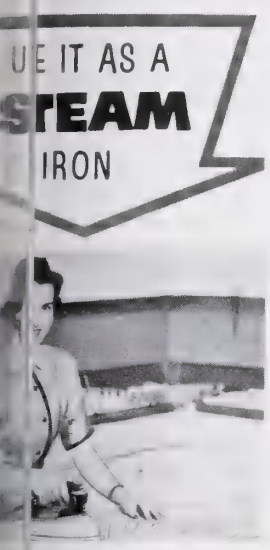
By CAROL L. MERCADO

A shallow lot can be a real bargain, if the house that's built on it is proportioned to fit the site. The setting for this house, a heavily wooded plot in Carmel, California, was budget-priced; a sharp slope at the rear of the property seemed to limit its possibilities. But imagination took advantage of the limitation, and the result? An attractive house, with plenty of privacy for indoor and outdoor living.

Several large shade trees were prudently saved, and a wide front lawn cleared to lend depth to the property. The house itself—only 28′ deep from front wall to back—stretches across the lot, concealing the land behind it. A garage wall faces the neighbors to the left; the high-walled porch shields the house from the neighbors to the right. The deep setback protects the house from roadside view, and the sloping land completes the protection at the rear of the lot.

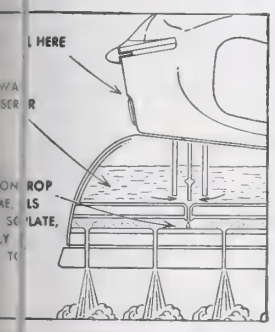
The house fits its site, and fits the needs of its occupants for easy-to-keep livability. The oiled board-and-batten exterior walls require little upkeep (and see how the change from vertical to horizontal application minimizes the length of the house). Window frames are aluminum; each triple window has a central section of fixed glass, flanked by out-opening casements.

The living-dining room, hidden from the entry by a wall of bookshelves, is isolated from traffic. U-shaped kitchen work area has plenty of counter space, with cabinets above and below. Laundry equipment and extra cupboards are opposite the breakfast corner.



The long lavatory counter in the family bath provides clean-up and comb-up space for several children at once; shelves below supplement the hall linen closet. The parents have their own bath, and a luxurious walk-in closet too. Careful placement of doors and windows allows complete furniture-arranging freedom in the bedrooms.

The extra-large garage accommodates heater, hot-water tank and bulk storage. It performs most of the duties of a basement, but is much less expensive to build.

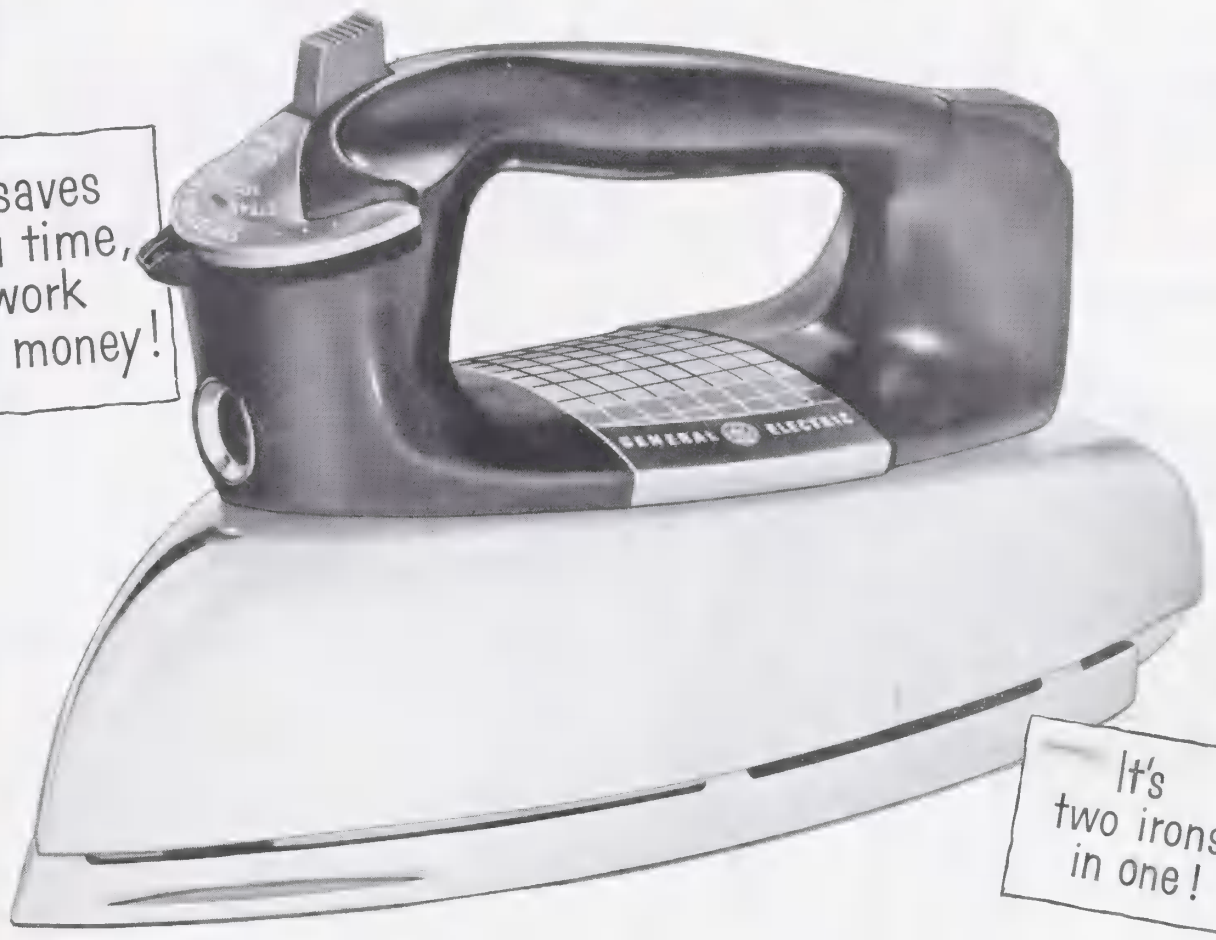


If you're shopping around for a lot, this house offers a good lesson: don't reject problem property until you've explored all its possibilities. Perhaps you, too, can turn liabilities into assets, and stretch your building dollars.

New G-E Steam and Dry Iron—

...RONS MOST FABRICS ...ITHOUT SPRINKLING!

...THOUT SPRINKLING... ...except heavy cottons, lin... ...ched fabrics! The steady ... moistens fabrics, saves ... and work of sprinkling.



...STEAM! Drop by drop, ...on hot soleplate, flashes ...o steam. Steam stops ...ly when iron is placed on ...es ordinary tap water in ...emely hard water areas.

...LIKE A TAILOR! Press ...pressing cloth, see where ...es. Save money on press... ...ou can do pressing jobs ...ofessionally.

It saves you time, work and money!

It's two irons in one!

STEAM & DRY IRON ONLY $17.95*

Manufacturer's recommended retail or Fair Trade price.*

See these other wonderful irons at your G-E dealer's: G-E Visualizer Iron ($12.50*), G-E Budget Iron ($9.75*), G-E Steam Travel Iron ($14.95*), G-E Automatic Travel Iron ($12.50*)

USE IT AS A DRY IRON

1. FOR HEAVY COTTONS, LINENS and starched fabrics, use it as a dry iron. Press the button to change steam iron to dry—no need to let it cool or empty the water. You make the change instantly!

2. LIGHT, LIGHT WEIGHT! Only 3¼ pounds! Weighs less than a woman's purse. Means easy handling and less work. Larger soleplate—more than thirty square inches of ironing area—means fewer strokes.

3. NO MORE SCORCHING! Visualizer Fabric-dial gives perfect heat for whatever fabric you're ironing! See it at your G-E dealer's today! General Electric Company, Small Appliance Division, Bridgeport 2, Conn.

...ogress is our most important product

GENERAL ELECTRIC

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 144

"I plan to take Boards this summer," he said. "But in the meantime ——"

"I am not a Boards woman," said Miss Dove. This was true. Miss Dove had never satisfied the state board of education's requirements for a Grade A certificate. She had never had a course in educational psychology, or classroom management. She was rated—and paid—as a substandard teacher.

"If you decide to go elsewhere, that won't be interpreted by anyone as a professional slap at me," Thomas said. "The operation is extremely delicate."

"The club can charter a plane," said Mr. Porter. "There's a famous man at the Mayo Clinic ——"

"Allow me to deliberate," said Miss Dove.

Mr. Porter leaned on his cane. Billie Jean stood, still as a statue, against the wall. Thomas waited at the foot of the bed. His hands rested lightly upon the rail.

Miss Dove deliberated. Her thoughts took her far into the past.

She was in the geography room. The third grade was painting maps. There was quiet in the room except for the occasional faint musical clink of a paintbrush striking the edge of a glass. Miss Dove reached for a book. As she did so, she upset a box of chalk. She was mortified by the accident; she had never done such an awkward thing before.

It was a new box, scarcely broached. Its contents spilled on the floor behind the teacher's desk, making a rattling sound. The pupils looked up. Their hands shot into the air. They were all bright-faced, glad of diversion, eager to be of help.

"You may continue painting," Miss Dove told them distantly. "I can attend to this."

To retrieve the chalk she squatted down, balancing her modest derrière upon her heels. She was thankful that her solid-front desk hid her from view, for she thought a stooping position incongruous with dignity. S arranging the sticks of chalk neatly in t lining them up as they'd been packe inally, when she sensed an electric qu the silence of the room. Then someth brushed her cheek, her neck. It fell shoulders. It was her hair!

Pivoting on the balls of her feet, sh face to face with Thomas Baker. He h wire hairpin between his thumb an finger. Half a dozen others protruded fi mouth.

For an awful moment she faced ignon defeat. The citadel of her privacy, of h agogical immutability, had been attacke eight-year-old boy! She would soon be ject of derision. She wanted to shake T until his bones rattled, until he choked hairpins.

Happily, however, an expedient occu her. If he was dexterous enough to rem pins without her knowledge, he was dex enough to repair his mischief.

She spoke in an almost inaudible w close to Thomas' blushing ear. "Put ea back in its proper place," she said and away to continue gathering up the chalk

Her appearance, when she resume throne, was quite usual. Her face was sive. Her hair was screwed into its custo knot at the nape of her neck.

"Remember to print your names legi the lower-right-hand corners of your gins," she said to the class.

She had not glanced at Thomas. twenty years later, she did glance at him.

"I remember," she said, "that you ha skillful fingers."

"You had very pretty hair, Miss D said Thomas.

Miss Dove did not smile. She never s except in a perfunctory way—a mere tu up of the corners of her thin lips—at P parties in the school cafeteria. But for a stant her face softened.

"I shall feel perfectly safe," she said, "i hands of my children."

It was too much for old Mr. Porter. Wi ing back his tears, he stumped out o room. Billie Jean followed him with a gla water.

"Now that the air is clear of emotion," Miss Dove to Thomas, "we can resume discussion."

"I think we ought to do it Saturd Thomas said. "Tomorrow. As you used t us, there is no merit in delay."

"None," said Miss Dove. "Tomor then."

"Shall I notify your sisters?"

"Afterward," she said.

"As you wish," said Thomas. At ten evening, he told her, she would swallow a sule containing a powerful soporific. would sleep soundly. So soundly that morning when she was given a hypodermic might scarcely know—certainly she woul care. She would be taken to the operat room and put under general anesthesia. cause of the position of her tumor, the op tion for its removal would be slow. It might lengthy. In that event the anesthetic would prolonged and so would its aftereffects. might well be Sunday before she really awo

"Where?" asked Miss Dove.

"What?"

"Where will I awake?"

Thomas shook his head. The Bakers, M Dove recalled, had never been good at disse bling. "I don't know, Miss Dove," he said.

Miss Dove, as her history would bear out, was little given to bravado. But even was not proof against that human var which impels one to say something me orable and gallant upon the eve of crisis.

"Here or there is immaterial," she sa with a shrug in her voice. "I have long be curious as to the topography of heaven."

Later, she reflected that the boast had be unworthy of her. It was unworthy because was untrue. She had always been rather co toward heaven.

She did not question the existence of that bourn. It lay, she presumed, beyond all galaxies and universes and horizons that finite mind of man could imagine. It was estimable country. But from hearsay the co tastier coffee!

—the modern coffee made especially to give you consistently better flavor than ground coffee!

New Nescafé is actually an improvement over ground coffee . . . tastier, cup after cup! Like home-made coffee, it's percolated. But Nescafé's scientific controls bring out the consistently fine flavor no home-brewed coffee can match. Then an exclusive jet process transforms this perfect coffee into gems of Nescafé. Just add water, you have delicious coffee! Nescafé costs far less than ground coffee, too. Start today to enjoy this modern coffee . . . tastier new Nescafé!

All Coffee—nothing but Coffee!

new Nescafé®

© 1954 The Nestlé Company, Inc.

and, the character of its fauna and of its populace did not appeal to were too many sheep there. (Silly Golden streets were ostentatious. flowed with milk and honey would s. Faces "shining as the sun" rd on the eyes. And the place held or improvement! Its institutions tants were perfect. How dull it or a teacher!

, Miss Dove had never voiced that She hardly knew she entertained vas her eventual home. She would t. Someday she would go there and h what grace she could muster, perpetual idleness.

whispered to herself, not tomor-

g to read a magazine, she thought s—the lowly, earthbound places— long to see. They ran through her natches of poetry. The white cliffs ne Lake Country, and all the green ntryside. Rivers and deltas and ts where bull elephants charged undergrowth and supple feline alked their Orient. Paris. s seven hills. Circle. The Passage? In s childhood route from st had still ht. She had discover it rew up, and had never ting her. all and cir- her life had had a great burst its see, to ad- ree!

's beginning said Billie rned on the was over. e changed. d in again— time, but iscouraged. see the child? asked her- ad meant to ough Cedar ool, for she welve years te statute o stop teaching at sixty-seven. And I know whether it's a boy or a girl? s much she wanted to know. After nt she had meant to study Greek y. She had meant to learn more nigratory habits of birds. She re- glecting to verify the statement flavor of ants that Angela had g ago.

emple came to listen to her chest. ital "busy work," Miss Dove patiently; but recalling his descrip- elf, she was gracious to him. ou write to your mother, which I at regular intervals ——" she be-week," he said. u may tell her I do not find you une proud to hear that," he said. een that she sometimes fancies her e obtuse than it is!"

know how ants taste?" Miss Dove out preamble, simply because she urned to know.

e looked alarmed (was the patient ?) and Miss Dove herself was aware estion had a mildly lunatic ring.

ms Temple—Angela's own true a young man to whom curiosity, per a normal, wholesome appetite.

es. My mother told me," he said. ne once, when she was a little girl, They taste like sour pickles."

to unhinge her patient's mind even e night nurse was more silent than usual. When the Reverend Mr. Burnham appeared she was visibly relieved. "I'll leave you with your pastor," she said and discreetly withdrew.

Alexander laid a prayer book on the table and sat down in a chair close to the bed.

This visit, Miss Dove thought, was the final test of her power of humility. It had been hard to accept Thomas as a medical authority and harder to preserve equanimity beneath the stethoscope of young Temple and the bossy ministrations of Billie Jean. To regard Alexander Burnham as her spiritual shepherd was hardest of all.

In church she found it easy. There the familiar rhythm of the service, the candles and the organ and the vestments combined to give him a kind of exalted anonymity. He seemed less a man than a symbol of office and quite dissociate from the high-strung boy who had been a touchy problem in Cedar Grove School.

He had been an uncertain child. Too tense. Too much enamored of magnificence to endure willingly the long stretches of mediocrity that lie between the peaks of experience. And he had been afraid. Miss Dove had done what she could. She had tried to show him that he was not unique, that—in her room at least—he was subject only to the strict but unfrightening laws of cause and effect. Once she had protected him. But from another. Not from himself.

One day a pane of glass in the window of the principal's office had been broken. After recess a baseball was found among the shattered glass on the floor. It was Alexander's ball. Around it in an equatorial band the name "Alexander the Great" was printed in Old English.

The principal, who liked to impose discipline in a delayed and pompous way, had waited until school was out to question the suspect. He had chosen the geography room—possibly because its climate was unfriendly to falsehood—as the scene of his inquisition. Miss Dove had sat at her desk, divorcing herself from the proceedings while her so-called superior—a man of coarser grain than Mr. Spivey—had confronted Alexander with his evidence.

"Is this your ball, Sandy?" he asked.

Alexander glanced at the ball. He blanched. "Yes, sir," he said.

"You positively identify it?"

"Yes, sir." A greenish tinge crept into the boy's pallor.

The principal gave him a heavy, threatening look. "You're guilty of destroying school property, aren't you?"

Alexander swallowed. Miss Dove could see the muscle bulging in his throat as he struggled with himself. "No, sir," he said.

"You deny that you broke the window?"

"No. I mean yes. I didn't break it."

The principal gave vent to a cynical laugh. "Now look, Sandy. We all know you never let anyone else touch that ball. We ——"

Miss Dove spoke. Her voice was controlled and quiet. "The child has answered you," she said. "You asked your question. He gave you his word."

"But ——" the principal began.

"There are no 'buts,'" she said. She fixed her terrible calm eyes upon the flustered man. "The incident is closed."

The principal thumped the baseball down upon the teacher's desk. "Very well," he said as he left the room, "you manage it!"

"I will," said Miss Dove.

For a moment Alexander stood where he was, trembling, turning greener. Then he lunged forward. He reached the sink in the corner by the sand table. He gripped its sides and bent over it, retching again and again.

Miss Dove did not go to him to hold his head or wipe his mouth with a cool damp rag. She sat on at her desk, as if he did not exist.

When, at last, he was quiet she said, "Remember to take your baseball as you go."

Now he was a man. A man to whom other men came for advice in perplexity. A man useful in church and state. He was one of her successes, she supposed, but it was difficult to forget the boy at the sink. And yet, in simple parochial duty, she must do so.

"Thomas has told you?" said Miss Dove.

"That he'll operate tomorrow? Yes," said Alexander. "I'm glad you're staying here. Tommy's as good as they come."

"The outcome is doubtful," she said.

"All outcomes are. Always," said Alexander.

"I do not wish to die," said Miss Dove. Now she had said it. She had used the word. She felt curiously purged.

"No. Of course not," he agreed. "It may seem strange, in view of my calling, but I scorn the person who is resigned to death. He is ungrateful to life."

"Life," said Miss Dove. She dwelt on the word as on a lover's name. "It is ——" But

FAMILY DRIVE

By WILLIAM STAFFORD

Sweeping toward us over the hills on the road toward home came telephone poles; coming in by bridges were cottonwood trees that held the light in their glittering leaves;
wide as the world poured the open fields.

At the end of my life in swallow flight
I will touch again that blowing wheat and the way of space on roads we've gone that came rushing near through beams of sun, in those years I hold near as the beat of my heart.

BRIGHTEN UP MEALS WITH No Batter, No Bother Waffles

Downyflake Waffles with Chicken Salad

Downyflake Waffles add excitement to all your meals . . . in a hurry! Just pop Downyflake Frozen Waffles into your toaster and they pop right back at you . . . mouth-watering, nutritious waffles that turn an ordinary meal into something special. As a base for so many dishes, crisp, golden-brown Downyflake Waffles really make menus sparkle. Brighten up tonight's supper with batterless, botherless Downyflake Waffles!
Serving suggestions in every package.

Just pop Downyflake Waffles into your toaster 'n serve frozen Downyflake 1-minute WAFFLES

© Waffle Corp. of America

she had not the eloquence to say what it was. "I have been happy," she said.

She had never said so before. She had, in fact, considered it ignoble to measure one's degree of euphoria. She saw now that she had been one of the blessed simply because she had not guessed it. That civilized adults attained to bliss only when they were so absorbed in work that they could spare no time to think of happiness.

"I know," said Alexander.

"Thomas is not hopeful, is he?" she asked.

"Not very. But there is a hope that transcends the medical." He reached for the prayer book. "Perhaps if we read ——"

Miss Dove was grateful for Alexander Burnham's candor.

"Do you intend to read the general confessional?" she asked.

He nodded. "In such circumstances that is customary."

"Then I must warn you," she said, "that when I repeat that prayer I do so with reservations."

"Reservations?"

"Yes," she said. "I have made mistakes. I have my human limitations. But I do not, in all honesty, find the burden of my sins intolerable. And I haven't erred and strayed like a sheep!"

"The language is archaic, I'll grant you," Alexander said. "But it contains the core of truth. All of us ——"

But Miss Dove was adamant. "No," she said. "I have never spoken hypocrisy to my Maker and now is scarcely a propitious moment to begin." Her neck, propped on the pillow, looked very stiff indeed. "I am not a miserable offender."

The rector smiled. His smile was warm and engaging and bright with the good gaiety that radiates from men whose hearts are leavened by work they love. Why, Miss Dove thought, he is at ease with himself. He is the man I wished him to become.

"And I'll tell you a secret, Miss D said. "Neither am I!"

He sat with her for a while, there in pital room that was as small and n ascetic as a monk's cell. He talked world outside—of his garden where cuses were up, of the old gnarled crab the courthouse square that was full and of the far places he had seen whe been a chaplain in the Navy. Places once helped him locate on the sch map. Just before he left he said casua could have our prayer now if you lently but together."

"I should like," said Miss Dove.

She could not know—nor did sh guess—the nature of Alexander's pet her own was simple. "Whatever come she pleaded, "let me take it like a teac

The nurse came in. She carried upon which a yellow capsule reposed those little fluted paper cups that usu tain chocolate creams.

Miss Dove swallowed the capsule.

After the lamp was out she lay wa sleep to trip her in her thoughts and the square of sky framed in the winc sky was a deep, stained-glass blue fectly clear except for one long, thi transparent cloud. Over it innumera seemed to swim and swirl like a swarm tal bees. Then, as if Miss Dove had aside at a remove from actuality, she own star—the planet Earth, her darlin she knew in all its beauty and imper hung aloft outside her window. It wa No trivial celestial insect. It was a rc as large as the globe on her schoolro It glowed with a brilliance that came without but from within and it revolv so that she could see the familiar pa its continental bodies shadowed on it Like a child just graduated from Ced it was on its own now—beyond he correction. She bade it Godspeed as i the April night.

On Saturday morning at eight o'cl tor Baker stood in the corridor ou operating rooms and talked with h Doctor Temple. He appeared relaxe ried and steady of nerve—which, as of fact, he was. Just before an opera matter how difficult or fraught with this miraculous thing always happen fell away from his mind and left it c sharp like a scalpel.

"The parson and the cop are in th Adams Temple said. "Potential bloo They both match."

"Good," said Thomas.

"An odd pair," Adams said.

"Oh, I don't know. They both grev in Liberty Hill. They went to the sam Well, it's time to scrub."

THE operation lasted for hours. D morning a number of callers came to pital. They were drawn there, as by to inquire, to leave their cards and John Wesley Evans buttonholed erend Mr. Burnham. He spoke feelin personal reformation.

"It's like Damascus," he declar never touch another drop!"

Alexander, who was ordinarily i of John Wesley's ups and down kindly.

"Take it easy, Wes," he advised. " a time."

For the most part Billie Jean ren her patient's empty room. Now a however, she manufactured an excus sulting the receptionist in the lobby the pure pleasure of gazing on Willia way, who sat, majestic and muscu brown leather lounge chair. She v when the delegation from Cedar Gro arrived.

The delegation was composed of and eight boys. Their faces, preter clean, were solemn, brave and sca girls were in Brownie dresses and th Cub Scout uniforms. Their right sle rolled to their shoulders.

Billie Jean met them at the door. aren't allowed without their pare said. "What do you want?"

Mmmm-mm, what a flavor that golden Nucoa gives to popcorn—to your cooking, to your smooth-spread bread—even to baby's first piece of toast!

New enriched Nucoa® is just naturally good. So good, that only 2 ounces supplies 62% of the A and D vitamins a healthy child needs every day.

–and NUCOA is so good to grow on...

All the natural goodness in new enriched Nucoa has nutritional value for your family's health.

There's double-pasteurized skim milk. Extra-light vegetable oils. Natural golden Vitamin A color from carrots. In fact, Nucoa is always rich in vitamins A and D—so vital to good vision and good growth. As for milk minerals —Nucoa has more than the most expensive spread!

You can imagine how good Nucoa is for you—here's a margarine that's digestible even for babies! And it's made fresh every day. Today, for instance.

New, enriched
NUCOA is so good it's digestible even for babies

important business," young n said haughtily. "A matter of lk," said Vicky Evans. "I'm hot," said David.

o give blood to Miss Dove," e crooked out her bare arm as be seized and bled on the inher lips and squinched her eyes

d her. "Dope! They don't do it lay you down and afterward omato juice."
do it anywhere to folks your e Jean.
big," piped a diminutive, pig-
're all over nine!"
alth badges," said Vicky. "Our s maternal tenderness was en, honeys," she said gently, you. We've got David's daddy lloway right here. But I know can do for Miss Dove."

ked David suspiciously.
ency test's Monday," said Bilhe comes back to school and ked it she'll be so-o-o mad!
le! You go home and study for neone muttered. "We know re?" asked Billie Jean. In rapid pointed her finger at child after questions like bullets. "What's etween longitude and latitude?

t Lakes. The chief product of s the Tropic of Capricorn?"
the children backed nearer to ist they were gone.
d that like a seasoned diplon," said Alexander.
miled. "I wish I knew the an-bbed at her eyes. "Those cute
e murmured brokenly and hur-eared his throat. The generosity n had touched him and Billie considered womanly and gen-

Miss Dove had set out on a en the journey began (was it ve had her vision of the home how long it lasted and what red are questions impossible to Miss Dove was baffled by them.

she would find herself in a new knowing how she had got there d move on before she had a y her recollections. She decided she arrived at her destination—might be—she would sit down om alone and fill in the gaps in he was not fond of gaps.
that she knew all there was to entered a realm where ordinary of gravity and space and time—
nt.
was being carried—in a palan-umed—across a beautiful plain t on either side and was dotted of buildings. Pagodas. Palaces. were ringing in the distance—mellow, wistful sound—and the landscape were clear and delis had twisted trunks and their ud-flattened crowns were a soft ned in gold. They were like the ese tapestry. Beneath one tree a ding a book. He wore a crimson ong, thin chin beard that fell to Marco Polo?" he called when he

e. replied, finding nothing strange
n. "I am Miss Dove of Liberty

e!" he cried and made a deep s old Cathay! she thought. Of w now that the whole plain was wall. She wished to explore it o go into its temples and its faband to talk to its wise men so her father all about it.

She didn't know the language of the palanquin bearers, but she remembered that French was the international tongue. What was the French for "stop"? All she could think of was "Parlez vous français?" which did not sound right. "Attention, please!" she said in a distinct tone. But even as she spoke she saw that the scene had changed. She must have crossed the wall without noticing.

She was in the middle of a desert.

Suddenly she realized that she was not riding in a palanquin. She was sitting on a seat made of four joined hands which belonged to Thomas Baker and Alexander Burnham. The boys were grinning up at her in an impish way. They were about eleven years old. They wore red sweaters and corduroy knickers. Alexander was smoking a cigarette.

"How unseemly!" she said. "Put me down."

Thomas wiggled his ears. "This is my theater of command," he said.

"You have never been in more grievous error," said Miss Dove. "Put me down."

"Keep your spine rigid," said Thomas. "Ready, Sandy? One—two—three—go!"

Instead of putting her down, they swung her aloft. She left their hands and bounced into the air—very lightly, she remarked, like a soap bubble—and found herself perched comfortably upon the hump of a camel.

The camel turned its head and looked at her with a mournful eye. "I am not a pretty beast," it said.

Miss Dove was chagrined. Although she had dictated those words many times to the advanced first grade, she would never have been so unfeeling as to say them to a camel's face.

"Pretty is as pretty does," she said.

"I can go many days without water," the camel said. It moved off toward the flat, treeless horizon.

Miss Dove was agreeably surprised at the smoothness of its gait. She had understood that the motion of a camel was apt to be jerky

Let them have another, Mother, they're pure NABISCO cookies!

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

There's no cookie quite like our original NABISCO SUGAR WAFERS. The wafers are dainty and crisp. The fondant—well, it's the very smoothest and creamiest you've ever tasted. Kids eat 'em by the fistful, they're that good. Wholesome, too.

You'll taste a delicious new flavor in SWISS CREME SANDWICH. Between the scalloped wafers we put a rich filling that's really good. In fact, any package with the NABISCO seal will contain the very tastiest cookies you ever ate.

We believe our sandwich cookies should have lots of creamy filling. So we put plenty in OREO CREME SANDWICH. The crisp wafers are good and chocolate-y, made with highest grade ingredients, just like all NABISCO cookies.

and rough, but this one seemed to glide. He was, indeed, a veritable "ship of the desert." She felt borne along on a gently undulating stream.

Elaine the fair, Elaine the lovable,
Miss Dove the grim, Miss Dove the terrible—

the lines flowed drowsily through her mind. She shook them off.

The desert looked exactly like the sand-table desert that the third grade always made when it was first introduced to Arabia. Only, of course, no table could begin to suggest this sense of illimitable space, of vastness and emptiness stretching beyond the scope of the eye or the imagination. Then, against the horizon, she saw a caravan. Its "desert ships" and their robed riders were purple. They might have been cut from the purple cardboard that the children used to suggest distance.

Miss Dove and her steed were approaching an oasis. It was a green, inviting spot—a clump of date palms around a bubbling spring.

"Could you take a sip of water?" asked the camel.

Miss Dove was tempted. She would have enjoyed a sip. But pride would not permit her to be less abstemious than a beast.

"We will wait until big recess," she said.

Before long she regretted her refusal. Her mouth was dry. When she saw another clump of palms, shimmering near at hand, she said she would now like to pause for refreshment.

"That one is a mirage," the camel said contemptuously. "You can go thirsty."

"You must employ a civil tone," said Miss Dove.

The camel snorted. It turned its head to her. Its heavy-lidded eye, its curling lips and its long yellow teeth made her think of Mr. Porter. "I made you a civil offer once," it said.

When the desert was crossed, how she dismounted from her perch Miss Dove could not say. She only knew that before long she was in an airplane speeding over land and sea and receiving a kaleidoscope of impressions that were both strange and familiar.

The plane was not like the DC-6 in which, at Geoffrey Lyons' invitation, she had flown to New York. It was such a machine as she had watched rise above the county fairgrounds in the summer of 1910. She flew it herself. She sat in an open cockpit and held the stick with one hand while with the other she pressed down hard on her hat to prevent its blowing off.

It was night. The moon and stars were shining. They were very close to her, or else her vision was even more acute than usual. Below her, white in the moonlight, gleamed the remnants of antiquity—the Leaning Tower, the Pyramids, the broken pillars of the Parthenon. Black ink blots of jungle were spilled, sprawling, over the earth; in their depths she saw the burning jewel eyes of tigers on the prowl and the great rivers winding silver to the sea. The Amazon. The Euphrates. The Nile. She knew each one by its peculiar bends and turns that she had so often traced on the schoolroom map. The sea itself. The vast, mysterious matrix of all life. Wider than the desert. Wide as the sky.

Near her some invisible person was singing an old, silly song that made her think of honeysuckle at a dormitory window:

"Come take a ride in my ai-rr-plane
And we'll vis-it the man in the moon!"

The plane nosed downward. It went into a spin. Round and round and round and round into a funnel of darkness went Miss Dove. She lay fathoms deep in water. Slowly she floated upward. She had an impression of light seeping down upon her. She had nearly reached the surface. She had reached it. There was an odor of flowers and of something else—half sweet, half sickening—pulling her down. Faces bent above her. If they would go away, move back, give her air ——

She was in Paris. The chestnuts were in flower. Ladies, exquisitely gowned, strolled beside handsome gentlemen with mustaches like her father's. Well-mannered children sailed boats in a pond. Everything was suave and comme il faut, and yet she was uneasy. Paris was a beautiful city full of beautiful names—Champs Élysées, Bois de Boulogne, Place de la Concorde—but she did not trust it. She would have liked to buy a book at one of the stalls along the Seine but she didn't dare, lest it be an improper one. She was still thirsty, but she was afraid to sit at a table at a sidewalk café and order a drink lest the waiter—the garçon—should bring her something alcoholic.

"'Oh to be in England now that April's there!'" she sighed.

"It's just past the channel," said a man at her elbow. Or did he say "crisis"? He had an American accent—a Liberty Hill accent. "It ought to be smooth sailing."

"Thank you," said Miss Dove. She descended a flight of rickety steps to a pier at the end of which a small steamship was bobbing on choppy water. The man called down to someone on the ship.

"She's all right," he called. "Let her sleep!"

Let her sleep, let her sleep, let her sleep ——

In London she felt more at home. A bobby saluted her. "They're expecting you, mum," he said. He put her into a cab—a hansom cab—and she rode through the gray calm heart of London past the British Museum and Trafalgar Square and the Old Curiosity Shop. The cab stopped at the gates of Buckingham Palace. Miss Dove alighted. A soldier in a busby flung

A. E-Z infants 2-piece heavy weight sleeping bag* with EZ-ON neck, mitten sleeves. Pastels, $1.89. Print top, $2.00.

B. E-Z boys winter weight shirt. 2 to 8, 69¢; 10 to 16, 89¢;. Boys winter weight shorts.* 2 to 8, 69¢; 10 to 16, 89¢.

C. E-Z girls winter weight vest with EZ-ON neck. Nylon reinforced binding. 2 to 7, 69¢; 8 to 14, 89¢. Girls panties.* Nylon reinforced cuffs. White or pastels. 2 to 7, 50¢; 8 to 14, 65¢.

E. E-Z 2-piece sleeper* with EZ-ON neck. 6 mos. to 4, pastels, $1.79; with print top, $2.00. Extra pants, $1.00.

D. E-Z tie-side shirt. 3 mos. to 2 yrs., with pinhole-sealing diaper tapes, 69¢; without, 65¢. Training panties* with FIT-EZ non-sag double back. Nylon reinforced cuffs. 1 to 3 yrs., 50¢.

*With heat-resistant elastic

look mom no trouble!

WITH E-Z UNDIES AND SLEEPERS

No trouble at all to pick your youngster's correct size. It's on every E-Z label by child's weight! No trouble at all to wash E-Z knit cottons, either. They're shrink-resistant, extra sturdy! Splendid values . . as generations of thrifty mothers have known!

E-Z

SHOP WHERE YOU SEE THE E-Z OVAL

E-Z MILLS INC., NEW YORK 1, N.Y.
Also at leading stores in Canada

E-Z UNDERWEAR AND HOSIERY FOR INFANTS AND CHILDREN, MEN AND WOMEN

Amer
Mother-and-C Favorite

MRS. GENE HILL, Denver, "When I buy aspirin for my child look for the St. Joseph name. complete confidence in St. Joseph For Children. You don't have these tablets. I'm sure of givin just as the doctor orders. The pur flavor really appeals to my child takes St. Joseph Aspirin For so readily."

- 1¼ Grain Tablets
- Accurate Dosage
- Doctor Approved

COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE

ST. JOS ASPIRI FOR CHILD

World's Largest Selling Aspirin For Children

A PLOUGH PRODUCT

ORANGE FLA 1/4 ADULT DO LARGE ECONOMY 2

For Your Family's Regular Aspirin Needs-Demand

St. Joseph ASPIRIN

200 tab 100 tab 36 tab 12 tab

ZUD Removes RUST & STAIN

from BATHTUBS · SINKS · COPPER POTS TILE FLOORS · AUTO BUMPERS · METALS

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

FREE SAMPLE
Give names of your dealers. ZUD is sold at Grocers, Hardware, Dept., 10¢ Stor

RUSTAIN PRODUCTS P O BOX 502

CAT LOVERS' CALE

Attractive 1955 desk size, with plastic binding, appealing photos of adorable felines, hints on cat care. Send 10c and bottom flaps from 3 bags of KITTY LITTER, or 25c in coin...while they last.

KITTY LITTER Absorbs, Deodorizes
Eliminates messy sandbox routine. Ob pet supplies are sold .. Free folder sent LOWE'S, INC., Dept. 1120, Cassop

Callous

Pain, Burning, Tenderness

SUPER-FAST RELIEF!

Puts You Right Back On Your Feet!

You'll enjoy super-fast relief from your painful callouses, tenderness or burning on the bottom of your feet when you use Super-Soft Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads. They're wonderfully soothing, cushioning, protective and remove callouses one of the fastest ways known to medical science. Try them!

Dr Scholl's Zino-p

"They're expecting you," he ent past him. A garden party

s. Miss Dove sat down at a esently Queen Mary joined her.
anner was stately and affable.
turban covered with feathers

Do," she said, "I admire your

, ma'am," said Miss Dove, herself upon remembering to o the queen. "It is not to be yours. Yours is a chapeau."
stroked the feathers on her hat.
h before applying scent," she ou care to see my herbaceous

," said Miss Dove, who was an any.
tful distance she followed her e never saw the border. Instead, e to the end of the path she tanding on the jutting point of dge of a high plateau. Far be-hat looking down made her ow inlet joined two great seas and right. Between the promonh she stood and another prom-ly like hers, a footbridge hasm. It was a flimsy-looking f wire and barrel staves and less width. Miss Dove drew back.
with a feeling of inexplicable

n Bridge?" she asked.
ion is satisfactory," said the ly the Northwest Passage."
" said Miss rora borealis
t fan of col-
y. Far down
n iceberg re-med light and out to sea mulus cloud
ting sun.
ther end of od the young
t. He wore trousers, a azer, a high stiff straw hat which he re-flourish.
now me, Miss Dove?" he asked though familiar, sounded differ-voice of the young man she had he campus lawn. "I'm rather bite benign!"
crossed the bridge. She walked rst, but by the time she reached he had no fear of falling. On the the chasm the world was bathed old. All the vegetation was overpatina of light. Each lacquered s stood separate from its neighy leaf on every tree the delicate was visible.
d a new quality. As Miss Dove er lungs she was filled with a de-
, to sing, to laugh. To loosen her t blow in the wind. She had dis-felt, some marvelous secret that pulse of the universe.
ese happy auspices ——" the eologist began and would have nd.

away from him. "I must tell ried. "I must tell them!"
looked back to see if he were folhe was only standing there, decnimportunate.
hrough the town of Liberty Hill.
lloway stared, shocked and diss she passed him at Maple and aised a big gloved paw to halt her.
halt.
own the central corridor of Cedar ol. She took a long, flying leap and e floor, the way she had seen boys y thought she wasn't looking. She to the geography room and in at n was noisy and bright with chilwere playing leapfrog over the sang and shouted and called one de names.

When they saw Miss Dove they reined in their joy. They went to their seats. They opened their notebooks and sat erect—feet on the floor, hands folded on the desks, solemn, scared eyes to the front.

Miss Dove mounted the platform. "Attention, please," she said. She meant her voice to ring, but it came out level and precise. She wanted to say to the children, "Unclasp your little hands! Forget the rules. A fig for margins!" She wanted to tell them, "Look for the golden light and the new-veined leaf! Drink the air of spring! Life is the only thing that matters at all. Life!"

But the spell that had fallen upon the class fell upon her. She could not speak. The only sound in the room was that of a fly buzzing against a screen. She picked up yesterday's folded newspaper which she had saved against such an emergency. At a measured pace she walked to the window and sedately swatted the fly.

Bizarre, benign. Benign, bizarre. Bizarre, bizarre, biz-z-z-z——

She was in the funnel again. She was under water. She was floating. She was coming up—up—up ——

She opened her eyes.

She was lying, of course, in her hospital bed. Beside her stood a tall iron contraption, like a floor lamp, that held a jar of clear liquid. From the bottom of the jar depended a small rubber tube that was attached by a needle to the vein in the inside bend of her elbow. Glucose, she thought correctly and knew where she was and what had happened.

From outside, beyond glass, she heard the courthouse clock striking the half and then the sweet, dissonant ringing of church bells. It was Sunday. Those were the bells for early service.

Sunlight flooded the window. In it the red paper schoolhouse in the dish garden was incandescent. There it is, she thought. There is life!

She thought of all the children she had pruned and polished and to whom she had explained, by precept and example, the hard, true, simple and beautiful meaning of the human adventure. She thought of their faces lighting up with fresh wonder when they conceived, for the first time, the roundness of the earth. Of her successes and her failures. Of those who had gone and of those—if she dared hope—who were yet to come. For a shocked instant, before she forgot it entirely and forever, she recalled those other dream children who had jumped over the desk. She was aghast at the amoralities she had been about to utter to them!

She knew, with passionate yearning, exactly where she wished to go. Not to old Cathay. Not to London or Paris or to the anomalous country beyond the hills. She wanted to walk down Oakwood, across LaFayette, up Maple, over to Grant (bowing to William Holloway) and into the portals of Cedar Grove School. She wanted to go into the geography room. To put her hat and gloves and bag in the cupboard. To unroll the big map of the world. To mount her platform and to stand there waiting for the first-graders to file in—abandoning folly as they entered her door, greeting her soberly, one by one, in the prescribed language that told her the day had begun to blossom.

Billie Jean was tidying the bureau. On her left hand a single diamond sparkled. She pushed the pot of azalea so far back that it tilted the mirror and Miss Dove could see her reflection and that of Thomas Baker as he came into the room.

Thomas' face looked tired, like the face of a man who has forgotten about sleep. But it looked jaunty as well—the way it had looked, she remembered, when a hard test or a baseball game had come out better than he'd had a right to expect. In the crook of either arm he carried a bundle wrapped in a blue blanket.

(Twins, thought Miss Dove. Boy twins. I shall have to keep them apart even though it upsets my alphabetical seating arrangement. But would they —— Would she —— Hadn't something been said—something in Thomas' voice—about strangeness and benignity?)

Thomas had paused just inside the door. When he saw in the glass the reflection of Billie Jean's delight he wiggled his ears. He cocked one eyebrow. "What a man among men I am!" his clowning plainly declared.

He tiptoed to the bedside. The babies began to cry. "An-ha-n-n, aha-n-n-n!" their shrill voices went.

"Quiet, please," said Miss Dove.

Nobody—not she nor Thomas nor Billie Jean—was surprised when the crying hushed.

She gazed up at the doctor. Her eyes were luminous and unillusioned. She waited to hear the truth.

Thomas returned her gaze. His face, like the paper schoolhouse on the window sill, seemed to glow from within. Then he told her what she wanted to know. He told her without wasting a word.

He stood erect. He drew a curtain of gravity over his face, making it blank of everything except decorum and sober dedication. In the reserved, deferential accents of Cedar Grove Elementary School he spoke at last.

"Good morning, Miss Dove," he said.

END

Wit is necessary to a clever talker; intelligence is enough for a good listener.

Reprinted from THE JOURNALS OF ANDRÉ GIDE 1889-1913 by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, Inc. Copyright 1947 by Alfred Knopf, Inc.

New
nursery beauty!

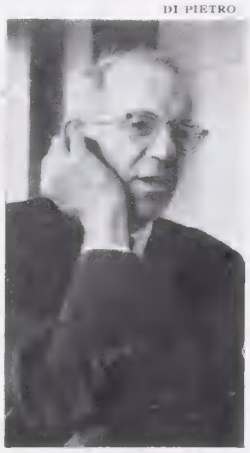
Mennen lanolized baby oil cleans gently, without harsh rubbing

Next to baby, the new Mennen Baby-in-the-Rose package is the loveliest thing in the nursery! And this pure, lanolized baby oil actually loosens diaper matter. It cleans baby gently, without harsh rubbing.

Never greasy or sticky: can't stain clothes or linens. Use it as baby's special body cleanser. Works wonders against cradle cap, too. 25¢, 49¢, 98¢. No tax.

Slightly higher in Canada.

Diaper Rash Protection
Mennen satinized Baby Powder in a new Baby-in-the-Rose package. 25¢, 49¢. No tax.



Mennen . . . Baby Specialist since 1880

Dr. Spock Talks with Mothers

Most babies must put things in their mouths.

By BENJAMIN SPOCK, M.D.

DI PIETRO

Dr. Spock says: "The most constructive thing I can tell grandparents is that I sympathize with their irritation when their grown children greet their suggestions with 'That's not what the baby book says.'"

I RECEIVED dozens and dozens of friendly letters from mothers glad to tell about their experiences with pacifiers. Most of them were very enthusiastic. But I should remind you right away that this may not represent a "scientific sample." It's possible, of course, that an equal number had had unsatisfactory experiences and had no urge to write about them. Most of the writers had used the pacifier for colic. All but one said it helped a lot, whether the relief was complete or only partial. Other mothers used it, always with great success, for excessive fretfulness and crying. Another large group used it for babies who seemed to have an unusually great need to suck.

Very few of these pacifier babies ever became thumb-suckers, and the mothers happily contrasted this with some of their other children who hadn't had pacifiers and who had thumb-sucked for several years.

A number of mothers had run into the problem of the baby's losing the pacifier at night and waking and crying. Even those who had not easily solved this problem said that getting up a few times was still a lot better than walking a colicky baby for hours at night. Others found that the baby learned to find the pacifier again, especially if several were left in the bed, or if the pacifier was tied to the side of the crib with a long ribbon, or if a dim light was left on. Many of the mothers felt they had avoided this problem by always taking the pacifier out of the baby's mouth as soon as he was asleep, thus keeping him from ever expecting to find it there when he waked.

A majority of the mothers reporting said that they had not tried to break the habit and that their babies had become bored with the pacifier and given it up, mostly between two months and two and a half years of age (one at three and a half years). What surprised me greatly was that the larger number gave it up before fifteen months and that the months most frequently mentioned were three, four, five and six. (This contrasts with Dr. Milton Levine's large group of babies whom he followed in his own practice, a majority of whom quit between one and a quarter and two and a half years, and it suggests that it may have been mothers who had had the greatest success who felt most like writing me.) This gives me the idea that a mother might be smart to be on the lookout for signs of lessened interest in the pacifier at three to six months and, if she sees this, try gradually and tactfully to cease offering it if the baby proves willing.

Several children between one and two years of age chewed holes in the pacifier and then threw it away in disgust.

A minority of the mothers writing did not wait for the baby to give up the pacifier but took it away, a few before a year, most at two or three years of age (one at six). The children were unhappy for a few days. Several mothers cut holes in the pacifier and the children then threw them away.

Several mothers said proudly that their children had no displacement of the teeth. One mentioned some crookedness, but she did not know whether the pacifier had anything to do with it.

There were many references to the disapproval and disgust of relatives, friends and strangers, but all the mothers mentioning this said firmly that this wouldn't keep them from using a pacifier with another baby who might need it.

Several mothers commented that they thought it was an abuse of the pacifier to be popping it all day long into the mouth of an older baby or child who expresses no desire for it, who has no colic, no great need to suck, no trouble going to sleep, just to keep him contented and inactive because the mother is too lazy to prepare his meal yet or doesn't want to bother to watch him when he's out of the pen or bed or carriage. I can see the convenience of it occasionally as a substitute for something more constructive, but agree that it shouldn't be used regularly as a sort of sedative for a baby who doesn't need sedation.

One letter, about the problem of breaking the pacifier habit, should be of interest to all parents who wonder why they get into jams with their children, not necessarily about pacifiers but about toilet training, feeding and other aspects of management.

This mother explains that the pediatrician recommended the pacifier for colic, and they used it, but "my husband and I were both opposed to its use, simply on the basis that we anticipated difficulty in breaking the habit. Our apprehensions were quite justified. . . . At various times we have tried to take it from him but his screams always force us to give it back to him. He is two years old now, has restless sleep because he loses the pacifier and is a 'pacifier addict.'"

In the first place, this raises the question whether it is ever wise for parents to use any psychological method that they disapprove of strongly, no matter how expert the person recommending it seems to be. In a general way I'd say they shouldn't, though there may be exceptions.

The management of a child has to be carried out, for better or worse, according to the parents' own philosophy and feelings. Any mother has to go into action in relation to her child a thousand times a day, directing him, stopping him, helping him, encouraging him, approving, disapproving, comforting. These actions come from inside her, instantaneously, spontaneously. If she had to stop and think each time, she'd be exhausted with the effort in an hour. The child and she would get into all kinds of difficult situations because of the delay. If, in even a quarter of these minor crises, she had to wonder whether some authority or adviser would approve or not, she'd become paralyzed in her will. Even if the eventual decision were technically correct, it probably wouldn't have the desired effect on the child, because he'd sense right away that it wasn't her natural self speaking.

It's bad enough to be trying to manage a child when you're wondering what an expert would say. But it's almost impossible to be doing what a doctor, for instance, has told you when it goes strongly against your grain. You're not just uncertain, you're mad—at the doctor and at the child—particularly if you think it permits the child to get away with murder. One thing you're likely to do is carry out the "letter of the law" hoping, unconsciously, that it will work badly, to prove the other person wrong and you right.

I've seen this happen when a housemother in a children's institution thinks the superintendent is making rules of management that are too lenient on the children, or when a stern teacher thinks the same thing about a principal.

When you get psychological advice you try, of course, to see whether it gives you a new slant and whether you can use it comfortably. But if in the end you feel it's not for you, then you have to be yourself and do it your own way. It may still be the best for you and your child even if it wouldn't be the right way for your adviser and his child.

Now I want to focus once more on the sentences in the letter where the mother says of the pacifier, "My husband and I were both opposed to its use, simply on the basis that we anticipated difficulty in breaking the habit. Our apprehensions were quite justified." Of course their apprehensions were justified. I don't know just how they did it. I can imagine that if I thought a pacifier was disgusting and habit-forming I'd give it grudgingly and I'd probably keep trying to take it away from my baby, especially as he grew older, always with an uneasy and cross expression. My crossness would make him cross and obstinate about giving it up. The fact that I was always trying to take away something he felt he needed would surely make him anxious and it would steadily increase his sense of dependence on it. I've seen the same thing dozens of times in thumb-sucking. The parents who continually and irritably try to get the child's thumb out of his mouth always end up with the most persistent thumb-sucker. This works the same way with grownups. When I'm told that the cold water has been shut off, I suddenly am terribly thirsty and no other drink will do but water.

I'd better make it clear that I'm not saying that no parent should ever stop his child from doing anything for fear it will increase his determination. You have to stop a child from running into the street or playing with matches or deliberately making a mess at table or eating things which you don't think good for him or being rude.

You can usually stop him right away if he generally trusts you, knows that you are usually reasonable, knows that you mean what you say, and if you are firm and believe you are right. He doesn't really resent the prohibition, either, because he senses that you are doing it for his good. This is very different from chronically nagging a child in a sour spirit (and perhaps never being really firm) about something that has been his habit for a long time and which he naturally considers his own business.

I'm in the process of making a revised edition of Baby and Child Care and need advice from parents. Some of the suggestions I've had don't seem to me practical or necessary, like a chapter on pets (I don't know enough about pets) or a long list of names for children (I think parents can be trusted to find their own names) or a chapter for grandparents (the most constructive thing I can think of would be to tell them I sympathize with their irritation when their grown children always greet their hesitant suggestions with "That's not what the baby book says"). The book can't be any larger, it ought to be smaller.

I need most to know whether there are things in the book which have worked wrong and got you into trouble, or things that have worried or bewildered you unnecessarily. I'd like to know about information you wanted urgently and couldn't find. I'd like to hear about practical solutions for everyday problems which would be of wide usefulness but which I didn't seem to know about.

Although he cannot answer letters personally, Dr. Spock will be glad to hear from readers and will discuss in these pages problems of general interest.—Ed.

Carter's Spanky LITTLE Hair-ways

N.P.

t-on, fast-off knits from Toddlertown!

ch! That's how quick Carter's knits slip tle space pilots. Mother loves famous necks, no-binding, no-chafing nd® underarms. Carter's has lots mfy-sure features . . . Diapenda® at save little shirt tails, lammy cottons, lots room. And all re, no-iron Carter
e Carter-Set® . . .
shrink
it.

ckwise
by

FF GOWN. Snap-
nt. White, Pastels.
50.

OPPER SET, with snap-fastened zed pant. Pink, blue, yellow on s.-1½ yrs. $2.95.

/ABIND SHIRT. Diapenda tapes.
-3 yrs. Pastels to 1½ yrs. About 79¢. In ed and tie styles also.

bunny). Snap-fastened through ribbon bow.
ite trim. 6 mos. $1.00.

CREEPER. Snap-fastened adjustable suspenders.
ed crotch. Nevabind underarms. White top. Blue, en pant. 6 mos.-2 yrs. $2.75.

T. Jiffon neck. Nevabind sleeves. White. 1-8 yrs. 85¢.

T. Exclusive No-Droop 2-way-action room. White with rosebud nk, blue, yellow on white. 1-6 yrs. 69¢.

am Carter Company, Needham Heights, Mass.

CARTER'S TODDLERTOWN SPACEPORT

Carter's ... tops in toddlertown

Post Carter's makes fine underwear for the entire family

© 1954, The W. C. Co.

NEW MIRACLE MACHINE MODERNIZES HOME SEWING!

NEW PFAFF®

ENDS "HOME-MADE" LOOK

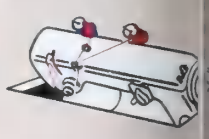
Now you can make clothes for yourself and your family that lool original, smart, and expensive!

The new Pfaff zig-zag machine with its exclusive Dial-A-Stitch i a sewing miracle that makes beautiful sewing simple! You can sev children's dresses with applique, embroidery, or smocking that wil make your little girl the prettiest girl in town. You can make exquisit dresses for yourself, suits that look custom-tailored—even coats! An you can do it all on a Pfaff in less time with less work than it usuall takes to make just ordinary clothes on an ordinary machine.

There's not a stitch the new Pfaff doesn't do so perfectly – even a beginner can sew like an expert in a few days! There are no extra attachments necessary! With the Pfaff, you just Dial-A-Stitch! That's why it's so easy to do really beautiful work on a Pfaff!

Come in and test the wonderful new Pfaff soon. You'll find sewing is quick and easy . . . sewing is fun on a Pfaff!

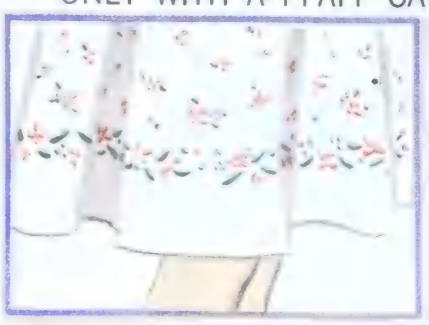
DIAL-A-STITCH



MAKES BEAUTIFUL, SEWING SIMPLE!

No other machine is as fine as a Pfaff—in performance, precision, dependability!

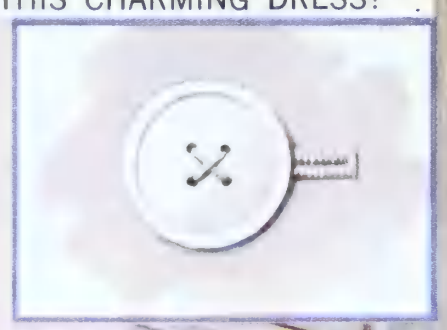
BUILT-IN NEEDL THREADER!



Just press a lever and your Pfa threads itself!

FINGERTIP LIFT

Touch a button to s your Pfaff up int sewing position



ONLY WITH A PFAFF CAN YOU DIAL EVERY STITCH OF THIS CHARMING DRESS!

BEAUTIFUL EMBROIDERY!

PROFESSIONAL TUCKING!

EXPERT BUTTONHOLES!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

PFAFF . . . famous for quality the world over since 1862!

There is a Pfaff for ev purse and purpose... portables and a varieb handsome cabinetmod

Service guaranteed by over 2,000 dealers in the United States and Canada. Look in the classified telephone directory or write Pfaff for the dealer nearest you.

[illegible] FIFTH AVENUE, NEW [illegible] • [illegible] LAVAL ST., CHICAGO ▪ 1142 S. SAN JULIAN ST., LOS ANGELES ▪ 1015 ST. ALEXANDRE ST., MONTREAL

©1954

CAN THIS MARRIAGE BE SAVED?

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 85

I met on my twenty-first birth-l of us went to a restaurant to John came. He brought me a summer purse—and I was sur-eased. John now asks whether I ith him that night the way he love with me, and I don't know.
now.
v I didn't push and trick John
, as he now thinks. It was he who ste. John and I knew each other onth before we got married, and hought we should become better thought the same. In a week I y love for John. I felt he needed ter him—John is only four weeks
I am, but in many ways he seems and quite helpless—and I knew
. But I begged for a six months'
t least. I realized John was posit, emotional. Knowing I should t Gregory and me, I looked for
, the right place, the right words.
ce I figured out the right words,
und the right time.
strange person. Even before he t Gregory, John behaved as gretted our marriage. The very were pronounced man and wife, changed character. His kiss at cool. He scowled when the minisated him. He was discourteous s and rude to the other wedding

a souped-up jalopy. We raced pensive hotel where we were to neymoon—it cost thirty dollars a had paid for three days in adhty miles an hour. I was terrified.
meant to kill us both. I begged own; he wouldn't. When we did el I barely had a chance to glance obby before he dragged me out again, leaving behind his ninety aid he didn't like the place. We dding night in a cheap motel. I'd o get together a proper trousseau;
ed because my going-away suit nd needed cleaning; he criticized n I'd bought. Nothing about me ay honeymoon was a nightmare," nd hesitated. Then she flushed. mething I should tell you. John ove one time before our marriage, before our wedding. When John 't refuse him. I wanted to prove him. John now seems to take that nce I am morally loose and that t the only man in my past.

o cut short our honeymoon-trip had wasted the ninety dollars. I it. When we got back and rented nt things were a little easier, for a John was working and going to rted teaching. I'm still not an exeper, but I learned to cook and idered John's comfort and tastes.
fusing to drop my piano lessons, in nothing. Somehow I couldn't n I loved him enough. I didn't appy. I wasn't happy either.
n acting so strangely and criticiz-ery turn, I didn't see how I could him about Gregory. I should have can't build a marriage on deceit.
r, intuitive. He soon sensed I was cret from him. He asked questions y broke down and told him I had r with another man. Since then,
, our lives have been torment.
I need somebody's advice," Gina ounselor. "Even if our marriage is n himself needs help. Otherwise, elieve my husband may lose his nind because of my conduct in the jealousy."

Is His Side:

lways wanted somebody to love John. Wiry and slight of build, d, he gazed at the counselor
k spectacles. His narrow face was flushed, his myopic eyes burned with emotion. "I'm physically unattractive, as you can see for yourself. I loved Gina long before I found the courage to speak to her. I would watch her on the campus and in the night I would think of her as Dante must have thought of Beatrice. Perhaps that's why the truth, when I learned it, came as such a shock. Maybe I expected too much from marriage because my whole life has been hard and loveless and unhappy.

"My father's income is fifty thousand dollars a year," John said. "I am an only child, but I bought my college education with my own toil and sweat. Five years ago I hitchhiked to California from Delaware to get away from my father. My mother died when I was born. Possibly my father blamed me for her death; anyway, he wasn't ever fond of me.

"I don't suppose you can call my father downright vicious," John went on reflectively,

KISSING KIN

By ELIZABETH McFARLAND

I'll get me a pocket
To carry you in
And a filigree locket
The size of your chin,
My dilly, my docket,
My kissing kin.

My pride now has grown
As immense as the nation,
And warm to the bone
Is my new inclination:
Content to be known
As your kissing relation.

Oh, fair is the sight
Of the light of your grin,
And silver-spoon bright Beams the small soul within,
But love charms against night
Are your kisses, sweet kin.

"but he has no feeling whatever for people who aren't like him. My father fought his way up from nothing to become the leading citizen and owner of the largest factory, the yacht-club commodore, in the little shore town where I was born. My father didn't marry until he was forty-one. He chose my mother for her family plus her entree to the yacht-club crowd. By then he had his fortune.

"He grew up in a tenant farmer's shack in Georgia with nine brothers and sisters and never enough to eat. I grew up in a huge house staffed with five servants. Yet my father expected me to carry a morning-newspaper route, go to the private day school with his local friends' sons and get high marks, and then, after school, ride as a helper on the village garbage truck. To please him—in those days pleasing my father meant everything to me—I stuck to that schedule.

"While the sons of his friends were learning how to swim and sail and play tennis and golf I was using my free time at hard, unnecessary, humiliating work. My father couldn't understand why his friends' sons weren't my friends. He was forever pushing me at kids who liked nothing better than to jump me and beat me up. Being small and weak, the runt chicken pecked by all the others, I was scared to death of them. I have been driven by fear all my life, though I always did my best to hide the fact from my father.

"One Sunday he arranged at the club for me to sail as crew for a kid who'd thrown rocks at me and the garbage truck the day before. I knew Chuck didn't want me as crew and I hid out until the race was over. That night my father beat me until Annie—she was our upstairs maid—threatened to call the police.

"Annie was colored, a warm, kind woman with a gentle voice. Annie and my dog, Jiggs, were my only friends. My father let me keep Jiggs because my mother's oldest sister, whom he didn't care to offend, gave the dog to me. Annie stayed with us until I was twelve, when I was sent off to prep school.

"I was afraid to go away to school and I begged to stay home. I was small for twelve, more like nine or ten. On my first day a bunch of five or six big kids jumped on me and my glasses got broken and I needed twelve stitches. That night I climbed out a window of the infirmary and hitchhiked home.

"JIGGS was glad to see me, and I hoped my father would let me stay. He wouldn't. However, the school refused to take me back. Nearer us—eighty-five miles away—was a military school. It was worse than the prep school, but I stuck three weeks before I ran home again. I hid in our attic a whole week, with only Jiggs knowing I was there. When my father finally caught me he called in the county probation officer, and I was given my choice of going to a reform school until I was of age or returning to the military school.

"I went back to the military school," John said, "and stayed there until I was sixteen. After the first couple of years it wasn't so bad. One time in a fight I broke another kid's arm by mistake—he didn't peach on me—and the rest finally decided to let me alone.

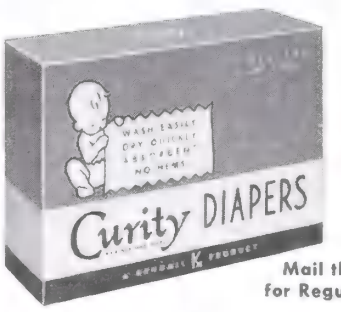
"Every other weekend, provided I had no demerits—I was the demerit king of the school—I was permitted a forty-eight-hour liberty. The round-trip bus fare home was a dollar seventy-five. My father wouldn't pay the fare. He didn't want me around, but I had to see that Jiggs was being cared for; and besides, I kept hoping my father would find something to admire in me. I would start walking the eighty-five miles from school toward home. Usually some truck driver would pick me up; those truck drivers were nice fellows. I used to wish I was a truck driver's son." John paused. "It was one of the drivers who accidentally killed my dog. Jiggs happened to be loose that morning, racing around in our yard. Like a stupe I whistled before the truck stopped and Jiggs ran to the road and straight under the right-front wheel. He was an old dog by then, and he was fat and clumsy. My father saw the accident. He ran down to the road in his bathrobe, and there I was kneeling in the snow beside my dog, bawling like a two-year-old. I looked up. I thought he was going to hit me. Instead he said, 'John, I'm sorry.' I got up from my knees and I hit him as hard as I could, and he fell in the road. It was too late for my father to be sorry. I didn't care about him any more. I was sixteen. I wasn't afraid of him.

"A month later, I quit the military school for good. With thirty dollars I'd saved I hit out for California. In ten days—I was lucky with rides—I got here," John said to the counselor. "I didn't hide from my father. Right away I wrote him a post card with my address. He sent a telegram saying, 'You wanted to be on your own. You are. Good-by.'

"Then and there, I made up my mind I would finish prep school and graduate from college with honors. My father isn't a college man. He is quick-tempered, illogical, ruled by prejudice and whim. I decided, too, I would marry at twenty-one. To get an education and money, to win a sweet girl's love—those were my objectives.

"I had no time for dating. I was carrying twenty hours of college studies a week and driving a truck forty-five hours. For two years I contented myself by watching Gina, dreaming of her, and I waited. Finally I arranged we should meet." John took off his thick spectacles and carefully polished the lenses. "That evening I took her a gift and she looked not at the gift but at me when she smiled. She has a beautiful smile. I asked Gina to marry me that same night and she was sure I was kidding, but I wasn't. To me she was perfect." He sighed. "A crazy thing—something I can't

"THESE DIAPERS Dry in no time!"



Curity® DIAPERS

Indoors or out, Curity Diapers dry so fast that you can always have a ready supply . . . without buying an oversupply! And no matter how they're laundered — hand or machine — they're wrinkle-and-ravel-resistant, come out soft and smooth every time. More good news: Curity's exclusive FOLD-LINES guide you to quick, expert, neat folding. And note these other important advantages:

1. Wash Easier — stains just can't stay in their open surgical weave.
2. Wear Longer — made of full-weight, full-size gauze that keeps its shape through wash after wash.
3. Absorb Fully — thirsty surgical weave quickly soaks up moisture like a sponge.

You'll find Curity Diapers at your favorite infant's store . . . and at leading diaper laundries. Be sure to see Curity's "dress-up" styles and the extra-absorbent "night" diapers.

SEE THE NEW Curity NIGHT DIAPER

Mail the Coupon for Regular Diaper

KENDALL MILLS — Division of The Kendall Company, Walpole, Mass., Dept. J-114
Enclosed is 25¢ (coins only) for full-size Curity Diaper and literature on Curity Nursery Products. (Only one diaper to a family.) Print clearly.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Good in Continental United States and Hawaii.

The difference between this...

and this...

is often this...

understand—happened when we were married. Gina turned from the altar to give me her first kiss as my bride, and I wanted to run. I was terrified. I felt like the most inadequate person in the world, and I couldn't believe Gina or anybody else could love me for myself.

"I phoned long distance to my father from our wedding reception—I'd looked forward a long while to telling him I was married—and he said I was a fool and there must be something wrong with my wife. I was taking on a responsibility I couldn't handle, he said. Hating my father, I hung up.

"I was so desperate," said John, "as Gina and I drove away from the reception I halfway hoped we would both be killed in an accident. Gina seemed like a stranger to me. We arrived at the fancy hotel I had chosen for our honeymoon and at once I saw it was the type of hotel my father would choose. So we left there.

"All through our honeymoon, I was trying to believe Gina really loved me and I was failing. I was cranky, unreasonable. I couldn't help it, but Gina complained. I guess I complained of her too.

"Doubts collected and circled in my mind. I wondered why Gina had given herself to me before our marriage. I wasn't satisfied with her explanation. There was a mystery, a secret. I began to question Gina about her past. She was evasive. Four months ago I found out the reason for her evasiveness. With Gina's confession, my world fell to pieces. She deceived me before our marriage. She will deceive me again.

"When I go in the Army I have no belief Gina will remain faithful. Why should she? I am sick, helpless; she is now supporting us both. Is there any way," John said to the counselor, "you can advise me how to straighten out my thinking and be at peace? I love Gina. I am willing to forgive her past, if only I can gain confidence in our future together."

A mother, with mingled feeling of exasperation and tenderness, found on her newly papered wall written in a round, boyish scrawl, "I love you, mother."

—FRANCES BROWN

The Marriage Counselor Says:

"Gina's and John's emotional difficulties," said the wise, middle-aged counselor, "were less complex than either supposed. They were an unusual pair—mentally brilliant but emotionally in grammar school. They were very young. Both were dramatizing themselves and, in a way, enjoying their agonies. John in particular. John's jealousy was not the real issue in his conflict with Gina.

"His real trouble, as he eventually acknowledged to me, was his lifelong feeling of inadequacy. Even had there been no Gregory in Gina's past, it is my guess he and Gina would have run into difficulties. For John was demanding the impossible—he wanted Gina to supply him with the love, security and self-confidence of which he had been deprived as a child.

"Almost immediately John looked at his bride with the skeptical, critical eyes his father had turned on him. There must be something wrong with Gina, thought he, or she would never have chosen to marry a poor stick like John. Alarmed he couldn't measure up as a husband, he automatically decided Gina couldn't measure up as a wife. It is hardly surprising the honeymoon was disappointing.

"John's physical collapse—he lost twenty-six pounds in four months—was, in my opinion, a subconscious attempt to test Gina's love. Certainly he brought his collapse on himself. His doctor prescribed half a grain of thyroid daily; on his own John increased the dose to five grains a day. He then couldn't sleep; his nervous system went to pot. He had plenty of time to conjure up jealous fantasies and unanswerable questions for Gina. If he became helpless, if Gina not only assumed his financial support but tended him in uncomplaining patience, so I believe John was subconsciously arguing, perhaps then he could be at peace and credit her professed devotion. Naturally Gina, in these circumstances, wasn't always patient. John then completely lost faith that he was beloved. Young people who set about testing each other by seek crete proof of something as intangibl make a mistake.

"Fortunately, John was intelligen as intellectual and imaginative. In interview he was already dimly aware childhood—the fearsome image he c his father—must be responsible for so torments. By our third interview, J virtually counseling himself. He stop ing overdoses of thyroid and hi promptly improved.

"WITHIN a few weeks—though this miraculous—John told me he had thoughts of Gina's past from his min alized that he loved her for what sh the present. He then earned the righ he was grown up, free of his father As a man, emotionally qualified to band, he saw Gina was in need of his understanding. He went back to resumed his college studies and, months, graduated with honors.

"Of the two, Gina was more di assist," the counselor continued. "H hood background was quite dissimi John's. Gina's parents are members o cally strict religious sect; so joyless music, except a few selected hymn bidden. Against fierce parental op Gina went to college, worked her way a fine-arts course. Her love affair with may have been a pa general rebellion. ending of the a most inevitably she greatly from feelin worthiness and gu

"Otherwise, sh hardly have tolerat abuse. Subconsc believe she consid husband's rage an tions a just pu for her sins. W and I first met, C blaming herself fo that she sometimes had dreams Gregory appeared. Indeed, her dre vided the material for some of the most passionate quarrels. In the mor would repeat her dreams to John on and at once the battle would start. An ing side light is that Gina stopped about Gregory when John stopped about Gregory. Eventually, Gina bec to see herself objectively, and to re past in the proper perspective as a her life that was past.

"Neither she nor John had paid an Gina's chronic exhaustion, her need They had no recreation at all. Wh went back to work, Gina dropped o outside music courses and cut down h ing schedule. On Saturdays and she and John started going to the r dancing or visiting friends. They l world and acquired other interes learned how to laugh together, hav gether.

"A few months ago Gina and John Germany, where he is doing his milit ice. Gina is realizing a lifetime aml continuing her musical studies abr she and John, as I gather by corresp are now talking about starting a fa whether Gina will ever shine as a pianist, I don't know. I do predict a s marriage for them, a marriage es on a sensible, companionable, lovi Recently I had a letter from John it said:

"'My father is touring Europe. T night we asked him to our quarte bang-up, home-cooked meal. I m help me with the dishes while Gina p us. My father seemed proud to see m form. Then he remarked he was surp Army took me. Afterward Gina an laugh over that. These days, thank we seem to understand each other so quarrels worth mentioning, very fe ences of opinion. We are having a wo happy life together.'"

Editors' Note: This case history was con condensed from actual records by

DOROTHY CAMERON DISNE

GERTRUDE LAWRENCE AS MRS. A

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 69

joke to make our Miss Gee Merle told me. "*De*glamourize- me assignment. Changing her of it. One of the interviewers lked 'like a young deer.' Irving irector, had an awful time walk heavily and clumsily." g deer" was an exact descrip- first time I saw her in Private y, less than a week before her e started to spring out of her hospital bed, against doctors' orders, to show me a dance step she had invented, I was fascinated by the precision and grace of her movements. To watch her walk across the room or stride across the lawn at The Berries, or run from our beach house fifty feet across the sand to plunge into the bay, was similar to seeing a virtuoso playing a great instrument to produce a passage of exquisite clarity and beauty. If there was ever a woman with whom a man could fall in love for her walk alone, that woman was Gertrude.

Gertrude was not attuned to the Hollywood social climate. As she wrote to me once, "Everyone is jumpy and unsure. This isn't the Theatre. Their name for it is right—the Industry."

This fish-out-of-water feeling was accentuated for Gertrude by the atmosphere of the set on which she worked every day, a dreary tenement flat overlooking a grimy alley. The furnishings were cheap and shabby. She lived ten to twelve hours a day enveloped by hopeless and unredeemed ugliness. The part she played—the poverty-riddled mother of a lame, lonely daughter and a rebellious son—further undermined her morale. Throwing herself into the role unsparingly, she lost part of her own identity, until the frustration and failure inherent in Tennessee Williams' tragic story impregnated her normally blithe nature.

"Dear one: I didn't mean to blub over you today on the telephone," one of her notes reads. "Please don't worry. I shall snap back . . . as time goes by . . . I shall have several months in which to toughen up. . . ."

Gertrude's mood of self-doubt was apparent to anyone who had known her over a long period. Director Edmund Goulding, as an old friend and as a director, understood her sensitivity to the role. "Don't let this part get you down, chum," he advised.

She confessed that it had. "When I look in the mirror, I don't see me. I see that dreary has-been Amanda. She's even begun to color my thinking—about myself, and ——"

"And Richard?" Goulding asked.

Gertrude nodded.

GOULDING looked at her. "Since Richard has never seen you made up for the part, there's no reason to believe that he thinks of you except as you are—beautiful, desirable, entertaining and valuable. That makes you quite a packet. When a man gets hold of a good thing, he wants to hold on to it."

Toward the end of the year, I managed to fly out to Hollywood to spend some time with Gertrude. The week we had together did a great deal for both of us.

Unfortunately, there were a couple of weeks of shooting left on the picture, so Gertrude could not return to New York with me. I arranged instead to join her in Florida as soon as the studio released her.

It was the latter part of January when I went to Tampa to meet her incoming plane from California. She came down the ramp carrying one of those canvas bassinets the air lines furnish to transport infants. It held something completely swaddled in a pale blue afghan.

"What is that?" I demanded.

She glanced around warily. Seeing that no one was watching, she gently pulled down a corner of the blanket—exposing a plant with glossy leaves. She explained that this was a small orange tree on which she had grafted other citrus fruits—all California varieties. It would be interesting to experiment adding Florida specimens to the collection to see what such a union would bring forth.

"But why the blanket?" I asked. "There is no frost here."

"It's not the climate I'm afraid of," she replied. "Remember when I came home from England and brought some plants for the garden? The customs men held me on the dock for a long time. It even got out that Gertrude Lawrence was suspected of smuggling."

I pointed out that there was no customs inspection for travel within the United States.

"But this is Florida," she rebuked me. "And I'm coming from California. How do you know what regulations they have? I'm taking no chances."

Passing a bored policeman in the doorway, she gazed fondly down at the bundle in the basket and then up at me. "Darling," she said sweetly, "everyone says he's the image of you."

We drove to Naples to spend our vacation. There were long hours when she sun-bathed in a sheltered spot. She took me shelling. We confined our fishing to the pier—I having shown myself no sailor on our one and only deep-sea trip. As an officer in the Naval Reserve, my acute susceptibility to seasickness brought jeers until Gertrude defended me with the reminder, "Lord Nelson was seasick too." Out of consideration for me she gave up going out on the Gulf while I was there.

It was a perfect holiday.

However, I was finally obliged to return to New York, where the problems of a busy season demanded my attention. I left Gertrude to bask longer in the sunshine she loved.

I had reckoned without the rumormongers. Although our marriage was on as even a keel as ever, we had spent no time together in New York for two years. Now that no necessity of career held Gertrude away, whenever I was seen around town with this or that star with whom I had business dealings, eyebrows were raised. So far as I knew, the tongue-wagging

s for Toddlers
itle prices

Spencer's with confidence
Spencer's has made only baby over 25 years. Each gar-ed for weight and age, d (for shrink-resistance) phane - packed. Choose oft-spun and soft-combed each tops for toddlers at ce!

Tie-side shirt
(sizes 1-6) about 39c.
Triple-crotch panty
(sizes 00-4) about 29c.

OFT PUN
encer's
BABY UNDIES
COMMENDED PARENTS' MAGAZINE
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

RE TO BUY SPENCER'S
o. W. W. Mac Co. — Eagle Stores
Neisner Brothers — Effird's
C. M. S. Stores — Gorin's
Kobacker Stores — Coronet Stores
Rose's 5-10-25 Stores — A. L. Duckwall Stores
V. J. Elmore Co. — Sprouse-Reitz
Belk Stores — T. G. Y. Stores
Perry Bros. — Raylass Stores
Morgan E. Lindsey — Mack's 5 & 10 Stores
M. H. Lamston Co. — G. F. Wacker Stores
Emery Stores — Hested Stores
And many others

AIRY KNITTING CO.
iry • North Carolina

TO CELEBRATE a wedding, a new home, an anniversary . . . this COOK BOOK. Everything one needs, including meal-planning, nutrition, table-setting, triple-tested recipes. Over 5½ million copies in use today. Nothing quite like it. Only $3.95 (Canada $4.50).

TO GUIDE the beginner or the more experienced. This HANDYMAN'S BOOK proves there's no magic in being "handy" . . . it's just a matter of getting clear directions. Here are professional methods, spelled out in ABC's, 1-2-3 step pictures, too. Only $3.95 (Canada $4.50). Tells how to do 1600 repairs and improvements!

SHOWS HOW TO PLAN and to plant just the garden one wants. Helps avoid the disappointment and expense of mistakes. Excellent for giving any gardener assurance. At any good bookstore, hardware or seed store. Half a million copies in use. Only $3.95 (Canada $4.50) for this 520-page volume with 20 chapters and 1159 pictures.

YOU CAN GIVE ANYONE A BOOK

Christmas! The time for that wisely chosen gift . . . a book.

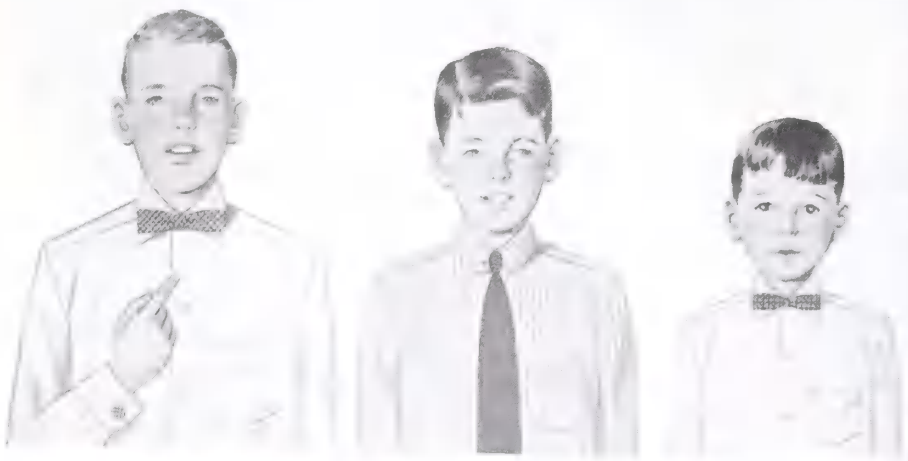
That's when you want your gift to be thoughtful, personal, important. The right book is all three . . . especially if you write your name on the flyleaf. Besides, books are not expensive.

You can buy any of the books shown here wherever books are sold. If you prefer, order direct from Better Homes and Gardens, 902 Meredith Bldg., Des Moines 3, Iowa. Money refunded if not satisfied.

TO REWARD . . . or to surprise a promising child and to help him learn to read. In this volume, 50 stories, fables, rhymes and lessons approved for children from 3 to 8. Pictures from original editions. Only $2.95.

IT ANSWERS SO MANY QUESTIONS. And 12,439 physicians own it, refer patients to it. Step-by-step photographs, time tables, charts, menus aid the text. Only $2.95. Sold at bookstores and infants' and children's departments.

Remember . . . always too few shopping days left till Christmas.



Now! Arrow Dress Shirts for boys in EXACT sleeve lengths and collar sizes!

The world's most famous shirts for dads are now available for lads!

Here are exciting new Arrow Dress Shirts featuring perfect fit for boys of all ages.

These beautifully detailed shirts fit better for two reasons. They are "Sanforized"-labeled (fabric shrinkage not more than 1%). They are cut to exact sleeve lengths and collar sizes. Choose the Arrow Par, above, with widespread collar. Launders with ease . . . will last till your boy outgrows it. "Junior" styles $3.50, "Grad" styles $3.65.

ARROW
SHIRTS FOR BOYS
by Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc.

Left, an Arrow Bi-Way with low-set, soft collar and French cuffs. "Junior" styles $2.95 up. "Grad" styles $3.65. Center, the Arrow Radnor features a rounded collar worn with collar pin. "Junior" styles $3.50, "Grad" styles $3.95. Right, an Arrow Sussex Button-Down in fine quality Oxford. "Junior" styles $3.50, "Grad" styles $3.95.

and innuendoes had not reached Gertrude. I was therefore totally unprepared for the letter which reached me on Valentine's Day:

Dearest: I guess you will have your old lady back after all, and I shall be very happy to go around the town with you, so there! But I do wish "little birds" wouldn't write hints to me that have horrid interpretations about you.

Please tell me if you aren't happy with me—or if you are bothered by trying to be in more than one pair of arms! I couldn't blame you—darling—it would be my fault—I want you to be happy, but my work has always made a mess of my personal life, so I could face it again I guess & go on my way.

Don't for God's sake stay with me because of habit, or because of the fear of hurting me. Be in love, be free, but please be truthful for both our sakes. Your own,

"MRS. A"

When my eyes came to the end of the second page, my hand went toward the telephone. I put in a call to Gertrude at Naples. In a voice which I tried to keep quiet and steady, I said I was taking the plane south that afternoon.

"But, Richard, what about your play? Haven't you a lot to do?"

"There's nothing in my life so important as our being together," I said. "If you doubt that, even for an instant, I must come down at once and make it clear."

"No, darling," she said quickly. "I'll fly to you. It's my place to do it. And it's what I want. You never wanted to be a star's husband. And right now, what I want more than anything else in the world is to be Mrs. Richard Stoddard Aldrich. Your Mrs. A. . . ."

While Gertrude was still in Florida, Joseph Mankiewicz had approached her agents to secure her for the lead in his forthcoming picture All About Eve. The script gave promise of becoming one of the best pictures of the year; the role would give an actress plenty of opportunity to qualify for an Oscar. Not the least of the inducements was the salary which the studio was prepared to pay in order to get Gertrude.

"I'm turning it down," she informed me.

"Are you sure that's wise?"

"I'm sure it's very foolish—financially speaking. And it won't help my career. But—I want to be Mrs. A."

She had plunged into the role of Mrs. A with an intensity that left me breathless. No man I knew was so lovingly looked after in all matters of comfort, health and companionship. It was even better than during our honeymoon winter on Long Island when she had tried to turn me into a country squire—or during my first six months in the Navy when she was grooming me for a hero's glorious death.

A man would do nothing, if he waited until he could do it so well that no one would find fault with what he has done. —CARDINAL NEWMAN

SHE was standing beside my bed, folding the silk bedspread which she had removed. "You must nap, darling," she said briskly, "if we are going down to Maurice Evans' party tonight after the play." I took off my coat. Before I could drape it over the back of a chair, Gertrude had taken it from me and was hanging it neatly on the proper hanger in the closet.

"Noel is right," I remarked. "You never underplay."

I watched her cross to the window, slim and alluring as ever—yet crisply efficient. "The devoted little wife," I murmured. "I wouldn't dare let any of my friends know how well I'm taken care of. Their wives would all gang up on you. But I'm onto your game. You're just working to make me realize how much I'll miss you when you go into your next play."

She turned quickly. "Who said anything about a play?"

"No one. But I've noticed quite a flurry of calls to and from the Holtzmann office the past few days. Something is up, Mrs. A."

I was in bed and Gertrude was smoothing the covers about my shoulders. She could never resist an opportunity to play nurse.

"Always Right Aldrich," she said lightly. "Something is up. Something big and very wonderful. I can't tell you yet. It's still too uncertain. But Fanny is working on it a know soon and then I can tell you ever

"Including when I am going to Mrs. A?"

She leaned over and kissed me "You'll never lose her for long again. I'm resolved on that. Even if everythi out as I hope it will, there can't be a next year. For the first time you ar have a whole year to ourselves wit career getting in our way."

The "something big and very wo was the plan for The King and I.

GERTRUDE's "sabbatical year" pro with some memorable experiences. least of which was the twenty-fifth re my class—1925—at Harvard.

At Gertrude's insistence, I reluct ceded to the class secretary's request t a cocktail party launching the reuni then on, there was no holding her. She the model Harvard wife, discreet anc during our three-day stay; as enthus any amateur over her role as a memb Wives' Entertainment Committee.

Gertrude was one of the six perfo the comedy sketch put on by the wiv prelude to the gala dance at the Hote set. What the lyrics lacked in sophi was more than balanced for that auc the personal allusions to the husban performers. Gertrude sang so direct that I felt my ears redden:

"Now Pinza may sing better than the that I picked,
And frankly, as a playwright, Noel got him licked.
Fonda's profile is better, and Fred more spry
But I wouldn't s my Harvard guy

"Darling, isn't she cried when I her for the first dan ing by the light in she might have bee ager at her first pr

Halfway through Ruby Newman, th tra leader, begged her to sing a few Gertrude looked at me inquiringly. I she stepped to the mike and the swung into "Jenny."

Gertrude gave them "Jenny" as sh to that startled first-night audience i years before, with a gay mischievous and the finest bumps ever produced yard since its founding in 1636.

After that she couldn't beg off. For hour she entertained with her old son songs and songs that she hardly kne ever she did, the audience loved.

Brooks Harlow scrambled up on form beside Gertrude as she finished and raised his hand for silence.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he bega Aldrich has given us a thrill here tor we'll all remember a long, long time. to do the same for her by giving h straight-from-the-heart Harvard che

As the ancient rallying cry rang rafters, staid businessmen cast off the lated years of dignity and shouted th tion; a feeling of exultation and goo ship ran through the entire crowd. the memory of anyone present ha tribute been paid to a woman at Ha

I kept my eyes on Gertrude, alon describably humble in the center of th saw her sway momentarily at the mi and realized that she was on the poi lapse. The intense activity, topped c hour of solo singing and now the exci the crowd's ovation, had been too muc

I bolted toward the platform. I pu firmly around Gertrude. With my fre signaled Ruby Newman to start playi thing—anything that would break th mood and restore a quieter atmosph

Ruby did not let me down. He q his orchestra in a spirited renditio waltz, Two Hearts in Three Quarter

I led Gertrude down from the plat in a moment the two of us were spinni the dance floor.

ır step," she whispered. "We ound.

lone on the floor, like an exhibiam, watched by nearly a thou-rs. And I did not mind. Although considered myself more than a cer, I felt myself gliding along hly, borne without effort on an ide of rhythm.
racle or an illusion? To this day,
v. But miracle or illusion, it was rtrude on that strange and won-hing clouded the happiness of of 1950. This was my mother's When we drove over to Groton found her a little weaker, a little

d. She was in her ninetieth year.
ess, was lowering her strength on life.
ınd Aunt Alice were with mother
me. The three Joys held stanchly ıer. Mother, well aware of the shadow, spoke several times with ı of the custom which would re-ing buried in Upton with my fa-drich plot, and not in her beloved Groton.
Joy had died while I was over-ıe war. "Joy is resting in Groton bara's little Peter, and I will be on," mother sighed to Gertrude sit. Gertrude comforted her with , "But, darling, Richard and I chard and David—we will all be u someday."
low far from my mind was the less than two years after my th, Gertrude would rest beside er always seemed better and ı Gertrude was with her. She was sted in the forthcoming play beom Anna and the King of Siam. forth for Gertrude innumerable issionaries she had known had t Siam in the days of Mrs. Anna's ut Anna Leonowens herself. Bese reminiscences, Gertrude said d the feeling that she herself had ıl Mrs. Anna. One of my mother's Gertrude was the copy of Anna book An English Governess at Siam.

ı came over the land, we all other, who loved this season and ed many of its colored leaves een the pages of the books she tly, would not see the winter. In ys, Barbara and my niece Rosaoy's daughter, who lived nearby, ragement of Gertrude's presence tical helpfulness. And I became ne edge of Gertrude's character otherwise have escaped me.

, for all the vigor of her personıy woman. She disliked publicity hile in Groton, Gertrude was about not being recognized as wrence. When she went on an would wear an old raincoat; her e covered with a scarf or tied back able pony tail. She looked only a ler than Rosamond.
rs after my mother's death, a re-oned the house. He asked whether le Lawrence would be coming to he funeral. "No," Gertrude an's busy with her new play in New fied, the reporter hung up without ned his story.
then I realized how scrupulously d always deferred to mother's ublicity. She never spoke of her w to interviewers, or to most of n the theater with whom she was ouch. Few of them knew I had a ıat Gertrude and she enjoyed an relationship.
e mother died, I was sitting with through some old snapshot alovered that a good many of the had been cut into, apparently re scissors, and figures and faces removed. In reply to my query, mother explained that it was her custom to go through the books from time to time and censor them. Anyone appearing in the books who seemed to her to have behaved wrongly was snipped out. Barbara's first husband had been dealt with in this fashion. A boy I had played with and who later figured in Mayor Curley's political machine had been excised from a picnic gathering, leaving a leg behind.

But the most extraordinary renovation had been given to a photograph of my father, taken in Egypt, the Pyramids and Sphinx in the background. In front of these were several camels ridden by tourists. Arab dragomans supervised all but one of the camels. This last, ridden by a plump lady in black basque, flowing skirt and a neat black bonnet, was held by father; in his good Boston woolen suit, his imposing gold watch and chain and with his stout umbrella, father looked more than a match for any camel.

The photograph had been familiar to me since childhood. But mother's scissors had worked a strange alchemy on the familiar scene. Father stood there still, assertive and competent. The camel was in place. But the lady in the basque had vanished. Over her, mother had pasted a head of Gertrude. Beside the Sphinx, Gertrude smiled demurely at father and his fellow pilgrims to the Holy Land. At my exclamation of surprise, mother placed her hand on mine. "He would have liked it, Richard," she said. "I have regretted many times that your father never knew Gertrude."

With her scissors and paste, mother had done what she could to make up to father for this loss. No daughter-in-law could have been given a greater accolade.

In November of 1950, Gertrude wrote to her English friend, Evie Williams:

CONTINUED ON PAGE 161

Be nice to your husband

Present him with these wonderful grooming aids featured at

STANLEY HOSTESS PARTIES

Chairman Line Products come both in bottles (except Shavin and in the Stanley-Flex containers (fine for traveling) show

Here's a sure way to delight your husband . . . or any man you wish to please. For his birthday, for Christmas, or for anytime you wish to make him particularly happy, remember him with gifts of Stanley's excellent, new "he man" Chairman Line Products and other Stanley Quality Plus Products designed for men. You shop for these, as well as for many other superior Stanley grooming aids for yourself and children, at Stanley Hostess Parties. At these Parties too, your friendly Stanley Dealer demonstrates Stanley's wealth of Products to save you lots of time and work in practically every housekeeping task. Why not attend, or give, one of these fun-filled Stanley Parties soon?

STANLEY LEADS with more than 150 Quality Plus Products featured exclusively by Stanley Dealers at Stanley Hostess Parties: Toilette Articles, Bath Accessories, Personal and Clothing Brushes, newest scientific aids to Dental Hygiene, many other Personal Grooming items. Mops, Brushes, Dusters, Brooms, Waxes, Polishes, Cleaning Chemicals, Deodorizers, Moth Preventives, other modern "helps" to save you time, work, money, in the better care of your home.

Most Popular

Millions of homemakers now shop yearly at Stanley's famous Hostess Parties. More than 12,000 of these enjoyable shopping Parties now take place each day. To arrange for your own Stanley Hostess Party, phone or write your Stanley Dealer, your nearest Stanley Home Products Branch Office, or communicate direct with Stanley's main office in Westfield, Mass.

(Copr. Stanley Home Products, Inc., 1954)

STANHOME
A STANLEY HOME PRODUCT

Originators of the Famous Stanley Hoste Party Plan

Stanley Home Products, Inc., Westfield, Mass.
Stanley Home Products of Canada, Ltd., London, C

NUED FROM PAGE 159

vie: It is ages since I wrote, but s nothing to do, I am busier than man with Mrs. Vincent Astor of a hich we are giving to raise funds n National Theatre and Academy Eve. I am on the fund-raising he Memorial Center for Cancer ases, I am making recordings for erica which we hope reaches into t-occupied countries. There are rances in connection with The e, and soon there will be costume King and I.

ot too gay these days. Richard's k, has been called for the Army, s senior year at University of Vir- wed to graduate and will go in a mess looks horrible. Big Rich- due for special duty in Naval In- is all hush-hush. Even I am not his job is to be, or where he will es for Washington early in Janu- me rehearsals start for my play. ctor Bill have cracked up. She is e suburbs and doing odd jobs in Well, they both seem happier now d and I suppose one should ad- ge in facing facts.

where any of us may be next year, have Pam, Richard's two boys, len, her husband and their young I's sister Barbara all for dinner on ou are well and have a decent hat this new meat rationing won't impossible.

s letter indicates, the news from bled her exceedingly, as did the young Dick's being sent to the time came for me to leave ing I never knew her to do be- e down completely. "I don't see hrough it all again," she said as d up in her eyes. "I could be u went the last time. But it's It breaks my heart to think that eally accomplished by all the th. Peace is no nearer. Are we er wasting lives and happiness?" reassure her, nor could I com- at there dutifully stitching tapes e to my shirts, underwear and ad done back in 1942, proudly urn the dreary job over to en I tried to inject a note of ying that she was sewing so Japanese or South Korean would ever rub the labels off, verted. "Not Korea, darling. I f they send you to Korea. We fore. God has been so good to us. I'm choked up with thankfulness all the time. But will we be lucky always? It makes me afraid, and I've never been afraid before."

Soon afterward I found on her dressing table a little printed card: "One secret of a sweet and happy Christian life is learning to live by the day . . . Anyone can carry his burden, however heavy, till nightfall. Anyone can do his work, however hard, for one day. This is all life ever means to us—just one little day. . . . God gives us nights to shut down upon our little days. We cannot see beyond. Short horizons make life easier and give us one of the blessed secrets of brave, true, holy living."

How much this philosophy meant to Gertrude is revealed by the fact that when she went out she carried the card in her purse. It was always with her. That she did not stop with merely keeping it near her, like an amulet, but assimilated its philosophy was shown more and more through the last year and a half of her life. All of us who knew her best realized that she had acquired a peace of mind which lifted her above worrying, above daily annoyances, even above physical pain.

She had always been courageous, especially about refusing to allow illness or even a painful accident to interfere with her work in the theater. While playing at my Falmouth Playhouse in the summer of 1950, she suffered a fall while wading on some rocks one afternoon. That night, just before her entrance, she fainted. Dennis King, who was playing with her—the play was Traveller's Joy—had to announce that Miss Lawrence had had a "slight indisposition"—an understatement that was belied by his agitated expression. He asked the audience to wait until he had more definite news to announce. Suddenly, Gertrude's voice was heard clearly, protestingly: "I'm all right." She came on and went through the play, though she was suffering excruciating pain in her back. Next day when she was X-rayed, it was known she had broken three vertebrae. The injury troubled her at times for a long period.

At a matinee of The King and I, in Boston, when she made her entrance for the scene with the King's wives before they welcome the British ambassador, the heavy steel hoop holding out the very full skirt of her pink satin gown caught in something, throwing her forward. There was a horrified gasp as the audience saw her gloved hands reach out and find nothing to cling to, saw her fall, her body hidden by the billowing skirts of the royal wives. Then came her voice, just as at Falmouth: "I'm all right." I'm all right was Gertrude's philosophy to the very end.

Early in our life together she said wistfully that she wished she had a religion. My reply was that she seemed to be confusing religion with church membership; whatever she chose to do about the latter, she had the former in a very live and flourishing state, much according to the pattern of the early apostles.

"But what is religion, Richard?" she asked.

I referred her to the definition Professor Whitehead gave us at Harvard: "A man's religion is what he does with his own solitariness."

Gertrude, more than anyone I ever knew, dedicated her solitariness to love. All her work for and her generous gifts to others were illumined by love. She wanted to help people, severally and en masse, because she loved people. It hurt her when she had to work with someone for whom she could not find some love. Those she had once found lovable she kept loyally in her heart and in her life. Most of her friends were old friends. She might not see them often, but the tie was never broken.

When rehearsals were called for The King and I early in 1951, Gertrude necessarily stopped all her other activities. Her letters to me in Washington spoke of the length of the play and the amount of work there was in it. She was very happy that Yul Brynner had been engaged to play the King.

Sandy Kennedy was to play the role of Mrs. Anna's son Louis. Gertrude had known his family for years. When Sandy came to his first rehearsal he was shy and plainly in awe of Gertrude. She recognized this and immediately set about rectifying it. "Hello, Louis, I'm your mummie," she said gaily. From then on, she helped Sandy identify himself with the role he played. She put on his make-up until he learned how to do it himself. After that, he would present himself at her dressing room, before every performance, for what they laughingly called "inspection." Gertrude would check his make-up and costume. With consummate skill and care she introduced him to what the professional knows as "theater." Still more carefully and artfully, she encouraged him to live his part.

While she was, as she used to tell him, his "backstage mummie," she gave Sandy the sort of companionship that made him feel that he and she were contemporaries. It had been the same years before with my sons. Few adults have this ability; but Gertrude had it. When we went to the Kennedys', as we sometimes did, she always spent time upstairs with Sandy, playing with his trains and his puppy. In doing this Gertrude did not condescend. She enjoyed herself hugely.

THE fifteen Puerto Rican tots who played the royal children in The King and I became fanatically attached to Gertrude, whom they called "Missis Anna." They came to her with their childish troubles, as when one little girl lost her shoes and was afraid of parental discipline when she went home. Gertrude sent Hazel out with the child to buy new ones.

The children added immeasurably to the charm of the play, but they also appeared to constitute an almost insurmountable drawback to a London production. Gertrude wrote one of her English friends:

> As for being home for the Coronation, that is very debatable. I had set my heart on playing at Drury Lane, but there is great doubt whether we can do The King and I in London at all, due to the Child Labor Laws. We have seventeen children in the play and they must be children. Not midgets. Ours here range from seven to eleven years and they are divine. Real children, not academy kids. So it presents a grave problem as we cannot do the play without them.

The children in the cast created problems here too. During rehearsals there was an epidemic of colds among them which spread to the adults in the cast. Gertrude went on at the New Haven opening with a fever of 103°.

The costumes for her roles were enchanting and beautiful. However, it was especially difficult for her to accustom herself—she who moved naturally "like a young deer"—to the weight of the skirts which were held out by heavy steel hoops.

Gertrude attacked this problem with customary directness. Before the play opened on the road, she borrowed a hoop from the Brooks Costume Company and wore it around "Look at it this way. The more you practice, the stronger your throwing arm will get."

Snap it up,
with speedy DOTS.

With fasteners
so handy,

Everything
at baby's end is always fine and dandy.

Dot Snappers are the fabric-flat, laundry-proof fasteners that are more convenient for you, more comfortable for baby. When buying any infants' or children's wearables—panties, sleepers, creepers, overalls, sun suits or pajamas—look for Dot Snap Fasteners. And, for your home sewing, ask for the Dot Snappers Kit, with the professional attaching tool, at notions counters, $1. Refill, 25¢.

snap! it's open!
snap! it's closed!
it's a snap with
DOT®

UNITED-CARR, FIRST IN FASTENERS, CAMBRIDGE 42, MASS.

the apartment until she could move with the grace she wanted to achieve on the stage.

One Saturday, as I went up to her dressing room to take her out to dinner between shows, Hazel called me aside.

"Mr. Aldrich, someone has to do something about those steel hoops," she said. "She'll never complain, but her knees and legs are just black and blue with bruises. Every time Miss L. curtsies to the King, the hoops hit her—and she curtsies more than fifty times in each performance. I've counted."

I knew that Gertrude would say nothing about the hoops, since she thought they were an essential part of the performance. Therefore, without her knowledge, I requested the Holtzmann office to suggest to the management that lightweight metal or bamboo hoops be substituted for the steel.

Those who had followed Gertrude's career, like John van Druten, were impressed by what they considered a change in her which was revealed by her playing of Mrs. Anna. The gaiety was there, but veiled. As John said, "Her comedy in the part was gentler, Victorian, almost evasive, and her touch on the sweeter and more personal notes was stronger and surer than New York had seen before." They did not know—how should they?—that what they saw was not a Victorian English governess exerting a transforming influence on Gertrude Lawrence, but, for the first time in the theater, the emergence of Mrs. A.

It took Gertrude a long time to find herself; to discover and express that part of her personality which was the core of her individuality. She had played so many roles through the years, starting in childhood, that she had had scant opportunity, time and strength to develop what was essentially and truly herself. Much of the time she was not sure what she herself was, and she tried to be a great many selves. Noel's phrase comes to mind: Seven women under one hat.

The inner indecision and instability was what fascinated many people as much as it disturbed them. They realized that much of the time she was play-acting to herself, as much as to the world. They wondered, as one of her friends said, "would she ever alight?"

During the year she was out of the theater—the year she spoke of dedicating to Mrs. A—Gertrude made an important discovery. She came to realize—not without some sense of shock—that the woman she was with me, in our moments of greatest clarity and tenderness, was her innermost self. Mrs. A, which many of her old intimates suggested was "just another role that Gee was trying out" for as long as it amused her, was actually the basic truth of her.

Returning to the stage, Gertrude brought a new set of values, a maturity and self-confidence that greatly enriched her talent. She was a greater actress because she was greater as a woman.

To what greater height she would have climbed, had time been given her, is one of the things I am unwilling to dwell upon. I can only be deeply glad that before the curtain fell for her, that richer, deeper self which she gave to me was given also to the theater she loved and served so loyally. It is as Mrs. Anna that she will live in the minds of the many thousands who knew her only from across the footlights. And this is good. They will know her as she very often was, and as she would have been more and more through the years, had these been granted her.

As warm weather came on, I became concerned. Gertrude was committed to remain in the play throughout the summer. It would be the first time she had played during the hot weather for many years, and I dreaded it for her. She always wilted in New York summers. I suggested that we take a house in land or along the Connecticut sh which she could motor to the theater

"I won't take a house more than from the theater," Gertrude declare won't be dependent on transportatio if necessary, I can walk to work."

Through her volunteer work on cancer research, Gertrude had r Hines, chairman of the Women's C of the New York Cancer Society a friend of mine. When Gertrude r that she was looking for a house Betty said, "Don't look any furthe you to have my house for the summ

Betty planned to spend the summ rope. Before leaving she not only house put in order for Gertrude's e she also had it air-conditioned. Th sort of thing Gertrude would do fo but, as she told me, it was the first t experience that a friend had bee ciously generous to her. Dorothy h her husband were re-engaged on a basis to live in the house. Hood bec trude's chauffeur and Dorothy res long-time role of devoted personal n easy in mind about her even when, e summer of 1951, I was ordered to sp in Europe.

During that summer the heat w than it had been in many years. Ba the St. James Theatre the temperat stuffy dressing rooms stood in the nin Gertrude, condemned to wear hoo satin costumes over many petticoats ant wig and bonnets, the prolonged was torture. Friends who came bac see her marveled how she stood it.

One of the friends who came was of the board of an electric-appliance on whose radio program Gertrude ha guest appearance when her autobiogr published. The friendly relations e then had continued through the yea ping his brow, her visitor said to "You mean too much to our compa to let you melt away. We will air- this dressing room for you."

Unfortunately the location of the room presented a difficult engineering for the proper functioning of the a tioner. Gertrude asked them to put into the room where the chorus dres

The girls' gratitude was shown at performance, when the King's wives themselves in their new crinolines

WHY DOCTORS PRESCRIBE MEDICATED VAPOR FOR RELIEF OF CROUP AND COLD CONGESTION

Light, diagramed areas indicate cold-congested Nose, Sinus, Throat and Bronchial Tubes. Arrows show how Medicated Vapor penetrates to relieve deep-seated Croup and Cold Congestion.

PENETRATING POWER OF MEDICATED VAPOR PROVIDES SWIFT, SURE, SAFE RELIEF FROM DEEP-SEATED COLD CONGESTION

The medical profession in general and child specialists in particular, approve the principle of moistening dry, inflamed mucous membranes of nose, throat and bronchial tract with a medicated vapor . . . to soothe soreness, contract swollen tissue, and thin thick, clogging phlegm to a watery, easy-to-get-rid-of consistency.

DOCTORS, HOSPITALS, DRUGGISTS AGREE!

Doctors agree that the ideal method of carrying medicated moisture to these cold-congested areas of the head and chest is an electric vaporizer. And the ideal electric vaporizer is the completely safe KAZ, America's largest-selling Electric Vaporizer.

NONE SO EFFICIENT, YET SO SAFE!

KAZ Electric Vaporizers have an Automatic Shutoff that turns off the electric current when the water has boiled away. In addition the Kaz Patented Safety Lock prevents vaporizer from being opened until electricity has been disconnected. And the easy-to-clean Kaz Separate Medical Chamber insures uniform flow of medicated vapor. Available at drug stores everywhere, KAZ Electric Vaporizers are priced from $2.00 to $6.95.

KAZ ELECTRIC VAPORIZERS ARE APPROVED BY UL
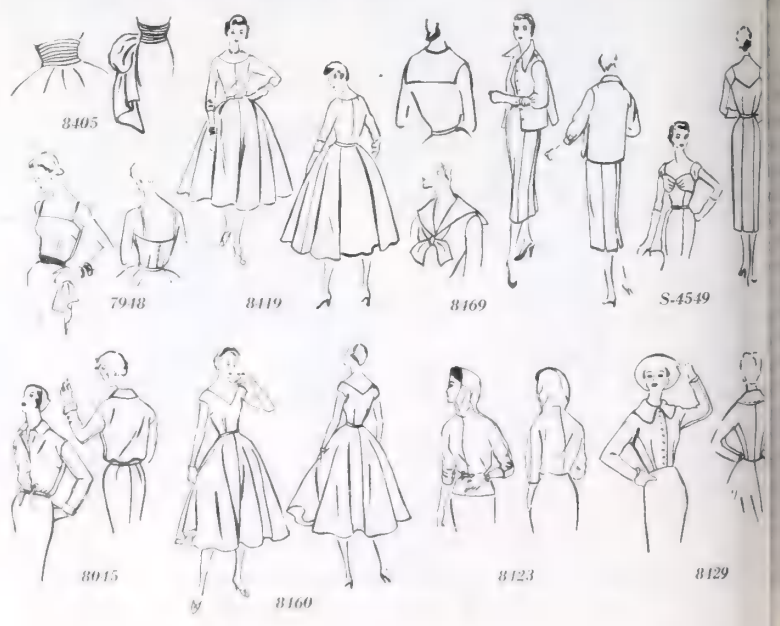
GUARANTEED BY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
COMMENDED BY PARENTS' MAGAZINE



KAZ-FOR-COLDS INHALANT

And to medicate moisture doctors prescribe, hospitals use and druggists recommend the formula you find in KAZ-FOR-COLDS, the only INHALANT especially formulated for use in electric vaporizers . . . a medically-approved compound of six United States Pharmacopoeia-tested ingredients that, unlike greasy or gummy medications, will not foul or clog heating elements to impair the efficiency or shorten the life of vaporizers. KAZ-FOR-COLDS INHALANT, included free of extra cost with the purchase of KAZ ELECTRIC VAPORIZERS, is available at all druggists in 35¢, 50¢ and $1.00 sizes.

KAZ ELECTRIC VAPORIZER — KAZ MANUFACTURING COMPANY, INC. NEW YORK 36, N.Y.

OTHER VIEWS OF VOGUE PATTERNS ON PAGES 76

Vogue Design No. 8405. Accessories, 22 to 30 waist. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 7948. "Very Easy to Make" bodices; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 8419. "Easy to Make" two-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75
Vogue Design No. 8469. "Easy to Make" collars; Small (32–34), Medium (36–38)
Vogue Design No. S-4549. One-piece dress and jacket; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. $1.50.
Vogue Design No. 8045. Jacket; 12 to 18, 30 to 36. 50c. This pattern is available t mail order only from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Ave., Greenwich, Conn.
Vogue Design No. 8460. "Very Easy to Make" one-piece dress or jumper dress; 1 20, 30 to 38. 60c.
Vogue Design No. 8423. "Easy to Make" blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 8429. Jacket; 10 to 18, 28 to 36. 60c.

before the reception of the dor. Standing at one side of rynner inspected the row of opposite him with Gertrude them. Suddenly, at his bark wives prostrated themselves.
crinolines, disclosing to Geriew the underpants. On each tter in lipstick. The letters age: WE LOVE YOU.

July 20, 1951

ere I am all alone up in my bal-In spite of the heat, or perhaps house grows more divine every eturn to America, we cannot go setrap on Fifty-fourth Street. I nouses, and I hope to have a you when you come back to ss you so. I have sent the cold are on the labels. You take one own together. As to your um-darling, how attached you are end it to you as almost everyone ready gone to Europe for the believe it would be cheaper and r you to make the effort to over-England thrift and go to the te and buy yourself a new one.
u got my cable, dearest. It is have an address which will find in the war I had that. . . . Yes-When I got to "Young Lovers" gave out. Our meetings and ys so casual, yet when you go ou terribly. I realize how lucky n my life but I often wonder also the same about me. Now that ain you may be thinking about much enjoyment out of being you have till you get

vant. —IRISH PROVERB

If you had a wife who did not could be with you. Should you e please let me know. I want you ve all things. You deserve someates you more obviously than I eeply but am self-conscious and work and I know you need more n I give.
off me I'll spit in your eye!
Angel. Write whenever you can.
Ever thine,
Mrs. A.

years of marriage, I knew Gerugh to realize that a sense of her personal relations was alm of fatigue. But since I could r, I sent this cable from Paris:

SALIVA SALVO. KEEPING SAME
NEW UMBRELLA. LOVE. MR. A.

more soberly, encouraging her to move into when Betty Hines quite content with our "mouse-
-fourth Street, which was our any house she would grace, I be home to me.
Gertrude telephoned me to re-ntly that she had obtained a ulleses' home at No. 239, next she had also obtained permisver Dulles to redecorate.
is news with grave misgivings.
a liberal way of interpreting " I hastily wrote a note to the sking them to arrange privately ses for the insertion of a clause structural changes; thus I was e that Clover and Allen Dulles rn to find unfamiliar wings and uting from their home.
d to limit her fun to painting ht colors; hanging floral drapes
s over white curtains, scattering ossessions about the house. The her enormously, especially the rary overflowing with books on ffairs, and the old dining-room
d belonged to two former Secre-influence, no doubt, of the ate Dulles house, Gertrude began to acquire notions about a diplomatic career for me. She cited the British idea that men who have established themselves in their professions should take up public duties when they reached a certain age.

It was on those grounds that she justified her sudden plunge into French lessons.

"Haven't you got enough on your hands without that?" I demanded.

"But darling, let's be logical," she argued. "When you become an ambassador, I'll have to know French!"

At that time, Gertrude certainly had a very full schedule. She was an active member of the Women's Advisory Committee of the New York Cancer Committee, and had just made three cancer-campaign motion pictures in the children's ward of Memorial Hospital. She had succeeded Gilbert Miller as chairman of the Mary MacArthur Memorial Appeal of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis. And with Alfred de Liagre, she selected plays for the Five Enchanted Evenings sponsored by the Hospitalized Veterans Music Service.

But this, plus housekeeping and singing lessons, did not complete the inventory of Gertrude's activities; early in September she calmly announced that she had accepted an appointment to the faculty of Columbia University, in the School of Dramatic Arts, of which Dr. Milton Smith was director. Her particular post was instructor of Class 107 in the Study of Roles and Scenes. The class met on Thursday afternoons.

I voiced my disapproval of this undertaking in no uncertain terms. But as weeks went by, I began to see that, rather than taxing Gertrude's strength, the work at Columbia stimulated and revived her. She drew an ingenuous pleasure from being on the faculty. She loved talking about "dropping in at Doctor Smith's office to discuss class problems."

A few weeks before Christmas, the university trustees and faculty gave a Sunday-night reception "to welcome Miss Gertrude Law-

AMERICANS EVERYWHERE NO LONGER SUFFER when Acid Indigestion Strikes

Last Year nearly TWO BILLION TUMS... Instant on-the-spot Relief ...sent Distressed People Happily on Their Way

The American tummy—is now relieved of the pain of heartburn and the discomfort of acid indigestion ... by a little roll of TUMS that costs only 10¢.

For millions of Americans the simple secret of carrying TUMS as faithfully as they carry their keys—has meant the end of discomfort from this common stomach trouble.

At the first sign of sour stomach—like millions of sensible Americans, just pop tasty TUMS in your mouth like candy mints. Instantly, excess acid is neutralized without acid rebound. Heartburn, acid indigestion fade away. TUMS are only 10¢ a roll and you could not buy a safer, quicker, more wonderful relief even for a ten dollar bill.

TUMS for the Tummy

You both rest easy when he goes Pullman

Ask him to—

GO PULLMAN

Comfortable, Convenient and Safe

He can have a "Rent-a-car" waiting for him if he asks the ticket agent

COPYRIGHT 1954, THE PULLMAN COMPANY

rence as professor." Seldom had Gertrude been more flattered. She made her list of special guests with extreme care. As was always her way, she was particular that those who loved her most should be invited. She also let the women among them know that she expected them to do her proud that evening.

She herself went to Hattie Carnegie and ordered a new evening dress. Not to be wanting in respect, some of her guests followed suit. Radie Harris put off her departure for the Coast in order to attend the reception. Obedient to a not-too-veiled hint from Gertrude, she too went out and bought a gown for the occasion.

Before the reception, there was to be a performance which Gertrude had supervised of A Comedy of Errors by the drama students. No first night of her own had ever been attended by such breathless expectancy on her part.

She had Hazel come to the house to dress her. At Hazel's knock on my door, and her message: "Miss L says come and see how she looks," I followed her into Gertrude's room. Gertrude turned from the mirror and came a few steps toward me.

"Well, Richard, will I do?"

Poised there, in her long, shimmering gold gown, she was as radiant, as beautiful and as suggestive of imperishable romance as she had been on that Sunday morning on which our decisive trip to Northfield began. Eleven years of marriage had not dimmed her. She was still the most desirable and exciting woman in the world.

I told her so. More lights seemed to shine in her eyes.

"Then you're pleased with me, darling?"

With Hazel fussing about the room I found it difficult to say how very pleased I was. I took refuge in pleasantry. "No one," I told her, "would ever take you for a schoolteacher."

It was as if the words had pulled a switch. All her lights went out. Gertrude stood there looking at me in sudden consternation.

"Oh, then I can't go on like this," she exclaimed. "I'm wearing the wrong costume. Tonight I'm not Gertrude Lawrence, the actress; I'm Doctor Lawrence of the Columbia faculty, and I must look it. I'll have to change."

Nothing I or a thoroughly irate Hazel could say would move her from that decision. The glittering golden gown had to come off. If she wore it she would be overdressed. She might seem to be showing off.

"Nonsense," I argued. "Everyone expects you to look your best. They'll be disappointed if you don't dress like a star."

"No, Richard," she persisted. "I'm surprised that you don't see it my way." Disregarding Hazel's mutterings, she took a quick survey of the dresses hanging in her closet and selected one of blue-and-gray-checked wool with a matching jacket. "I'll wear that."

"What got into you, Mr. Aldrich, to go and say what you did to Miss L?" Hazel demanded sullenly. "You'd ought to know by now that everything she does is playing a part and she's always got to be dressed right for it—if it's schoolteaching or horseback riding. The trouble with men is they don't know when to keep their mouths shut."

I withdrew in as good order as possible.

WHEN Gertrude joined me she looked demure and disturbingly efficient. On the drive up to Morningside Heights, it was not a great star nor my wife whom I was escorting. It was Professor Lawrence of Class 107.

Hazel's chagrin was as nothing compared with that which appeared on Radie's face when Gertrude came down the aisle to join her "family" in the reserved seats in the front.

"And to think of the time and money I spent dressing up for you, Gee," Radie sputtered. "If this is your idea of a joke, you should see my dress bill!"

"But, dear, you're dressed to perfection for what you are," Gertrude responded with a sweet condescension which must have sent Radie's blood pressure soaring. "You are a guest. But I work here!"

"How about the professors' wives?" Radie shot back. "They've all come in formal dress."

"Because they are guests too," Gertrude replied imperturbably. "They aren't members of the faculty. I am."

As usual, Gertrude's dramatic instinct did not let her down. She was the cynosure of all eyes—the only woman at the reception who was underdressed.

Gertrude by this time was carrying a schedule that, piled onto her eight performances every week in the theater, seemed to me definitely dangerous. "Anna" was by far the most exacting role on Broadway. The physical effort involved in playing it was tremendous. Far worse than this, however, was the nervous strain of the role.

Gertrude had run a high fever in the spring, during the early weeks of the play in Boston. Then she had been taxed badly by the sweltering New York summer—doubly so because of her heavy costumes. When I returned from Paris in the fall of 1951, I found her visibly

SONNET FOR SUBTERFUGE

By FRANCES ELEONORE SCHLUNEGER

Now, being woman, I have pondered long
How much of subterfuge God grants my sex.
Man's means to end are straight, his weapons strong,
But woman's will outdistances such wrecks
As her frail man-to-man endeavors wrought.
And even God, they say, makes strange His ways,
Achieving such great wonders as are sought
For benefit of one with faith, who prays.

Then who am I to contemplate the straight
And obvious paths as being more desired?
I seek my heart one love and I am late.
Brave sons that I would bear are yet unsired. . . .
Bathsheba bathed in no secluded spring,
Else never had she mothered David's king!

weary. I begged her to cut down on her commitments. This she refused to do, but she finally agreed to go to a hospital for a thorough checkup. She spent a week undergoing tests of all sorts, returning each morning and remaining there until theater time; then coming home after the play directly to bed.

The doctors agreed in finding nothing wrong with her; in fact, they reported, she had the physique of a woman in her twenties. She was somewhat tired, but that could be ascribed to working through an excessively hot summer without a vacation.

"Don't do too much," they suggested.

But there was nothing specifically that they banned—and that was all the excuse Gertrude needed for carrying on exactly as before.

One afternoon in December Gertrude insisted on taking me and Angus, her new West Highland terrier, for a walk toward the East River. Going through a side street in a neighborhood of shabby tenements, we had been stopped while piano movers removed a piano from a house into a waiting van. At a ground-floor window, a woman and a little girl watched the proceedings. Sadly, we thought.

"I know just how they feel," Gertrude said. "It used to happen to us. Poor dad would have a little luck and the first th mummie would do to celebrate w get a piano on the hire-purchase loved some music when he drank h the idea was that a piano in the ho only elegant but would be good f was going on the stage. But no stayed with us long. Dad couldn the payments. The company would get it. Those two at the window mummie and me. It's funny, I d I've ever owned a piano all my rented them, or there's been one house, but never really mine."

I REALIZED with relief that this C would know what present to give

I arranged to have the piano d Christmas Eve, when Gertrude mally be making up at the theater it would be a surprise for her whe home. The piano arrived, but my su awry. Gertrude had been sent to t with pleurisy two days before.

On Christmas Day, she was of in a hospital bed. Scores of gifts c there. Conspicuously absent, hov anything from me.

Finally Gertrude inquired, "Richa you a Christmas present for me?"

"Of course. There's a package n for you."

Her face brightened. "Oh, do b and bring it!"

I promised—if I could manage on to the hospital directly from home I might mislay it, I warned. Gertru at that. But the Christmas present s much on her mind. The moment sh home, she asked for it. I told her:

"It's still up in the living roon tree. You can open it on the way t

She darted an odd disbelieving l and moved swiftly up the stairs. O living-room door, she discovered Steinway grand, wrapped in cellop decorated with a huge red bow.

"My very first own piano!" she She tore off the cellophane and sa play until I literally carried her off

In February, Gertrude had a touc chitis. I was increasingly disturbe tendency to colds and by the recurr of which she complained. When charged from the Navy early in 1 termined to do something about n take a rest. Setting aside my establ never to interfere in Gertrude's wo her to leave the play to go South f pointed out that she had created th had made it her own. She had beer the "Tony," the theater's most cheri for giving the best performance of t

She refused to listen to my plea mitted she was tired, but she had neve out of a play before the termination tract in her life. It was a matter of

But I learned it was more than m The obstacles to a London produ longer appeared insurmountable. had set her heart on playing The Kin the Drury Lane during the Coronati

"I promised myself that," she tol I could not budge her.

Nor could Noel. He passed thro York and I talked to him, asking hi vail on Gertrude to take a rest. She u that she always took his advice an understood her better than anyone

Noel took her to Sardi's for lunc what he could to help me. But her him was the same she had given wanted to play Mrs. Anna at Drury L

"The doctors say there's nothing with me," she told Noel, "except been playing the role a year without I could have one week off, just to lie and rest, I would get over this fa then, after my six weeks' holiday this I could carry on to the end of my c June, 1953."

I had been looking forward to C six weeks' summer holiday as much a In the course of our two busy care things were, of necessity, left unsai

CONTINUED ON PAGE 168

NEW DELICIOUS FLAVOR

for frozen fried foods fixed this easy way with Mazola Oil

N MAZOLA OIL METHOD

on top of the stove

ooking time in half!

m you prepare a package of frozen od ust fix it this new, easy way . . . f ne stove with Mazola Oil.

n . . . it takes only half the time ed to the oven method. And what u difference in flavor! When quick- t Mazola Oil on top of the stove o s have that light, fresh, crisp st that everybody likes.

ottom of skillet with a generous o Mazola Oil and preheat it. Add v ite frozen fried food. Fry over e heat, stirring occasionally until olden brown all over. Drain on v els.

ozen fried foods are frosty when k e is opened simply place food on p towels and let stand a few minutes e ve frost...this prevents spattering.)

Produced by Corn Products Refining Co.

FISH STICKS . . . golden-brown outside, tender and tasty inside.

FRENCH FRIES . . . crisp with golden crust, light and wholesome . . . and delicious.

BREADED SHRIMP . . . temptingly tender, fried to crisp perfection in Mazola Oil.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 164

other, many things left undone. The world outside us always encroached on our own lives with demands on our time, with needful separations, with inescapable tasks.

But in these six weeks, I resolved that nothing would interfere with our privacy. Arranging my affairs accordingly, I dedicated myself to making Gertrude's vacation the complete and placid relaxation I knew she needed.

So we spent our days on the beach and in the garden doing nothing—a luxury which most couples take for granted, but which in the past we had had little opportunity to enjoy. Relieved of all tension and strain, Gertrude blossomed. She appreciated my sharing her pleasures—even the sand in the picnic sandwiches and my toleration of the interminable radio soap operas.

Such friends as we entertained were old and comfortable ones—Bea Lillie, Helen Hayes. There were none of the children of the family around us. Dick was at his Air Force base. David, at Gertrude's suggestion and partially as a present from her, had gone on a trip to Europe. Pamela was bicycling around France on a sketching tour.

"What's the matter with us?" Gertrude asked one afternoon as we sat by ourselves in the garden. "We've been together weeks. Do you realize, in all that time, we haven't quarreled about anything? Are we getting adjusted, or just middle-aged?"

"Whatever it is," I replied, "I find it comfortable, don't you?"

Gertrude reached across to the chair in which I was lounging. "It's like peace on earth," she sighed. "I used to see couples in restaurants sitting opposite each other and never saying a word and I'd pray 'Dear God, please don't ever let me be like that!' But they had something that I never had—peace. And it isn't at all dull. It's rather exciting in a strange and deeply satisfying way."

"More than that. It's earth-shaking and revolutionary," I teased. "Do you realize, Mrs. A, that you are now content to leave things as they are? You no longer stuff the Sunday newspapers in the wastebasket the moment I drop them on the floor. It's almost a year since you rearranged my closet and bureau drawers. And you haven't given anything of mine away since you sent my accordion to the Disabled Veterans."

"That old squeeze box!" Gertrude scoffed. "You speak of it as if it were a Stradivarius."

"It was better than a Stradivarius to me," I retorted. "And for the hundredth time don't refer to it as a squeeze box!"

The accordion was a cherished relic of my first year with the Jitney Players, a group of undergraduate players from Yale and Harvard who wandered the summer-resort circuit in the early twenties. Alongside the others, all of whom played instruments or sang, I had been ingloriously mute. Then someone introduced me to the accordion. The same kind soul inked numbers on the sheet music and corresponding numbers on the keys. Substituting perseverance for talent, I learned to press the right keys at approximately the right time. It was an accomplishment of which I was inordinately proud—so much so that I resented Gertrude's use of the British variety artist's term "squeeze box" as detracting from the dignity of "my" instrument.

"Darling, if that's all you hold against me, after twelve years," she said, "I think we should be good for the full term of the contract!"

Dick telephoned us unexpectedly that he had a brief leave. He had been ordered to Korea—and wanted to come up to Dennis and say good-by.

We made no plans for extra entertainment for him and I believe this was what he wanted. He seemed content to laze on the beach with Gertrude and me. Between swims we napped and talked. Nothing serious, nothing important. Nothing, I was aware, that touched on his immediate future; Gertrude made sure of that, leading the conversation deliberately toward recollections of other summers at The Berries, when mother was with us. And those earlier summers before The Berries was built: the baseball games with the English boys and the Hyde grandchildren; Harrison and Barbara; Bunny and the obstreperous Bounder.

One day she spoke of Northfield and how mother had expressed a longing to visit it again as a spot that belonged in a special way to our family. The boys had never been there.

"I'd like to see the place," Dick said, "sometime."

"Why not tomorrow?" Gertrude proposed with sudden eagerness. "The three of us."

I objected on the grounds that Gertrude needed rest and it was a long drive. "We'll go there when Dick comes back from Korea," I said. It was obvious to me that Dick was curious about Northfield, but only mildly so. After all, it held no memories for him.

"No," Gertrude insisted, to my surprise. "He should go there now." She added, almost wistfully, "It would be wonderful for the three of us to go together."

Dick turned to her quietly. "If you'd like me to go now, Gertrude, I'll go."

We planned to leave the following forenoon. But that evening when I drove back from the Music Circus, Gertrude greeted me by stretching out a swollen arm. "Poison ivy, darling. I broke out this afternoon." She had already seen the doctor and received an injection.

Here's the handy thrifty way to buy yeast

Three packages in one neat strip

Get Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast —in NEW "THRIFTY THREE'S"

■ You're really getting the most for your money when you buy Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast in the new "Thrifty Three's." That's three packages of yeast in one neat strip . . . more economical, easier to handle and handier to store on your shelf.

And you're getting the finest yeast you can buy—for any amount of money—the yeast that prize-winning cooks prefer. This grand dry yeast stays fresh for months at a time right in your kitchen cupboard. And it's so easy to use . . . rises in a hurry every time. Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast is guaranteed fresher and faster rising —or double your money back.

When you bake at home, use Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast—it's the speediest, handiest, thriftiest yeast there is. Get it at your grocer's in the handy new "Thrifty Three's."

BUYING? BUILD CHANGING?

All the decorating kno you'll need is in the EX

Ladies' Home Jou

Book o
Interio
Decorati

- It's new! It's complete!
- 233 pages! More than 350 pi
- Full-color "show-how" rooms
- Hundreds of economical hints
- A perfect Christmas gift!

From the workshop of the Ladi Journal—the Magazine Wome In—comes this big, beauti packed with a wealth of info You'll read about . . . Furniture! Wallpaper! Accessories! Color! Fl ing! Contains more than 100 p specific rooms (many in glor color)—including before and a tographs. Chapter by chapt learn how to achieve decorat with complete how-to-do-it on . . .

- Storage: How to utilize space e
- Care of furnishings: How to av repairs!
- Table Setting: Flower arranger cessories, color schemes!
- Upholstery: How to buy...how upholstery for your style!
- Windows: How to make them your rooms!
- Floor Planning: Diagrams for practical room arrangements!
- Lighting: How to install prope fit your needs!
- Beds & Bedding: How to selec for comfort, beauty!
- Pictures & Mirrors: How to sele range for best effects!
- Walls: How to make the most with the right materials!

You get all this and much mor practical 3-part volume. You several for Christmas gifts, too. now at the low price of jus (Money-back guarantee, of cou

If you like, we'll send your G gift orders with beautiful gift ca to your friends at Christmas tim say where to send books and ho gift cards. Use plain paper orders—or mail the handy coup today.

Ladies' Home Journal, Dept. 1 Independence Square, Philadelp

Yes, send me ... copies of Ladie Journal Book of Interior Decor just $6.95 each.

Remittance enclosed ( ) Bill me l (We pay postage)

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ Zone__ Sta

Pennsylvania residents add sales tax. Offer good in U. S. only.

uld you possibly get poisoned?" I y foot of our property had been lier. "That means no trip to North-se," Gertrude countered. "I'll be ick has only two more days. He ave without going to Northfield." had suggested that we drive by ton, where she intended to visit ave. She had fallen in love with the tle town with its white clapboard can't see why mother objected to he commented at the time of neral. "There's not a more peaceful world to be buried."

morning Gertrude was up early vers for mother's grave. Shortly be-ur for our departure, she went up-was arranging piles of linen in a Helen Mahoney, in an adjoining rd her call, "I feel faint." Helen rude slumped against the wall. She lie down and then called me.

the humidity," Gertrude insisted.
ding over and there was no air in I'm all right."

tor whom we summoned thought was a reaction to the poison-ivy ine ordered her to spend the day e motor trip was off.

ly for me," Gertrude protested.
must go."

d, but Gertrude insisted. I realized ing to give Dick and me two whole her without the intrusion of other es. It was like her to realize the imo us both of a ing away from ed of all associhe old irritations her-son relation-the first time
as born, my son
as men.
r diffidence and ess had shackled
the years was one, and I found ld talk to him of things that were y heart. One of those things was Northfield, where so much of my e was spent, it seemed important n should know his grandfather; and at knowledge perhaps gain a sense ility and continuity sorely lacking in today. My father was a man of firm mpromising beliefs. He lived his as an affirmation of those beliefs.

Northfield I found I could summon it and re-create the portrait of a man not ashamed to have faith—and I transmit to Dick a feeling of kin-quality with his grandfather. Amer-ed in faith. Much of our strength in erived from it. Our future lies, so I ould have my sons feel, in our con-have that faith.

OE asked no questions, but I think I that the trip had been a spiritual for Dick and me. He left the follow-and she followed him in thought Pacific, reliving her own wartime
es.

her holiday was nearing its end, she p the subject of Northfield again.
een thinking," Gertrude said, "how it would be if we had a little place eld that we could run away to now nd refresh ourselves, renew our con-things of the spirit. If we could per-the chalet ——"

that the chalet was still owned by
of the Mabie family. At Gertrude's h, I began inquiries as to whether d be willing to part with it.

ctor had continued to give her injec-inst poison ivy. "I want to be imnext year," she said. She was plan-she would do to the garden and the welve months' time. Her contract for and I would terminate in June. "Then up to the Cape and perhaps open in in London in the autumn. Or if we e my play to London, perhaps Noel something for me to play in either broad. But I'll want my rest first, and there are so many things I'd like to do around the place."

Friday morning, she packed and wrote a long list of work for Ed, the gardener, to do in the fall and winter. The list ended with the stern reminder:

KEEP FOOD FOR BIRDS
ALWAYS IN FEEDERS

I drove her to the airport. Our peaceful interlude together on the Cape had lasted exactly six weeks. On Monday, August 11, Gertrude resumed her role in The King and I.

Driving up to the theater that evening, she was pleased to see a long line of ticket buyers queued up at the box office, in obvious response to the announcement of her return. Even more cheering was the affectionate welcome that greeted her backstage. Shepherded by a beaming Hazel, the entire company—dancers, principals, children—all flocked to Gertrude's dressing room to say hello to "Mrs. Anna" and report their news. Before the curtain went up, every member of the cast had stopped by to say a warm word.

Gertrude returned to the play fresh and relaxed from her weeks in the sun. The night before, she had phoned me at the Cape.

"I feel wonderfully fit," she said. "I'll be better than ever tomorrow night."

Those who saw Gertrude's performance during the next three days agreed that she was as good as her word. Advance sales shot upward, although the last two weeks of August are far from the best box-office period in the year.

Early Thursday morning, she rang Fanny: "Could you go shopping with me today, Fan?"

"Shopping?" Fanny had disquieting memories of Gertrude's onetime buying sprees. "What for?" she asked wearily.

"Don't worry. We won't go near Hattie Carnegie's," Gertrude promised her. "It's for Richard. He has a birthday Sunday."

"What are you getting him?"

"I was thinking of a squeeze box."

Gertrude was to meet Fanny at three o'clock. Shortly after lunch, Dorothy was in the pantry when she heard a crash overhead, followed by a muffled cry.

Alarmed, Dorothy ran up to the library. There she found Gertrude doubled up against the writing desk in obvious distress. At her feet were a shattered vase and a bunch of white blossoms. She had been arranging the flowers when she was suddenly stricken.

Dorothy helped Gertrude to the sofa—"All the color was out of her face; you could see every step was a terrible effort." She had the butler call the doctor and Fanny, while she looked after Gertrude.

By the time the doctor arrived soon after, the pain had virtually disappeared—or so Gertrude said. The doctor made a thorough examination, then hazarded an opinion—as had the physician at Dennis—that the attack could have been caused by the injections against ivy poisoning; there was no immediate evidence pointing to anything more serious.

"But don't go on tonight," he counseled Gertrude, "just to be on the safe side."

"Of course I'll go on," said Gertrude. "It was just a tummy-ache. I've played through tummy-aches before." She turned to Fanny: "Please don't tell Richard. It's not worth bothering him about."

At six o'clock that evening, Gertrude went to the theater as usual. There she said nothing about the afternoon's incident; but Hazel, lacing her into tight corsets for the opening-scene costume, commented on the way Gertrude winced when the stays were tightened.

"Please, Hazel, don't say anything to Miss Fanny about it. She'll only tell Mr. Aldrich and I don't want him upset. It's his busy time at the Cape."

Speaking to me on the phone at midnight, Gertrude did not even mention her illness. She was chiefly concerned with plans for my birthday. "I don't want you to feel neglected, darling," she said. "Next year we'll celebrate together—no matter what."

It is best to love wisely, no doubt, but to love foolishly is better than not to be able to love at all.
—THACKERAY

Friday evening, Gertrude went gallantly through her performance, despite the additional handicap of a late-summer heat wave. Hazel expressed growing concern as her star struggled into costumes which a few days earlier had been an easy fit.

Again Gertrude pleaded and bargained. "Don't tell anybody, Hazel. I'll have the weekend in which to rest, once we get past tomorrow. Just let me get through tomorrow."

In spite of a valiant effort, Gertrude never did "get through tomorrow."

At one o'clock Saturday, as she was making up for the matinee, John van Druten, director of The King and I, dropped in at her dressing room. "She told me of her illness," he recalled, "and of her determination to beat it.... She asked about my troubles casting my own new play. Then she laughed and said, 'Remember, I shall be free next June. And I'm no trouble.' I kissed her and left her."

That was the last performance she played.

After the final curtain at the matinee, as Gertrude was crossing backstage on her way to the dressing room, she fainted. Hazel was quickly at her side. When Gertrude regained consciousness, she said quietly, "I can't go on tonight, Hazel. Call Miss Fanny."

"That's when I really began to feel funny, Mr. Aldrich," Hazel told me later. "I said to Even from tiny kitchens and tiny budgets...

wonderfully flavored meals grow with Wilson B-V

Enjoy so many delicious dishes with Wilson B-V!

No matter how small or large your cooking area, that handy little jar of WILSON B-V will help you prepare many flavorful dishes to the king's taste. WILSON B-V is always ready to add rich, meaty flavor to a whole list of popular foods like soups, gravies, stews, hash, and other low-cost favorites.

That's because B-V is a delicious blend of concentrated meat extract and selected vegetable flavors. Join the millions of home-makers who now add "thrifty B-V flavor" to so many delicious dishes!... with the "flavor magic" of WILSON B-V, you'll enjoy dishes you never thought you liked before.

B-V TEA
Makes a delicious hot drink. Nourishing! Hearty! Appetite-arousing!

STEAKS
B-V is the easy-spreading flavor boost for even low cost meat cuts!

B-V GRAVY
B-V makes rich brown gravy without meat juices. "America's Favorite Gravy Maker"!

SOUPS
B-V adds a meaty, rich flavor to delicious Onion and Vegetable Soups.

STEWS
B-V rewards the family with "flavor magic" stews . . . and tasty leftovers!

The low calorie way to improve your foods.

IT TASTES BETTER WILSON & CO. INC IF MADE WITH B-V

We want to talk about the 5 most trying years

of your life

Few women realize that "those days" every month actually add up to an average of 5 full years! Turn that figure over in your mind for a minute. Does it make any sense whatsoever for you to compromise on the type of sanitary protection you use for such a long time . . . to accept chafing and odor and bulk as "necessary evils?" Why don't you try Tampax?

Tampax is worn internally. Every single advantage it has stems from that one fact. It prevents odor from forming because it prevents exposure to the air. It can't chafe because chafing only occurs when there is friction. (Actually, wearer can't even feel the Tampax once it's in place.) It's only a fraction of the size of an external pad, therefore disposal is very easy. And of course Tampax can be worn in your shower or your tub.

Most reassuring of all, Tampax is a doctor-invented product, which today is used by millions of women in America.

This very day, while all this is fresh in your mind, get Tampax at your favorite drug or notion counter. You'll see at once another Tampax advantage: the package is small enough to slip into your purse. Choice of 3 absorbencies: Regular, Super, Junior. Look for Tampax Vendor in restrooms throughout the United States. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

myself, 'If she gives up, then it looks like something bad.' Because she never did give up!"

Three weeks later—at four o'clock in the morning—I was awakened from a deep sleep by the ringing of the telephone. I had been flying back and forth from Dennis; it took a moment to orient myself to the fact that I was in my New York home. I picked up the phone. It was the New York Hospital calling. Gertrude, who had been a patient there for over two weeks, was in a state of shock.

As I dressed, I was overwhelmed by a peculiar sense of unreality. The call was so unexpected, so at variance with what I had been led to believe to be Gertrude's condition, that for a moment I wondered whether I was actually awake or was merely acting out an overvivid nightmare. . . .

After a few days at home following that last Saturday matinee Gertrude had gone reluctantly to the hospital for diagnosis. She underwent a series of tests, after which the doctors agreed she was suffering from hepatitis—a liver ailment which is painful, but rarely fatal. They assured me that they found nothing whatever which would warrant alarm.

With medication and diet Gertrude seemed to improve. Certainly her spirits never faltered in my presence. I remembered particularly that on the afternoon we received the hepatitis report, Gertrude was immensely cheered and in a gay mood. She sat up in bed, beguiling in a blue bed jacket, her hair falling around her shoulders. She would talk of nothing but my sidetracked birthday present.

"I didn't get it in time for the big day," she said regretfully, "but as soon as I return home, you are going to become the proud owner of the world's nobbiest squeeze box."

"An accordion? But why?"

"To replace the one you had with the Jitney Players, that I gave away. I'll mark every note on it personally, just the way they were in the original!"

"But what on earth would I do with an accordion now?"

Her eyes danced impishly. "I thought we might work up a variety act together. The Aldriches—Troubadors of Song! You play. I sing. We both dance. Look ——"

She swept aside the bedcovers and swung her legs to the floor. "We could start with the step I used in Red Peppers. Watch this."

Stopping the rehearsal then and there, I lifted Gertrude off her feet and deposited her firmly back in bed. "You stay put, Mrs. A!" I ordered.

Squirming and giggling as I held her down, Gertrude looked like anything but a critically ill hospital patient.

In a few minutes, I was dressed and out of the house. It was a hot, sultry night, quiet, with the peculiar stillness of a big city in slumber. The street was deserted. As I walked in search of a taxi, I found myself praying, praying fervently, that it was all a fantastic mistake.

Just a few days before, Gertrude had been so full of eager plans. Each time I saw her, she asked whether there had been any word from the owner of the chalet at Northfield. Although I was still not certain that the chalet could be purchased, Gertrude was already decorating it in her mind. "It will be a retreat for us," she said, "a haven where we can seek peace. This country should have more places like Northfield for busy, tense people."

Her recuperation was something Gertrude looked forward to as a new and exciting adventure. We would fly down to Florida, she decided, and take a cottage at Naples. Later, when I returned to New York, Daphne du Maurier would come over from London and finish the play she was writing for Gertrude (which she later developed into her historical novel, Mary Anne).

"Isn't it wonderful how I time my illness," Gertrude exclaimed. "It's the off season—I can convalesce at reduced rates." She turned to Fanny. "You must admit, Fan—after all these years, I've finally learned to economize!"

The taxi whisked through the empty streets, and in a few minutes I was at the hospital. Gertrude was unconscious.

Forbidden to enter her room, I paced the corridor outside. If only I could be with her a moment, take her hand in mine . . . perhaps somehow the sense of my presence would break through the mist into which she was fast sinking. More than anything else, I wanted her to feel, no matter how dimly, that I was there with her. I wanted to offer her strength that would pull her back from the abyss. If only I could give back to her now, in the hour of her need, some of the warmth and light which Gertrude distributed so generously, not only to me but to others, as she traveled through life.

"Go back to the Cape, darling," Gertrude had urged on one of my visits. "I hate to think of you hanging around this hot town over the weekend. Besides, you ought to be there when Bea opens at Dennis on Monday."

Gertrude was referring to An Evening with Bea Lillie, which had its tryout at my Cape Playhouse before coming to New York for a successful run.

"You must give Bea a party," she added.

"Not now," I protested. "I'm hardly in a party mood."

"Oh, do keep Bea happy while she's at the Cape. See that she's taken care of and made to feel at home."

It was this kind of consideration for her friends that evoked such tremendous devotion to Gertrude on their part. I was sitting in her hospital room one day when we heard a commotion outside the door.

"Why can't I see her?" a deep voice demanded.

Gertrude's face lit up. "It's Mister John, darling—John Golden!"

I stepped to the door.

"You tell her from me, Dick," John boomed, "that if it will help her to get well, I'll give her a coronet of diamonds to wear at the coronation. Yes, and I'll pave Forty-fourth Street with red roses for her to walk over. She must get well and come back soon. We can't do without her."

"We can't do without her." John Golden's words echoed in my mind as I kept my vigil outside Gertrude's room.

Less than twenty-four hours ago, I had been feeding her the rare beefsteak which Olive and Bill Leeds brought to the hospital every day. With each swallow, her eyes sought mine for approval. Never was her look more tender; never did she appear more beautiful to me.

When she finished lunch, I reached for the old volume of Browning, a gift from mother, that was among Gertrude's most ch possessions.

She shook her head. "Not Brownin said. "Read me Dick's letter again, Richard."

I unfolded the airmail that had arri day before from Dick in Korea. G dropped her head back on the pillo closed her eyes. When I came to the c ing lines, in which Dick related how tacked Gertrude's picture over his "queen of the pin-up girls," she looke me and smiled.

To her ears, I realized, this was the l poetry of all.

Through the window at the end of t ridor, I could see the east grow gra pink. . . . The door to Gertrude's opened softly, and a nurse came out doctors hurried past me into the room were with Gertrude a long time. In tently, a tight-lipped nurse and interns ha in or out.

I paced the darkened corridors, w wondering. . . . A nurse came down t carrying a flask.

"How is she?" I asked.

"We're hopeful," was the brisk reply

"Hopeful." And yet ——

A note penned on the morning Ge was stricken ill—the last letter sh wrote—had a strange overtone of pre tion. It was written to a fan who had a A Star Danced.

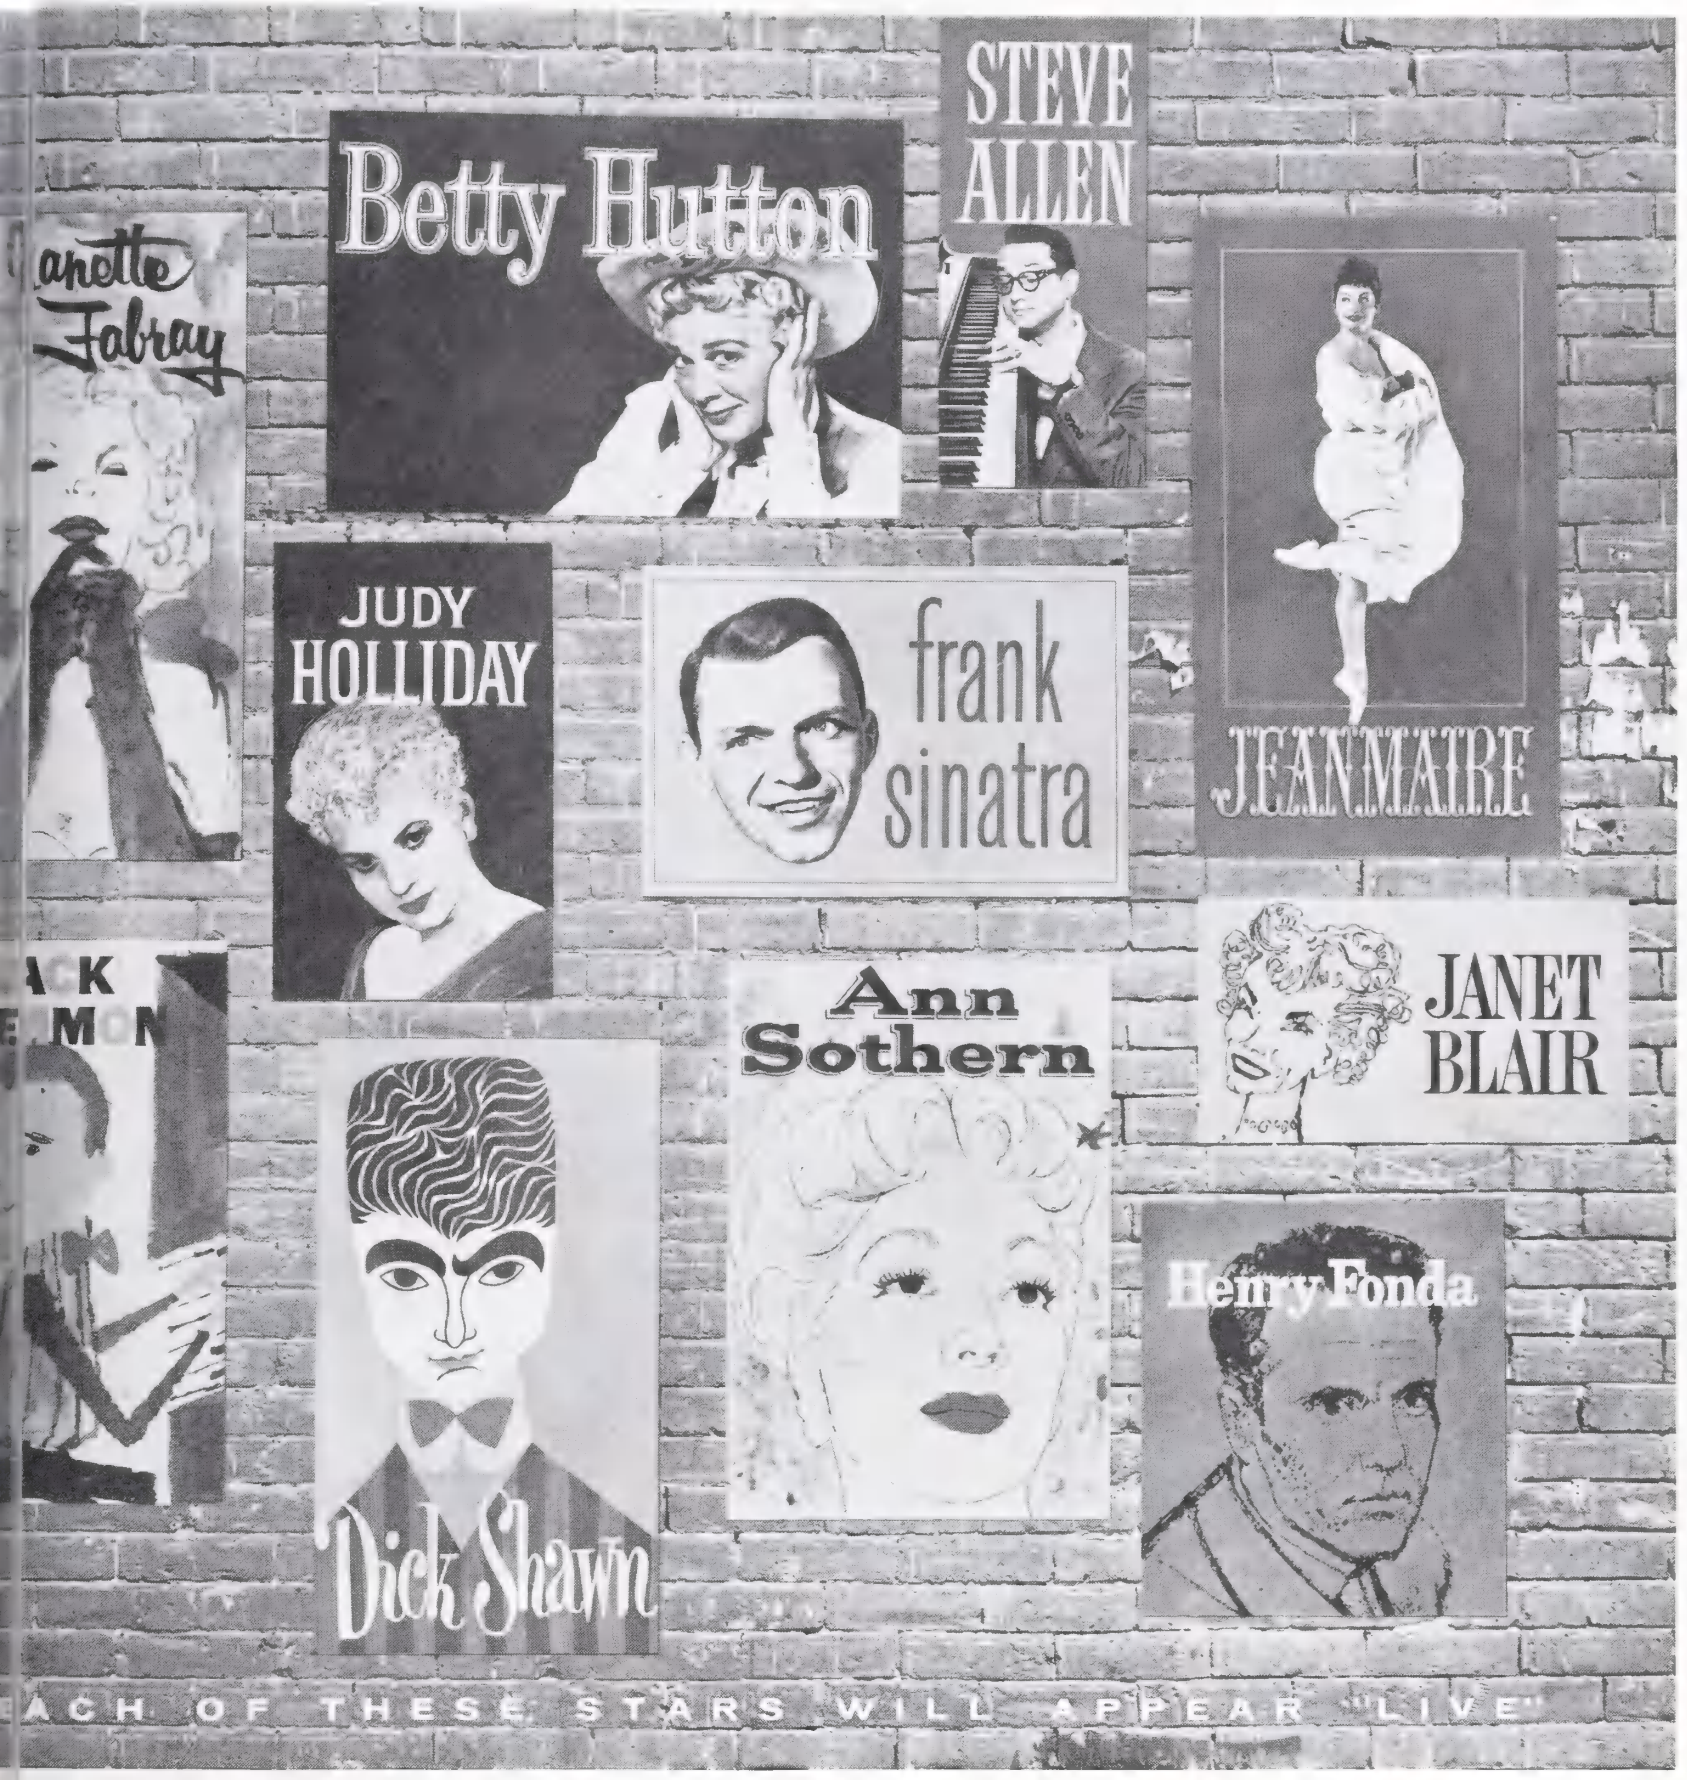
August 14,

Dear Miss Perry: Ever so many than your charming letter. I am so delighted th enjoyed the book.

However, a sequel will have to wait while until I am either made a D.B.E. o gracefully into a peaceful country life found asleep never to awaken.

There has to be a final conclusion to quel, and I would prefer someone else to w

The afternoon before Gertrude died, learned, she had called Fanny to he side.



"I don't think I'm going to get out place, Fan," she whispered. "Don Richard, but I have a feeling. There are I want you to do for me."

She directed Fanny to write to Sandy nedy, telling him not to worry about h ness. And to send notes to everyone wh

CONTINUED ON PAGE 171

"Isn't it a shame that boys have to change to men?"

BC CTACULARS

r home the brightest how business

! Glittering "nights out", right TV set . . . one Saturday, Sunday night a month. Three separate series, the first two . . . titled n Presents".

0 minutes long! World-famous lured to television for the first time. Every bit of it "live"—performed as you watch! Each show as glamourous as a Broadway opening, a Hollywood premiere.

Captivating musical comedies — complete! Dazzling full-length variety shows! New scripts, new songs by the nation's top hit-makers! All produced by television's master showman — Max Liebman, of "Your Show of Shows" fame.

50,000,000 Americans will thrill to NBC "Spectaculars" in brilliant black-and-white. For those with color television sets, there's an extra thrill: "Max Liebman Presents" in fabulous RCA Compatible Color!

Here's your date-book for wonderful "nights out" — when "Max Liebman Presents":

SATURDAY SERIES*

NOVEMBER 20 • DECEMBER 18 • JANUARY 15 • FEBRUARY 12 • MARCH 12 • APRIL 9 • MAY 7 JUNE 4

SUNDAY SERIES*

NOVEMBER 7 • DECEMBER 5 • JANUARY 2 • JANUARY 30 • FEBRUARY 27 • MARCH 27 • APRIL 24 • MAY 22

*CONSULT YOUR NEWSPAPER FOR LOCAL TIME AND CHANNEL.

"LIVE" NBC SPECTACULARS

NBC TELEVISION

a service of RCA

Quick Stunts with Hunt's TOMATO SAUCE

18-Minute Spanish Rice

(Spanish Rice Pronto)

What a joy for busy career girls and homemakers!

Delicious Spanish Rice in minutes . . . using only one pan . . . no baking!

You use that handy, pre-cooked rice right from the package. It swells into luscious, tender kernels, rich with the wonderful flavor and beautiful color of Hunt's Tomato Sauce.

Because Hunt's is all tomato and seasoned so tastefully, it helps you gain flavor for all your cooking. It contains no starchy fillers, has no "soupy" taste. That's why men like it 'specially well.

Make this delicious 18-minute Spanish Rice for your family. Then, use your creative cooking skill and add Hunt's Tomato Sauce to your stews, soups, casseroles, meat loaf, fish, gravies. It's easy – and you'll love it!

¼ cup bacon drippings — 1 medium onion, thinly sliced
½ medium green pepper, diced — 1⅓ cups pre-cooked rice
1¾ cups hot water — 2 cans Hunt's Tomato Sauce
1 teaspoon salt — Dash of pepper
1 teaspoon prepared mustard (optional)

Melt drippings in a skillet. Add onion, green pepper, and quick-cooking rice (the pre-cooked kind that takes only minutes). Cook and stir over high heat until lightly browned. Add hot water, Hunt's Tomato Sauce, seasonings; mix well. Bring quickly to a boil, cover tightly, simmer 10 minutes. Makes 4 servings.

Delicious variations: Use recipe above. Brown ½ pound ground beef, or ½ cup sliced mushrooms, with rice. Or stir ½ cup grated cheese into cooked rice.

RECIPES FOR YOU! A delicious one every can of Hunt's Tomato Sauce...at yo Hunt Food, Inc., Fullerton, California

Hunt-for the bes

NTINUED FROM PAGE 168

ers or "get-well" messages. "The the right-hand drawer. About the t Connie Carpenter steps in. She long for her chance. See that she And see that Yul gets star billing. d it."

ories below us, the city began to om the river below came the of tugboat whistles. I looked at was nearly 7:45.

to Gertrude's room opened, and tors stepped out. One of them rd me. Before he was near enough knew what he had come to say. without regaining consciousness, d slipped away from me.

k had enlisted in the Air Force after graduation—I was in ude had seen him off to Camp e took with him a photograph of Anna in the pale pink satin gown the "Shall We Dance?" number. reference to their relationship on ph which Gertrude signed:

lear Private Aldrich
/ith love—Gertrude Lawrence.

autograph she added her own for those dearest to her—a heart n arrow.

ograph went with my son through period. He took it with him when orea the following summer. Ger- s "pin-up girl," admired by all the s. None of them knew that she mother. The shocking news of death came to Dick at Kimpo ea, which he had reached only a efore. A fellow airman who had g to a news broadcast called to Aldrich, did you hear that? Your st died."

no death, and no cause to mourn pirit lives on in those you love," d told me once.

t few days, it would have been a ieve unquestioningly in this sim- t it was not in me to do so. One g thought went round and round Gertrude was gone.

d world heard the news of her wirl of activity that followed—the going of telegraph boys with mes- mpathy, the well-meaning calls , the insistent questions of news- no reality for me. Numbed, I to our 54th Street apartment, joined by Pam, who had flown ngland.

ed alone until shortly before the art of the funeral. Services were ifth Avenue Presbyterian Church t, where I had been a member for ears and where Gertrude and I ly worshiped together.

nd I emerged from the 55th Street our apartment house a half block ere surprised to see the street people. The crowd was so dense great difficulty making our way n.

every sort were there: brokers, bobby-soxers, construction work- s and models from the Madison s nearby. A musician carrying a ood out in the street, staring with eyes at the Union Jack fluttering ched entrance to the church.

eaded our way through the crowd, wistful reminiscence came to our ember Gertrude Lawrence in Pri- . . . "I'll never forget her ——" hrough the solemn throng, unrec- unknown to them, we nonethe- same warm sense of kinship with ey clearly felt toward each other. ered the side door of the church, as momentarily blocked by two g to die," said one. "Did you see alion?"

"I saw her in everything!"

More than ever I was aware of Gertrude's extraordinary human appeal—that divine spark of vitality, warmth, zest for life—that brought a glow to all who stood in her presence. It was more than a theatrical gift; it was the essence of her whole being. And at the moment it was a tangible force in the heart of busy Manhattan, bringing a hush to the roaring traffic and forging a link among thousands of complete strangers who had little else in common.

Inside the church, during the hour that followed, the luminaries of Broadway and Hollywood paid their respects to a great lady of the theater. Outside, the nameless thousands stood in quiet reverence, mourning a beloved friend.

That day the Columbia University flag at the foot of the library steps flew at half-mast,

TURNING TOWARD YOU IN THE DARK

By DAN G. HOFFMAN

Turning toward you in the dark,
In the gray light when the soul is lonely
That is darker than the midnight dark,
I offer you the mortal pillow
Of my crooked elbow,
My bone and flesh beneath your head.
The house is silent save your breathing:
Dimly the blankets fall and rise
Upon your breasts. Dimly, my eyes Perceive your most familiar and beloved form;
You draw close by me, sleeping still Upon my bent protective arm.
I can't remember now what dream dreads roused me,
What solitary fears the shadows keep;
Since you turn toward me in the dark, half drowsy,
I am contented while I watch you sleep.

while groups of students gathered silently outside the Brander Matthews Theater where Gertrude had conducted her classes.

At 8:30 in the evening—curtain time along Broadway—the lights of every theater and moviehouse blinked out.

For two minutes the most dazzling thoroughfare in show business stood dark and silent in honor of the girl who had conquered America.

Three thousand miles away, in London's West End, the glittering marquees on Shaftsbury Avenue, Charing Cross Road, and in St. Martin's Lane—where Gertrude and I had first met—likewise flashed off, in tribute to a star whose brilliance would shine no more.

And on the other side of the world, in the battle-swept hills of Korea, a unit of British fighting men gathered in a dusty hollow to say their own kind of farewell to Gertrude. Peter Carlisle, who was there, described the scene in a letter to me:

The dust was thick on the temporary parade square and the light wind blew it in little patterns. The Union Jack flapping in the breeze spattered color against the steely sky. The khaki of the men drawn up in a hollow square faded in with the dun-colored hills in the background.

A padre, his white collar standing out against the khaki, spoke: "The news has flashed across the world, men, Miss Gertrude Lawrence has passed away. Many of you have come to the C.O. to ask him to hold a memorial service for her. Many of us knew her when she appeared, smiling and gay, in the last show. We thought it was our show, but it was hers too. Her spirit was great and when she appeared in some corner of a hangar, or a NAAFI hut, she brought brilliance, color and glamor to our drab world. No grande dame of the stage she, but a real performer, a bringer of laughter, a singer of songs. And she could jig as well as Paddy's pig. Boys, I have a feeling that the moon and sun will have to squeeze over a bit to make room for a star like our Gertie. And now I want to read you the Twenty-third Psalm."

In his rich Lancashire voice he read the old cry of faith in God's providence: "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want. . . ."

After he finished he turned, saluted and moved off. For a moment there was silence. Then somewhere in the rear ranks a voice, high and light, started to sing: "Someone to watch over me." A young officer was about to move towards the singer but the colonel stopped him and joined in the singing. Soon the entire company was singing.

When the last note had died into the distance the company bugler sounded The Last Post. The flag dipped and slowly sank to half-mast. A deeper silence spread over the square. Not a dead silence, for it was one that was filled with a feeling of tenderness towards someone who had always given tenderness. And in the far distance the flat slap of mortar fire, the roar of the larger guns, echoed. No, it was not a dead silence, but it was a moment's pause for someone who had gone. Again the same voice started to sing. This time, Limehouse Blues.

The bittersweet music wavered and played over that odd-looking Korean landscape. When it had died down the colonel rubbed at his eyes with the back of his hand and dismissed the company with a nod.

One little cockney, stumping his way up the hill to the field kitchen, turned and looked back. The parade square was empty. The flag was flying high again. Standing there on the hill, he snapped a salute and said aloud, "Good-by Gertie. You was the sweetest Goddamned Limey I ever saw!"

The next day, the handful of people who were closest to Gertrude trudged up the path of the little hillside cemetery in Upton, Massachusetts. It was a perfect New England day—bright, crisp and cool. The September leaves of maples were tinged with gold; sunshine sparkled on the lake below.

Halfway up the slope we stopped at the grass-covered knoll which, since Revolutionary days, has been set apart as a resting place for the Aldriches. Around us, under a score of simple granite headstones, lay Aldrich wives of earlier generations: Zilpah, Patience, Abigail, Hannah.

There, near them and next to my mother, we laid to rest my Gertrude, "Mrs. A"—the English girl who, by her love and eager understanding, had made herself a part of America, a part of my family and a part of me. END

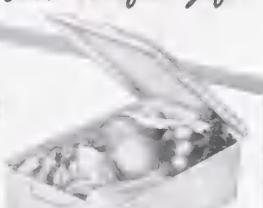
"KITCHEN-LAUNDRY TO SUIT ME"

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 116

out, "for those corner cabinets with whirl-around shelves." The kitchen sink is midway between range and refrigerator, and beside it is a dishwasher that fits in under the counter. When the stainless-steel door is opened, the top or bottom rack rolls out independently, making it easy to load so that soiled dishes never pile up. The ice-making gas-model refrigerator—"It brings in teen-agers from miles around"—turns out continual crescents of ice until a generous bin is full and never disappoints a thirsty young crowd gathering after a tennis game.

For snacks, the family gathers in the dining section that overlooks a porch and is wallpapered in pink, turquoise and dark blue floral print. The blinds are split wood with colored cotton stripes woven in. Her triple-duty kitchen, I decided, is just as fresh as a mountain breeze, and I don't wonder if that architect she converted isn't right now carrying her invigorating idea to other new home planners! END

REPUBLIC'S Polly Flex HOUSEWARES
THE GREATEST NAME IN PLASTICS
for you early HOLIDAY SHOPPERS



CAKE COVER AND PLATE

that will keep cakes and pastries fresh for longer periods. Cover provides perfect seal when locked to plate. Use plate to serve. Guaranteed never to chip, crack or break—flexible plastic—lasts a lifetime—beautifully designed.

Most Useful Gifts

CRISPER

provided with Republic's famous seal tight cover to keep vegetables garden crisp in refrigerator. For freezer use also—guaranteed never to chip, break or crack.

Every Woman's Delight

DISH PAN

A woman's pride and joy—a dishpan that cannot chip, peel or rust. Reduces dish breakage—eliminates marking up sink. Lightweight—easy to clean. Makes dishwashing a pleasure. Flexible. Will last a lifetime.

Flexible Plastic Ware

PAIL AND COVER

Seamless, rust proof, positively will never corrode or dent—or leave rust marks on floors or fine carpeting. Easy to clean. Will last a lifetime. Tight fitting cover makes pail useful for many purposes.

Guaranteed UNBREAKABLE

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

FOR SALE IN ALL LEADING STORES

Write for catalogue on other Polly Flex items.

REPUBLIC MOLDING CORPORATION © 1954
6465 N. Avondale Ave. • Chicago 31, Ill.

Now! The new small Turkeys roast tender and golden without basting

Spry makes the difference!

Here's All You Do!

Prepare a small 4 to 8-pound turkey for roasting. Stuff it, truss it, and brush it all over with melted Spry. Place bird, breast down, on rack in roasting pan. Then brush a piece of muslin generously with melted Spry, and lay over bird, letting cloth fall loosely over the sides. Roast in moderate oven (350°F.) 4-4½ hours or until tender and golden-brown all over. Turn bird once. Remove cloth about ½ hour before end of roasting.

When you roast your turkeys (big or little) with pure, digestible Spry, you protect the delicate white meat from drying out. Lever Brothers unconditionally guarantees that with Spry you can cook turkey tender and golden, even without basting. You'll agree or we'll return your money. For more easy recipes, drop a postcard to Spry, Lever Brothers, 390 Park Avenue, New York 22, N. Y.

Spry makes just about everything you cook taste better!

ome and pump house d Dot inherited from grandmothers. House 6300; a well, $1500.

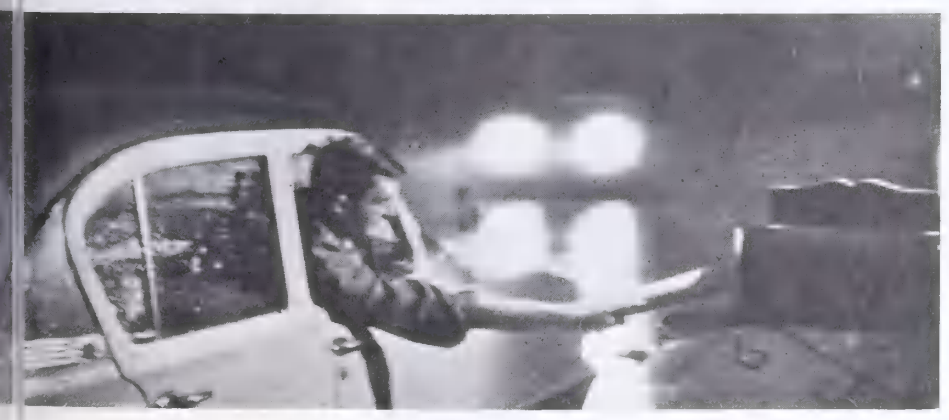
Young
MERICA LIVES



PHOTOGRAPHS BY JOSEPH DI PIETRO

THE PINK-HOUSE BOBOS

Their day begins at 3 A.M. in Atlanta, Georgia.

By JEAN TODD FREEMAN

er 90-mile route each morning, Barham delivers papers. "Missed one day—got 75 phone calls."

IT is three o'clock in the morning. In the hilly residential section north of Atlanta, the houses are dark, the curving roads empty. But in the kitchen of a small house perched on a hilltop, one light burns cheerfully. There Dottie Bobo, mahogany hair hanging loose and green eyes sleepy, clutches her flowered housecoat about her and droops over the skillet. Her husband Barham ("Pronounce it like bear," suggests Dottie, "and then sort of tack on m-m-m-m") folds his lanky 6′ 2″ into a kitchen chair and waits for his customary breakfast of orange juice, toast, three scrambled eggs, coffee—and perhaps some cold sliced meat from last night's supper.

"I simply refuse to fry bacon at three A.M.!" says Dottie—but she takes the early rising as a matter of course, scrambling eggs with her eyes shut, then wandering back to bed after drowsily checking on five-year-old Jennie, curled in her lower Entertaining is held down because family bedtime is 9:30, "but we see all our friends at Sunday services." Bo (9) wears his uniform, Jennie (5) her prettiest hat.

After first call to breakfast at 3 A.M., Dottie goes back to sleep, gets up to make second breakfast at 7 A.M. for whole family. "Our most expensive meal."

At 1 P.M. Dottie is through housekeeping, waits till Barham brings car home from school so she can shop clearances. She buys 2 or 3 sizes ahead for children.

bunk, and Bo, nine, sprawled in his upper. A few minutes later, the kitchen light goes out, in the driveway the headlights of their '54 car sweep an arc through the darkness—and Barham is off on his regular ninety-mile paper route.

Delivering subscribers' copies of the Atlanta Constitution is Barham's hard-earned answer to the difficult problem of how to support a family and pay for a house while working toward his Georgia Tech degree in mechanical engineering. The problem began in 1946, when Barham, fresh out of the Army, went to work for Carrier Air Conditioning and tried to forget his interrupted college education. Fo years later, the idea of giving up a stea job paying $100 a week to live on the $1 a month provided by the GI Bill st seemed so impossible that Barham tried while longer to compromise—worki part time at Carrier while going to nig school. Then, after a year of unsuccessfu juggling class hours, study hours and wor ing hours, he heard about the chance getting a paper route.

"I decided to take it," he says. ' seemed like quite a sacrifice then—brea ing completely with Carrier after fi years, going to CONTINUED ON PAGE

Barham does his studying at night . . .

sometimes stays clearheaded for weeks . . .

at other times falls asleep at his desk.

Tests keep him up. Dottie reminds rham left his $100-a-week job to go to Georgia Tech full time. s monthly GI allowance of $120 nd paper-route income of $170

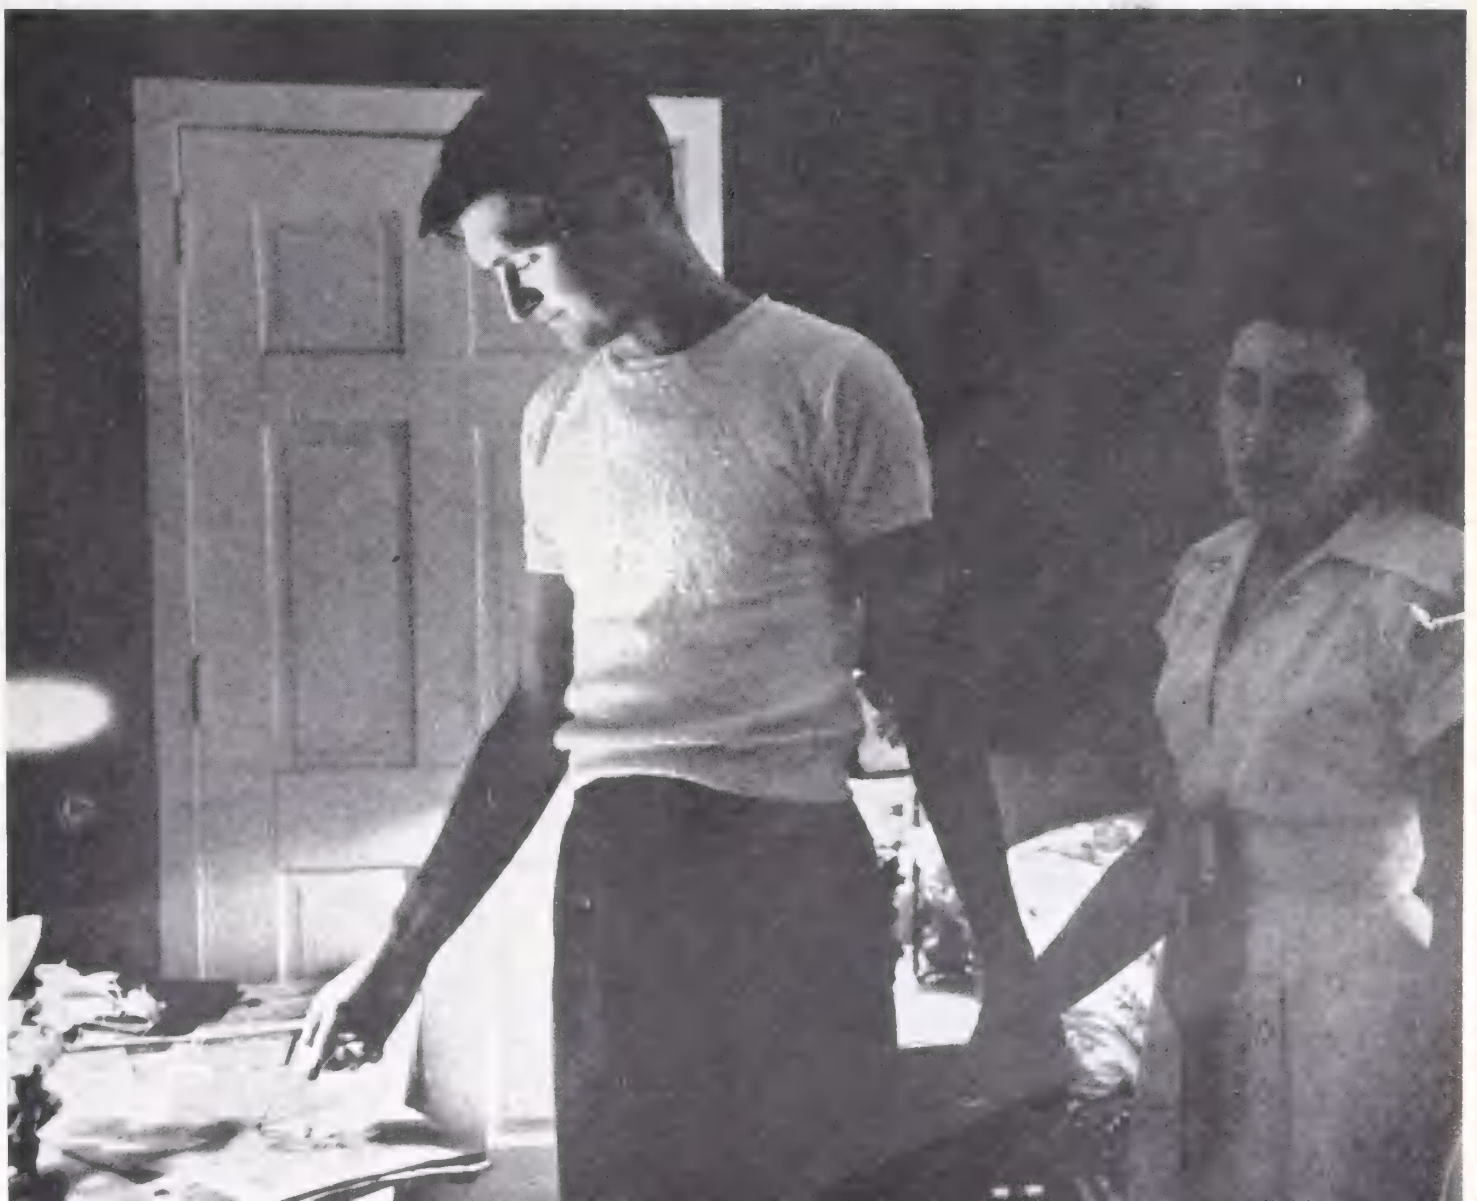
pport the family while he studies.

Small Bo goes to military school from 8 A.M. to 5 P.M. At home he's a handy man. With $20 gift he bought a lawn mower and cuts grass for family and friends.



Jennie, like Bo, handles her own money. Last year she bought 14 Christmas gifts for $2.10. Her main interests: modeling, making pudding, dancing when dad takes a break.

At 30, he debated returning to college: "Suppose I don't try? How will I feel the rest of my life?" Is the current struggle worth it? You get a resounding "Yes!"

Young
HOW AMERICA LIVES

nevitably rings at 2:30 A.M.

Dottie says, "If I don't get out, I get cross. I'm more social than he is." Barham encourages her in churchwork (she heads women's circle) with one veto: no long phone calls for her while he studies.

After B.S., Barham may stay on for master's degree, is already sought for jobs. Dottie's first thought on offer is "to see how far north it is."

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 174

school full time, counting on the paper route plus the GI allowance to support us when we'd been used to four hundred dollars a month. But I felt very strongly about it. I thought, 'Suppose I don't try? How will I feel the rest of my life?' I had the chance, and whether I succeeded or failed, at least I wouldn't have passed it up."

Now, three years after that decision, the GI allowance does little more than pay for food and clothing—but by 3½ hours of hard driving each morning and occasional afternoons spent collecting bills, Barham manages to earn about $170 more. "I don't know that it's something an engineer should brag about," he says, "but folks declare I'm the best paperboy in town."

Driving through the dark countryside, sitting "like an old hen" on a nest of rolled newspapers, Barham feels "a sort of protective ownership" toward all the quiet houses. He handles his car like a polo pony; has developed a marvelous sense of timing (which enables him to insert a paper deftly into a tube in a split second) and an immunity against the spine-jolting CONTINUED ON PAGE 218

Their roots are deep in the South, among families and traditions both grew up with.

Young
HOW AMERICA LIVES

5 treats a week for breakfast

An exciting way for the whole family to enjoy the high-protein benefits of Quaker Oats

Sprinkle on Brown Sugar

Stir in Raisins

Let Butter melt over it

Top with Fruit

The wonderful taste of good hot oatmeal is always a treat for the family. And for the variety youngsters—and grownups, too—like in breakfast, serve delicious Quaker Oats with toppings, as shown here. Isn't this an easy way to give the family a breakfast that's really good for them?

Oatmeal gives your family more protein than any other leading cereal. And that is why Quaker Oats helps adults keep fit—not fat. Helps children grow strong, healthy bodies.

Quick to fix for busy homemakers! All you do is pour Quick Quaker Oats into boiling water. In just 2 minutes your oatmeal is completely cooked, creamy and smooth. Could any breakfast for your whole family be easier—or better—than good hot Quaker Oats?

America's most popular cereal ...hot or cold

Mother's Oats and Quaker Oats are exactly the same

QUAKER OATS

More women use WRIGHT'S Silver Cream than any other Silver Cleaner!

The safe easy way to have beautiful silver. Your costly tile, porcelain and newly-painted woodwork need Wright's gentle treatment too. Hint: Takes rings off tables.

Featured on Dave Garroway's "TODAY"

JOLLY TIME POP CORN EVERY KERNEL POPS OR YOUR MONEY BACK

KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS

delightful . . . delicious . . . full of flavor . . .

KEYSTONE MUSHROOMS

"—it's the Quality Pack"

FREE! Big Recipe Booklet. Write to Keystone Mushroom Co., Coatesville, Pa. Insist on Keystone Fancy Mushrooms at your food store. Fancy Quality . . . Regular Price.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Monroe FOLDING BANQUET TABLES

If you are on the Kitchen Committee of some Church, Lodge, Club, School, etc., in your town you will be interested in this modern Folding Banquet Table. Write for Catalog and special discounts to institutions and organizations.

MONROE CO. 115 CHURCH ST. COLFAX, IOWA

NEW! 5-MINUTE BEAUTY TREATMENT FOR RUGS!

Now! No need to clean entire rug! Just brush in a handful of wonderful Glamorene Rug Cleaner on any "Dirt-Zone"—vacuum as usual. Rug looks bright as new in 5 minutes—leaves no rings! Perfect for spot cleaning, too! ½ gal. Glamorene Wool Rug Cleaner, ONLY $2.29 (Special Glamorene Applicator $1.25)

FOR COTTON and SYNTHETIC rugs, use New Glamorene Cotton Rug Cleaner, ½ gal. ONLY $2.49

SEE dirt-zones VANISH INSTANTLY!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Glamorene RUG CLEANER

10 E. 44th Street, N. Y. 17 • Sold In Canada as "Lamorene" by G. H. Wood and Company, Ltd., Toronto

THIS DAY GIVE THANKS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 82

were developed by present-day villagers from very old receipts that were treasured by the womenfolk of the area in early times, and by their daughters and their daughters. We'll start with fresh oyster soup:

FRESH OYSTER SOUP

Chop 1 quart drained oysters and 1 medium onion. Simmer together in 1 quart water, which later in the game will remind you of the flavor of the oysters. In a small skillet blend ¼ cup flour with ¼ cup melted butter or margarine. Cook 2 minutes without browning. Add this to the oysters and simmer 10 minutes, stirring all the while. (You've heard what happens if you don't? Why, lumps and horrors!) Take from the heat and force through a fine sieve. Add 6 tablespoons light cream, salt and pepper to taste, and reheat. Put a rosette of salted whipped cream on top and flirt the paprika shaker over it. Takes off that too innocent whiteness, that unfinished look of plaster awaiting the painter. Serve hot as Tophet, with toasted cheese crackers.

"Turkey shoot." The men in the family in the early 1800's often earned their Thanksgiving birds in shooting competitions called "turkey shoots." Aren't you glad you don't have to depend on your spouse's prowess, but can buy your turkey all dressed, ready for the oven? In case you aren't an old hand at turkey roasting or have forgotten the minor and major details since the last one, here is the up-to-date business on the bird:

ROAST TURKEY

Wash turkey and pat dry. Singe and remove any stray pinfeathers with tweezers. Cut a V in tail to remove sac. Remove neck if butcher didn't. Fill with cornbread stuffing as I shall report it to you, or stick to the sage-bread stuffing you're used to. Allow 1¼ cups stuffing per pound—ready-to-cook weight, that is. Fasten openings with poultry pins. Fold wing tips back under, in toward body. The wings will act as a brace for the bird in roaster and on platter later. Lace a long length of cord through poultry pins to tail. Bring the legs together and tie together securely (same piece of cord), then tie to tail. Run under the back, up and under wing tips, and pull back down and tie securely to the legs again. Rub softened butter or margarine all over turkey. Roast in moderately slow oven, 325° F., 3–3½ hours for 8–10 pound turkeys, 4–4½ for 11–13 pound, 4¾–5½ hours for 14–16 pound. Baste occasionally with pan drippings. Remove pins and cord and transfer to platter. Make gravy from drippings.

Well, to get on—or back—to the stuffing.

CORN-BREAD STUFFING

Cook 1 pound sausage meat in a frying pan with 2 tablespoons water over low heat. When the sausage is cooked, remove meat and sauté ⅓ cup chopped onion and 1 cup finely diced celery in sausage fat. Add 1 teaspoon poultry seasoning and 1 teaspoon salt. Mix this with the sausage meat and 8 cups corn bread crumbled fine and even. This is enough to stuff a 12-to-15-pound turkey. Don't pound in any stuffing as if you were driving a nail in a cement shingle. Use the light or second-base hitting strengt member to fill the sac up near the of the bird, so its "figger" is preserv is an important business.

Good to see—good to eat. Think satisfied with letting corn bread take big job of backboning the turkey an stuffing the main chance, the center e ner! Why, this turkey is almost the r a dinner. Not stopping the corn-br ness there, another corn-bread recei arunning. These are the w. k. co baked in the shape of ears of co stripped and brought from hill or r garden. The way of doing these litt tions is hereby given for free.

CORN STICKS

Sift together in a mixing bowl 1⅓ c ⅔ cup corn meal, 2 teaspoons bak der, ½ teaspoon salt and 3 tablespoo Beat 1 egg only enough to whisk it few times, like "Ladies change" fiddler calls it, to it ⅔ cup cream-style c blespoons mel ter or margari cup milk. Pour ture into the d dients, stir jus to dampen. D Turn into well heated co pans. If thee lurking near can't borrow, muffins. Wha name? A co called by an name would good—if you sticks! Bake oven, 400° F minutes. Mak a dozen.

When the pumpkin— fodder's in the that spells the summer. The has blossomed And in the fi meadows the has been garn gathered into b

In the cornfi were left to the the great gol glowing betwee nuded rows where now t stalks are awa reaper, and th kins are safe in the cellar retreat. N time for the best of these to be set a homely and anticipated mission. Th kin-pie season is at hand. Up in New Thanksgiving wouldn't be what it i pumpkin pie. The pumpkin belt is and the pie makings are fresh. But fo ies don't grow pumpkins There is no box variety, so they grow theirs in c from there on the treatment is t Now you take it away and I'll tell y

PUMPKIN PIE

Mix together 3 cups canned pumpki brown sugar, 1 cup granulated suga spoon salt, 1 teaspoon each of nutm namon and ginger and ¼ teaspoon cloves and allspice. Add 4 eggs, be not too beaten, with ¼ cup melted margarine. Add to the pumpkin mix mix well. Pour into a 10″ unbaked Bake in a hot oven, 450° F., 10 min duce the heat to 350° F. and bake 40 longer, until the center is set, whe with a silver knife. Now I'm sure y there's something wrong—no milk c But this pie is all pumpkin and spicier one I have never tasted. I

RITUAL FOR TEARS

By FRANCES BRAGAN RICHMAN

Grandmother Stewart had no time to weep,
She turned her back on death and walked away.
Never a stone to mark where her first-born lay,
Only a cluster of bluebells set to keep
The color of his eyes in blowing grass
Where the wagon train broke over the mountain pass.

Grandfather Stewart was a kindly man
Who had no words of comfort for his wife.
The only gift he gave her was his life,
And yet he saw her need, as such men can.
In grandma's garden, so the story tells,
Each spring he set one cluster of bluebells.

et Rid of Garbage

ATER...
ASER...
LENER...

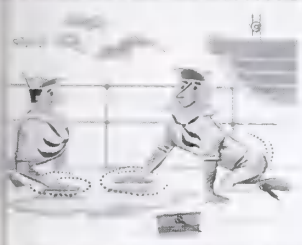
with

SINK-ERATOR®
OD WASTE DISPOSER

ROBOT
ROTOR

THE NEW MAGICAL ELECTRONIC BRAIN THAT DOES ALL THIS FOR YOU

Z'S THROUGH FOOD WASTE!



B -ROTOR allows faster feeding of waste . . . automatic grind selector re all waste. Dual direction cutting th like a woodsman cross-cut saw, ve ouble life.

P VERIZES HARDEST SOLIDS!

eracting, hammer-like action y and completely pulverizes all li Tough foods, that jam other dis- s, disappear because ROBOT-ROTOR i from either direction with light- n ast rapidity.

VIDES EXTRA SANITATION!

natic two-way scrubbing action extra sanitation . . . no chance of odors developing. ROBOT-ROTOR disposer doubly clean, sanitary hip-shape . . . all the time.

FOR FULL INFORMATION . . . NOW!

to learn all about this mechanical marvel that SINK-ERATOR the most efficient and convenient ator Mfg. Co., 1259 Fourteenth St., Racine, Wis.

_____

_____

_____State_____

frosted with whipped cream, sweetened with maple sugar. And cheese goes along.

Marlborough—a name. This time we are thinking of a pie—not a duke—and a New England apple pie at that. Remember there's quite a difference in apples. Quite a difference between a Pound Sweet and a Northern Spy, for example. And there's a great gulf between their uses and their destinies. A Pound Sweet makes the best boiled-cider applesauce ever. It used to be made in the fall and put down in the cellar to ripen in Bennington crocks. We use those nowadays for lamps and umbrella stands. And now for

MARLBOROUGH PIE

Core and quarter 6 tart apples, cook them in ¼ cup water until tender. The time depends on the size, the kind and the make-up of the apples. Try them with a silver fork and you'll know when they're as tender as love's old sweet song. Then strain and add 1 teaspoon butter or margarine and cool. Meanwhile line a deep pie dish, 9″ in diameter, with pastry, using 2 cups flour, ¾ teaspoon salt, ⅔ cup shortening and 4 tablespoons cold water. Maybe you'll go for the ready-made mix. It's good. Add 2 eggs, beaten just to say "beat," ¼ cup lemon juice (if apples are very tart, add only 2 tablespoons), 1 tablespoon grated lemon rind and 1 cup sugar to the cooled apple mixture. In the receipts where grated rinds are included, I add it in the sugar—mixed, you know. Good distribution, as in six hearts at bridge. If you can get it. Pour the combined mixture into the unbaked pastry shell and bake for 1 hour in a moderate oven, 375° F. Roll out a piece of the pastry and cut out a few turkey shapes. Bake. You'll garnish the top with the baked turkey shapes—I guess; and carry out the Thanksgiving theme. Serve cold, with a slab of Vermont two-year-old sage cheese.

A hard nut to crack. It's the butternut. Take a two-year-old butternut, a discarded old anvil or a "sadiron," a heavy hammer or hatchet and the strongest man in town. After half an hour's work you may count as many as five meats; half of one may be intact. The four are dust. So my advice is, buy your butternuts from one who cracks them in secret by a secret method; and then, with Vermont maple sugar, make for your next party and, if you feel strong, for Thanksgiving—maple-butternut cake.

MAPLE-BUTTERNUT CAKE

Cream 1 cup butter or margarine, gradually adding 1 cup sugar. Beat 4 egg yolks until light, then beat in gradually 1 cup sugar. Add the beaten yolks to the butter mixture. Sift together 3 cups flour, ½ teaspoon salt and 2 teaspoons baking powder. Add to the batter alternately with 1 cup milk and 2 teaspoons vanilla. Fold in 4 egg whites, beaten stiff but not dry. Add 1 cup chopped butternuts. Black walnuts are also high style, and black walnuts are as shy as a little girl on the first day of school. So plain walnuts are a good bet and so are pecans. Pour the batter into 2 greased 9″ layer-cake pans. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., for 35 to 40 minutes. When cool, frost with maple icing.

Maple Icing: Cream ½ cup butter or margarine, add 1 cup grated hard maple sugar, a little at a time. Add 1 egg and beat well. Beat in 3 cups confectioners' sugar, 1 cup at a time, and beat until very smooth and ready to occupy its appointed place on the cake. Flavor with 1 teaspoon vanilla and frost the cake. Decorate or not as suits you. Nuts and crystallized fruits are just panting to get in the act, and do a first-rate job when capably directed. But it's up to you.

In the past. You have read some of the thoughts of the author of this piece on past days, almost forgotten ways; together we have traveled into a past that is very far off, and coming out of the dust that hid us from sight a little while found ourselves in the sunlight-smitten present. It was a good journey.

Your ANNIE

Top Trimming for Your

Thanksgiving Feast

Feast time – or any time – frost your cakes with 7-MINIT Fluffy FROSTING. New Boiled Frosting Made Without Boiling!

Just add water and whip up mounds of delicious-tasting fluffy frosting. Made with country-fresh egg whites, it's guaranteed perfect every time.

Lavishly frosts large two-layer cake or up to thirty-eight cup cakes. This Thanksgiving frost your cakes with . . .

NEW BOILED FROSTING MADE WITHOUT BOILING 7-MINIT Fluffy FROSTING

FREE! Beautifully illustrated, 14-page booklet showing cakes for all occasions. And giving 19 different frosting variations. Also hints on how to make perfect pies. Send your name and address to: 7-MINIT, Dept. FL-6, 660 Madison Ave., New York 21, N. Y.

COLORED BURLAP
In 9 sunfast, decorator colors an unusual fabric with many uses deburco
FREE samples & literature
7 Market Street Box 1922
Paterson, N. J. Dept. 2K1

eco® for outstanding CLOCKS
HENRY COEHLER CO., INC., 101 Fifth Ave., N. Y.

DACRON ORLON NYLON
IMAGINE HATHAWAY CURTAINS at this LOW Price

Ruffled – 104″ wide per pr. 7″ picot-edged double full ruffles Dacron or Orlon, Snow-white, 90″ long, usually $14.98, our price $8.69 per pr.

This is typical of the values, see huge variety of styles and materials shown in our new beautifully illustrated home furnishings CATALOG. Let Miller's SAVE you money . . . SERVE you better. Write for your FREE copy.

Miller's OF NEW ENGLAND
Dept. J-161
30 Anita Terrace
Boston 19, Mass.

REVOLUTIONARY COOKING IDEA

GRAVY MASTER
BRUSHED ON BEFORE COOKING
Makes Meat
BROWNER – BETTER EATING – TASTIER

Save up to ½ on RUGS

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Your Choice of:
52 lovely, up-to-date, solid and two-tone colors, casual new texture blends and embossed effects, leaf and floral designs, colorful Early American and Oriental patterns,—regardless of colors in your old materials.
ANY SIZE up to 16 ft. seamless, any length—sizes you can't get elsewhere.
No-Risk, Trial Offer.
Our 80th Year

FREE TO EVERY READER

MAIL this coupon or a postcard for fascinating, new, money-saving Olson book . . 40 pages of Rugs and model rooms in actual colors. Tells how to get lovely, deep-textured, Reversible Broadloom Rugs at a big saving by sending your Old Rugs, Clothing to Olson Factory.

In Full Colors

Your Name _____

Address _____ © ORC

Town _____ State _____

OLSON RUG CO. Dept. E-82 Chicago 41, Ill.

A full-size, 6′3″x33″ bed was chosen for Bo, who promises to be tall like his father. His bed and trundle underneath were made from simple frames with flat springs attached for $20 each. Foam-rubber mattresses cost $39.40 each. Plaid material for curtains and bedspreads was 79 cents a yard. Desk chair cost $2 in an Atlanta secondhand shop.

The man-sized closet measures 5′ a is 24″ deep, with extra drawers and shelves to house toys now, clothes l Doors on either side of the closet were cut in half, and hinged, to fold and take up less space in close quar

"It's always been our dream to turn our 7′x11′ screen porch into a room for young 'Bo.' But we want it to be a room that can grow up with him."

Young Home-Builders

By NANCY CRAWFORD

"FOR one thing," said Dottie Bobo, "the porch has a door leading out into the yard, and Bo could come and go as he pleases. How wonderful that would be when the time comes for him to have dates! The problem is, how can we make the most of the small space so that he can use the room when he's nineteen as well as nine?"

It was a fairly simple matter to wall in the porch on three sides. White composition tile was chosen for the ceiling, to act as insulation and give a "finished" effect. Bo himself picked the soft blue for the walls—his favorite color, chosen from a box of soap powder he found in his mother's kitchen. A capacious closet was built into one corner—grown-up size, with the future in mind. Now the extra space is used for a toy chest, and extra drawers are filled with odd boxing gloves, baseballs, catcher's mitts, and so on.

"He loves to have friends in overnight," said Dottie. "Could we possibly do anything about that? There isn't room for two beds." An extra trundle bed proved to be the answer, mounted on rollers, fitting neatly under Bo's bed, easily pulled out and made up when small guests come to stay.

"The biggest problem of all is his electric train. Where can we put that? There isn't room for it anywhere unless we set it up in the living room, and then we trip over it all the time." A 36″x60″ plywood board was installed next to the closet, hinged to the wall near the floor. Narrow 4″ shelves on one side house the cars and other train equipment. On the other side of the board Barham mounted the train tracks. When Bo wants to use his train, he simply removes the cars from the shelves, lets down the board from the wall, and goes to it.

Above, complete floor plan for the co arrangement of furniture in Bo's new Board with train tracks on one side, shelves for cars and train signals on the other, is hinged 4″ off the floor, has a hook-and-eye catch near the top within Bo's reach. He pushes desk, across the room, to one side to make room for 5′ span of tracks before letting board down from the wall.

B.ıam and Dottie decided to lay a brick hearth for the prefabricated fireplace in their new living-playroom. right, five-year-old Jennie gives a hand with mixing r tar. Hearth is raised 6″ from the floor, extends 4′ up he wall in back. The Bobos installed a prefabricated chimney; stovepipe connections for fireplace, however, could be made to any flues previously built o oves or ranges. Cost of prefabricated fireplace: $150.

love to do needlework," says Bobo, "and Jennie's just like At right, a new mother-and-ghter idea—Dottie and Jennie on this clown rug for Jennie's for a month, picking it up for our or so every day. Little 3″ of yarn are hooked onto the vas with a new patented latch hich knots each strand securely place, forming a deep 1″ pile. ng the rug involves no frame, you can easily carry it around ou wherever you want to work.

Young
AMERICA LIVES

Did you know?

Jennie Bobo's play table, above, is really a 40″-square plywood top, hinged down the center for easy storing. Placed on any small low table, it makes a large area for a child's coloring and cutouts. Its most practical feature: the plywood top is coated with a new chemical liquid rubber, applied with a brush, which forms a hard, durable, washable surface. Hinged table tops cost $4.95 apiece. Liquid rubber costs $3.18 per quart.

If you have been looking for attractive screens to camouflage a radiator or set off a dining nook, you might try the plain, inexpensive screens that you decorate yourself. Each screen has three plywood panels, to paint or wallpaper as you choose, costs under $10.

There's a new lacquer enamel for touching up scratches and nicks on your car. Comes in pressurized cans, in most stock colors used on cars today. Does a professional-looking job. Good, too, for sprucing up children's metal toys.

Did you know you could roll a design on your walls? There's a new paint roller on the market which applies a textured design over painted surfaces. Comes in five different patterns—one of the easiest ways to give new life to a room.

Did you know that you can buy draperies-in-a-package? Draw draperies now come with finished pinch-pleated tops—all you need to do is hem the bottoms according to the length you want. Kit also includes lead weights for hems, tape measure, pins and needles. Draperies come in many attractive patterns, modern and traditional designs.

Did you know about the new sheets of self-adhesive plastic? They require no paste to apply; you just peel off the backing, and smooth over the surface you want covered. Wonderful for coffee-table tops, lamp shades, picture frames, and so on. Come in wood-grain patterns, marbles, stripes and solid colors, too; 18″ wide, 59 cents per yard.

Pink-and-white gingham shirt dresses with bias band detail down the front. Mother's, Vogue Design No. 8325. Child's, Design No. 2704.

Quilted calico patchwork skirts topped by white peasant blouses with calico patches. Mother's skirt, No. 8109; blouse, No. 8204. Child's blouse and skirt, 2698.

MOTHER AND DAUGHTER WARDROBES

By NORA O'LEARY
Pattern Editor of the Journal

Pretty Jennie Bobo thinks it's great fun to dress like her mother, and often does. Both Jennie and her mother have pretty figures and love color, so quite naturally their favorite dresses are bright red cut in princess lines. Gray flannel coats, velveteen party dresses, gay quilted calico skirts and gingham shirt dresses complete their "look-alike" wardrobes.

Turquoise velveteen party dresses . . . simple in design and accented with pink sashes. Mother's, Design No. 7512. Child's, No. 2715.

Gay red flannel princess dresses with trim white collars, gay ribbon ties. Mother's dress, Vogue Design No. 8182. Child's dress, Vogue Design No. 2697.

Gray flannel princess coats with black velvet collars, go over everything. Mother's coat, Vogue Design No. 7594. Child's coat, Vogue Design No. 2686.

© VOGUE

Other Views, Sizes and Prices of Vogue Patterns on page 218. Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Conn., or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. Some prices slightly higher in Canada. (*Conn. residents please add sales tax.) If you desire shipment first-class mail, please send 5¢ additional for each pattern ordered.

Leaflet No. 2626, Ideas for Young Clothes, has wonderful ideas for trimming and making children's clothes. Send 2 HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Pennsylvania residents please a

Helene Curtis has wonderful news for you!

NOW... a Hair Spray with NO LACQUER

never, never stiffens your hair!

Helene Curtis

SUPER SOFT

spray net BRAND

al you women who've turned up your pretty noses at a Hair Spray

uer leaves y and oking.

uer makes behave.
hours a wet ws the iness" wave.

uer perfect ir-dos.
n curls inutes.

. . . don't, one minute longer! For here is an excitingly new hair spray without one smidgen of lacquer. Even the perfume is new—an airy, apple-blossom sort of fragrance.

Forget wind, forget weather. Helene Curtis new Super Soft SPRAY NET holds your hair perfectly in place softly. It's so exquisitely soft, you can use it every single day, as often as you like, without even a hint of stiffening or drying.

Super soft? Oh my yes! Yet it keeps that just-had-a-hair-do smoothness all day long. "Sets" your pin curls snugly after a shampoo or for a quick redo. And it really brushes or washes out instantly.

And when you have a professional hair-do, you'll discover it's the hair spray used and preferred by better beauty salons across the country.

Honestly, Super Soft SPRAY NET is the newest, nicest, most delightful thing that could happen to your topknot.

We're just as proud of our Regular SPRAY NET!

Hard-to-manage hair . . . hair that's overdue for a permanent needs the more persuasive control of Regular SPRAY NET. So if you're one of the millions who have used it and loved it—don't change. Regular SPRAY NET, the finest of its kind, is for you.

$1.25 plus tax

SUPER SOFT OR REGULAR

LIMITED TIME ONLY

FREE!

a generous purse-size bottle of

Tweed PERFUME

with every purchase of SUPER SOFT or REGULAR SPRAY NET

FREE!

Buy SPRAY NET, Regular or Super Soft and get a gift of Lentheric's TWEED, the one fragrance above all others . . . to wear anytime, anywhere!

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Now there are two SPRAY NETS . . . Super Soft or Regular, both wonderful!

"I hope you've tried the new Betty Crocker Brownie Mix, I hope!"

Betty Crocker
OF GENERAL MILLS

"Hello, Homefolks— Have you heard the news? There's a new mix on the market—our Betty Crocker Brownie Mix. And it's just what your letters ordered—the easiest, quickest way to make the chewiest, fudgiest, good-eatingest brownies you ever tasted!

You can make 'em chewy—or you can make them soft and tender, like cake. But whatever you do, make plenty.

Got a scout troop? Or a Sunday School class? Or a young daughter just learning to cook? Turn them loose on brownies. You get perfect brownies every time with our Betty Crocker Brownie Mix—36 fudgy brownies to the package.

Do buy your first box today!"

Betty Crocker

FILL UP THE COOKY JAR! EACH BOX MAKES 36 BIG FUDGY BROWNIES!

Southern SPECIALTIES the easy way

Here are six pet dishes from my men favorites of ours whether we're asking friends having just a family dinner. By DOTTIE

Sunday-Night Casserole. Take 1 pound ground beef chuck, season with 1 teaspoon salt and ⅛ teaspoon pepper, shape into tiny meat balls, about ¾″ in diameter. Brown these in 2 tablespoons butter or margarine in a skillet; then remove from skillet. Chop 2 large onions very fine (about ⅔ cup), and brown in skillet, adding a little more butter or margarine if necessary. Add 1 No. 2 can tomatoes; heat, then add one ½-pound package sharp process cheese, and 2 large garlic cloves, crushed. Arrange quart casserole alternate lay pound spaghetti, cooked mushy soft), 1 tablespoon fresh parsley, 8 slices bacon and crumbled, and the meat sauce. Bake ½ hour in a oven, 350° F. Serves 4.

Sunday-Night Casser
Cucumber-and-Onio Salad with Sour Cre
Frozen Strawberrie

STUART

Young
HOW AMERIC

Baked Pork Chops w Beans
Tossed Vegetable Sa with Mayonnaise Dressing
Georgia Pecan Pie

Baked Pork Chops with Beans. Whenever I possibly can, I cook dishes in double quantity, and freeze half for another time. This really makes life easier for all of us, particularly in a household where I'm often called on to produce meals at odd hours of the day. I'll bake two of these pork-chop casseroles, for instance, at one time, so that there'll be a spare in the freezer. Season 4 good-sized pork chops with salt and pepper and brown them well in a skillet. Then place them low baking dish. Drain fat fr and sauté 1½ cups choppe and ½ cup chopped green ¼ cup butter or margarine clove garlic, crushed, one can Boston-style baked bean chili sauce, 1 tablespoon bro 1 tablespoon Worcestershi and 1 tablespoon prepared Pour over chops. Bake 1 hou erate oven, 350° F. Serves 4.

Toasting marshmallows in the new fireplace is the children's idea of the perfect dessert.

Southern Creamed Tuna with Rice
Stuffed-Lettuce Salad
Frozen Pineapple Chunks

Creamed Tuna. Sauté [illegible] chopped onion in [illegible]ter or margarine. [illegible] tablespoons flour. [illegible]d 1 cup canned [illegible] and 1 cup light [illegible]k and stirring un- [illegible] thickened. Add 3 [illegible]opped dill pickle, [illegible]rd-cooked eggs, [illegible] teaspoon salt and [illegible] pepper. Flake [illegible]ans tuna into [illegible]. Add to cream [illegible]th cooked rice [illegible] e 3-ounce can [illegible]ooms, drained. [illegible]gs.

[illegible] Salad. Cut out [illegible]um-sized head [illegible] to make siza- [illegible]ten 1 package [illegible]nd mix with 1 [illegible]eese, 3 table- [illegible]fort or blue [illegible]espoons finely [illegible] 1 tablespoon [illegible]espoons chopped green [illegible] taste. Fill cavity of let- [illegible]chill. Cut into wedges [illegible] French dressing.

Corned-Beef-and-Rice Casserole
Green Beans
Apple-Meringue Squares

[illegible]nd-Rice Casserole. [illegible]nely chopped onion in [illegible] tablespoons butter or [illegible]d 1 can corned beef cut [illegible] and brown a little [illegible] 2 large cloves garlic, [illegible]spoon orégano, 1 tea- [illegible] tablespoon chopped [illegible]ps cooked rice (fluffy). [illegible]er and turn out into a [illegible]ole (or leave in skillet, [illegible]e new colorful range- [illegible] Heat 10 minutes in [illegible]° F. Serves 4.

[illegible] Squares. Cream [illegible] margarine, add [illegible] cup sugar and beat thoroughly. Add 2 egg yolks, ⅔ cup fine, soft bread crumbs, 2 teaspoons grated lemon rind; mix well. Add 1⅓ cups sifted flour, 1½ teaspoons baking powder and ¼ teaspoon salt. Mix well (dough will be very stiff). Spread half of the dough in bottom of greased 10″x6″x2″ baking dish. Peel, core and slice 2 medium-size cooking apples very thin and place over dough. Sprinkle lightly with ¼ teaspoon cinnamon and 2 tablespoons sugar and cover with ⅓ cup finely chopped walnuts. Spread remaining dough over apples. Bake in moderately hot oven, 375° F., 25 minutes. Beat 2 egg whites until nearly, but not quite, stiff; add a pinch of salt and ¼ cup sugar, a spoonful at a time, beating until stiff. Spread on cake; sprinkle ½ cup walnuts on top. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., 10 to 12 minutes, until a delicate brown. Makes 6 servings.

It's Ocean Spray Cranberry Time!

Old-fashioned Goodness . . .
Ready to Serve!

Ideas for Thanksgiving

Cut Ocean Spray Jellied Sauce in fancy shapes.

Children love 'em. (Crush left-over bits and spread on breakfast toast, or use for between-meal snacks.)

Or make a Magnificent Salad.

Here's a favorite: Dissolve 1 package raspberry gelatin in 1½ cups hot water. When partially set, fold in 1 can Ocean Spray Cranberry Sauce (Jellied or Whole) and one whole ground orange (rind and pulp). Chill until firm.

Delicious dessert for Thanksgiving Night . . .

Royal Cranberry Sundae.

Spoon Whole Cranberry Sauce over vanilla ice cream. Sprinkle generously with brown sugar and cinnamon mixed in this proportion: ½ cup brown sugar, 2 tsps. cinnamon.

Bring back the blush with new DuBarry Bloom!

Shades of Victoria—the blush is back! You see this glow-of-cheek on the radiant, new crop of American beauties and think, "how pretty!" Nature? Vitamins? No—DuBarry Bloom!

Bloom is a wonderful new kind of color for your cheeks, so creamy-light in texture that it spreads quickly and softly as a blush! No blotching or streaking. Never any hard, artificial "rouged" look. And the pretty blush that Bloom gives your cheeks is so fresh and natural, no one would ever dream it's "put on"!

Bloom, $1.10 plus tax

Sounds like magic, but Bloom comes in just one shade and gives each her own prettiest color glow!

P. S. For a poreless looking complexion, smooth on DuBarry Flatter-Glo (as casually as you would a hand lotion). It's the fluid make-up that really does what you've been hoping a make-up would do. Conceals tiny lines and skin flaws. Never magnifies pores. It stays fresh and flattering (no greasy shine-through), and because of its exclusive ingredient, "Vibranol," holds beauty-giving moisture in the skin. Flattering shades.

Flatter-Glo, $1.10 plus tax

DUBARRY BEAUTY PREPARATIONS

by RICHARD HUDNUT of Fifth Avenue

Beauty Prescription WITH A MAN IN MIND

By DAWN CROWELL NORMAN

Beauty Editor of the Journal

"FLATTERY will get you somewhere," says Barham Bobo, who receives as much from his wife as he bestows on her. After eleven years of marriage, two children and more financial downs than ups, Barham and Dottie thrive on the kind of mutual admiration that reaches out from their hearts to spread warmth and happiness throughout their home.

Following are some everyday examples of why this husband-and-wife team still have that honeymoon look in their eyes:

DOTTIE: Barham always gives me the feeling he is a lucky guy to have married me. He never leaves the house in the morning or arrives home at night without a kiss for me (and I don't mean a husbandly peck on the forehead!). What's more, he telephones me every afternoon to ask about the children and tell me he loves me. His flattering attention gives me something to look forward to—and live up to!

BARHAM: Dottie makes me feel she needs me, that we need each other—that's the way a man wants his girl to feel about him. She's as apt to ask my opinion on whether our little girl looks prettiest in pink or blue as ask whether we need new tires for the car. It gives me a feeling of sharing in every aspect of our lives. Other couples often seem independent of each other, quite capable of going their separate ways. That's not happy marriage, to our way of thinking.

DOTTIE: We disagree as married folks, but we make a effort to compromise, to ge ferences before they have ac out of proportion. For ins sonality Barham and I are day and night. I'm overly easy mixer, love big social af is shy, quiet, happiest in sn close friends. In the begin sented a problem. At part busy bustling about and en I'd forget to introduce Barh to draw him into conversa days, I make a conscious him toward people with wh would get along easily and the most part, I've learned preferences for quiet soci knowing I have plenty of gregarious nature in wom afternoon clubs, church bang-up parties for the chi

BARHAM: Dottie someh never to have that end-of draggled look, despite the all her own work and gets u ing at two-thirty A.M. to breakfast for me before I newspaper-delivery route. she's doing dishes or clean clothes look fresh and orde some extra touch—a ribbo a pretty apron—something

DOTTIE: Take clothes. very feminine things, fitted,

Can you answer "yes" to thes

Do you:

Complete your efforts to look your prettiest while you are ge go out, and then relax about your appearance and concentrate on ente

Act happy to be with him, smile easily and often?

Avoid embarrassing him by drawing attention to your shortc hair's a mess tonight," or "I don't know why I ever bought this dress"

Accept his compliments quickly and graciously without (1) detailed description of the diet that got you your 21″ waistline or (2) fluffing it off, suggesting you think he's insincere?

Occasionally compliment him on the way he looks?

Create an aura of warmth and worthiness in your relationsh without being assuming or possessive?

LEOMBRUNO · BODI

ottie Bobo believes it's more important for a wife to look pretty across e breakfast table than across a crowded room. Her every-morning glamour achieved in less than five minutes. Freshly washed face brightened with a sh of lipstick; brushed hair; becoming housecoat. Maybe this pretty vision what makes Barham telephone her every afternoon just to say, "I love you!"

e dressy things, too, but I hin they're as smart or practical re clothes. So I see to it that date housecoats for evenings at ne ure up to Barham's ideal. I'll ery ttle for them (Barham doesn't he tails, just the effect!), saving jor ortion of my clothes allow- re practical investments. This 'r both satisfied.

I'll never forget the second honeymoon when I told Dot- fume smelled like ordinary slipped out before I had a to alize I'd dropped a potential el But Dottie took it like a an clever—wife. She vowed never it gain. All I had to do in return go out and buy her a generous of erfume which she and I both Barham's obvious pleasure ght (123 pounds), waist (23") ize (9) are the same as they fc we were married is my main re keeping them that way. I s a three-pound leeway, but if es o up beyond that, I start cut- vi t's easier to resist the tempta- at ning foods when your husband y mpliments you on your pretty I ink it's the husband who is n esponsible for the wife who "lets herself go." A little male encouragement and praise can go a long way in prompting any woman to work at being her most attractive.

BARHAM: Dottie shows her appreciation too. It makes me want to bring her the flowers I know she loves, or to manage some little surprise gift whenever I can.

DOTTIE: Out of necessity, our lives are so full of practical expenditures, Barham and I both get a kick out of giving and receiving something sentimental or extravagant occasionally. For instance, I'll select something for him I know he wouldn't buy for himself—a pair of gold cuff links, a handsome leather billfold. When I was expecting Bo and we were budgeting right down to our last penny, Barham surprised me with the most frivolous little bed jacket to take to the hospital—and when Jennie was one day old she received a tiny white orchid (miniature of the one I received) with a card, "Love from Daddy." There are times when a budget just has to be stretched to allow room for some little expression of love and appreciation.

BARHAM: Do we sound unbelievably happy with each other—still very much in love?

DOTTIE: Well, we are. And that's the way we always want it to be!

...m your man?

Young HOW AMERICA LIVES

ak softly, even if it means you have to make a conscious effort to tune to a lower, prettier pitch?

him know you are sincerely interested in hearing about (and commenting e asks) his workaday world?

oid trying to "prove" your popularity by discussing other (real or make- tes and parties?

tter him by wearing a certain color or dress he particularly likes on you?

him know you can have plenty of fun "doing nothing" by making a social an evening in which he hasn't had to spend a penny for entertainment?

oid extremes in clothes and manner, knowing conservative taste combined hative touches has sure-fire appeal for any man?

You and your lovely clothes are safe with Fresh

Are you always Lovely to Love?

You're lovely to look at . . . lovely to be near . . . only when underarms stay dry and odorless.

That's why lovely women use FRESH Cream Deodorant, always!

Tests in a leading university laboratory show that new FRESH with "Moisture-Shield" formula has up to 180% greater astringent action than other leading cream deodorants. And it is this astringent action that keeps underarms dry, free from odor. Use gentle, effective FRESH daily.

ONLY FRESH HAS THIS NEW "MOISTURE-SHIELD" FORMULA TO KEEP UNDERARMS REALLY DRY!

Fresh is a registered trade mark of The Pharma-Craft Corporation. Fresh is also manufactured and distributed in Canada.

For family and friends, this room has a cozy and inviting air. The sofas, by a flick of the wrist, convert into comfortable beds, so necessary in this small but hospitable hous

for children for laundry for eating even for sleeping

Practically Perfect

By CYNTHIA McADOO WHEATLAND

BELIEVE it or not, this room has almost everything! When Dorothy and Barham Bobo built the new 14′ x 25′ room onto the rear of their little pink prefab, they wanted it to serve many purposes. Needing more play area for their two energetic youngsters, they provided ample storage space for toys in large closets, chose a tough, practical floor covering. Tired of doubling up uncomfortably when family came to stay, they now have two extra beds converted easily by means of drop backs from their handsome sofas. Underneath the shuttered cabinet-counter are, of all things, a washer and dryer, as well as space for silver, dishes, trays. The dining area with its black table and benches is a great improvement over the tiny alcove in their small living room. Now Dottie can indulge her enthusiasm for church group meetings and children's parties, serving tea or dinner buffet style, made easy by a pass-through which was formerly the outside kitchen window. The living end is attractive and hard-wearing, with bright printed-denim sofa covers, vivid turquoise armchair. It's perfect for entertaining, for quiet reading and studying, and the children love to toast marshmallows or pop corn in the fireplace. All the Bobos are delighted with the appearance and heat-giving qualities of their "portable" fireplace which was about half the cost of a conventional one. Throughout this pine-paneled room, the color scheme is simple but bright and cheerful, materials hardy and practical, exactly suiting its character and infinite usefulness.

Entertaining is made easy in the sunny dining area by an ample counter under kitchen pass-throu

Give your bathroom the NEW LIGHT LOOK with these NEW lighthearted

Cannon Carefree Colors

The freshest, airiest, brightest look ever is the new look in bathrooms these days, thanks to the wonderful new world of towel colors brought to you by Cannon! Choose from 18 (yes, 18!) in all — the lightest, brightest towel colors yet!

ght new bathroom with every quick change. Simply switch towel en-les—and your bathroom looks almost new! Choose from pastels, -tones, accent colors, textured patterns, florals, borders. You'll want plete ensembles—each with bath towel, face towel, wash cloth.

18 new Cannon colors for any budget. You can select your favorite colors today. Remember all Cannon towels, and only Cannon towels, have the exclusive Beauti-Fluff finish — and the big, thirsty bath towels come in a price range to suit every purse . . . from 79c to 3.50.

Cannon Mills, Inc., 70 Worth Street, New York City 13

TRADE MARK CANNON

Towels • Sheets • Stockings • Bedspreads • Draperies

KATHERINE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 70

Men-at-arms swarmed over the heath with spears and battle-axes. The bewildered peasants could not resist. The armored men—who had been at this work since dawn—grabbed them, bound their ankles with leather thongs and flung them to their knees on the trampled grass near the king.

The village women and Katherine were not harmed, though they were shoved roughly out of the way. Katherine, as dumfounded as the helpless rebels, pushed through the milling mass of soldiers, intent on speaking somehow to Richard, when she saw among the captives the matted flaxen hair and meager body of Cob o' Fenton.

Cob's wrists were tied and he had around his waist a rope that was fastened to some soldier's saddle. His jerkin and leather trunks had been torn, his dirty little body was bruised and bleeding.

"Cob!" Katherine cried, trying to get closer to him, but one of the armored men pushed her back, saying, "Can't ye see the king is speaking!"

She did not hear what the king said, but he had pushed his visor up and she could see a cruel half-smile on his girlish pink-and-white face.

One of the new captives, the blacksmith, called, "But, sire, ye gave us all our freedom. Here's the charter they gave me!" The man waved a ragged piece of parchment.

Richard backed his horse around, then, standing high in the stirrups, shrilled out, "What fools ye be—you thought to frighten your king! You had it all your way for a time, did you not? That time is past!"

He spurred his horse and cantered near the bound blacksmith, leaned over and plucked the charter from the blacksmith's hand. Richard drew his jeweled dagger and sliced through the parchment until he could tear it to a dozen fragments. He flung the fragments over his shoulder. "Now you see what use I make of your charter!" he cried. "Serfs you are, and serfs you shall remain. Some of you'll return to your own manors and whatever punishment your lords wish to mete out to you. But those who've dared defy me openly shall be brought to trial today—and dealt with fittingly."

The king's words rang out into a deathly quiet. Katherine saw Cob put his hands against his face and slump forward on the rope that held him.

Her heart pounded in her throat. She darted around the man-at-arms and ran out into the open space by the king.

"Your Grace!" she cried. "Sire! A boon!"

Richard looked down in amazement at this poorly clad widow with the pilgrim scrip and staff. "What is it, dame?"

"Your Grace," said Katherine, "I want that serf tied to yon rope." She pointed at Cob. "He's mine! You don't know me, your Grace? Yet last Christmastide we shared wassail at Leicester Castle." She opened her scrip, fumbled inside and brought out the duke's sapphire signet ring. She held it up so that only he could see the carved Lancastrian crest.

Richard stared at the ring, then into her wide gray eyes. He cried, "'Tis Lady Swy——"

"Your Grace, for the love of God, don't name me!" she whispered frantically. "No one must know—it is for penance."

Richard's capricious fancy was caught. He would have questioned her except that it was forbidden to infringe upon a penitential vow. He leaned down from the saddle. "You want that churl? Is he truly yours, lady?"

"Aye," Katherine said, "from Kettlethorpe, a fugitive. I would deal with him myself."

"I would have drawn and quartered him, and hope you do," said Richard, his eyes sparkling. "When my men caught him back there in the forest, he screamed all manner of treason. But you shall have him."

"Grand merci, most gracious Majesty. Wait, my lord, I pray you. I have a daughter, Blanchette, of your own age. Do you remember her at Leicester?"

"I think so," answered Richard. "She was small with ruddy curls."

"Have you seen aught of her since then?"

"Nay, lady, I have not—how odd a question."

"Forgive me." She curtsied and kissed the boy's gold gauntlet. "Christ's blessing on your generosity, sire."

Richard smiled graciously.

No one impeded her as she led her stumbling, dazed serf away from the heath, and they were at once forgotten when Richard and his army returned to the congenial punishment of the captured rebels.

SHE led Cob off the road into the forest until she saw a rain-water pool in a glade of holly bush and beeches. Katherine, pointing to the soft turf, said, "Rest here, Cob."

His pale-lashed eyes stared at her with numb hatred. But he collapsed on the edge of the pool and plunged his swollen purplish-black hands in the water. The leather thong that bound his wrists had bitten so deep that the flesh was puffed in ridges. He rested his elbows on the turf and, bending his face to the pool, lapped up water avidly.

Katherine unclasped her scrip again. In it she carried all that she possessed: the few

new textured beauty in plastic

Dinette by Daystrom Furniture Olean, N. Y.

wipes clean ▪ colors last

Masland Duran®
PLASTIC UPHOLSTERY

The rich look of texture and the practical wear of plastic! This combination is yours with Masland Duran . . . now with luxurious textured effects. Many lovely colors and patterns. See beautifully textured Masland Duran on all types of furniture. Write for folder with sample.
The Masland Duraleather Company, Dept. L-11, Phila. 34, Pa.

ONLY MASLAND MAKES DURAN
THIS TAG IS YOUR PROTECTION

All Masland products are also available in Canada.

make it VANiSH

Get rid of the "GHOST OF THE PA

VANiSH cleans toilet bowls fast, scents the bathroom with a fresh, enjoyable aroma. Simply pour VANiSH into bowl. Bubbling "scrubbing action" removes rings, stains, and unseen, germ-laden scum. Harmless to plumbing and septic tanks. Use it regularly. You'll like the handy Expellid Opener.

the fragrant way to clean Toilet Bowls

JUDSON DUNAWAY CORP., Dove
makers of ELF drain opener

More Comfort Weari
FALSE TEET

Here is a pleasant way to overc plate discomfort. FASTEETH, an powder, sprinkled on upper and lo holds them firmer so that they comfortable. No gummy, gooey, p or feeling. It's alkaline (non-acid). sour. Checks "plate odor" (denture Get FASTEETH today at any drug

For Quick Relief
HEADACH NEURALG

Remarkably Effective

STANBACK, the medically ap proved formula, contains sever fast acting ingredients—In combi tion they work faster than any alone to bring soothing relief f pains of HEADACHE—NEURAL

Snap Back with

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

had seized in the Savoy, the change ined from the gold nobles, a comb, a wel, a cup and a bone-handled knife.
ok out the knife and, kneeling by d, "Keep your arms steady. Sainte pray this knife is sharp enough."
mped back, staring in terror at the Cob, Cob," said Katherine. "How think I'd harm you? I want to cut g for you."

ine slid the knife carefully between and sawed on the tough thong. It last, and she threw it on the turf.
ou can use your hands," she said,
st help me get that rope off too."
wallowed, staring at the cut thong.
'ye mean to do wi' me?" he gasped.
away from ye again, I'll ——" He his lips on the threats he had nearly rine came to him with the wet towel nsed as best she could the raw abra-stone cuts on the taut skin, and said ftly, "Oh, Cob, have you had nought

We must get you food at Waltham."
" he cried, twisting out from her Aye, I've had crusts from the monks fronds in the forest, and thought me whilst I still had me freedom!"
nk back, looking at the matted, sweat-l tow hair, the F brand on the stubbly ext to the pale, sullen, shifting eyes.
are free, Cob o' Fenton," said
e. "A freeman from this moment."
muscles jerked. He peered into her en quickly down the shadowy glades
the beeches. "Ye think to diddle me,
' yet another trick! Aye—shout now g's men, sure they —string me up at d ha' done wi' it."
ll wonder that you'll eve me," said Kathadly. "Yet, Cob,
u think me so unfor what you did
the Savoy burned?
lad you had your freedom from the nce it seems that you have not, I give u, Cob."
if 'twere true," he cried in a shaking who'd believe it! Think ye I could go to Kettlethorpe, in peace, to your —d'ye know what he'd do to me?"
," said Katherine, rising. "You shall writ of manumission under my seal, s the steward will obey."
as many hours before Cob believed,
he came with her back to Waltham;
she brought him food, and a long smock. She inquired from the hostel-where she might find some man of law, s directed to a clerk.
n the clerk understood that the widow oney for a fee, he pulled out a fresh ent and shoved a Bible toward Kath-
'Do you kiss the Book and truly swear is serf is your property? Yours to dis-f as you will?"
o," said Katherine.
at disposition would you make of him?"
ish to free him."
r what reason? It must go on the deed."
r the brave and loyal service he has ed me, beyond his bondage duty," she ftly.

clerk scribbled rapidly, asking at the place for names. Katherine gave hers eluctance, but the clerk had never heard
. He sanded the writing, stamped his seal, demanded his fee, and thrust the ment out to Cob.
herine put her arm around Cob's shoulnd led him out of the house. "Here," aid, smiling. "Cob—you dolt, you've ed your writ of freedom. Sure that's no o treat it!" She picked it up and, starting cried, "Ah, no—don't," for the little ad thrown himself on the road and was g her bare feet.
y lady," he sobbed, "I'll serve ye till I Oh, my lady—what can I do for ye?" He his stained wet face, looking up at her worship.
ray for me, Cob," said Katherine. " 'Tis at you can do for me."

Cob and Katherine parted that afternoon at the fork where the North Road branched off to Walsingham. Cob begged to go with her, but she would not let him: the penance must be suffered alone. There was no happier man in England that day than Cob in his new smock, pennies in his pocket for the journey, and his writ of manumission sewed to his smock against his skin.

His joy could not help but lighten Katherine's heavy heart for a time, but when they had parted and she took up her lonely pilgrimage again, night fell on her spirit as it fell on the darkening ridges of the Essex hills.

She had no goal but Walsingham and the miracle, when the All Merciful Lady there would tell her how to find Blanchette, how to make reparation.

As she limped toward the hospice where she would spend the night, she stumbled on a rock that jutted up from the road, and pain shot through her wrenched ankle.

THE days and nights merged into a long gray plodding. The ankle swelled until she could not walk, and she lay over at a convent where the nuns were good to her. After some time her ankle healed. She gave the nuns her last jewel in gratitude, and they sent her on her way again, begging that she would remember them in her prayers at Walsingham.

It was on a searing-hot day that Katherine at last reached Houghton-in-the-dale, a mile south of the shrine, and stopped at the little stone slipper chapel. Every pilgrim was required to leave his shoes at the slipper chapel and walk the last mile barefoot. Katherine, who had no shoes to remove, drew apart, waiting until she might go in and say a prayer. So near at last to journey's end, she dared not let herself think of the holy sight which lay ahead of her, nor of the miracle she was certain would take place.

No May lasts seven months.
—DUTCH PROVERB

She prayed in the chapel and was filled with exalted hope. Her lassitude and headache vanished, she sped along the sacred mile beside the river. Her skin no longer reddened under the fierce sun rays, the soles of her feet were as tough and calloused as a friar's. She did not feel the torturing fleabites, nor the sweat that bathed her body under the hair shirt and the heavy black robe, nor the pain that had lately made so difficult the chewing of the coarse bread which was all she had allowed herself to eat since starting on pilgrimage. Foul-smelling little sores had broken out on her legs, but she had made no effort to poultice them. These afflictions were all sent by God to prove her true contrition, and would ensure the Blessed Lady's favor.

As she neared Walsingham, other penitential pilgrims joined her on the road, clad in sackcloth, wearing the wide palmer's hat, with ashes on their brows. These kept their eyes fixed on the ground as Katherine did.

The town itself was crammed with pilgrim hostels, cookshops and taverns; by the time Katherine reached the abbey gate she was one of a great throng, among them many cripples, and sick folk borne on litters by their relatives. There was a small postern in the abbey gate, and one by one they filed through.

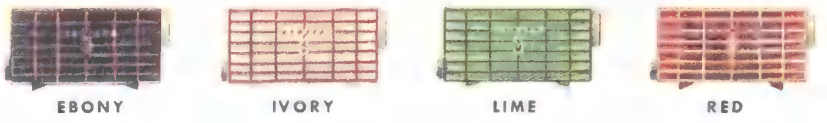
Katherine's heart beat fast; she wanted to hold back, to think and pray again before entering the sacred enclosure, but she could not. Canons hurried the folk along. They were herded first through a little chapel, where they knelt and kissed a bone, big as the shank of an ox. It was the finger bone of St. Peter, the attendant canon told them, watching while the pilgrims put pennies in a box.

They left the chapel and went through a covered way into a shed thatched with reeds and straw, garnished with flowers. Here on the ground there were two holy wells side by side. The monk in charge waved the people back, for a child had been laid in the little space between the twin wells.

The child was a boy of about four, but his head was big as that of a grown man, his dull swollen eyes were mindless as a dead lamb's. The mother knelt beside him, to pull his arms apart so that one little hand should touch each pool. Her lips moved in desperate prayer while the monk made the sign of the cross over

Your eyes won't believe your ears!

Console tone in new table radios starting at $19.95*



You really have to hear one to believe such tone could be built into radios this small (a bare 5″ high, 11¾″ wide, 5⅝″ deep).

Zenith exclusives make the difference. One is the acoustically designed cabinet, with speaker in the middle, that permits a much greater volume of clearer tones. Another is the Zenith Alnico 5 speaker that yields a vibrant bass, clear-as-a-bell trebles.

The new Zenith Pacemaker has the famous Zenith Long Distance Chassis, with a powerful Zenith WAVEMAGNET® Antenna built inside, to bring in even distant stations.

Plugs into any AC or DC outlet. Looks as pretty as a picture anywhere, and comes at a new low price for a Zenith! In colors of Maroon plastic, $19.95*; Ebony, Ivory, Lime, Red, $22.95*.

Zenith AC-DC Table Radio Model R509

ZENITH
The royalty of television and RADIO

Backed by 36 Years of Experience in Radionics Exclusively

ALSO MAKERS OF FINE HEARING AIDS • Zenith Radio Corporation, Chicago 39, Illinoi

*Manufacturer's suggested retail price, slightly higher in Far West and South. Prices and specifications subject to change.

the child. The pilgrims watched, holding their breaths.

The child struggled, trying to jerk his hands from the water, then let out a long sobbing wail.

The mother gave a great cry and gathered the child in her arms. "A miracle!" she cried. "For sure, it is a miracle! He has made no sound in months. Our Blessed Lady has cured him!"

Tears ran down Katherine's cheeks. She turned away and could not look at the mother's wild hopeful face. When her own time came to kneel between the holy wells and plunge her hands at once in each, she could form no proper prayer. She saw nothing but Blanchette's trusting eyes, as they had been long ago.

Our Lady of Walsingham's shrine adjoined the church. It was a small chapel without windows, nor needed any, for its hundred votive candles glittered on walls lined with gold and silver offerings, while the blessed image, larger than a woman, was crusted so thick with diamonds, rubies, pearls and other precious stones that the eye was blinded.

Katherine waited long outside the shrine for her turn. Before she finally knelt by the dazzling image a priest in white chasuble came up to ask what offering she would make.

She opened her scrip, taking out the duke's betrothal ring. "This, father."

He took the ring, glanced sharply at the gold and sapphire. "It will be acceptable to Our Gracious Lady, my daughter."

He drew aside while Katherine kissed the statue's golden beringed foot, stared up through clouds of blue incense at the smooth painted wooden face beneath a diamond crown.

In the moments that she knelt there, Katherine prayed in desperation, she supplicated, "Give me back my child! Show me the way to forgiveness. Lady, lady, you who are all-merciful, tell me how Hugh's murder may be forgiven. Tell me where is my child!"

And there was no answer. The white-and-red-painted face, the round upward-staring eyes remained as before, bland, wooden, indifferent.

Still she knelt, until the priest touched her on the shoulder. "There are many waiting to come in here, daughter." She gave him so frantic and despairing a look that he said, "Come, would you gaze on the precious relic? It works more miracles than any other in Christendom!"

She bowed her head, and he waited, glancing at her scrip. "I've but a few pence left, father," she said, "and this." She held out four silver pennies and the tarnished silver brooch the queen had given her at Windsor.

"Ah!" said the priest. "Well, since you have already donated ——" He took the pennies, and ignored the tawdry brooch. He unlocked a small diamond-studded door beneath the Virgin's feet, exposing a crystal vial mounted in the center of a gold-and-ivory crucifix. The vial seemed to contain a whitish powder.

Katherine gazed at the vial. It was said that when the Virgin was inclined to answer a pilgrim's prayer, the holy milk would leap and quiver within the crystal. She strained her eyes until they blurred, but there was no sign from the relic.

The priest closed the reliquary and locked it. He hurried to the exit door, held it wide.

She went out along another covered way and through a gate into the street. Something pricked her hand and she looked down at the queen's brooch which she still clasped. "Foi vainquera" was the motto on that brooch—a lie. Faith had conquered nothing. Our Lady had neither heard nor answered. There was no forgiveness, no miracles. Her hand dropped back. The brooch fell into the gutter.

A man behind Katherine saw the brooch drop, picked it up and lumbered after her.

"Good pilgrim dame," said the man, "you dropped this."

"Let it be," she said. "I do not want it."

THE man looked into her face, then peered closer at the brooch and read the tiny letters. Because he had suffered very greatly himself, and because his heart was filled with tenderness for every living thing, he guessed something of what must have happened to this widowed penitent at the shrine.

He put the brooch in his pouch and followed Katherine at a distance. People crossed themselves as he walked by them, but some reached out and touched him for luck. He was a hunchback.

Katherine walked until she came to the market square, where there were benches along the garden hedge of the Black Lion tavern. Her throat was parched with thirst, her stomach gnawed. To gain favor from the Miraculous Lady of Walsingham, nothing at all had passed her lips since vespers yesterday.

I shall have to beg for my bread now, she thought. Pain throbbed in her head. A swimming weakness crushed her. She slu down on a bench and shut her eyes.

The man with the humped back pause watched Katherine with compassion.

Voices behind the hedge were recou with relish the horrors of the revolt in Lo two months ago. "Aye," agreed a self-i tant voice. "Stale news, that is—but ha heard the latest of the Duke o' Lancas

Katherine started and opened her eye clenched her hands on the rim of the b

"John o' Gaunt's renounced his paran Shipped her off to France, or some say t of his northern dungeons. The king manded it."

"NAY, but," said a woman, "'tis well k he was tired of her anyway. A Benedictin me the duke made public confession sins, then crawled on hands and knees ing with his poor duchess to forgive him they met in Yorkshire."

Katherine rose from the bench and to run. The hunchback hurried after he

She ran north from the town toward t and along the banks of the River Stiffke til it widened at one place into a mill

Here on the bank by a tree she stoppe advanced to brink of the She gazed dow the dark b depths, where grasses bent rushing water clasped her against her b and stood sw on the brink.

She felt a g her arm, a deep said, "No, my That is not the Katherine her head. "Jes me be!" she "Leave me a

His grip tigh on her arm. cry on Jesus'n he said softly you do not what He has ised. He said n we should n tempted nor that we should not be tra nor afflicted, but He promised, 'Thou not be overcome!'"

A little wind rustled through the fronds, mingling with the sound of th water as it splashed against the turnin wheel.

She stared at him. "That was not sa me!" she cried. "God and His Mothe cast me out!"

"Not so. It is not so." He smiled. "Sir has said, 'I shall keep you securely.' Yo dearworthy a child of His as anyone."

Katherine's gaze cleared and she saw manner of man it was who was speak her. A hideous little man with a hump, head was twisted deep into his should man with a purple bulbous nose, scar pits, and a fringe of fire-red wisps arc tonsure. She crossed herself. An evil de summoned by her from the depths c beckoning water —— "What are you gasped.

He sighed a little, for he was well u this, and patiently answered, "I am a parson from Norwich, my poor child, Father Clement."

Her terror faded. His voice was reson a church bell, and his unswerving loo hers with sustaining strength. He wore a darned but cleanly priest's robe. A c hung from his girdle.

"I'll warrant," he said calmly, "you' eaten in a long time." He opened his took out slices of buttered barley bread slab of cheese done up in a clean white n "Sit down there"—he pointed to a flat by a clump of wild mustard—"the aron flavor the food." He chuckled. "Ah, I

It only takes a little squirt to clean a window with Windex Spray!

Yes—anybody can clean windows in half the time with Windex Spray—so easy it's child's play. Windows, mirrors, all glass surfaces get sparkling bright, stay bright longer because there's no waxy film to attract dust later. Windex Spray is a thrifty cleaner, too. Even more economical in the large 20-oz. size. Get Windex Spray today at your grocery, drug or hardware store. Also sold in Canada.

So quick, easy, thrifty, it outsells all other glass cleaners combined!

PRODUCTS OF THE DRACKETT COMPANY, CINCINNATI, OHIO

"Here, you hold him—I just remembered this is the day of the week I put Drāno in all the drains!"

Better to get the "bird" than to have dangerous sewer germs lurking in every drain. And germs breed in muck that liquid disinfectants can't budge. Drāno's churning, boiling action dissolves the muck—and keeps drains germ-free and free-running. Make one day a week Drāno day. Put Drāno in every drain for about a penny a drain. Makes septic tanks work even better. Get Drāno at grocery, drug or hardware store. Available in Canada.

There's nothing like DRĀNO . . . to keep drains free-running and sanitary.

LET'S TALK TURKEY!

Yes, it's time to talk turkey . . . about Christmas gifts!

The best gifts of all are gift subscriptions to LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. For the JOURNAL is packed with pleasure that returns month after month for as long as you care to give.

In almost every copy of this issue there's a handy order form. Just fill it in and mail it TODAY! A colorful gift card will be sent at Christmastime to announce each JOURNAL gift. And—if you prefer, we'll gladly bill you in January.

"Did our most dearworthy Lord Jesus gi' you the penance, Katherine?" Suddenly the voice changed its tone. "It was shown to me that Christ ministers to us His gifts of grace, our soul with our body, and our body with our soul, either of them taking help with the other. God has no disdain to serve the body."

For a startled moment Katherine felt a touch of awe. "That is strange to me, lady," she said to the black curtain. "I cannot believe that the foul body is of any worth to God."

"And shall not try tonight," said the voice gently. "Father Clement?"

The priest came up to the window. Julian spoke to him at some length.

Katherine was given a chamber reserved for travelers in the rectory across from the church. She was put to bed and cared for by Father Clement's old servant, a bright-eyed woman of sixty.

They brought Katherine fresh blood from the slaughterhouse, and a bullock's liver, which they chopped up and blended into a mortrewe with egg. They fed her boiled dandelion greens, minced so that she need not chew, they made her eat. Katherine was too weak to protest.

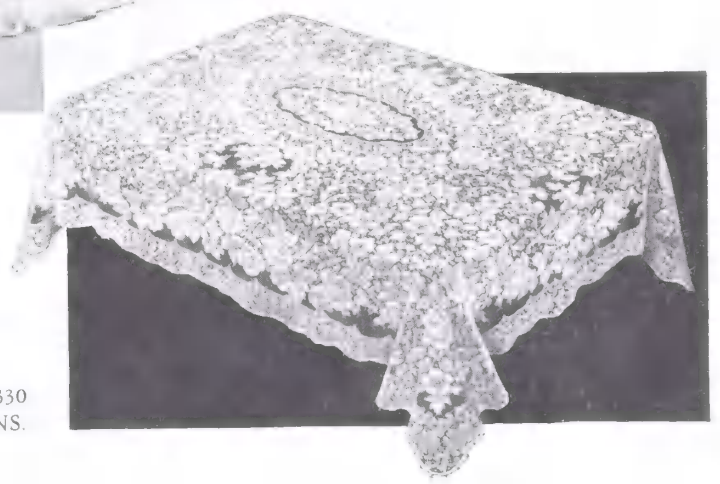
In four days she had gained strength, her pains were less. She began to worry about the expense that she was giving Father Clement, but he laughed at her, saying with truth that the things Lady Julian had prescribed for her to eat were to be had for the asking at the shambles, while the greens came from his own garden.

"The Lady Julian waits for you," he said quietly. "She believes you well enough to come to her today."

Katherine had thought much about the anchoress. She went back that afternoon to the little churchyard and knocked at the cell window. The voice through the black cloth told her to come in at the door.

Katherine entered Julian's cell nervously, puzzled, curious. It was but six paces long and

QUAKER LACE
TABLECLOTHS



How to feel like a Queen— any old time!

Easy as pie to feel like a Queen presiding over Holiday dinners spread on beautiful, practical Quaker Lace Tablecloths. Feel like a Queen every day, too, for Quaker Tablecloths make any meal a banquet—they wear and wear and are easy to launder. Most stains and spots sponge off right on the table. Lovely new or traditional patterns in cotton, cotton and rayon and fabulous Orlon* that needs no ironing.

*Du Pont trademark

"Remember, every day deserves your best"

Alencon Pattern No. 7722
Pat. applied for. ("Orlon" Du Pont fibre)

Quaker Lace Tablecloths
$5.95 to $54.95

QUAKER LACE COMPANY, Philadelphia 33, Pa. Sales Office: 330 Fifth Ave., New York 1, N.Y. Also makers of QUAKER CURTAINS.

wide, and curtained down the middle with soft fine blue wool. There were two windows—the "parloir" window to the churchyard, and one that opened into the church. Through this, Julian could see the altar and take part in the Mass. There was a small fireplace, and a table and two wooden chairs on the warm brick floor. The walls had been painted white.

A moment after Katherine had shut the door, Julian came around the blue curtain. A plain little woman, neither fat nor thin, with graying hair beneath a white coif. She wore a soft unbleached-linen gown. A woman nearing forty and so ordinary that one might see a hundred like her in any market square.

"So you are the Katherine Father Clement brought," said Julian in her comfortable slow voice. She sat down in one chair and motioned Katherine to the other. "The pains're better? This sickness that you have I, too, had once, when I had fasted overmuch. And was in great trouble and so near death that my confessor stood over me." She glanced toward the crucifix and said simply, "God in His marvelous courtesy did save me."

"By the visions," said Katherine, sighing. "Father Clement told me of them."

"Aye—by the sixteen showings, but I don't know why they were vouchsafed to me. Truly it was not shown me that God loved me better than the least soul that is in grace. I'm certain there be many that never had showings, nor sight but of the common teaching of holy church, that love God better than I."

"It's very hard to love God," said Katherine below her breath, "when He does not love us."

"Oh, Katherine, Katherine." Lady Julian smiled, shaking her head. "Love is our Lord's whole meaning! It was shown me full surely that ere God made us He loved us, and when we were made, we loved Him."

It was not Julian's words, which Katherine barely heard, that brought an odd half-frightened thrill. She stared at the face beneath the graying hair and wimple, for suddenly it looked beautiful, n mist.

"Lady," whispered Katheri these visions were vouchsafed you knew nought of sin. W know of . . . adultery—of mur

Julian rose quickly and plac Katherine's shoulder. At the golden flame enveloped her, ar go on.

"I have known all manne Julian quietly. "Sin is the sh
And verily as sin is unclean, disease or monstrous thing aga listen to what I was shown i vision."

She moved away from Kathe took on the low chanting note

"I had been thinking of m great sorrow. Then I saw Him me His face of lovely pity and truth that sin is cause of all this hovable—nonetheless all shall shall be well, you shall see y manner of thing shall be well.
were said to me tenderly, show blame. And then He said, 'Acc overdone much, deeming that thy thy woe is all thy fault: for I w be heavy or sorrowful indiscreet derstood that it was great d blame or wonder on God for m blamed me not for it.

"And with these words, I sa high mystery hid in God, whic shall openly make known to where we shall truly see the suffered sin to come. For He ma from failure of love on our pa all our travail, and nought else.

Julian looked at Katherine an you understand?"

"Nay, lady," said Katherine s not believe there could be so m

Julian sat down and spoke and quietly.

When Katherine left Julian's
she did not know how long she h clearly remember the things that her, but for the time she had ce tion. As she walked out into the yard, it seemed lit with beauty.
mused in a corner by a dark yew meaning in everything her eye r blue flowerets, the moss on a gr these were radiant, as though s them through crystal.

She picked up a black flint
some of Lady Julian's words cam
"In this same time, our Lord s spiritual sight of His homely lo thing like a hazelnut, in the palm and I thought 'What may this be answered: 'It lasteth and ever s God loveth it.'"

During that moment when s pebble, Katherine understood th Julian had said, "After this I sa point, by which sight I saw that things, be it never so little. Nothin hap or adventure—if it be hap the sight of man, our blindness is

THESE words echoed in Katherin she held the pebble, joy shimmere black flint, there was joy in the gr tree, the gravestones, the moss. Slo and a great sleepiness came ov scarcely could drag her heavy li chamber in the rectory. She laid h bed and slept the night through.
no dreams.

Each day Katherine went to J and listened. She saw that she had n the meaning of prayer. Her pray been violent commands and bargai tated by fear. To Lady Julian, pray munion. "Prayer oneth the soul And it was thanking. Giving thank out reward. In the fourteenth sho had heard the lovely words, "I am t thy beseeching." And with these ble had seen a full overcoming agai weakness and all our doubtful dre

There came a day when Kathe no longer listen without pouring o Julian all the anguish that she through. She did not know what s

JAMES LEES AND SONS COMPANY, BRIDGEPORT, PENNA. OTHER FAMOUS PRODUCTS: COLUMBIA - MINERVA AND BEEHIVE HAND KNITTING YARNS

her own voice calling out the se who meant for her the bitterest Blanchette—and John. When she name, she buried her face in her obbed.

aw that though she had meant her unciation, yet she had not really t John would let her go. Always that the miracle would happen at , in return for her suffering. She re that in some way Blanchette stored to her, her sins forgiven, ur old life would start again?" gently. "That it would by miracle and clean in all men's eyes, in e; I see now that I thought so. Is at God is so angry with me!"

atherine—in all the showings, I ner of wrath in God. I saw no man's part, and that He forgives."

erine cried out that if God had hy should she fear sin?

wered ever patiently, "Because as e meddling with what we know is ll never clearly the blissful of our Lord. And this is to break For we are all in Him enclosed. s. He sitteth in our soul."

herine talked of Sheppey, the con- he would cloister herself. "So with I might come someday to know do—and to help others."

st time, a hint of sternness showed face. She said quietly, "When I I had no one wn." Katherine nderstand her n, nor why she nt after, "It was e that we may to full knowing we know first own soul."

t, she saw what lian had meant. woke suddenly sleep, and the chamber seemed to be suffused , iridescent light. This light was athed her, permeated her flesh, until her being was made of light. ions were all dissolved in the soft In their place came certainty, the imple, so right—and so hard.

be hard, but now she did not feel it glowing peace sustained her.

morning Katherine sought out ment. "Father," she said, "I'm go- Lincolnshire. To the place where I Father, tonight will you hear my I dare to hope that—that tomor- ass ——" Her voice faltered, she p breath, and smiled tremulously mpassionate brown eyes.

morning in the little flint-walled m Father Clement's hands, Kath- ed again at last the Holy Sacra- n, kneeling by the narrow church her cell, shared in the blessed Com- d, watching Katherine's rapt face, ew that once more God had used hannel to touch another soul with e of her visions, and a glimpse of g when He had said, "It is I. I that , that thou enjoyest, that thou serv- that thou longest for. It is I that is n would fade, the wan hope and reads of the world would seep back; ver befell, Katherine would never bereft again. This Julian knew.

at morning, Katherine set out on ound for Lincolnshire. She rode on ement's mule. The priest and Lady lent her money for food and hous- journey.

rth day Katherine crossed the fens ted the high ridge way that led to Already she could see the rooftops tant hill, and the triple spires of the against the cloud-massed sky.

e clouds merged and dipped lower. to rain, a cold October rain that rough her mantle. In time she en- familiar village of Wigford, the Lincoln suburb. In the center of the street there was a handsome stone mansion, with elegant carved corbels, an oriel window, and above the door a shield with the duke's coat of arms painted on it.

Katherine knew this house. She had dined here with John two years ago. It belonged to the Suttons, the wool merchants whom she had first met on the road to Bolingbroke in the plague time when the duchess died.

She looked up at the Lancaster arms. The Suttons, having none of their own, proudly blazoned those of their feudal overlord. She hesitated. She still had a few pence, and could spend the night in town. Besides, she thought with feeble self-deception, the Suttons might not know her.

Katherine got off the mule and tied it to the hitching ring. Of course the Suttons would know her. The Suttons were Lincoln's foremost citizens. They could best answer the questions she must ask.

She knocked. The door was opened by a liveried varlet, who did not hide his astonished disapproval. He said that old Master John had gone to Calais on business and Master Thomas was at the bishop's palace, that Master Robert was at home, but occupied.

"Tell him, please, that 'tis Lady Swynford, and I will wait." Katherine sat down on the wayfarers' bench beside the door.

She waited a long time. When Robert Sutton came at last, she saw that he was embarrassed and uncertain how to greet her. He took one scandalized look at her bedraggled robe, her feet, the wet limp coif that covered her short hair, and his eyes slid away. He fingered a fold of his maroon velvet, squirrel-furred sleeve. "'Tis a surprise, Lady——"

A polite man is one who listens with interest to things he knows all about, when told him by a person who knows nothing about them. —DE MORNY

Katherine drew a deep breath and laced her hands together. "Master Robert, I shall not take much of your time. There are only a few questions I'd like to ask you. I've been a long while on pilgrimage, and know nothing of what has happened in the world." He flushed, and she saw that he wondered if she even knew of the duke's renouncement, and spoke quickly. "The duke and I have parted. It was our mutual wish and decision."

He did not believe the latter, but he grunted uneasily. Her low voice softened him in spite of himself, and her dignity.

"Master Robert," she said quietly, "have you heard aught of my children?"

He swallowed. "Why, I believe they're well—at Kenilworth." His wife, in fact, had been buzzing since the juicy news about the duke and Lady Swynford had filtered to Lincoln. She had garnered every titbit that travelers could tell them.

"How does my manor of Kettlethorpe?" said Katherine. "I know our wool goes through your warehouse."

"The manor does fairly, I think," he said, frowning. "At least the clips are up to standard." His jaw dropped. "You don't mean to come back and live at Kettlethorpe!"

"Ah, but I do," said Katherine, smiling faintly. "Where else should I go but to my own manor, where my people have need of me? Where else should I bring my children, who have no honest claim on anyone else in the world?"

The wool merchant was dumfounded. "Surely you mean to sell?"

"I will not sell the Swynford holdings," said Katherine, "that were my husband's and belong to my Swynford children. I shall live at Kettlethorpe. And now, Master Robert, I most humbly beg one thing of you."

He stiffened, crossed his velvet arms over his chest. "What is it, Lady Swynford?"

"That you will write in my name to the duke. He has respect for you. He would not accept a letter from me, but I know that he listens to justice. Will you tell him what I propose to do, and will you request in my name that he send me my Beaufort children? Tell him that when this is done, he shall never be troubled with me again."

Robert Sutton demurred, but ended by doing as she wished. He summoned a clerk and dictated the letter to the duke. When he had finished, a much warmer feeling toward Katherine came over him. He could not help admiring her courage.

"Thank you for all your kindness," she said. "I must go, Master Robert."

"Nay, you must sup with us ——"

Katherine declined. The rain had lessened, she must be on her way.

Blessed Mary, it would be hard, she thought, as she rode across the bridge and turned west for Kettlethorpe. She saw the black forest ahead. The forest where Hugh had hunted, the forest at which she had gazed from the dank solar for so many unhappy years.

She rode through the iron gates that marked the manor road. The mile-long avenue of lofty wych-elms was unchanged. She noted the flocks grazing on her demesne lands, heard a shepherd's shout and the barking of his dog.

Ahead on the right stood the tithe barn and the little church where lay Nichola, Gibbon and Hugh. To the left, the squat manor house where Blanchette had been born.

The bridge was up, the manor dark. When had it ever welcomed her? She pulled the mule over to the old mounting block, and stepped out of the stirrups.

You've but to call out to the gateward, she thought. But she did not call. She stood there

ALLEN INDUSTRIES, INC.
CARPET CUSHION DIVISION, DETROIT 7, MICH.
Allen—a leading manufacturer of automotive trim—also specially designed automotive upholstery and insulating padding
IN YOUR HOME COMFORT by Allen IN YOUR CAR
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

"Watch your skin thrive on Cashmere Bouquet Soap!"

"Our Conover girls know it's successful for every skin type—dry, normal or oily!"

says

Candy Jones

Conover School Beauty Director

"Pat Heyer, Smith College sophomore, is already planning an interior decorating career," says Candy Jones (Mrs. Harry Conover). "She knows that in this field—as in so many others—the girl who looks decorative has a big advantage! So last Summer when Pat came to us, she learned our method of complexion care—a twice daily beauty wash with Cashmere Bouquet soap. Hundreds of Conover girls have proved what it can do for every type of skin—dry, oily or normal."

"It's such wholesome beauty care for my oily skin!" reports Pat. "It takes only a second to cream Cashmere Bouquet's gentle, fragrant lather over my face with my fingertips. Then my skin feels so much smoother and softer . . . looks radiant!"

Complexion and big bath sizes

P.S. "Make the most of your Cashmere Bouquet complexion with make-up keyed to your skin tones. For pale skins, a pink or creamy powder; ruddy skins take beige or light tan; while olive complexions look lovely in sun tan."

Candy

until a small boy came trudging down the lane with an enormous load of fagots. He started and crossed himself when he saw a black figure standing on the mounting block, and Katherine said, "Don't be afraid, lad, I'm Lady Katherine Swynford. This is my home."

The boy gave a cry, dropped his fagots and pelted toward the vill, shouting out something Katherine could not hear. She descended from the block and walked around beneath the gatehouse window. She called, "Gateward! Ho, gateward!"

There was some movement in the gate loft, a man's voice answered, but it was lost in the sound of running footsteps.

A little man with flying light hair ran toward her, and others followed. "Welcome, dearest lady. Welcome. For sure I told 'em ye'd be coming back someday."

"Cob," she whispered. "Aye, I've come back."

"They've been praying for it every day." He jerked his head toward the group behind him. She could not see their separate faces, but she felt their quivering expectancy. "When I told 'em what ye did for me—oh, lady, they've been waiting for ye. 'Tis bad here now—not for me that am a freeman," Cob interjected proudly, "but the unfree—steward's mostly drunk. 'Tis cruel ——"

Katherine lifted her head and looked past Cob to the crowd of silent, watchful people. "I shall try to make you all glad that I am home," she said.

ON Lincoln Town's high hill the raw March wind blew incessantly. It chilled bones, reddened noses. Wind or no wind, folk were all out nailing banners, greens and colored streamers to the fronts of houses. It was the twenty-sixth of March, 1387, and King Richard and his Queen Anne were coming to Lincoln that night. The ostensible reason was that he and the queen were to be admitted into the Fraternity of Lincoln Cathedral on the morrow. The actual reason, as many knew, was that Richard had set out on a good-will tour through all his land. He had been having trouble with commons and lords alike, and with his Uncle Thomas of Woodstock, now Duke of Gloucester; particularly since his Uncle John, the Duke of Lancaster, was in Castile, had been there for nearly a year with the Duchess Costanza.

Richard's arrival affected Katherine too. During the six years since her return, she had seldom left Kettlethorpe. On this bleak, windy afternoon, Katherine was sewing by the fire in the pleasant hall of her town house. Her lap was filled with sapphire velve put the finishing stitches on the would wear to greet the king. Philippa, sat in an armchair, ple gauze veil. Hawise stood behind screen pounding almonds into h marchpane. Little Joan played on with her kitten.

Three years ago Katherine had the elder boys, John and Harry, w by spending the winter in Lincoln priests at the Cantilupe Chantry scholars.

THE three women were all think royal visit. Philippa sighed, "If onl present you to the queen. Then yo might be better here."

"But the king would not do Katherine gently. "I don't mind, at least see her. I'll tell you all abou Philippa sighed again. "They say yet he adores her. 'Tis strange—a either ——" Her voice trailed off.

Joan, who had been quiet with suddenly looked up. "Mama, wh Thomas hate the king?"

Katherine laughed as mothers do children say something a little em "Why, I'm sure he doesn't. What

But Joan was not a baby, to be sc tracted. She was eight, intelligent cal. A dark pansy-eyed child, roun cheeked. "Sir Thomas hates the kin sisted. "I heard him say so, last ye

Katherine stroked the dark curl ever you heard, mouse—forget it. enough to understand that it's da and discourteous—to say such thi our king. Come, here's a needle fo me see what nice stitches you can

She gave the child a corner of mantle and some gold thread. She re own stitching and thought that t sounded like Tom, though she sc her eldest son, and knew nothing thought.

Thomas Swynford was twenty knight. He served Henry of Bolingb had made two visits to Kettleth Katherine had come home. Kathe that he had a dutiful fondness for was also ashamed of her reputation. one clash. Tom had been angry whe that Katherine had been freeing her knew better than to argue or put fort reasons, had given him proof inste manor worked by free tenants produ efficiently than one run on the o

"Don't they ever design anything for the average woman any more?"

…m had scanned the accounts, and …agreed.
…thought, Tom is a good-enough lad.
…her children had given her real
…xcept —— The years had passed
…ord. All reason demanded accept-
…anchette's death in the Savoy—and
…e and the question were still there.
…ad to live with it, as with so many

…ster bell began to clang for vespers.
…uck her head around the screen.
…e said severely to Katherine, "put …wing. Ye mustn't redden your eyes
…ow who's coming to see ye."
…wise," protested Katherine, with a
…mingled affection and exasperation.
…e pothers over nothing."
…snorted rebelliously. "Ye'll not keep
…ng, I should hope!"
…atherine couldn't be such a fool!"
…pa with sudden energy.
…ou both should think he calls here
…y special reason, I'm sure I don't
…id Katherine, and as they both
…ir mouths for argument, she indi-
… and shook her head. "Please ——"
…ed up a distaff and began to spin
…y. What shall I do about Robert
…at is best? She had no real doubt as
…pose of the wool merchant's visit
…oon. The last time she had seen
…uld have declared himself had she
…ed to put him off, speaking about
…o was then but two months dead.
…e twirled the spindle and tried to
…ly. Marriage, honorable marriage
…f Lincoln's foremost citizens. The … tongues would be silenced, in public
…e would be rich, secure. And the … would it help them? Katherine was
…. Robert was a possessive man; her
…e had seen indications that he re-
… children.
…ly when she saw the duke's traits in …n that she thought of him. Young
…d most like him, but Harry had his
…, sometimes sarcastic, sometimes so
…hat it turned her heart over. They
… intense blue eyes, except Joan.
…e had had no direct communica-
…im in these years, but he had been … had known he would. There had … documents which allowed her to
…roperties he had previously given
…ade her a further grant of two hun-
…s a year for life "in recognition of … services towards my daughters
… Lancaster and Elizabeth, Countess
…ke." No mention of his Beaufort
…ut Katherine understood very well
…nerous sum was to be expended for
…it, and scrupulously did so.

…rnoon, in anticipation of the wool
… visit, Katherine kept her three boys
… She asked them to stay awhile,
…ause they gave her protection,
… observe how Robert would treat

… derstood at once. The moment she … her expected visitor, he drew his
…ay from the younger boys. "Are you
…nsent, my mother?" he asked. He … fifteen, taller than she was.
…—I don't know," she said, sighing.
…ll I do?"
…d make it easier for you," he said
…nder the new golden fuzz his fair
…hed. "I can't yet protect you. But I
… earn my knighthood someway.
…t me enter the St. George's Day's
…t at Windsor. Let me wear plain
… one shall guess that I'm—I'm ——"
…He did not say it, it hovered in the …n them.
…ee, dear," she said, trying to smile.
…ms were impractical, but he should … attached to some good knight as
…neone who would honor his royal
… not take advantage of his friendless

… other two boys —— She looked at
…awled on his stomach by the fire,
… usual. A true scholar was Harry.
…termined to go to Cambridge, and
…inor orders at least. Any further ad-
… in the clergy would take great influence—and money. A bastard could not advance in the church without them.

Tamkin was still too young to fret about his birth. He was a happy-go-lucky child, and at ten lived in a boy's world of sport and play. A healthy young puppy, Tamkin, at the moment engaged in teasing Harry by rolling dried acorns across his book. This ended in a scuffle, and then a roughhouse. Chairs were overturned, the floor rushes flew about the pommeling, shouting whirl of arms and legs when Robert Sutton walked in.

"Lady," he cried above the rumpus, "'tis like the mad cell at the Malandry in here! Your lads show you scant respect."

Tamkin and Harry disentangled themselves abruptly. "We mean our lady mother no disrespect, Master Robert," said Harry.

Robert, glancing at Katherine's watchful face, changed his tone. "I'm sure you don't. Boys will be boys, ha? I've brought you lads something. It—or they, rather, 're in the courtyard."

"Oh, what, what?" cried Tamkin, jumping up and down.

"Go and see," said the merchant.

JOHN and Harry gave him a considering look, but they went off with their excited little brother.

"My best hound bitch has lately whelped," Sutton explained to Katherine, sitting down opposite her. "I've brought each of your lads a pup."

"That's very good of you, Master Robert," said Katherine with sincere gratitude.

"And I've brought Joan a little yellow singing bird that came from the coast of Fez. She must keep it warm and tend it well."

"Aye—and thank you. It'll delight her," said Katherine.

He saw a shadow in her lovely gray eyes and, leaning forward, said anxiously, "What troubled you just then, sweetheart?"

She said, speaking with effort, "I had a child—once—who loved singing birds. Blanchette ——"

"To be sure. I remember the little red-haired maid, years ago at Kettlethorpe," said Robert. "Too bad she died, God rest her soul."

As Katherine did not speak, but gazed into the fire, he said on a brisker note, "You must forget the past. It does no good to brood."

"No, of course not." She turned and looked at him. At the sleek curls of beard on his well-fed jowls, at the heavy gold chain around his crimson velvet shoulders, at the badges of office on his arm—ex-mayor, member of Parliament, master wool monger. "It does no good to brood," she repeated. "And I try to forget the past."

"I'll make you!" he cried. "Katherine, you know what I've come to say. We're not children. You shall be Mistress Sutton. You shall be mayor's wife next year—when father's out and I'm re-elected. You shall hold your head up in this town, and be damned to all of them. To be sure, you'll be plain Mistress Sutton, instead of 'Lady'—but I hardly think ——"

"Nay, nay, Master Robert"—she put her hand on his knee—"I've no thought like that. I came of simple yeoman stock, and will be grateful to be Mistress Sutton ——"

"Then you will?" he cried. He lumbered to his feet and kissed her hotly, hard and insistent.

'Tis not so bad, she thought. Aye, I might learn to love him, at least enough. I shall try.

Next day the royal procession to the cathedral justified all Lincoln's hopes of gorgeousness. Thanks to Robert Sutton's influence, Katherine watched from a bench in the minster nave as the procession moved sedately along. Familiar figures marched by. Michael de la Pole, whom she had seen so often with the duke. He was Richard's adviser now, had been created Earl of Suffolk. His shoulders stooped under their ermine cape, his hair was white. And Lord Neville of Raby looked not only old but ill.

The royal couple came on alone, after an interval. Katherine and all those crowded into the nave fell to their knees.

Richard had filled out, and blurred. There was roundness beneath the tunic that was so thickly crusted with gems that one could not see the gold beneath. Queen Anne was equally ornate. She was no beauty, certainly, but her

How to see more of your husband

Ask your husband to fly TWA so that he can spend more time at home with you. You see, lots of business trips can be covered in a day, thanks to the way TWA cuts travel time. And when your husband travels the TWA way, he will return home relaxed, refreshed. Take Mary Gordon's advice and tell him to fly TWA.

Go with him on longer trips! You can afford it, thanks to TWA's Family Half-Fare Plan.* Mom and children under 22 fly for half fare—one baby under 2 goes free—only Dad pays full fare.

Go now—pay later ... that's the big bonus TWA's new TIME PAY PLAN offers. Pay 10% down... the balance in easy payments spread over as long as twenty months. Best of all, you can pay for your entire trip this convenient new way. For TWA's Time Pay Plan is effective in the U. S., overseas and on connecting airlines, too.

For more trip tips see your local TWA office or your favorite travel agent. Or if you have special travel questions and problems, write Mary Gordon of TWA, Dept. J11-4, Trans World Airlines, 380 Madison Ave., New York 17, N. Y. She's a travel expert ... so for travel help always

ASK Mary Gordon OF TWA

*Available on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays on First Class Flights in the U.S.A.

Wet clothes . . . wet or cold feet . . . sudden changes of temperature, and drafts . . . all are contributing factors in catching cold. They often lower body resistance so that germs, called the "secondary invaders" can break through throat tissues and cause trouble.

TESTS SHOW

FEWER COLDS...FEWER SORE THROATS FOR LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC USERS!

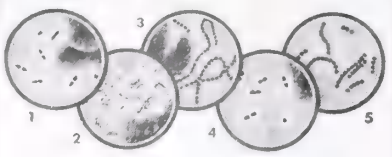
Yes, research conducted over a 12-year period revealed that regular twice-a-day users of Listerine Antiseptic had fewer and milder colds, and fewer sore throats, than non-users.

And personal experience impressively adds this:

Listerine Antiseptic, used at the first symptom of trouble, can often help head off a cold or sore throat due to a cold or lessen its severity.

Kills Germs on Throat Surfaces

That is because Listerine Antiseptic treats these infections as infections should be treated . . . with safe, germ-killing action.



Listerine reaches way back on throat surfaces to kill millions of germs, including the "secondary invaders" (see panel at right) that can contribute so much to the misery of colds.

Germs Reduced 96.7%

When you gargle Listerine, research shows germ reductions on mouth and throat surfaces ranging up to 96.7% fifteen minutes after gargling . . . and up to 80% even after one hour.

So, no matter what else you do, guard against trouble with the daily Listerine routine, and, at the first sign of a sneeze or cough, increase the frequency of the gargle.

Among the "Secondary Invaders" Are Germs of the Pneumonia and "Strep" Types.

(1) Pneumococcus Type III, (2) Hemophilus influenzae, (3) Streptococcus pyogenes, (4) Pneumococcus Type II, (5) Streptococcus salivarius.

These, and other "secondary invaders," as well as germ-types not shown, can be quickly reduced in number by the Listerine Antiseptic gargle.

Every week on Television "THE ADVENTURES OF OZZIE & HARRIET" face was kind. They were so young, Katherine thought, only twenty, both of them.

When the royal couple disappeared, Katherine stood up, noting that some of Richard's meinie had not gone into the small chapter house but were walking into the nave to wait.

She must go home, she thought, and dress for the banquet. She wandered toward the entrance and paused beneath the rainbow shower of light from the round glass window called the Bishop's Eye.

Someone spoke her name. She turned and saw that it was Michael de la Pole.

"Why, God's greeting, my lord," she said uncertainly. She had met none of the duke's close companions since the parting.

"Lady Swynford," said the old earl, smiling. "Fair as ever, I see." He sighed. "'Tis good to see something that doesn't change."

"Oh, my lord," she protested, "indeed I have."

"I'm not being gallant, lady. If you remember, pretty speech was no art of mine." He smiled ruefully. "I've the infirmities of age, alack. D'you know of a good nearby tavern where my page can go for wine?"

She nodded. "But, my lord, my house is a few steps away—if I might offer you ——"

"The very thing! An hour's quiet will hearten me immeasurably."

Hawise and Philippa were vastly fluttered by the arrival of the great Earl of Suffolk. Little Joan caught the excitement and stared at him with awe.

Katherine mulled wine herself over the fire for De la Pole. He drew a sigh of relief. "This is good, quiet. It takes youth, and strength—and, and—the wariness of a stoat to be around the king."

Philippa and Hawise tactfully withdrew, taking Joan with them. Katherine picked up a tapestry square and began to stitch, thinking the earl might prefer not to talk.

He watched her awhile. "Lady Swynford," he said suddenly, "do you ever think of the duke?"

Her needle paused, then pushed slowly through the canvas. "It would do no good if I did, would it?" she said.

"Aye—those times are long past, yet I don't doubt he thinks of you."

She raised her head. "I'm sure you're wrong, my lord, unless it is with hatred."

"Hatred?" De la Pole was astonished. "Oh, he was very angry for a while. But it was not hatred that made him build a chapel to St. Catherine near Knaresborough."

Katherine put down her tapestry. "Chapel to St. Catherine?"

"Aye—in fulfillment of a vow he made for your safety through the revolt."

She turned to the fire. "Yet all England gossiped of how he had reviled me ——"

"Lady, didn't you live long enough at court to discount slander? You should have known him better than that."

"Aye—I should. Perhaps I did. But I have heard no direct word from him . . . since then."

De la Pole shook his head, and sighed. "Need I tell you of his pride? More than that—I believe he saw, as you did, that it was best you two should part."

KATHERINE began to walk up and down across the hearth, she bent to poke the fire. "How is it now with the duke?" She had sat down again and picked up her tapestry. "He is gaining at last his long ambition, is he not? The Castilian throne."

"By the rood, I fear not," answered De la Pole. "At least not as he wanted it. His daughter will sit there, not he. You've not heard of the marriages?"

She shook her head. "People do not speak to me of him."

"Why, Philippa and João were married last month in Oporto. She is now Queen of Portugal."

How strange, Katherine thought. Philippa, the grave, sedate girl who had longed for the cloister, now wedded at twenty-six and a queen in a far-off land.

"And little Catalina," said De la Pole, "is to marry Enrique of Castile. It is she who will sit on Castile's throne in her parents' st that will mean the end of war at las

The end of the Castilian dream at l erine thought. Not in failure, but no either. There must be bitter humil John in this denouement. Always se thought; never first. All his life.

She put down the tapestry and choked voice, "My lord, forgive me you for a time." She walked from th upstairs to her solar, where for some she sat alone.

When she came down again, Mast Sutton had arrived to escort her to the He and De la Pole were standin hearth making polite conversation.

The earl came up to her. "I've t too long upon your kindness, my and must hurry back to my duties." her hand. "God bless you." He wen

ROBERT turned to Katherine w placence. "It seems my lord of Suff well of you, sweet. You might thr even be presented to the queen. Did to ask him? Maybe we should anno marriage at the banquet."

"No," said Katherine gently. "I cannot marry you. Forgive me."

He argued with her, he stormed. left at last, furious and acid-tongue alone in the hall, nor did she attend banquet. She sent word that she taken ill.

The art of living is the art of using experience—your own and other people's.

—THE RIGHT HONORABLE VISCOUNT SAMUEL

The feast of St. Catherine—Nove 1395—Katherine awoke at Kettletho unusual mood o sion. The old s far snugger than be. The walls w with Lincoln-ma tries. There were and sheepskins plank floor. Nev Katherine shive found in herself reluctance to face a holiday for all h folk, who had planned festivities in h There was to be a procession and a dance and spinning contest for all t maidens, and a speech given by Cob, a sort of unofficial mayor. Her tenan bring her little gifts. At the end there feasting in the Great Hall. These ce were heart-warming. They had occur year since her return.

But on this morning a blue demor in thrall. While she waited for Hawise in with the morning ale, she could thir worries. Two of her best ewes showe murrain; the shepherd had sent to of Harby for a charm to prevent th from spreading. That was one wor was another.

Janet Swynford, Tom's wife, wo be here from Coleby with the twins. precisely the right wife for Tom, self thrifty. But Janet talked interminably bored Katherine. The year-old tw sweet; Katherine longed to enjoy grandchildren, but they were delicat erine, who had borne and raised si children, continually choked off ad Janet would plaintively resent—ano

Ah, well, a familiar-enough probl not worth fretting over. Joan's unh was more harrowing.

Joan, her baby, was now sixteen widow. Not that Joan had loved shabby old knight to whom last had been so briefly married; but endured the discomforts gladly in re the improved standing he gave her. Si Ferrers had taken his little bride to Castle and during that brief time the fallen desperately in love—with Ralph the handsome young Lord of Westm

An impossible love. The Nevilles did not marry bastards. Bitter heart Joan, to which Katherine applied the palliatives as best she could: So youn get over it.

Joan had gazed at her with the roun brown eyes and said quietly, "D mother? Did you ever forget my fat while you bore the Swynfords?"

that was still with Katherine, the girl's instinctive comparihe outside staircase flew open. on a stinging blast of cold air. er for friars!" She slammed the matter, sweeting, 'tis your at a long face! What's a mat-

—I've got the dumps." Kathmile. "Hawise, do you know

Hawise poured steaming ale ooked at the fire embers. "I've nory yet, let alone that all the busy painting red ribbons e candles for your feast to-said Katherine flatly. "What back to the bed, holding out a mber robe. "Well, ye've not if that's any comfort. Cob ly yestere'en that the Lady o' the fairest woman in Lincoln-

l, bless him," said Katherine. hanically through the process dressing, allowed Hawise to e gala robe of deep crimson h squirrel.

down by the fire. "So much he said sadly. "Hawise, I think er this morning, God rest her leaths ——" mercy, lady!" cried Hawise, "What a way to talk on your day," said Katherine, "since them?" She fell silent, staring ath especial, thought Hawise. ast year had come a strange highest ladies of the land. ad died of plague at Sheen king had gone out of his mind

Costanza had died here in the news got to Kettlethorpe, had been very quiet for many iful gray eyes had taken on a g look, but nothing had hap-

Hawise suddenly. "There's with the twins." They both clatter of hoofs in the courtthe peevish howling of babies. Katherine, rising. "The day's y commence."

her, Hawise thought gloomntinued to straighten the solar. fast—sing before supper.

h was granted, though not had finished their feasting, been cleared, Cob had made ad sent hot color to Katherit to her eyes with his eulogies, had cheered her to the echo. ne sat on in the hour before her lute, while Joan sang and guely. The twins were asleep by the hearth. Hawise sat by en mending sheets.

to bed," said Joan, yawning. ppose, mother?"

dded. The arrival of guests switch of sleeping quarters. d twins would occupy Joan's mber.

own her mending and began he candles. There were still hen the dogs started to bark aid Katherine. "There's only rie, could it be ——"

Young John Beaufort came a swirl of soft snow. He caught his arms, kissed her heartily. g, my lady! Sure your saint better weather to a son who's o you these many days!"

g," Katherine cried, "you rer old mother's feast day! the pleasantest surprise, the that's happened to me in an ou abroad!"

"Well, I was." He sank into a chair. "Until three weeks ago. In Bordeaux. Mother"—he turned and looked directly into her face—"I was not the only one there who remembered your saint's day."

Katherine said slowly, "What were you doing at Bordeaux?"

"I was summoned by my father. I spent a week with him and have brought you a letter. He wanted it to reach you today."

Katherine felt as though the snow outside were melting through her veins. "So you have met the duke again," she said, speaking from the depths of the coolness. "How does he seem?"

"Very tired, mother," John told her. "His work is finished in Aquitaine, and Richard has summoned him home. Of course Thomas of Woodstock wants our father's Grace kept out of the country, so he can have free hand. Richard's fed up for the time and is pro-Lancaster now."

"Ah," said Katherine again. "Far off as we are here, we've not followed court policies."

"Mother," said John, unbuttoning his surcoat and pulling a parchment from his breast, "don't you want your letter? I'm in a fever to know what's in it!"

Katherine took the letter and looked at the superscription. "Lady Kateryn de Swynford, Kettlethorpe, County of Nicole," in John's own decisive heavily stroked black writing.

She smiled faintly. "You shall know soon what's in the letter." She rose. Under the disappointed looks of her children, she went up the stairs into her solar. She put the parchment on a table. Then she lit a candle at the fire and broke the crimson seal.

There was no greeting. It began abruptly:

Recently I visited Château la Teste in Les Landes. Poignant memories were aroused of a time long ago. I am weary of many things, and in the light of this weariness I view many bygone actions differently from what I used to. I shall be back in England at Christmastime, and I wish to

When small snifflers blow hard, Scotties stay strong—yet they are soft for sore noses

Big, BIG blows don't tear it— new Scotties are strong even when wet Softer than ever . . . yet the youngsters don't blow holes through New Scotties. Scotties have such amazing wet strength even Dad's big sneezes don't tear them.

In make-up use, they remove the stubbornest lipsticks, the heaviest face creams without crumbling . . . without unpleasant linting.

Yet New Scotties are gentler than ever —kind to the tenderest, chapped skin.

Keep several boxes of New Scotties handy for the family. They are another great Scott value. Scotties are thrifty.

A simple test. Hold any non-wet strength tissue under the faucet. Water makes a hole instantly.

Hold a new Scottie under the faucet. You will see how it holds water without going to pieces.

"SCOTTIES", REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

FASHION OF A THOUSAND LIVES

FIRST FOR CAREFREE LIVING

Shelton Stroller

When yours is an active life; on the go fashion is what you want. When you choose lively Shelton Stroller; you're in style for care-free living. Thanks to smooth 100% nylon jersey (our specialty) Shelton Stroller washes, dries fast, sheds wrinkles, saves ironing! The eye-catching prints, designed by artists, are exclusively Shelton Stroller's and yours.

Extra features to please you include full cut, 100 inch wide skirts with pockets AND Shelton Stroller's on-in-a-jiffy zipper front. Stepping into a Shelton Stroller is such a pleasant start to a care-free day; you'll want to try one soon.

Sizes 12 to 20, 12½ to 22½ in Grey, Brown, Green, Blue, about $15

You'll see Shelton Strollers featured by America's leading stores. For the name of the store nearest you, write us today and receive FREE FASHION FOLIO.

© 1954 SHELTON CASUALS

Shelton CASUALS, DEPT. L11, 1350 BROADWAY, NEW YORK 18.

see you again. I beg of you to forget past bitterness, and to grant my request. I also wish to see Joan, who is with you, I understand. Harry I have summoned from Germany and should be on his way home. Our Thomas I shall visit at Oxford before I come to Lincolnshire. John, who has brought you this letter, will remain with you until I arrive. He is a son to be proud of. You have done well with him, and with the others too.

God and His blessed mother have you in their keeping.

JOHN, DUKE OF LANCASTER, ETC.
Bordeaux, November 5, 1395.

"So," said Katherine aloud, putting down the letter. She no longer felt bitterness, but there was a sharp reluctance. It's too late, much too late for us to meet again. Middle-aged people—almost old. John was fifty-five. She could not hinder the children, since their father was at last taking an open interest in them. But as for me, she thought, far better if I'm not here when he comes.

She persisted in her decision until the arrival of Harry on Christmas Eve. He very soon dissuaded Katherine from her flight, saying that she had no right to anger their father, since it might prejudice him against the children. John and Joan had not used this argument, but Katherine saw the truth of it.

When a herald came on New Year's Day to announce the duke's arrival on the morrow, Katherine was far calmer than her children.

Next morning, she was a trifle exasperated by Joan's hovering anxiety. "Mother, let me do your hair. Hawise is clumsy at it! Mother, please wear the brooch Sir Robert left me."

Katherine looked at the pretty dark head, the charming face, and said gently, "You shall make me as splendid as possible, darling, but truly it's of no consequence."

Long before the court dogs began to bark, they heard the flourish from Lancaster herald's trumpet. Katherine's heart took up a hard measured pounding, while Joan ran to the tower roof to watch the approach.

Katherine walked slowly across the courtyard, and the drawbridge, to stand by the old mounting block. The duke reined in his black stallion, dismounted. He wore an enveloping violet-colored mantle trimmed with ermine. As he advanced Katherine curtsied deeply and said, "Welcome to Kettlethorpe, my lord."

He pulled off his jeweled gauntlet and took her hand. "Am I truly well come, Katrine?"

She raised her eyes to his face. Deep new lines on the forehead, lines from the nostrils to the corners of the set, thin-lipped mouth. Gray hairs in the tawny eyebrows above eyes of a quieter blue. Sad, questioning eyes.

"You are well come, my lord," she repeated evenly. "Our—the Beauforts await you most eagerly."

He glanced to the courtyard where his children were grouped by the hall door. "Aye," he said, "and I've brought Tamkin. But I should like to see you alone first."

"'Tis not so easy to be alone at Kettlethorpe," she said with a faint cool smile.

"The church? 'Twill be empty at this hour?"

SHE inclined her head and preceded him. The church had been decorated with holly and evergreens for New Year's. Four long tapers flickered in a small chapel Katherine had built behind the Swynford choir stall. They shone on a tomb with the brightly tinted effigy of a knight in armor.

The duke paused by the tomb and slowly crossed himself. "May God comfort and keep his soul." He turned to Katherine, who stood at the entrance of the chapel, her hood pulled over her face. "Katrine," he said, "is this to stand between us forever?"

"There is far more than Hugh that stands between us, my lord."

He made a gesture, impatient, resigned. He left the tomb to stand beside her in the aisle. Suddenly he raised his hand and brushed back her hood, staring down into the wide gray eyes that met his steadily, without bitterness or resentment; but neither did they soften.

He stammered like a page boy, "Katrine—Katrine—you make this so hard. Is there nothing left for me at all? We're getting old, and if you feel nought for me—if too much has passed since we were together—then think of our children ——" He stopped. He was breathing fast, painfully.

Katherine saw his flushed, through a gray fog. "Is som necessary between us, to aid advancement?"

He recoiled as though she h "Katrine! I'm asking you to m

The dusky little church, the evergreens spiraled around her

"It must have occurred to "Surely when Costanza died— I've summoned all our Be Katrine, I could not come so sent me to Aquitaine ——"

"It did not occur to me," sh your duchess died, I hoped for v I received you today for our There's much you can do for will ——"

"What better can I do for t them legitimated?" he said, half Richard has agreed to in the eve riage, and the pope will confirm

"Legitimated—I've never hea stain of bastardy cannot be wip

HE nodded slowly. "It can." was an unusual procedure. fact, never been a precedent en stances quite like these. But E mitted it. "With the king d legitimacy in the temporal re pope, as Christ's vicar, in the can anything in heaven or earth true birth?"

Her face crumpled like a chil her twisted hands to her mout rapidly to the nave, seeking to

After a time he came and sto "Katrine," he said, touching "it is necessary that we be marr you any thought for me—as w dren?"

"I don't know yet," she realize —— My lord, I thought y

"You yourself decreed our p for a while. Then I saw that yo made Costanza as happy as nature to be happy, but you've from my deepest thoughts. I sw I'd love you till I die; it seem made that I must keep a vow."

Katherine and John were ma ary thirteenth in Lincoln Cathe dean celebrated the Wedding M had requested that the bishop sl the marriage, and the bishop "For which," the duke had sai glinting icy look, "he will soon sorry." His gaze rested speculati "It's high time Lincoln had a telligent bishop; don't you thin Harry's rapturous agreement more note in the combined Be sorcery as benevolent and marve Merlin's was transforming all young lives. That very mornin arrived from the king, who sen and said that as soon as the legit confirmed by the pope, John Be be created Earl of Somerset, appointed Dean of Wells Cathe to be knighted; and as for Joan her father had opened negotiatio Neville, the Lord of Westmore cellent alliance. Without a doub be another wedding soon.

The nuptial bells pealed out a arose from her knees to find her ess of Lancaster.

Katherine dined in the Great sor on the night of the banquet envoys who had come to arrang between the French and English

In October, Richard would tak session of his eight-year-old b Isabelle of France, and ratify alliance at long last to be sea ancient enemy.

Katherine sat on the dais to th king's throne. She was encased i gold and so burdened with neck lets, rings and the heavy jewele Lancaster that natural movemen sible.

The king was dressed in a new brocade peppered with diamo idly toying with a jade butter- nobles had brought as a gift

he's other side sat her duke. the Duke of Lancaster's ex- rriage had burst on England, it sed a furor, though the outcry ile. Many of the commons and d been pleased. The duke's ele- an who was born a commoner pular sentiment.

s warm, the banquet tedious. d, put down the jade butterfly, gold-clad figure on his right, ntinually glance down the hall le near the door?"

rted, then smiled. "I am seeing ce, a dazzled little convent girl wears an ill-fitting borrowed es up at this High Table and ntagenets as though they were ranged beside God's throne."

chard smiled. "And now you're must be very strange."

self and still can't believe it! you, your Grace, and to my" She looked at John's averted ned suddenly to Katherine, his boyish charm. "I'm much at you said of that night here years ago; aye, a year before I om were you sitting with?"

as startled. "Why," she said, y sister Philippa, your Grace, ned, Geoffrey Chaucer."

"Chaucer?" said the king, raising his plucked golden brows. "Have you seen the scurrilous verses he dared write to me?"

Katherine had seen them. "Geoffrey's getting old," she said uncomfortably, "and is in poor health. He served his Grace, your grandfather, most loyally."

Richard laughed and took a sip of iced wine. "Oh, I forgive him—because of the pleasure some of his poems have brought me." He shrugged, dismissing Chaucer. "God's blood, but the minstrels play badly. This banquet bores me."

He stood up. Like released bowstrings, the two hundred diners jumped to their feet and waited.

Richard airily waved the Flemish-lace handkerchief he always carried. "Clear the hall. There shall be dancing now!" He looked at Katherine. "My first dance, of course, will be with the Duchess of Lancaster."

On the day after the banquet, the Lancasters traveled to Kenilworth. As the ducal retinue cantered along the side of the mere, Katherine looked ahead at the red sandstone battlements. This was the castle which in the old days had always been home to her; its warm ruddy fabric was interwoven with memories of her children's babyhood, and of the more peaceful stretches of her love.

The watch had seen them. The trumpets blew a salute, and the Lancaster pennant ran hastily up on the Mortimer Tower. The duke's retinue pulled their horses down to a walk, and Katherine presently said to John,

Ask Any Woman

By MARCELENE COX

scussion about eating between small boy was asked what he Inking the question over care- answered. "It depends on round."

dmother used to say, "If you oman sharpen her knife fre- wash her hands often, go sel- the garbage pail, and change on before she serves the meal, be sure she's a good cook."

he best father I ever had," wrote irl on a gift to her one and only completing job from can of abeled Strawberry Sunset to who had ordered Sunrise Yel- When I was about halfway I thought there was something ut since I didn't know what, I to just finish it."

on as her first child is born, a should begin to prepare herself time when she will spend her a clean and empty house.

given up being superstitious," ced one of our daughters. "With y plastic things around, it's lly impossible to knock on ardest thing about the standard g, in a family, is keeping every- standard at the same level.

-year-old girl, receiving compli- "If you think I'm pretty you see my pictures."

er break down another person's ," advised my grandmother. "If ceed in making him do some- gainst his will you will make him emy."

A missionary to another country tells how he saw some little children playing in the snow with bare hands and hastened to send several pairs of mittens to the family. The next day when he passed, the children were again in the snow, completely nude except for the mittens.

One family reluctantly parted with the mother, extending many cautions about the long trip she was about to take, but eventually she returned home safe and sound, descended from the car and on the doorstep wa greeted so enthusiastically by her six-foot son she was taken to the hospital with broken ribs.

In an ever-changing world a husband always expects his big, comfortable chair will remain the one fixed pole.

A husband was boasting of how he always ate everything on his plate. "You forget," interposed his wife, "that extensive study of your likes and dislikes I made the first year of our marriage, added to by your mother, and which has grown with the years."

Very small girl to elderly woman: "Of course I remember you, I knew you when you were a little girl."

She's the kind of woman who, arriving in heaven, would immediately file a complaint about the way she'd been treated on earth.

Early in her marriage a bride should determine how much housework she can hold without losing her personal attractiveness, poise and husband's respect.

The nicest thing about furniture with iron legs is that the cat has a hard time scratching it.

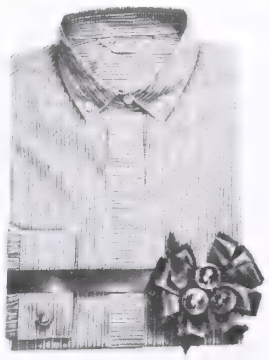
"You mean there's a Narroline in Dacron now?"

Absolutely! This Gossard "vanishes" hips, tummy and rear with miracle Dacron fabric and leno. See how Narroline narrows you from that 4" top on down, all around—and comfortably! Enjoy Dacron's congenial feel, whatever the temperature.

#1651 Narroline of quick-dry Dacron has embroidered trim, brief flexible boning. Also in satin, #1643. Both, white in medium length or long at $16.50 each. There's a 2" top satin Narroline #1118, too. 14", $10.95. 16", $12.50

at leading stores and shops or write us, we'll tell you where

Gossard



Youthful Line of Beauty

THE H. W. GOSSARD CO., 111 N. CANAL ST., CHICAGO 6 ▪ NEW YORK • SAN FRANCISCO ▪ ATLANTA • DALLAS • TORONTO

what could be nicer... or simpler than merely writing

Ship'n Shore®

after the name of every lucky lady (and little girl) on your gift list!

Striped pima broadcloth 3.98

Combed woven gingham 2.98

Fine combed cotton 2.98

Tucked combed broadcloth 2.98

Pima broadcloth 3.98

All Ship'n Shore fabrics are unconditionally washable. Blouses shown here, sizes 30 to 40. Children's styles, too, sizes 7 to 14... 1.98 to 2.98.

Striped combed cotton. 3.98

"Oh, my dear lord—how delicious it will be to rest here a few days."

He placed his hand on the jeweled pommel. "Your new duties are exacting, lovedy! The tenants have planned celebrations for you, and all the chancery officials are here, since we have much business to discuss."

"Oh, well—I know—but that's all simple compared to court life. Sainte Marie, but these last few days at Windsor were grueling. I never knew how hard it was to be a great lady."

"You do it superbly, Katrine," said John with sudden seriousness. "I've been very proud of you."

They both fell silent as they rode through the two gates and into the base court, where they were greeted by the usual confusion of scurrying stableboys, barking dogs and children. It was a different set of children now. These were John's grandchildren. Little Henry of Monmouth, nine years old, did not wait for the duke to dismount but swarmed up the flank of his grandfather's great charger and wedged himself between the pommel and the duke, crying, "Grandsir, grandsir, did you bring me the peregrine you promised? Did you, my lord?"

John smiled at Katherine over the child's head. "Here's a naughty mannerless lad, who thinks of nothing but falconry! Get down, you little savage." He scooped the boy out of the saddle and deposited him on the flags. "Now stand back and show the duchess and me proper courtesy."

"Ah, but not too much ceremony, my lord," said Katherine, laughing. "It's good to have a pack of rowdy children around again!"

Next morning when Katherine awoke early in the state bed of the White Chamber, John still slept. She slid out of bed and summoned Hawise.

Katherine gestured toward the garderobe, and the women went in there so as not to disturb the duke.

"I've brought ye spiced hippocras the butler sent up," said Hawise crossly. "We're far too grand to drink honest English ale of a morning any more."

Katherine laughed. "Don't tell me you miss Kettlethorpe?" She swallowed a cupful of the cool sweet wine and began to wash herself with rose water.

"Not sure I don't," grumbled Hawise.

They looked at each other while the memory of all the years they had shared together hovered between them.

After Hawise had adjusted a light seed-pearl coronet over a veil of rosy gauze, Katherine glanced into the bedchamber and said, "My dear lord sleeps late. He must sign those letters to the king before the Comte de St. Pol starts back for Windsor."

"Let his Grace rest, poor soul, he seemed mortal weary yestere'en."

KATHERINE nodded, walked through the passages of the Sainteowe Tower into the beautiful Great Hall. It was crowded with retainers, lords, knights, squires and their ladies, all waiting for her to come so that they might sit down to eat. As she entered, the men bowed and the ladies curtsied. The chamberlain ushered her to the dais, where her own squire, kneeling, presented her with a damask napkin.

The stately breakfast proceeded. Katherine longed to go out to her pleasance where the peaches were ripening and the new Persian lilies were in bloom, but she allowed herself no impatience. It would be hours before she could be free to enjoy the garden. There must first be interviews with the chamberlain and the steward. She must dictate answers to a dozen letters.

When she rose at length, a page came up to say that two nuns had arrived at the castle and craved an audience.

"Certainly," said Katherine. "Tell them I'll receive them presently."

By the time she had finished routine, it had grown very warm a page to the nuns to convey the of the Great Hall where a faint through the opened window. E own women who were embr spinning, the hall was deserted.

Katherine seated herself in chair and surveyed the two nuns before her. White nuns, Cisterci in snowy wimples and habits, a short one. The former turned a Katherine had had only a glim unsmiling profile.

THE short nun began to talk. your Grace—I'm the Prioress course we're not on Lancastria Grace wouldn't know us ——"

What is all this about? Kathe "Is there some help I can give prioress?"

"Well," said the prioress, "I know. It's Dame Ursula who She's my sacrist and librarian. I she wanted, wondered if—but talks so little, sometimes we thi odd, though not the way she use Katherine raised her eyebro them together.

"Oh," said the prioress, "she I doubt she can hear me."

But it seemed that the other nu She turned and looked full a whose heart began to pound bef knew any reason for it, who gaz the triar of face er white wi the slate- looked hesitant question.

"You me?" sai in the voice of Kathe again. Sh self up fr gripping She tried the blo from he fell back slipped o

The blankness lasted only a fe though it was long enough for hearing the prioress' frightened summoned Katherine's women.

Katherine pushed Hawise a aside. She struggled to her elbow the tall white nun knelt by h wimpled head was bowed and the on the pale cheeks.

"Go away, please, everybody," erine. "All but Dame Ursula. I'm so foolish. The heat, perhaps women reluctantly obeyed.

When they were alone, Kather thin, trembling hands in hers. " she whispered. "Oh, my darling— knew you'd come back."

The nun raised her head at las see you again," she said throug lips. "I could no longer live with

There were only two people i who understood why the duchess in her bower all that day with th nun. These were the duke and H saw to it that she was not disturb

The mother and daughter we quietly and after a while they pra only bit by bit that Katherine co her daughter's story. Blanchette clear: the convent life content wished for no other. She was gra nuns who had sheltered the ha child who had come to them fiftee and who had accepted her as a though she had no dowry and pre she did not know her name.

"I never told anything about m Blanchette. "I couldn't. Mother"— sharp breath and looked deep into eyes—"did I hear wrong that day lon Chamber?"

GREEK PROVERBS

The tavern keeper likes the drunkard, but he does not want him for a son-in-law.

A good anvil is not afraid of the hammer.

Choose the best life, habit will make it pleasant.

If you chase two hares, both will escape you.

atherine had suspected all these ette had misinterpreted the Gray ation and had believed that her rately poisoned her father.
ffaced this horror for Blanchette the grave twenty-nine-year-old the truth and understood, as the ild could never have.
news of the marriage which had nette from her long self-contain-had begun to remember her for her, to see Katherine as a could never commit the hideous he child had believed. "And I that you could not have married were true."
chette told how she had escaped oy. From the Avalon Chamber o hide in the falcon mew. "How now. The hawks in there fright-d forgotten you, forgotten what g to the Savoy. I thought of my n its cage upstairs."
e back up the secret stairs to the find her bird. The suite was filled nd the roar of approaching fire.
ead on the bottom of its cage. As cked up the cage, the passage-to flames behind her, and she
the window into the Thames.
age had held her up until a boat was rowed by a Fleming, who hette on board with him and ately up the river.
how where he put me ashore," te, "nor where I wandered for ne of the Pinley serfs found me, ed in a field. He brought me to and, kneeling by Katherine, o her face. "Mother, I shall be Aye—I've thought much about to be free of hatred first. A cell God where I shall nevermore see ld."

ng, no!" Katherine cried below can't give you up again."
did not hear the protest. "It's to become a recluse," she said d has stopped up my ears, so ter hear His voice. By His grace, ill be of stronger help to others e I can do. You must not doubt for I know it is so."
is so." What dear-bought treas-that was. It seemed to Kath-ve Blanchette's halting voice she y Julian speak: "I saw full surely be that we should be in longing e until the time that we be led so d that we truly know our own appened to Blanchette, she could For this child of hers, the sancti-ecluse was right, as it would have or Katherine, who had so des-ed to renounce the world during bellion and anguish in Norfolk.

leaned down and kissed her rehead. The women spoke but gether, nor had need to. They ers in Kenilworth's chapel, and ssed each other a long tender y would meet once more before inal enclosure.

tood beside Katherine in the ile they watched the two white pear. She moved instinctively easance gate and he followed her walked into the evening quiet of den. Bees hummed still over the lilies and the clove gillyflowers nce had deepened in the summer aters of the fountain splashed ne bench where Katherine and n together and gazed out across om the castle ward behind them

the shrill fanfare of a trumpet, nd there were shouts of greeting.
stirred. "Now who could that be ighted eyes had seen a galloping eak by along the causeway. "'Tis ld," he said. "Richard will have idea for the French envoys, or me new conspiracy, or worse.

Katrine, I have a foreboding—there's danger ahead."

She turned to him, seeing the tight lines of his mouth, the discouragement in his eyes. "It may be so, darling," she said slowly. "It may be that there is danger." She paused and said more softly still, "There was no promise that we should not be tempested and travailed . . . but there was a promise." She smiled and did not go on as she saw that he was not really listening. She put her hand gently over his, and waited until his clenched fingers relaxed and clasped hers.

Presently comfort came to him, and he thought that she had always given him of her strength, though he had never quite realized it until now.

Glory had passed him by; fame, too, perhaps would not endure. It might well be that the incalculable goddess would decree ill fame as his due.

Perhaps there might not be included in his epitaph the one tribute to his knighthood that he knew he deserved: "Il fut toujours bon et loyal chevalier."

But whatever the shadowed years of the future might bring to him—as long as life itself should last—he knew that he had here at his side one sure recompense and one abiding loyalty.

AFTERWORD

The following year, 1397, Richard effected the murder of his Uncle Thomas, Duke of Gloucester, at Calais, while Lord Arundel was beheaded for treason. Shortly thereafter, Richard exiled Henry of Bolingbroke.

John, Duke of Lancaster, died on February 3, 1399, at Leicester Castle, with Katherine by his side. They had been married three years. Upon the duke's death, Richard wantonly confiscated all the Lancastrian estates and heritage, and Henry soon returned to England to fight for his rights.

By popular acclaim, Richard was forced to abdicate in favor of his much-wronged cousin

DOROTHY GRAY Satura

WITH HORMONES AND VITAMIN A

DRAWS MOISTURE FROM THE AIR TO HELP DRY OR AGING SKIN LOOK YOUNGER...FRESHER!

THIS is the truly modern means to give your skin maximum benefits of beautifying moisture! SATURA, by Dorothy Gray, not only maintains the skin's inner moisture . . . it actually attracts moisture from the air to combat surface dryness and encourage the fresh, misty look of youth!

And SATURA does more! As its natural estrogenic hormones help "cushion" the skin against lines and wrinkles, its Vitamin A is absorbed by the skin to help relieve flaky-dryness. With these age-denying elements plus rich, skin-softening ingredients, SATURA is a most effective single preparation designed especially for dry or maturing skin. Use SATURA overnight and under make-up. It's greaseless, vanishing! 2-oz. $3.50; 4-oz. $5.00, plus tax.

For dry or over-30 skin follow the Dorothy Gray RULE OF THREE each day!

1 CLEANSE with Dorothy Gray Dry-Skin Cleanser . . . $1 to $3.50

2 STIMULATE with Dorothy Gray Orange Flower Skin Lotion . . . $1 to $3.75

3 LUBRICATE with SATURA at night

(Prices plus tax.)

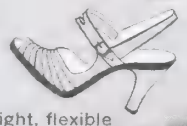
TRUST DOROTHY GRAY

for everything you need to stay a beauty!

THE AMERICAN GIRL SHOE

Soft as fluff...



THE STITCHED PUFF

Cushioned comfort in soft, supple calfskin . . .
with trim, puff-stitched vamp and a graceful
swirl of straps.

$8.95

OTHER STYLES $6.95 TO $9.95
SLIGHTLY HIGHER IN SOME PARTS OF SOUTH AND WEST

light, flexible cork platform

fabri-cushion upper lining for comfort

flattering lines and slender half-way heel

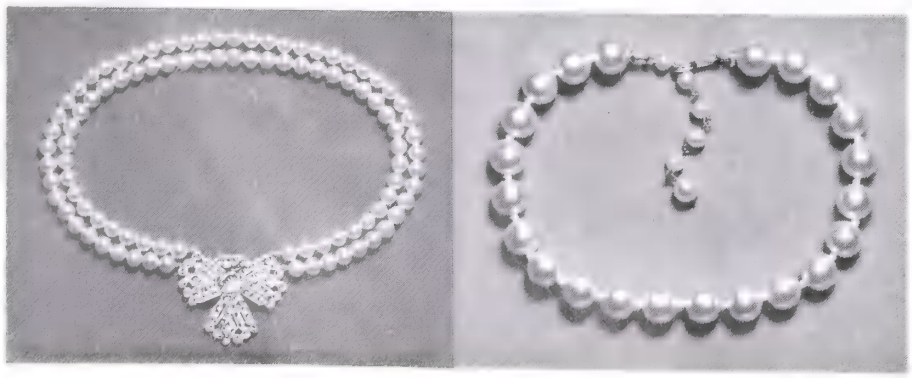
The American Girl Shoe Co., 288 A St., Boston, Mass., Div: Consolidated National Shoe Corp.

ALSO MADE IN CANADA BY GALE BROTHERS, LTD., QUEBEC



Look like a Million for $1.00

SIMULATED
Duchess PEARLS

Marvel at these expensive looking, lustrously lovely, rhinestone-clasped simulated Duchess Pearls... with an elegant Lustre-Dip glow, exclusively our secret. These magnificent necklaces can be yours for only $1 each, plus tax, at your favorite store.

H & S ORIGINALS, INC. • 48 WEST 37th ST., NEW YORK

who thereupon became King Henry IV of England, while Richard was imprisoned in Pontefract Castle, where he died. Katherine's son, Thomas Swynford, was at that time Constable of Pontefract, and it was said that by starvation he murdered Richard.

After the duke's death Katherine returned to Lincolnshire, where she lived quietly four years and died on May 10, 1403. She was buried by the high altar in Lincoln cathedral, where her son Harry Beaufort had become bishop. Katherine's tomb is there now, with that of her Joan.

From the Beauforts, the royal land eventually descended. Th Beaufort (Earl of Somerset, Mar set), who married Richard's half erine became the ancestress of H the Tudor line, also of the royal Scotland. Through Joan, and Ra Raby (Earl of Westmoreland), k great-grandmother to Edward IV III. Surely John of Gaunt and Roet, the herald's daughter, ancient prophecy: "Thou sha though thou be none."

YOUNG MAN WITH A WINDMILL

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 60

finished, a page turned. Pretty, gay Vida. He still remembered his immense surprise when she agreed to be engaged to him. For he was an ugly man, and he thought himself much uglier than he was, and it made him humble. Humble and far too grateful for kindness. When later on he discovered Vida had only got engaged to him for a little space to annoy someone else—the tall handsome man she afterward married—Doctor John wasn't at all surprised. He did not blame her. Only after that he became rather more silent, and if anything thinner than before. A young man whose hair was often too long, because he had nobody to remind him when it wanted cutting.

And now he owned a windmill.

The first thing was to go down and have a look at it.

He wished his windmill had come to him in summertime. The country always looked better to him when it was well trimmed up with flowers. Unfortunately, he had to take over in early spring, when flitters of ice still stuck to the edges of ponds, and the east wind blowing in from the sea held poignant memories of winter.

The one good thing about it was that it would get him out of town for the Easter vacation. The idea of getting out of London pleased him, for there were still enthusiastic hostesses who terrified him by asking him to their parties. Now he had a good get-out. Now he could say, "I am so sorry that I cannot accept your kind invitation, but I shall be in my windmill down in the country." He liked the sound of that. Not only was it out of the ordinary. It was true.

All these things passed through his mind as the train took him out of Liverpool Street Station, through the unlovely mud flats and marshes that surround it. Little Hallows, the guidebook told him, was a hamlet on the estuary. Pop. 325. The station of Little Hallows looked as if the 325 inhabitants did not use it very often, for grass grew out of the asphalt. A long lane led between twin lakes that in drier times were probably fields. He saw his windmill quite a long way off. It stood on a little hill, in the middle of a field. It still had its sails, and this gave it an odd air of waving its arms to him in hilarious welcome, just as Aunt Jessica herself had always done.

It took him some time to find his way in, for the structure was circular, and he played an involuntary game of hide-and-seek round it for a while, trying to find a door. When at last he located it, and let himself in with the huge rusty iron key Mr. Puffit had sent him, he was surprised to find the place was roughly furnished. A couch, some chairs, a table and a carpet made a sitting room on the first floor. The second floor contained two sacks and a broken umbrella. The third floor was empty, save for a glass jar with nothing in it, labeled Strawberry Jam. Beyond that a hen ladder led up to the narrow platform with a wooden handrail that ran round the part of the building that housed the wheel.

Doctor John stood stroking his chin. If he had been able to think of Aunt Jessica in terms of a love nest, that is what he would have thought. But he couldn't. He ate his sandwiches and made plans. With a little ingenuity the place could be made very comfortable. He saw himself on summer evenings pottering about with a saw and hammer and nails, doing all kinds of improvements. Housekeeping, he felt sure, presented no difficulties. A man living alone requires so little. It is only when he has got a woman to lay it on for him that he discovers he needs three- Beyond the window the country and gray. Over the salting with of reeds and sedges he could see made a methodical list of the u and improvements, and walked to look for a builder.

It was the emptiest and most f he had ever seen. For a long time a soul. But as he waited at the b door there hove into view, most a crocodile. A crocodile of very herded along by a tall grim fe umbrella which she carried as a ries his sword. She did not actua boys, but it looked as though an might.

They walked two and two, dej looked, even to the unpractical tor John, neglected and unkem sight of them brought back to hin antly his own school days. His lived in India, and he had spen youth in a school for the childr abroad. He remembered the desp been in his heart, contemplating tea of bread and butter at the end afternoon. The crocodile woun lane and out of sight. He turne after it in sudden sympathy. The came.

The builder turned out to be man. He talked knowledgeably a and plumbing, and said no, he and certainly it could be done

"The lady who owned the pla it for the summer. Mostly to down to see their children at the going to live in it, you say? Well the builder.

Doctor John hired a taxi to tal That solved the problem of all h papers, his typewriter and innun parcels. Gaunt in the twilight, stood on its hilltop, waving wild

"This the place?" said the taxi Gimme me money and let me go for me." He disappeared into Doctor John was alone.

He carried in his gear, and pu the fire. He found amongst th things he had forgotten was a gets so used to feeling for the switching it on that his hand we cally groping, and found nothing, stuck some candles in his pewter pleasantly tired. There was no the unpacking.

He would have a simple supp and turn in early. Firelight made shadows on the circular walls. sat down beside it, and held out h to the blaze. He felt relaxed and and dozed a little, to awake knowing what had awakened hi he had heard a noise.

The wind had risen and was k under the door. Maybe that was turbed him, thought Doctor Joh diately he knew it wasn't. Someb ing stealthily down the stairs fro upper floor.

Picking up the poker, Doctor J and waited. Through his mind th assortment of gypsies, burglars natics, and GI's on the run.

All that appeared was a sm crushed gray flannel suit, and a over. He was blue with cold an oment the air was filled with a moan, and it seemed to Doctor windmill shivered and shuddered t to collapse about his ears.

nd," said the small boy. "Only ng the sails. It always does that."

n laid down the poker. "Thanks ," he said dryly. "You seem to e better than I do."

nmer," said the small boy, "we Ve pretended it was a ship. I was Mother and I ——" ff, swamped with memories, his in a way Doctor John preferred put two and two together. The small boys from somewhere the mill let to the parents.

nother upstairs?" asked Doctor

he's . . . in London. She said she r my birthday, and then she said are you doing here?"

oy said, "I ran away," and he rs and caught at Doctor John's send me back. Oh, sir, please, oys have all gone home only and me, sir, and I can't get to he cries all night. Even matron d there's only Mr. and Mrs.

e lit in Doctor John's heart, the t to do, for he was a redheaded sty-tempered. How could any artless enough to abandon her e amused herself, went to dances had a good time? A child, no of those broken homes, he de- ted milk and made a good strong , the way they army. He cut ter and a large ira cake. e ravenously, to say at in- won't send r. Not back ase, sir."

you last have a bath?" asked as a matter of interest.

boy had time to answer there ud raps at the door. All the color ace, and he stiffened with terror. !" he said.

n hesitated for the ghost of an he pushed the child into the al- e cooking stove, pulled the cur- and opened the door.

ut man with sandy eyelashes and ood there. His face was the face peevish baby, and as he spoke was enveloped in the aroma of other you, but seen a kid any- visitor asked. "Boy aged around way from Parkton Hall School f Hallows. Buller's my name.

n looked at the man, and did He could not say why, but he t like him.

y he told the first conscious lie of e is no child here."

y I worried you. There was just a ht have come along, little blighter. ometimes rents the place. They nmer holidays here. If he should e know and I'll run over and pick me of Robin Kanes. Just when nded and all," said Mr. Buller. rumbling into the night.

N closed and double barred the a nice thing, he thought. Look ded myself with now, but even as , it did not seem to him he could done less.

out, Robin Hood," he said dryly. he boy bounced out like a whirl- braced Doctor John about the tted him in his thin middle in an atitude. He reminded the doctor ntly of a puppy he had once been tor John patted him on the head, a little embarrassed. Children stiff with him. Frightened, he told is ugliness. This was obviously an oy.

He sat obediently, skinny and pink like a shrimp, while Doctor John scrubbed him down, then fitted him into a pair of his own pajamas, with a deal of rolling up of trouser and sleeve. There was nothing for it but to keep the child and get in touch with the mother, and tell her a few home truths. Anger boiled up in Doctor John anew, whenever he thought of the woman.

Later, when the boy slept on the camp cot Doctor John had put up for him alongside the couch, he picked up the gray flannel suit and felt in the pockets. The letter, still in its envelope, was in the jacket pocket. The address was a fashionable London square. He read:

Darling Robin: After all, I shan't be able to come down this year for your birthday. You must be a good boy and not give Mr. and Mrs. Buller any trouble, and I'll try and come down for the summer hols. Maybe we can get the windmill again. You'd like that, wouldn't you? We had fun there, didn't we?

THERE was more of it, but Doctor John was too angry to read it. He just made a note of the address. To abandon a child like that, and not even take the trouble to send him a birthday present. Doctor John had made tentative inquiries about that.

"She said it might be a tractor. A red tractor," the child said. "Only it didn't come yet."

Over the years Doctor John remembered how terribly such things had mattered. A tricycle, a new cricket bat. He sat by the fire holding thin hands to the blaze, and wondered where on earth one bought toy tractors.

He opened the window a chink. The cold air fanned his face—but it held a vague scent and a promise that winter was past and spring had come to the countryside. A small bird in the eaves said something, then shut up for the night.

Gratitude is the memory of the heart.

He had pictured himself working on his notes all over the holidays, lunching simply off corned beef and Madeira cake which was slowly petrifying. It had been stale when he bought it. Girls in cake-shops are apt to sell off their old models to shopping males who know no better.

It did not work out as he had expected. First, he made what he hoped was a nourishing stew good for a growing boy. With what was left of the Madeira cake it would have to do, for there was nothing else until he could go shopping.

Over the fields the church bells pealed their Sunday summons.

"I think you should go to church," said Doctor John meditatively, remembering his own youth. Robin turned pale. Mr. Buller would be there, he explained, oh please, sir, not church, sir.

In the end they went for a country walk and picked early primroses in the wet hedges. The last time he had picked wild flowers had been in Switzerland—with Vida beside him and a heart still full of hope. He put that thought away from him quickly, and was surprised at how much he enjoyed himself.

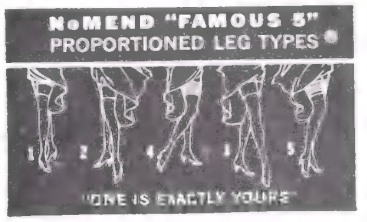
What to do with Robin while he himself went to London bothered him a little. It would mean leaving the boy on his own for several hours, and he was rather young. Still, he had been there alone already for nearly two days, and he did not appear to mind. He was a sensible sort of boy, and Doctor John comforted himself with the knowledge that he would get back on the 3:18, provided he found her at home. He could hardly take the boy with him. For one thing, they would be bound to run into Mr. Buller somewhere, thought Doctor John, who knew this is a world in which those you hope to avoid arrive from every direction, but those you love depart to another side of the country.

In the end, Doctor John left him the Tuesday after the Easter holiday. London shops would be open again. He left Robin a glass of milk, a plate of sandwiches (corned beef) and a slab of cake (Madeira) and instructions not to open the door to anyone, no matter how loud they knocked.

All the way up to town he rehearsed what he would say to her, marshaling his facts and composing his sentences, for when he lost his temper he was apt to become incoherent. If she could not be bothered to look after her own

Gore Heel

Diamond Toe



ONLY NoMEND HAS THESE 2 QUALITY FEATURES

for the utmost in fitted Fashion

NoMend stockings are proportioned every inch of the way from top to toe. NoMend's better clinging fit means fewer runs, no strain, no bagging... a perfectly fitting stocking that enhances the leg.

Nobody ever regretted buying Quality. NoMend full-fashioned and no-seam stockings come in all popular gauges and deniers, and in "FASHION APPROVED" colours. From $1.35 to $2.50

NoMend® BEAUTIFUL STOCKINGS

TYPE 1—Small. TYPE 2—Average. TYPE 3—Tall. TYPE 4—Average (larger above knee). TYPE 5—Tall (larger above knee).

For the name of the store nearest you selling NoMend Stockings write NoMend Hosiery Inc., 350 Fifth Avenue, New York 1, N. Y.

Meadow Gold Mealtime Adventures

by Beatrice Cooke

FREE! 10 EASY RECIPES FOR CHRISTMAS COOKIES

Chocolate Nuggets	Chocolate Chews
Frosted Fruit Bars	Polka Dot Brownies
Lemon Butter Cookies	Pecan Refrigerator Cookies
Walnut Squares	Toffee Squares
Butterscotch Crisps	Pineapple Walnut Drops

Looking for Christmas cookie recipes that are really unusual—and simple, too? Well, I'm sure you'll be delighted with the 10 listed above. Each cookie is delicious and festive. And all are so easy to make, they're almost foolproof! Just be sure you have plenty of Meadow Gold Butter on hand for baking day. You know, Meadow Gold is churned fresh daily! Tested 17 times for purity and quality! That's why it gives everything you bake the extra-rich flavor that only a top-grade butter can. Why not try Meadow Gold Butter in these Chocolate Nuggets tonight?

Recipe for Chocolate Nuggets

¾ cup Meadow Gold Butter
1 cup sugar
1 Meadow Gold Egg, well beaten
¼ teaspoon salt
2 1-ounce squares unsweetened chocolate, melted
2 tablespoons Meadow Gold Homogenized Milk ½ teaspoon vanilla
2½ cups sifted cake flour
Chocolate shots
Chopped walnuts

Cream butter; gradually add sugar and cream until fluffy. Add egg, salt, chocolate, milk and vanilla; mix well. Mix in flour. Chill dough thoroughly. Shape into 1 inch balls; roll in chocolate shots or chopped walnuts. Place on an ungreased cookie sheet; bake at 375° for 10-12 minutes. Makes 4 dozen cookies.

©1954 BEATRICE FOODS CO.

child, at least she might see to it that wherever she put him he was happy and well cared for—for that disheartened crocodile he had seen on his first visit to Little Hallows had marched and remarched through his consciousness in a disconcerting fashion ever since.

The house in the London square was just as he had pictured it. Prosperous, it was, and well groomed, with clipped yew in green tubs either side of the bright yellow door with its mock-silver knocker. Against the curb a long row of glittering cars was drawn up, well cared for as the house itself.

A butler opened the door, sleek and prosperous as the cars, and it was clear from the start he did not think much of Doctor John. Yes, Mrs. Kanes was in—but it wasn't very convenient. There was a party on. Was it urgent?

"It is extremely urgent," said Doctor John, and he wished he had thought of wearing his better suit and his less worse hat, only during the move they had disappeared, and he did not know quite where to look for them.

The house smelled of good food and rich wines. The stairs were so thickly carpeted it was difficult not to bounce on them. You would have thought, Doctor John mused bitterly, that in this great luxurious house there would have been a corner somewhere for one small boy. Far below he could hear them all enjoying themselves. Whoopee, and loud laughter. And anger boiled up in him again as the door opened.

A girl stood there. A tall thin girl in a white overall. Very black hair she had, that increased her pallor. Rage boiled in Doctor John's heart. He thought he was being palmed off with a secretary, until she said, "You want to see me?" Her face had a pinched look that made her eyes seem bigger than they were, and suddenly her chin quivered in a way that was oddly familiar to him. "Is it about Robin?" she asked. "Is anything wrong?"

"Nothing is wrong. Sit down," he said, and he sat down himself on the sofa beside her, and knotted and unknotted his hands, all at sea, since nothing he had planned to say fitted the case. "He ran away. It's a horrible place. Preposterous. The fellow smells of beer."

"You mean—Robin is with you? You've got him? But ——"

"He came to the windmill, and it belongs now to me. So I let him stay till I'd seen you. To see if you knew —— I couldn't understand your not taking him for the holidays."

She said, and her voice was bitter, "I'm the housekeeper here. Living in. It's the only kind of job you can save any money at now, with living expenses what they are. Do you know what it costs now, to clothe a child, and keep it in shoes? No, I'm sure you don't. I was hoping I could get away, if only for his birthday, but I couldn't. There was a party."

As she said it, wild strains of gaiety and whoopee came up to them from below.

"Do you suppose I like it? Do you suppose I do it on purpose?" she broke out passionately. "I have to make money somehow. His father was killed flying. I had to take what I could get. I had no time or money to spare going round to look for schools. I had to send him where the lawyers said he would be all right."

"He told me you were with friends."

"That's what I told him. I wouldn't want him to know, yet, how things are. You're not to tell him! He's too young to understand." She was crying now and Doctor John said, unhappily:

"Please don't cry. I did not understand. I thought ——"

But it did not matter what he had thought, so he let that pass. He looked at her, sorry and ashamed now, but too shy to say so.

He listened in silence while she told him what life is like today, for a woman with a child, and no man to help her. There was about her a sort of courage that made him still more ashamed.

"I shouldn't complain. I manage," she said, and her chin trembled again, but she controlled it. "I'm all right, really. It's only the holidays that are so difficult."

Doctor John said brusquely, "He can stay with me, as long as you'll square the Bullers. As long as you think you can trust me. I had better tell you something about myself." He felt in his pocket for a card, but she turned away.

"I guess I know all I need to about you," she said. "You're kind." She broke off, the way Robin had broken off when he spoke of the summer holidays. She said, in a muffled voice, for the sake of something ordinary to say and tide her over, "Your hair wants cutting."

Doctor John crammed his hat on, as if to stem the luxuriant growth. "I know," he said ruefully. "I forgot. Look, I'll write. References and all that. And I'll let you know ——"

He stumbled out into the street, without making up his mind what he was to let her know. At the corner of the square he turned and looked back. She was standing there in the cold wind on the pavement, very girlish and slight in her white overalls, looking after him.

He hurried to Harrod's toy department. Red tractors cost a lot more than he expected, but then everything did. He had them parcel it up, and write on it "With Love from Mother."

"Father, you mean?" asked the girl. She thought he seemed vague.

"No—mother," he said.

It was an unhandy parcel to carry, but he went off with it under one arm.

"Bit bats, dear, if you ask me," said the girl in the toy department.

Robin played with his tractor unceasingly. Any qualms Doctor John might have had, as to his being lonely, proved groundless. It seemed a host of persons shared the windmill with them. There was someone called Poppety—and the Teddy-bear tractor driver and Rupert, and Growler. Who they were Doctor John had no idea, for he was quite unable to see any of them, but he thought nothing of that. After thirty years of age, no one can hear the squeak of a bat as it flits through the twilight overhead, but that does not alter the fact it is there.

He wrote her stiff letters with news of Robin. Stiff, because that was the only kind of letter he knew how to write. She wrote him gay, friendly little notes in return. She baked them a cake and sent it down to them. The letters were signed "Nan Kanes." Once she added a P.S.: "Did you get your hair cut yet?"

Doctor John put up an exploring hand to see, and regretted that the answer was in the negative. He wondered whether amongst the pop. 325 there was a barber.

Then the bombshell fell.

The Monday-morning letter he had come to look for had news in it. Good news, she called it. The officers' school in Borton had found a vacancy for Robin. They would take him on the twenty-second. After the twenty-second, Doctor John realized, he would have his windmill to himself again. He would no to shop, and concoct nourishing could prop the breakfast paper milk jug once again, and read th asters in peace and quiet. He coul rely on the Monday letter from he would be over.

He read on, feeling slightly sick

I shall get a day off next week, and mind, I would like to come down an his clothes, and see the dear windm

That, at any rate, was somethi him breathing space. Her letters w and kind, but he did not know how did not know if she had any idea project that had come to him i watches. Nor did he like to risk an The Vida affair had left its mark cause a man fell in love with some not follow, he knew from experien returned his feelings.

He met her at the station. Robin cold, so he stayed in the windmill. neat little fur cap and a coat with collar. It made her look older and n tant, but in his heart he thought never look as sweet in anything as overall she had worn that other da

He took her a very long way ro himself time.

"I did not remember it was so f station," she said. "I've got to ge cook the dinner."

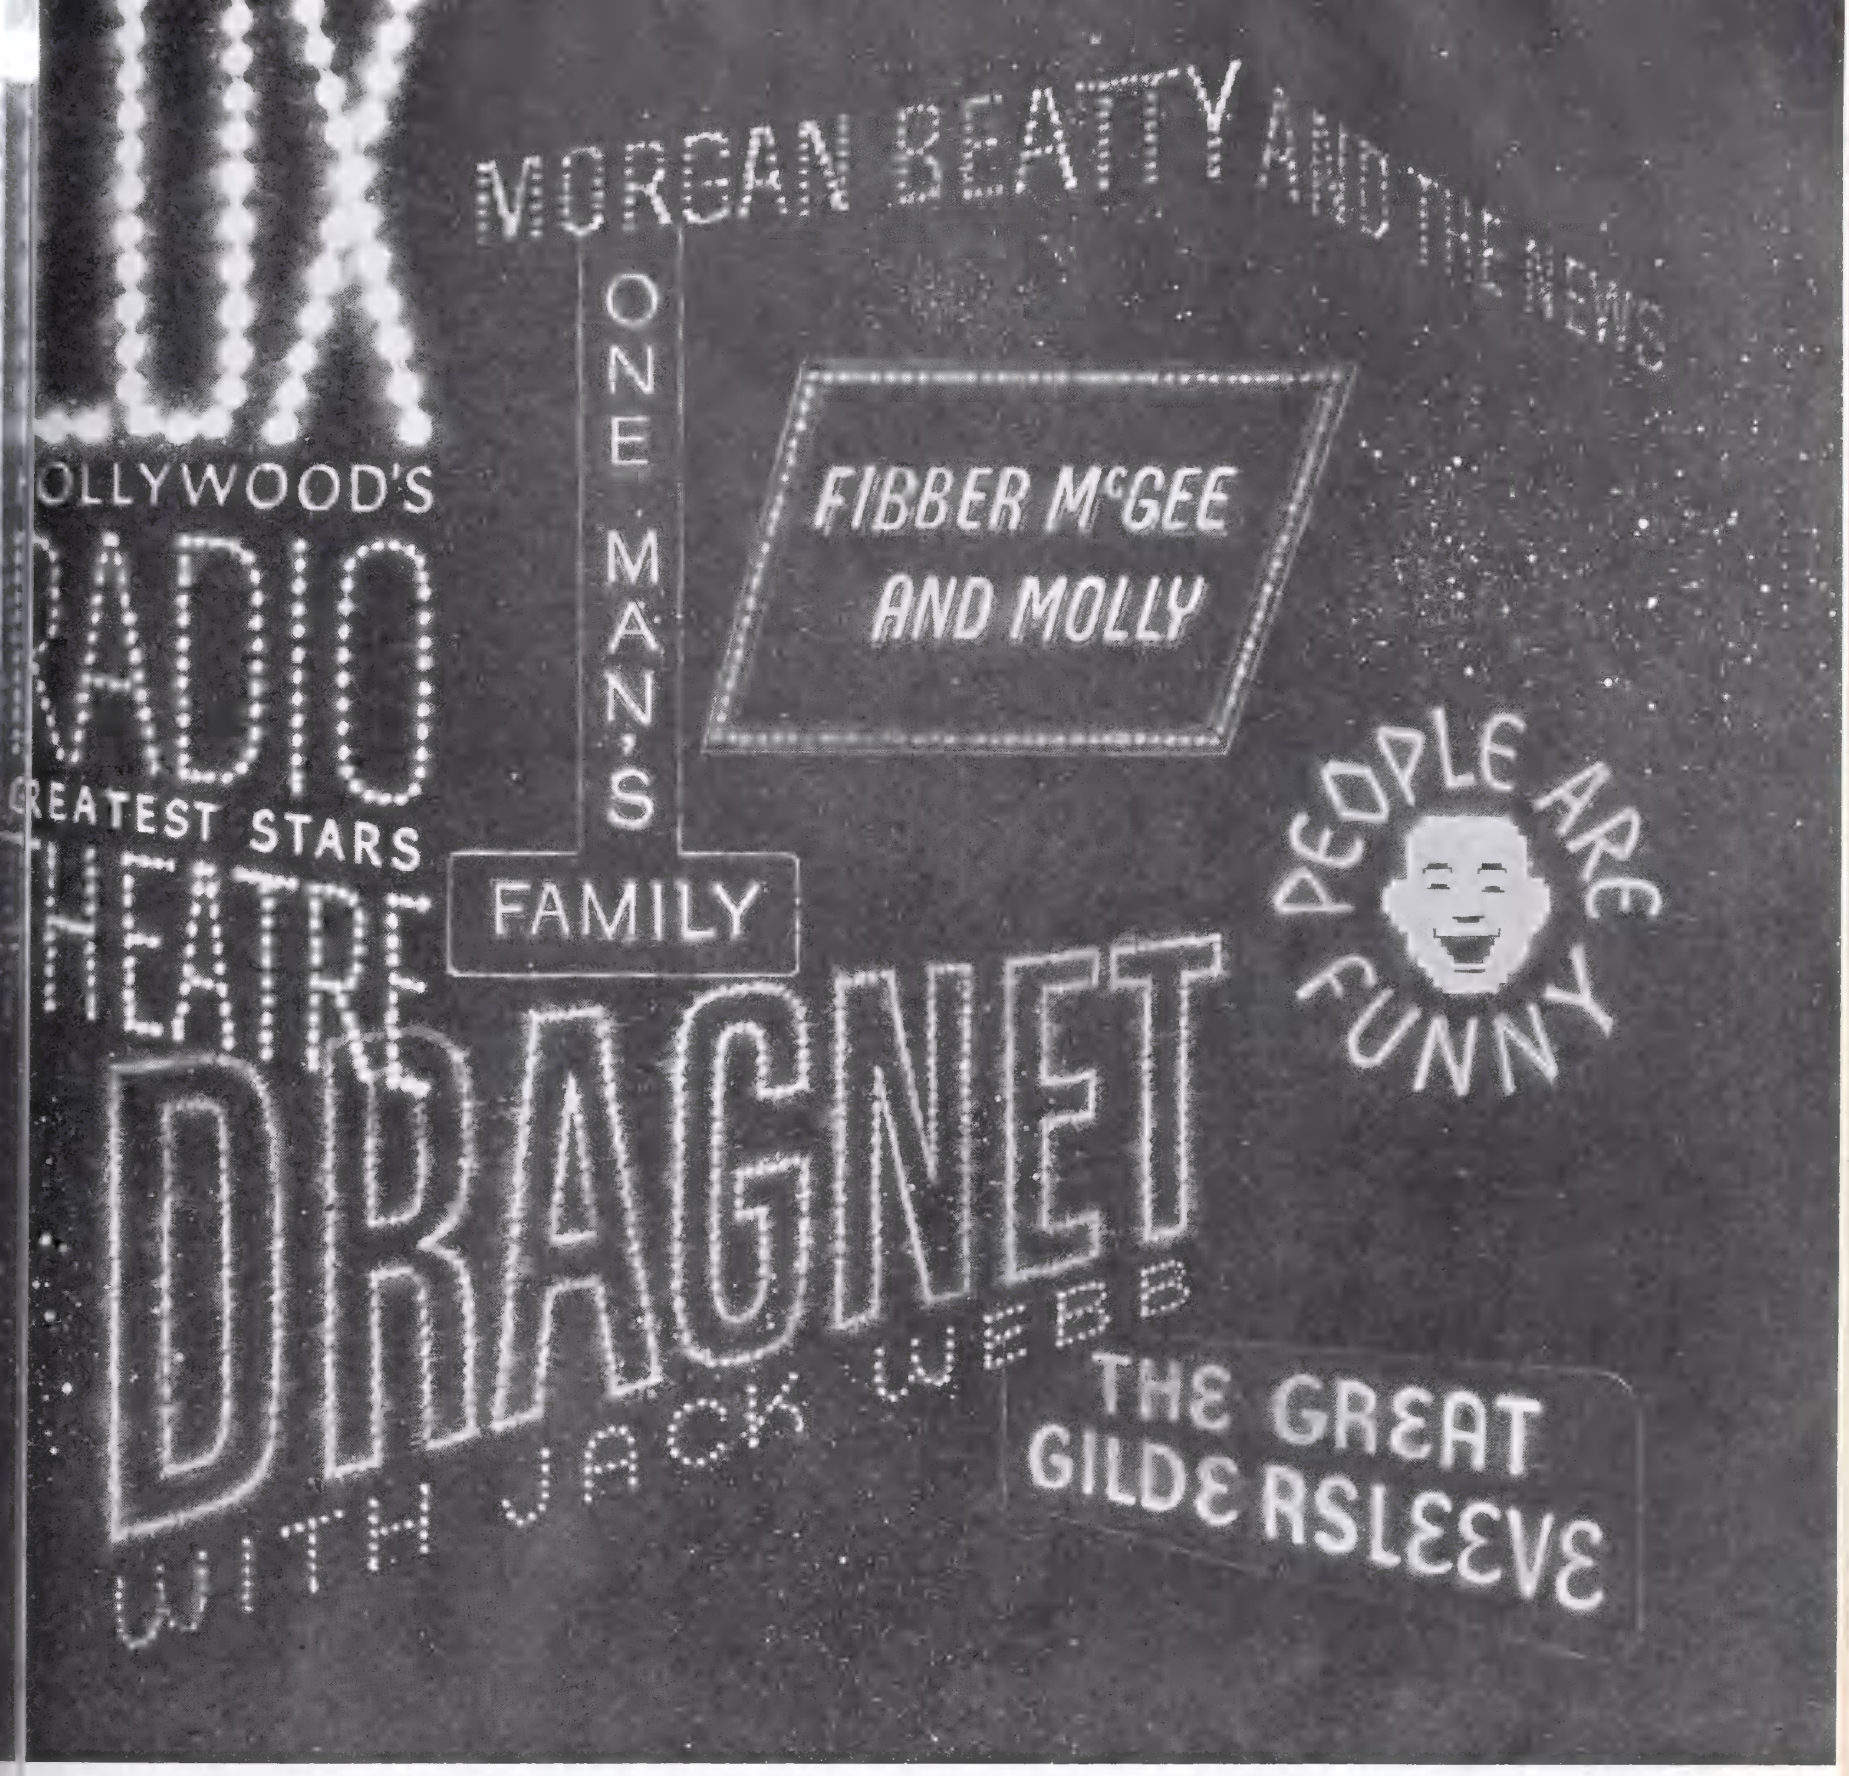
He stopped and faced her. "I n housekeeper. Living in," he said gr not the way he had planned to say i he was moved in any way he was ap a trifle incoherent. "You know al backs of the place. I will make an ments you say. I meant to, anyhow. seem to know the way to do it."

He heard her draw in her breath gasp and he thought that might m

"Oh, Nan," he said brokenly, " me."

She was in his arms, her cold ch against his.

"Robin needn't go away. He's There's a day school. I thought it Nan," he said. "Oh, Nan."



She took his face between her and kissed him, and he saw she w

"It's nothing," she whispered. Only just that I can't believe my g

In the twilight the windmill welc home, waving hilarious arms. Oddl Jessica. Aunt Jessica who had trie her lifetime to land him with a fa Doctor John. Could it possibly be a finger in the pie?

"Hey, sis, you can quit worrying. He's here!"

Look what's ppened to plain old uesday night!

y's all lit up like Broadway... on NBC Never before have there been so many nd hit shows in one place, in one eve- UX RADIO THEATRE, America's fore- ramatic show for two decades, is in eat playbill. And PEOPLE ARE FUNNY, erennial top-ten delight, starring Art tter.

But you have to join NBC early in the evening to see what's really happened to Tuesday.

You start with America's most popular radio news reporter, MORGAN BEATTY and his NEWS OF THE WORLD. Then, the most beloved family in radio, ONE MAN'S FAMILY, brings you the rare warmth America has known for almost twenty-three years.

The pace changes as Art Linkletter propels contestants into hilarious situations on PEOPLE ARE FUNNY.

Then, tense drama with Jack Webb's DRAGNET, the greatest thriller of its type on the air; a many-time prize-winner.

Now, for a solid hour... the glamour of LUX RADIO THEATRE, with famous screen stars in the greatest Hollywood hits . . . celebrating its 20th Anniversary.

After LUX, you're off to Wistful Vista to visit FIBBER McGEE AND MOLLY (now, five nights a week), with their friends, their foibles, and that closet!

Then on to Summerfield with the portly Lothario who attracts trouble and laughs... THE GREAT GILDERSLEEVE (five nights a week).

It's the greatest Tuesday night in radio (more about other NBC nights, later). Share it with your family!

NBC RADIO

a service of RCA

KEFAUVER'S SECRET WEAPON

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 55

a dozen letters, study names and problems I'll be running into at the next stop, all in air-conditioned peace and quiet!"

The two women sat by an open fire in the quiet of Mrs. Ragland's home and put in a solid "working day," going over lists of names, talking over plans which would be the foundation for all the long campaign to follow.

Both believe deeply that women interested in their family's welfare must look to the community's welfare, too, and beyond that to the welfare of state and nation.

"Women have an instinct for politics!" Mrs. Ragland told Edna. "They see issues clearly—and they're natural organizers. If you can just get them into it, they take to it like a duck to water."

Both knew, though, that women in politics were still pioneers. Many women in Tennessee (and perhaps even more men) still believe that a lady has no place in party politics. Mrs. Jamison, who has heard this argument as often as Mrs. Ragland, always answers, "In the days when that was true, no lady did her own shopping either. Ladies were waited on hand and foot—and how dull it must have been!"

"Of course the most important thing is to elect Estes," Mrs. Ragland went on. "Getting more women interested is a by-product. But unless we have more and more informed people willing to take part in government, good men like Estes are in constant danger. And I think the best hope for doing this is through the women."

The budget would be limited. Senator Kefauver had always represented the "little people," who had little money too.

On the bus trip home Mrs. Jamison thought about the adventure ahead. She knew the experience would be new. But only by actually living and pushing through the next six months was she to find out how new.

She and King were to be separated more than at any time in their thirty years of marriage. For the first time in her life she had to have domestic help. And she had to have a full-time secretary.

And the countless little things. . . . She had already had her hair cut shorter, and King hated it: "It makes you look older!"—which was why she did it. The little black notebook she had taken out to study was the first of a long series; and the lists and notes were to grow so bulky that she had to buy the biggest purse she'd ever owned—her "feed bag," King called it.

She was to write endless letters, speeches, radio and television scripts in the coming months. But the most important words of all had to come first. She and Martha had agreed that the women's campaign would be centered around just one carefully worked out piece of "campaign literature," a leaflet telling Senator Kefauver's story in words and pictures, his family life and public life, and his stand on issues. And on the back of the leaflet, a letter from Edna Jamison to go (she hoped) to every voter in Tennessee.

In the small ruled notebook Mrs. Jamison began to set down words. "I have a son in service and another son fourteen. I share with mothers everywhere a deep concern for the frightening state of the world. Today it is more imperative than ever before that we send to Washington the best we have to offer. . . ."

Why Mrs. King Jamison? Senator Kefauver and Martha Ragland chose better, perhaps, than Edna Jamison knew. Her smooth fair skin, the softly curling dark hair, only faintly streaked with gray, and her alert gray eyes make her look too young to be the mother of a grown son. She has the Southerner's gentle voice and soft way of speaking, but she enunciates so clearly that she can be heard in the largest room. Always, her conviction is in her voice.

SHE never appears to be hurried. Even in the busiest days of the campaign she moved from one problem to the next, from one worker to the next, one county to the next, with no hint of frenzy. She gives her whole attention to the moment at hand.

Part of her apparent ease is her nature; part of it comes from carefully acquired habit. Fifteen years ago, not long before her younger son's birth, Edna Jamison had several light heart attacks. Her doctor put her to bed for a year. She spent the time reading—books, and more books. For the first time she looked far beyond her own home and family, even beyond her own country. This was the year in which she feels she "grew up," in many ways.

When the year had passed, M doctor warned that she must n beyond the point of fatigue to r on "nervous energy." She began how to relax completely, to let blank and her muscles limp, at v campaign became really intens know herself how thoroughly sh her lesson.

EDNA JAMISON'S first interest and her home. The Jamisons' larg white house stands back from lined with trees, and with Jack bellum" homes. She loves "fix house. She refinished the beauti her bedroom, and made the delic bedspread herself. In the dinin graceful mahogany chairs, bou time for four Christmases, have and backs in velvet—in four bler ferent colors. "Different colors teresting around the table," Mrs gues, "and they can be used a chairs. The colors were so l couldn't decide on one!"

Mrs. Jamison's cooking is be according to her men, and wa most-mourned losses (though th silently)d weeks o paign. A doesn't hot rolls
a shabby

King rock of family—ly for hi long dra
"It'd b luck wh that th have re the next couldn't restin' works in departm
Gulf, M
Ohio Ra
pany, wh to have" to do a His shrin go with sh in beer, famous i Jackson's

He has an artist's love of phot has been taking pictures "ever s hold a box camera." He has much of the family's love and film that he says, "I get to sh things—that's one of the times y to live forever."

But Mr. Jamison's special inte
He has been connected with the Bo scout or scoutmaster, since 1911.
hundred boys have belonged to hi day he has the sons of boys he years. His own son, Frankie, be present troop. To them he brings interests—geology, camping, an e knowledge of the history of his s birds, rivers, lakes, trees, mountai to tell them about Casey Jones, w in Jackson. Casey's son, a pipe fitte door to the Jamisons for years. Mr at home in a tent or boat, with an fire, and his quiet confidence re youngest "tenderfoot."

In the midst of so much fam
Mrs. Jamison's "causes" are jus busy scene. Church and scho are wives' and mothers' first inte were Mrs. Jamison's. She has t day school for thirty-two years when I was very young!"), and every effort throughout this campaign to be home on Sunda her class.

"Edna sure is loved in the ch Jamison says. "The old ladies, spe she has wings growing under her course it was partly because she leader that Senator Kefauver a Ragland wanted her help in the

CATTY REMARKS

Cats interest me because they have the qualities I like best in people—courage, dignity, independence, the ability to amuse themselves, combined precision, silence and economy of movement, and that rare and marvelous virtue, a taste for the difficult.
—SOPHIE KERR

If man could be crossed with the cat, it would improve man, but it would deteriorate the cat.
—MARK TWAIN

A home without a cat, and a well-fed, well-petted and properly revered cat, may be a perfect home, but how can it prove its title?
—MARK TWAIN

Crepes suzette—of course! But you can also cook whole "oven" meals—bake pies, potatoes, beans—roast meats and fry chicken—stew, fricassee, do just about everything in the new Arvin Lectric Cook-All!

Remove the big 4 qt. pan and you have as much space as three 10-inch skillets to grill hamburgers, bacon and eggs, pancakes, toast sandwiches. Thermostat control gives exact heat regulation from 150° to 500°. Weighs only 10 lbs. Take it anywhere, use it anywhere—in living room, dining room, porch, cottage. A perfect gift. $29.95.

Pies, Biscuits
Pastries

Chicken, Roasts
Swiss Steak

Stews, Spaghetti
Baked Potatoes

Bacon and Eggs
Sandwiches

FREE RECIPE BOOKLET tells the whole versatile Cook-All story . . .
Write Arvin Industries, Inc., Dept L
Columbus, Ind.

artly because of her interest in the Mrs. Jamison accepted. For specially since the Second World s been distressed by the apparent between what people say inside alls and what they say when they lls.

n work has been a quiet, matter- rt of her life. Her active interest airs began with a baptism of fire, ool fight in Jackson ten years ago. was just finishing junior high year Mrs. Jamison was elected a P.T.A. which didn't really exist. only four present, two of them day she was elected. ("We had a out getting the janitor in to make) schools had been run by a tight n. In 1945 some white teachers per month; Negro teachers, $50. salary scale, no teacher contract. plan had been adopted as a result sure, but was ineffective, since re- s not mandatory. Buildings were nd additional ones badly needed. as increasing because of lack of a program. Windowpanes were out; as closed entirely because it was e to heat.

dig all this out," Mrs. Jamison n't know it. I'd been busy in my see."

did find out, "all hell broke loose!" says baldly. The terrible upheaval e school problem brought on mass "little war" that shook Jackson. was complicated by the fact that he city charter had to go through gislature. Mrs. Jamison did not of course, but she was known to "As we went about interviewing pport of our cause, we met a hos- on every hand. Sometimes people mpathetic to the issue were afraid t. Teachers were afraid of losing eople would say to us, 'Don't be ut this—you don't know what g.' But somebody had to begin uth."

brought Edna Jamison a thick file us threatening letters. King, Jr., led from school—for being "too popularity was creating disturb- halls. King's suspension gave the nily cause to wonder what would he continued to work with the ovement group, but Mr. Jamison uldn't mind being expelled from r a reason like that!"

ison went to the school with King, y, where he was reinstated after a rt martial" in the principal's office.

eginning she had wanted to talk ersonalities. "It's easy to build a up, but to win any lasting good to know why . . . you have to start m and build brick by brick, fact by friend, a politician, told me during that often people don't really simply readjust their prejudices. s hard—and slow. But it's the only eans anything."

learned something else in that . "Everywhere we turned, we ran ment." When they saw the mayor eded school building, he talked s.

se are human values—our chil- . Jamison pointed out.

men are always getting concerned nal themes!" the mayor said.

ison remembers clearly the day, ur, that she says "really woke me d gone with a group to talk to their r. He heard their protests about the schools, and at last told them, t elect me. I know who elected me. people I'm responsible to."

ed then," Mrs. Jamison says, "that never happen to me again. He was years ago only a little over four people had voted in the whole was stated by one citizen that per- ore than three hundred women had he 1944 elections for state repre- Women believed that they couldn't go into politics." So Mrs. Jamison began all over. She started to work with groups all over Tennessee to get permanent registration and to get rid of the poll tax. She helped put on drives to get voters registered. (Over 27,000 were registered in the 1954 primary.) She encouraged groups to put up new candidates, good candidates, for city offices; and to her astonishment she found that once you begin to take an interest in politics, candidates will take your interest into account. Even the "machine" candidates began calling on her—"because she has that group," they would say.

"But I don't have any influence!" she told a friend, a banker, in astonishment.

"Oh yes you do. Anybody who talks a lot has influence!" the banker told her.

"I've thought a lot about what he said," Mrs. Jamison says. "If we're going to 'talk a lot,' then we ought to know what we're talking about."

"I'm very timid inside," she says. "I even used to laugh at women 'do-gooders' who got excited about schools and politics. But I'm stubborn too. When the problem came home to me, and nobody else would do anything, I began to feel like the little red hen. 'I'll just have to do it myself'; I think I've said it a hundred times since, and my family urges me on! I'm still being the little red hen."

Once she had become interested in local government, Edna Jamison found herself interested in political problems everywhere. But she went into state politics in 1948 "almost by accident. I stuck my toe in and somebody gave me a big push."

She had been following Estes Kefauver's record in Congress, and liked it. One day a friend from a nearby county (they had met through the P.T.A.) wrote, "Edna, I'm awfully interested in Kefauver. I wish you'd see what you can do for him there." Mrs. Jamison agreed, and found herself appointed county chairman—she read the announcement under a large (5″ x 7″) picture of herself in the news-

The Best Cooks way to QUICK MEALS

2 QUICK-TO-MAKE DISHES made more delicious with

Van Camp's PORK AND BEANS

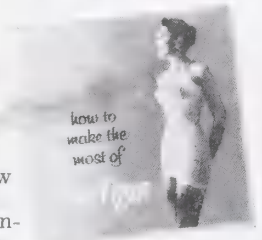
Van Camp's Pork and Beans . . .
with secret, savory tomato sauce
. . . and spare-ribs

Stokely-Van Camp

Van Camp's Pork and Beans . . .
ready to heat . . . eat . . . enjoy
. . . with grilled Canadian bacon

VAN CAMP'S • THE LARGEST SELLING BEANS IN ALL THE WORLD

Why ignore your figure faults



when a Spencer can do so much for you!

BEFORE—Sags and bulges are so often caused by faulty posture. You can "do something" about your figure!

AFTER—In Spencer Supports designed just for you—your posture will be improved—you'll look so much lovelier!

Send for FREE booklet

If unsightly droops, sags or bulges have been worrying you—send for the famous free Spencer booklet today! Learn how faulty posture is frequently responsible for common figure faults—how you can look better and feel better for it!

Learn what Spencers can do for you

Many thousands of wearers of Spencer Foundations tell us they're thrilled with the Spencers designed for them. The moment they put their Spencers on, they experience a wonderful posture "lift" and their figures are so much lovelier! What Spencers have done for them—they can do for you.

Your exquisite, lightweight Spencer Brassiere and Foundation will be designed, cut and made for you and you alone to help you improve your posture every minute you're wearing them. Gently, comfortably, they'll provide the proper support you need—where you need it. Those unpleasant sags and bulges will be smoothed to the lovely figure lines you've longed for.

What's more—Spencers, you'll find, are truly economical, because they're actually guaranteed not to lose their shape as long as they are worn.

MAIL COUPON BELOW for fascinating 12-page booklet. Or PHONE a Spencer Corsetiere for information about Spencer Brassieres, Foundations and Slips. Look in yellow pages under "Corsets," white pages under "Spencer Corsetiere" or "Spencer Support Shop." Never sold in department stores.

Please send FREE 12-page booklet.
I have marked my figure problem.
I would like to make money as a Spencer Corsetiere ☐

Lordosis Backline ☐ Breast Problem ☐ Fatigue Posture ☐

Mrs
Miss _____
(Print name and address)

Address _____

City _____ State _____

MAIL to SPENCER DESIGNERS, 141 Derby Ave., New Haven 7, Conn. 11-51
(In Canada—Box 1, Islington, Ont.)

SPENCER®

individually designed foundations and brassieres paper! She had never done anything of the kind before, but "when I found out what I was supposed to do, I just organized myself nearly to death all over Jackson and Madison County!"

Martha Ragland told her later that she had organized her county far better than any of the others, "but I didn't know that," Mrs. Jamison laughs. "I was just green! And lucky. Most of my mistakes worked out in my favor." She is striking proof of her own theory, "Professionals analyze and predict too much. While they're doing that, amateurs go ahead and work. Amateurs don't know any better than to work."

In another way her experience in 1948 was painful and disillusioning. Women had never had a separate division in the state party organization. They were used to being paid so much a day to ring doorbells or answer the telephones.

"As soon as it was announced that I was to be the county chairman, women began calling to ask how much I was paying," Mrs. Jamison says. "It seemed degrading to me. I said I was a volunteer, working because I believed in Estes. 'Well,' they said, 'Mr. So-and-so pays five dollars a day—I can't work without pay!'

"I knew it was the result of women's only being 'used' for so long," Mrs. Jamison says, "and not all women had fallen into this. But there was a danger of complete loss of a voting conscience, which worried me."

It was to keep together the women's organization she had developed and to keep its influence effective between campaigns that Edna Jamison organized Jackson's first League of Women Voters in 1950. The original group of fifteen members has grown to forty, still working to inform a sometimes indifferent public about the mechanics and the issues of government.

"People laugh sometimes at women's clubs," Mrs. Jamison says, "but nobody can possibly evaluate all that the League has meant to Jackson!"

The ideas that benefit a man are seldom welcomed by him on first presentation.
—ELBERT HUBBARD

With the new adventure, she had gone a step further. Her first act, after accepting the chairmanship of Senator Kefauver's campaign, was to resign membership on the state and local boards of the League of Women Voters.

"I loved the League," she told King, "and it gave me some valuable experience. But I had to be too 'neutral.' Honestly, I think I would just as soon be dead as neutral!"

Mrs. Jamison began the 1954 primary campaign at home, in an improvised office in one of the four upstairs bedrooms—a room left free now that King, Jr., is away. This was the room Mrs. Jamison painted a year ago, keeping the fact secret from her husband because she knew that King, always concerned about her health, would not have approved. But she knew just the soft Wedgwood blue she wanted, and there were too many other places for money to go. King did remark once or twice on the odd smell in the house, but his wife, busy getting dinner, was noncommittal, and the news of the day crowded out further wondering.

In Mrs. Jamison's new "office" upstairs in her home the bed, dressing table and chest were moved to the attic. Into the room went a heavy oak table (the old-fashioned kind with bookcases set between the legs at each end) and all the card tables Edna could beg or borrow.

She rented a stout steel filing cabinet which she was sure at first would be too large but which was stuffed to overflowing by the middle of July. She rented a typewriter, and her secretary-assistant brought another. In a few weeks stacks of campaign literature crowded the tables and floor. Newspapers she did not have time to read piled up in a corner. Boxes of incoming mail, sheets of stamps, the kitchen sponge kept moist in a cereal bowl, and more unread newspaper clippings covered her desk. Kefauver banners and photographs, and a large map of Tennessee, went up on the wall.

Two small maple chairs with flowered cushions and backs stayed in the room, for visitors and for comfort—and perhaps as silent reminders that women in politics don't lose their interest in chintz ruffles.

Mrs. Jamison began writing letters. The first were simple "Dear Friend" letters to introduce herself and to ask for names of others interested in helping Senator Kefauver. Before the campaign was over Edna Jamison was to feel that lists would haunt her the rest of her life. Names and addresses. She wanted two kinds—the names of women who could work in the campaign, and another long, long mailing list of voters' names.

The spring months were filled with mail, telephone calls—and traveling. Mrs. Jamison planned to build her organization along the lines of the state civil division. Tennessee has nine congressional districts. She would try to find nine district chairmen—women who had both the time and the wish to help and who were experienced enough to know how to delegate the detailed work. Then with their help she would enlist ninety-five county chairmen, one for each of Tennessee's counties. The county chairmen would in turn appoint precinct chairmen, and the precinct chairmen would find the workers. Mrs. Jamison's watchword was the old saying, "Five workers can carry a precinct."

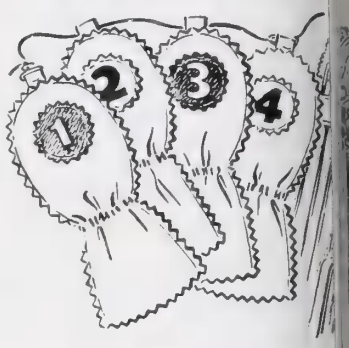
The hardest part of her job, finding district chairmen, came first. So began the long bus trips, the hundreds of calls—and the endless, wonderful talk. Edna Jamison, so interested herself in everything to do with homemaking and with children, had no trouble at all in getting acquainted. She collected ideas for her own home, her personal wardrobe, her other "causes," wherever she went. Into each discussion she slipped a gentle leading question or two, and local feuds, local political pitfalls would be described to her in breathless detail.

She found her district chairmen, though she rarely asked a woman to take a chairmanship on first meeting. Often she didn't try seriously to sort impressions until she was on the bus homeward bound. Then she found that the people she'd met, the local situations she'd heard described, all began to sort themselves out, and from the welter chairmen's names came clear.

Those spring and summer trips brought the map of Tennessee to life for her. Places called Goose Pimple Hollow and Piney Flats and Hickory Tree. Wild roses climbing over split-rail fences, hills crowned with trees, the fast rushing water and the green-gray haze of the Smoky Mountains. Red dirt fields, fields curving with the steep hillsides, fields in rich bottom land. Weather-beaten houses with shaky-looking porches, wide pass-throughs—and electric lights bright at night. New brick houses, gleaming white fences, herds of registered cattle. Old towns, with their tree-shaded courthouse squares, some almost within shouting distance of the great cities.

Even more important, her lists came alive. "People stimulate me," Mrs. Jamison said. "I just love to be with them! This was the most exhilarating thing I have ever done. When I went to bed I could hardly wait for morning to come!"

When she had to be away from home several nights, she called King every day. And when the bus brought her home in late afternoon, she often began cooking dinner before she had her hat off. "I haven't had a decent cup of coffee since you left," King would say mildly.



In between taking care of King and Frankie, organizing the Women's Division for Kefauver and filling outside engagements, she made herself two faille coats, two suits, five summer dresses, and put up a crate of strawberries!

The trips—after the campaign had officially opened—were kaleidoscopic. To her great relief King (with two cameras) could go with her for the longest trips. She could talk everything out to him, and they were building scenes they could remember later together: people sitting in trees at a courthouse rally, the hot hot sun, weather-worn skins, much-bent old hats, a tiny wrinkled old face, and nearby, a little boy taking off his shirt; Senator Kefauver's father telling them, "I've got to see that t all right today."

Perhaps the thing that pleased M most about the whole campaig Senator Kefauver and his leaders on the defensive about his policies.
support of international co-operat of a "war in every generation."

"When you go on the defensive talk too much doing it—and that Mrs. Jamison admits. "But we some of the issues his opponents the worst in Kefauver's record—h foreign policy, the UN, NATO.
said candidates could be the best

"Make It Yoursel
CHRISTMAS GIF

FOR YOUR FAVORITE GOLFER vidual, distinctive golf club mitts colored felt will delight the recipi

FOR HOLIDAY ENTERTAINING mats pinked to a finish and so make. For Christmas appliques, your Wiss pattern, or give your i tion a fling.

SEND 25¢ to Wiss, Dept. K11 f tern No. 121 including all items

Make these and lots more

WISS
PINKING SHEA

The quality shears. Easy to countless fabrics, single or sever ers. Give a quick, clean finish ravel-resistant and decorative. C the Wiss pinkers best for your In 3 sizes: 5½" to 9", $4.25 to At notions departments, better ware and cutlery stores.

OTHER WISS PATTERNS availabl shown here. No. 101 (15¢) includes qued belt, patio apron and child's shaped cushion. No. 103 (15¢)—je case, vest and gypsy scarf.

J. WISS & SONS CO., Newark
Manufacturers of Shears, Scissors, Pinking Metal Cutting Snips and Garden Shea

n't time, the people in their ho l do it."
nis herself took to the air on lev on. She and Senator Kefauver ies f television films discussing th big issues in which women ich stake—how to work toward hy to combat juvenile delin-ete ns', schoolteachers', labor-fit d farmers' problems—all of st wives.
ms found she was learning much pai ing and about persuasion, as ver by. Personal letters make less a t grams, even though the telebe rief. Telegrams are less effeclo g-distance call. And long-disa twice as effective when you it le once, the person you're callen of you can fit features and a pp sion to the voice at the other ine Most effective of all, of course:
al it. The closer the contact, the an thought for the other person te- he better the results.
M Kefauver and Mrs. Jamison ty it the state" in what turned out no hectic weeks of the campaign.
vde into fourteen short days not von n workers' luncheons and re-pit veral campaign rallies, televira es, a large picnic, several teas, ne le newspaper interviews. At oc ionally slept. They crisscrossed for across the breadth of Tennesrea did begin to feel like a road
" Ms. Jamison laughs, "just barely e t stop."
ir o-week tour Nancy Kefauver of nor at the luncheons and meet-E a Jamison was the principal
'l e all the rest of it, but I simply e s eches!" Nancy had said weeks uld e a shame to waste you on ay," Edna assured her. "Not on me by speeches. If you'll just meet d t about the children."

I c do that in my sleep!" Nancy so e "road show" was born.
K uver did make informal talks su mer's campaign and its effect on . e Kefauvers do not bring their er ally into campaigns, but a day er e family first moved from Wash-T nessee, the first of July, all the ve with Nancy to meet the senator w re they had a full day helping in Da l, nine, spent his time near the ke and sound equipment. Diane, Ele or, thirteen, talked with people ed ut campaign leaflets. But Gail, sy nning Kefauver buttons on all to the show. She came up with a fa to tell her mother there was a di 't want a button! Mrs. Kefauver xp n that the buttons were only for he anted to wear them—that not y uld want to have one. "I pinned co ail when he was walking away,"
" should have one of daddy's but-

R. nd Kitty came to Jackson for a th Jamisons the weekend before the ri ary. Sunday the family had a reether that was more like the old H g,Sr., and Frankie had known in he were sitting on the front porch in o he evening when someone sugat Irs. Jamison shouldn't stop short c paign was over. The whole fam-d hat she must taper off, or risk
h k." After only a little thought, d her first project should be to can peaches. The Elbertas were just pr e market. Big King and Frankie e he nose-tickling scent of pickling
T y were dreaming, too, they said, m e peach preserves—to be eaten on n e by Mrs. Jamison's own hand.
ig of August fourth, the primary e had something of the excitement c cy of Christmas Eve—except that n on had nothing left to do!
d King got home from work a little c and Edna went with him to the r rby where they cast their votes.

Then the Jamison family drove off to cover the hundred and forty miles to Nashville.

All along the way they saw people gathered around the polls. Tennesseans were out in force, marking their ballots on tables set up under the trees in rural schoolyards, set up in towns on center squares or courthouse porches.

"Government is just a matter of good housekeeping," Mrs. Jamison told King. "A lot of those people are voting because someone saw to it that they were registered, and someone else got them to the polls. You have to get out the vote and talk about issues just as regularly as you have to get dinner or wash the dishes!"

When they reached Nashville on election night the air was already thick with congratulations. After Mrs. Jamison heard herself called "Kefauver's secret weapon" and returned with the senator's party to his headquarters, she moved in a happy daze.

"It's been a wonderful experience—it really has!" she told Martha Ragland. "It's been fun. And I've gained three pounds! King says it's time I quit all this foolishness and got to work!"

She'd been twice on television in the same evening—and she was still wearing the summer cotton she'd put on to travel in. Mrs. Jamison mourned a little for the navy silk Shantung with the flattering neckline—still folded away in her suitcase. She would wear it Monday night, she decided, when she had a date with King to go to the movies.

Midnight: Kefauver, 214,598
Sutton, 94,982

"I'm getting sleepy where my eyes are," Mrs. Jamison said. "I just can't hold them open any more."

12:10 A.M. Kefauver, 245,637
Sutton, 113,915

The next day Mrs. Jamison went home to can the peaches. END

"Look mother! an Adjustable Ironing Table just like yours!"

NEW

MET·L·TOP®

twins

First meet the big member of this delightful mother-daughter combination ! It's the new adjustable MET-L-TOP "Flex-Hite" Ironing Table—so handsome with its chartreuse double-steel top and sparkling chrome-plated tip-proof legs. Be she tall or small, mother will always enjoy effortless ironing at the height that's just right—thanks to eleven height adjustments, instantly set at the flick of a finger ! Sells regularly for $12.95 and the perfect Christmas gift

"LITTLE MISS MET-L-TOP"

More fun than a picnic for daughter ! Her own LITTLE MISS MET-L-TOP toy ironing table ! It's just like mother's. Same beautiful colors . . . a perforated steel top . . . and, of course, it's adjustable, too ! Comes complete with its own pad and cover set. Sells regularly, with pad and cover, for $4.95

FOR A LIMITED TIME ONLY

both for...

A $17.90 VALUE! $15.90

you save $2.00

at better stores everywhere!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — Replacement or Refund of Money if Not as Advertised Therein

Cream City MET·L·TOP

THE Original ALL-METAL IRONING TABLE

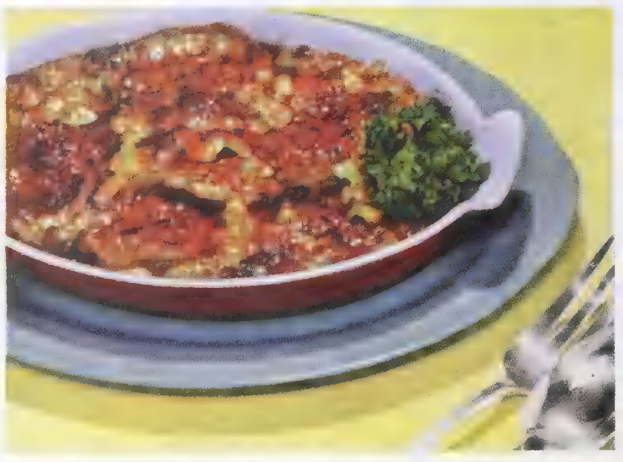
GEUDER, PAESCHKE & FREY CO. • MILWAUKEE 1, WISCONSIN

Shelf Magic



Lima Bean-Sour Cream Casserole

Soak a pound of dried tiny Lima beans overnight in cold water. In the morning drain, cover with fresh water, and simmer till tender, about 1 hour. (Make sure they are tender, but nowhere near the mushy stage.) Drain, rinse in hot water, turn out into a 1½-quart casserole. Mix together ¾ cup brown sugar, 2 teaspoons flour, 1 tablespoon dried mustard, 1 tablespoon salt, 1 tablespoon molasses and 1 cup thick commercial sour cream. Add to beans and mix all together very tenderly. Bake in 350° F. oven for 1 hour. This casserole is good when served with a baked ham or a turkey. Add a green salad, and you have a delicious, easy buffet menu. Serves 8.

Grace A. Bernard

NEW YORK CITY

Veal-Scaloppine Casserole

Chop 4 large onions and sauté in a skillet, using 3 tablespoons butter or margarine. Remove onions to a 1½-quart casserole. Have 2 pounds veal sliced thin for scaloppine. Mix ⅓ cup flour with 2 teaspoons salt and ¾ teaspoon pepper. Dust slices of veal lightly in seasoned flour and brown in a skillet, using ⅓–½ cup butter or margarine, adding as needed. When browned, place veal in casserole. Drain any excess fat in skillet. Add 2 cloves garlic, crushed, a pinch of rosemary and 1 can condensed consommé. Loosen brown bits in skillet and pour over veal. Cover and bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., 45 minutes until veal is tender. Serves 8.

Wally McDoo

NEW YORK CITY

Quick Vi

Simmer 2 large onions, chopped (small clove garlic, crushed, in 1 qua chicken stock, canned or homemade, Strain, and add 1 package frozen ma to stock. Heat, stirring until smooth. minutes. Chill in refrigerator overnig Just before serving, stir in 1 pint co Top each serving of soup with chop would be hard to imagine an easier v Vichyssoise than this, and it tastes Serves 6 to 8.

Earl

EXETER, N

Chicken Bola Gai

Defrost 2 packages frozen cut-up frying chicken. Mix together ½ cup flour, 1 teaspoon salt, ½ teaspoon celery salt, ¼ teaspoon garlic salt and ¼ teaspoon nutmeg. Dust the chicken pieces with flour mixture and brown well in 4 tablespoons butter or margarine. Combine sirup from 1 No. 2 can pineapple slices (about 1 cup), ½ cup soy sauce and 2 tablespoons sugar. Place pieces of chicken in shallow casserole or baking dish, and pour pineapple-soy sauce over them. Cover casserole and bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., for about an hour, or until chicken is tender. Baste chicken with juices in casserole two or three times while baking. Serve with sautéed pineapple slices. Serves 8.

Gertrude Gum.

NEW YORK CITY

Shepherd's Salad

Drain one 1-pound can small whole potatoes. Cut into bite-size pieces and mix with 1 No. 2 can small whole beets, drained, and one 8-ounce can peas, drained. Add 4 or 5 scallions, sliced, and 1 cucumber, peeled and chopped. Add 1 tablespoon vinegar to 2 tablespoons basic French dressing to give a sharper taste and pour over vegetables. Chill in refrigerator an hour or longer, if possible. Serve in bed of lettuce with mayonnaise. Serves 8.

Claude Dey

PARIS, FRANCE

Ice Cream-Gi

Spread 1 quart vanilla ice cream smooth of 9″ pie plate. Sprinkle with 3 table chopped crystallized ginger. Chill in f partment until firm. Top with another p ice cream, spread smoothly like a "to return to freezing compartment. When from freezing compartment and plac frozen sliced strawberries, defrosted, a top. Makes 8 servings.

Valletta J

SOUTHVILLE, MA

hir party sleight of hand with you—th dash of imagination.

sy entertaining

Baked Apple Tart

sts off 6 slices white bread. Brush 1 side of h e thoroughly with 3 tablespoons melted but- or margarine and place them, buttered side wn a 1-quart casserole to form a crust that er ottom and sides entirely; use little pieces if ess y to fill in. Mix together 1 No. 2 can sliced ple teaspoon cinnamon and ¼ teaspoon nut- g. l the bread-lined casserole with apples and pac ge frozen sliced peaches, defrosted and in Dot top with 1 tablespoon butter or mar- in nd sprinkle with 2 tablespoons brown sugar. e a moderate oven, 350° F., for 30 minutes. ve th whipped cream. Serves 6.

Eileen Branca

ROME, ITALY

STUART

Creamed-Oyster Casserole

Sauté till tender in a skillet ⅔ cup finely chopped onion in ½ cup butter or margarine. Then add 4 dozen raw oysters, drained, or 2 packages frozen oysters, thawed and drained; cook them just until their edges begin to curl. Add to the skillet 2 cans condensed cream-of-chicken soup, one 6-ounce can sliced mushrooms, 1½ cups grated Parmesan cheese, and ¼ teaspoon black pepper. Turn into casserole to keep warm till serving time. Serve with wild rice or plain white rice, and a salad, for a party main dish. Serves 8.

Harry J. Crawford

EDGEWATER PARK, NEW JERSEY

Bacon-and-Cheese Puff

ok cup elbow macaroni in boiling salted water til t der. Drain. Combine 4 beaten egg yolks, 2 s s t bread crumbs, 8 strips bacon, cooked and ml d, 2 cups warm milk, 1 teaspoon grated ion ½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce and ½ spo salt. Add cooked macaroni and 2 cups ate harp Cheddar cheese. Fold in 4 stiffly beaten g w es. Pour into a 2-quart casserole and bake a p of hot water for 1 hour in a moderate oven, Serves 8. This is a great favorite for a nd supper party.

Lu Bradford

SHARON, MASSACHUSETTS

Scalloped Cheese Tomatoes

Place in a shallow baking dish in alternating layers ½ cup packaged herb bread stuffing, 1 No. 2½ can tomatoes, 1½ tablespoons butter or margarine, ½ teaspoon garlic salt, ¾ cup grated Cheddar cheese, ¼ teaspoon orégano; 1 cup thinly sliced onion, and 2 teaspoons sugar. Bake for ½ hour in a moderate oven, 350° F. Perfect to serve on a winter's night with a roast of lamb or beef, roast potatoes and green salad. Serves 8.

Bernard Weisbaum

PORTSMOUTH, NEW HAMPSHIRE

TIPS on hors d'oeuvres

1. Here's a day-before-the-party trick with mushrooms: Simmer in a saucepan, for 5 minutes, ⅔ cup vinegar, ¼ cup water, 3 cloves garlic, chopped, and a good healthy dash of Tabasco. Drain 2 cans whole mushroom crowns, and pour the hot liquid over them. Cool, and leave in refrigerator overnight. To serve, drain, and spear with toothpicks.

2. At your next party, try whole canned water chestnuts, wrapped in bacon, secured with toothpicks and broiled. Or, speaking of bacon, roll large cocktail onions (about ½" in diameter is right) in brown sugar, wrap them in bacon, toothpick, and broil till bacon is done.

3. For this, you'll need a package of cream cheese which has been allowed to stand at room temperature till soft. Mash into it with a fork 2 tablespoons horseradish, a dash of onion powder, and enough cream to make it creamy. Open a jar of dried beef, and spread slices about 2" wide with the cream-cheese mixture. Roll each slice, and chill before serving.

4. You probably know about hollowing out the bready part of small French rolls, filling them, and slicing into rounds—but have you ever tried making a filling with 1 can tuna, 3 tablespoons mayonnaise, 3 tablespoons chopped pickle relish and 2 tablespoons chopped onion? Chill rolls till icy cold before slicing.

5. Here comes bacon again—and toothpicks. Spread slices of bacon with peanut butter, roll up, fasten into little bundles with toothpicks, and broil.

6. These next two are the easiest ever. Take a can of small meat balls in gravy, pour off gravy into a saucepan, add 3 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce, a few grains cayenne, 1 tablespoon mustard, pinch of orégano. Cut each meat ball in half, and serve meat balls and gravy together piping hot in a chafing dish, with plenty of toothpick spears.

7. Crumble sharp Cheddar cheese, mix with enough mayonnaise to bind cheese crumbles together, spread on crackers, and broil till it bubbles.

8. The next time you want to serve shrimp, boil them in water to which you have added a generous tablespoon or two of curry powder. The curried water gives a wonderful tang to the shrimp. Chill and serve with mayonnaise, spiked with a little mustard.

9. Chopped almond rounds: Open a can of toasted salted almonds, and chop very fine. Blend in 1 package cream cheese, 2 tablespoons chutney, and a little cream to make it spread easily. Serve cold on rounds of Melba toast.

Want lovelier hair with easier care?

JUST SET AT HOME . . . with new JO•CUR

JO•CUR's wonderful new formula gives hair that exciting professionally set look . . . in a few minutes at home! So easy to use —just dip the comb. So effective on the most stubborn curls. Keeps every wave in place, smoothly. Dries fast, won't flake, non-sticky. New JO•CUR, in green or "clear". At most cosmetic counters . . . only 15c plus tax.

"Short Cut", interpreted by Mr. René of Paschkes Hairdressers, New York. JO•CUR will preserve the beauty of your hair style.

MAKES YOUR WAVE BEHAVE
Your coif forgets its wayward ways, becomes smooth, responsive, with new JO•CUR Wave Set.

LONGER LASTING LOVELINESS
It's dollars and sense to safeguard your precious hair-do for pennies . . . with thrifty JO•CUR Wave Set.

FALL PROFITS! You can enjoy Fall and Christmas profits this year by joining our staff of independent representatives. Send a postal to the address below, and you will receive complete details about our offer. No obligation.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 713 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania

FISHER-PRICE'S TOY HEN

Another safe, wood Pull Toy!

"With a 'cluck, cluck' here and a 'cluck, cluck' there" . . . everywhere "KATY KACKLER" goes there's FUN at play for children 1-5. They love her amazingly real "cluck, cluck, SQUA-AWK" sound, flapping wings and bright colors. Stimulates interest in farm life and teaches farm sounds. $2.50 East, $2.69 South and West. AT ALL TOY COUNTERS or direct. Send for folder #48 of 23 push-pull toys for healthful, active play.

COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE

FISHER-PRICE TOYS, INC., East Aurora, Erie County, N. Y.

Present Perfect!

Gift her with the fitting flattery of Edythe Fashions. There's nothing she'd welcome more than our practical knitted suit or versatile twin sweater set.

Two Piece Knitted Suit of pure 100% zephyr wool with white angora trim. Self-shortening skirt changes its length at the pull of a thread. Navy, Red, French Blue, Turquoise, Mauve Pink. Sizes 7-17, 8-18. $16.95

Orlon Twin Sweater Set,(3 button cardigan) 100% Dupont yarn, with contrasting trim. Peacock, Blue or Cherry Red with black and white trim. Black with peacock and white trim. Sizes 34-40. $8.95

Send for FREE fashion catalog.
EDYTHE Fashions
5 Tunglewood Lane, Freeport, New York

2 weeks delivery.
Money refunded within 10 days

Please send me:	Size	Color	2nd Color
Knit Suit @ $16.95
Sweater Set @ $8.95

Check ____ Money Order ____ C.O.D.____
$1.00 deposit required on C.O.D. purchases.

Name.....
Address.....
City.....Zone.....State.....

THINKING MAKES IT SO

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 63

they looked at us like seniors look at freshmen. Every one of them was elderly. "But maybe the officers are nice," Mamma said dismally. She began tapping her foot and giving us last-minute instructions. She would write us to the Canal. If nothing unforeseen happened she would be waiting for us at the Ritz in Paris. I was to study my French each day just as if I were at school. She began fishing for her gloves. "It is a sweet ship. And it's new . . . though the passengers aren't." Mamma laughed. Though she thought the ship was sweet and our stateroom bigger than a stateroom on the Queen, Mamma was anxious to get out of it.

At the top of the gangway Mamma kissed us good-by for the tenth time. "In a way I envy you," she said, making a lie. "There's a time for fishing, you know, and a time for mending the nets. I could use twenty-four days at sea to mend my nets." Mamma always gets philosophical like that when she's about to bring things to an end.

We were glad when she went down the gangplank, picking her way as if her ankles were made of glass. On the dock she threw us kisses again. She removed her dark glasses and let them all recognize her, crew and everyone who happened to be hanging on the rail. She caused a lot of excitement as she stood there, hatless in her mink coat, her blond hair loose and blowing.

Cindy and I took another look at the ship. We ended in the writing room where a couple of passengers, obviously two of those who'd been on the ship since Vancouver, were writing letters. One of them was a woman about forty with a bad dye job on her hair. She was smoking through a ridiculous, long black cigarette holder and writing with a loud scratchy pen. We had no letters to write so we went back to the top deck and sat down on a bench to watch the sailors throw ropes around.

I knew Cindy was thinking twenty-four days to Antwerp was a long, long time. She was looking rocklike in her profile, staring out at the warehouses and picking at her glove (which is always a sign she's not feeling happy). I didn't think she was picking at her glove because she was sorry about leaving any of her men friends. One of them was a vegetarian and though he played wonderful tennis I knew she couldn't be in love with him because Cindy likes to eat. Another was a doctor, very handsome, but he worked day and night and if they had a date, like as not, she'd spend the evening sitting alone in his car while he made calls . . . waiting, waiting, which Mamma says is the worst thing in the world for a woman's self-respect. Maybe, I thought, Cindy was picking at her glove because she all of a sudden realized she didn't have anybody she was sorry to be leaving.

"I dare say we may as well go and unpack," she said at last.

In our room she rang for a steward to give him clothes to press. But the steward said there wasn't anyone to do pressing on board, each passenger must do his own. He offered to show us the little room all equipped for that. "Later," Cindy said, trying to smile and giving him a big tip. Mamma says Cindy always overtips. "They only despise you and consider you have inferiority feelings when you overtip," Mamma says.

WHEN at last the ship began to inch away from the dock, we went upstairs and sort of watched ourselves going out the Golden Gate. With night coming on and the ocean in front of us, our ship seemed terribly small. But cocky and stouthearted.

At dinner we learned that the woman with the long cigarette holder was English—a Mrs. Blake. She sat at the captain's table along with two married couples. But the captain himself didn't come down to dinner that first night. We saw him later in the passageway, very busy and very blond with a lovely Norwegian accent. He looked extremely displeased with all of us.

When we woke up the next morning we were stopped again. In the harbor of Los Angeles. More passengers came aboard. More elderly couples. Except for this one figur flannel that skipped up the gangp must be, we thought, one of the N Line executives, come aboard fo minute inspection before sailing time

"He's got a body like Eglevsky said, Eglevsky being one of the wor est dancers. And though Eglevsk wears tights and this person was loose flannels, Cindy with her sculpto undress anybody just by watching th

Lunch was served the minute away from the dock. Entering the din we saw him again, the one in gra seated all alone at a table. It was a prise to realize that there was this person aboard, even though he di as if he intended to be friendly table was a bottle of fancy beer, cov silver foil. He drank it without looki body, which was quite a feat becaus ing room was small and you couldn from your plate without staring at s

AT the captain's table Mrs. Blake w ing the new passenger too. She was in a lilting new voice today, as if sl him to hear everything she had to how glamorous her life had been Kong and Singapore. Mrs. Blake w those women about whom people sa a beauty she must have been at one ti

During lunch the chief steward ca table and asked if we'd like to be sea first officer's table. The first officer d the Viking look of the captain. He little chin. Cindy refused, saying we to have a table to ourselves for the re I was learning French and we intende tice it at mealtimes.

"Bon jour," the chief steward sa then leaned over the table and iden gray flannel suit. He was the famous Mark Rountree. The chief stewar some of the titles of the books he' The chief steward considered Mark as good as Somerset Maugham. If r He was very literary, the chief ste stayed so long at our table discussi with Cindy that our lunch was ruin

Mr. Rountree, the author, didn't li his lunch. He finished his beer and d for dessert. The ship was beginnin now, and as he rose and walke swayed gracefully.

"He walks like Eglevsky, too," C watching him with her professional eye.

By noon the next day the passen had all looked alike to us were beg have personalities. We recognized plaid coat was Mr. Grace, English woman in the blue sweater was Mr Swiss; the really old man who pla taire in the bar, Norwegian, and so Rountree had had his deck chair put the lowest deck where he was as clo sible to the water. And he didn't car or anything with him, just a packag rettes and himself, as if that was enou

When tea was brought out on afternoon Cindy and Mrs. Blake, wh playing shuffleboard together, sat an about what they were going to put o ner. "Tonight I think I'll put on a lon Mrs. Blake said. Cindy had brou short ones, she said. She hadn't tho was a long-frock type of ship. She ha black point d'esprit, though. Did M think that would be suitable? "Qui Blake said.

When we went to the bar where gathered before dinner Mrs. Blake ready there, quite naked in her long f cause she was sitting at a table wit Cindy and I went to sit at the tiny Rountree was there straddling a stoo against the wall, very graceful and v at home. Jammed right up aga Rountree like that, to whom we ha introduced, it was very hard for Cindy make a conversation. We began to tal and ends, pretending we weren't a he was listening. I saw Mrs. Blake n n her table, so I pulled at Cindy's it. "Mrs. Blake is waving at us, id.

poke up, thank goodness. Just as vn us forever. "Cindy—that's an le repeated her name as if he were his tongue.
r Cinderella," Cindy said. "It's rrassed me."

bit like Cinderella."
d to know just why Cindy didn't self the Cinderella type.
for one thing. They're not what nail." She reached out the foot on rove it. He looked down under his was resting on the bar to examine ough. And well shaped. If you like ally I don't." Now he was looking brazenly. His eyes, I noticed, were and sharp as ice picks. They were her left hand, which was hanging

r. You just knew he was looking g ring.
ere jealous of Cinderella," Cindy dy's ever been jealous of me."
ry unfeminine of you to admit it."
la had a couple of ugly sisters. My ly." She went on to tell him who
s. He listened and when it was his y, he didn't say anything about all. He said:
to me that d yourself
duckling.
absurd on it." He was er face now.
a raw deal
g yourself.
fine eyes.
us hair."
Cindy gasped, reaching up to
ir. "Well, there's lots of it."
e got to take you in hand. Teach ings about yourself. I noticed you day. You were sitting dumpily."
e running over the point d'esprit.
dumpy, you know. You're just nough of yourself. A figure like rd's, for instance, is above all an a holding up of the rib cage that's g to do with how you think about 've got to change your opinion of ee that. And there's only twenty do it in."
nning to feel de trop and was very came time to break it up and go er.
day at lunchtime all the ship's ared in whites and the crew set up imming pool on Mr. Rountree's It wasn't very big and slopped all rolling of the ship. Mr. Rountree steward to put our deck chairs his own. With the three of us in uits, basking all day in the sun, e's deck was like a little beach.
blue day it was like that, all of us t on the tilting deck on a white uth, and nothing to do but watch hich looked like forty million little erchiefs all waving good-by, good-
. It was easy to fall asleep and fall asleep again. Sometimes the would be talking, their voices als, hers, his again, like the lulla-d fall of the sea. I'd awake to hear her:
to me you speak rather overmuch
er. You'd better watch it." Or: serious sculptor? Or do you just art because your private life is ay I'll never be more than an

! You're doing it again—selling
t."
nd sometimes I just pretended to.
t sort of de trop.
ause your sister has more money
e?"
ways had enough money. Grand-bless him, owned acres of grazing rned into oil leases. So nothing's because of lack of money."

"I can't understand why you've never married."

"I've had no offers," Cindy said. "None that were acceptable."

At that, he sat up and looked at her. Really shocked he was. "No woman should ever admit a thing like that," he scolded her. "Never say a thing like that again."

The tutoring went on. His advice poured out. He told her so many times her hair was gorgeous, it actually began to be. All the hours in the sun and the salt water had bleached it in streaks, which was very becoming. Or maybe it was the time she now spent brushing her hair before going to bed. He called it her striped hair. She'd changed in other ways too.

THE captain must have noticed all this. For he became quite a bother. Each evening he rotated his invitations to coffee among the passengers. But we were on his list every night. By now everyone was aware that the captain had a longing for Cindy. He began to appear in the bar in the late evening. Mrs. Blake, who was a bridge fiend, played cards regularly with the captain and other officers every night. She was annoyed at the captain's attentions to Cindy because it interrupted the bridge game. Mrs. Blake was wearing a long frock every night now. And almost every night a different one.

Because Cindy had brought so few dinner dresses with her, she had to repeat hers again and again. And this meant a lot of pressing. Most of the women darted into and out of the pressing room on B Deck as if they were ashamed to be caught there. Cindy wasn't embarrassed by it at all. And she pressed so well and so openly Mrs. Blake must have thought she enjoyed it, because she brought two of her dresses to Cindy to press. "You do it so sublimely," she said.

I was sitting on a stool in the pressing room one afternoon watching Cindy manipulate a sleeve on the ironing board when Mr. Rountree came to look for us. He stood watching, too, for a minute. Then all of a sudden he said, "I've never seen you wearing that green thing."

"Oh, it isn't mine, it's Mrs. Blake's." She was bent over the ironing board so she couldn't see the expression on his face. But I saw it and wished I weren't there.

He watched for another minute, then he said, "I hate victims!" His words were like bullets. Cindy's face went sallow. She stood there, holding up the iron. I think he was waiting for her to throw it at him, hoping she would throw it at him. But she didn't. "It's all very sweet and humble of you," he went on, "but it's not in my curriculum for you." He marched over and snatched the electric cord out of the plug. "Now you're going to do something much more difficult than press Mrs. Blake's frocks. You're going upstairs to face her and tell her she's able to press her own."

We walked as far as the door of the writing room with her. Mrs. Blake was playing two-handed canasta with Mr. Grace. Cindy went up to the table and hesitated. You could see it was costing her a terrible effort.

All afternoon they sat in their chairs on the lower deck, not speaking a word. Finally when it was time to go in and dress for dinner, he said, "Will you and Mona have coffee with me tonight? Or has the captain thought of it first?"

"The captain," Cindy said.

Not only the captain and Mr. Rountree were after Cindy now. The first officer, too, the one with very little chin, who collected opera records, kept inviting us to his room for concerts.

On the tenth day, on a hot steamy morning, we arrived as per schedule at the Panama Canal. Before our ship started through, the mail came aboard. We spent the whole day going through the locks and reading and rereading letters from home. Mamma wrote that she had been granted the divorce with no trouble at all and would be in Paris at the Ritz long before we were. On the Atlantic side of the Canal, in Colón, we mailed our own letters which gave Mamma a blow-by-blow account of everything that had happened to us. What

PLAY IT SAFE!
STOP ARTHRITIS
Support—
THE ARTHRITIS AND RHEUMATISM FOUNDATION

having trouble with your nylons ? ? ?

had happened to us was mostly Mr. Rountree, of course, in whom Mamma was bound to be interested because writers are such an important issue in her profession.

We had dinner with him in Colón. But we were glad to get back on our ship where our own lives were. We had fourteen days left now. "Only fourteen," Cindy said that night as we left Colón. You didn't have to be very smart to realize she wished it was forty.

"I'm putting you in a story," Mark told her one day. (I was calling him Mark now, at his request.) After lunch every afternoon he typed on his story in his stateroom. Each day Cindy would ask how the story was going.

"Fine. She's met a man."

"Is he nice?"

"Men, my dear Cindy, are never nice."

"You're quite nice, I think."

"That's because I'm not putting the works on you." To me that sounded like a very bruising remark. I waited for Cindy to make some snappy reply. But she didn't. It didn't seem to hurt her.

We were headed north now. Each day grew colder. The captain seemed to grow sad. Because he was facing home, I guess. He showed Cindy a picture of his wife. He said she was a lovely woman but she thought Norway was the universe. He hinted he might make a flying trip to Paris while we were there. And he persisted in his nightly invitations. The second officer, too, insisted that Cindy be his partner at canasta, though she didn't play nearly so well as Mrs. Blake.

"My method is working beautifully," Mark said. "They're all after you."

"It's only because there's no other young woman on the ship."

"Tut!" He went on tutoring her, saying "Tut" when she said things against herself. "You're going to be a new personality when you go down the gangplank at Antwerp."

In the evenings after dinner if she was clever enough to evade a canasta game and the captain, she and Mark would wal round and round and round. Cind ing differently now, with her rib Mark advised.

We were nosing into a rough afternoons grew sad. The suns Mrs. Blake had begun to take cogn ale before her meals, which was against mal de mer.

"Aren't we going to see Mark asked Cindy one night when she work, brushing her hair before gett She said she didn't know. She know, I discovered, what hotel h to in Paris. It was hard to belie could be that slow. Mamma wou the captain marry them by now. be walking differently and thinki was pretty gorgeous, but she had much in some ways. I really beg about her because there was onl day and one more night before w Antwerp.

Our last night out everybody wa luggage. The bar was deserted. didn't put on a long frock. After d invited us to stroll with him. Cin because the captain, with Antwe the morning, was full of busines they wanted to be alone, I said I to play canasta with the chief st Cindy knew that was a lie becau steward was as busy as the captai forced to tag along.

"I'll miss you and Mona," Mark grown fond of you both."

"We've grown fond of you, too, Mona?"

It made me nervous, that delay conversation.

"You've changed," he told he really boring in.

"I feel just the same."

"You're a big liar. How could y same? For one thing, you've got hair."

"I feel the same." On and on. It you. But it wasn't boring them. have gone on forever saying these n

LATER that night I asked her hadn't said where he was staying i said no. But she was smiling. So s have been worried. I decided if she out in the morning. I would myself.

We were up early. You hardly anybody because they were now clothes. Mrs. Blake looked very st seted in a brown suit. In the salon fast everyone was writing down ad we really meant to see one another Blake wrote down her London ad you won't find me there unless quickly because I'll be off on anoth an escapist, you see. And not ashamed of it. There's nothing escape if you can manage it." smiling, but it sounded very bleak rested hungrily on Cindy, who was ing looking very lucky.

We were docked now and the i men came aboard and set up shop i Then Mark came in. He looked fre ried about bags or passport or lugg or cameras. He was one of those ra who always manage to have both He announced he was going on the us to Paris. We'd go from Antwerp for lunch and take the train from t was right, I thought, not to be w turned then, the three of us, to go deck. And then we saw the mink c dark glasses and the blond ha Mamma standing on the dock, wavi

Mamma had a car and a driver a her own. She already had our tick plane to Paris. And we had to hur ways have to hurry with Mam Cindy went through customs Ma charge of Mark. She invited him with us to Brussels, where we we our plane.

In the car on the way to Brusse didn't wait for him to give her his dress. She asked for it. We disco Mamma knew one of his books ve deed, the one called Leila. She'd ha mind for over a year, she said, as a

NOW THE FINEST RICE COOKS FAST AS ANY!

Costs less—gives you up to 3 times as much rice per package

Cooking claims make interesting reading. For instance, claims about cooking rice. You may have thought that you must use an expensive, treated rice for fast cooking. This isn't true.

River Brand and Carolina Brand rice not only cook to fluffy, snow-white perfection in 14 minutes—they give you the rich, natural flavor of white rice.

Money-wise they're a joy, too. You get up to 3 times the amount of rice per package and as many as 3 times the servings. Yes, the best costs less!

If you want the natural goodness, flavor and succulent nourishment of rice as nature intended, you want River Brand or Carolina Brand Rice. They're Naturally Better!

14 MINUTES FROM START TO FINISH!
Amazing new 14-minute recipe on every package

RIVER BRAND the popular low-cost regular grain rice.

CAROLINA BRAND the King Size extra long grain rice.

Carolina and River Brand Rice HELPS FOR WISE WIVES

Having consomme for dinner? Let rice simmer in consomme until cooked. Makes consomme richer, thicker and better tasting, too.

Want a quick rice pudding? Boil rice according to directions. Fold fluffy grains into vanilla flavored whipped cream. Top with shredded orange skin. Be ready for seconds.

Ready for super-tasting regular rice? Use the 14 minute cooking method on the River Brand or Carolina Brand Rice packages. Substitute bouillon for water. It's wonderful!

RIVER BRAND RICE MILLS, INC.
New York, N. Y.
Houston, Texas · Memphis, Tenn.
El Campo, Texas · Eunice, La. · Jonesboro, Ark.

©1954-RIVER BRAND RICE MILLS, INC.

ld she talk with him about the her tonight? Mamma put it all on a basis. He said yes, he'd be at the
t. Cindy hadn't said a word. Her ough, seemed to have gone back to on. She sat in the corner of the big ousine Mamma had hired, picking . It takes only an hour to go from Brussels, but Mamma had ac-all that.

nma had been in Paris almost two was rested and settled and accli-Cindy and I hadn't a chance to we were when dozens of people ping in our suite at the Ritz.
n was Nora Ritter, the columnist.
ma let it be known that she ex-k Rountree, the novelist, for din-Ritter began pumping her about d she known him; was he her big being in Paris, and finally, she ma point-blank if it was a thing
m. At this Mamma only laughed ear Nora, no comment."

thers was a Frenchman, Comte ething whom Mamma called mon
Mark arrived I was surprised to
s. Ritter and Comte Max hung on ord. Mamma was duly impressed.
proud of him. The comte person yone presto his a Troyes in
; to spend
. There was a church in said, built of Char-

"Mamma
y, "Char-
As if cared. I noticing Mamma
orked on hen it was to dinner pered to hat we ng along.

n such a
y for me, d if I was the hotel,
ould remain with me. Mamma only slightly.

'd cleared out Cindy and I had e rooms. All during dinner she ng how glad she was that we were
. But her face was flushed. And it the wine she'd ordered with din-because she'd scarcely touched a ew she was having a real crise des French say. When I went to her good night to her I found her sit-he dressing table brushing, but at f she were about to do sums. Her her hands. She wasn't crying. It o grim for that. She was just sitating herself in silence. And there an outside to soothe her either, is traffic which has a very hard-less sound.

morning Cindy said she wasn't gos either. "But how about your Mr.
He'll expect you to be along with ?" Mamma asked. Then feeling
n't it a sort of thing between him

't."

ing for Rome Saturday," Mamma
. "They're making a picture of his ne." Mamma had found out more dinner than Cindy had in three im at sea. "It would be rather fun cture in Rome. . . . It hasn't been amma dreamed. Then she jumped ather guilty leaving you your first
" She envied us, she said, with the head to do with as we liked. She woebegone. You'd think in going he was going to the guillotine. It ard work being Mamma. "The re-been hounding me," she said. "If gain this morning just ask the operator not to ring the rooms." Which Cindy did the moment Mamma was out the door.

Cindy had made an appointment with the hairdresser for three o'clock. We were going to some elegant restaurant for lunch. And before lunch we were going to walk to the Louvre and take a look at the Winged Victory. Cindy was back on sculpture this morning, because, I suppose, her private life was lacking again.

It was about eleven-thirty when we came down in the elevator carrying a guidebook and a map of Paris. Turning to leave the keys at the mail desk, we saw him. He'd been waiting for two hours, he said. He was prepared to wait two days or two weeks, if necessary. He was that furious. "I'm extremely disappointed in you," he said to Cindy. "After all my efforts, I realize I've taught you nothing—exactly nothing."

"If you've come to upraid me ——" When Cindy is angry she uses words like "upraid." Her vocabulary always improves with anger.

I walked away, loitering in front of a jeweler's showcase in the lobby, I knew already it was going to be one of those days when I'd be de trop hour after hour. Cindy called me back and said we may as well start walking in the direction of the Louvre. Our plans had not changed in the least. He decided to walk with us. We went out into the Place Vendôme. I stared into every shopwindow. As if I cared.

"After all my coaching, you just fold up like a tent," I heard him say. "You go into full retreat."

"On the contrary. In the future I am refusing to be in the company of people who consider me a cipher." Cindy had raised her voice, which quieted him down a little.

He turned to me. "Mona, that's the Tuileries ahead of us." Evidently he intended to tutor me now. He was a born tutor, I guess.

When we reached the Tuileries, I took out the map of Paris and studied it. As if I cared. They were walking frightfully slow. I went on ahead. Straddling the walk in front of us was an arch. I looked that up in the guidebook. It was the Arc du Carrousel, which was set up in memory of Napoleon's victories, the guidebook said.

"You should have said something on the ship, then," Cindy said.

"What a little hypocrite you are. You've known all along I had this tense feeling about you. For seven thousand miles of ocean you were sure of it; then why, suddenly, did you forget?" His voice was quite thrilling then, two octaves lower.

"At sea anybody that's passable will do."

"Tut!"

I hate being the third party. I went on ahead again. I had a kind of last-act feeling. As I looked back at them, they were, I thought, beginning to look a little alike, as married people often do. They were standing hanging on to each other, like blind people. If you were an American tourist looking at them you'd have said, "See! Only the French have the poise and the passion to make love in the forenoon in the open like that. And only a French girl would have the gall to wear her hair striped like that." Maybe, I thought, Cindy was smarter after all than Mamma, who was at this moment probably talking herself into exhaustion, trying to be charming to a strange Frenchman. Guidebook in hand, I walked close to the Arc du Carrousel, so close I could read the names written on it: Austerlitz, Ulm, Tilsitt. Which I surmised were dull, old battles of Napoleon. Now his hand was under her chin and he was taking his time about kissing her. And I was terribly glad and all that for Cindy. But I really felt so very de trop.

END

LORD

In sober fact as well as the songs of poets, bread was the staff of life for many centuries. When the grain crop was good, people grew fat and prosperous; when it was bad, they grew thin and starved. Hence, community and family life revolved around bread.

In Anglo-Saxon households, the most powerful male was responsible for guarding the bread supply. He even had a formal title, hlafweard (loaf keeper). This long name gradually contracted, and emerged into modern English as lord.

—WEBB B. GARRISON

ALL★STAR CLING PEACH WHIP

EASY RECIPE

Easy to do—and thrifty with golden clings and Pet Milk

1 No. 2½ can cling peach slices
1 cup chilled Pet Evaporated Milk
1 teaspoon unflavored gelatin
¼ cup orange juice
12 finely cut marshmallows
2 tablespoons lemon juice
¼ cup sugar
2 tablespoons chopped maraschino cherries
⅓ cup chopped walnuts

Chill milk to ice crystal stage. Soften gelatin in orange juice. Drain peaches, heat ½ cup peach syrup to boiling, dissolve softened gelatin in it. Pour over marshmallows, let stand until cold. Set aside 10 peach slices, dice remainder. Whip chilled milk in chilled bowl until fluffy. Beat in lemon juice, sugar. Fold in marshmallow mixture, diced peaches, cherries, walnuts. Turn into chilled serving bowl. Garnish with peach slices, cherry. Chill. Serves 8.

Three cheers for America's all-star, most popular canned fruit—all-golden canned cling peaches from California! Summer-sweet beauties to serve dozens of delicious ways. Low cost, too, especially in larger-size cans. Look for "cling peaches" on the label—they're your best fruit buy!

Cling Peach Advisory Board

Cling Peaches from California

the portable with the "magic brain"

ELNA Automatic

Knows all—sews all

Elna, with its Magic Brain, does everything from the simplest mending job to the fanciest embroidery, easier and quicker. Only Elna gives you all these time- and effort-saving features:

- Lightest full-size portable—just 17 pounds.
- Without attachments sews straight and zigzag.
- Embroiders automatically. Dozens of stitch combinations.
- Free arm for darning, mending, tubular fabrics.
- Sews stretchable seams on jersey, nylon, elasticized fabrics.
- Guaranteed for life.

- The only portable that has U. S. Testing Laboratory seal of approval. ▪ 2000 dealers in U. S.

For as little as $179.00 you can buy the Elna Transforma Straight Stitch Machine. Liberal terms.

NECCHI SEWING CIRCLE ELNA

Embroider automatically

Choose your design on the Magic Disc . . . drop it in. It's as easy as playing a record.

Only Elna has the carrying case that opens into a full-size worktable, large enough for doing slip-covers, draperies, etc.

Without Attachments Elna sews on buttons, makes buttonholes, fancy monograms.

Free Booklet 16 pages in color, crammed with helpful sewing ideas. Write for it today.

ELNA SEWING MACHINE CO., INC., Dept. EN442, 164 West 25th Street, N.Y. 1, N.Y.

(Look for your local dealer in the phone directory)

© 1954

THE PINK-HOUSE BOBOS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 176

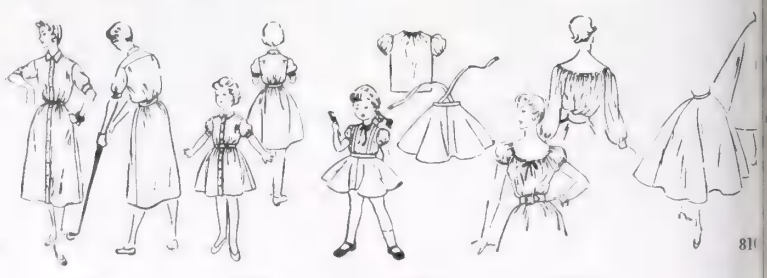
zigzags of the car. "Sometimes," he says, "I see a fox or rabbits scuttling across the road. And in the spring I have to put up new tubes so I won't disturb the bluebirds nesting in the old ones. Occasionally I'll meet a friendly subscriber waiting for his paper with a cheerful remark—and maybe a remittance. But some people are fussy—they'd like you not only to deliver the paper, but turn off the alarm, start the heat under the coffee, and prop the paper against the sugar bowl open to the comics!"

At seven, Barham roars back up the steep driveway, tired and ready for a duplicate of his earlier breakfast. Bo, sturdy and rather self-consciously Spartan in his Georgia Military Academy uniform, insists on making his own toast ("hard like daddy's") and drinks "about a quart" of orange juice while Dottie despairs of the son who won't eat eggs and the husband who eats too many. "Breakfast is our most expensive meal—also our most confusing!" For Bo must be at the foot of the hill before eight to catch the G.M.A. bus; Barham must start on his eleven-mile drive to Georgia Tech in time for early classes; Jennie must be coaxed out of bed, combed, curled, dressed in a starchy frock and sent off to kindergarten by nine. "The instant they're all gone," says Dottie, "I sit right down and have another cup of coffee and read the paper. I always feel like I've been hit over the head constantly ever since I woke up."

All alone and carless in her dusty-pink bungalow, Dottie zips through her housecleaning: gloating over the new vacuum cleaner ("When Barham gave it to me he apologized; can you imagine?"); sighing over the automatic washer she cannot use ("Penelope-the-pump gives nothing but orange juice—at least it looks like that; it's tested safe for drinking, but I can't even wash out a pair of white gloves without having them turn orange!"); and dreaming up new plans for interior decoration—perhaps a row of bright geraniums on the Dutch-door shelf.

At one Jennie is home from k and "helps" Dottie fix a light lun sandwiches, milk. Then, while J visiting with a storybook under o her enormous stuffed dog Nancy other, Dottie bakes sugar cookies attends to some of her numerous social duties—she is chairman of the North Avenue Presbyterian C longs to a garden club, rolls ba White Cross. All this requires time calls and letter writing—and it m before Barham gets home "becau stand to hear women chatting on t Sometimes, too, Jennie has "gu Dottie loves to help with tea partie a born hostess," she says, "but sh using the same tiny refrigerator a had as a child—and it takes ho water to heat."

Barham gets home any time be and late afternoon, depending c demic schedule and on whether he rounds" of paper collecting and ("You ought to learn you just chasing after people," Dottie scol they pay or they don't." But Ba "It isn't the money, it's the princip being up since 2:30 A.M., Barham tired enough to flop on the bed for often Dottie hasn't the heart to w suppertime.



Sometimes it is already da Dottie calls Bo in from his bike riding, Jennie from her fami Barham from his sleep. But finally family sits down at the walnut tab corner of the living room and says a good Southern dinner of country- "greens," and plenty of crisp salad

The best time of the day is just t time, when Bo brings the big Bible- (he never forgets the page numbe night before) and reads aloud while prim flowered nightgown, sits on h

OTHER VIEWS, SIZES AND PRICES OF VOGUE PATT

ON PAGE 182

Vogue Design No. 8325.	One-piece shirt dress, 12 to 20. 60c.
Vogue Design No. 2704.	One-piece shirt dress, 6 to 14. 40c.
Vogue Design No. 2698.	"Very Easy to Make" skirt and blouse, 4 to 12.
Vogue Design No. 8204.	Blouse, 12 to 18. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 8109.	"Very Easy to Make" skirt, 22 to 34 waist. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 8182.	"Easy to Make" one-piece dress with detach collar, 12 to 18. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 2697.	One-piece dress with hem ruffle, 2 to 6. 40c. Size 6, 1½ yards 54-inch flannel.
Vogue Design No. 7594.	Coat, 12 to 20. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 2686.	Coat, 2 to 8. 50c.
Vogue Design No. 7512.	"Easy to Make" one-piece dress, 12 to 20. 75c.
Vogue Design No. 2715.	One-piece dress and bolero, 4 to 10. 40c.

8325 2704 2698 8204

8182 2697 7594 2686 7512

…mbles over a difficult name, …pts him ("Only sometimes I'm …self"), and if he tires, his father …tory in a firm, confident voice. …thing stands in the way of our …' says Dottie, "just as nothing … Sunday school and church." … is closed, Bo and Jennie start …urf-blue room with the clown …oor, the stuffed animals hung …n on the wall, the bunk beds …e and Barham kneel with them …ay, "Our Father ——" and …r, "Now I lay me ——" and … says a special prayer for the … "No matter how wearing the …' says Dottie, "no matter how …rgued—we all seem to soften … together."

…ildren in bed, Barham begins …nest. "The idea is to get to bed …' he says, "but that rarely hap…etimes I can't get interested in …drop off with my head on my … if I really get hot, I might study …r later—then it seems silly to …l." So Dottie has to "lay down she knows, even if he has for…

NEXT MONTH

HOUSEFUL OF ANGELS

The first year Ray and Marvel Crookston were married, Marvel's mother sent them a Christmas card showing seventeen small angels in choir robes, wrote underneath, "You get them here and I'll see that they're dressed!"

● By now Marvel and Ray are past the halfway mark with ten children surrounding the tree in the Crookston living room! You're invited to a heartfelt and hilarious celebration, in a home with its own

TEN ANGELS FOR CHRISTMAS

By ROSEMARY JONES

HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES
in the December JOURNAL

Barham remembers running down a dusty road after the moving van when his family moved into a new house a few blocks away. There he grew up with his four brothers and one sister, building tree houses in the oaks behind the house, making boats to float in the Sunflower River, and reading—always reading.

"I read our set of encyclopedias cover to cover," Barham recalls. "I liked school and was graduated valedictorian, but it was predicted I'd be expelled before I finished—that was because I was a nonconformist. Once I had a serious argument with a teacher who insisted I color my rivers blue—when anyone knows Mississippi rivers are brown. And one teacher said 'mounting' for 'mountain'—that stuff never cut any ice with me."

BARHAM'S father, Walter Sidney Bobo, was a civil engineer; and two older brothers studied engineering—it was natural that Barham follow suit. "Besides, I liked to build things: soapbox cars, shacks, a bridge over the creek. There's real satisfaction in picturing something mentally, overcoming technical difficulties, perfecting it." So, in the fall of 1941, Barham enrolled at Georgia Tech, working at odd jobs to supplement the money lent him by his older brother, Will.

"At Tech I studied a lot, wasn't much of a party boy. When I saw Dottie that night, she was flitting around and flirting so—I never thought she noticed me."

"We met at a fraternity party," Dottie likes to say, "but we got to know each other in church."

For over a year, while they worked together on League discussions, hay rides, suppers, their friendship deepened—and on the way to a church New Year's Eve party in 1942, Barham proposed. "I had no more idea of marrying him than of flying to the moon," says Dottie. "But when Barham makes up his mind about something, it's as good as done. That night we agreed it was wiser not to talk about getting married for a while—and then we turned right around and started making plans."

The preacher was the only one who wasn't amazed—he'd been watching them holding hands in the balcony. Dottie's mother was furious ("She always wanted her girls to have fun—but she didn't want us to settle down") and her father strongly opposed. Barham's family thought he was crazy. And there were obstacles besides parental objection: Dottie (who had quit school to work in the Fulton National Bank) was making only $90 a month and Barham could add only $26 monthly from his jobs inspecting dormitories and teaching swimming at the Y.M.C.A. Besides, Barham had enlisted in the Army, might be called at any moment. And they were both only nineteen. "But we were so in love it never dawned on us to worry," says Dottie; and Barham adds, "There are always a lot of ifs. If you can wait on all these ifs, you just aren't ready to get married."

In view of family opposition and limited funds, Dottie, who planned the wedding herself, had to forgo her adolescent dream of an elaborate wedding in North Fulton High colors. But she doesn't regret anything—"except waiting three months; there wasn't a bit of sense in that!"

They were married April 2, 1943, in a simple ceremony in North Avenue Presbyterian Church. Dottie's sister Jean, her only attendant, wore pale aqua wool—and scared

…s—a ram, a couple of rab… …med Eagle. Her father, R. O. … successful food broker who liked … family.

…uld give us anything in the Dot… says, "and mommie was sat… …ny …ster and I merely put up our … did our fingernails ourselves. … have plenty of time to cook …n Dottie stepped out of a dress, … it fall—she knew someone … after her.

…ght on this otherwise carefree … father's insistence that she go …gnes Scott: "I was dead set on … of Georgia. But daddy said, … she's barely sixteen!'" So a …as reached: Dottie would go …e Atlanta division of the Uni…rgia, after that she could go …d. "But by that time," Dottie … met Barham—and I wasn't …hool!'"

…e Dottie ever saw Barham was … party at Georgia Tech in the … "He was sitting on a kitchen …ost awful old faded green slack …bout twenty girls where the …om."

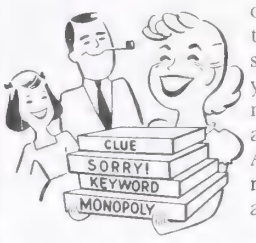
… she learned, came from the flat … of Clarksdale, Mississippi, … had better sense than to mis… …e name "Babbo," "Dado" or … matter of fact, the old Bobo … a Confederate hospital during …) is now Bobo High School.

BUY-LINES
by Nancy Sasser

AN ADVERTISING COLUMN

DON'T COMPLAIN or make excuses if your house is stuffy and the air stale because the windows are closed all day . . . do something about it instead! And my suggestion is the daily use of GOOD-AIRE . . . for I've tried everything and nothing beats GOOD-AIRE for making odors disappear and keeping the air indoors always fresh and inviting. Yet easy-does-it . . . you simply press the valve on the GOOD-AIRE can and poof! . . . household odors vanish like magic! I'm not exaggerating a bit . . . with a mere finger-touch, odors from cooking, pets and the nursery disappear . . . along with odors from stale air and tobacco smoke. In other words, GOOD-AIRE is good etiquette . . . a gracious gesture you should extend to your family as well as special guests. Remember this the next time you shop at your Drug, Grocery, Hardware or Department Store . . . and pick up a can of GOOD-AIRE. The price is surprisingly low . . . only 98c for the regular size and $1.89 for the large economy size.

IT'S TIME TO DRESS-UP your home for the holidays ahead . . . and I suggest you start by giving your furniture a beauty treatment with O-CEDAR DRI-GLO! That's what I've done . . . for this new miracle furniture polish gives a long-lasting "Bone Dry" shine that gleams as bright as Christmas tree lights. What's more, DRI-GLO goes on in minutes . . . and lasts for months. You just smooth it on, let dry, wipe off and lo! . . . its modern, non-oily silicone ingredient leaves such a glowing sparkle that old and new pieces glisten like mirrors. And DRI-GLO also protects furniture . . . even spilled liquids won't mar its rich beauty and finger marks wipe off its "Bone Dry" surface like magic! This isn't merely my opinion, either . . . DRI-GLO is guaranteed to outshine and outlast any furniture polish or wax you ever used. But let me send you this:



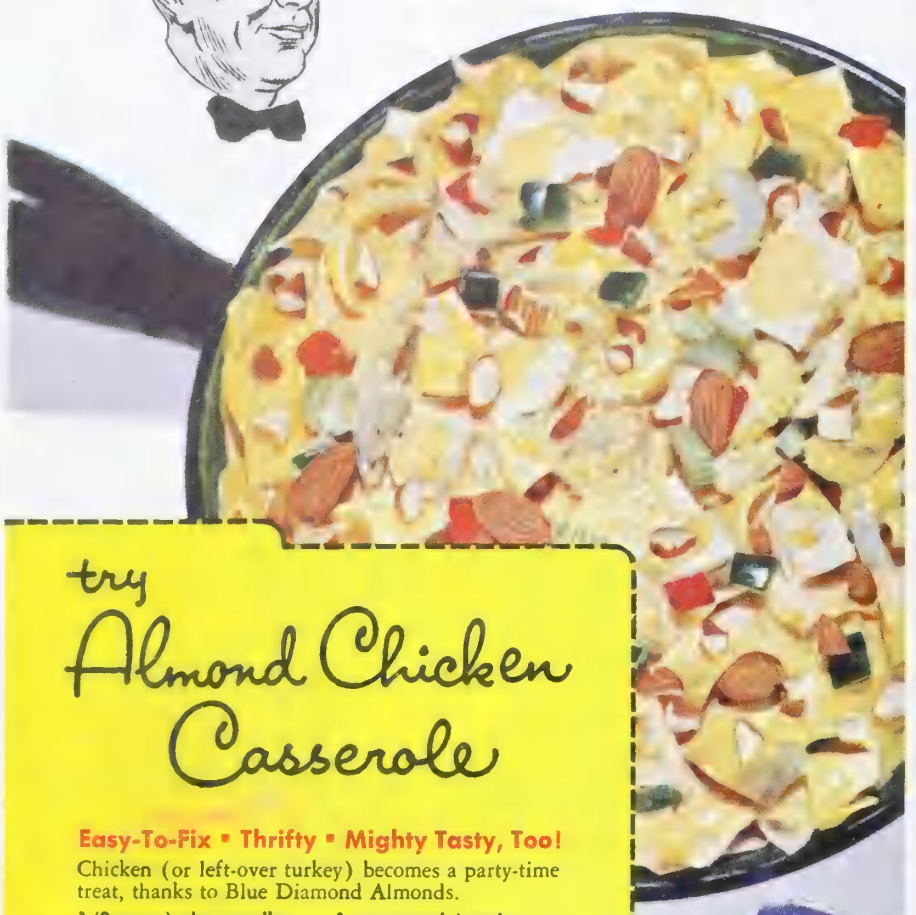
GENEROUS SAMPLE of O-CEDAR DRI-GLO . . . to try before you buy. It's yours for only 10c to cover postage and handling . . . check OFFER #1 in box.

HUSBANDS ARE ONLY HUMAN . . . so it's only natural that they forget (or neglect!) to keep your beautiful table lighters working. But don't nag . . . get some RONSONOL Lighter Fuel and fill them yourself! I do it all the time . . . for the Ronson people have developed a revolutionary new patented "Switch-Spout" for the Ronson can which makes fueling "child's-play" even if you are "all-thumbs". That's because there's nothing to pierce or cut . . . no messy top to screw off and on or lose. All you do is flip and pour . . . flip! . . . and it's closed. And RONSONOL is the finest quality lighter fuel made . . . it lights instantly, burns cleanly, lasts longer and is pleasantly scented, too. Furthermore, it costs only 25c . . . so if I were you I'd get 2 cans when you shop today . . . then you can keep all your lighters burning brightly all through the holidays ahead. P.S. And get a packet of RONSON extra-length Flints . . . they're 40% longer and give 500 more lights than ordinary flints!

FRIDAY NIGHT IS GAME NIGHT at our house . . . and it's such a happy time for us that I'm urging all my friends (and that includes you!) to adopt the custom, too. All you need is an assortment of marvelous PARKER GAMES . . . then no member of your family would dream of missing these at-home evenings together. And when you choose your PARKER GAMES, be sure to get "Clue" . . . the exciting detective game that will keep you happily occupied for hours as you try to solve a thrilling mystery. "Clue" is actually like a Stage Play and there's never a dull moment . . . because each player plays an important part. And you'll also want to get "Monopoly", the most fascinating real estate trading game in the world, "Sorry", and "Keyword", absolutely the best crossword letter game . . . plus this:

HELPFUL BOOKLET called "How to Have Family Fun and Popular Parties with Parker Games". It contains entertaining tips galore . . . as well as special party themes and refreshments. See OFFER #2 in box.

HEART-WINNING . . . HEAD-SPINNING! That's you when you follow each shampoo with MARCHAND'S Rinse . . . for it makes your hair irresistibly lovely and lustrous! MARCHAND'S really sets hair a-sparkle with glorious color and glimmering lights . . . makes dull hair glisten and even blends in gray streaks. And whether you're a blonde, brunette or redhead, MARCHAND'S is made for you . . . because it comes in 12 nature-matched shades (including "specials" for beautiful white hair!) . . . all safe, temporary Government-approved colors that wash out easily and leave no tattle-tale stains around your hair line. You'll love the way MARCHAND'S Rinse removes soap film, too . . . leaves your hair satin-soft and silky . . . a perfect "lamb" to manage. Still it takes only a few minutes after your regular shampoo . . . so keep your hair color-bright and fashion-right by using MARCHAND'S Rinse regularly! Costs only 25c for 6 Rinses and 10c for 2 . . . at all Drug and Variety Stores.



Write Nancy Sasser, Dept. P-7, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y. for:
☐ OFFER #1 . . . . SAMPLE of O-CEDAR DRI-GLO. Please enclose 10c.
☐ OFFER #2 . . . . PARKER'S BOOKLET "How to Have Family Fun and Popular Parties with Parker Games". Please enclose 10c.

"ALMONDS make the dish," says Vic Bergeron owner of San Francisco's famous Trader Vic's Restaurant

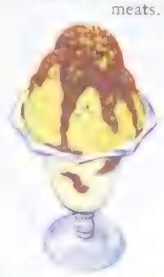
try
Almond Chicken Casserole

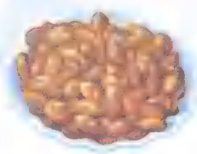
Easy-To-Fix • Thrifty • Mighty Tasty, Too!



Chicken (or left-over turkey) becomes a party-time treat, thanks to Blue Diamond Almonds.

- 1 (8-ounce) pkg. noodles
- 2 tbsp. butter or substitute
- 1 cup thinly sliced celery
- 2 tbsp. flour
- ¼ tsp. dry mustard
- 1¼ tsp. salt
- ⅛ tsp. black pepper
- 2½ cups milk
- 2 tsp. Worcestershire sauce
- 1 cup grated American cheese
- 2 cups diced cooked chicken or turkey
- ¼ cup diced pimiento
- ¼ cup diced green sweet pepper
- ½ cup buttered soft bread crumbs
- 1 cup roasted* almonds, diced

Cook noodles in boiling, salted water until tender. Meanwhile melt butter, add celery, cover and cook over very low heat 10 minutes. Blend in flour, mustard, salt and pepper. Add milk and Worcestershire sauce, and cook and stir until thickened. Stir in cheese, chicken, pimiento, green pepper, well-drained noodles and half of almonds. Turn into shallow baking dish and sprinkle with crumbs and remaining diced almonds. Decorate with whole almonds, either natural kernels or blanched, if desired. Bake in hot oven (400° F.) 15 to 20 minutes. Serves 5 to 6.



*Use Blue Diamond Buttered Almonds (ready-roasted-and-diced) or buy the cello packs of in-shell almonds or almond meats. Roast 15-20 minutes in slow (300°) oven, adding 1 teaspoon butter (or substitute) per cup of meats. Chop (dice) while warm. Use the natural kernel (not blanched).

THRIFTY TREAT

Serve home-made Sundaes with diced-roasted almonds on ice cream, with or without syrup topping.

NUTTY ARISTOCRATS

Make your own salted almonds, quick 'n easy. Use the natural kernel. Roast as above, salt to taste. No need to blanch.

TOPS FOR [illegible]

For your copy of free booklet "Win Compliments with Almonds," write California Almond Growers Exchange, Sacramento, California.

BLUE DIAMOND ALMONDS

WHATEVER THE DISH, FOR GOODNESS' SAKE, ADD ALMONDS

Dottie silly by not arriving until the last possible moment. Dottie (in a white wool dress with sweetheart neck, wearing her brother's fraternity pin for "something blue and borrowed") quaked at the altar from nervousness and hunger—she had eaten nothing all day—but Barham was "steady as a rock." "When he kissed me," Dottie recalls, "my hat fell off!"

Their weekend honeymoon was spent at the Ansley Hotel in Atlanta, where Dottie lost one of her only pair of shoes; and where Barham, meeting a friend in the lobby, nervously introduced his bride as "Dottie Estes." Sunday night, before Barham was due back at school and Dottie at work, they "sentimentally" attended Presbyterian League.

Barham had optimistically given Dottie an enormous ham for a wedding gift, and she cooked it "with an eye on the oven and an ear at the phone—I called mommie for instructions." But in spite of the fact that Dottie "had never done anything at home but pour a glass of milk," Barham pronounced her cooking "exotic." And their first apartment was "awful, but we were so in love we didn't notice it!" That summer, Barham worked at Bell Aircraft in tool-and-die design, while Dottie rushed home from the bank each night to cook elaborate dinners—"I hadn't learned yet that it isn't necessary to feast every night!" But in August, Barham was called into the service, and Dottie went with him.

Dottie remembers the Army years, most of them spent at Fort Bragg, in clear flashes: their first Thanksgiving, when Barham, sympathizing with Dottie's struggles to cook dinner on a hot plate, brought home a seventeen-pound turkey precooked by the mess sergeant; the community-style boardinghouse where they shared a bath with fourteen people and laughed at the landlady's eccentric signs ("Save Electricity; Use God's Sunlight!"); their first "house" where they spent all their saved money on necessary furniture and a "cardboard" refrigerator that sounded like a tractor. In October of 1944 Dottie went home to Atlanta to have her first baby—"He was so late that finally I went to Sears, Roebuck and ran up and down the steps"—and she was so delighted with "Bo" that she bathed him "about fifty times a day" and dressed him "like a doll." Finally, in April of 1946, they were out of the Army, and back in Atlanta.

Discovering that the housing problem was acute, they moved in with Dottie's family while Barham started his first real job as a draftsman with Carrier Airconditioning. "But living with the family didn't work out," says Dottie. "Daddy didn't complain—but I noticed he ate more often at his club. Mommie adored Bo—except when he methodically pulled the leaves off her jade plant, shoved her pot plants one by one off the porch." They had almost given up hope of finding a place of their own (nothing was available for rent; they couldn't afford to buy) when they saw an advertisement for a model home designed by Royal Barry Wills and constructed in nearby Marietta, by U.S. Homes. When she first saw the two-bedroom prefabricated house, Dottie was enchanted. "Oh, it was just a dream," she said. "I nearly died over it, I was so thrilled." "Now, honey," "let's look at the constructio*tion!*" gasped Dottie. "How about construction?"

Before they left, they decided the house, which was to be c weeks for $6300. The propose tie's three-acre hill where B once stood, just off Northside took a loan from the bank—an began.

"The two men who built it think they'd had much exp Barham mildly. But Dottie sa were darling boys, they dance

In spite of Barham's repea calls and weekend supervision with disappointing slowness. D they struck rock at 8 feet, had feet farther at $4.50 per foot. (sank $1500 in the well—and came, it was the color of Ge remained so, despite treatme softener, filters, potassium p They had to chip the septic ta rock. Fanny-the-furnace gave too, alternately smoking and b "This was the only time I felt was doomed," Dottie says no took six months instead of six required a second loan from t at the very last minute we almo in without electricity!"

But at last, on a cold Dec 1946, Dottie and Barham and Bo rattled up the red clay hill in war-surplus jeep—with no fu Bo's bed, a mattress and a che Although they ate off the iron weeks, their first Christmas "at wonderful one. ("Dottie's idea tree is a forest," says Barham. care if it's shaped like a sofa bumps the ceiling and fills the had their own house, Barham h their future seemed secure. "A time," says Barham, "we didn we were missing."

In the spring of 1950, after been working with Carrier for f was making about $100 a week realized just what was wrong. dead end at Carrier," he says. money—most of the time I felt got tired of the job, felt I wasn thing important or learning a was because I didn't have n mechanical engineering. After a I knew I'd have to go back to s Dottie and Barham had problem—"but there was alwa first, the house; then Jennie's a then our sense of security. Bu when I realized I'd have to do so because my GI eligibility was

So, after the year-long disa tempt to combine going to scho ing at Carrier, Barham decide paper route. Almost immedia break came in the form of a Barham was able to buy outrig venient $1050 inherited from his ting the car so easily seemed

HOW THE BOBOS SPEND THEIR MONEY EACH MONTH

Barham's income while going to school is about $290: $120 GI allow $170 from paper route. He and Dottie firmly believe in tithing, give a of each month's income to the church. They do not smoke, have tak vacations, have no savings fund except the insurance, have no baby-s expense (relatives offer), and with the present setup pay no incom

Food	$100.00	Dry cleaning and shoe repair
Clothing	12.00	School expense (Jennie's refreshments at kindergarten)
House	55.00	Magazines, papers
Fuel	6.00	Children's allowances
Light	10.00	Social Security (average)
Telephone	5.37	Entertainment (including children's parties)
Insurance—hospital and life	9.85
Medical and dental	8.00
Launderette	5.00
Church	29.00
Car expense	20.00	Total	$

Barham, "because I could never ed without a good car. But things smoothly after all."

st place, Barham found that "the is easy to forget. After working rs at Carrier for so long, I couldn't edule my own hours. At times I phenomenal amount of work—go l day long, study until two, then paper route and start again with cept naps. Other times I'd drift hole week unconscious."

), "Tech seemed completely dif- faces were unfamiliar, younger, hink Dottie half expected the old parties and dances." And Dottie as hard. For a while I tried Bar- dule, ironing or cleaning house s delivering papers. But I couldn't bad enough for one person to be time—someone has to feel good." Jennie immediately sensed the nosphere—"Oh, they were good quiet in the afternoons while s sleeping, but they missed their d social life had to be cut down m of "dinner out" once a month. e we went on having friends for es. But we learned that nobody's ave a party at nine." Dottie, in self, grew tense and restless. "All een active, and now with Barham ying or away, I did nothing but with the children. I felt bored and nany times I considered giving n says now. "Comes a time in the quarter when you think nothing is at effort. Everything piles up— ie and Bo are extra noisy, Dottie a fight, I have an important paper flat tire on the paper route. Well, go down to school and talk to out switching my course to some- By the time I've talked it out, I t to go on with mechanical engiys, "Once a friend of ours said scrub floors for a husband like ell, I feel like that—though I to scrub floors yet."

arham worried about his lack of —"especially because of church e and I believe we should tithe l as money." (The Bobos con- set aside one tenth of their ome, saying, "If you give to the take care of you; anyway, nine urther than ten tenths.") So Dot- ch work for them both. When she irman of her circle, attendance est in meetings soared. "I couldn't r robe if my life depended on it," "but our circle made thirty new d cottas when we'd only been pair them. Maybe I'm a little ou have to get things done."

tremendous energy, admits that rly enthusiastic," wants to do er than anyone else." Like the was christened—she sat up half aking tiny white shoes trimmed d pearls. "And for Jennie's Valen- nade a heart-shaped cake two and ree and a half feet, iced in green, uet of sugar roses in the middle. le girls had corsages made of n net, rosebuds."

ing enthusiasm is one source of ween Dottie and her more cautious But I don't think two people who ach other can live in the perfect ead about in books," Dottie says. et mad at the same time, Barham alk till we both cool off. Once I us I grabbed my shoe and threw e ducked—he's the fastest ducker —and it smashed the window. I in my life done anything my son ; he looked at me in awe for a . Every time I get real, real mad es—of course I always reach for ed one."

't hold grudges," says Barham, tes their quarrels largely to his on with details. "We have every- d then forget it. But I can't help catching Dottie up on her hasty statements—such as about jazz. Dottie once wrote a theme on jazz, so of course she knows all about it—except how to recognize it."

The Bobos used to disagree about money matters—"Only not any more, we don't make enough to fight about," says Dottie. "But our attitudes about money are different—Barham worked for his first bike and I never worked for a thing." Still, Barham admits that Dottie has proved to be a good manager in spite of her inexperience. She is a shrewd buyer of both food and clothing, looking for bargains and shopping "in advance." (Once she bought ten pairs of white gloves at once, often purchases her children's shoes two sizes ahead.) Best proof of her buying skill concerns a raincoat Barham gave her. It didn't quite fit, and when Dottie went to exchange it she was horrified to see racks and racks of identical coats. "So I marched up to another department, found a darling, more expensive coat marked down, and had enough money left to buy a set of dishes!"

Dottie's skill in money managing shows first in the house itself. After buying a sofa and armchair for $125, Dottie found slip-cover material for $1.39 (cotton crash with a large floral print in yellow, green, chartreuse and gray) and asked her sister-in-law to make the covers and draperies. In payment, Dottie gave her the armchair, which was too large for their living room anyway. With leftover scraps of the material, Dottie covered the shades of her 89-cent kerosene lamps, bought on Peters Street in Atlanta and electrically wired by Barham. The boudoir chairs that flank the fireplace are covered in bright but inexpensive yellow sheeting. For about $28 Dottie bought an unpainted chest and desk, then painted them white to match the one dead-white wall that contrasts dramatically with the barn-green room.

Dottie is particularly proud of the heavy handmade Swedish andiron set lent by her

It's new!

Try it—

easy to make, always successful

KNOX NO-BAKE CHEESE CAKE

So light, fluffy, perfectly delicious! No baking worries . . . just mix it, put it in the refrigerator and forget it until serving time. The key to its success is Knox, the real, unflavored, all-protein gelatine!

NO-BAKE CHEESE CAKE

(Party Size 10-12 servings)

1. Mix together 2 envelopes Knox Unflavored Gelatine, 1 cup sugar, and ¼ teaspoon salt in the top of a double boiler.
2. Beat together 2 egg yolks and 1 cup milk; add to gelatine mixture. Cook over boiling water, stirring constantly until gelatine is dissolved and mixture thickens, about 10 minutes.
3. Remove from heat; add 1 teaspoon grated lemon rind; cool.
4. Stir in 3 cups creamed cottage cheese (24-oz.) sieved, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, and 1 teaspoon vanilla. Chill, stirring occasionally until mixture mounds slightly when dropped from a spoon.
5. While mixture is chilling, make crumb topping as follows: Mix 2 tablespoons melted butter, 1 tablespoon sugar, ½ cup graham cracker crumbs, ¼ teaspoon cinnamon, and ¼ teaspoon nutmeg; set aside.
6. Fold 2 egg whites, stiffly beaten, and 1 cup heavy cream whipped, into chilled gelatine mixture.

*7. Turn into 8" spring form pan and sprinkle top with crumb mixture. Chill until firm.

*If desired, use 8" or 9" square or 9" x 5" loaf pan. Line with waxed paper and press crumb mixture in bottom of pan. Turn in gelatine mixture. Chill until firm. Unmold.

(FAMILY SIZE 5-6 SERVINGS)

Use ½ above gelatine recipe but full amount of crumb mixture in an 8" layer pan or 9" pie plate.

KNOX

No-Bake Cheese Cake with its combination of Knox unflavored, all-protein gelatine and the protein-rich dairy products . . . cottage cheese, cream and milk . . . is a delicious, healthful, easily digested dessert that's good for the entire family.

the real gelatine

* * *

all protein no sugar

FREE MAIL THIS COUPON TODAY FOR KNOX RECIPE BOOKS

With hundreds of easy-to-make, protein-filled dishes to brighten up your menus. (1) "Chiffon Pies and Wholesome Candies" and (2) "Better Meals With Gel-Cookery."

Knox Gelatine, Box 11H-6
Johnstown, New York

Please send me the two Knox Recipe Books described in this advertisement.

NAME .....

ADDRESS .....

Friend of the family

"Is it for ME?"

You kind of hope it is—for good news and good times often come your way by telephone.

Maybe it's a date for sister Sue. Or a business call for Dad. Or Bill asking if Jimmie can go to the movies. Or Grandma calling Mother to find out if things are all right. And everything is more likely to be all right when there's a telephone in the home.

In many, many ways, the telephone is a real friend of the family. And the cost is small —just pennies a call.

BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

LOCAL to serve the community. NATIONWIDE to serve the nation.

mother, and the dining-room suite—a maple hutch cabinet, table and chairs all bought for $40.

"This poor woman," Dottie says, "discovered that her husband, a railroad man, had another wife at the other end of the line. So she sold out and moved to California—and I got the furniture."

In Dottie and Barham's room, the unusual corner dressing table is really a series of orange crates, camouflaged with yellow rose-sprigged flounces and ruffles. And you'd never guess that the large green screen conceals the invaluable ironer—because of the "orange juice" water, all clothes must be sent to a launderette, but Dottie does the ironing herself.

Color, which Dottie champions and Barham rather distrusts, has played an important part in their home decoration. When Barham painted the house pink, the shutters white, he had misgivings—but the effect was so surprisingly good (the house blending charmingly with the green pines, the bright azaleas, redbud, dogwood and daffodils) that he went on to paint the pump house pink as well! Dottie daringly insisted on making the washing machine and dryer avocado green, approved Bo's choice of rich blue for his bedroom, and used bright splashes of color throughout the house in artificial flower arrangements. "I get these wild ideas," she says, "and depend on Barham to tell me when they won't work."

"Dottie drives me to do things," Barham admits. "If she hadn't insisted, I'd never have gone through with making the play porch." Now, with Dottie's urging and the help of a carpenter, Barham has nearly completed the large pine-paneled playroom which houses the washer and dryer, all the children's toys, and a long trestle table where the family eats informally. The storage closets along one end of the room will eventually be replaced by an open fireplace. "But there are so many things we want to do," Dottie says: "provide more storage space, change the side porch into a room for Bo, finish the terrace behind the house!"

Right now, there is little opportunity for large-scale projects.

"One of the disadvantages of Barham's schedule is that it leaves him so little time with the children," says Dottie. "Bo is a handful, and impossible to punish! When we took his bike away from him for one week, Bo wouldn't touch it for two. We were begging him to ride it by then!"

Barham agrees that G.M.A. has improved Bo 100 per cent, although in the beginning he was opposed, saying, "We're paying fifty dollars a month for the same kind of education I got for three dollars in Clarksdale, Mississippi."

THE decision to send Bo to G.M.A., made possible by money left him by Dottie's father, was reached after a series of kindergarten and grade-school problems. "Bo got into fights, wouldn't conform, didn't pay attention—and he's awfully smart. We got so upset we took him to a psychologist, who said it would take two years to straighten out our problems before he even started on Bo's. We decided since we'd been happily married for eight years we could manage alone."

At the moment, Bo is fascinated by jet planes, poetry, smoking ("We gave him cigars to cure him, and he smoked two down to the end without getting sick") and the little girl down the street. Elaborately casual, Bo explains, "I'm going to see Susan before he tears off on his batte play with the little girl he escorte ditional G.M.A. "formal" last ye red velvet and tulle, wore Bo's seven-year-old nonchalance.

"She's the maturest child I've Dottie marvels.

JENNIE, already so pretty that ries, was named for Barham's definitely prefers her second nam Benson," she said, waving her ma a kindergarten play. "Benson is a f She wears her long dark hair ei curled or in a pony tail, likes skirts better than blue jeans, modeled at teas and fashion show ment stores. (Barham, exasperat pected car trouble en route from shows, skeptically appraised Jen payment of pearls, said, "Jennie, ing career is over—it's too expensi spite of her interest in pretty cl tendency to admire herself in mir is often found hanging by her kne trapeze set with the spaniels, Binky.

"You pra first child a ond is easy," "Day by da manageable ful—she lik dishes, ma desserts like banana pud important is the one count on."

Such an matter wa birth. "I tol minute I k pregnant," I "and he ke cret faithfully mommie or really had Bo—he ha peering in ba with long hu and trying mothers out bies. But Ba planned wa our honeymo a boy name Jr., and th named Jenni

TO THE BELOVED

By SARA KING CARLETON

You have given me something beautiful to remember.
With your delicate moving hands and your smile
You drew it out of the air and fashioned it.
"In a little while,"
You said,
"I must leave you. Take this."
And you do not know how wonderful it is.

Out of the distance of your going
You gave me a gift to remember . . . little and lonely . . .
Fashioned of your hands, your lingering smile.
You always . . . you only.

Over ten years have passed honeymoon, when Dottie kept Barl outside the front door, loaded groceries, while she took the curl her hair—but she still runs to refre stick when she hears his car in the says, "Barham makes me feel like girl; that's important." And Barh he's getting younger with every term at Tech.

Having managed so far to co problems created by Barham's Tech—problems ranging from re come to increased sleepiness and ir Dottie and Barham feel "it's plai from now on. In June, when he ge degree in mechanical engineering may decide to go on with graduate he may accept one of the job offe ready received.

"I'm not so helpful there," D ruefully. "When Barham gets a le a job, I look first off to see how it is."

Whatever he decides, Barham wants something more than a ro "Some people naturally thrive on v even frantic—activity," he says. that; I go stale on normal routin shares with me a feeling of satisfa was missing in the days when I h easy job with steady hours and t vacation."

As Barham puts it: "We're not jus for a college degree. This struggle— call it that—is worth while in itself."

KITCHEN JEWEL CHEST
This striking gift set contains the most useful and most wanted Revere Ware items —and it is priced to save your gift dollars!

Give useful Revere Ware and you give the rich beauty of copper . . . the sparkling loveliness of stainless steel . . . the incomparable cooking efficiency of copper-clad stainless steel! Revere Ware has copper on the bottom . . . where it makes a real difference in cooking efficiency. Whether you give Revere Ware in convenient Gift Sets or individual pieces always remember . . . they're the finest cooking utensils money can buy! A gift of any one of the carefully selected Revere Ware Sets shows that you really care.

REVERE COPPER AND BRASS INCORPORATED
Rome Manufacturing Company Division
Rome, New York; Clinton, Illinois; Riverside, California
See "Meet The Press" on NBC Television, Sundays

New
this Christmas!

STAINLESS STEEL CANISTERS
In sets or individually. Tel-U-Top knobs show what's stored inside.

14 CUP COFFEE MAKER AND SERVER
Copper-Clad Stainless Steel. Specially designed for large quantities.

5 QT. DELUXE TEA KETTLE
Beautifully styled. Solid Copper. Chrome Plated. Fast heating.

4 CUP DRIP COFFEE MAKER
Copper-Clad Stainless Steel. Makes 2, 3, or 4 cups of coffee quickly.

No finer gift...

COPPER CLAD STAINLESS STEEL
18 01
REVERE WARE

Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

THERE ARE THREE BRECK SHAMP
FOR THREE DIFFERENT HAIR CONDIT

Beautiful hair has natural softness and lustre. A Breck Shampoo will help b the soft, natural beauty of your hair. There are three Breck Shampoos. On Shampoo is for dry hair. Another Breck Shampoo is for oily hair. A third Breck is for normal hair. The next time you buy a shampoo, select the Breck Sha your individual hair condition. A Breck Shampoo is not drying to the hair cleans thoroughly. A Breck Shampoo leaves your hair soft, lustrous and b

The Three Breck Shampoos are available at Beauty Shops, Drug Stores, Department Stores and wherever cosmetics o

JOHN H BRECK INC · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS SPRINGFIELD 3 MASSACH
NEW YORK · CHICAGO · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA CA

JOURNAL

NO 19 '54

LINGAME PU LIBRARY
ame, Calif.

DECEMBER
1954 • 35c

THE MAGAZINE WOMEN BELIEVE IN

Her best since THE EGG AND I

ONIONS IN THE STEW

by Betty MacDonald
complete in this issue

•

TEN ANGELS FOR CHRISTMAS
(How Young America Lives)

•

CHURCHILL OFF GUARD

•

COOKIES AS CHRISTMAS GIFTS

Journal

Contents

December, 1954

VOL. LXXI No. 12

Book Condensation Complete in This Issue

ONIONS IN THE STEW, Betty MacDonald . 54

Stories

LOST CHRISTMAS, Virginia Akin . 42
SINCERELY, WILLIS WAYDE (Second part of five), John P. Marquand . 46
THE HAPPY AFFAIR, Lee Rogow . 48
THE NIGHT BEFORE THE WEDDING, Harriett Pratt . 66

Special Features

THE BABY IN THE KITCHEN, Dorothy Thompson . 11
HAVE WE WON THE FIGHT AGAINST POLIO? . 25
MARCHESA ELENA GRIMALDI . 44
Painting by Anthony Van Dyck, Description by John Walker
GOD REST YOU MERRY . 45
CHURCHILL OFF GUARD, Inspector Walter H. Thompson . 52
HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES: TEN ANGELS FOR CHRISTMAS . 139
Rosemary Jones
CAN THIS MARRIAGE BE SAVED?, Dorothy Cameron Disney . 148
DR. SPOCK TALKS WITH MOTHERS, Benjamin Spock, M.D. . 156

General Features

OUR READERS WRITE US . 4
UNDER-COVER STUFF, Bernardine Kielty . 16
DIARY OF DOMESTICITY, Gladys Taber . 30
MAKING MARRIAGE WORK, Clifford R. Adams . 32
WHAT EVERY BOY WANTS FOR CHRISTMAS (The Sub-Deb) . 34
Edited by Ruth Imler
THERE'S A MAN IN THE HOUSE, Harlan Miller . 39
FIFTY YEARS AGO ▪ JOURNAL ABOUT TOWN . 41
ASK ANY WOMAN, Marcelene Cox . 80
THIS IS A MESSY MUNCHER, Munro Leaf . 147

Fashion and Beauty

A DREAM OF A DRESS, Wilhela Cushman . 58
HOLIDAY TOUCHES FOR LONGER HAIR, Dawn Crowell Norman . 60
HOLIDAY SEPARATES, Nora O'Leary . 62

Food and Homemaking

HOMEMADE CHRISTMAS, Cynthia McAdoo Wheatland . 56
THE PARTY'S ON!, Ann Batchelder . 64
LINE A DAY, Ann Batchelder . 70
CHRISTMAS FUN IN THE KITCHEN, Louella G. Shouer . 108
PORTABLE KITCHEN, Gladys Taber . 124

Architecture and Interior Decoration

THE OLD HEATH HOUSE IN BROOKLINE, Richard Pratt . 50
NEW NEEDLEPOINT DESIGNS FROM A MUSEUM TREASURE . 99
Henrietta Murdock

Poems

MORNING, Miriam Hemmendinger . 79
THE LESSON, Joan Aucourt . 93
THE "DIFFERENT" GIRL, Barbara Shook Conklin . 104
WRAPPING UP SUSAN, Dorothy Brown Thompson . 118
EGO BRACERS, Georgie Starbuck Galbraith . 131 SUBTLE SUGGESTIONS FOR MALE SHOPPERS, Marjorie Lederer Lee . 151
DUEL, Jean Todd Freeman . 163
SONG FOR MY NEWBORN SON, Joseph Auslander . 166

Cover Photograph by Syl Labrot

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Send your new address at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Address: LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, INDEPENDENCE SQUARE, PHILADELPHIA 5, PA.

Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

Ladies' Home Journal, copyright 1954 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries. Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as second-class matter at the Post Office at Philadelphia, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

Subscription Prices U. S., U. S. Possessions and Canada—1 Yr., $3.50; 2 Yrs., $6; 3 Yrs., $8.50; 4 Yrs., $11. Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America (except the Guianas)—1 Yr., $4. All other countries—1 Yr., $7. Remit by Money Order or Draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. Funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

Unconditional Guaranty. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company. Walter D. Fuller, Chairman of the Board; Robert E. MacNeal, President; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Sr. Vice-Pres.; Cary W. Bok, Sr. Vice-Pres.; Benjamin Allen, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Circulation; Donald M. Hobart, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Research; Arthur W. Kohler, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Advertising; Lewis W. Trayser, Sr. Vice-Pres. and Director of Manufacturing; Brandon Barringer, Treasurer; Robert Gibbon, Secretary; Edward C. Von Tress, Vice-Pres. and Executive Director of Advertising; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Vice-Pres. and Advertising Director of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

Journalities

ETT PRATT tells a wonderful about a girl who spends her ng eve thinking about the men in her life. That girl speaks for herself on page 66 and the author speaks right here: "I was born in Hastings, Nebraska, attended the University of Nebraska for one year and was graduated from Mills College. I majored in drama on the theory e could learn to write by act- ot the idea for Night Before the ng when I suddenly noticed students seemed very young to emembered how old I felt at 20 me to the maddening but reas- conclusion that even if you are e will still be someone 110 who you are young and silly."

Pratt

we were about to conclude that R HENRY THOMPSON, Sir Win- hurchill's bodyguard, was in- visible, he sent this photo of himself—with his hat on, for in the service of Sir Winston for twenty years he traveled widely. You can read about that, and about the great man himself, in Churchill Off Guard, page 52. Walter Henry Thompson was born ton, London, in 1890, and now ith his wife, Mary Teresa, in Romney, Kent. He has four n—Harold, Harvey, Grace and en. A fifth, Frederick, was shot over Germany and died in the r. At present, Inspector Thomp- Scotland Yard (retired) is visit- s country on a lecture tour and ing every minute of it."

pson

ditors actually work may be o some people, but we have f it in our editorial associate's extra-wonderful (if we may say so; and who's to stop us?) How Young America Lives: Ten Angels for Christmas on page 139. ROSEMARY JONES grew up in Ponca City, Oklahoma, and taught school for a while after taking a master's degree in French at Yale. a rare JOURNAL editor in that ims she has no interest in lovely . She says she would rather ough clothes and go camping. ary came back from visiting the stons in Logan, Utah, with the c report, "The stars are closer You feel you can reach up and them." Oh, come now, Rose- the stars are closer anywhere el that way, and let us hope that ody does this Christmas season.

ones

YOU ALWAYS GET

Flakier Crusts with New-Type Armour Star Lard

says Marie Gifford, Armour Home Economist and pastry authority.

Prove it in my recipe of the month

Mincemeat Tartlets

Do try these delicious holiday goodies with wonderful flaky-tender crusts. Make plenty. They disappear!

To be sure of a stay-crisp crust, use Armour Star New-Type Lard—the fluffy mild-flavored lard that promises you flakier crusts than expensive shortenings. Non-greasy. Easy to digest as butterfat. And, it keeps—needs no refrigeration.

Quick 5-Min. Crust recipe. Sift together 3 cups all-purpose flour with 1½ tsp. salt. Cut in 1 cup Armour Star New-Type Lard. Blend until mixture resembles coarse meal. Add ⅓ cup tap water. Mix lightly and shape dough into two balls. Roll out on pastry cloth to ⅛" thickness.

Cut bottom circles with 3" cookie cutter or glass. For tops, use doughnut cutter or cut small center circles in half of the circles.

For the filling, use your favorite mincemeat recipe. Place 1½ Tbsp. mincemeat in center of bottom circles. Moisten edges with water. Press top crust down and crimp edges together. Bake on cookie sheet at 400° F. for 10 min. or until lightly browned. Makes about 24.

FREE! NEW PIE BOOKLET. 32 wonderful pies and success hints. Write to Marie Gifford, Dept. 149, Box 2053, Armour and Company, Chicago. A carton top will be appreciated.

The Modern New-Type Lard

Armour Star Lard

Three "do-it-yourself" decorating ideas with VINYL plastic

by Marion Palmer, modern decorating consultant

"It's so easy to brighten the desk area in your home with a few deft decorator touches of vinyl plastic! Start with an inexpensive chair upholstered in colorful vinyl. You'll find many really good looking styles to choose from. Or if you have a suitable chair, you can cover it yourself with washable, wearable, wonderful vinyl! Then pick up its color on the lampshade and blotter pad tabs to create a smart ensemble.

"If you can sew, you can sew vinyl. So why not transform your old studio couch in the rumpus room, living room or guest room into a showpiece with colorful, deep-textured vinyl? It shrugs off wear and tear! As an added decorator touch, gaily season it with vinyl-covered pillows and bolsters in harmonizing or matching colors. It's so easy to do it yourself, with vinyl yard goods.

"If your halls are dark, you can make them bright and smart with vinyl. Be a week-end decorator and do it yourself. Key your decorating scheme to a dado made of vinyl—you can put it on your walls in a jiffy! Then line your closet with the same distinctive vinyl pattern or color for a really clever touch. And then top it off by covering the lampshade and wastebasket with vinyl in a harmonizing color. You'll be so proud and pleased with the result!"

The next time you visit your favorite furniture department, look for the exciting news in rich vinyl upholstery. And see the new world of textures, patterns and colors in vinyl sheeting by the yard. It starts with the quality plastic raw material that brings you new beauty and convenience. . . .

MONSANTO Opalon® VINYL RESIN

Monsanto Chemical Company
Plastics Division, Springfield 2, Mass.

Meet more Monsanto products on CBS-TV's "Morning Show"

MONSANTO®

SERVING INDUSTRY . . . WHICH SERVES MANKIND

Our readers write us

Her Vision Will Not Fail Her

La Mesa, California

Dear Editor: Do you have the JOURNAL in Braille?

You see, yesterday my oculist told me I have less than 1 per cent vision in the left eye, and little more than that in the right.

I shall miss so much being able to read such wonderful things as Anna Perrott Rose's Frightened Boy (God help me to be as patient with my own). But after the first war, when I was working with the blinded soldiers, Doctor Dixon, the X-ray pioneer, had a friend lead me all around Toronto blindfolded, to get the feel of it. (My goodness, I was black and blue; as careful as my girl friend was, she forgot to tell me of high steps or things to bump into.) By day's end I had a little idea of what those poor boys at Christy Street Hospital were up against.

So I am not afraid!

In the garden there are gardenias, lantana and Cecille Brunners, and I intend to make a special smelly garden, so, even if the time comes when I cannot see them, I can feel, and smell, and thus enjoy

The kiss of the sun for pardon
The song of the birds for mirth,
One is nearer God's heart in a garden,
Than anywhere else on earth.

Then, too, as the children are almost through school, I am taking nine units at State College (adv. psychology, gerontology, television and English journalism) to be ready to be of some help to my adopted country, and not be helpless.

I must confess, however, at fifty-six years . . . had I known of term papers and final exams, would never have had the courage to tackle it after a thirty-year lapse!

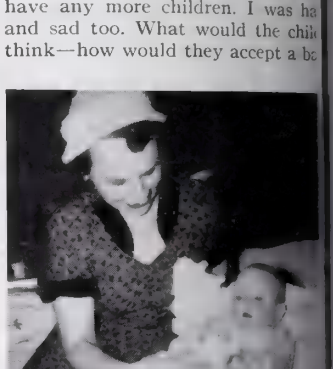
Next semester will, however, find me plugging away again—and if I do lose my eyesight, like your Pollyanna books, I can be glad God has let me have sight this long.

So many things I can study to do, if blind—and God is good. As our old nurse used to say, "If the Lord send rain, rain's my choice." So ——

Sincerely and unafraid,
CAROL S. SPERRY

Masculine Philosophy

Des Moines, Iowa



Dear Bruce: Nobody loves women more than I do; to me they are the Almighty's most pleasant earthly manifestation. But I think the relations between men and women, between husbands and wives are improved by a reasonably realistic scrutiny. As I have brought out in my local column (with which I observed the twenty-fifth anniversar my marriage to Doris), the greatest solation in normal marriages is the zation that such phenomena as qua and flirtations occur to the most blis

Yours,
HARLAN MIL

New Woman

Richmond, Virg

Dear Journal Editors: My fa seemed to take me for granted; I fe sorry for myself. Then, the mir When the doctor told me, I couldn't lieve my ears. I just didn't think I w have any more children. I was ha and sad too. What would the chil think—how would they accept a b

For the happiest Christmas

Ronald, twenty-one, was in college; J "dating" in her last year of high; David a freshman and a real "Pe bad boy."

Well, I told them, and was I surpri Mother is having a baby! They everyone—they couldn't wait for day. I was so happy—I felt import for the first time in years. The chil couldn't do enough for me, and my h band was just wonderful!

We brought our baby home from hospital on my forty-first birthday, twenty-fifth wedding anniversary

So may I say in closing, have a after forty, it will make a new woman of you. In my case, a new, happier f ily too.

Sincerely
HAZEL OW

Mother's Angels

Galion,

Dear Editors: How do you like my tle angels—who usually aren't ne this angelic?

Sincerely your
SARAH HELEN HUBB

CONTINUED ON PAGE 6

". . . but just before Christmas they're as good as they can be!"

so sweet and lovely—your Prell-washed hair!

so easy to have— 'Radiantly Alive' Hair

with PRELL SHAMPOO

SO SOFT, YET MANAGEABLE . . . SO SWEETLY CLEAN! Come-hither loveliness—that's what your hair has after a luxurious Prell shampoo! It's caressably soft, yet so obedient! Yes, angel-soft, smooth as satin, glowing with that 'Radiantly Alive' look he'll love! And Prell leaves your hair really clean . . . fresh and sweet . . . and free of embarrassing dandruff! Prell is easy to use, too—so convenient. No spill, drip or break. Try Prell tonight—it's wonderful!

now you can have new stunning STEGOR* modern design in richly gleaming SILVERPLATE

with extra heavy XP-125 plating

With a fine flair for fitting smartly into the contemporary scene, Stegor by Gorham is beautifully simple, functionally designed silverplate. It introduces great versatility of use in plated flatware . . . for example, the place size knife, fork and spoon fit both luncheon and dinner settings. Stegor's XP-125 plating means that it is plated with substantially more pure silver than the accepted standard for the finest silverplated flatware—not just at a few of the points of greatest wear, but over the entire piece, including edges of bowls and tips of tines. Dent-resistant, rattle-proof one-piece knife handles cannot come apart or develop unsightly seams. In Pace II* and Wheat II* shown. Open stock and in services for 4, 6, 8 and 12 from $24.95. Available on easy budget plans.

THESE PATTERNS ALSO IN FINE QUALITY STEGOR STAINLESS

*Trademarks

Made and guaranteed by Stegor Division, The Gorham Company, Providence 7, R. I.

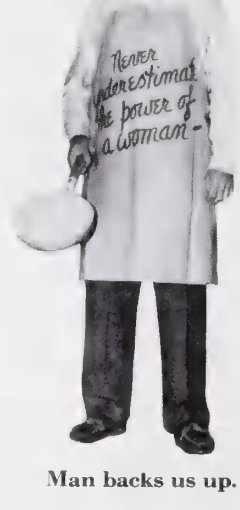
CONTINUED FROM PAGE 4

For the Record

North Hollywood, California

Dear Editors: Everyone's supposed to make his own bed, but this morning there was the usual fuss and I exclaimed, "Do you realize I make six beds every day?" My son replied, "Ma, that's an old record."

Being in an expansive mood (I was working on my second cup of coffee and the JOURNAL), I said, "O.K., let's break it down this way. How many beds do I make during the year?"



The kids went into a huddle and came up with an answer "Eighteen hundred beds!" We were all stunned. "And now dishes!" The total sum was 24,720 dishes per year. I tell you I was plumb tuckered out just thinking of it, but the kids made their beds!

Sincerely,
RUTH ZUSMER

What to Give a Man

Old Greenwich, Connecticut

Dear Editors: The aprons are blue denim, chef style, and I paint on them in red in my own handwriting.

Man backs us up.

May I thank you for the use of your slogan? (I trust it's not copyrighted!)

Yours truly,
BETTY C. HAMILTON

▶ Over the years, the JOURNAL*'s familiar slogan has become universal. The* JOURNAL holds copyright on it, but hopes it will be on everyone's lips. ED.

Spock Goes Along

Frankfurt am Main, Germany

Dear Laura Lou: I was delighted to read Dr. Spock's opinions on the pacifier in the JOURNAL. We were never sure we were doing the right thing, except that it kept the baby and the neighbors happy simultaneously. Here, practically every infant mouth I've seen is sucking a "Schnuller." Kiddies walk in nursery groups with attendants, the inevitable Schnuller bobbing in each small mouth.

I'm quite used to the lack of diaper service now, but it was a shock at first. We hired a Schwester (child's nurse) as baby sitter and she threw up her hands in horror when she heard I was just plain washing Dean's Windeln (diapers). Now I first wash, then kochen (cook) and then rewash them. Then out to the balcony (bless the universal European balconies) where we've strung clothesline. I wish you could see them, blinking white, after hours in the sun and wind. Never thought I'd ever be so proud of white Windeln.

In Germany there is plenty to do, and a heap more to learn. Yesterday I bought a teppiche Klopfer (bamboo rug beater) and today joined in the morning musicale. All over the city you hear the swish of rugs being beaten energetically every morning. Long rods are attached to most of the houses for that purpose. Our part-time maid, Freidel (she comes Wednesday mornings and goes through five rooms in four hours!) rolled up the heavy

CONTINUED ON PAGE

"Coffee-brea
with
Mary Margaret McBr

This gay, warmholiday seaso friends pop in at a your coffeepot's work overtime. A steaming cup o
tastes so good when you come in c cold, or sit around wrapping pres discussing holiday plans. And hectic shopping session what more welcome than the blissful r of a "Coffee-break"?

Then, too, for th drive cars after parties, it's a seas member that wis nition, "when it's the road,' be sure fee!" Civic officials, safety group and the nation's press and radio enthusiastically endorsed the "when it's 'one for the road,' be coffee" and strongly urge its I urge it, too, as one way to in and happy holidays for everyon thoughtful hostess should have b service ready and say that las
"Good-night-Merry Christmas-Ha Year" over a delicious, hot cup

And it's so easy certain your coff licious every ti follow the simp
tions worked out by The Coffee Institute: Use one Standard Measure, or two level tablespoons to each ¾ measuring cup of fr water. Find the right timing for y maker, then always time it exact let your coffee boil. Of course, i you serve it the moment it's do you have to let it stand, keep it h ting the pot in very hot water, or low heat on an asbestos pad.

The Coffee Brewing Institute, Inc.

551 Fifth Ave., New York 17,

Now make Ready-Mix Pancakes richer, more tender than ever before Adding Spry makes the difference!

Here's All You Do!

Use your favorite pancake ready-mix. Add one standard level tablespoon of Spry for each cup of dry ready-mix. Then follow package directions.

You'll be delighted to see how just this little bit of pure, digestible Spry improves both the flavor and the texture of easy-to-fix, ready-mix pancakes. Lever Brothers unconditionally guarantees that Spry-improved pancakes come off the griddle richer and more tender than ever before. You'll agree, or we'll return your money. For more easy recipes, drop a postcard to Spry, Lever Brothers, 390 Park Avenue, New York 22, N.Y.

Spry makes just about everything you cook taste better!

Bring back the blush with new DuBarry Bloom!

Shades of Victoria—the blush is back! You see this glow-of-cheek on the radiant, new crop of American beauties and think, "how pretty!" Nature? Vitamins? No—DuBarry Bloom!

Bloom is a wonderful new kind of color for your cheeks, so creamy-light in texture that it spreads quickly and softly as a blush! No blotching or streaking. Never any hard, artificial "rouged" look. And the pretty blush that Bloom gives your cheeks is so fresh and natural, no one would ever dream it's "put on"!

Bloom, $1.10 plus tax

Sounds like magic, but Bloom comes in just one shade and gives each her own prettiest color glow!

P. S. For a poreless looking complexion, smooth on DuBarry Flatter-Glo (as casually as you would a hand lotion). It's the fluid make-up that really does what you've been hoping a make-up would do. Conceals tiny lines and skin flaws. Never magnifies pores. It stays fresh and flattering (no greasy shine-through), and because of its exclusive ingredient, "Vibranol," holds beauty-giving moisture in the skin. Flattering shades.

Flatter-Glo, $1.10 plus tax

DUBARRY BEAUTY PREPARATIONS
by RICHARD HUDNUT of Fifth Avenue

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 6

9′ x 12′ living-room rug, slung it over her shoulder, and started for the hall door before I saw her. I gasped, "Nicht! Nein! Nix! Nay!" but neither I nor the four flights of stairs fazed her a bit. The rug needed it, and that was that. Friedel, who is strong and tall, wouldn't hear of my helping, but I got in a few whacks. It certainly is good exercise.

I must start my spaghetti sauce before Dean wakes up for his lunch. Shopping here is exciting—for instance, wonderful tomatoes from three countries. So tonight we're having Italian-Dutch-Spanish tomato sauce with German pork and beef. I haven't been able to find orégano in Frankfurt, but am sure there is some somewhere. But now my international sauce's ingredients are still four countries apart, and Dean is waking up!

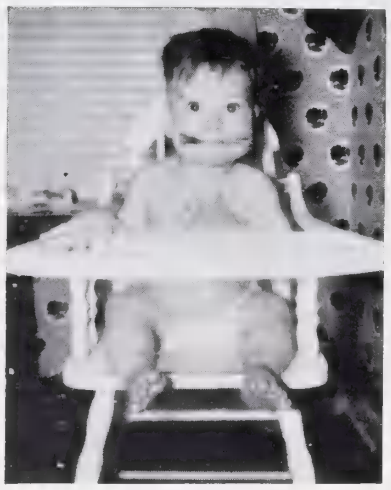
Much love,
VILMA CHANTILES

Divorce Too Easy?

Kentucky

Dear Editors: Let me tell you that I am now a statistic. Mine is that one marriage in five that has ended in divorce. Since it is my first and I devoutly trust my only experience, I cannot say that I am an expert.

But judging from my experience, there is a bigger farce enacted in the courts today than anyone can imagine. Nothing on earth is so easily obtainable as a divorce, unless it is the holy estate of matrimony.



Why do I write this? Because I hope people will go back to the old belief that marriage is a serious, sacred institution, not to be lightly entered nor lightly abandoned. And the man and the woman concerned are not the only ones who must consider it as such. The American people seem to have withdrawn from the word "duty." Yours very truly,

(Name withheld by request)

First Christmas Dinner

Greenwood, Mississippi

Dear Editor: Here is a snapshot of my little boy, Mike, with his very first Adventure in eating.

bone. Little boys, like little dogs, can cut teeth on sturdy Christmas bones but should not have splintery ones.

Regards,
MRS. W. R. MALLETTE

International Flavor

Abqaiq, Saudi Arabia

Dear Mrs. Bass: We are sending you a cookbook which was compiled by our group. Actually, we had intended sending it to your food editor, but the general impression is that you are all one big happy family, hence we send the book to the "head of the Workshop."

We are women whose husbands are employed by the Arabian-American Oil Company. Most of us are Americans, but a number of other nationalities are represented, as you may note from the variety of recipes in the cookbook. An international flavor, as it were! Perhaps you will be interested in preparing the Arab feast which is thoroughly described

CONTINUED ON PAGE 107

Take a lesso from the pr

look for Dot in skiing clot

DOTS mean Dot Fasteners, w everything in active sportswea work, sure to hold fast, they loc at the flick of a wrist. Look for button Fasteners when you bu just as you look for Dot Snappe wearables. And don't forget, for sewing, there's the Dot Snapper professional attaching tool, counters, $1. Refill, 25¢.

snap! it's open!
snap! it's closed!
it's a snap with
DO

UNITED-CARR, FIRST IN FASTENERS, CAMBR

at HOME with Arlene Francis and go on a big television Christmas shopping spree!

Ah, happy day! The brain-wracking, back-breaking job of choosing Christmas gifts is over, finished, done for! Now, you just curl up in a chair with your gift list, and watch HOME'S FIRST ANNUAL CHRISTMAS SHOPPING FESTIVAL, on your television set.

HOME, you know, is that fabulous NBC "electronic magazine of the air." Editor-in-chief Arlene Francis and her staff, will bring you the wares of the world to choose from. On each of 19 days you'll see perfect, hand-picked gifts for everyone on your list. Never on TV such a specialized, tailor-made service.

It's the biggest Christmas shopping spree in history, minus the rush and crush . . . the guesswork and legwork. And it's fun! Don't miss a single date at your right.

Gifts for:

Nov. 29—SERVICE PEOPLE
Nov. 30—INFANTS AND TODDLERS, Age 1-4 years
Dec. 1 —WIVES AND MOTHERS
Dec. 2 —HUSBANDS
Dec. 3 —HALF PINTS, Boys and Girls, Age 4-7 years
Dec. 6 —BOYS AND GIRLS, Age 8-10 years
Dec. 7 —FAMILY GIFTS
Dec. 8 —WIVES AND MOTHERS
Dec. 9 —HUSBANDS
Dec. 10—CHILDREN, Boys and Girls, Age 1-10 years
Dec. 13—PRE-TEENS, Girls, Age 10-13 years
Dec. 14—PRE-TEENS, Boys, Age 10-13 years
Dec. 15—GRANDMA AND HER FRIENDS
Dec. 16—GRANDPA AND HIS FRIENDS
Dec. 17—CHILDREN, Boys and Girls, Age 1-10 years
Dec. 20—TEENAGERS, Boys, Age 13-16 years
Dec. 21—TEENAGERS, Girls, Age 13-16 years
Dec. 22—COLLEGE AND CAREER GIRLS
Dec. 23—THE MEN IN YOUR LIFE
Dec. 24—CHRISTMAS AT "HOME" (Special Holiday Program)

Check your local newspaper listing for time and channel.

NBC TELEVISION
a service of RCA

MY GOODNESS, YOU CAN EAT JELL-O PUDDINGS HOT!

Just cook creamy-smooth Jell-O Pudding the way you always have . . . but instead of chilling, serve it right away!

Hot and nourishing, it's the perfect dessert for children . . . and grownups, too . . . on cool, crisp days.

You'll love it. Practically everyone does.

Chocolate
Vanilla
Butterscotch
Lemon
Coconut Cream

Jell-O is a registered trade-mark of General Foods Corp. Copr. 1954, General Foods Corp.

Executive Editor: Mary Bass

Managing Editor: Laura Lou Brookman

Associate Editors: Hugh MacNair Kahler, Bernardine Kielty, Ann Batchelder, Wilhela Cushman, William E. Fink, Richard Pratt, Henrietta Murdock, Louella G. Shouer, Mary Lea Page, Dawn Crowell Norman, Margaret Davidson, Nora O'Leary, Barbara Benson, Glenn Matthew White, Donald Stuart, Ruth Imler, Tina S. Fredericks, Helen Everitt, Peter Briggs

Contributing Editors: Gladys Taber, Louise Paine Benjamin, Gladys Denny Shultz, Margaret Hickey, Betty Kidd, Ruth Mills Teague

Editorial Associates: John Werner, Charlotte Johnson, Ruth Mary Packard, Ruth Shapley Matthews, Alice Conkling, Joseph Di Pietro, Anne Einselen, Elizabeth Goetsch, Nancy Crawford, Cynthia McAdoo Wheatland, Rosemary Jones, Nelle Keys Perry, Adrina Kayaian

Assistant Editors: Victoria Harris, Alice Kastberg, Virginia Price, Dorothy Anne Robinson, Jean Todd Freeman, Elizabeth McFarland, Eileen Sharpe, Albert Serwazi, Dolores Knapp, Polly Toland Cooke

Editorial Assistants: Lee Stowell Cullen, Patricia Martin, Aileen Dowd, June Schwartz, Gretchen Wehler, Babette Brimberg, Joyce Posson, Flora Casparian, Betty Jo Ramsey, Constance Holland, Helen Schofield Lukacs, Alberte Wright, Simone Smith, Betty Coe Spicer, Carol Mercado, Elizabeth Hart, Hazel Owen, Mary Margaret Conte, Ann C. Smith

"Winter," by Ann Didyk, is an etching from the touring exhibit Young American Printmakers, sponsored by New York's Museum of Modern Art. Featured in the show are the works of one hundred artists under thirty-five years of age, many of them by young women.

Ann Didyk, art librarian at the State University of Iowa, sketched "Winter" from her bedroom window while she studied for her master's degree in prints. After a typically heavy Iowa snowfall, she spent a week on the drawing, nine months on the etching, and captured with an intricate interplay of delicacy and strength the mood of a dusky midwinter afternoon.

The baby in the kitchen

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

TWENTY-FOUR years ago in early July a two-weeks-old baby came to Twin Farms, our home in Vermont. He was my baby. Everything had been prepared for his arrival: a sunny nursery, immaculately and sanitarily white with an adjoining room and bath for the trained baby nurse I had employed, both as far removed as possible from the study of his father, a famous writer, and from the normal traffic of the house.

Twenty-four years ago the services of an experienced baby nurse, cook, housemaid and gardener could be obtained for less than a not-at-all-experienced couple would cost today, and the baby's father was well able to afford such a staff, and two secretaries, and occasional hourly help for the garden as well.

In such a household there was complete division of labor. The cook cooked and took care of the kitchen; the housemaid cared for the other rooms; the gardener had a room outside the house and appeared only briefly for meals; the secretaries lived outside and came from nine to one and two to five; and nurse, who had her meals on a tray, took entire care of the baby, the nursery, and had no other duties.

During the weeks when I was able to nurse him, I appeared at 10 A.M., 2 and 6 P.M. in the nursery to perform that function, and for night feedings nurse brought him to my bedside. If he cried at other times (or yelled—a baby's cries are tearless) nobody heard him but nurse. She changed and washed his diapers and clothes, and brought him in daily for the brief admiration of his parents exquisitely dressed, pleasantly redolent of violet-scented talcum, and either peacefully asleep or contentedly and equally peacefully awake.

Apart from the attentions of the white-uniformed, quiet and perfectly efficient nurse he lived in almost complete isolation, a cocoonlike existence. Babies, I had been advised, should not be fondled. They should not be subject to noises. They should be kept aloof from company who might carry germs. They must always be bathed and fed at exactly the same time and preferably by the same person. They should never be rocked. They should never be given any medicine except on the advice of a pediatrician. They should be kept away from bright lights. And since he was my first baby, born late in my life and likely to be my only one, I did exactly what the doctor told me for the apple of my eye.

He was a healthy baby. He cost me no sleepless nights and no cares. The only "sacrifices" I endured were not being able to go to a party or visit a neighbor or be with friends in my own house while I was nursing him, at nursing hours.

To be sure, I used to wonder how babies survived who couldn't be brought up in nurseries by trained attendants, or by mothers with nothing else to do; how, in fact, I and my brother and sister had survived in blooming health reared as we were in a far more haphazard fashion. Later, I observed that my little boy, no longer a baby, was more nervous than most, and more easily upset by strange faces or noises, and that the infant who led a germless existence caught, as a child, every ailment—scarlet fever, measles, chicken pox, mumps, whooping cough—that cropped up in a radius of twenty-five miles. But I never really questioned whether the whole pattern of his baby care might not have been ideal.

This summer another two-weeks-old baby came with his mother to Twin Farms—the son of that first baby. His father was employed in a summer theater and their New York apartment sublet, so baby's first home, like his father's, was the Vermont house—capacious, its gardens wide, but the household arrangements very different from what they were twenty-four years ago.

The house, staffed by a neighbor and her daughter, both mothers and one a grandmother, plus my secretary, is not run on a defined system of division of labor, but the way those of families who do their own work are run: one doing most but not all of the cooking, another most but not always all of the housework, and everybody pitching in within the limits of her free time to lend a hand. In this house the kitchen, once the no other muffin pan bakes better, or cleans as easily as the new seamless, one-piece

MIRRO

MUFFIN PAN

Get yours today, at department, hardware, and home furnishing stores, wherever dealers sell the finest aluminum.

6-cup, 50c (West, 55c)
12-cup, 95c (West, 1.00)
12-cup tea size, 50c (West, 55c)

your best buy.... MIRRO
THE FINEST ALUMINUM

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
COMMENDED BY PARENTS' MAGAZINE

MIRRO CAKE LOOSENER LAYER CAKE PAN
8 x 1½", 85c

MIRRO FRUIT CAKE PAN
10¼ x 3⅝ x 2⅝", 95c

MIRRO PIE PAN
8 x 1¼", 55c

MIRRO TUBED CAKE PAN
10" diam., 1.95

MIRRO SQUARE CAKE PAN
8 x 8 x 2", 80c

MIRRO BREAD PAN
9¼ x 5¼ x 2¾", 75c

MIRRO OBLONG PAN
11 x 7 x 1½", 85c

ALUMINUM GOODS MANUFACTURING COMPANY, MANITOWOC, WIS.
World's Largest Manufacturer of Aluminum Cooking Utensils
Prices slightly higher in west domain of a professional cook, is the hub of the home. Here, in addition to daily meals being prepared, vegetables are canned or sterilized for the freezer, chickens are drawn, butter is churned, even lambs or calves are cut up and wrapped for the freezer, the latter invariably done by my artist husband, who finds the study of anatomy good training for a butcher.

Redesigned three years ago by the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL to fit just such a home economy as ours, it is, with a room-size pantry and "summer kitchen" flanking it, a big, very beautiful kitchen, with every modern convenience, including electric range and ovens. But the old wood range is still there. This past summer in Northern New England was uniquely chilly and rainy; but the cheery range warmed the kitchen and back of the house, exuding a pleasant aromatic smell. And as everyone gravitates toward the kitchen, so did baby, his bassinet landing plump in front of the range, with an opened oven door, or, when it was warm and sunny, on the veranda right outside the south kitchen windows.

A young mother needs rest, especially when she must soon face caring for baby alone and doing her housework too. Her nights were interrupted by feeding her son, nestled in the basket beside her bed. So who took care of baby during the day while his mother was resting? Everybody did—and with baby in the kitchen someone was always at hand to lay aside a duster or turn from a pot in response to his cries.

Was he rocked? He certainly was—a foot pushing his bassinet back and forth while its owner's hands peeled potatoes or shelled peas.

Was he always fed at exactly the prescribed hour? He was not. "He's sleeping so sweetly I wouldn't wake him up," one of baby's numerous mothers would say. Or, "That cry means hunger, and it's clear he just didn't get enough to eat last time. Why not give him a little supplementary bottle?"

Was he picked up? He certainly was, and carried and crooned to, and by everybody. Our neighbor, the writer, Vincent Sheean, proved an especially acceptable baby walker. He explained learnedly that his forearm was exactly the right length, to the fraction of an inch, to permit him to cradle baby's head in his elbow and hold his bottom in his hand; that baby's preference for him was purely due to this mechanical fact—this to spare the feelings of the rest of us. Just the same, it was obvious that he considered the pacifying effect of his presence a feather in his cap, and a demonstration that he was altogether a superior fellow (as indeed he is) and one in whom a helpless infant could properly repose complete confidence.

When, though warm, dry and fed, baby cried, cramping up his legs in an obvious touch of the colic, it was the consensus of the four mothers that two drops of peppermint oil in some warm water "could do him no harm"—and he quieted down.

A sufficient measure of civilization is the influence of good women.—EMERSON

MOST of the time he slept, in the midst of conversation, kitchen noises, kitchen lights and kitchen smells, or gazed up calmly at the many faces of the household, of visitors, of house guests, of children who stopped at his cradle to cluck admiringly. Of course he interrupted the housework. But "Don't bother about my room—I'll make my own bed," said a house guest. "Let me dust the big living room," said another, their services gratefully accepted.

After evening dinner my helpmates go to their own homes and families. Then baby was wherever the family and visitors forgathered. I would never have dreamed of nursing my child in company, but this baby's young mother saw no reason why she should leave a pleasant tea party of intimate friends to feed her tiny son. When we were invited out to dinner we went—and took the baby, who seemed to love the motion of a car and to slumber as well in one place as in another.

To be sure, having the baby in t of everything was sometimes a nuis occasionally aroused protests. Even foot down when, on a rainy day, I rack of baby clothes drying over th in the dining room, where we we to have lunch, and my husband "This house is becoming a slum."

A friend had sent baby a funny c to his bassinet, which, wound up, p Brahms Cradle Song. Baby liked it. restless the sound composed him tinkled from the kitchen, the livin or wherever baby happened to b charming tune—or I used to think s tually the sound became a mild "Couldn't we find another music b that would play the Mozart cradle a change?" I found myself complai

THIS, however, I observed: babie cows and chickens) like music. Or this one did. He went happily to sle living room to the thunder of Shosta Fifth Symphony, or Gershwin's Rha Blue, played on the phonograph.

Heated discussions over EDC a appraisals of foreign policy" had an soporific effect. He appeared to ret the conversation in sheer boredom pressing suggestion that grandma's forth might have the same effect on ups if they had not learned to be pol

The point is that against all the a of "peace and quiet," baby und preferred goings big, beautiful vi eyes—"all babies Caucasian race a with blue eyes may turn out to b or hazel or a color," the P professor from n warned us—wou toward the sound of a voice, or a a movement, though he could not more than light and shadow. The life around him seemed to give him scious comfort. And why shouldn' pecially since the two mothers, two mothers, stepgrandfather, baby-cra tary, neighbors' children, Harvard p visiting guests and Mr. Sheean were ing and solicitous. Is affection not a radiant warmth?

The stepgrandfather had determi to be taken in. "I want to make it cle not be disturbed by the baby," he h How surprising, then, to find the bab arm, looking up at him with a wide ing gaze. "He was yelling like a Slovak," he explained defensively. " you women around—what a house somebody attend to this child?"

I explained weakly that babies waited on hand and foot every time t "He'll grow into a little tyrant."

"Nonsense," said the big man crossness is always phony.

After five weeks, baby and his mo to leave, to rejoin his father in Ne The station wagon drew up at the s kitchen door, packed with bathinet, b chest of drawers, scales, clothes rack a moving! Baby in his mother's arms just been fed) gazed brightly and I quite callously on us all.

Never kiss a baby? Everybody him—on top of his head. Gran Alice's eyes filled with tears; moth burst into sobs; Grandma Dorothy a a matter-of-fact stoicism. Secretary (who was driving them down) looke efficient, but still nervous over her r bility.

"Well," said stepgrandfather, "t is over. . . . What a happy mess!"

"Now I must really concentrate work," I said—knowing that what I centrate on was missing the baby.

In the kitchen the oven door of th range was closed. There was no drying baby clothes, no bassinet, n of the Brahms Cradle Song.

"This kitchen seems absolutely said Alice, wiping her eyes. There w of us in it at the time.

ou bake these luscious gifts e quicker Wesson way

They keep so well
(thanks to Wesson)
. . . pack so easily . . . ship so safely

Start with the shortening you pour to measure and never have to cream—light, sparkling Wesson Oil. You bake these festive gifts without the bother of digging out and melting solid shortening. Mild, delicate Wesson Oil is easier to measure accurately—easier to mix.

You can give your Wesson-baked gifts with confidence, knowing they will taste as good as good can be. In all the world, there's no oil so light, so mild and so popular as Wesson Oil. Bake the quicker Wesson way—and see!

WESSON FRUITCAKE CUPCAKES

- 1 cup Wesson Oil
- 1½ cups brown sugar (packed in cup)
- 4 eggs
- 2 cups sifted all-purpose flour (such as Gold Medal)
- *1 teaspoon baking powder
- *2 teaspoons salt
- 2 teaspoons cinnamon
- 2 teaspoons allspice
- 1 teaspoon cloves
- *1 cup pineapple, apple or orange juice
- 1 cup more sifted flour
- 1 cup thinly sliced citron
- 1 cup chopped candied pineapple
- 1½ cups whole candied cherries
- 1 cup seeded raisins
- 1 cup chopped figs
- 3 cups coarsely chopped nuts

Combine Wesson Oil, sugar and eggs; beat vigorously with spoon or electric mixer for 2 minutes. Sift 2 cups of the flour with the baking powder, salt, and spices. Stir into the oil mixture alternately with the fruit juice. Mix the other cup of flour with the fruits and nuts. Pour batter over the fruit, mixing thoroughly. Pour into 24 paper baking cups set in medium size muffin pans. Place a pan of water on lower oven rack. Bake cupcakes 1 hour in slow oven (275°). After baking, let cakes stand 15 minutes before removing from pans. Cool thoroughly without removing paper. Glaze and decorate with candied cherries and angelica.

When using Gold Medal Self-Rising Flour: (1) omit baking powder and salt; (2) have fruit juice boiling hot when adding; (3) do not add eggs until the mixture has cooled to lukewarm (about ½ hour).*

WESSON BROWNIES

- ¾ cup sifted all-purpose cake flour (such as Gold Medal)
- *½ teaspoon baking powder
- *¾ teaspoon salt
- 2 eggs
- 1 cup sugar
- ⅓ cup Wesson Oil
- 2 squares unsweetened chocolate, melted
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- ½ cup coarsely chopped nuts

Sift flour with baking powder and salt. Beat eggs, add sugar in 3 portions; beat well after each addition. Add Wesson Oil, melted and cooled chocolate, and vanilla; beat thoroughly. Add flour mixture, mix well. Stir in nuts. Oil 8 x 8 x 2-inch baking pan with Wesson Oil. Pour in batter, spread evenly. Bake in moderate oven (350°) about 35 minutes. Cool in pan on cake rack. Spread with chocolate icing and decorate with walnut halves. Makes 15 brownies.

When using Gold Medal Self-Rising Flour omit baking powder and salt.*

CHOCOLATE ICING: Melt over hot water 1 tablespoon butter and 1 square unsweetened chocolate. Blend in 2 tablespoons hot milk and a dash of salt. Stir in about 1 cup sifted confectioners' sugar, and beat until icing will spread easily. Spread quickly.

EAR GIVE FOOD

of your love goes y gift you bake"

MERICA'S FAVORITE

for Salads, Frying, Chiffon Cakes, Stir-N-Roll Pie Crust and Biscuits

Wesson Oil

SEE "HAWKINS FALLS" NBC-TV NETWORK MONDAY THRU FRIDAY

Here is proof: You can st

A national research laboratory proves Jergens Lotion more effective than any other lotion tested for stopping detergent damage*

Recently, 447 women made a grueling test. It was conducted by a national research laboratory. The purpose: to find the answer to the most serious skin problem housewives face today – "detergent hands."

These women soaked both their hands in detergents, three times a day. After each soaking, Jergens Lotion was applied to their right hands. Their left hands were not treated. Skin scientists supervised these important tests.

The amazing result. In 3 or 4 days, u hands were red and rough, even crac bleeding. Yet hands given Jergens Lot were soft, unblemished, smooth, and wh

Many other lotions were tested the same way. Not one proved as effective as Jergens Lotion. Not even 100% pure lanolin did a better job (and no hand care contains more than 15% lanolin).

The famous Jergens formula, improved over 50 years, positively stops detergent damage. This means it's ideal for roughness, chapping, and all the hand problems you have. It's never sticky or greasy.

Now every woman can be assured of lovely, smooth, f hands! If you have not tried Jergens lately, now is the ti will find it a heavier, creamier lotion, with a pleasing n grance. Jergens Lotion is still only 10¢ to $1.00, plus tax.

Jergens Lotion positively stops "Detergent Hands"

954

"Detergent Hands" with Jergens Lotion

These are the hands of Beth Anderson, one of the 447 women in the "detergent hands" experiment. Both her hands were soaked in detergents. Her left hand was untreated. Her right hand was cared for with Jergens Lotion. The difference was astonishing! Jergens Lotion will work as well for you, or your money will be returned. This photograph is unretouched.

* NOTICE to doctors and dermatologists: A summary copy of this independent research report is available to you. Write on your letterhead to The Andrew Jergens Company, Cincinnati 14, Ohio.

IT'S LOVE,
AT FIRST WIPE!

Wonderful, new Dish Towel

It's not linen . . . not just cotton . . . it's nothing like anything you ever used before. The happy-go-drying Kendall Dish Towel is made of a wonderful new fabric specially developed to do a better drying job!

That it does — in no uncertain fashion. These towels dry twice as many dishes in just about half the usual time. They're soft . . . absolutely lintless . . . generous jumbo size. And so easy to use. A light wipe and your china, pottery, glassware and silver is shining, sparkling dry! That's the way they act their whole life through, and that's a good long time.

Choice of red, green, blue or yellow border stripes. Sold in all leading stores, or mail the coupon for sample towel.

COMMENDED BY THE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS' MAGAZINE

SATISFACTORY OR A REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED HEREIN

By the makers of Gurity Diapers

KENDALL Dish Towel
PATENT APPLIED FOR

Introductory Offer

KENDALL MILLS—Division of
The Kendall Company, Walpole, Mass., Dept. KJ124
Enclosed is 50c in coin for Kendall Dish Towel.
(Only one towel to a family.) Print clearly.

Name_____
Address_____
City_____ State_____
Favorite Store_____
Good only in Continental United States and Hawaii

Under-Cover Stuff

By BERNARDINE KIELTY

H. ARMSTRONG ROBERTS

Pets and books rank high as Christmas gifts for children.

NEW YORK—as we who live here always say—is a sweet place to be at Christmas. One of the pleasant experiences is to go to the uptown Trinity churchyard on Christmas Eve afternoon, where there is a children's lantern procession to the grave of Clement Moore, who wrote A Visit From St. Nicholas, better known to all of us as The Night Before Christmas. His poem is read and a wreath is laid on his grave. Everywhere you look Christmas trees sparkle and people hurry along with bundles.

Catching up in popularity with A Visit From St. Nicholas is Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer. A Visit was written in 1822. Rudolph is 1939 folklore out of Montgomery Ward. It was written by Robert May, an advertising man who was asked to get up a Christmas animal story to be distributed by the firm as a giveaway. As most everyone knows (it has sold in hundreds of thousands) it has the ugly-duckling plot with the ever-popular schnozzle motif.

●

Being an old traditionalist, I find myself giving children old-time favorites for Christmas books—the classics that they may somehow have missed: PETER RABBIT; ALICE IN WONDERLAND; the Howard Pyle ROBIN HOOD and KING ARTHUR; Dorothy Canfield's UNDERSTOOD BETSY; PINOCCHIO; DR. DOOLITTLE; Kenneth Grahame's THE WIND IN THE WILLOWS; the JUNGLE BOOKS. Maybe I give them because I like to read them myself. But fine new books are coming out every year that the children themselves may well prefer.

Just picking here and there among the hundreds of new ones now on display:

For children 4–8, there is HURRY, SCURRY AND FLURRY, by Mary and Conrad Buff—forest life through the seasons with three baby squirrels. Also THE SEVEN REMARKABLE BEARS, by Emilie Warren McLeod, about a lonesome polar bear in the zoo.

For the next group, OLD TANGLE EYE, by Ralph E. Johnstone, adventure with cowboys, Indians, claim jumpers, eighty years ago in Colorado.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 18

COLLIER'S

"Calm down, lady. When I said you were too late for mistletoe I simply meant we were all sold out."

"Hot gingerbread for Chri breakfast. Of course you've th of that. And delicate Angel Foo for the folks who come to hel the tree. And cupcakes — you have too many cupcakes.

"Wouldn't the children like t a Honey Spice Cake for Gran and spell out 'I love you' wit raisins in the icing? Wouldn't be the friendliest thing you take along to the Christmas pa Or serve hot to the carolers?

"But I must stop – I want sp tell you how to make all those across the way. It's all done with Crocker Cake Mixes. Here's ho

1. Tree Tops. Marble Cake's eas new Betty Crocker Marble Cak Cut in squares—frost with chocola ter frosting. Make tree with silve

2. Snowballs! Chocolate Devils thickly spread with fluffy, white f and cupcakes or squares of cake r fresh coconut. Add a Christmas

3. Holly Wreath. Betty Crocker Spice and white icing make this cu Green-tinted coconut and red cin candies form the wreath.

4. Ribbon Crescents. Use Betty C Yellow Cake Mix for this...cut wit moon cutter, frost with green-t butter frosting, add a garland of

5. Snow Peaks. Everybody's favo Chocolate Devils Food made up in cakes—with fluffy white frost maraschino cherry and candy l

6. Christmas Candle. This is quick Honey Spice—with Easy Penuche (see pkg.). Gumdrops form the ca

7. Poinsettias. Add ½ cup ch maraschino cherries, well drained, to Crocker White Cake Mix batter to this cake. Frost with white fro Arrange sliced cherries to form

8. Gingerbread Man! And a n good one, too. Made with Betty C Ginger Bread Mix, recipe on packag decorated with frosting and candie

9. Shadow Box. Start with Betty C Yellow Cake Mix...then cover with white frosting, "shadow-frost' melted chocolate; add colored sprin

Betty

PERFECT? Yes, we DO mean p You be the judge. If a cake you mak a Betty Crocker Cake Mix is les perfect, mail the box top to Betty C Box 200, Minneapolis, Minn. General Mills will send your money*

Now Being Sold in C

2.

3.

5.

6.

8.

9.

Crocker says: Bake a batch of Merry Christmas!

and remember... I guarantee a perfect cake every time you bake* with any of my 7 good cake mixes!

MARBLE ANGEL FOOD GINGER BREAD CHOCOLATE DEVILS FOOD YELLOW WHITE HONEY SPICE

Your KIRBY MAN Can Be a Wonderful Santa Claus

At a call from you he'll give you the exciting story of a Christmas gift that does more things for Her than anything else made for the home . . . and a lot for you, too—as over a million households in America can tell you. Look him up under "Kirby" in your phone book—ask your Kirby Man to tell you about this pushbutton housekeeping that means a bright clean home without the drudgery you want your favorite housewife to avoid. Actually it's 78 Christmas gifts in one package—she'll love it! . . . If you can't find your Kirby Man quickly, drop us a line and he'll call you . . .

WYKM

. . . and when you see this button. Welcome Your Kirby Man!

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Kirby

The Scott & Fetzer Company
1926 West 114th Street • Cleveland 2, Ohio
Also Made in and Distributed throughout Canada
Home Sanitation Since 1919

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 16

For still older, BANNER IN THE SKY, by James Ramsey Ullman, about a boy and a mountain to climb. Also THE WONDERFUL WINTER, by Marchette Chute, who tells about a young English aristocrat who ran away to London and there met Shakespeare and the Players in his theater.

In RAINBOW ROUND THE WORLD, by Elizabeth Yates, a boy actually does go round the world, with a worker for UNICEF, and sees what the children in many lands need and what can be done to help them.

For any age SO'M I is a funny book. It is by Ted Key, creator of the Hazel cartoons. This is about an ardent would-be race horse whose back legs are bowed and whose front legs are knock-kneed. Happy ending.

●

HAVE TUX, WILL TRAVEL is what the vaudeville actors used to say in their ads when looking for jobs: they were ready to start anywhere and they could look classy. Now it is the title of Bob Hope's autobiography, he having been one of those old-time troupers himself. In fact, he still has a schedule that sounds like an airliner's.

F.P.G.

Bob Hope in action.

Bob's name is Leslie Towne Hope. When young Les was a butcher's helper, he had a girl named Mildred. The first time they kissed she didn't really mean to kiss him. He tricked her into it. They were drinking from the same fountain and he turned the water off. She was wearing braces and he was wearing braces. When they kissed, their braces locked. After that they went everywhere together.

That's the way it goes. If you like Bob Hope you'll like the book. Personally I enjoy them both—for quite a while.

●

THE SPOOR OF SPOOKS and Other Nonsense is entertainment of another sort. It is by Bergen Evans, author of THE NATURAL HISTORY OF NONSENSE, professor of English at Northwestern University, and master of ceremonies on the TV show Down You Go. This is debunking of the first order. You'll find many of your treasured superstitions and old beliefs blown to the wind.

Take youth and age: spanking a baby at birth has no effect on its breathing; the child's second year is not particularly dangerous; bowlegs are not caused by too

CONTINUED ON PAGE 20

Don't be Disappointed

Be on the alert for fast-talking carpet salesmen who tell you that anything is "just as good" as SMOOTHEDGE® tackless carpet installation.

There is no substitute for SMOOTHEDGE! The beauty of your carpet depends upon it. The smooth, tailored finish along moldings and up to doorways is admired by everyone . . . and it's only possible with SMOOTHEDGE because SMOOTHEDGE grips carpet from underneath. You can use it on any kind of floor with any type carpet.

NO TACK MA
with Smoothedg
Tackless Carpet Install

Write today for your free copy of o let. You'll love the suggestions for color schemes for your home.

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND Guaranteed Good Housekee IF NOT AS ADVERTISED TH

THE ROBERTS CO.,
Dept. LH412
1536 N. Indiana St.,
Los Angeles 54, Calif.

Please send me my free copy of "
You'd Like It."

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *Zone*____ *State*____

Note: In Canada write Box 129, Westo

You'll want to try this quick—easy recipe—French's Gourmet Sauce—so delicious with cold meats. Melt ½ cup currant jelly and stir in ½ cup French's Prepared Mustard. That's all—serve it hot.

Here's extra flavor and zest for "second day" meals

FRENCH'S MUSTARD

does something wonderful for Holiday Leftovers!

- ✓ FRENCH'S pure yellow Mustard blends better because it's creamier . . . smoother.
- ✓ FRENCH'S rich mustard goodness does not fade out in cooking.
- ✓ Get a jar tomorrow and see what a wonderful flavor difference FRENCH'S makes!

FREE! NEW RECIPE LEAFLET "10 Ways to Dress-up Leftovers!"

The R. T. French Co.
1994 Mustard Street, Rochester 9, N.Y.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 18

early walking; tickling babies does not cause them to stutter. (Many more boys than girls stutter. Were many more boys than girls tickled when they were babies?) Thumb-sucking is as normal as breathing (child psychologists quoted) and attempts to stop it may lead to maloccluded personalities. Which do you prefer, Professor Bergen asks, a bucket-toothed snerd, or a neurotic nitwit?

Childhood, he continues, is not the best age for learning. Any age below forty-five is better than the ages from ten to fourteen.

●

HANDBOOK ON V. D., by Dr. Carroll T. Bowen, is a sensible, clear explanation of venereal diseases. It tells how to prevent them, it sweeps away the errors that have grown up around them, and provides information, easy to understand, which may sometime save the health or even the life of a relative, friend, acquaintance or associate.

Long-time JOURNAL readers will remember that the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL was a pioneer in bringing the knowledge of venereal disease before the public. In 1937 it started a campaign against silence and shamed whispers, with editorials by the Goulds, articles by Paul de Kruif and Dr. Thomas Parran, followed by hundreds of letters of praise for their courage and forthrightness.

HANDBOOK ON V. D. is prepared for college and high-school students, nurses, military personnel, adult-education groups, and patients who have not understood the import of their disease. (University of Miami Press, Coral Gables 46, Florida.)

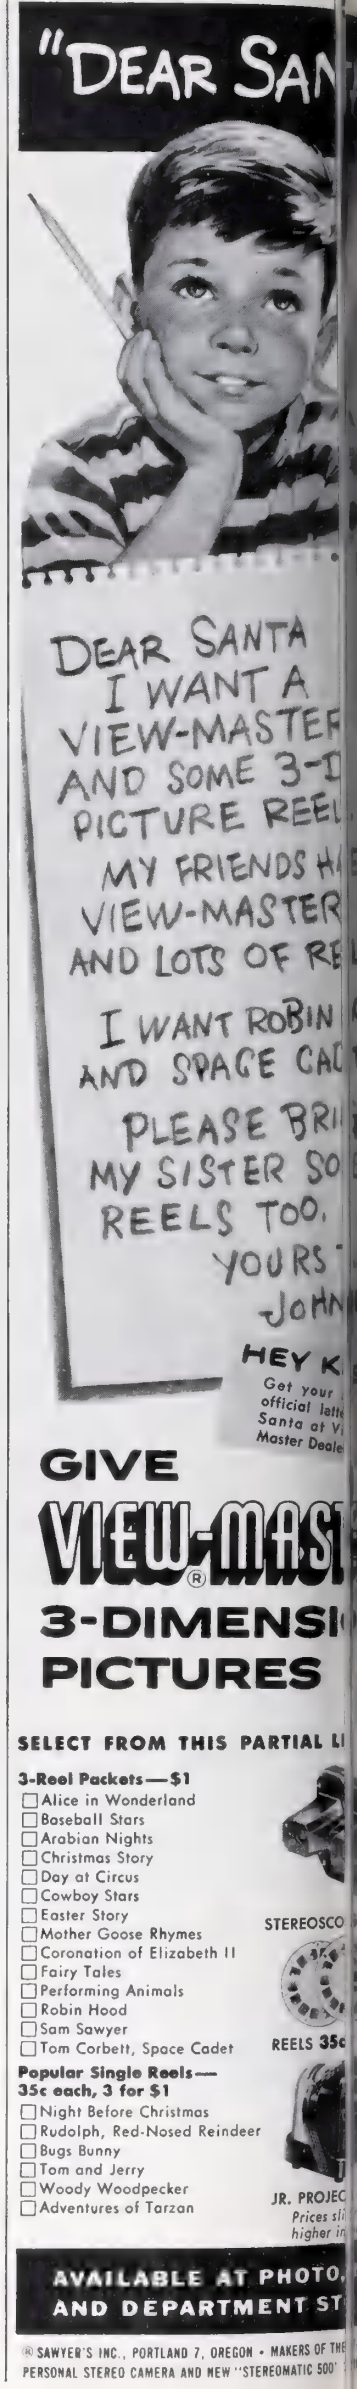
●

THE STORY OF THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE is a handsome book, with text by historian Dumas Malone and a remarkable collection of old prints and new photographs assembled by Hirst Kilhollen and Milton Kaplan, of the Prints Department of the Library of Congress.

The story of our first great national achievement is done full justice. Here are the signers—a portrait of each signer, a brief biography and a glimpse of his home and family which will forever dispel any notion that our Founding Fathers were rough pioneers. They were the cream of the eighteenth century—educated, cultivated, liberal, as this book will testify. The wonderful phrases, which we now read again, will always stand as a statement of their ideals.



To see where we've gone since those enlightened days, read Thomas K. Finletter's POWER AND POLICY: U. S. FOREIGN POLICY AND MILITARY POWER IN THE HYDROGEN AGE. Not only to see where we've gone but to understand what we can do in the immediate future in the way of defense, and in our search for peace. Mr. Finletter was Secretary of the Air Force from 1950 to 1953.

●

Nothing could be farther from the hydrogen age than WOODLAND PORTRAITS, by Jeannette Klute. This is a large spacious book containing fifty magnificent color photographs of Nature. It is color such as you have never dreamed: light through the pale pink petal of a flower; the sparkle on a frog's wet green back; the whiteness of a trillium. It is Nature in small precise detail.

The photographs are listed in the appendix, where Miss Klute notes

CONTINUED ON PAGE 23

PRESENTING

New

FLINT DELUXE STAINLESS TABLEWARE

...IT SPARKLES!

Here you are at last! Stainless tableware, combined with precious vanadium to assure a permanently polished silvery finish that really sparkles!

This is not just ordinary stainless! This is Flint De Luxe Stainless with vanadium added for heirloom beauty . . . heirloom quality. Its sparkling silvery finish never tarnishes . . . never shows a sign of wear. Choose your favorite from these five exquisite patterns and you'll set a gracious table every meal . . . every day . . . on every occasion, including your "fanciest" party!

You can get Flint De Luxe in everything from cocktail forks to serving pieces. Open stock pieces start at 75 cents. Every pattern also comes in gift-boxed sets from $14.95 and individual serving pieces from $1.25.

If your store does not yet have sparkling new Flint De Luxe Stainless Vanadium Tableware, write us for the name of the dealer nearest you.

FULLY GRADED
like fine sterling!

THIN THICK THIN

For three dimensional beauty . . . greater strength . . . perfect balance.

EKCO®

EKCO PRODUCTS COMPANY • CHICAGO 39, ILLINOIS

FLINT

. . . the greatest names in housewares

Deliciously yours,

P.S. Mm-m-m! Which will you try first...the roast beef?... the meat loaf? No matter. Just try any cold cuts with Hunt's nice-and-spicy catsup. Can't help lovin' that wonderful flavor!

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Takes cooking honors for third year

Teen-Ager s Blue Ribbon Her Cooking

Morrison of Salem, Oregon, g blue ribbon to her scrap- wards. She won it just last cate Fair cooking competi- ella is another prize-winning uses Fleischmann's Active t. "It's so fast and easy," 'And keeps for months."

winning cooks agree that nn's Active Dry Yeast is the handiest ever . . . even more t in the new "Thrifty Three" When you bake at home use - use Fleischmann's Active ew ree"

FLEISCHMANN'S ACTIVE DRY YEAST

FLEISCHMANN'S ACTIVE DRY YEAST

FLEISCHMANN'S ACTIVE DRY YEAST

OLLY TIME POP CORN POPS LIKE MAGIC!

get . . . mushroom flavor "fresh" mushroom flavor all year 'round . . . get . . .

YSTONE USHROOMS
—it's the Quality Pack"

FREE! Big Recipe Booklet. Write to Keystone Mushroom Co., Coatesville, Pa. Insist on Keystone Fancy Mushrooms at your food store. Fancy Quality . . . Regular Price.

CALORIE, H PROTEIN way lavorful eating!

Send for the Money-Saver Recipe Booklet to Food Co., Inc., maroneck, N. Y.

Herb-Ox

erb-Ox

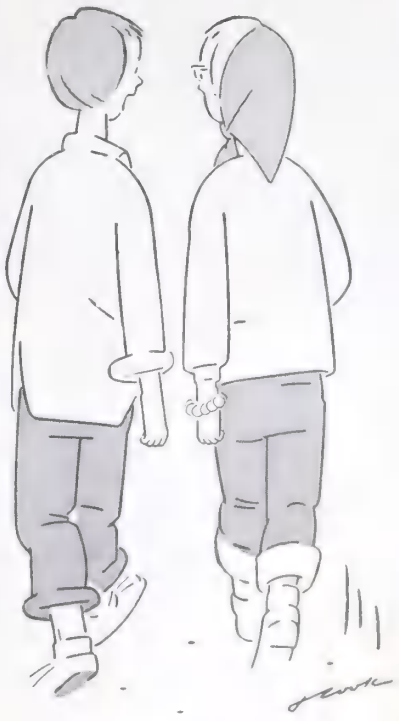
rica's Largest Selling

ILLION CURES

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 20

what camera she used, the lens, the film, the exposure, the time of year and the type of day—information of inestimable value to serious-minded photographers, both amateur and professional.

●



It's novels that there never seem to be enough of. MY BROTHER'S KEEPER, by Marcia Davenport, is one of the exciting ones. It has that dark melodramatic Gothic touch that is so unmistakably hers. Remember THE VALLEY OF DECISION?

This novel concerns two brothers who grow old together in their fine, dignified New York house with the accumulations of their lifetimes piling up around them. It is the story of the Collier brothers who had to be dug out of the debris of their home some years back. Just how it happened—and just what made the Collier boys tick—is the burden of this strange imaginative tale.

Two Mary Stolz novels came out within a month of each other this fall: TWO BY TWO—one week in summer, young love, a tragic climax; and PRAY, LOVE, REMEMBER—about a small-town belle who hates the town and its smallness. No novelist—as JOURNAL readers know full well—is more understanding of the conflict between the generations. (Ready or Not, August, this year.)

●

But the book to have beside your bed—to calm you with its objective reasonableness—is CLERK OF OXENFORD, by Gilbert Highet. It is a collection of Highet's radio talks, which to all other radio talks are what a Da Vinci is to a calendar top, or a Mozart symphony to Hearts and Flowers. Maybe this is pretty wide talk. But the freshness of these essays is a delight. Mr. Highet looks out on the world of art and living with a curious inquiring eye, and out of his wealth of classical learning he fits things in place—things like sagas, mountain climbing and the bottom of the sea, books of wisdom, the atom, science fiction, George Orwell, Japanese art, Tennyson, Byron, the Gettysburg address. . . . All's right with the world, you'll think as you put it down and go to sleep. END

"Sometimes I think we depend too much on glamour."

● From Akinback, Maine to Wearygal, Cal., the letters are pouring in to MRS. Santa Claus. "We love our families," the ladies write, "but oh, how we hate to stand and iron. How about sending us your gorgeous Rid-Jid Knee Room Ironing Table for Christmas!"

Fortunately, Mrs. Santa Claus has at least one helper in every family. So here's what to do: Just mention casually how much ironing you'll have to do, around the holidays. Hint at how awkward and tiresome stand-up ironing is . . . how the table is always the wrong height . . . and how, if you do try to sit down, you have to twist and stretch, bump your knees, snag your stockings . . . and how it makes you mean and cross and unbearable.

Next—and very important—walk your "prospect" in front of a Rid-Jid Knee Room table, at the hardware or department store. Let him or her see its elegant chrome-and-yellow beauty, its ten height adjustments, the open-mesh steel top that whisks moisture out of damp clothes. And just say, "H-m-m . . . I see it's approved by Mrs. Santa Claus. There's her official seal."

To keep the record straight, it is not Mrs. Santa Claus' own table you will get. She wouldn't part with hers for anything. But you'll get one just like it!

TAPPAN adds a convenient, high center oven to all the features of the new "CP" automatic Gas ranges. See them at your Gas company or Gas applia

Look to GAS for the smartest range that ever untied your apron strings

By this time next week you could actually be cooking on the smartest investment you ever made: a new automatic Gas range. Suddenly you feel serene, unhurried . . . with a wonderful sense of freedom for other important things. You don't have to rush back to check your oven; your range turns itself on and off automatically. You don't have to search for matches; every burner lights without them. But here's the real delight! Everything is not only better than it was—it's better than it could be with any other type of range. You get such exclusive advantages as smokeless broiling . . . removable burners . . . instant on-off heat . . . and the evenest baking in the world. Isn't it remarkable that the new automatic Gas ranges cost less to buy, install and use?

AMERICAN GAS ASSOCIATION

Only Gas gives such matchless performanc

GAS—the modern fuel for automatic cooking . . . refrigeration . . . water-heating . . . house-heating . . . air-conditioning . . . clothes-drying . . . incine

Have we won the fight against polio?

This spring we'll know the results of the biggest field trial in medical history—made possible by the determined, devoted efforts of thousands of volunteers. Here's how they helped test a new vaccine . . .

HERALD-LEADER

Tense and a little worried, this second-grade youngster hopes that the nurse won't take too long getting a blood sample for the polio-vaccine study. The nurse, a member of the St. Joseph Hospital staff, the boy, and the Marine corpsman were among approximately 1800 volunteers—children and adults—who helped carry out the field trial of the Salk vaccine in the Lexington, Kentucky, area.

• A common piece of advice doctors once gave during a polio epidemic was, "Get out of town." No one understood poliomyelitis; no one could stop a panic once it struck. Research studies on the dread infection were so hit-and-miss that it was impossible to separate fact from fiction. Then in 1938, with the establishment of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, scientists began an orderly, painstaking search for clues to the mystery. Progress was slow at first, but by the end of ten years there was strong evidence that polio might respond to immunization. The next five years saw three important discoveries: 1—identification of three kinds of polio virus; 2—a way to grow polio virus cheaply in a test tube; 3—presence of the virus in the blood of animals. Development of a vaccine was now a real and practical possibility. It was no longer a question of can polio be prevented, but how?

During the spring and summer of 1952, which claimed a new record of 57,628 victims, doctors successfully protected children during polio epidemics with gamma-globulin injections. But this blood derivative provided only temporary immunity at best. The search for a more powerful weapon continued. Then in 1953 Dr. Jonas E. Salk, of the University of Pittsburgh, developed a vaccine from the three types of virus that carry polio infection into the body. After tests on monkeys proved this "killed-virus" vaccine to be safe for human use, Doctor Salk inoculated more than 600 Pittsburgh school children. The vaccine seemed to increase their bodies' defenses against paralytic polio, with no bad reactions. But how long would the vaccine provide protection? For weeks only? For months, or perhaps even years? National Foundation and public-health officials agreed that the only way to find answers to these questions was through nation-wide mass inoculations of half a million school children. By February, 1954, after Doctor Salk had inoculated 5000 more children and adults as a further test of his vaccine, communities throughout the country began preparing for the biggest field trial in medical history—a program costing over $7,500,000, in which 1,830,000 children participated, 440,000 receiving vaccine, 210,000 injected with a harmless control substance having no effect, the remainder acting as an observed study group. An additional 324,000 volunteers—physicians, nurses, schoolteachers and principals and workers—took part. This is the story in one such community . . . Lexington, Kentucky.

ON a warm afternoon toward the end of May in 1946 eleven-year-old Jenny Molloy, a dark-eyed redhead with freckles to match her hair, was chasing her dog across the moist grass surrounding her parents' farm home. Fritzl, a pudgy little dachshund, darted behind a tree and out of sight. Suddenly Jenny stopped running, limped over to the porch steps and flopped down.

Her mother, who was reading in a garden chair nearby, called out, "What's the matter, can't you keep up with Fritzl?"

Jenny could only murmur, "My legs hurt—I can't walk."

Alarmed by the child's apparent pain, Mrs. Molloy hurried her upstairs to bed, then called the family doctor.

Jenny's parents waited tensely as the doctor examined her, then gave his frightening diagnosis: polio.

"Better take her to Louisville as soon as possible," he advised. "They've got the only isolation ward in the state."

Within an hour the Molloys were on their way, Jenny bundled into the back seat of the car. At the Louisville General Hospital, the doctors made no promises about Jenny's chance for recovery. But the chief physical therapist asked Mrs. Molloy to visit twice a day to learn how to give physical-therapy treatments. Mrs. Molloy, a pretty, slender-faced woman with large brown eyes and prematurely gray hair combed smoothly away from the face and tied back with a ribbon, suddenly felt hopeful. At least she would have a chance to help Jenny get well! Within three weeks she got that chance. Jenny had grown so much stronger with the help of hot packs administered in the isolation ward that the doctor in charge said she could go home—provided her mother gave regular physical-therapy treatments. In late October, though still on a strict therapy schedule, Jenny was well enough to go back to school.

That winter, even after the doctor pronounced Jenny completely well, Betty and James Molloy were disturbed. They couldn't forget the feeling of helplessness when they learned their daughter had polio—or that there had been no place in their town for her to go for treatment. Thinking of other children who might be endangered as their Jenny was, they visited St. Joseph's, one of Lexington's three general hospitals, asked, "Why don't we have an isolation ward here in town?" A tall, well-built, boyish-looking man with merry blue eyes and a jovial smile, James Molloy was now deeply serious.

"We're adding a new wing to this building," the superintendent said. "We might be able to plan an entire floor for polio patients, if we had the money. Do you think you could raise half the cost—$45,000?"

Neither James nor Betty Molloy had ever worked on a fund-raising campaign before, and $45,000 seemed like a lot to ask people to give. But Lexington is largely a community of families. Famous for its Burley tobacco, horse farms and blue grass, it has little "metropolitan" atmosphere, and people do things at a leisurely pace. They are quick, though, to consider the welfare of their children. James Molloy sounded out editors of CONTINUED ON PAGE

Butter Cookies to give . . . to nibble . . . to trim the tree

This message is paid for by dairy farmers across the nation as part of their program to show you how you can live better with foods made from milk.

American Dairy Association

"Voice of the Dairy Farmer"

20 North Wacker Drive, Chicago 6, Illinois

See Disneyland, 7:30 EST, Wednesday, ABC-TV
(check your newspaper for local broadcast time)

See Bob Crosby, 3:45 EST, Thursday, CBS-TV
Listen to Bob Hope, 8:30 EST, Thursday, NBC-Radio

Butter

brightens the flavor of every food it touches!

member this!

Real Butter Flavor makes cookies you'll be happy to eat...proud to give!

When you use butter you know your cookies will taste better and be more welcome. Truly, only butter is good enough for Christmas cookies. It has a clean, rich. greaseless flavor . . . a natural freshness . . . you find in no other spread. Just remember, butter brightens the flavor of every food it touches.

For generations, fine cooky makers have used butter in their baking. These wise cooks know that the special goodness of butter is apparent in cookies . . . as in other foods. To make the finest cookies of all—cookies you'll be happy to eat and proud to give at Christmas time or any time—be sure you use butter, too.

Here is your sic butter cooky recipe

e about six dozen Christmas Cookies) cup soft butter (2 sticks) cup granulated sugar egg, unbeaten tablespoon vanilla cups sifted flour

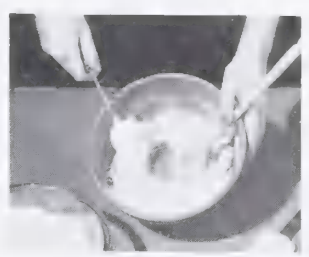
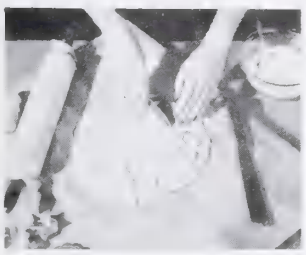
teaspoon baking powder

corating: Confectioners' sugar, colored sugars, Decorettes, ble dyes, cinnamon candies Hots), Silver Shot (dragees), icks or small wooden skewers.



se Butter Cookies keep fresh ys. Actually the flavor im- with time and the cookies are several days after baking than first taken from the oven.

1. Cream 1 cup soft butter (2 sticks). Gradually stir in ½ cup granulated sugar. Blend well.



2. Add 1 unbeaten egg. Stir in thoroughly until well mixed. Now add 1 tablespoon vanilla and blend.

3. Gradually add 3 cups sifted flour and ½ teaspoon baking powder which have been previously sifted together.

4. Roll dough carefully in waxed paper or aluminum foil and then chill at least two hours in refrigerator.

5. Divide chilled dough. Roll to ⅛ inch thickness on lightly floured board. Dust cooky patterns with flour. Lay on dough. Cut around pattern with sharp knife.

6. Place cookies on ungreased baking sheet. Leave some plain. Brush others with unbeaten egg white on areas to be decorated. Sprinkle with sugar or Decorettes.

7. Bake 5 to 7 minutes in hot oven—425° F.—until delicately browned. Remove immediately to wire cooling rack. Let cookies stand until thoroughly cool.

8. For plain cookies use icing made with confectioners' sugar mixed with a very little milk. Divide icing. Color each portion differently. Use toothpicks for decorating.

6 Christmas Butter Cookies to set before your friends

RBREAD BOY—Use Gin- kies recipe and cut out pat- h decorating directions in tter Cooky Kit.

ALMOND BUTTER COOKIES—For nibbling and giving. See recipe for Bonbon Butter Cookies in 1954 Butter Cooky Kit.

JEWEL BOX BUTTER COOKIES—Gumdrops like jewels make this cooky a charming novelty. Recipe in Butter Cooky Kit.

MINCEMEAT COOKIES—Tender and chewy. Can be made with any mincemeat. See easy-to-make recipe in Butter Cooky Kit.

BUTTER NUTS—Different and delightful because you combine pecans and dates. Try recipe in Butter Cooky Kit.

ETTIA COOKIES—Also d wreaths start with the ooky recipe. Use patterns ections in Kit.

1954 Butter Cooky Kit

Has all six of the above recipes plus variations. 35 Cooky Decorating Designs and how to make them. 18 patterns to use in cutting cookies—PLUS directions on gift-wrapping and shipping. All this—

Only 25¢

Butter Cooky Kit

Mail coupon today!

Butter Cookies
Box 6908, Dept. L, Chicago 77, Illinois

Please send _____ copies Christmas Butter Cooky Kit. Enclosed find 25¢ for each copy (Coin—no stamps).

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ Zone _____ State _____

NEW! Revlon FABULOUS

AQUAMARINE LOTION

contains miraculous 20th-century healing discovery!*

*Glyoxyl Diureide, wonder-healer used in wartime—and available without prescription!

For the first time in your life you can actually heal red, roughened, dried-out hands in a matter of hours! Because for the first time ever, glyoxyl diureide, miraculous healer that actually stimulates healthy new cell growth, has been added to a hand-and-body lotion. This great 20th-century development, as important to cosmetics as wonder-drugs are to medicine, now enriches each precious drop of Aquamarine Lotion!

Use new quick-absorbing Aquamarine Lotion every time you wash your hands . . . always after using detergents. You'll agree this fragrant, jewel-blue lotion has almost miraculous healing powers! Incredibly, it costs no more, 1.00 (plus tax)

(*gly-ox-ill dy-your-ee-ide)

REVLON PRODUCTS CORP.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 25

the Leader and the Herald, the two local newspapers, first. They promised to run daily stories. People were willing to listen to the appeals because Lexington had had six bad polio cases besides Jenny Molloy that year. Within a few days money began pouring in, bills, checks, money orders and coins. One morning while a girl at the front desk of the Herald was taking down a classified ad, someone thrust an old envelope into her hand. Too preoccupied to look up at the moment, she continued to write. The ad completed, she finally opened the envelope, gasped—it contained an anonymous note reading "For polio" and ten $1000 bills!

At the end of three weeks when James Molloy tallied the contributions, he made a frantic call to the newspaper office. "Please tell people to stop sending in money!" he exclaimed. "We've got twice as much as we asked for!"

When Betty and James Molloy caught their breath long enough to try to figure out how and why the campaign had been so successful, they could find just one answer—people fighting polio, the only way they knew how, with dimes and dollars. Somehow the Molloys began to feel their part in the fight against polio was just beginning.

There was the new ward in the hospital, for example, which opened in March, 1948, with equipment loaned by the National Foundation. Molloy, an engineering graduate of the University of Kentucky, volunteered to check the respirators and keep them in good working condition. There was new need for funds to carry on research and pay medical bills. And again the Molloys volunteered. With the help of a group of volunteers, they organized March of Dimes drives for polio in 1948, 1949 and 1950.

Shortly after the Lexington Convalescent Home, with beds for 50 polio patients, opened in 1950, 35 women trained as Polio Emergency Volunteers. In addition to general nursing care they learned to give hot packs, therapy baths, feed and turn patients and handle polio equipment. One polio aide, whose nephew had been stricken with polio, told the supervising nurse, "I feel my time is only a small repayment for all the help he got from other volunteers."

By fall, 1953, the people's fight against polio was beginning to show results. In New York, groups of scientists meeting informally to piece together the jigsaw-puzzle picture of polio research began concentrating on reports of Doctor Salk's new antipolio vaccine. Was this at last a formidable weapon against polio? Their discussions turned to definite plans—dates—for a nationwide trial. Was there time to manufacture and package enough vaccine for hundreds of thousands of inoculations by February? They thought so at first, but later postponed the trials till late March or early April, 1954. Finally, state boards of health throughout the country were alerted to prepare to inoculate children in the second grade of school beginning April 26. This, too, was a tentative date. No one could say for sure when the trial would begin.

AND no one was really sure what preparations to make. But the Molloys felt this was going to be a bigger job than simply giving inoculations. You had to tell parents what it was all about, get their signatures before a single child could be inoculated.

Mrs. James Strauss, past chairman of the City Mothers' March on Polio, offered her home for a meeting of top organizers. Mrs. Strauss, a tall, smartly dressed woman with short curly brown hair and an alert, intelligent face, has two infant grandchildren. ("They're too young to get the vaccine this year, but the time is coming when it will be available to all," she says confidently.) Along with a dozen P.T.A. mothers, the Molloys and Dr. Franklin Moosnick, chairman of the medical advisory committee of the National Foundation's local chapter, the Strausses studied printed material on the trials, they wrote out simple instructions fo ington volunteer workers. The P.T.A. sentatives jotted down names of m who they thought would do a good organizing clinics in each school.

THE "head mammas," as James M called the unit chairmen from the so got together in March. This was befo of the supplies—the master health- sheets, registration forms and pare quest slips—had come from New Yor Betty Molloy had to hold up one s sheet before a roomful of 28 people somewhat complicated routine of k these health records had to be exp again and again to groups of volu Every child was to take three shots, t two a week apart and the third "bo shot four weeks later. If a child fai keep any one of his three appoint Betty Molloy emphasized, the vaccin no good.

There never were enough chairs at P meetings during April. Parents wh never been to a P.T.A. meeting before to hear about the polio vaccine. It v though they wanted to be convinced children ought to have it. The c Speakers' Bureau (Mr. and Mrs. M Mrs. Strauss and Mrs. Ballard Ca covered 28 such meetings. One qu seemed to be on everyone's mind: do you know it's safe?" Citing the Pitts tests, the triple tests made by indepe laboratories, Mrs. Strauss said simply safe. It can't be safer than safe."

He that lies down with dogs rises with fleas.

—ENGLISH PROVERB

One of the hardes was explaining the for volunteer bloo nors among childrer first and third gra well as second-g receiving inocula These blood sample to be sent to the U sity of Michigar study. By comparing blood samples c cinated children with those of nonvacc children, the National Foundation's re team expected to discover how effectiv vaccine had built up resistance to polio mother expressed the sentiments of parents of first- and third-grade ch when she said, "I don't think it's fai children who don't get the vaccine s have to give blood."

Mrs. Strauss tried to reassure her l plaining that if the vaccine proved eff millions of children would get it nex

There was a moment of silence—eve appeared thoughtful. Then a father out. "I'll go along with that. Now wh we do to help?"

"Sign the request slip giving your permission to be inoculated, and urge neighbors to do the same," James M said. He was wearing a wrinkled blue s had promised his wife to send to the cl But these night meetings didn't give a much time to think about clothes. need people to drive children to the clinics—after school is out," he a

Mrs. R. V. Stevenson, who had orga the health program at Christ the parochial school four years ago, felt a chill of excitement as she listened t plans. A former Army nurse who m doctor husband in Algiers during Worl II, she knew the importance of inocula But here was the chance to be in on discovery! On April 19, when the pac of supplies arrived in Lexington, Mrs venson took a bundle home and typed records for the children in her school a St. Peter Claver, a small parochial s with no P.T.A. She also addressed lopes to parents for a friend, a memb another P.T.A. ("I wanted everything perfect," she explains. "I've never beer to shake my GI passion for routine a tail.") Mrs. Stevenson's first-grade dau was the first to volunteer to give b But her mother's enthusiasm was contag So many other parents clamored to let

CONTINUED ON PAGE 150

A—French Provincial Cold Meat Fork B—Old Master Iced Beverage Spoon C—Craftsman Flat Server D—Silver Flutes Sauce Ladle E—Madeira Cheese Serving Knife
F—Contour Small Flat Server G—Chippendale Lemon Fork H—Old Colonial Sugar Spoon I—Rose Solitaire Pierced Tablespoon

Do yourself proud!...give Sterling by a Sterlingsmith

If it's marked TOWLE, she'll know you've given her solid silver and not some lesser tableware. The well-known fact that TOWLE works only in this queen of metals instantly labels your gift the finest. What nicer feeling for you both?

TOWLE has selected a store near you to carry its fine solid silver. It is bright with gift pieces from a mere $2.50 . . . and you can pay up to $2,250. That's another good thing about the TOWLE Sterlingsmiths — they create table glamour for every pocketbook.

You, too, will love the gentle luxury of Soft-Weve

Women who love nice things choose this nicer kind of tissue

Gentle as facial tissue. Modern women want the greater luxury of Soft-Weve. It's soft and gentle as finest facial tissue . . . made like your facial tissue, too.

Two soft thicknesses, firm and strong give Soft-Weve wonderful gentleness and strength combined. This is truly the newer, nicer kind of tissue—you'll want to provide it in your own home. Soft-Weve is another great Scott value everyone can afford to enjoy.

"SOFT-WEVE," REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Diary of Domesticity

By GLADYS TABER

Aladdin loves the sunny window sill.

THE first snowfall is worth having winter for. Like everyone else in our rugged New England, I cherish the summer afternoons, the hazy fall twilights, and yet, when the first silvery flakes begin to float down from a gray, gray sky, I feel a kind of excitement. This is it, my heart says, here we go. Jill runs out to check the kennel heaters and bring in an apple log, I dash out to wind up the car windows—we never can garage our car because of the dogs' being in the yard, and if we open the gate, well, that is it. Dogs and garage are both on the wrong side of the picket fence. So the car stays out, getting a frosting of snow on the hood.

The first flakes are so big, so delicate, so cool on the cheek, utterly charming. As I run back to the house, I think fleetingly of those humid August days when it was scorching just to put my nose out. Now the sharp blade of the cold slices my lungs and I suddenly laugh as I run into the house, with a bevy of cockers running with me, feathers already on their muzzles.

There is always one kennel heater that won't start and Jill disappears for an hour lighting and relighting it, and then she gives up and goes to the gate and yells for George, who appears from the barn with snow on his woolen cap and comes over, with that wonderful farmer's gait, half walk, half rolling run. They both go back and I start the casserole for supper, knowing they will be buried in the deeps a long time. The draft is wrong, the oil line is clogged, or whatever. Eventually, they come out, smoky and triumphant. And the heat is on!

There is something fine and stirring about the bitter cold coming down. Of course it is nothing like my Wisconsin childhood, when it was twenty below most of the winter and we started our old cars by pouring boiling water in the radiators. The climate is more effete these latter days, we do not expect to be snowed in at all.

We only hope mildly for snow for Christmas because the children may be grown, but dearly love to rush out and make snow men and skate around on the pond. They feel, as a matter of fact, defrauded if we do not procure a white, white Christmas.

The woodshed is neatly stacked with good logs for long fires. We keep the hearth fire burning most of the winter, for the rosy glow is so look at and the warmth is he when you come in. A fireplace bol, somehow, of man's yearn center in the house. It warms t

Jill has hung the kettle over bers with a good rib-sticking s mering in it. She says, really, s cooking on account of Holl needed a good bone, and the was out of bones, so we boug of beef that had a bone embed We had boiled beef with hor sauce first, then the bone came Holly had it. Then the bro herbs, was so licking good tha cided we ought to use that hunted up a recipe for Swed balls and did them and ate tha glory. A wonderful dinner, a said, all due to Holly's bone!

This is generally the basis of planning and it would not pa pert in diet, I am sure. But it w for us. If some cocker is ill a chicken broth, we just eat When we have a prospective m a litter, we eat quantities of eg have to break an egg for her a

This past year, Jill and I d take a leaf from a planning b we set up a Christmas chest i stairs hall. During the year, would find just the teapot or book that some special perso love, we got it and tucked it in t labeled for the holiday. It mad difference, for we have no las struggle, since it is all taken ahead of time.

The only problem was that hard for me to wait till Chri give the special gift. Once w tucked away, I was so tempted it out the next time we saw th it was fitted for!

I think the very best Chris for a whole family is one good equipment for the house. W give Stillmeadow a gift, and for it, and it is a very good gift that the house shelters us, and together, and makes life pleas rather than giving a lot of gadgets to ourselves, we all ch the thing. One year the childre a lamp and lamppost for the fr

CONTINUED ON PAGE

SHOW up to 21 pictures or credentials . . .

on view in the removable pass case. It's easy to add windows; exclusive Flickbar works as simply as a looseleaf binder. Comes with enough windows to show 9 photos or cards. Extra sets 25 cents.

CARRY spare keys in emergency key slots . . .

one slot for your house key, one for your car key, —so you never have to worry about locking yourself out.

HIDE your big bills in the secret compartment

Handsome, versatile, the Convertible makes an ideal gift. Illustrated in fine California Saddle leather . . . $7.50. Other leathers and colors priced from $5 to $12.50.

ALL PRICES PLUS TAX

the Convertible by

BUXTON

best for your money

C. • SPRINGFIELD, MASS. ©1954

By CLIFFORD R. ADAMS, Ph
Pennsylvania State University, Department of Psych

Making marriage work

Nobody likes to be told, and teen-agers particularly need their side heard.

Turbulent Teens

AS they grow older, children seek increasing independence. The baby learning to walk outgrows the protection of the playpen, the boy on a bicycle rides beyond family supervision.

Boys and girls in their middle teens have already attained some adult skills and privileges. The boy with a driver's license and money he's earned, the girl trusted as a baby sitter, feel they have earned the right to freedom.

Their impatience with restrictions is understandable. They are completing the long transition from childish dependence to adult status. Soon they will be both allowed and expected to take care of themselves. Additional privileges and new skills are needed preparation for future responsibilities.

Unfortunately, their demands for independence increase fastest just when unfamiliar hazards also confront them. Lacking adult experience and knowledge, they don't recognize risks obvious and alarming to parents. That is why fathers and mothers can't help worrying when Johnny drives a carload of boys to a distant football game, or when Jane stays out past her usual hour. Can Johnny withstand his classmates' urging to speed? Is Jane's new boy friend trustworthy?

Rules, supervision and physical restraint are necessary for the small child. But safeguards retained too long become handicaps. The child old enough to cross the street alone must learn to watch for cars instead of clinging to his mother's hand.

Authoritarian methods are even more unsatisfactory later on. They prevent the relationship of mutual trust and understanding which is parents' only effective means of controlling older children. The impulsive, overconfident teen-ager finds it easier to break a rule than to disregard the advice of parents who have shown they trust him.

If you encourage your son and daughter to explain their opinions, yours will carry more weight. They are likely to respect decisions they've helped make. Seek compromise rather than submission. You cannot eliminate the hazards of the teens, but by frank discussion you can help your children protect themselves.

Driving. You can't reasonably prevent your son's—or daughter's—driving after he is legally eligible. Instead, provide the best available instruction (preferably not from you, as anxiety interferes with teaching). Set an example of skill, caution, and observance of traffic laws and courtesy.

Discuss and agree on hours, occasions and conditions for using the family car. Explain that the agreement binds you both, and that he will forfeit the privilege if he violates the terms.

Riding with other teen-age drivers is another hazard. But your child's driving skill and knowledge of traffic hazards will give him confidence to discourage the smart aleck and show-off.

Dating. Many mothers worry about their children's dating the wrong people, going steady too soon, or indulging in dangerous petting. These things are rare when a child feels wanted, secure and approved. The girl accustomed to talking things over with her mother will not be afraid to discuss dating problems. If you have not established this relationship, begin now—but dire warnings, a suspicious attitude and criticisms of her friends will only convince her you don't understand. Above all, be forgiving, reassuring and constructive when mistakes are made. Children (like adults) learn from experience.

House rules. Tardiness, untidy habits and late hours cause endless arguments. Explain that people cannot live together peacefully unless all observe a reasonable schedule and established operating rules. Johnny will come to dinner promptly if the alternative is to fix his own or go hungry. Discuss with your teen-agers your need for rest, as well as theirs, and reach an agreement on the number of late nights and the occasions that justify them. In setting the limits, consider the custom of their friends, rather than the practice in your youth.

Health risks. Teen-agers think they are indestructible, immune to harm from loss of sleep; eating too much, too little, or the wrong food; overexertion or last-minute studying under poor light. But physical abuses also affect appearance and disposition. Appealing to their vanity may work better than warnings about health.

Sensible parents realize that they can't protect their children forever. But they hope to prevent serious injuries, emotional or physical, until the teen-agers' wisdom and experience are equal to their responsibilities. Parents trusted as friends are more effective protectors than those feared as police.

"Am I Losing My Husband?"

Some wives who conscientiously fulfill major obligations seriously underestimate the importance of courtesy in small things. Barbed remarks and offenses trivial in themselves will wear away a man's love if repeated too often. Consider the questions carefully, then answer yes or no.

When you and your husband are in the company of others, do you:

1. Occasionally interrupt him?
2. Correct his table manners?
3. Mention (jokingly, of course) his annoying personal habits?
4. Finish his sentence when he hesitates?
5. Supply the punch line for his stories?
6. Bewail his extravagance (or stinginess)?
7. Explain his mistakes in a card game?
8. Sometimes discuss matters he considers personal?
9. Analyze his social shortcomings?
10. Tease him about his weaknesses?
11. Apologize for his untidy appearance?
12. Hint that he is sexually inept?
13. Remark that he is "so thoughtless"?
14. Make light of his job?

The average wife answers "yes" to only three of these questions concerning her behavior in public. With five or more "yes" answers, there is danger that your husband will think of you as a nag—if he doesn't already. Use your wrong answers as a guide in improving your behavior, and in analyzing and correcting your underlying attitude.

Men Who Can Hurt You

IN middle age as in youth, the unmarried woman wants masculine attention and companionship. Opportunities for dates are reassuring evidence of desirability. But the woman in her late twenties or older, like the young girl, can be deeply hurt by getting involved with the wrong man.

Young girls, though inexperienced, are somewhat protected by their status. Their situation is shared by their contemporaries; they conform to the opinions and customs of their group, and naturally associate with boys who "belong."

But the single woman beyond first youth, whether widowed, divorced or never married, may be more vulnerable than she realizes. She may rely on her experience and maturity to protect her in situations better avoided altogether. Because eligible men are scarce, she may accept unsuitable companionship in preference to solitude.

Of course you can spend occasional evenings with a man obviously unsuitable as a husband. But a man you can't imagine marrying is a poor choice as a frequent date. Many a lonely woman becomes emotionally dependent on a relationship begun casually and with her eyes open.

The climber. Your financial independence and social prestige, however modest, are established. Don't overlook their appeal, particularly to a newcomer or misfit.

The sponge. The man who basks in your living room, consumes your meals and accepts your hospitality without returning it is too lazy, selfish or downright stingy to be taken seriously.

The misunderstood husband. His marital problem may be real or imagined. Either way, your continued association with him will hurt somebody—probably you.

The emotional invalid. Even the stable individual is unpredictable during an emotional crisis. The recently divorced man is bewildered, unpredictable and strangely oblivious of others' feelings. Don't let your sympathies involve you in his trouble.

The "different" type. Congenial companionship is based on similarity of tastes, standards and background. Wide age barriers are hard to bridge. The adventurer and the homebody, the scholar and the social butterfly have virtues of their own. But basic differences like these are hard to reconcile.

Most men you meet won't want to hurt you. But circumstances may bring you in contact with people wrong for you. By learning to appraise the situation, the individual and yourself, you can enjoy masculine company without endangering your future.

Do You Agree?

Do men, as they become older, marry younger women?

Yes. In their thirties, men choose brides five years younger on the average; in their fifties, they pick women who are eight years younger.

in the new BUXTON FRENCH PURSE

you put your bills in the billfold...

you take them out of the coin purse!

ow you won't have to go through a juggling t to get at your coins and bills. Right in e coin purse is an exclusive Buxton feature
. a hidden slot that lets you slip bills out e at a time without unfolding the purse.
ompact, spacious, with full-size windows for otos and cards. It's a wonderful gift idea too.
own in rich California Saddle leather. $7.50.
her leathers and colors priced from $5 to $10.

ALL PRICES PLUS TAX

LADY BUXTON best for your money

. INC. • SPRINGFIELD. MASS. ©1954

A sugarplum from the boys for this year's Christmas angel—hey, is that you?

ANGELO PINTO

What every boy wants for Christmas:

AN IDEAL GIRL

Say boys your age
or a little bit older
or a little bit older than that.

EDDIE FISHER

Eddie Fisher, singer and star of the TV program Coke Time, says, "If I were going to ask for an ideal girl, and Santa was the man to see, my note would read:

"'Please send me a girl who looks as good in jeans and a shirt as she does in her fanciest gown . . . a natural girl who wouldn't have to go into hiding if a hurricane wiped out the cosmetic firms . . . a girl who would be fun to be with, to talk to, to go places with.'

"Of course I wouldn't mind—show me the fellow who would—if my girl had the looks of a Miss America. But no girl has to have that to make a wonderful Mrs. America for any man."

MILTON CANIFF

Cartoon creator of that ideal man, Steve Canyon, Milton Caniff, was charmed by his high-school sweetheart (now Mrs. Caniff) because "she had so many friends I just had to be one of them." About a young man's search for an ideal girl, he believes:

"Girls are often chided for being overly romantic, waiting for a knight in shining armor. Actually most boys are secretly even more eager for the ecstatic adventure beyond the horizon.

"The realization of his tender dream occurs when the girl in his study hall has the good sense to laugh at his jokes and cheer him in the field of his prowess."

ROBERT WAGNER

"The ideal girl would probably have a happy combination of both spirit and sweetness," says movie hero Robert Wagner, alias Prince Valiant. "I like a girl who says what she means. If I suggest Chinese food and she hates it, I expect her to say so.

"She'd think Jackie Gleason's recording of Melancholy Melody just about the greatest. Because I usually notice a girl's hands first, she'd have pretty hands. She'd never talk about her other dates just to prove her popularity. She wouldn't be one of those who make like psychologists, always taking a man apart, telling him how to run his life. She wouldn't mind my passion for sports clothes—loud ones. Or my attempts at singing and the trap drums."

MICKEY MANTLE

New York Yankee ball club outfielder, twenty-three-year-old Mickey Mantle, considers his wife Merlyn anybody's dream girl. For one thing, she understands sports. "I'd hate to take a girl to a game and have to explain every move to her," Mickey admits. For another, "Sometimes my wife's so nice to people it almost seems phony. But it isn't—she means it."

Honest Mickey says that the first thing he notices about a girl is her figure (Merlyn is 5′1″, weighs 107) and closer up her face, especially her eyes. Then he notices how friendly a girl is. ("You hate to introduce a girl to somebody and have her act like she doesn't want to be there.")

According to the high-school boys all over the country—boys we questioned about the qualifications for an ideal girl—it doesn't matter too much exactly what color a girl's hair is or how tall she is if a girl:

"has a neat appearance";
"talks in a soft, pleasing voice";
"has comforting ways";
"knows when and how to have a good time";
"doesn't give up easily";
"likes little kids and me";
"cooks fairly well";
"isn't the 'anything's all right with me' type of gal";
"isn't a flirt";
"is a good dancer, a swell swimmer, agreeable and faithful";
"is able to sew and likes housekeeping";
"is interested in going out and doing things and not staying at home";
"is someone with the same outlook on life."

The same boys—bless 'em—gave us these answers to the question "What was the nicest thing a girl ever said to you?" They said that she said:

"You've been the best friend I've ever had."
"I enjoy being with you and I like you for what you are."
"You're intelligent and I admire you."
"You're an interesting personality."
"You're very understanding."
"'How are you?' when I was spiked pretty badly during a baseball game—she was the first one to ask."
"'You dance well'—after stumbling through one dance with me. I was fourteen years old and a terrible dancer."

And to the question "What is the nicest thing a girl has ever done for you?" the boys answered:

"She taught me how to dance."
"She gave me a sweater for my birthday which she'd made with her own hands."
"She made suggestions on how to improve my part in a play and encouraged me when I was discouraged."
"She made me want to forge ahead."
"She brought me into more of the church's activities."
"She made me feel at home."
"She helped me to catch up on my homework when I had a broken kneecap."

THE REPORTER edited by
Ruth Ormler

BUXTON, INC. • SPRINGFIELD, MASS. ©1954

you have room for them all

No more stuffing one picture behind the other. With the Convertible you can carry up to 21 photos or credentials on view in the removable photo-card case. The exclusive Buxton Flickbar does it. It works as simply as a looseleaf binder . . . lets you add windows quickly, securely. The Convertible comes with enough windows to show 9 photos or cards. Extra windows are only a quarter a set. Shown in rich California Saddle leather, $7.50. Other leathers and colors priced from $5 to $12.50.

ALL PRICES PLUS TAX

You don't have to open it to put coins in.

Ingenious "Magic Purse" has outside coin slot that lets you drop money safely inside.

you can carry 21 pictures on view in the Convertible by

LADY BUXTON

best for your money

Modern tablewa

ALL PATTERNS MA

th a traditional name...

Christmas give priceless
rs of work-free time—International Stainless, finest tableware of its kind.

y in its simplicity... requiring no care is gleaming International Stainless has developed to fit our easier, less formal ican way of life.

is is not stainless steel as you have known the past. It bears not even a family re- lance to the ordinary kitchen variety. national Stainless is made by silversmiths h a 130-year tradition of superb crafts- hip behind them.

e need for fine, high-quality flatware, that not require pampering and polishing, has growing for some time. The International Silver Company recognized this and has become the largest maker of stainless steel tableware in the world.

Today, American know-how is producing the finest product of its kind. Smartly designed and made to the exacting standards of the costliest silverware, International Stainless Steel will not rust, tarnish, stain, scale or corrode in normal use. Its lustrous beauty is designed to last a lifetime. Modern homemakers are proud of—and grateful for—their International Stainless.

Ask your silverware dealer to show you International Stainless. Notice the rich weight and perfect balance; the deep, rounded spoon bowls; the hollow-handle knives with forged steel blades. Choose, from a range of prices, the quality that suits your requirements—from many smart designs, the pattern you prefer.

International

Stainless

Mastercrafted in Steel by The International Silver Company

Great days comi

the time is nigh

to double and trip

the family supp

Now is the season of all the year —
When doorbells jingle and "Company's here!"

"Fresh up" with Seven-Up
the all-family drink!

ALL-FAMILY DRINK!

FAMILY PACK

Take home 2

Buy 7-Up by t get the handy 7-Pack . . . easy-handle . . . easy Buy 7-Up when those bright 7

Copyright 1954 by The Seven-Up Company

There's a Man in the House

...n Miller

...nt something ...an't ...elf with."

...d modern schools again when ...ade son, instead of wangling ... algebra, helps his mother family checkbook.

... I do bring my wife her ...n bed on a Sunday," says ...fort, hiding a Christmas ...his garage, "that's no ad-...hat I behaved badly on ...ight."

...y soon," says my neighbor ...ue mansion with the fifty-...er, "I'll find out the differ-...en Vietminh and Vietnam. ...nust try to remodel half of ...into a powder room."

...lding reception recently told me she had never ...eal, but expects to learn ...ay she returns from her ...n. "In three days," she learn to cook better than the places my husband's ...g me."

...o-hour lunch at the club we a modern man needs out-to survive the pressures of . (We also agreed that if a participate, the next best ...atch it or read about it.)

...man who visited in our ...olerant about American ...ur bread," he said, "is ...e if you toast it, butter it enough conserves on it."

... were first married I was ...by Emily Post and my Dream ...ing her choose all the guests ...ur house. . . . But I've staged ...neback; often I am allowed as many as one third of 'em.

...rrected the twenty-year-...oom drapes it took us two ...y for when we were mar-... a long exile in the attic ...adorn my den with all splendor.

...recked my electric train as a swore he'd never buy me He did, though, as soon as I ...les. . . . All too late, I recog-dear old softy he was even ...man.

"Love, courtship and marriage are so accidental!" philosophizes Betty Comfort, trying her handmade Christmas wreath on her front door. "Isn't it a marvel so many marriages endure happily for twenty-five years and more?"

They've made our Junior the scholarship chairman at his college fraternity house, as well as pledge trainer and social chairma 1. In fact, they've got more work out of him in 2½ years than I have in 18.

Some of our town's best people are still lukewarm to four-lane toll roads. At times they don't seem quite reconciled to the invention of the wheel, to the three-car family and to people's silly ambition to drive coast to coast.

This is the year we're inviting all our young one's teachers to dinner. Over the dessert I'll try to put across the idea that if he learns to write legibly, to spell and to read books enthusiastically, I'll yell for a $5000 minimum salary for teachers.

Last year I again issued my ukase that the neighborhood boys who use the basketball goal in our back yard must paint the backboard green. . . . As usual, I've relented and painted it myself.

On the serener days—

. . . When Junior tells me I ought to play more golf.

. . . Or our daughter demonstrates how well she's resisted my attempts to spoil her,

. . . And our youngest shows me an essay nearly as good as William James wrote at his age,

. . . Or my princess of sheer delight tells me I have the handsomest pair of legs on the beach—

Then I bless the early inklings I had of the horrors of bachelorhood, such a lonely and parlous estate.

So far this has been the easiest of holiday seasons for me: I did my Christmas shopping on Pan American's smörgåsbord hunt in Scandinavia last May. By forgetting where I'd hidden the presents I managed not to give most of 'em away before Christmas.

It's their season again . . . time for candy canes and holly wreaths and happy holiday fun. Deck them out in party Stride Rites . . . shiny-bright styles, made with good fit and fine quality, as Stride Rite shoes always are . . . and carefully fitted by your Stride Rite dealer, who knows the needs of spirited little feet!

THE STRIDE RITE SHOE

Green Shoe Mfg. Co., Boston, Mass.

Beautiful Hair

B R E C

THERE ARE THREE BRECK SHAM
FOR THREE DIFFERENT HAIR CONDIT

The Breck Shampoos are gentle enough in action to be used on little children. the Three Breck Shampoos is made for a different hair condition. One Breck is for dry hair. Another Breck Shampoo is for oily hair. A third Breck Sh for normal hair. The next time you buy a shampoo, select the Breck Sha your individual hair condition. A Breck Shampoo is not drying to the it cleans thoroughly. A Breck Shampoo leaves your hair soft, fragrant and

The Three Breck Shampoos are available at Beauty Shops, Drug Stores, Department Stores and wherever cosmetics

JOHN H BRECK INC · MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS · SPRINGFIELD 3 MASSACH
NEW YORK · CHICAGO · SAN FRANCISCO · OTTAWA C

Journal About Town

Gossip about
people you know,
Editors you like,
and what goes on
in New York

ifty Years Ago in the Journal

EDELIA was the song hit of December, 1904. Irene nne was born in Louisville, entucky, and the last pair of whide boots worn in Congress tired with a senator from Misuri. Judge summed up the ppy state of affairs of the past ar with this doggerel:

od old year of nineteen-four.
eryone had goods in store—
heat galore, a dollar up, ts to eat and lots to sup.
one abroad is mad at us;
ought at home to cause a fuss—ay the year ahead give more the brand of nineteen-four.

good thing on Christmas is invite some unfortunate litones to come to the house to the lighted tree," suggests e December, 1904, JOURNAL. hen let the children of the use give the poor little guests imple present."

Don't give a child elaborate pres-s, such as mechanical toys," ades the JOURNAL*'s doctor. "Don't ow him to eat chocolate of any nd, or turkey or goose, or rich s or cakes or plum pudding, or ything fried, or nuts or raisins."*

Please advise about the length mourning," a reader writes. nswer: "A widow should wear ack for three years, for a part the same period. For a child, ter or brother, deep mourng for one year, and light ourning for another six onths."

ou can change your old black k-plush cape into the soft crined kind that looks like caracal by ripping it apart and soakg it in water," advises the Fash-n Editor.

man may be less intellectual an you, less versed in social ages, but he must not be any s honorable. You must be le to trust him completely," ites the author of Heart-to-art Talks with Girls.

rites the head of a family living $600 a year: "During the coldt three months of winter our el averages $2 a month. We ep two fires burning all day, t as soon as weather permits. e kitchen range is only started r meals. The best hardwood is a cord; coal, $12 a ton."

SOL LIBSOHN

Katie Hoffman and Diana Norman have fun with their Jungle Rugs.

A FABRIC-DESIGNER friend of ours sent us a pair of fascinating sleeping bags for children, to see how we thought children would take to them at Christmas. They're called Jungle Rugs—a good name, you'll agree, for a leopard and a tiger; made from heavy cloths called animal plushes. So we found out, the JOURNAL way, how children liked them—simply by trying them out on children. Two-year-old Katie Hoffman, daughter of our poetry editor, and four-year-old Diana Norman, daughter of our beauty editor, had the time of their lives, as you can see. The people who make the bags tell us they're working on an Easter rabbit, a lion, a zebra and a big brown bear; also making bigger sizes for bigger people. Just made a lot of double sizes to keep football fans warm in pairs at Princeton. These, of course, were tigers.

One of the most popular activities in a neighborhood parents' association to which Nora O'Leary belongs is a clothing exchange for children's garments that get outgrown while still as good as new. How much wear, for instance, does an eight-year-old's party dress get before it's suddenly too small? And overshoes. Nora, looking ahead to winter, picked up a pair of overshoes there the other day for Wendy, aged two. And when her Stevie, aged five, saw them he said, "Why, mummie, don't you remember? Those are my old rubbers."

At lunch the other day in Philadelphia's Café Ninon with an author, Joyce Posson and Lee Cullen were discussing the present fashion for making swimming pools in free forms and other unusual shapes. Personality pools, they dubbed them. "Then the pool I build should be shaped like a typewriter," said the author. . . . "And mine," said Lee, "will be the most popular shape of all—the shape of the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL*."*

Being a man, and a blond besides, Peter Briggs never realized that red-haired women have color problems with their clothes until, walking past the Park Sheraton a while back, he first of all saw the beautiful red-haired Deborah Kerr, and then saw her step into a shop called The Redheaded Woman. What he did then out of curiosity was later to ask his secretary, a brunette, to take a look. Turned out that the owner, a real redhead herself, of course, had simply decided it was about time to open the first shop ever to specialize in apparel exclusively for redheads, and it's going over big. All the salesgirls, and all the customers that Peter's secretary saw in the shop that day, had the right color hair. "Greer Garson goes there too," she told Mr. B.

Now that the Disney production of Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea is about to be released, we can tell you that William Fink's holiday in Nassau last winter was made memorable by his having had a ringside seat with Kirk Douglas at some of the undersea filming. What interested him even more than Jules Verne's submarine Nautilus itself were the great sea-water pens of huge fish and turtles they were collecting to act as "extras" in the underwater shots—sting rays, sharks, and goodness knows what all. Bill asked a man why they were feeding the fish so bountifully. "If we didn't," the man said, "they'd swim right away as soon as we let them loose to take the pictures. As it is, they're getting so used to being fed, they'll swim right up to the cameras."

Kirk Douglas at the camera.

"Who were those tables and tables of elderly ladies lunching up in the cafeteria all fall?" Laura Lou Brookman asked Jim Stewart, of the Circulation Department. "Oh, they are employed on account of the thousands and thousands of subscriptions that come in for Christmas presents," Jim explained. "The gift cards have to be handwritten neatly and legibly, and we've learned, by testing, that for this elderly ladies are by far the best."

The number of families in the United States having a second child is 91 per cent greater today than in 1940.

When Ruth Orkin heard there were ten little children hard to tell apart in the How America Lives family she was going to photograph out in Utah, she had a brainstorm. She went to Macy's and bought them all bright red caps with their names on them. "Pretty smart," we said when she told us this on her return from Utah. "Then you could tell which was which." . . . "Only for a minute," Ruth said wryly. "They were so crazy about the caps, they didn't care whose they wore, and the little ones couldn't spell anyhow; so it was more confusing with than without." Seems even their father, Ray Crookston, who came up as they were all playing hopscotch together, got a little mixed up himself. "Come here Mark," he said to one of the little boys . . . "but you're not Mark, you're Joey!"

RUTH ORKIN

Caps help to identify the young Crookstons.

Here's one way to do it, if you suddenly find yourself so popular as to get two invitations for different parties on the same date. Just do it the way Jean Freeman, in Philadelphia, did it. Each of hers was for a weekend house party, equally tempting. She wrote acceptances to both, shuffled them around in her desk drawer with her eyes closed, then without looking slid one of them down the mail chute. The other she left in her desk drawer, still unlooked at, until the next morning. "But why?" we asked. . . . "Well, just so I could wonder all night whether I'd be going to the Poconos for some horseback riding, or to a football weekend at New Haven."

"I never did before,"
she said slowly, "and next year I'll be too old for a doll."

A day on the winter's calendar—or a season of the heart?

Lost Cr

"IT'S snowin'," Arla said. "Look, it's snowin'." Will looked up, the silver rhythm of milk against the bucket momentarily broken.

It had indeed begun to snow—soft thick flakes in the chill twilight—just since they had gained the shelter of the barn.

"Yep," Will said, and rested his head against the cow's warm flank again.

The child's hoarse voice irritated him. He wished she was in the house with Hattie. It had been too many years since a little girl had followed him around at chore time.

But she'd met him at the door in scarf and cap, buttoning her old coat, and asked to come—the first time she'd offered to leave the house since Martha had brought her. And Hattie had given him a look—and here she was.

"Snow for Christmas!" For the first time since she had come, there was excitement in Arla's voice.

Will's heart gave a half beat, and a coldness almost like fear touched him.

"What's that about Christmas?" he asked.

"Snow for Christmas," Arla said. "Christmas tomorrow."

"You sure tomorrow's Christmas?"

"Oh, yes. I been marking it off on the calendar Miss Sims give me from the feed store," Arla told him. The eager homely face caught all of the last light of the day, the only white thing that Will could see in the deep twilight of the barn.

It was that time of year. But why hadn't she said something before? Another child would have been talking Christmas day and night.

He and Hattie hadn't kept Christmas for twenty years. The best they could ask was that the day pass like any other. It was something they never spoke of, to each other or anyone else.

"What you want for Christmas?" Will asked.

He didn't want to know, but he had to give some response to those believing child eyes beneath the unchildlike brows.

"A big doll," Arla said. "Not a baby doll—a little-girl doll with real hair and sleepy eyes. I can make dresses for her."

For a minute Will was intent on stripping, pretending to be too busy to talk. He had forgotten, until now, the exaltation in a little girl's face when she spoke of the doll she wanted for Christmas. For it was so much more than a doll. It was another being, alike and beloved. The remembering hurt like a pain in his chest.

"And you think you'll get a big doll, do you?" Will asked.

She considered, stamping her feet a little because of the cold. "Yes, I think so," she said gravely at last.

"And why do you think so?" He wanted it to sound kind, but someway his tone struck him as doubting and cruel.

"Because I never did before," she said slowly, "and next year I'll CONTINUED ON PAGE 94

By VIRGINIA AKIN

ILLUSTRATED BY

NATIONAL GALLERY OF ART

MARCHESA ELENA GRIMALDI
ANTHONY VAN DYCK (1599–1641)

For brief account of this painting, and the artist, see page 96

God Rest You Merry

BETTMANN ARCHIVE

CAN we stop the Christmas carol—stop it just for a moment with our mouths partly open, ready to sing the next word but not singing it? And the pressing crowds in the stores, the snarl and clutter of traffic, the shouts of newsboys, the throb of giant presses—let's stop them too. There.

Now, with a song hanging in the silence, let us grasp the moment. If ever there are moments to be savored, Christmas has them. Why, indeed, do we bustle so frantically at Christmastime, or any other time? What moves us? Why are we cynical, hopeful? What thrills us? Why do we love? Why do we pray?

What, truly, does Christmas mean? Can we say honestly, not from rote, without guile, without pretense, but from the depths of our being? And how can we say it?

Thornton Wilder found a way to say a part of it in his play Our Town, which many have seen. Many others have lived it. It is produced on a bare stage with the Stage Manager in plain sight. In the final scene, Emily Webb, a young woman in her grave, asks to relive just one day of her life.

The Stage Manager allows her to relive her twelfth birthday, beginning at dawn. It is a lovely day—how lovely she had forgotten—a sunny, snowy, anguished, heartbreakingly beautiful day. Each blissfully sad moment is an eternity. She cannot bear the blindness of those she loves. "Let's look at one another," she pleads. But they do not look, nor did she, then.

Through her tears, Emily asks the Stage Manager, "Do human beings ever realize life while they live it—every, every minute?"

"No," is his answer. "The saints and the poets, maybe—they do some."

Perhaps those of us who are neither saints nor poets cannot realize any moment of life to its fullest or tell what Christmas truly means, but we can, if we pause for a moment, say some of its meaning to ourselves.

We can say love—love in its widest sense, love that is the touch of young lips together and love that grows, love that is of human bondage and part courage to bear the burdens of love. We can say love, as the youngster carrying a crippled child said it: "He ain't heavy—he's my brother." Love has many faces but all are kind, from that of the Madonna to the love behind a smile for a friend or a smile of thanks or welcome to a stranger. A mother's love is largely working love, as is a father's, and their love for each other. All love is a part of what Christmas means, we believe.

And we can say quiet—yes, just quiet. Let our Christmas mean some quietude, dear Lord—quiet in the sense of the absence of sound as well as in tranquillity of mind, for we know communication is impossible among those who talk all the time. Christmas is a time for moments of silence, like this one, for how else can we speak to our God and hear Him?

Christmas to us also means simplicity—simplicity of worship and of hospitality and of gifts. Simple things, like love, are unencumbered by pretense. Children often put aside the complex, costly toys and spend hours happily playing with the boxes they came in. St. Luke's account of Christ's birth is an unexcelled model of simplicity—so simple in fact and in the telling but so divinely magnificent in meaning: "And she brought forth her first-born son, and wrapped him in swaddling clothes, and laid him in a manger; because there was no room for them in the inn." May such plain sweet words and their meaning never be lost, in literature or life. May we remember especially on Christmas Day that expensive gifts and all the gaudy blaze of the Christmas celebration have no meaning except as tokens of love.

In our moment to think what Christmas truly means, we would get down to earth and include such human behavior as good manners and all that good manners imply. Courtesy is too little practiced and too easily scorned as superficial and of no importance in our hustling world. The stately graces and galante behavior may belong to the days of crinoline and candlelight (though we still have crinoline and we still have candlelight), but good manners that by long practice come from within do not grow out-of-date. On that day when the young are courteous to their elders, and their elders are courteous to them, when all motorists look out for the other fellow and the other fellow is polite, when no one demands preferential treatment, the spirit of Christmas is being kept.

Listen, as you name what Christmas means to you in this moment before the caroling continues: In the silence, do you feel what Christmas means? Do you hear the joy of Christmas? For Christmas is, above all, joy, the joy of a heart open to the bounties of earth—good friends, good food, warm baths, spring rain, children's eyes, sun, snow and starry skies—and the blessings of heaven. This is the joy of joy shared in a common pool and thereby many times increased. Let us feel it first, then sing out and hear the words we sing:

God rest you merry, gentlemen,
Let nothing you dismay.
Remember Christ our Saviour
Was born on Christmas Day
To save us all from Satan's power
When we were gone astray.
O tidings of comfort and joy!

The Editors

Sincerely—Willis Wayde

By JOHN P. MARQUAND

When Willis Wayde came east with his parents to live in the garden house on the Harcourt estate, he was fifteen, but he was beginning to notice things. He knew, for instance, that old Mr. Harcourt wanted to keep Willis' restless, talented father happy at Harcourt Mill—that was why he let the Waydes live in his garden house, treated their son almost like his own grandson, Bill, encouraged Willis' friendship with Bill's arrogant sister, Bess.

"They're not our kind of people," said Willis' mother; and although Willis came to feel at home with the Harcourts and was keenly interested in the mill, he knew his mother was right—at times Bess treated him rudely, and when Willis went to Boston University, Bill went to Harvard. Yet when old Mr. Harcourt lent him money to go through Harvard Business School, Willis dimly understood that in accepting he had sworn a kind of allegiance to Harcourt Mill—and to the whole Harcourt family.

■■ What had the world been like when Willis attended the Harvard Business School? What had he been like in those days? He could not tell exactly; he could only recall a sense of general excitement and well-being. He had suddenly become a bright boy at the Harvard Business School. He had begun to gain an assurance with the high marks they gave him. He was brighter than most of the young men around him and he had ceased to be afraid of money and he had begun to learn its uses.

This was the only picture he could give of himself when Bill Harcourt introduced him to a girl named Sylvia Hodges and her family during his last semester at the Business School. Willis could still see Bill's room with its photographs and his neckties and his evening clothes flung over a chair waiting for the valet service. Willis could still see the papers on Bill's desk, always in disorder, and he could see Bill himself in his gray slacks and his soft shirt.

Copyright, 1954, by John P. Marquand

"You know I did the craziest thing the other night," Bill said. "I went to one of those dances in Brattle Hall. I was introduced to a girl and I was stuck with her for about an hour. She's somebody Steve Decker knows, and now she's written me a note."

He rustled through the papers on his desk and handed Willis a letter written in a precise girl's hand:

Dear Mr. Harcourt: I remember your saying the other evening, though perhaps you have forgotten it, that you never can find much to do on Sundays. We always have a pickup supper every Sunday night and we play pencil-and-paper games or something like that. Steve Decker is coming next Sunday, and I hope you can come, too, at half past six o'clock, and bring a friend, if you would care to. It's just an informal family supper, but it will give you something to do on Sunday. Sincerely,

SYLVIA HODGES.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 72

"Take a look at yourself," said Willis' father,

"and be sure where you're going."

But when you're young, you simply go.

her head against his shoulder. "Willis, tell me what you want," she said.

by Lee Rog

"HE'S the most amusing man I ever met," said Cindy Holmes.

"But he's married," said Gloria Cook.

"He makes me laugh all the time," said Cindy, "and I never heard him tell a joke."

"But he's married," said Gloria.

"I've been in New York two years, and until I met this man I was ready to give the town back to the Indians," said Cindy.

"But he's married," said Gloria.

"Wherever we go, the piano players call him by name," said Cindy.

"His first name, or his married name?" said Glor

"He's read everything, even Robert Browning, and I love Robert Browning," said Cindy.

"It figures. Robert Browning was also married," said Gloria.

"Don't joke me around," said Cindy Holmes. "I'm just crazy in love with this boy."

Gloria swung her legs over the side of the studi couch and sat up, looking at her friend, who was upright in a wooden chair, hands folded, bac straight, like a good little schoolgirl at her desk. "Listen, country cousin," said Gloria, "don talk like a Broadway sharpshooter just because you're doing the town with the night-clu critic from Spotlight, the show-business weekly. This is not a boy, this is thirty-seven years old. This has also committed legal matrimony with a lady eleven blocks due south on Madison Avenue. Although that fact doesn't trouble the piano players' friend, it should trouble you. You're a nice clean-cut All-American Yankee Doodle girl, and all that can happen to you is that you will get broken up in bits. My advice, kiddy, is to take to the hills before the dame is busted."

"This man makes me feel the town is a warm and wonderful place," said Cindy.

"Mrs. O'Leary's cow did the same for Chicago The verdict was first-degree burns," said Gloria.

"I'll put myself in Spencer Cochran's hands," said Cindy. "There isn't a mean bone or a sharp fingernail in his whole body, and he's the first man I've met CONTINUED ON PAGE

"The time comes to make decisions," said Cindy, "even when they hurt."

The happy affair

The keeping room was family sitting room and kitchen combined and is still the heart of the house. Most of the ancient utensils came to light when an 1830 cookstove was removed.

THE OLD Heath House IN BROOKLINE

By RICHARD PRATT, Architectural Editor of the Jour

AMONG all the many fine early homes of America which were built by fond parents as wedding presents for their young marrieds, the old Heath house here is one of the happiest I know; it having been handed down from one generation of Heaths to another, beginning with that of young Ebenezer Heath, who carried his bride across its brand-new threshold in 1791. It was one of the great beauties of the whole Boston neighborhood at the time, and still is. It started right off being a house that everyone enjoyed tremendously. Young Mr. Heath would come trooping in after town meeting with his fellow selectmen. He played the clarinet, the flute, cornet and drum. He also sang for dancing when the fiddlers failed to appear. The house was always full. It was full of attractive young ladies one afternoon in 1825 when the elderly Lafayette stopped by and kissed them all. A little later was a house to which Emerson would con for its Friday evenings of music; one of t young Heaths playing the French horn in t ensemble, and Abigail Heath playing one the first pianos in Brookline. It is a house f of things that might well have been there fro the very beginning, and of things that beau fully belong. The English bookcase has alwa stood where it stands today in the library; t game of draughts, set out on the gaming tab there, is one the selectmen played. In the kee ing room, the little child's chair that is 1 years older than the house is a reminder things handed down from one house to a other. For the old Heath house is not the fi Heath house that has stood in this san general locality. It is the third. It shou really be called the young Heath hous

EZRA STOLLER

n the paneled library here, most of the furniture in house is Queen Anne or Chippendale of early New land origin, beautifully fitting present-day needs.

This bedroom's curtains have netted fringe. The armchair is by Joseph Short, of Newburyport, and the dish-top table with camel feet is a rare Queen Anne example.

window clusters, cornice and pedimented doorway te a façade that for the place and period is char-ristically chaste, yet rich in spite of all its restraint.

UNITED PRESS

Elizabeth II with Sir Winston—called by Alfred North Whitehead, "a better Prime Minister flat in bed with pneumonia than any other man in England up in his boots." At Buckingham Palace.

Churchil

Of

By INSPECTOR WALTER H. THOMPSON

Winston Churchill has been an important, if sometimes exasperating, figure in British political life for more than forty years. As a Cabinet member and Prime Minister he has been entitled to the protection of men from Scotland Yard, an assignment sometimes full of peril for them, but more often full of amazement at this lovable but headstrong man. Inspector Walter Thompson, who was to guard Churchill on and off for twenty years, first approached his assignment with misgivings. Thompson, who had been with Lloyd George, then Prime Minister, was far from pleased to be transferred to Churchill:

"Mr. Churchill was known to be a demanding man by all members of the Special Branch who had ever had this detail. They never had any time off! The man's hours were insane: Mr. Churchill's hours were reputed to be 'casually tyrannical,' if such things can go together."

WHEN I first met him, he was pacing about in his study in his home in Sussex Square in London. He was already a world-famous man on this spring day in 1921, and he may also have been a great man by that time. Ten years before that he had been First Lord of the Admiralty. And at that moment he had two portfolios. One is enough. But not enough for Churchill. He was Secretary of State for Air, and Secretary of State for the Colonies. It was in this double capacity that we would be departing in a few days for Egypt.

As he rocketed about his large study, not looking up nor knowing his privacy was about to be broken, he seemed almost ludicrously preoccupied. The concentration was so frenzied as to approach the burlesque. Many years later I saw (in the United States) a comparable ferment of hustle and cerebration, and it was the heroic little bundle of purpose called Mickey Mouse.

"This is Sergeant Thompson," his secretary said quietly.

Mr. Churchill stopped walking and looked over. "You wanted to see me?" he asked.

I did not want to see him at all and I recited the orders from Scotland Yard had been sent to guard his life. He pulle self at once from his deep thought and to me as if it were the most important then before the Crown. He had the gr of immediacy, and the greater one of di

"Thank you, Thompson. I've no dou we'll get on well together," he told me. too, though often at the expenditure sive controls.

Mr. Churchill was not much taller t Prime Minister whom I had just left. Bo were quick of mind and both were hurrying. Lloyd George seemed to sc while Mr. Churchill was more of a lun charger. In the months to come, I wa able to make comparison between the men and come to my own evaluation their real strengths were.

I do not believe many men ever Churchill. And the few times he was fo was caught in errors of his own, never i judgment of the skills of others. He was expert at so many different areas and ments of thought that his own belief, g through the years, that he was close fallible, seems, in the light of what w today, about justified. But he was the act experimenting sort who had to find out couldn't do by getting smashed up in it

There was no recoil in Churchill. If didn't "give," he took the blow and pus in for another. Today he is a very batte battlewagon, with scars and fracture Sassoon Dock to Omdurman.

I soon found myself rocking back an in the roughest railroad I know of—the Lyons-Marseilles—bound for Marseille by liner for Alexandria. On board the t sides the official party was Mrs. Ch Nothing seemed ever to disturb or to dis her, but I doubt if she had any more plea the prospect of the Eastern Mediter

Copyright, 1954, by Walter Henry Thompson. From the forthcoming book, Assignment: Churchill, by Walter Henry Thompson, to be published in January, 1955, by Farrar, Straus & Young, Inc.

rchill likes to know when he is in danger. It simply delights him – never tell him." Inspector Walter Thompson, of Scotland Yard, was Churchill's bodyguard for twenty years, tells of the events –
c and private – which he witnessed while keeping up with Sir Winston.
is "Winnie" at ease, seen by the man whose orders were never to let him out of sight.

Guard . . .

EHLERT—BLACK STAR

"battered old battlewagon"

"the best talker, but . . .

the worst listener"

"a large meteor"

"a squealing cherub"

"kicker of wastebaskets"

d. Her husband was having a good e mission was awkward. The danger
The British were at a near peak of rity with the Egyptians at this time.
's life would be in danger from the e were on Egyptian soil.
nd a swarm of flies hit us at the same
e tied up at the dockside at Alexan-re was a large and sullen crowd of s to meet us when we stepped ashore, e was no demonstration. Our party nabby little cars over dirty back roads,
the train to Cairo from its "off" side.
was well appointed, of course, but a
.
was a shrill tootling on the whistle ulled slowly away, but we were going neighborhoods so congested that our pick up any speed at all continued to apprehensive. I felt some better when party was seated in the commodious nent (fit for a Sultan indeed, and half
. Mr. Churchill busied himself with e boxes, the whole bothersome cluster I had myself wrestled aboard (how I se boxes), and then sat down at a cretary and began to read and to per-is seemed somehow the proper thing inet member to be doing in an equa-ntry.
hurchill, always cool and always comd of course one of the best dressed of n of her day, snapped on a fan and ed reading as if she were home in I had the curious feeling in that ind a prick of possible disloyalty) that nt picture of Mr. and Mrs. Churchill so much an example of their unusual o adapt as an inability ever to realize e in foreign places. Whatever it was, very British of them and I liked it.
Lawrence [the famous expert on the ntries] had joined us for the trip. I ching him out of the tail of my eye
n turn kept looking out the corridor
We were approaching a level crossnained standing in the compartment doorway and was not going to move to my own space till the train had got such speed that she could not then be boarded or effectively stoned or fired upon.

There was the sudden sound of splintering glass. Two windows had been smashed, one ahead of the Churchills' compartment and one behind. Mrs. Churchill had stopped reading. She seemed more annoyed than interested. Churchill laid aside his pencil and turned to Sir Archibald Sinclair, his Parliamentary Secretary. "Better relieve Thompson of his packages, Archie, he may be more useful to us if he's unencumbered."

We all exchanged grins. Thinking we might have been boarded by a couple of Arab skulkers, I drew my revolver and kept it just beneath my jacket. My feet were apart to catch the sway of the train. My elbows were in contact with each side of the compartment doorjamb. I would have been very hard to pass. We began to gather a bit of speed. Lawrence came back. He never spoke much.

"We'll be all right. There's nothing left to smash."

Churchill looked up boyishly at me and smiled, then turned back and began to scowl over the empire's problems.

I do not at all care for camels. They may be picturesque at a distance, but I have never seen them at a distance sufficient to bring out this pleasing characteristic. I knew that I would look altogether ridiculous on a camel and I feel the camel knew this too. But I do not believe I looked any worse than Winston Churchill. No matter where we might be, he could always manage to balloon himself with the most surprising outer garments.

Off we scooted, Mr. Churchill like a squealing cherub, myself like Don Quixote making my own windmills with my elbows. On a camel there is nothing to grab but the sky. And there is no discernible steering apparatus. You just go whither the other camels go. It is this fraternity feeling alone that delivers new riders to given destinations.

There is a light cord that runs from the saddle to the camel's right nostril, but it might as well have been a bellpull in a deserted castle for all the tugging I gave it and the good I got of it. Once the camel looked back directly at me and looked so mean I felt for my gun by reflex, and stopped tugging.

There was nothing to do but suffer through to the end, and as we progressed over these historic sands romance abated with each step and outrage mounted. It indeed seemed the most superfluous of ways to serve the King, and I could no more get used to the motion than I could have named the direction we headed.

I realized suddenly that Churchill, who was on my right flank at this moment, was precariously close to being on his own right flank in the next stride or two, for he had billowed off to one side of the saddle and was searching miserably about for something to grab hold of. As I already knew from my own circumstance, there was not anything a man could do for himself. The inevitable moment of separation came, and the Secretary for Air and the Colonies went through the air and landed in the middle of one of his colonies in a fine fan of white sand and wheeling horses. He rolled over and looked around for his hat. Arab sheiks dismounted quickly and offered their steeds, but Winston—who had been fourth in rank among the cavalry candidates at Sandhurst—had come to ride on a camel and he got back on and we somehow got out to Sakara.

Luncheon [in the desert] was spread out for us, but an hour after dismounting I was still shaking so I could not properly hold a sandwich. Winston wiggled a bit, too, as if secretively testing his spine for alignment or his ribs for cracks. The thought of the ride back was quite sickening.

We got back on the camels somewhat after the lunch period. T. E. Lawrence had introduced Winston to a trick of some sort (maybe he had said something to the camel). In any event, Churchill's CONTINUED ON PAGE 100

"I learned right away that on an island guests stay all night or for two weeks--or years."

"If you want to keep your husband's love, the instructions say, always look pretty, be fun, cook his breakfast and have outside interests!"

"Down at the sea wall I listened to the waves against the pilings and realized the tide was in and these were our waves!"

"Even though my neck, my back, and my palms and with each step little jagged pains ran do experienced a wonderful feeling of secur

Onions in the Stew

Where hearts were high and fortunes low and onions in the stew.
—CHARLES DIVINE

The author of The Egg and I describes her personal hand-to-hand encounter with life on an island, amid such pestilences as storm, strife, a guest on the roof and adolescents ("They don't actually hate their parents—just feel absolute contempt for them").

By BETTY MacDONALD

For twelve years we MacDonalds have been living on an island called Vashon. It is across Puget Sound from Seattle, Washington, and is more or less accessible by ferryboat, one at each end. The population is around five thousand people and an uncounted number of sniveling cowards who move to the city in the winter.

There is no getting away from it, living on an island is more arduous than living in the city. To begin with, an island is harder to find. Not that there are not plenty of them up here in the Pacific Northwest where most of the time even the people are completely surrounded by water. It is the getting there to look at them. If you find "the place" and it is for sale, and you get moved in, there are the problems of getting out again and then back in. It sounds rugged and usually is, but there are people who not only have done it but if given a second, even a third, chance would do it again.

How is it we moved to Vashon Island in the first place? Well, it was just after Pearl Harbor and my husband Donald and I had recently met and married. Up to the time of our marriage I had been living at home with my two children, Anne, twelve, and Joan, eleven, my mother and two of my four sisters in a house in the university district where we had numerous pets, a great deal of fun, hordes of company and hardly any money.

I decided that I had better start looking for a home. Any home big enough for Don and me, Anne and Joan, the dog Tudor, my cat Mrs. Miniver, our several thousand books, Joan's snakeskin-and-shell box of pretty rocks, Anne's collection of Sonja Henie pictures and Alma Gluck records, their bicycles, roller skates, ice skates, tennis rackets and skis, Don's college blue books, his elk antlers,

CONTINUED ON PAGE 110

Copyright, 1954, by Betty MacDonald.
This is a condensation of the book soon to be published by J. B. Lippincott Co.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY IVAN DMITRI

Homemade Chri

Gay and very easy to do, these idea gifts have that best-of-all flavor of having been made specially for someone. Ingredien many of them are simply glue, felt and ornaments; for others, just paint and imagination.

By CYNTHIA MCADOO WHEATLAND

This year's wrapping papers, tinsel and ornaments are beautiful and varied, can make the outside of a present as exciting as what's inside.

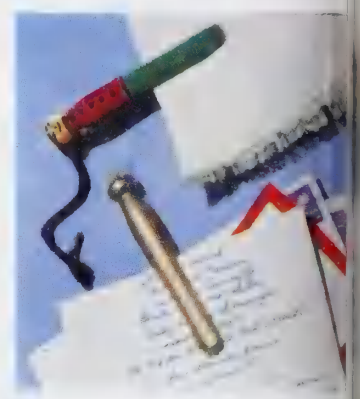
Keeping small hands and faces clean will be fun with these enchanting towel sets. A third of a yard of any bright cotton will make the hand towel and the appliquéd name of the lucky child.

Layers of different-colored wax shaped in a milk-carton mold make a handsome candle for home or for giving. Painted and decorated, an old coffee can makes a cunning piggy bank.

Colorful felt is simply glued to an ordinary address or memo book, trimmed to fit, decorated with buttons, beads, initials or what you will.

With a look of frivolity, these decorated hangers are nonetheless practical. They will hold jackets, skirts, and one is done with hooks for hanging belts. The velvet ribbon (which grips skirts as tight as can be), sequins and artificial flowers are glued to painted hangers.

STUART



Pretty party apron matches fringed place mats. The apron of organdy and printed cotton in Christmas colors is attached to an adjustable waist clip.

This little clown is really full of beans! His hair is yarn, his head a scrap of muslin, his body a striped beanbag.

Star tree is made of graduated layers of buckram cut in points, trimmed with stars (or you could use sequins, tinsel, glitter). White candle supports them through center.

Old-fashioned wooden clothespins make charming clips for desk or tab The Chinaman has thumbtack hat, braided yarn queue. Letter clip is painted gold with pearls glued to to Specs holders in wonderful felt decorated whimsically v shells, pearls, gold thread, or in a more tailored fashio with initials and dressed up with scattered sequins.

Let the children help

as

As an extra "tree" or just a Christmas flight of fancy, the pegboard finds yet another use. Here, we painted ours green, hung it with decorations and small presents.

nsive wooden bowl and set are an attractive present ainted and prettied up.
ne has quotation from a nas legend inscribed around it.

Painted wooden bucket and tin baking dish are gay and Christmasy by themselves or packed with favorite goodies.

For shoveling snow or just for fun, these bright felt mittens are gay as can be with their gilt and pearl trim, cotton-fringe edging and jingle bells.

nd handsome, our e set hangs on a painted ard, the place for each nted in black.
ng man who gets keep his shoeshining nt in its place.

Tiny doll is felt-wrapped pipe cleaners topped with wooden button for her head. Easy and fun to dress in miniature clothes; sewing-basket scraps will furnish a huge wardrobe.

Dress up someone's closet with boxes covered in a pretty wallpaper. Or try an adhesive-backed plastic. They come in attractive colors and stripes, are very easy to work with.

nary plastic boxes for kitchen efrigerator take on new roles costumed for the dressing table.
colored felt is glued to surmounted by heart-shaped shion. Right, ribbons, lace-paper , false rosebuds and les make a pretty icing.

Unpainted child's chair takes on a Christmas air with bright red paint and stenciling. Painted rolling pin, with nursery cutouts and bells, makes gaily jingling pull toy.

First on our list are tissue-paper snowballs. Tissue paper, colored or spangled, or painted, is cut into ten 2½" squares, fastened in center with staple and ornament hanger attached. The pile is now cut into 2½" circles and five pieces are pulled to right, five to left to make ruffles.

Paper Santa's head is put together with paste or staples. His beard is curled paper strips, fur on hat is cotton.

Endless chain of bright paper disks glued or stapled to golden string will enliven your tree. Use scraps of wrapping paper or metallic foil cut in varying diameters, and quarters or fifty-cent pieces to trace out circles.

Candy cane and Christmas balls are of white porous plastic, perfect for children to trim with sequins, beads, braid, ribbon, and so forth.

Crystal beads strung on thread or yarn make icicles, fascinating for a child to make, lovely and glittery on the tree.

Triangular Santa Claus made of heavy colored paper has cotton beard, is a big amusing ornament.

Strung stars are a variation of disks described above and are made the same way, or you can use the already gummed ones, large and in different colors.

Cone of colored paper is dotted with paint or nail polish, sprinkled with gold sparkles, could be striped, sequined or frosted.

For further information on materials or directions for making, please write to Reference Library LADIES' HOME JOURNAL Phila. 5, Penna., for Pattern No. 2627, price 10 cents.

a dream of a dress . . .

FASHION says dreams are made of bows and roses, lace and tulle, the covered-up look or the very bare . . . that the shirtwaist dress and the basque silhouette are young and entrancing . . . that dream colors are moonlight white, jewel blues and all the shades of pink and red roses. The gayest finish for almost any dress is a pair of short satin gloves, gleaming white or color. By WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

Young, gay and really devastating—shirtwaist fashions make another important entrance for evening in satin, chiffon, brocade. This silk chiffon by Ceil Chapm

DERUJINSKY

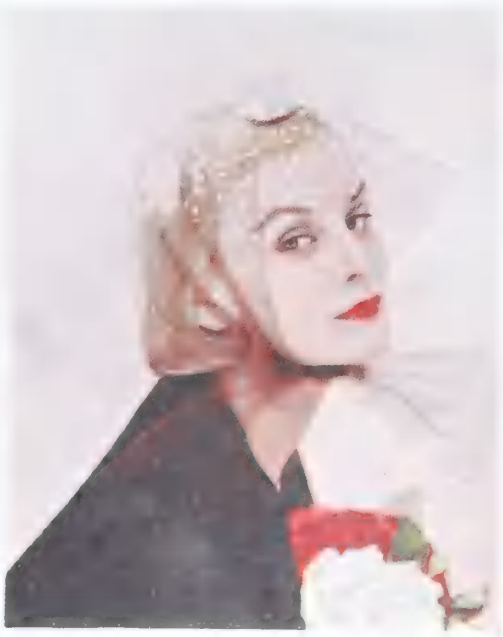
Rose-patterned lace and nylon tulle, satin sash caught with a red rose. Designed by Sylvan Rich.

Big parties call for tulle and satin, bare shoulders. By Fred Perlberg.

asque dress with bows — Ben Barrack's silk poult-de-ie, Hattie Carnegie's chain of ruby-crystal beads.

Frothy baby-pink lace patterned with roses, tied with organdy bows, by Ceil Chapman.

Camisole dress, cover-up bolero, by Celia Phillips. Silk poult-de-soie.



Holiday touches for LONGER HAIR

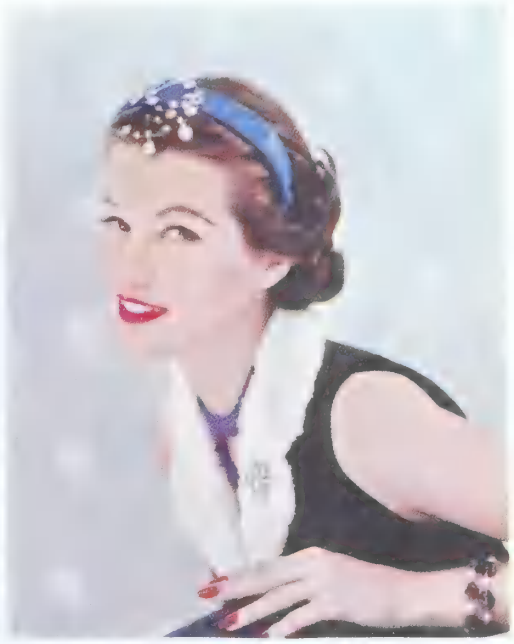
Whether your adaptation of longer hair is soft and backswept or sleek and smooth, your tricks with ribbons and veiling will bring it a freshly feminine look for the New Year.

By DAWN CROWELL NORMAN
Beauty Editor of the Journa

Starched circular veiling, velvet trimmed, perches fetchingly on semilong, wide-waved hair that brushes close to the head toward the back, curls turning up.

Babushka in silk net glittering with rhinestones, by Mr. John, to keep a sleek hairdo in pretty place.

Cap-shaped veiling sparkled with feathers and rhinestones for a party look. By Mr. John.



For young blondes with silk-sheath hairdos like this easy-to-keep page-boy—black velvet ribbon bow with streamers to end where a tiny waist begins. By Mr. Alf.

A wide bandeau of tucked jersey sweeps semilong hair away from face, allowing ends to swing softly in back. By Elizabeth Marks. Keep your hair immaculate with regular shampoos.

HAIR DESIGNS BY ENRICO CARUSO

Electric-blue satin headband is dressed up with a widow's-peak sparkle jewel. By Therese Ahrens.

Softly feminine, easy to wear, the timeless page-boy gets a new look with deep wave low on side.

ROGER PRIGENT

Shaped close to the head, clipped behind the ear, this longer hair is just barely turned at the ends.

A bustle bow in bright red velvet to sit above a chignon or cluster of softly brushed back curls. By Elizabeth Marks.

Sleek in front, softly upswept, curled in back—kept that way with a pearl-trimmed bicycle clip.

Holiday Separates.

Glamorous white rayon lamé lined in Orlon fleece (see page 137 for yardages), No. S-4545. Nylon-velvet sheath, No. 8016. Beautiful bright velveteen coat over silk lamé, No. 829.

Black-and-white plaid silk-and-cotton shirt, No. 7807. Wool-jersey skirt, No. 8300. Sleeveless jersey blouse, No. 8493. Plaid overskirt with giant sequins tied on in yarn, No. 8461.

Fringe-printed silk-taffeta skirt, Design No. 8300. Rayon mat-jersey blouse, No. 8494. Fringe-print bodice trimmed with real fringe, No. 7948. Lovely long wool-jersey skirt, No. 8495. Jewelry by Hattie Carnegie.

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Greenwich, Conn. or in Canada from 198 Spadina Ave., Toronto, Ont. Some prices slightly higher in Canada. (*Conn. residents please add sales tax.) These patterns will be sent third-class mail. If you desire shipment first-class mail, please include 5¢ additional for each pattern ordered.

RICHARD AVEDON

gay combinations

n to have a gay, colorful costume r over the holidays. Pretty s are everywhere and we are filled leas about how to use them.
ler printed on corduroy looks y pretty at the top OR the bottom kirt (in either case it's tful when jeweled). A fringe-l taffeta makes a charming skirt amusing bodice to wear with a skirt. Pastel rayon satin combined Orlon fleece makes a pretty shirt lovely skirt. An India-print is fun for tapered slacks AND rous in a long jeweled evening skirt.
h picture of these Vogue
s you have TWO ideas for using fabric — the choice is up to you.

By Nora O'Leary
Pattern Editor of the Journal

© VOGUE

Plaids go everywhere: these tartan designs of acetate taffeta sell for about $1.00 a yard, 45″ width. The full red plaid skirt, No. 8495, organdy blouse, No. 8320. Amusing bow-stole from five yards of fabric (see page 137). Slim skirt, No. 6949; top, No. 7948.

m one half India-print spread, quilted or plain, rsey overblouse, No. 8423. Jeweled triangle. from one half India-print spread, already jew- (we'll tell you where to buy). Blouse, No. 7394.

Pastels in a love match of surprising fabrics—rayon satin and Orlon fleece. Blue fleece blouse, rayon-satin skirt, No. 8419. Add cummerbund. Rayon-satin tailored shirt, No. 8267. Furry Orlon-fleece skirt, No. 8199. Satin shoes by Herbert Levine.

Jeweled borders high or low. Petit-point rose-design skirt length, already jeweled for $13.95 (see page 137) on off-white corduroy, No. 8300. Square-necked wool-jersey top, No. 8493. Jersey wrap-around blouse, No. 8494.

Menu

Vegetable-Juice Cocktails
Ham-and-Cheese Pastries
Shrimp-Stuffed Celery
Spiced Olives
Savory Creamed Oysters
Turkey Glacé
Swedish Liver Pâté Melba Toast
Apple-Tang Salad
Christmas Cookies
Coffee

(Planned for 12)

The Party's On!

NOW it comes about that there's another year's end and a new year's beginning coming up. I've always thought that these big, important holidays came too close together. We hardly get settled down after the goings on at Thanksgiving before we look one day at the calendar and what date looms up like a neon sign on a windowful of diamonds? It's December twenty-fifth.

Experience teaches nothing. We begin to shiver with shivers brought on by the thought of Christmas cards not sent, of presents not even bought, of lists and memos and what did we give Aunt Nellie last year, and how many children has Cousin Jo got anyway, and how old are the little angels. It's getting colder It certainly feels like snow. And before the tree is completely trimmed holiday parties are as thick as the stars in a winter sky.

Choose your partners If you know the fisher's hornpipe and the Virginia reel and the rest of the old-time dances, now revived and become so stylish, you'll know about "Choose your partners." What I am asking the guests to do is to choose their supper vittles. The choice is yours, take one or more or all. Get your best girl or latch on to the handsome and fascinating young man with the red necktie, my dear, and lend the sparkle of your eyes to the candlelight, to heighten the glow of the flames, and then, when the partners are all partnered off, let the life of the party loose. For now, for sure, the party's really on!

Only in case. Because you may be short of, or want something, a little new in the way of nibble bits for this holiday-week party, I have two or three receipts I'll pass along with my best wishes. And the No. 1 attraction is

Ham-and-Cheese Pastries

Cream together ¼ pound softened butter or margarine and ¼ pound cream cheese. Add 1 cup flour and mix well. Chill overnight. Next day mix together ¾ cup

CONTINUED ON PAGE 165

By ANN BATCHELDER

STUART-FOWLER

"What's with you?" he asked.
"I think," I said, "I'm going to get married."

What an aw thing to happen!

Tonight of all

all those ghosts coming ba to laugh at he

The night before Wedding

RIETT PRATT

I'M doing a shocking thing. I'm sitting here, the night before my wedding, thinking about the men in my life.

I used to think that when you met the man, a sort of neon sign, complete with arrows, went on in your brain. Maybe that happens with some people, but with me there were no signs, and any arrows I saw were pointing in the wrong direction. Now that everything's settled, and wonderful, it seems that it couldn't have been any other way. But it could have. . . .

The first man I ever loved was Mat Cantrell. I'm not sure when I started loving Mat. He was always around. The Cantrells lived just a block from us, and Mat's folks and mine were good friends. They played bridge together, and went on picnics together, and shared holiday dinners. Mat and I were both only children, so we saw a lot of each other, although he was four years older than I. Mother says that when I was five, I announced that Mat and I were engaged. I don't remember that, but I do remember how I felt about him.

I have been infatuated since then, I have even been in love, but I have never completely and unquestioningly adored anyone as I did Mat. I liked everything about him.

I liked the way he looked. He was tall and thin, and he had dark eyes and straight black hair, which I envied and admired. My own hair was blond and curly, and seemed expressly designed to be wrenched by brushes.

Mat was witty. I remember one winter day when he took the heel of his galoshes and cracked the ice in the fishpond until it looked like a jigsaw puzzle, and then said, "Boy, I'd like to see somebody put it together again." I laughed so hard I fell down in the snow.

Mat was smart. He told me about religion: "The Red Sea came down and drowned the whole army." He told me about history: Charles the First—"They cut off his head and the blood spurted out"; Mary Queen of Scots—"They cut off her head and the blood spurted out"; Marie Antoinette—"They cut off her head," and so on. He told me about geography, and taught me to identify airplanes. I thought he was perfect, and I suppose he thought so too, and this common bond held us together for a long time, in spite of the difference in our ages. CONTINUED ON PAGE 158

VEGETABLE BEEF

The Garden's Best to you and yours Campbell's

VEGETABLE

VEGETABLE SOUP

Call the honor roll of the garden . . . 15 vegetables, bright and gay . . . simmered in a sound beef stock . . . temptingly seasoned . . . and wholeheartedly good.

VEGETABLE BEEF SOUP

Here's a soup the whole family loves—hearty with fine lean beef—sparkling with carrots, tomatoes, peas, and barley. It's sound good eating—any time.

Campbell's make 4 great Vegetable Soup

EGETARIAN VEGETABLE SOUP

meal in a minute—15 good garden vege- tempting, deep-flavored, all-vegetable e it the heart of any meatless menu.

CHICKEN GUMBO

Like your vegetables with chicken? Here are celery, tomatoes and okra—garden-fresh and garden-gay—with Deep South accents of rice and tender chicken.

quick—so nutritious—so simply delicious!

This JOURNAL cover was, in its day, the most popular we had ever used. Its wish is timeless, and we still say—as fervently now as forty years ago—"God bless us every one."

LINE A DAY

By ANN BATCHELDER

1 This will be my month to give a lift to the busy-day meal—to provide you with enough new wrinkles, surprises and guises to carry you along under full sail.

2 Quick and hearty lunch for a Christmas-shopping day. Wait till you see what I bought for you, Esmerelda. Mix 1 can of the new condensed onion soup, 1 can condensed mushroom soup and 2 cups milk. Heat and serve with toasted cheese sandwiches.

3 If you've been of the mind that a duckling must always be roasted, you're in for a surprise. It broils beautifully in no longer time than it takes to broil a chicken, but it must be a duckling, not a duck.

4 Now here's the way I do it. Have your butcher cut the duckling into quarters. Rub first lemon juice then the rind of lemon into it, and I do mean rub. (Run a grater over the lemon a bit to release the fragrance.) Fasten a slice of orange dipped in salad oil top and bottom of each piece with a skewer. Broil as you would chicken, basting occasionally with orange juice. Serve with wild rice if you feel like splurging.

5 A simple twist of the wrist, coupled with a turn or two of the imagination, and you have a chafing dish of chicken or turkey à la king, to which have been added a can of mushroom soup and enough canned whole mushrooms to be easily recognized.

6 If you can get your fruiterer to see the light, cajole him into letting you have some green bananas. Peel and split them the long way, dip them in flour or fine cracker meal, sprinkle with cinnamon and sugar and fry in butter or margarine. Season the flour or meal with salt and a whisper of sweet basil. Serve with broiled ham.

7 You remember about making baking-powder biscuits with orange juice for breakfast? Add some grated orange rind to the dough. While they're hot, split and spread them with butter or margarine creamed with sugar and orange juice.

8 You know all about compound interest, but I want to tell you about an entrée compounded of a slice of eggplant, marinated in French dressing for an hour and broiled, a slice of broiled ham and a topping of your best creamed mushrooms. It's a three-layer deal.

9 First Chapter: For Sunday-night supper when Deacon Spicer and the parson drop by, a chicken roll is as welcome as a dollar bill in the collection plate. Make a rich biscuit dough and roll it out in an oblong, butter it and spread with a mixture of 1½ cups finely chopped cold cooked chicken, 1 tablespoon chopped pimiento, 1 teaspoon minced onion and seasoning of salt, paprika, a little sage and a thimble of tarragon.

10 Second Chapter: Now roll the whole thing up like a jelly roll and bake in a hot oven until well done. Place on a hot platter, slice into fairly thick slices and serve with a rich mushroom cream sauce. Mushroom soup as a base, why not? Hot ripe olives and pimiento cups filled with little green peas, to garnish.

11 Whether you do or don't like Swedish cooking, I'll bet a dime to a feather out of the duster you'll like this. Boil a fine, white, firm cauliflower without blemish. Don't overcook. Drain it well. Cover and keep hot. Make a rich lobster Newburg or creamed-lobster receipt. Slice, not dice, the lobster. Serve the cauliflower with the lobster and sauce over it. Very hot.

12 When the skiers come stamping in, it's a quick hot dish that's first on the agenda. Having on hand a good bowl of hard-cooked eggs, cut them into quarters. Make a rich cream sauce. Put the eggs in a deep casserole. Add the sauce.

13 Verse II. Add 2 or 3 cut-up pimientos, a little mustard, a little tarragon. And of course salt and pepper to taste. On top put a good layer of grated cheese, run under the broiler and when the cheese is melted cover with buttered crumbs and brown. Serve with peas, green beans or any other vegetable at hand. Have hot rolls, relishes and fruit. And coffee and cider.

14 Just-a-Thought Department: What a spoonful of mint jelly will do for canned peas a pinch of dried tarragon will do for canned beets.

15 Sometimes put-togethers of this and that turn out to be real creations. Here's one that should have top rating: First mix together 1 can condensed cream-of-chicken soup, ½ cup mayonnaise, ½ teaspoon lemon juice and ¼ teaspoon curry powder. That's the sauce.

16 Next: Cook 1 package frozen broccoli. Drain. Arrange in casserole. Open two 5-ounce cans boned chicken, break apart and lay over broccoli. Pour sauce over all. Top with buttered crumbs. Bake until bubbly and hot. Double the recipe and invite me to dinner.

17 Who remembers the good ample barrels of apples that perfumed the cool, stone-wall cellars in country houses? Apples are a versatile fruit. Cut some cored but unpeeled tart ones into thick slices. Fry them in butter or margarine until tender, not mushy. Sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon and serve on baked Indian pudding, with vanilla ice cream.

18 It's good baked-apple weather too. Serve them warm ladled over with spoonfuls of hot butterscotch pudding, and watch the smiles go round.

19 Here's something that's no trouble to make or to eat. It is a fine lively dish. Cook 1 package broken (not too short) pieces spaghetti in boiling salted water. When tender, drain. Make about 4 cups light cream sauce, well seasoned. Add 2 cans minced clams. Put in a casserole with the spaghetti. Season again to taste. Cover with buttered crumbs and cheese and bake until the sauce is bubbly and crumbs are brown.

20 There's an inconspicuous addenda to the foregoing dish. Should you feel like adding some very thin slivers of ham to the insides of the dish, or crumbled crisp bacon to the crumbs, why, that's an addenda.

21 Ways and means: Now what could you do with carrots that you haven't already? You just listen. When the carrots are cooked and drained, add 1 teaspoon dill seed for each bunch, and 1 teaspoon vinegar with the usual salt, pepper and butter or margarine.

22 Scaloppine you know well, but here's a different way with veal and just as speedy. Buy ¾ pound (for 2) veal sliced thin as for scaloppine. Cut into ½″ strips. Toss a chopped onion in 2 tablespoons butter or margarine for a minute or two. There's more to come, so read on.

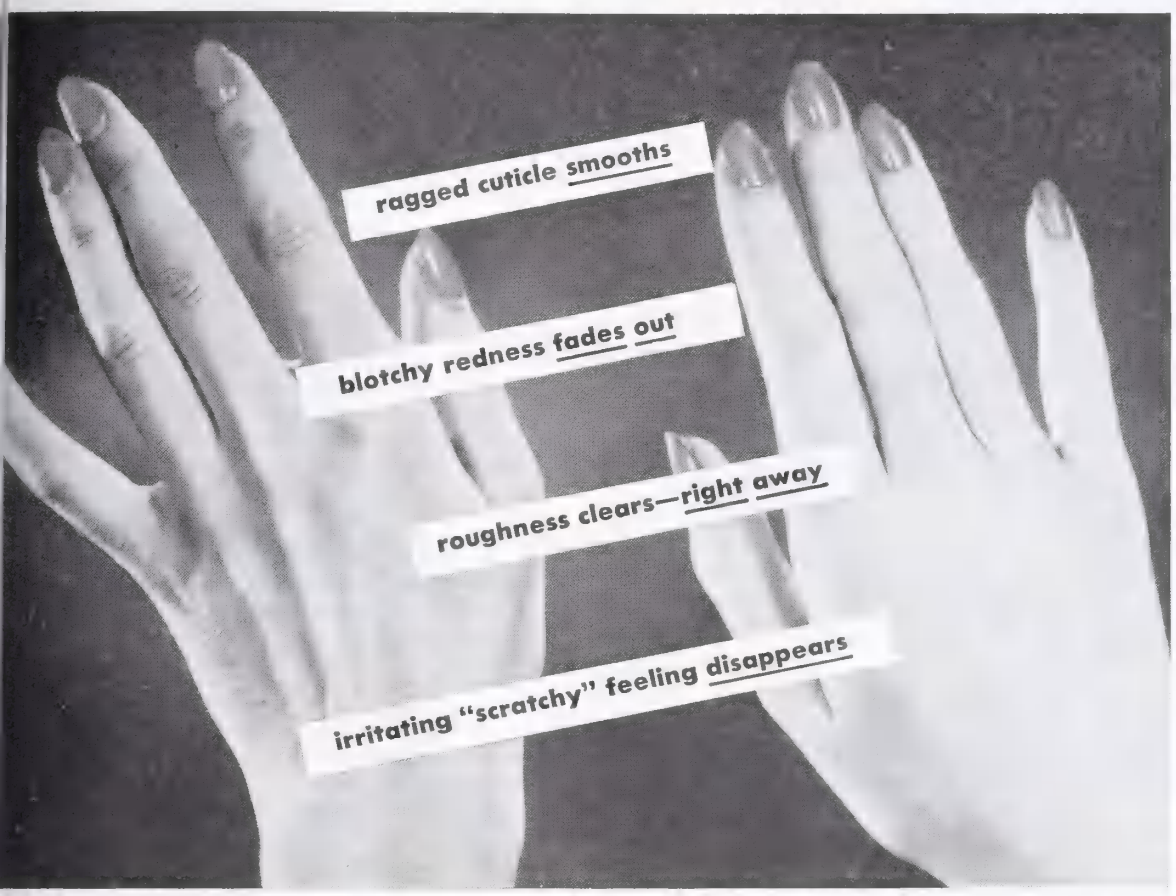
23 Chapter II: When good and hot add 2 tablespoons more butter or margarine, the veal and a handful of slivered almonds. Toss as it cooks, seasoning somewhere along the process. It takes about 10 minutes, so stand by—the veal should be just done, not overdone. Then onto a hot platter for a final benison of chopped parsley and the juice of half a lemon.

24 Comes the day for a good beef stew. Stud 2 or 3 of the small onions you add to it with whole cloves before you put on the lid. Gives a wonderful what-is-it flavor.

25 There's nothing so welcoming to a home-coming family on a cold winter night as the savory aroma of dinner baking in the oven. Try onions glazed with honey and butter to serve with oven-baked pork chops.

26 Fruit-compote receipts in your kitchen drawer may be many, but I can't resist giving you just one more. Combine one 1-pound-14-ounce can whole apricots and one 1-pound-14-ounce can greengage plums with 1 tablespoon grated orange rind. Heat and add 2 oranges, sectioned, and ½ teaspoon almond extract. Serve hot.

27 Canned clams are a modern miracle, as anyone who has opened clams and tried to desand them knows. Try this receipt.



28 Crush enough soda crackers to make 1½ cups. Mix two 10½-ounce cans minced clams with 2 slightly beaten eggs, 1 cup milk, 1 teaspoon salt, ½ teaspoon pepper, ¼ cup chopped parsley, ½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce and 1 clove garlic, crushed. Alternate layers of crumbs and clams in a 1½-quart baking dish, ending with crumbs. Dot with butter or margarine. Bake 30 minutes in moderate oven.

29 Hunting something quick and easy for lunch that is nice enough to serve a drop-in guest? I offer you scrambled eggs with crab meat. Heat 1 can crab meat, flaked, in butter in a skillet. Add the usual amount of milk, salt and pepper to 6 eggs, but include 1 teaspoon prepared mustard. Scramble and serve with broiled tomato halves.

30 Quick dessert on my mind. To 1 quart softened vanilla ice cream add ½ cup drained crushed pineapple and ¼ cup toasted coconut, crumbled. Refreeze.

31 Christmas is staring us in the eye. I hope you have done as Mrs. Roosevelt does. She told me once that she began buying her presents on the first of January for the following Christmas. Bargains, no crowds, no overworked, dead-on-their-feet salespeople, a serene and thinking mind—by the next Christmas, Mrs. R. can sit by the fire and there's not a holiday "hant" to haunt her. No last-minute memory to torment her. Let's make a resolution. Well, I wish to you all—a Merry Christmas, from Your ANNIE.

Not just another "cosmetic" lotion—
It's scientifically years ahead
Actually heals chapping!

's "protective cloak" damaged—vital substances kin's lubricants destroyed by cold and exposure, h alkali action of strong detergents

Dried-out "detergent hands"—New Angel Skin is the only leading lotion that neutralizes the harsh alkali action of detergents, helps prevent irritation

No stickiness!—Unlike old-style lotions, Angel Skin has no gummy "thickener." Angel Skin contains an ingredient that speeds penetration—sinks in at once

Angel Skin's corrective softening—It's designed to replace—instantly—vital substances needed in the skin's "protective cloak." This is why Angel Skin heals chapping!

Instant "corrective" softening—not just superficial smoothing!

This new Angel Skin by Pond's has a formula scientifically years ahead—developed directly from new medically-important discoveries of how the skin works to heal and protect itself.

Doctors say the skin is constantly rebuilding its softening protective cloak—to offset the effects of exposure to cold, to harsh detergents. But often skin can't rebuild fast enough—it may take hours!

Instant softening with Angel Skin!

Scientists who developed Angel Skin have found a way to "match" the skin's vital protective substances. Smooth in Angel Skin, and you instantly replace needed substances.

Angel Skin's rich goodness acts at once to counteract harsh alkali action of soaps and detergents—as no old-style lotion can! It heals chapping! It quickly penetrates! It softens deep down! And Angel Skin never leaves a trace of stickiness!

See amazing effects on your skin. Get fragrant, creamy-pink Angel Skin today! Only 89¢, 49¢, 25¢, plus tax. (Slightly higher in Canada)

Vital new facts about human skin

The skin's "protective cloak" contains lubricating sebum—normally has a high concentration of hydrogen ions.* Exposure to harsh detergents lowers the concentration of hydrogen ions. Chapping begins. Exposure to cold, wind further aggravates the skin.

Angel Skin's exclusive softening lubricants contain billions of needed hydrogen ions in each drop—enough to replace instantly the skin's normal, high concentration of hydrogen ions.

This is why Angel Skin heals chapping as no old-style lotion can.

* Concentration of hydrogen ions is measured scientifically in terms of pH. Angel Skin is the only leading hand lotion with a pH rating that is allied to the pH rating of the human skin.

Angel Skin

by POND'S

SINCERELY, WILLIS WAYDE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 47

Willis knew very well that Bill would not have asked one of his closer friends to share in this ordeal, but it pleased him that Bill had asked him, because it indicated that Bill thought him adequate.

In fact, Bill was disarmingly grateful when they walked along the wintry sidewalks of Brattle Street. There was something about Cambridge people, especially professors, Bill said—and this girl's father was a professor—that made him nervous. He had taken a course in geology under this Professor Hodges. It had been highly recommended as impossible not to pass. Old Man Hodges had given him a C, and the professor even had a sort of sense of humor. Nevertheless, in Bill's opinion professors and their families were hard to understand.

The Hodgeses lived in a beige-colored Victorian house that stood on a small lawn dotted with spindling bushes. There were a lot of young people in the large Victorian parlor and in the dining room behind it. As Mrs. Hodges said, the latchstring was always out on Sunday for the children's friends, and Cambridge, if it was nothing else, was a town of young people. Sylvia answered the doorbell. She wore a dark-red velvet dress that did not fit her and her hair was bobbed aggressively.

"Oh, hello, Mr. Harcourt," Sylvia said to Bill. "I was beginning to be afraid you'd found something better to do."

"Oh no," Bill said, "and I've brought a friend from Business School—Willis Wayde."

"That's awfully nice," Sylvia said. "How do you do, Mr. Wayde? Is Business School fun?"

"Leave your galoshes and coats anywhere," she said. "It's funny I've never met anyone from Business School except Mr. Harcourt, but, oh"—Sylvia pivoted around nervously—"here's someone who says he knows you. You know Steve Decker, don't you? He's second-year Law."

"Hello, Bill," Steve said. "Hi, Willis."

"Oh," Sylvia said, "do you know Mr. Wayde too?"

There had to be a time when you first became interested in someone. Though Willis could not say that he was interested in Sylvia at the moment, he felt sorry for her, because she was trying so hard to make things go.

"Yes," Steve Decker said, "Willis and I are schoolmates. We wear the old school tie."

"That's right," Willis said, but he resented the way Steve smiled at him.

"Then you must tell me all about Steve," Sylvia said. "Steve and I took a long walk this afternoon. It was fun slopping through the slush, wasn't it, Steve?"

"Yes," Steve Decker said, "there was a lot of slush."

It was strange how one could sometimes guess things immediately. Nothing more needed to be said for Willis to be absolutely sure that Sylvia was crazy about Steve.

"And now come in and meet the family," Sylvia said. "I'll be back in just a minute, Steve, and maybe you won't mind helping me bring the salad from the kitchen."

"All right," Steve Decker said, "I'll be right there, Sylvia."

Steve Decker's words were polite, but there was something patient in them, something condescending. Willis was not impressed by Sylvia Hodges in her dowdy velvet dress and her low-heeled black slippers. She was too thin and her bobbed black hair did not fit her nervous features, but suddenly he wanted to be kind to her, if only because Steve Decker was not.

He remembered that he spoke to Sylvia as he walked with her to the parlor. "My mother says I'm pretty handy around the house," he said, "if there's anything I could do to help."

"Oh no," Sylvia said, "you're company. Mother, this is Mr. Harcourt, and this is Mr. Wayde."

If Mrs. Hodges had thought more about her clothes, she would have been handsome in her middle age. Her face and figure were fuller than Sylvia's. Her eyes were deep brown like Sylvia's and her features were composed.

"Homer," she said to Mr. Hodges, "this is a friend of Sylvia's. Oh, dear, I'm very bad at names."

"It's Wayde," Mr. Hodges said. "In my classes I always begin to forget when I get down to the W's myself."

Mr. Hodges looked at Willis with the expression of someone who has seen too many young male faces. He was a thin man, and his gray mustache, slightly stained by tobacco, concealed the corners of his mouth.

"Did you ever take my introductory course, Mr. Wayde?"

"No, sir," Willis answered. "I went to Boston University."

"Dear, dear," Mr. Hodges said. "I att the University of Chicago myself once, finally contrived to live it down. Don think so, Martha?"

"No, Homer," Mrs. Hodges said. "Y never lived down anything."

"Father!" Sylvia said. "Here's Mr. court. He says he was in your course."

"Well, well," Mr. Hodges said, and pression brightened. "If it isn't my old Harcourt. Fancy meeting you here, wit taste for geology."

Bill Harcourt began to laugh. "I fine time, sir," he said, "and anyway I go

"Yes," Mr. Hodges said. "I was go give you a D but I couldn't when I r bered your necktie. You see, Mr. Wayde is what is sometimes called a necktie There's nothing like a necktie course least nothing exactly like it."

Sylvia was speaking quickly. "I wish wouldn't tease everyone," she said. boy—I mean man—I ever ask around h to go through with it, but you really n mind him."

"I don't mind him," Willis Wayde to "I think that your father is wonderful

As Bill said ward, it was one craziest evenin had ever spent with old Hodg the pencil-and games. But Will meant what thesa night. He nev get to understa Hodges, becaus were poles apa there really ha something wo about him. Wh Willis thought him, he admitt Hodges had son he would neve something he w Sylvia understo though she very mentioned it.

"Laura," Syl to her younger "will you plea Mr. Harcourt a Wayde around they meet every Laura Hodges gave them a panic-s look. "Can't you do it, Sylvia?" she "You know everybody better than I d

"No, I can't," Sylvia answered. "I lot of things I have to attend to."

"I know what you have to attend t

"Laura," Sylvia said, "you do what I I'll speak to mother."

"Don't worry about us," Bill said. get along all right."

Sylvia had left them while Bill w speaking, and Laura blushed unbecon

"I didn't mean it that way," she sai Sylvia's always bossy."

"That's all right," Bill Harcourt to "Big sisters always are."

"She knows I don't like introducin ple," Laura said, "but we'll have to do or Sylvia will find out later."

It interested Willis to remember that Sylvia's younger sister, and not Sylvia, troduced him to that new world of Street. He always thought that those who came to Craigie Street on Sunda nings were a peculiar crowd, but he ways grateful for the contacts, because an education to meet people out of th nary run. In memory, he could stil Laura's strained voice as she led them the room.

"This is my brother Tom," Laura sa there was Tom Hodges, who alwa strange things, like, many years later, for Henry Wallace.

Laura never could introduce people fully. Instead she pointed them out like on a library shelf. And there was Henr stead, an instructor in one of Mr. H courses, who later became an oil ge

CONTINUED ON PAGE 74

A FEATHER IN ONE'S CAP

Women have laid claim to the use of feathers only in modern times. As late as the era of the famous Black Prince, men considered ornamental feathers their exclusive property. Princes and noblemen went to great expense to import fine specimens, which they used to adorn their hats.

Then someone hit upon the idea of using small feathers as military decorations. When a soldier showed unusual gallantry, he was permitted to wear a feather in his cap as a badge of honor. By the late sixteenth century this practice was so common that when a person won an honor of any type, he was likely to refer to it as a feather in his cap.

—WEBB B. GARRISON

Gift problem practically solved . . .

GIVE BRUSHES WITH

stay-lively bristles

OF DU PONT TYNEX NYLON

TRADE-MARK

Take a tip from this clever miss and give a practical and charming present that's sure to be appreciated–a brush with "Tynex" nylon bristles!

The wide selection of brushes with Du Pont "Tynex" bristles simplifies your shopping, too–there's a brush for everyone on your gift list.

You can choose from personal brushes that make good grooming a pleasure, and a wide variety of household brushes that do a speedy, efficient job. "Tynex" bristles last longer, can be sterilized . . . never get limp or soggy. They clean easily, dry quickly . . . won't absorb odors.

This year, give presents that are practical...give brushes with "Tynex" nylon bristles, the bristles that carry the Good Housekeeping Guaranty Seal.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Look for Du Pont TYNEX nylon bristles

TRADE-MARK

when you buy brushes

DU PONT

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

"Tynex" is the new trade-mark for genuine Du Pont nylon bristles.

BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING . . . THROUGH CHEMISTRY

Because you insist on Freedom...

skippies

by FORMFIT

the new-day girdle for a new day

You get such a lithe, blithe slimming with wonderful Skippies by Formfit. For these are the girdles especially designed to bring you figure beauty on your own freedom-loving terms. New designs in new elastics are the secret of their feather-light control. As suited to your active, young way of living as your wardrobe of separates—Skippies are so definitely the answer for you!

Girdles and Panties from $2.95

Foundations from $5.95

skippies BY Formfit

Made by the Manufacturers of the Famous Life Bras

THE FORMFIT COMPANY • CHICAGO • NEW YORK

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 72

There was Hunter Baxter, the poet, who never used rhymes and who later lectured to women's clubs and was investigated by the Un-American Activities Committee. And there was Sylvia's Radcliffe classmate, Elsie O'Donnell, whose hair never looked washed, and who became a script girl in Hollywood and finally did very well writing the Jack and Josie Breakfast Series on the radio, a daily drama of married life—although Elsie never did marry anyone. And there was Claude Little, who was the syndicated columnist today, a very interesting man and a good contact in Washington.

There must have been a dozen others—graduate students working for their doctorates, and in the Law and Medical schools. They all looked uneasily at Willis when they heard he came from the Harvard Business School, but they were very interesting contacts, and it paid to know how to get on with this type of person.

"Supper's ready," he heard Sylvia calling.

There was chicken salad and cocoa and prune soufflé in the dining room, and everyone seemed hungry except Bill Harcourt.

After supper everyone drew lots for a team to do the dishes. Willis was on the team with Bill Harcourt and Hunter Baxter and Laura. Although Willis was not used to the routine, he was good at doing dishes, and everyone began looking at him approvingly.

It was surprising how quickly they got the dishes done, and they were all back in the parlor.

"We're going to choose teams now," Sylvia said. "I'll take one team and Tom will take the other. I choose Steve Decker. Pass the pencils and papers, Laura."

Willis, too, was on Sylvia's team, and the first thing they did was to write down in two minutes all the rivers they could remember beginning with the letter M. It was still pleasant for Willis to recall that he had turned up with the largest number and that he had also come up with the longest list of Roman emperors in their proper chronological order.

You could not help feeling a warm glow of satisfaction when you did well at anything, and Sylvia really noticed him when he remembered the emperors, and she looked sorry when Bill said they really had to go. They were having a wonderful time, but he did have a lot of studying to do. Sylvia went with them to the hall.

"You must be sure to come back again," she said. "And thanks for winning with the emperors, Mr. Wayde."

She looked at him questioningly, and he knew she was asking him whether he had not had a good time, and he knew that she hoped he had.

"And thanks for helping with the dishes," Sylvia said. "Now be sure to come again."

Bill Harcourt said, when they were outside on Craigie Street, "I really didn't know I was getting you into anything like that. I guess the old man's right when he says you know how to get on with people."

There was no reason for Bill Harcourt to apologize. If Willis had said that he had enjoyed the party, he knew that Bill would not have believed him, and perhaps Willis had not actually enjoyed it, and he was not sure that Sylvia had really enjoyed the party either. He was not sure that she had even liked the pencil-and-paper games, but she had wanted him to come back again and she had known that Bill Harcourt never would. Willis never ventured to tell Bill that he went back to Craigie Street again the next Sunday.

A man is not whole and complete unless he owns a house and the ground it stands on. Men are created owners of the earth. Each was intended to possess his piece of it. —WALT WHITMAN

The summer preceding the winter that Willis had met Sylvia had been one of the happiest of his life. He had completed his first year at the Harvard School of Business Administration as one of the top men of his class. He was being trained as an executive assistant to Mr. Henry Harcourt, and he had been assigned a private room adjoining Mr. Harcourt's office, with a buzzer so that Mr. Harcourt could call him.

WHEN he had come under Mr. Henry Harcourt's personal supervision, Willis could not help seeing that he was regarded in a new light by everyone in the plant. The workmen he had always known were as friendly as ever. But it was different in the office, where people he had known through many summers now gave him appraising, suspicious looks. Willis could sympathize, because he had been pushed forward above the heads of many who had been working there for years. He knew that Mr. Briggs in the Sales Department disapproved of his promotion. Mr. Briggs had told him that he had worked at Harcourt for fifteen years before he had been pulled off the road to be assistant sales manager. Mr. Hewett had a more generous attitude, perhaps because he knew that his days at the mill were almost over.

His father's attitude was what disturbed Willis most.

"Son," his father said one evening, "I had a friend once, out in San Francisco. We'd been working together building dams for Pacific Gas and Electric, and then he joined up with Standard Oil. I remember when he took the boat to China. We had quite a lot of drinks the night before, telling each other what we were going to do, because we were pretty young then. Well, I stood on the pier seeing Bill off, and I had quite a head that morning. I was there watching the ship pull out, seeing it get smaller, and I knew Bill was going so I wasn't ever. Well, it's the same w Only just remember this one thing. E and then take a look at yourself, and sure where you're going. I can't tell cause I wouldn't know."

Willis always remembered that ex and he often quoted it afterward: Tal at yourself and be sure where you're might have been a good thing if he h more of a look at himself that sum when you're young, you simply go.

His mother felt, too, that she was on a pier watching him move awa hard for her sometimes to think that V all grown up and was doing so well. wished that Willis had time to see mo people, but she knew he was work hard. She wished that Willis would r much of Bess and Bill Harcourt, or so much. Sometimes she was afraid courts were making use of Willis.

THERE was certainly no reason for hi to have worried about Bess that sum had come out the winter before at a at the Copley-Plaza, and though W been invited, he had not gone, and mer she had nearly always been aw where. Thus Willis had only an o glimpse of her, and even then Bess w with other friends, playing tennis around the swimming pool. She wa tante, she said, and Willis must r look at her that being a debutante rible—no sleep, big dinners an around the dance all sorts of men abo you cared nothing to whom you had pecially nice or would not dance Then you were broken blossom a of it and the stag no attention to more, and Bess wait until she was blossom. Then Willis would see of each other as they had before—a thing. She knew that Willis unders she was glad that he was so unde

Her activities did not matter very Willis that summer, because he through a critical part of his develop was emerging from the stage of taki to giving them, or at least of transmit of Mr. Harcourt's orders and seeing were carried out; and it was necess this tactfully, without offense.

Actually Bess had hardly any ti him until late in August. It was just o'clock one Saturday, and the offic was already half deserted and every quiet outside because the machines ha at noon. Mr. Harcourt had left at noo told Willis to leave as soon as he ha his work. The telephone on his table he heard Bess Harcourt's voice.

"Willis," she said, "whatever doing?"

"I'm just here at the old salt min said. He was getting good at little that. "What are you doing?"

"Oh," Bess said, "I'm not doing anything. Willis, can't you come ove some tennis and have a swim?"

"You know I'm not much good a Willis said.

"It doesn't matter," Bess said. "I be comedy tennis."

"Is anyone else over there?" Willis

There was a short pause and then Bess laugh. "No," she said, "n There's just another boy here, but I home in a little while. Please come ov I haven't seen you for simply ages."

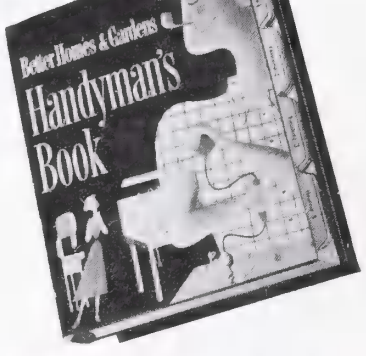
Willis had a mortifying memory o to get home and to prepare himself fi a late afternoon of tennis at the Br courts', and he was ashamed of his n in having the right things for the oc except a tennis racket. He selecte white shirt but not a new one, and course, and he left the soft collar o neck, and then slicked down his brushed it carefully. Then he put on

You can give ANYONE a book for Christmas

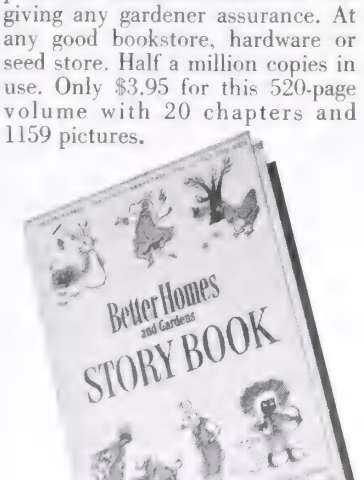
EVERYONE who gets a book as a present feels a certain inner excitement. Maybe it's because a book is so personal. It reflects his or her taste (as well as the giver's). A Better Homes & Gardens book touches upon some special interest or hobby, too. It is a gift for the home as well as the person. Being a useful gift, it will be read and referred to many times in years to come.

Better Homes & Gardens books are always guaranteed—your money returned if you aren't fully satisfied.

Buy these gifts wherever books are sold. To order by mail, remit to Better Homes & Gardens, 903 Meredith Building, Des Moines 3, Iowa.



TO CELEBRATE a wedding, a new home, an anniversary . . . this COOK BOOK. Everything one needs, including meal-planning, nutrition, table-setting triple-tested recipes. Over 5½ million copies in use today. Nothing quite like it. Only $3.95.



SHOWS HOW TO PLAN and to plant just the garden one wants. Helps avoid the disappointment and expense of mistakes. Excellent for giving any gardener assurance. At any good bookstore, hardware or seed store. Half a million copies in use. Only $3.95 for this 520-page volume with 20 chapters and 1159 pictures.

TO GUIDE the beginner or the more experienced. This HANDYMAN'S BOOK proves there's no magic in being "handy" . . . it's just a matter of getting clear directions. Here are professional methods, spelled out in ABC's. 1-2-3 step pictures, too. Only $3.95. Tells how to do 1600 repairs and improvements!

TO REWARD . . . or to surprise a promising child and to help him learn to read. In this volume, 50 stories, fables, rhymes and lessons approved for children from 3 to 8. Pictures throughout are from the original editions. Only $2.95.

IT ANSWERS SO MANY QUESTIONS. And 12,439 physicians own it, refer patients to it. Step-by-step photographs, time tables, charts, menus aid the text. Only $2.95. Sold at bookstores and at most infants' and children's departments.

t he had purchased that spring at i Co-operative Society. His sneakmaculate and he had a light pull-r resembling one that Bill wore, of ol and imported from England.
w himself in the mirror above his was satisfied that he did not look eless, athletic, and accustomed to hing. Then he took a brief case from a new and rather polished acquisich he packed a new set of underwear r clean shirt to put on after swimone of his newer ties with d when Willis finally built a court of wanted a grass terrace with chairs exactly like the Harcourts', and he eysuckle on the back and side nets.

suckle would do, because he could ber the smell of the blossoms on ll afternoon.
man Willis had never seen before n one of the wicker chairs close be-
The visitor must have been saying hat amused her, because he heard ner lightest, gayest laugh. She was otton print dress with little flowers le but not so simple as it looked.
hich always had a spun-gold look,
ck with a ribbon.
o, Willis," she said. "This is Willis
. I don't believe you've ever met ou, Willis?"
ight. Willis' memory, already cul-names and faces, told him that the who had arisen quickly, had not the friends of Bill and Bess whom occasionally.
you do?" he said to Willis.
you do?" Willis said. "I'm glad to 's a nice day for loafing around a , isn't it?"
e was Ewing, not difficult to ree was dark with closely cropped a Harvard man, a clubman and an like all those fellows who went to and had learned to play all sorts of was shorter than Willis and more ade, but not a student type. He was a nice smile. He was wearing white
's, not flannels and he wore a ribbon ipes on it. He had a heavy coat of

y if I'm late, Bess," Willis said, are pretty hectic these days at the orks at the mill," Bess said to Ed-ng. "Everything here revolves mill—even me."

ven't been revolving here much is said, and he laughed easily, "but ou've been doing seems to have ood."
illis," Bess said, "I didn't know developing a line. Willis goes with Harvard Business School, Ed."
ou?" Edward Ewing said. "I hear place."

ughed again easily. "Quite an insti-
said.
, he even has a brief case," Bess have you got in it, Willis?"
a change," Willis said, "in case we if we do play tennis."
ainly look as though you wanted a s said. "It's too hot and I won't ahead and play, Ed, but hurry so a swim."
t one set," Ed Ewing said, and he racket from the wicker table. "It's and I've got to get back to the
"
much good," Willis said.
no good either," Edward Ewing

," Willis said, "if it doesn't bore aven't played all summer."
lk so much about it," Bess said.
's racket, Willis."
ld still remember each detail of that nd when he did, he always felt the humiliation. It was perfectly clear he would go the moment Edward all to him. Willis could still rememert smacking sound of the racket clumsy stroke when he drove the net.

"Oh," he said, "sorry. Shoot me over another, will you?"

He was desperately anxious to make a good appearance, but the painful thing about it was that the harder he tried, the tenser he became. He was aware of a dull anger at himself, since it was only a game. He served rather well, because his strength partially compensated for the awkward half swing he had developed. He found himself fighting for every point in a desperate, breathless way.

"Oh, nice," he would hear Edward Ewing say. "Good shot!"

Nevertheless, none of his shots was good, and of course Edward Ewing knew it. The worst of it was that Willis was wringing wet and half blinded by the sweat in his eyes when the set was over, but Edward looked as cool as he had when they had started.

"Thanks a lot," Willis said. "I'm sorry I couldn't give you a better game."

"It was fine," Edward Ewing said, and there was something horrible about his forced enthusiasm. "It was exactly the sort of workout I needed."

Bess had not said a word, and Willis half hated her for her silence. She knew perfectly well how poor he was at tennis.

"You ought not to have put me in there with a champ," Willis told her, and he tried to laugh but his voice sounded hoarse and unnatural.

"Why, Willis," she said, "don't be so serious. It was only a game."

The worst of it was that he could not manage to control his mood, or pass it off lightly, as he should have.

"Well, let's have a swim," Bess said. "It will cool you off anyway, Willis."

Willis looked straight at her before he answered, and she gazed back at him innocently. "Yes," he said, "I guess I need cooling off."

Bess ran ahead of them to the girls' dressing room while Willis walked to the men's building with Edward Ewing.

COLORS SOFT AS MOONBEAMS TO FLATTER YOU BY NIGHT IN LOVELY

Lady Pepperell Sheets and Blankets

NEW CHRISTMAS GIFT IDEA... NYLON SNUG FIT SHEETS

Exquisite petal-smooth nylon SNUG FIT Sheets (top and bottom) come in white and 4 colors, make a Christmas gift that will bring thanks the year round! They're pure luxury to sleep on, economical, too, because they wear as only nylon can, and can be washed at home— as easily as nylon undies!

HEAVENLY COLORS— DOWN-TO-EARTH PRICES

Both regular Lady Pepperells and famous PEPPERELL SNUG FIT® Sheets are color-schemed to mix or match with cloud-soft Pepperell Blankets. These dream-smooth sheets come in six exquisite colors, cost only pennies more than white. And Pepperell Blankets pamper you with their cozy warmth, your budget with their modest prices.

AND PEPPERELL'S NEW WONDER BLANKET IS 100% ACRILAN!*

Here's a luxury blanket that's shrink resistant and stays fluffy no matter how often it's washed! It's wonderfully warm. Comes in 6 exquisite colors dyed to mix or match with Lady Pepperell Sheets.

*® Chemstrand Acrylic Fiber

Lady Pepperell SHEETS AND BLANKETS

PEPPERELL FABRICS

WHITE • COLORS • REGULAR • SNUG FIT • NYLON

"Nothing like a swim after tennis," Edward Ewing said.

"That's right," Willis answered. "Nothing like a plunge."

"Bess tells me you live on the place here," Edward Ewing said.

"That's right," Willis answered. "We live in the garden cottage."

"It's quite a place, isn't it?"

"Yes," Willis said. "It's quite a place."

It was beautiful to see Edward Ewing do the Australian crawl up and down the pool and then do a swan and next a jackknife dive. When Bess asked him, Willis said that Edward Ewing certainly was a good swimmer. It was beautiful to see Edward Ewing when he stepped out of the bathhouse ready to leave, dressed in a neat gray flannel suit and carrying a tennis racket and a small suitcase.

"I'll see you tomorrow evening, won't I, Bess?" he said.

"Oh, yes," Bess said, "and I'll see you off, Ed. Don't hurry away, Willis. I'll be right back."

It seemed like hours before Bess came back, and somehow waiting for her did not help his mood. When he saw her walking across the lawn, he noticed that she did not hurry.

"Willis," she asked, "what's the matter?"

"Nothing, Bess," he said.

"Willis," she asked him, "are you cross about anything?"

"Of course I'm not cross about anything," he answered.

"Oh, yes you are," she said. "I didn't know you'd get cross about a game."

"I'm not cross about any game or anything," he said.

"I wish you wouldn't try so hard about everything," she said.

"How do you mean?" he asked.

"Oh," she said, "you're always trying to be so smart about everything lately. You're not the way you used to be."

"Well, you've changed too," he said.

"Maybe we both have," she said. you like to walk up to the pine wood supper? There's still time."

"It's pretty late now, isn't it?"

"Oh, Willis," she said, "I wish . never mind."

"What do you wish?" he asked he

"Oh, never mind," she said. " never gets you anywhere."

Willis could occasionally convince that there had never been anything se tween him and Bess Harcourt and tha always possessed a strain of hard sense which prevented his indulging i sible dreams about the future. He wa type who married the boss' daughter, was all there was to it.

By the Monday after the tennis gar were plenty of other things to think ab mill was undergoing a thorough rec tion, too long delayed, perhaps, but i markable how Mr. Harcourt handled sidering his age. Mr. Hewett had a sistant, a man in his late thirties nam man Percival who came from Toledo being groomed for Mr. Hewett's jo there were Bill Sobol, a new assistant Briggs in Sales, and Tom Powderm duPont's, who was made production a position hitherto unknown at Ha and half a dozen new salesmen were not to mention the new engineers. T was that Harcourt's, that summer, wa to be a small-town New England mi

THE changes were made under the a the Beakney-Graham Management C and Willis had never lost his respec capacities of that organization. A made their preliminary survey, they s one of their chief executives, Mr. Jo terick, to stay at the plant until the g meshed, and to recommend new pers

About a week after Willis had b summer work at the mill Mr. Harcou Willis to his office.

"Willis," Mr. Harcourt said, and W ticed that Mr. Harcourt was wearin carnation in his buttonhole, "I wan meet Mr. McKitterick, who comes t Beakney-Graham."

Mr. McKitterick, seated in one o wooden chairs beside Mr. Harcou had on a wrinkled blue serge suit a shirt with a soft collar, and he wo horn-rimmed spectacles. When Mr. introduced Willis, Mr. McKitterick himself slowly out of his chair, and W that he was six feet tall, just about height.

"This is Willis Wayde," Mr. Harc in his soft voice that could always ca the sounds of the machinery. "T McKitterick around the plant, Will want you to answer any questions no matter what—even about me, W

Willis could not understand why been selected for this job. It did not him until later that Mr. McKitterick amined him as closely as the mill.

"If you're ready, let's go," Mr. Mc said, and they walked through the h the office building with its handsome furniture without speaking until Mr terick stopped in front of the tall cl

"That's a nice piece," he said. " Godfrey in London, I take it."

"Yes, sir," Willis answered, "it's frey."

"How did you know?" Mr. Mc asked.

Willis had learned it from the offi tory of the English furniture and he that Mr. Harcourt took a personal i the antique furniture of the office bu

"How much did he pay for it?" Mr terick asked.

"A hundred and seventy-five pou Willis said. "Mr. Harcourt says that don't depreciate like new furniture."

"That's so," Mr. McKitterick they're good. How much did those ch I wonder?"

"Two hundred and seventy-five Willis said.

"Say," Mr. McKitterick said, "you pretty good memory, haven't you?"

beautiful idea for Christmas!

You're an angel in lovely Quaker Lace . . . for the whole family to enjoy on Christmas day. Beautiful Quaker Lace Tablecloths have the look of treasured heirloom quality—yet are so practical for every day. You'll appreciate the way Quaker Tablecloths launder so easily—most spots and stains sponge off right on the table. Quaker Lace Tablecloths are made in a variety of lovely patterns in cotton, cotton and rayon and fabulous Orlon* that needs no ironing. Priced from $5.95 to $54.95.

*Du Pont trademark

QUAKER LACE
TABLECLOTHS

"Remember, every day deserves your best"

Empress Pattern No. 1010
U.S. Des. Pat. No. 117083 (Cotton)

TIP FOR MEN
When no one is looking, measure her table to be sure of the right size.

QUAKER LACE COMPANY, Philadelphia 33, Pa.
Sales Office: 330 Fifth Ave., New York 1, N.Y.
Also makers of Quaker Curtains.

," Willis answered. "I can remem-pretty well."
ole plant is quite a period piece, come to think of it," Mr. McKit-
"Do you know its history?"
illis had begun to answer those he had not realized how thor-knew the Harcourt Mill, because it edge that had come to him gradu-ecause for years the Harcourts and d been the center of his interest.
the man over there by that com-
Mr. McKitterick asked. They were 3 and he had to speak loudly. "He a pretty good man."
," Willis told him, "he's good. He's an. He's been here for twenty-five know all these other people?" Mr.

k asked.
," Willis said, "of course I do."
o you get on with them?" Mr.
k asked.
get on all right," Willis said. "I've st of them ever since I was a kid."
Mr. McKitterick said, "you cerv this place. How much do you get k?"
five dollars, sir," Willis answered.
ght to get more," Mr. McKitterick t's not a bad place to start. What do of Mr. Harcourt?"
as not sure whether he ought to anne remembered Mr. Harcourt's or-he's twice as good as anyone else is said.

lo you think's wrong with him?"
tterick asked. "There's something everybody."
sn't much wrong with him that I Willis said, "except that he never ng go."
Mr. McKitterick said, "if he ever
, I wish you'd let me know."
," Willis told him, "but I don't her job as long as Mr. Harcourt t," Mr. McKitterick said, "let's get e now. I haven't finished with you

Kitterick had finished by four in the and Mr. Harcourt called for Willis an hour later.
Mr. Harcourt asked, "did you everything?"
ed him everything I could," Willis certainly asked a lot of questions."
business to ask questions," Mr.
said. "What did you think of him,

saw anyone like him," Willis said, ss he knows what he's doing. Anyway, he knew who made the clock in the hall."

Mr. Harcourt's lower lip twitched and he touched it lightly with his forefinger. "Showing off," he said. "I wouldn't say it was necessary. When he was on the subject of antiques, did he ask about me, Willis?"

"Yes, sir, he did," Willis said, "and I didn't like it much."

"Never mind what you like," Mr. Harcourt said. "Just tell me what he asked."

"He wanted to know how good I thought you were."

"Well, well," Mr. Harcourt said. "Those people are always showing off. I'm better than he is, Willis—at least I think I am. I wonder if he offered you a job."

"He spoke about it, sir," Willis said.

"Well, I'd have done the same thing myself," Mr. Harcourt said. "And I suppose he knows how much I'm paying you?"

"Yes, sir," Willis said. "You told me to tell him everything."

Mr. Harcourt leaned back in his swivel chair. "I know I did," he said. "You see, Mr. McKitterick and I understand each other, Willis. He's here on a consulting fee of a thousand dollars a week, and I think he's going to be worth it. The next time you see him I wish you'd let him know I told you how much I'm paying him."

"Why, sir?" Willis asked.

Mr. Harcourt smiled. "Because I'd like him to know where you stand with me. I'm glad you've had a chance to see Mr. McKitterick. You made quite an impression on him."

That last remark made Willis realize that Mr. McKitterick had been asked to make a report on him among his other reports.

"I thought you knew me well enough yourself, sir," he said, "not to need anything like that."

Mr. Harcourt raised his eyebrows slightly. "Anything like what?" he asked.

Willis looked straight back at him. "I mean you didn't need to have anyone check on me," he said.

Mr. Harcourt nodded slowly. "I guess you're right," he said. "I didn't know you were learning so fast. Someday when you have people working for you you'll find they're quite an investment, in time and money and trouble. It's always wise to have a confirmation of your personal judgments, if you can get one. For instance, I always have an expert check my securities, although I think I'm a rather good investor. Of course I had Mr. McKitterick check on you. It's what he's here for."

Mr. Harcourt paused and tapped on his desk with his pencil.

"I don't believe in flattery," he said. "I will say, though, that I think you have quality. You're going to amount to something. I don't know exactly what, because everyone has de-

"Our daughter is coming home to live with us soon—she's getting married, you know."

Secrets from the Sunkist Kitchen

Snooping into America's food habits, our research staff finds that millions of American families now share our enthusiasm for tangy, fresh lemon juice on vegetables. No wonder! A wedge of lemon squeezed over spinach, broccoli, cauliflower, cabbage or string beans brings out their full, natural flavor, makes even canned and frozen vegetables taste garden fresh. Try it!

Here's one from Aladdin's book: First, brew a cup of piping-hot tea. Now, add fresh lemon to your cup . . . and something amazing happens. LOOK! Lemon . . . fragrant drops of fresh juice . . . works magic even your eyes can see: your tea turns instantly from brown to amber-clear. Taste it . . . you know it's different: tea at its fullest-flavored, every bit of bitterness gone. Always serve lemon with tea.

SEVEN-MINUTE HONEY FROSTING

3 tbsp. fresh Sunkist lemon juice
¼ cup honey ¾ cup sugar 1 egg white
Salt ¼ tsp. grated lemon peel

Combine all in top of double boiler over water at full boil. Beat with whirl-type beater 7 minutes or until thick. Take off heat and beat until firm enough to spread. Frosts two 8-inch layers. Easy, and so good!

New seasoning ideas: Does the stewed prune seem lowly and commonplace? Try simmering prunes with a little water and with slices of fresh lemon. Delicious!

You naturally think of lemon when you think of tomato juice. But a squeeze of fresh lemon works magic with other juices, too . . .

See how it points up the flavor of bland fruit juices such as apple, pineapple, prune and pear.

LEMON FRENCH DRESSING

½ cup fresh Sunkist lemon juice
½ cup salad oil 1 tbsp. sugar
1 tsp. salt ½ tsp. paprika
½ tsp. celery salt ½ tsp. mustard

Mix together. Serve cold. Stir well before putting on salad. You'll like the appetizing tang that lemon gives French dressing. See how it brings out all the succulent garden flavor of vegetables and greens!

Baked a lemon pie lately? There are ten (10!) prize-winning lemon pie recipes in the Sunkist Lemon Pie Recipe Folder. It's free. Write: Sunkist, Section 212, Terminal Annex, Los Angeles 54, California.

COUNTING CALORIES?

Here's an easy way to drop 200 to 300 calories from your daily diet!

Whether you're dieting strenuously or just trying your best to hold that waistline, there's no easier way to cut calories than this:—

1. Instead of mayonnaise or oil dressing, make your salads tasty and tantalizing with a generous sprinkling of fresh Sunkist lemon juice!

2. Instead of topping hot vegetables with a pat of butter, squeeze over them a generous wedge of Sunkist Lemon—and discover how magically fresh lemon enhances vegetable flavors! Try it!

A lemon wedge contains, of course, almost no calories, yet adds valuable vitamins and minerals.

Don't forget fresh lemons the next time you shop. Remember, only fresh lemons give you the true lemon flavor! There's just no substitute for that wonderful "lemony" aroma and tang of the fresh fruit!

Fresh Sunkist Lemons®

California-Arizona

fects. I'll tell you something, Willis, but don't let it spoil you."

Mr. Harcourt stood up abruptly and walked slowly around the desk.

"You and I aren't in the same age group," he said, "but we're head and shoulders above anyone else around here, Willis—at least in a business way. I can't buy you with money."

Willis cleared his throat. It was curious that he had felt no surprise. "You've bought me already," he said. "I guess you know it, sir."

"I got you cheap," Mr. Harcourt said. "I wouldn't like to have to buy you later on."

In April of his last year in the Harvard Business School, Willis had felt older than most of his contemporaries. Only a very few of them knew as much as he about the practical side of manufacturing. Yet you could not grow up all at once. He was still absurdly young and so was Bess Harcourt, too, when he called her up in April, 1929.

He called her from a pay telephone in a Harvard Square drugstore. He waited, rehearsing exactly what he was going to say, until he heard Bess Harcourt's voice.

"Hello, Bess," he said. "How are you? It's been a long while since I've seen you."

"I know," she answered. "It's been simply ages, Willis. Why haven't you been around?"

"Well," he said, "I wasn't sure whether you'd have time to see me."

"Oh, don't be silly, Willis." Her voice sounded light and warm. "You know I'd love to see you."

"Well, what are you doing Friday night?" he asked her.

There was a pause, and pauses always meant more over the telephone than anywhere else.

"Let's see. Why, I'm not doing anything Friday night."

Willis drew a deep breath. "I hear there's a good musical show at the Colonial," he said. "I don't know whether you've seen it or not."

"Why, no," she said, "I haven't seen it."

"Well, we might go to it," Willis said, "and have dinner somewhere first—say at the Ritz."

"Why, Willis, I think it's awfully sweet of you," she told him. "I think it would be lovely. What time?"

"I'll call for you at a quarter before seven," he said. "Now don't forget."

"Why, Willis, of course I won't forget."

He could not decide on Friday whether or not to wear evening clothes and he finally compromised on his best blue suit. He did not look as badly as he might have. Though he was still thin, his weight was catching up to his height. He had twenty-five dollars in his wallet, and the theater tickets in his inside pocket.

WILLIS changed from the Harvard Square subway at Park Street to a car which took him to Copley Square and thence he walked to the Bryson Harcourts' house on Beacon Street, not hurriedly because he wanted to arrive there at exactly quarter before seven, and he did so, to the minute. When the maid opened the door he saw that the dining-room doors were open and that the table was not set, which meant that Mr. and Mrs. Bryson Harcourt were dining out.

"I'm calling for Miss Bess, Tillie," he said.

"Miss Bess is in the sitting room," Tillie said. "She asked if you would please go up."

Willis had been at the Bryson Harcourts' often enough to know where the upstairs sitting room was. He ran up the stairs quickly, and there was Bess, standing in the center of a blue Chinese rug. She wore a black velvet dress and she had pinned on it the diamond-and-sapphire clip that her parents had given her on her last birthday. He had never seen Bess look better and it made him happy that Bess had gone to so much trouble.

"Why, Bess," he said, "you look wonderful."

She did not smile, nor hold out her hand.

"Oh, Willis," Bess said, "I'm terribly embarrassed, but I know you'll understand, because we're such old friends. It's dreadful, but I simply can't go out with you tonight."

"You can't?" he heard himself repeating after her. "Why, what's the trouble, Bess?"

"Willis," she said, "I'm so glad it's you. I have another engagement tonight and I forgot until he called me up this afternoon."

"What made you forget?" Willis "Don't you write things down?"

She shook her head. "I should ha said. "Don't look so upset, Willis. W out some other time—any time at all."

It was unfortunate that she used tha "any time at all." He had an even tem he usually could keep his emotion control up to a certain point. If he pas point it must have had something to the taken-for-granted quality of her which indicated that she could do a she wanted with Willis Wayde.

"That's right," he answered slowl time at all."

He never did forget the relief that lig her face.

"Thanks, Willis. Thanks ever so she said.

"You don't have to thank me," swered, "but let me know sooner w find something you'd rather do."

He was glad he had looked straigh

"Willis," she said, "that isn't really."

"Listen," Willis said. "I'm not as all that, Bess. You're standing me u you?"

"I didn't know it would be like t said. "Willis, don't be angry. Please," voice dropped to a whisper. "Please."

WHILE the sound of her whisper wa his ears, Bess Harcourt's eyes had and she was looking in panic at the op The front doorbell must have rung an of them had heard it, and now ther sound of quick footsteps on the stairs.

"Oh," she said, "hello, Ed."

It was the Edward Ewing with whor played tennis, and Edward Ewing, un self, was in a dinner coat.

"Edward," Bess said, "you rememb Wayde, don't you?"

"Of course I do," Edward Ewi "How are you, Mr. Wayde?"

"Fine," Willis answered. "I'm gla you again."

"I'm awfully sorry, Bess," Edwar said. "I wasn't able to get anythin Colonial. The time was just too short but we can go to a movie anyway."

Willis smiled again, though his face an ironlike feeling, and he reache pocket and drew out a small envelope

"It's a funny thing," he said. "I couple of tickets for tonight for that the Colonial. I just stopped in to as she didn't want them, because I have a report. It's due first thing tomorro ing. The Harvard Business School, yo

All at once he felt completely easy was amused by Edward Ewing's puzz

"Why, that's awfully nice. Are you don't want them?" Edward Ewing as

"Yes," Willis said, and he laugh solutely sure."

"I was taking Bess out to dinner," Ewing said. "Why don't you have di us before you go out to Cambridge?"

"That's very kind of you," Willis s I've really got to get back. Bess wou it if I stayed," and he laughed be could interrupt. "You see, her gran helping me through Business School got to get good marks."

"Oh, Willis," Bess said, "why ca have dinner? It's such a good idea."

"Good-by, Bess," he said, and he his hand.

He had walked to Central Square was in the least aware of anything arc He could never forget his sense of hi adequacy. He knew that Bess Harc titude toward him was his fault as hers. He had always felt inferior to his inferiority had always fed her a He told himself that night that he wa with Bess and that he would neve again.

Two days later she sent him a lett sentences were still clear in his memo

Dear Willis: I am ashamed of wha other night and I have been wretched e don't know why it is that I sometim hurt you. I don't behave that way with ple, and I promise never to do it again. give me, and please—I'll be in the and until Sunday afternoon—please see me. It's always better when we are ther. With love, BESS.

gh he made up his mind not to, of saw her that Saturday, but if you once, you were instinctively careful hurt that way again.

never could have explained exactly meant to him when Mr. Harcourt m to attend the stockholders' lunch- big house in June, 1929.

y the way, Willis," he said, "I have ning to give you a little present. five shares of common stock in the Mill made out in your name. Don't too much for them. Their par value ble. It is a necessary gesture, be- ant you to attend the stockholders' nd to be at the the customary It's time you of the more embers of the

been a long e Willis and rcourt had own from the oor upon the ders of the Mill. Things otly different use Willis had of being part ouse itself. It him that day as almost like ourt.

s standing on one porch by door smoking . "Thank God re," he said. a great weight nd."

at sort of Willis asked.

n I won't have an ass of my- said, "trying a lot of ques- can do all the laughed. He walked into hall. Mr. and nry Harcourt ting there to e guests.

boys," Mr. said, just as Willis were a f the family. punch in the om, and Bill, u to see that Willis meets everyone." rcourt had changed very little. He s looked small and slightly frail and ot too old. He always had a bright He had reached a static, time- d like the house in which he lived, same was true with Mrs. Henry

, dear," she said, "I want to talk to minute after the guests have left. I are the only outsiders here—not really outsiders."

ET means that she's thinking of you eeper, Willis," Mr. Harcourt said. ing to talk to you about my general d ask that I don't overdo."

," Mrs. Harcourt said, "I wish you'd r what Doctor Blair said in Boston."

et, dear," Mr. Harcourt said, "I re- very well what Doctor Blair said. I'm not dead yet, though I dare say eople here would like me to be."

Henry," Mrs. Harcourt said, "who e to see you dead?"

bly my nephew, Roger," Mr. Har- d. "There's always a lot of solid a well-regulated family. Willis, I to be especially pleasant to Roger if l ask you about anything. Now, Bill, Willis go into the living room and e punch. It's very weak."

MORNING

By MIRIAM HEMMENDINGER

I sometimes wonder why we set the clock.
We have less fragile and as shrill alarms:
As certain as the hour comes a knock Close followed by two dogs,
three pairs of arms.
Then tempo shifts from idle into high;
Still half asleep, I head toward the stair, Behind me sounds the mingled morning cry:
"Can't find my shoe!" "Hey, mom, what shall I wear?"
Like Alice's White Queen I fly
about,
Hot breakfast, lost and found,
and button-up,
Until some magic sends them safely out,
And sends me in. Oh, lovely "second cup!"
But count beside that blessing,
also this:
Four smiles, three hugs, one slightly sticky kiss.

In the long dark hall Bill grasped Willis by the arm. "What's that about Doctor Blair seeing grandfather?" he asked.

Willis could only answer that it was the first time that he had ever heard of any doctor.

"BLAIR'S a heart specialist," Bill said. "I don't believe anyone's told father."

Willis knew that he was representing Mr. Harcourt in a way. He knew that it would be wrong for the news to get around suddenly and he told Bill exactly that.

Then they were in the living room and Willis was speaking to Mr. and Mrs. Bryson Harcourt. Mrs. Harcourt said it was wonderful that Willis was doing so well.

Willis shook hands formally with Bess Harcourt and Bess laughed.

"It's funny to see you here," Bess said. "You might almost be Bill."

"Oh no," Willis answered. "I'm just the handy man."

"Then don't look so superior," she said. "This isn't such a great occasion. Don't look so highly honored."

"I didn't know I looked that way," he told her, "but maybe it's a greater occasion for me than it is for you."

"Don't sound humble like Uriah Heep," she said. "You're always part way humble, and I hate you when you are."

"Maybe it's because I have to get along with all of you," he told her, and he felt his face flush. "I'm just a poor boy trying to get on."

Bess shook her head impatiently. "Well, don't have it on your mind so much. You know grandfather says I ought to have been Bill?"

"Well," Willis said, "you're not."

"No," she said, "I'm not. That's why I'm glad you're here. I'm glad we have some brains around."

Then Bill Harcourt interrupted them. "Who says I haven't any brains?" he asked.

"I did, stupid," Bess said.

"All right," Bill said, "but never mind it now. Cousin Roger wants to meet Willis."

Willis may have been too humble and too anxious to please in those days, but it was an insult to be compared with Uriah Heep, and Bess Harcourt's words had challenged his self-control. His nerves were still on edge when he followed Bill across the living room to where Mr. Roger Harcourt was standing.

It was the first time that Willis had ever spoken to Mr. Roger Harcourt, although he had seen him several times. Roger Harcourt was utterly unlike his first cousin, Mr. Bryson. He was ponderous and fat. His face was a soft pinkish white, and it had a petulantly childish expression.

"So this is Uncle Henry's factotum, is it?" Mr. Roger Harcourt said, in a voice that was incongruously thin. "I've heard a lot about you from Bryson and everyone. You don't mind if I call you Willis, do you, since you seem such a part of the family around here?"

"No sir," Willis said, "of course not."

"I'm just a family stockholder," Roger Harcourt said, "but I like to think I'm an interested one. Uncle Henry put you through Business School, didn't he?"

"He lent me the money," Willis said.

"I've a great admiration for Uncle Henry," Roger Harcourt said, "even if he has occasional whims that I don't agree with. I've always been predisposed against boy wonders,

They're 70 now . . . and still healthy, happy and active!

IF YOU doubt that it's good to be alive at 70, 80 . . . or even 90 . . . look about you. You will find many of our senior citizens at these ages "spry as larks" . . . living long and liking it!

Liking it? Yes, indeed! For much is being learned about how to make life's later years happy, active and rewarding. Geriatrics . . . the science of helping older people enjoy longer life . . . has contributed much to our brighter outlook on growing older. As research in this specialty continues, perhaps even greater gains in life conservation may be made.

In addition to the striking advances made in geriatrics and other health and medical sciences, the rapid rise in our standard of living has been an important factor in making life longer and more healthful. The effect of all these advances is highlighted by these facts:

The average life span for Americans is now 69 years.

There are now more than 13 million Americans who are 65 and older, and by 1960 it is estimated that they will number 16 million.

Specialists agree that when a man reaches his 65th or 70th birthday, his "age" depends not so much on the calendar as on his earlier health habits . . . especially during mid-life when so many of the chronic or degenerative diseases begin to develop. To help forestall such disorders, or lessen their effects if they should occur, authorities make this recommendation:

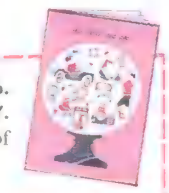
Go to your doctor for regular health examinations. He may be able to detect conditions of which you are unaware. Through prompt diagnosis and treatment, he may spare you serious illness later on and perhaps add years to your life.

In addition to regular medical check-ups, a healthy old age may depend on the living habits that you follow after 40. It is important, for instance, to control your weight through proper diet. It is also wise to slow down, to get your required sleep regularly, to take the type and amount of exercise that is best suited to your physical abilities and to follow a hobby that will help keep your mind sharp and alert.

There is no "magic formula" for a long and healthy life. However, experts agree that the person who prepares early has the best chance of getting more . . . rather than less . . . out of the years beyond 65.

Metropolitan has published a booklet to help you live long and like it. The title is "Your Future and You." Just fill out and mail the coupon below for your free copy.

COPYRIGHT 1954—METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY



Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

1 MADISON AVE., NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.
1 Madison Ave., N. Y. 10, N. Y.

Please mail me a copy of your booklet, 1254-J.

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

The evening ends divinely . . .

when it starts with MIDNIGHT by Tussy

GIVE her the heavenly Midnight Cologne and Dusting Powder Set! $2.50

GIVE her romantic Midnight Perfume! ½ oz., $3. Full ounce, only $5.

GIVE her the fabulous Midnight Lipstick-Perfume Combination! $1.

GIVE her smoothing Hand and Body Lotion . . . it's Midnight-scented! $1.

but I've a feeling that you and I might get on quite well together, given time."

"I'm glad if you think so, sir."

"Someday before too long," Roger Harcourt said, "I want to devote a day to the mill. I'd like to have you take me around, if Uncle Henry can spare you."

"I'd be very glad to," Willis answered.

"This firm of experts we've been hearing about in the meeting—Beakney and Graham—who've been pulling and hauling things around. Do you think they're any good?"

"Mr. Harcourt thinks they are," Willis said.

"Now let me ask you another question. Did you ever hear of a firm called Simcoe Rubber Hose and Belting?"

"Yes, sir," Willis said, "I've heard of them."

"You know they're a very large company, don't you?"

"Yes, I know that, sir," Willis said.

Of course Willis had to know about competitors. Roger was gazing at him fixedly, as though he were trying to read some secret.

"There's a rumor"—Roger lowered his voice—"there's a rumor that they're prepared to buy us out. Have you heard it?"

It was the second surprising thing that Willis had heard that day. "No, sir," he said. "I haven't heard a word of it."

Roger Harcourt laughed, but he looked as though he had learned something. "Uncle Henry said he hadn't heard either," he said. "Do you mind if I ask you one more question?"

"No, of course not," Willis said.

"I know you see Mr. Harcourt every day. How would you say he's feeling? I mean his general health?"

"I would say he's feeling fine," Willis said. He did not like Roger Harcourt, but he felt a reluctant respect for him.

"I'm relieved to hear that," Roger Harcourt said. "I'd hate to have anything happen to Uncle Henry, but time will march on."

Roger Harcourt smiled faintly, and moved away. It had been what you might call an exchange of information, guarded and watchful. If Mr. Roger Harcourt had learned anything, Willis had learned something, too, and he only wished he knew whether or not Roger Harcourt had intended him to learn it, but there was no time to think this over at the moment, because Mr. Decker was speaking to him.

"Well, well, Willis," Mr. Decker said, "so you're a stockholder now, aren't you?"

"Five shares, but I'm here for lunch."

"I saw Roger putting you on the stand," Mr. Decker said. "Well, Roger does that to everyone. Now it looks as though lunch is ready. Mr. Harcourt will make a sp guess. I always like his speeches."

The family and the stockholders r strange group in the dining room. The a veneer of good fellowship, but Wil sensitive enough to feel the small tensio and Bill and Bess sat far down the tab he could see Mr. Harcourt talking while his glance moved from face t He was a captain guiding a ship thr troubled sea.

When the coffee appeared, Mr. H tapped on his glass, softly as though h in no hurry. Then he rose from his ch glanced up and down the dining room.

"It is a pleasure to welcome you a today," he said, "as I have for so man and as my father did before me. This h a part of the Harcourt Mill and it has extended its hospitality to those who c mill, and I hope it will continue to do

He stopped, but he was not groping words.

"Most of us here are related and a too well accustomed to this small cer The Harcourt Mill has always been a business whose shares have never been distributed. We have lived from the H Mill"—he tapped his lower lip softly nearly eighty years.

"I think we have had a very successf I am glad to welcome a new face board—that of my nephew. Roger H should, perhaps, have been with us le fore, considering the size of his interest.

Mr. Harcourt coughed and smile there was a slight stirring about the ta waited until it subsided.

"Some of these words may sound ho those of you who know only too well t branch of the family is in control. Yet I have always listened to suggestion office door is always open, but I kno well I'm like the King of France who am the state.' Well, in a way I suppos but though times have been changin dividends have gone up. I think we are pretty sound position. I do not want like another monarch, 'After me the de

He stopped and raised his champagn

"Perhaps I've been here too long, but very well I can't be here forever. Ther be any deluge, if you hang together not to hang yourselves separately. An want to give you our customary toa Harcourt Mill."

Willis often wished later that he coul a speech as unpretentious and one that

Ask Any Woman

By MARCELENE COX

YOUNG daughter, Christmas shopping: "I'm having luck; I've found at least twelve things other persons can give me."

Legend has it that a farm woman once set a dish heaped with boiled hay before her menfolks. "Why, how did I know you'd notice? I've been cooking for you men for twenty years and in all that time I haven't heard a word to let me know you weren't eating hay."

Christmas vacation: the period when children arrive home from school with their roommates' clothes.

Three things that rise slowly: bread in a cold room; husband reading a newspaper; teen-age boy from a winter bed.

It's all right for the wolf to be at your door if you have a marriageable daughter.

About loud talkers my grandmother had this to say: "The bank with the fewest coins makes the most noise."

I have never—no, never—heard o good cooking listed as a cause fo divorce.

A family bought a new desk with a secret drawer, and the children imme diately acquainted the neighborhood with its location.

"My mother always had so much housekeeping to do," reminisced a young man recently, with regret in his voice. "When she had everything clear and shining she got out a comb and combed the fringe on the rugs."

The ins and outs of being a good guest are arriving and leaving on time.

Many a child has had a big lesson in honesty from watching a grocer walk back to the vegetable bin to get one more string bean, pea pod or potato.

A boy waiting for the right girl to come along is probably sitting in a car blowing his horn.

n Mr. Harcourt had finished every-up together, but when someone lap he raised his hand.
he said. "There's no need for ap-everyone is finished, brandy and in the library, and if anyone likes e the grounds and flowers, but the nesting. Don't go too near the me for everyone to go, or almost hen Willis remembered that Mrs.

ad asked to see him.
ut on the porch, Willis dear," she ust a minute."
od on the porch that looked over d trees to the river.
you think it was a nice speech?"
ourt asked. "He always says the , doesn't he? And he didn't look Willis, if you see him looking tired, me from the office."
id that of course he would and that speech himself. Then the veranda d and there was Mr. Harcourt.
you coming out here," he said.
talking to Willis about the doctor,

' Mrs. Harcourt said, "I simply to someone."
se everyone has to know eventu-Harcourt said. "What was Roger ou about, Willis?"
ted to know how your health was,
said. "I said that you were feeling think he believed it?" Mr. Harillis said, "I don't think so."

court smiled his thinnest smile.
said, "I guess he understood that e deluge. What else did Roger ask sitated for a second. "Whether I'd Simcoe Hose and Belting is going ut," he said.

ht he might ask that," Mr. Har-
"I hope you looked surprised."
Henry," Mrs. Harcourt said, "you me about that."
asn't any need to bother you about
" Mr. Harcourt said. "Roger's al-g I'll sell out. What did you think Willis?"

he's pretty clever, sir," Willis said.
ever but he's timid," Mr. Harcourt on't like clever, timid people. I have pleased Bryson by putting e board."
' Mrs. Harcourt said, "don't you ought to take a rest after the meet-lunch and everything?"
," Mr. Harcourt said, "and we've ere too long. Willis, you'd better me."
accident no one was in the library
d Mr. Harcourt got there.
ell," Mr. Harcourt said. "I guess gone outside, but they'll be back to
y. Would you like some brandy, my father's brandy."
nk you, sir," Willis said.
u sure?" Mr. Harcourt asked him.
ll try a little. What's the matter, not going to sell the mill, are you,

asked him.
indication of his own distress that ventured to put such a question to urt, and as soon as he spoke he e should not have asked. Mr. Harpoured out a sip or two of brandy olved it slowly in his glass.
Mr. Harcourt said, "do you think o sell out, Willis? Prices are high

I've said too much already," Willis quite all right," Mr. Harcourt an-ve always made it a practice to en-reasonable proposition, and I'd do ing if I were you."

d turned suddenly and his words into silence. There was a discreet the panel of the open door, and that Selwyn was standing there.
elwyn said, "the gentleman has

Mr. Harcourt asked, "What gentleman?"

"The gentleman who you said was coming for dinner and for the night," Selwyn said. "Mr. Nagel, sir."

"Get him in here as quick as you can, Selwyn, and send his car away and don't take out his luggage. Couldn't he come when he's invited? You'd better go—no, stay here, Willis."

Selwyn was back a second later with a thickset man in his middle forties who looked like a football player, except for his immaculately pressed brown double-breasted suit.

"Well, hello, Henry," he said. "Have I barged into a garden party or something? I just drove out in a rented car. I thought we might have time to see the works."

"It's the stockholders' annual luncheon," Mr. Harcourt said.

"Oh," the stranger said.

"Willis," Mr. Harcourt said, "this is my old friend and competitor, Mr. Nagel, of the Simcoe Rubber Hose and Belting Company. Take him into the study and lock the door and don't come out till I knock. And you'd better take the brandy with you."

It was like being thrown suddenly into a prison cell with Mr. Nagel, once they were in Mr. Harcourt's small study. Mr. Nagel moved restively, examining the shelves that contained Mr. Harcourt's collection of antique firearms and the old-fashioned safe that had Mr. Harcourt's father's name painted on it.

"Maybe you would like a little brandy, sir," Willis said.

"Say," Mr. Nagel said, "pour me out a slug, will you?" He tossed off the drink in a single gulp. "Oh, boy," he said, "I'd like to contact the bootlegger who sells this stuff."

"It's been in the family," Willis said. "It's Mr. Harcourt's father's brandy."

Mr. Nagel laughed in an affable, reminiscent way. "My old man didn't pass me on any heirlooms," he said. "I assume you're Mr. Harcourt's grandson, aren't you?"

DRESS BY TINA LESER SHOES BY CAPEZIO JEWELRY BY LATAUSCA

There's no prettier Christmas decoration for legs than a gift of sheer sheer Berkshire Stockings

Only full-fashioned Berkshire Stockings have the Nylace Top and Nylace Toe-Ring . . . twin run-stoppers!

"No, sir," Willis said. "I work in the mill office."

"Is that a fact?" Mr. Nagel said. "What did you say your name was, son?"

"Wayde," Willis said, "Willis Wayde."

"Then you'll be old Alf Wayde's boy, won't you?" Mr. Nagel said. "Old Alf is the best engineer in the belting business."

"I didn't know you knew him," Willis said.

Mr. Nagel said, "Everybody in belting knows Alf. Say, if you're ever in Chicago, look me up. I'm still young enough to know what young fellows like, and I've got a lot of good addresses."

"Thanks very much, sir," Willis said.

There was a knock on the study door.

"I guess that's Mr. Harcourt, sir," Willis said, and when he opened the door he was surprised to see that Mr. Harcourt was not alone. Mr. Bryson Harcourt and Mr. Roger Harcourt were with him.

"You can come out now," Mr. Harcourt said. "I'm sorry to have kept you so long, Percy, but the guests were leaving. This is my son Bryson and this is my nephew, Roger, but I understand you've met them already."

"Hello, fellas," Mr. Nagel said.

"Let's all sit down," Mr. Harcourt said. "Percy, I thought it might be a good idea for Bryson and Roger to sit in on our talk."

"You won't want me any longer, will you, sir?" Willis asked. He thought that Mr. Harcourt had forgotten him. He should have known that Mr. Harcourt never forgot.

"I think I'd like to have you stay, Willis," Mr. Harcourt said. "It might not be a bad idea to have someone outside the family hear this conversation. Willis, pass the cigars."

There was a heavy silence and no one but Mr. Harcourt took a cigar.

"We all know why Mr. Nagel is here," Mr. Harcourt said. "Mr. Nagel has made an offer for the Harcourt Mill. I think it's a startlingly generous offer. The transaction would be an exchange of stock—one share of ours for two of Simcoe. The cash value would amount roughly to five million dollars."

"What's that?" Roger Harcourt asked. "Five million?"

Mr. Harcourt nodded. "It does seem high, doesn't it, Roger?" he said. "But then it isn't the mill that Mr. Nagel wants as much as the Klaus patents and some of our other processes. What do you think of the offer, Roger?"

Roger Harcourt's high voice held everyone's attention. "I imagine you know what I think already, Uncle Henry," he said. "It will be a relief for you not to bother any longer with a difficult business and a credit to you if you can sell at such a price. I think we ought to take it before Mr. Nagel changes his mind."

"I'm not changing my mind," Mr. Nagel said. "It's been one of my dreams to get this settled, personally."

Mr. Harcourt nodded and gazed at the end of his cigar. "Perhaps you're right, Roger," he said. "I've given this serious thought and I dare say you are right. Incidentally, I want to thank Mr. Nagel for his thoughtfulness and for coming here prepared to make final negotiations. Furthermore, he's been generous in other ways. He will undertake to manage the mill as it stands for three years and to do what he can for our key personnel after that, thus avoiding any sudden change. I think logically we ought to take the offer."

Mr. Harcourt's expression had not changed and it seemed to Willis that Bryson Harcourt looked startled, but anyone could see that Roger Harcourt and Mr. Nagel were relieved.

"If it's that way, Henry," Mr. Nagel said, "maybe I'd better get on the phone and let them know in Chicago."

"Just a minute," Mr. Harcourt said. "I'm afraid you misunderstand me, Percy. I've been thanking you, but we're not selling. This mill has made money for a long time and it's supported a lot of people here. I have an obligation to them, and I'm proud to say my son feels as I do. You agree with me, don't you, Bryson?"

"Yes," Bryson Harcourt said. "I'm right with you, father."

"It's old-fashioned, I know," Mr. Harcourt said, "but I'm glad my son's old-fashioned too. It would be easier to take our money and run, but you see, we've always belonged here. You don't understand me, do you, Percy?"

"That's right, I don't," Mr. Nagel said. "I think you're crazy, Henry."

Mr. Harcourt tapped his lower lip gently. "Yes," he said, "yes, I think perhaps I am. There'll be broken hearts tomorrow, but there are a lot more people working in the mill. Willis, ring for Selwyn, will you? Mr. Nagel might like to see his room, and then I'd like to take you for a walk, Percy, before it's dark."

WHEN a salesman in Chicago had been taken ill with appendicitis, Willis was sent to call on the Haverford people there, a firm that was one of Harcourt's best accounts. Mr. Harcourt insisted that Willis should go out to finish the sale. It was time that Willis began to move around, he said, and see the country.

You could never tell, until you tried, whether you could sell or not, and Willis immediately enjoyed the arts of logical persuasion and the elation that finally came writing down an order and finishing a d was a new adventure—the contacts wit people and the feeling that the firm's re tion depended on your judgment and beh Any executive, he always thought, should sales ability, because you could neve when an emergency might arise whe ability might be required. Things were m very fast, although Willis did not know it

Later Willis realized that Mr. Ha knew that his time was short. Mr. Ha was one of the best long-term planners had ever met. There was no dramatic of haste. In fact, there was no appre change in Mr. Harcourt. If he had mor ferences than usual with his lawyers, the were uncertain. He had been ready f crash of October, 1929. The truth wa anyone of Mr. Harcourt's ability was a face anything, and death was no excep

WILLIS believed that he was one of th people who knew that Mr. Harcourt w ing it. He had only a single glimpse o Harcourt's thoughts, and this occurred day he returned from that trip to Chica reached the mill office at half past two ca his new leather suitcase. Perhaps he have reported to Mr. Briggs first, sinc Briggs was the head of Sales, but inst stopped in to see Mr. Harcourt.

"Why, hello, Willis," Mr. Harcour "Put down you and sit down. talking to Jess ford on the tele this morning seem to have n happy impressi "I'm glad if went all right Willis said.

"I thought like traveling," Harcourt told "When I was there was not liked better tha ing around and places. I alway Chicago." The in his chair creaked as he leaned back always living in the future, somethi less and less inclined to, I'm afrai getting surprisingly fond of the present I mustn't keep you, Willis. You ough seeing Mr. Briggs now."

Willis rose, but Mr. Harcourt rai hand.

"I want to hear more about Chicago. you for dinner at the house tonigh paused a moment. "Bess is coming. half past six, so we'll have time to sit west veranda. I thought you'd like it if Bess for you."

Of course he liked it, but he was su even then that Mr. Harcourt shoul mentioned Bess.

"She's looking very pretty these day she?" Mr. Harcourt said. "And she's very direct. She said she'd love to come you were there."

You were always living in some fool dise or other when you were twenty-two he was talking to Mr. Briggs in the Sa partment about the Hartex belting th erford had ordered, a part of his mi still concentrated on what Mr. Harco just said. Why, Willis kept asking hims Mr. Harcourt said that Bess was glad t that evening if he would be there too his mind moved further, on the supp that what he thought was true. He co himself married to Bess Harcourt, liv house of their own on the Harcourt p part of the Harcourt family, as Mr. B son-in-law, assisting Mr. Bryson at th He could never blame himself for in in this fantasy. You always lived in so of fool's paradise or other when yo twenty-two.

The Harcourts were all on the west v

"Oh, Willis dear," Mrs. Harcour "we're all so glad you're back, are Bess?"

"Yes," Bess said, "we're pretty glad

The true rule, in determining to embrace or reject anything, is not whether it have any evil in it, but whether it have more of evil than of good. There are few things wholly evil or wholly good. Almost everything, especially of government policy, is an inseparable compound of the two, so that our best judgment of the preponderance between them is continually demanded.

—ABRAHAM LINCOLN

For Beautiful, Lasting Christmas Gifts...

WISS SHEARS and SCISSORS

To a woman who makes any clothes for her family, or decorative accessories for her home, Wiss shears and scissors are special treasures. For gifts that will be appreciated and used for many, many years . . .

WISS PINKING SHEARS—for a ravel-resistant, decorative finish. Easily used on countless fabrics, single or several layers. 3 sizes, $4.25 to $8.95.

WISS EMBROIDERY SCISSORS—feather-light, with sharp points — for finest needlework, thread-snipping, cutting notches. 6 sizes, 3½" to 6", $2.50* to $3.00.*

WISS SEWING SCISSORS—with sharp points, slender blades—for light fabrics, millinery, ripping, darning, gift wrapping. 6 sizes, 4½" to 6", $2.20* to $3.25.*

WISS DRESSMAKERS' SHEARS—for clothes, curtains, slip-covers. Professional-type bent handles for fast, accurate cutting. 4 sizes, 6" to 8", $3.25* to $4.50.*

WISS GIFT SETS—in a wide variety, priced from $3.95 to $37.50. Gift Set GS15: containing Wiss pinkers, dressmakers' shears, sewing, embroidery scissors (items above) $23.50.

Look for Wiss Cutlery Displays showing a complete assortment of Shears, Scissors and Gift Sets at leading department stores, notions departments, and at better hardware, cutlery and sewing stores.

*Prices slightly higher Denver and West.

J. WISS & SONS CO. · NEWARK 7, N.J.

Manufacturers of Shears, Scissors, Pinking Shears, Metal Cutting Snips and Garden Shears

s looking very pretty. It was a sort of at had nothing to do with her feamade you forget their irregularity.
s a glow in her tan cheeks, and the her yellow hair seem lighter and ut the greenish color of her eyes.
," Mr. Harcourt said, "there isn't for you always to ring the front Bess and Bill don't and you needn't only bothers Selwyn."
t see Willis not ringing a bell," Bess ways think of him as ringing bells."
right," Willis said, "as long as I ring
h you, Bess."
Bess said, "this must be what comes o Chicago."
vas no sharpness at all in the way she ie seemed to know as well as Willis Harcourt was watching them, but she appear to mind, and when Willis Martini that Mr. Harcourt gave hing seemed possible.
he same at dinner—anything seemed

," Mr. Harcourt said, "tell us about
"

Willis began, "it's quite a place,
You know I hadn't been there since er and I passed through it when we here."
uriously, without having intended to began talking about the only other id been in Chicago and not about this He told about visiting the farm in the way to Chicago, and then about and the luncheon at Denver at the Mr. Harrod Cash. haven't you ever told us any of this illis?" Mr. Harcourt asked.
't know," he said. "It was quite a
."
you were talking," Bess said, "you like what you're really like. You feel I knew you."
ld not blame himself for being puz-
t still struck him as a strange remark.
ght to know me by now," he said.
ss I do," she told him, "but you natural."
past nine o'clock Mr. Harcourt said rry to break up such a pleasant eve-t was time for him to go upstairs.
et's been signaling to me," he said.
, I'll go to bed now, Harriet. Good ss, dear. You'll see her home, won't
s?"
vas only starlight, but both of them place by heart. They walked down o the third large beech tree that rose f them like a still cloud, and then y across the lawn toward the woods ath by the brook.
," Bess said, "I do wish I understood much of a puzzle," he told her.
."

ght to know that by now."
put your arm around me," she said.
s helps when you do that."
e put his arm around her, he remem-other times when they had been night together, but they had never be as alone as they were then.
, tell me what you want," she said.
dy must want something and you've me—never."
he said, "it's pretty hard to say it
e. I guess I want to get along. Maybe at everybody wants, but you don't ant it as much as I do, I suppose."
s a stupid thing to want." Her voice low and so close to him that it ike his thoughts as her hair brushed is cheek. "Do you ever think about
s?" he said. "Of course I do."
k about you, too," she said, "all times when I don't expect it." She r head against his shoulder. "I wish I afraid," she said.
d of what?" he asked.
hat's going to happen to all of us—
old you that before. You remember,
?"
he said, "I remember, but there's o be afraid of, Bess."
"—her voice was a whisper—"did er say anything about me today?"

"Yes," he said, "a little."

"Well, what?" she asked him. "What?"

"He said you were looking very pretty."

They did not speak for a while, but their thoughts were very close together.

"I think he'd like to have us get married," she said. Everything inside Willis seemed to stop. "It would be awfully queer, wouldn't it?"

"Why would it be?" he asked.

"I don't know," she said. "It just would be. . . . Willis?"

"Yes?" he said. "What is it, Bess?"

"I'm awfully glad you're here, and I don't want you to go away. You mustn't go away."

"I won't if you don't want me to," he told her. "I love you. Do you love me, Bess?"

"I don't know," she said. "Oh, Willis, I don't know."

"Don't you know at all?" he asked.

"Yes," she said, "sometimes. I do right now, but let's not talk about it now."

Then he saw the lights of the Bryson Harcourt house in front of him. There were cars on the driveway and there were people. He could hear their voices on the terrace.

"Willis," she said, "let's not go in right now."

He called up Bess the next morning from the mill and her mother answered the telephone. Bess had left that morning, she told him, to visit her school friend, Mary Adams, at Seal Harbor. She would be away for a week. Hadn't Bess told him she was going? He could almost believe that none of it had happened when he saw Bess again.

"Willis," she said when she saw him again, "let's not talk about it now. You know there's lots of time."

Of course he thought there was, when summer changed to autumn in 1929. He was behind the bulwark of the Harcourts then, protected from the financial repercussions of that autumn. Although there was a slackening of business, as Mr. Harcourt had foreseen, there

Even a Child can mix ém in minutes—these Memory-making

Nucoa Christmas Crispies

The freshness of Christmas itself is in them—the wonderful crispness of long-remembered holidays. Traditional flavor—yes—but these cookies are made the modern new Nucoa® way. Just follow the recipe on the box. So easy—you never saw a smoother mixer than new enriched Nucoa margarine.

So delicious, too—for Nucoa is rich in nature's own goodness: sweet skim milk, extra-light vegetable oils, golden vitamin A color from carrots. Yes—Nucoa is so good it's digestible even for baby's first spread.

EXTRA!

Look for the special package! It turns into a gift box to fill with Nucoa cookies, when you fold it inside out. You'll know the package by the cookie recipe on the back.

New, enriched

NUCOA is so good it's digestible even for babies

was no demoralizing slide. Willis never realized until everything was over that he and the Harcourts and all the fabric of life around them had been moving through a period of catastrophic change, because everything had seemed to be going on a fixed and even course. He was like someone in the cabin of a ship, absorbed in the immediacy of pressing business while the ship was leaving land.

Mr. Henry Harcourt died on the sixth of April, 1930. Willis could never forget when he heard the news. Selwyn had called the garden house at half past seven in the morning, and Willis had answered the telephone. Mr. Harcourt had passed away quietly in his sleep. Mr. Bryson and Mr. Bill were already at the house, and Mr. Bryson wanted Mr. Willis to come over as soon as possible.

The weather that day was like early March—damp and cold and misty. The mist had made his face wet and drops of water were falling from the bare wisteria vines on the porch of the big house. He rang the doorbell, but when he did so he remembered that Mr. Harcourt had told him that there was never any need to ring it, and a lump rose in his throat.

"Mrs. Harcourt is upstairs, sir," Selwyn said. "It is a shock to madam, and he was so well yesterday."

Mr. Bryson and Bill were in the drawing room. Willis had never seen Bill look so pale and he had never seen Mr. Bryson so upset. When Mr. Bryson spoke, his voice choked, and he had to stop and begin his speech again.

"I loved him," he said, "and I know you loved him too. I don't know what we'll do without him. You've got to help us, Willis."

"Is the doctor here?" Willis asked.

"The doctor?" Mr. Bryson said. "Yes, Selwyn called Doctor Parkinson at once. I can't understand why he isn't here now."

"He'll be here, father," Bill said. "He was out on a call and they're trying to reach him."

"Yes, that's right," Mr. Bryson said. "I remember now. Where's your mother, Bill?"

"She's upstairs, father," Bill said.

"Have you called Mr. Decker, sir?" Willis asked.

"Decker?" Mr. Bryson said. "Why, no, and of course I should have called him. Bill, go and call up Mr. Decker. Ask him to come as soon as he can. There'll be all the arrangements, and the press should be notified, shouldn't it? But Decker can help us with that. What else ought we to do?"

"Perhaps I ought to go down to the mill, sir," Willis said. "Perhaps there ought to be some sort of notice posted."

"That's true," Mr. Bryson said. "Thank you, Willis. Tell Mr. Hewett, and wait for me in father's office."

"Yes, sir," Willis said.

"My car's outside. Have it take you down," Mr. Bryson said, "and then send it back. I'll join you there, Willis, with Mr. Decker." He stopped and his voice choked. "I keep thinking how much better father would do all this."

The news had reached the mill before Willis arrived. Old Pete Sullivan, the day watchman, was wiping his eyes with a blue bandanna handkerchief. Miss Minton, at the reception desk, was crying, Miss Jackman was in tears, too, and her tears wilted her, like a melting candle.

"And he was right here yesterday," she kept saying. "He was so well yesterday."

For a moment Willis stood irresolutely in Mr. Harcourt's office, trying to face the facts. He was only Mr. Harcourt's assistant, but at the same time he represented the Harcourt family until Mr. Bryson should arrive, and until that time he was obliged to give directions in Mr. Bryson's name.

"Perhaps you'd better tell Mr. Hewett that Mr. Bryson will be here in a few minutes," he said, "and ask him if he'd mind coming up here now. Then open the safe and bring in Mr. Harcourt's private files."

It was the first time in his life that he had ever deliberately assumed authority. For a few minutes, at least, he was the head of the Harcourt Mill, and he knew better than Mr. Hewett what Mr. Harcourt would have wanted. He was glad that Mr. Hewett did not resent his being sent for.

"MR. BRYSON wanted us all to meet up here," Willis said, "instead of in your office, sir."

Neither of them spoke for a moment and both of them must have had a vision of Mr. Bryson sitting in Mr. Harcourt's chair.

"How's Bryson taking it?" Mr. Hewett asked.

"He's very much upset, sir," Willis said. "Of course it was very sudden."

"I wish this hadn't happened when business was sliding off," Mr. Hewett said. "Bryson's pretty out of touch with things. There one to take over except me, and I've been in the front office. We ought t Briggs down, and we've got to get your f Miss Jackman, send for Mr. Briggs an Wayde. Let's see, what else ought we to Willis was not used to indecision, beca had not existed in Mr. Harcourt's time.

"We'd better get a notice ready," he "I'll try to dictate one, sir, and we s prepare telegrams to the stockholders a family. Then Mr. Harcourt had cust coming up from Providence this morni

"You'd better see them," Mr. Hewet "Bryson won't want to. There ought some telegram signed by Bryson, and t have to be a stockholders' meeting."

THE mill's balance and equilibrium lost, and it seemed to Willis that he, n Hewett, was doing the thinking. Ever was under reasonable control when Mr son finally arrived with Mr. Decker. Hewett outline various steps the been taking, an Bryson sat in father's chair gazed at the po on the wall.

"We've all g pull together," Bryson said, " hope we'll make team, but I have much mind fo tails today, wha all the—the ar ments."

"That's all Bryson," Mr. I said. "We'll tak of everything. I I'd better see father's papers.

"You know, Bryson said, "I good for much today. Willis know better tha one what fathe doing. I authori to run the office just the way he have run it. J me know if an important com Mr. Decker and be very busy."

The funeral w at St. John's C in Clyde. Willis stood by the door wit Roger Harcourt and Bill and two of the wards, in his rented cutaway that was underneath his arms. He had memoriz arrangements and he was the one wh whispered to the others where the fami friends should sit and pointed out the fo from the mill and employees of over years' standing. Afterward he was aske the other ushers and the family to the and he remembered the gathering in the room, which Mr. Harcourt would ha joyed, especially because everyone wa viously thinking of the provisions of th

Actually the will had been surpr simple, since Mr. Harcourt had lon transferred large blocks of the mill st Mr. Bryson, Bill and Bess. After a of bequests to charities and to the ser the remainder of his estate, includir house on the Harcourt place, was left widow under trust for her lifetime. The only one provision that was peculiar Harcourt's remaining holdings in th were left to her outright.

Willis imagined that Mr. Bryson ar other members of the family must have surprised by this, but Mr. Bryson showed it. The mill, as Mr. Bryson state letter to the stockholders, would co under his direction in accordance with tion and with his father's expressed wish

"Willis," he said, "I want you to be same position with me that you were

CONTINUED ON PAGE 86

HOW WOULD YOU SAY IT?

Edited by John M. Henry

If they go into the park, and sit on the freshly painted bench, and only he gets paint on his clothing, that's love.

JIM CORNWELL,
in Stanton, Nebr., Register

What this country needs is a good five-minute bathroom.

GLEN BABB,
Minneapolis, Minn.

When you can see no end to your troubles, remember a diamond is only a piece of coal that has been hard pressed for a long time.

FAYE NIXON SPEER,
in Indianola, Iowa, Record-Herald

You are young only once. After that you have to think up some other excuse.

BILLY ARTHUR
Chapel Hill, N.C.

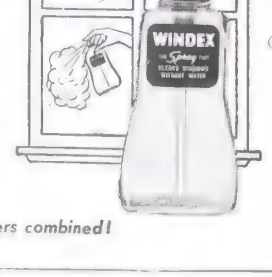
I don't know where the money goes these days. It takes twice as much to live beyond my means as it used to.

ARTHUR CRONKHITE,
Springfield, Ill.

"Sorry, kids—this is the day of the week I put Drāno in all the drains!"

It's a cold fact, sewer germs lurk in every drain. They breed in muck that liquid disinfectants can't budge. Drāno's churning, boiling action dissolves muck—keeps drains germ-free and free-running. Make one day a week—Drāno day. Put Drāno in every drain for about a penny a drain. Makes septic tanks work better. Get Drāno today at your grocery, drug or hardware store. Also available in Canada.

There's nothing like DRĀNO . . . to keep drains free-running and sanitary.



PRODUCTS OF THE DRACKETT COMPANY, CINCINNATI, OHIO

"Get the Windex Spray quick . . . then we can see him better!"

See how easily Windex Spray can make your windows sparkle. Swish! Spray it on. Whish! Wipe it off. Windows, mirrors, all kinds of glass surfaces are done in half the time it takes other glass cleaners. And Windex Spray leaves no waxy dust to clean afterward—no waxy film to attract dust later.

It's a thrifty buy, too. Even more economical in the large 20-oz. refill size. At your grocery, drug or hardware store today—get Windex Spray. Also sold in Canada.

So fast, easy, thrifty, it outsells all other glass cleaners combined!

MADE BY SWIFT

so you can feed your dog as well as you feed your family!

PARD'S THE ONE WITH

Good Beef Taste

SWIFT & COMPANY
Nutrition is our Business

eople find it surprising that their dogs prefer PARD to red, raw meat alone. , it's no wonder at all. • PARD has the tempting, meaty-rich beef taste dogs crave. • And PARD is every bit as good for your dog as Swift's s of nutritional experience can make it. • Its balanced diet is rich in beef meats, beef fat and all the essential foods. And PARD is fortified with tamins and minerals to keep a dog healthy, happy, full of go! • Feed it dog every day! Nobody makes dog food like Swift makes PARD.

FACTS ABOUT PARD YOU SHOULD KNOW!

1. In scientific feeding tests, 8 out of 10 dogs pass up red, raw meat for PARD.

2. PARD provides the equivalent in human nourishment of a roast beef dinner with green beans and mashed potatoes.

3. PARD is extra-rich in beef protein, beef fat, vitamins and minerals. It contains no "fillers."

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 84

father. I've been rather out of touch with things, but you'll back me up, won't you?"

"Yes sir," Willis said. "I'll do the best I can."

"I'm going to try to induce Mr. Roger Harcourt to advise me with the management," Mr. Bryson said. "Roger has a very good head for business."

Willis knew even then that it was a ridiculous way to divide authority. If he had been thirty-five, he could have told Mr. Bryson what he thought, but not when he was twenty-two.

"You're the boss, Mr. Harcourt," he said.

Mr. Bryson slapped him on the back. "Don't say it that way, Willis," he said. "You and I are old friends. If you were only older, I'd ask you instead of Roger to help me out, but you can help us both."

"Yes sir," Willis said. "I'll do anything I can."

That ensuing year at the Harcourt Mill was a history of confusion and a falling off in business, and all sense of security was gone.

Any organization, as Willis knew now, should have its second team ready to take over in case of sudden change, but there were simply no substitutes at the Harcourt Mill ready to move in and close the ranks, because Mr. Harcourt's efforts to infuse new blood had come too late and Mr. Bryson and Mr. Roger had been utterly unprepared. There was only one thing that saved the situation. Mr. Henry Harcourt had always been conservative in paying dividends, and thus for years some of the earnings had gone into surplus. As the Harcourt Mill entered the depression, its cash reserve was so large that its directors could have voted dividends for several years if the mill had not earned a cent. The surplus had been large enough to carry subsequent loss, but watching Mr. Bryson in the office was like watching an unskilled artist endeavoring to finish the canvas of a master, and winced at every bungling stroke. In Fe Mr. Bryson lost the Haverford acco February, Mr. Hewett announced that retiring, and a week later Mr. Brigg reled with Mr. Bryson and handed resignation.

On March 2, 1931—a date that Will forgot—he found a letter from Bess H on his desk with the other mail. Wi pleased to see that it was a longish lett

Dear Willis: It's been quite a long wh we've seen each other, hasn't it? So much happening that I want to talk to you abo mother has been so busy with plans haven't been down to the country for age dear, I know I ought to say this to you in writing, but I do want you to hear my n instead of learning it from someone else. sort of a hard letter to write, Willis dear seem to understand how this all happened because it happened so suddenly that it's all of a heap. I keep trying to think how Well, I guess I'll have to say it in any old

Willis dear, I'm going to get married a it is. Edward Ewing asked me to marry terday. I wonder whether this surprises much as it did me. Of course I've seen Edward but somehow I never really exp If I had, I promise you I would have tol never knew until he asked me that it m been what I always wanted. Anyway, it's swer to everything for me. I never thoug could be so happy.

I'm so happy that I want everybody el particularly you. I seem to care more ab than I ever did, but in a different way. nothing would have worked with you and maybe you'll understand what I mean us both to be happy. It isn't going to nounced until next week. Edward and I ing down then and we both want to see ward likes you very much—he really doe

Willis put the letter in his pocket, to read the rest of it later, but he ne around to it. He felt perfectly cool a possessed, but at the same time he longer a part of the Harcourt Mill, did not seem to feel either glad or so only knew that he was not the same that he had been before he read that

It was strange how everything so happened all at once. What occurr sheer coincidence, but the result wou been the same in any case. Willis had Harcourt's letter in his pocket, and his desk telephone rang.

"Say, Willis," his father said, "has come in yet?"

"No, not yet," Willis said.

"Have you got his engagement ca I'd like to have ten minutes with him.

"Yes," Willis said, "I've got it he can see him at ten-fifteen."

"That'll do," Alfred Wayde said. you got a minute, Willis?"

"Yes," he said, "I've got plenty o

"Then come up here," Alfred Way "I want to see you."

His father was in his office in the E ing Department. He was in his shirt sl usual, smoking his brier pipe.

"WELL, sit down, boy," Alfred Way "but before you do, open the upper-l drawer of my desk. You'll find a b prescription rye in there. I keep it for usually, but I'll have a little myself righ

Willis handed it to his father.

"Willis," he said, "when I see you pressed pants, it makes me pleased haven't always lived right. I don't you'd like a pull of this, would you? might smell it on your breath."

Willis laughed. "I don't mind if I now," he said.

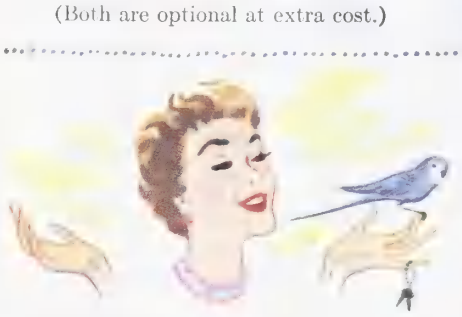
It was one of the most surprising an antest things he had ever done, to tak of straight rye whisky at nine o'cloc morning. He was certainly not the sa son that he had been before he recei Harcourt's letter. There was no con to be careful any longer with his ma his speech, no compulsion any longe to model himself after other people. H not say that he was happy, but he d a sense of intense relief and self-as that he had never felt before.

"Have you got a cold or something on, Willis?" his father asked.

Here are some things you'll want to tell your husband about the 1955 CHEVROLET

SMOOTHER POWERGLIDE—NEW OVERDRIVE

Chevrolet's butter-smooth automatic transmission is even quieter now, the flow of power even silkier. Or this year you can choose the new ultra-economical Overdrive. (Both are optional at extra cost.)



NEW, SAFER TUBELESS TIRES

All Chevrolet models come with tubeless tires—at no extra cost! Added protection against blowouts—quieter running, too!

CHOOSE FROM THREE NEW ENGINES

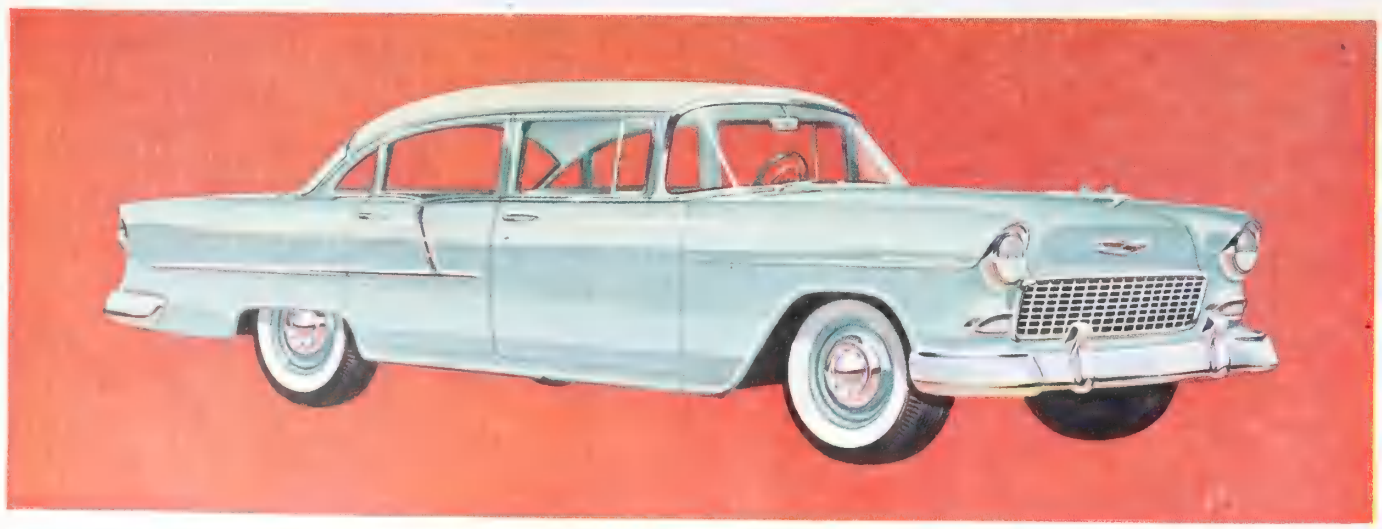
Let the man of the house take his pick. The brilliant 162-h.p. "Turbo-Fire V8"? Or one of the two new 6's—the great "Blue-Flame 136" with Powerglide or the thrifty "Blue-Flame 123" with gearshift models?



NEW POWER STEERING

Love the man who invented power steering—and Chevrolet's newest linkage type, an extra-cost option, is light as whipped cream. No turn too tight, no parking spot too tiny, with this gentle giant to help you steer.

GREATER VISIBILITY THAN EVER BEFORE

A new "open air" view for you through the Sweep-Sight windshield. And a wider panorama for everyone, with up to 18 per cent more glass area . . . plus the fact you can see all four fenders from the driver's seat.

AND DON'T FORGET THIS—Chevrolet and General Motors wiped the slate clean and set out with a whole new idea—to build a low-priced car that would look and act as if it owned the road. This is it. Something only the world's leading car builders could do. This fresh, new and exciting Motoramic Chevrolet is so far ahead of its field that it isn't even fair to compare it with other low-priced cars!... Chevrolet Division of General Motors, Detroit 2, Michigan.

MOTORAMIC

Chevrolet

MORE THAN A NEW CAR . . .
A NEW CONCEPT OF LOW-COST MOTORING

e said, "I'm feeling fine. What do o see the boss about?"
what I wanted to tell you," Alfred
d. "I'm fed to the teeth and I'm ut your mother and me and the the car and light out for the West ver could stand Bryson."
so?" Willis said. "When did this
you?"
n growing on me, boy," Alfred
d. "I don't know why I've hung e so long."
se you did on account of me,"

," Alfred Wayde said, "I had to go ou could get an education. Well, it, son."
Vayde filled his pipe and lighted it.
rse there was old H. H.," Alfred id. "He could always talk me enever I got ready to quit. Every f mine is owned by this company.
, but what has it got me? No more r six thousand dollars in the bank ondhand jalopy. Old Harcourt's ike a drunken sailor, son."
o you mean, he's rolled you?" Willis

Vayde's voice grew louder, and an Willis would have been afraid that night overhear him.
ho was old Harcourt?" Alfred s saying. "What did he ever do ex-use of other people, and that's aught you to do. Frankly I'd rather key wrench and a book of logahell with it! That's all I'm saying."
," Willis said, "you certainly are u act as though you understood ce," Alfred Wayde said. "Maybe

't had all the sense sucked out of t owe these Harcourts a thing, and either. And just who the hell is rcourt?"
t, pa," Willis said, "just who the r like your attitude today, son," de said. "Maybe you'd amount to if you could play around with the , anyway, I'm getting through."

u sure you are?" Willis asked him.
lfred Wayde said. "I'm sure."
a," he said, "I guess I'm quitting moment in his life of which he was ud, because he had learned somet the quality of decision then which er forgotten.

u mind if I use your telephone a e asked.
llou ran the mill switchboard, and at she would listen, but he did not morning, Miss Ballou," he said.

illis Wayde."
. Wayde," he heard her say, "I've to reach you. Mr. Harcourt wants way."

aid, "I want you to make a call for arge it to me because it's personal.
ork City." His words were distinct ried. "To the Beakney-Graham nt Company. I want to speak to tterick personally. Call me when n, please. I'll be in the engineering
r. Wayde's extension."

ver expected to see Bess Harcourt ft, and it was only due to Bess that eet. He had written her a note on ay he received hers, which he tried lly to make agreeable, because any pique and bitterness would have appear ridiculous:

s: It was more than kind of you to e your good news so soon. I do not hat I am delighted in your happiness, of course, write Edward Ewing to con-
m. I hope you won't mind my saying hall always cherish the memory of the ve have had together, and of the kind-you and Bill and your father and e always shown me. I am particularly se now since, as you may have heard, two weeks we shall all be leaving the se where we have lived so happily for so long—my father and mother for the West Coast, and I for New York. But wherever I shall be, I shall always remember the Harcourt place, and the old mill, and all the Harcourts, with deep affection.

Again, with all best wishes for your happiness, most sincerely your friend, WILLIS.

He knew that everything was over as soon as he had mailed the letter—the Harcourt place, and his days at the Harcourt Mill, and every episode with Bess. They were already on one side of the line and he was on the other, when he saw Bess again, just the afternoon of the day before he left the Harcourt place for good. There was a strange coincidence in his meeting Bess, because they met face to face, unexpectedly, on the same path by the brook where he had first seen her years before. He and Bess were both dressed for the city, Bess having come up just for the day from Boston, and he had packed an hour or so before. There was the moment of surprise in their encounter combined with a vivid sort of curiosity, but he was not embarrassed.

"Willis," she said. And he was acutely aware of her green-blue eyes and of the wind-blown look of her tawny hair.

"Why, hello, Bess," he said.

"Willis," she asked, "were you thinking of me, on this path?"

It annoyed him that she should still think she was the center of all his thoughts. However, there was no reason not to be frank, now that he no longer owed the Harcourts anything.

"I don't know what you want to see me for," he said.

"Oh, Willis," she said, "I wish there was something we could do about everything. I just wanted to have a talk with you."

"I don't know what you want to have a talk about," Willis answered.

"Oh, I don't know either," Bess said, "except that I want you to have some sort of kind feeling about me, Willis, even if you think I've been rotten to you, and I have."

why stop at the stockings, Santa?

Cover her with Mojud Glamour
this Christmas!

Give her Mojud "Magic Motion" stockings. Their famous extra "give" and spring-back give her legs the glamour look she loves. But . . . she'll look dazzlingly lovely all over, if you heap her Christmas stocking high with the exquisite Mojud lingerie that she, herself, has longed to buy!

MOJUD® stockings and lingerie At fine stores everywhere.

For store nearest you, write: MOJUD CO., INC., 385 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, New York.

"Why, Bess," Willis said, "you needn't worry about anything like that. I have the kindest feelings about you."

"You know you haven't," Bess said. "You're just trying to have—don't you see I couldn't help it, Willis?"

"Of course you can't help it, Bess," Willis said, "and I'm sure you're doing the right thing."

"Oh, Willis," Bess said, "I wish you wouldn't be so complacent, just as though you never liked me. That's one of the things that put me off you—your complacency. Oh, Willis, let's go up to the pine woods just this once."

Willis could not remember whether he had been shocked by this suggestion or surprised, but it was exactly like Bess Harcourt to have made it.

"And don't say it wouldn't be right," Bess said. "To hell with its being right."

"Bess," Willis said, and he was able to laugh at her for once, "it would not only not be right, but it wouldn't do any good."

"At least we'd feel more kindly toward each other," Bess said, "and more human, and it would be a good way of saying good-by. I wish you were more human, Willis."

"Now, Bess," Willis told her, "I still don't think it would be a good idea—and you won't have to worry about my personality defects any longer."

"Oh, Willis," Bess said, "I don't want to get into an argument. I just feel miserable about everything. You know father doesn't want you to leave. He feels very upset about it. In fact, he wants me to try to dissuade you, Willis."

"Your father said a great many very kind things to me," Willis said, "but you know it's better that I leave." And then for just a second he was angry. "What can you expect? What do you think I'm made of, Bess?"

"Oh, Willis," Bess said, "I know, but I don't see what we're going to do without you."

It was like them all, he was thinking pect him to stay because they could without him.

"The mill's going to get along," Will "No one's indispensable, particularly And then he was able to laugh again haven't found me indispensable."

"Oh," Bess said, "the trouble is know what I've ever found in you."

She must have known as he did tha ing could be gained by talking any

"Well," she said, "good-by, Willis.

"Good-by, Bess," he said, "and once all sorts of good luck."

"Oh, Willis," she said, "aren't you to kiss me good-by—after everything

He could always think of that mom belonging entirely to Bess and him, never was anybody else's business.

"Why, yes," he said, "if you want

"Damn it," Bess said, "why should asked you to, if I didn't?"

But he was no longer a follower Harcourts when he kissed her.

Bess said, "I wish we'd gone up into t woods." And then she began to cry.

"Now, Bess," he told her, and her te not move him very much, "there's not cry about. You'll forget me an hour from

Still, it was always something to rem that Bess Harcourt had cried when

It's a gift – a 49'er

it's a gift . . . Pendleton's talent for fashioning such a timeless jacket of virgin woolens varied as these. It's a wonderful gift . . . the way a 49'er changes from country-casual personality to city chic with simplest accessory additions . . . and mingles with all Pendleton skirts to make so many color-coordinated costumes for you. It's a grand Christmas gift, too . . . this only original 49'er jacket . . . loomed, designed and tailored only by Pendleton: 17.95 and 19.95

Nothing measures up to WOOL

ALWAYS VIRGIN WOOL

PENDLETON

Sportswear

PENDLETON WOOLEN MILLS • PORTLAND, OREGON THE WOOL CITY

Help Fight TB

Buy Christmas Seal

good-by to her, and that was some time her marriage to Edward Ewing.

One Saturday afternoon in mid-May Willis Wayde met Sylvia Hodges on Avenue. He had not seen her since left Cambridge about seven years prev and they would have passed each othe out speaking, if he had not possessed cellent memory for names and faces.

Mr. Beakney had been giving a lu in the University Club for Mr. Nat H of the Hawley Pneumatic Tool Comp Cleveland, and two others of the crowd. Mr. Beakney had asked Joe Mc ick and Willis Wayde to attend this sm together, because Mr. McKitterick and would probably go to Cleveland to sur setup there, and Willis' special task make the stay of Mr. Hawley and the crowd a happy one while they were i York. That evening it was his duty the whole Hawley bunch to a din "Twenty-one" and then to the theater a musical comedy which Willis had a seen seven times with other clients. T Sunday morning he was to accompa Hawley crowd by motor to Mr. Bea home on the Sound near Darien, Conn

It was half past three in the afternoo Willis left the luncheon group, and the nothing for him to do between then a forty-five. He must have had some i taking a quick walk in the park, beca turned uptown. When his glance fell o girl walking toward him, he did not ren her at first. It may have been her quic pace or the awkward cut of her tweed he never could remember what it w first attracted his attention. Her mou hardly a trace of lipstick, and someh unkempt look of her dark hair made he distinguished. Then he had a sense of seen her somewhere else.

"Why, hello," he said, and there cordial lift of his voice. "Why, hello, Hodges."

This was a technique that he had recently, of using the full name in g

…n you were not sure whether the …ght not be too informal.
…e said, "you're Willis Wayde."
…ssed it the first time," Willis said, …ed.
…think of seeing you here in New …said, and her voice still had its …and insecure quality.
…e we are," Willis said. "Are you …r long?"
…" she said. "I'm working at …ith some research there."
…a," he said. "Well, that's fine. I'm …e myself, but not at Columbia. …u doing now?"

"Why," she said, "I'm doing some research in sociology for Professor Gilchrist."

"I mean what are you doing now?" Willis asked.

"Oh, I just came downtown to look at the shops," she said. "Gilchrist doesn't work on Saturday."

"Well, if you're just out for a walk," Willis said, and he felt relaxed and friendly, "how about having a cup of tea at the Plaza?"

"The Plaza?" she repeated after him. "I've never been to the Plaza." The way she said it indicated that the Plaza was something she had always wanted to see.

"Well, it's time you went there, then," he said. "The Plaza is a bit of old New York, you know. I always like the Oak Room there for an after-the-theater snack, and you can't help liking the palm court and the fountain and the little tables. It's rather French, you know, but still it's old New York."

"Well," she said, "thank you. It would be nice to go there with someone who knows so much about it."

"Oh, I don't know so much," he said, "but I do go there occasionally. No one can ever learn all about New York, but I've been here long enough to learn a little. For instance, there's Bergdorf Goodman's, which stands on the site of the old Vanderbilt mansion. Those are nice summer dresses, aren't they?"

They both stopped to look at the pallidly slender figures in chiffon gowns.

"I hate to think what those things must cost," Sylvia said, and Willis laughed easily.

"So do I," he answered. It was very pleasant to be able to be kind to Sylvia, and he could extend his kindness in imagination. "I'd like to see you in that—er—green gown," he said, and hesitated because he didn't know whether or not "gown" was the word for it.

"So would I," she answered. It was a useless thought, of course, but it had the quality of Cinderella and the coach.

"There's never any harm in wishing," he said. "Very frankly, it's an idea of mine that if you wish for something hard enough and often enough, it might come true sometime."

"Do you really think so?" she asked him. She looked at the dresses in the window.

"Yes," he said, "at least that's my theory at present."

He was glad that he had thought of the spacious, decorous order of the Plaza. There were very few people in the palm court, and the music had not started yet. Although he did not know the captain, Willis greeted him as though he did.

"I think the lady would like to sit a little nearer the fountain, if you could manage it," he said. "Will it be tea or would you rather have something to drink, Sylvia?"

"Oh, tea, thanks," Sylvia said, "and an English muffin and marmalade."

He watched her take off her gloves and fold them carefully. He said, "I hope everything's all right in Cambridge."

"Oh, Cambridge," Sylvia said. "It's the same old place, but there comes a time when you want to be independent, don't you think so?" She looked at him with a timid smile.

"I've always thought it must be difficult for a girl at home after she's finished with college and everything," Willis said. "I hope your mother and father are well."

"OH, yes," she said, "they're doing splendidly. Father was made president of the Geological Institute last year. He makes fun of it, but secretly he's pleased, and his book—did you know he had finished his book on the Devonian ganoids?"

"No," Willis said. "Well, that's fine. How's your sister?"

"Oh, Laura," Sylvia said. "Laura's teaching Latin in a very snooty girls' school in Connecticut, and Tom's in a law office in Boston. He's engaged to Mary Smythe. Did you ever know Mary Smythe in Cambridge?"

"No, I don't think so," Willis said. "I never got around much when I was in Cambridge."

"Well, let's just remember that we're here," Sylvia said. "I really thought for a minute you were a handsome stranger trying to pick me up. Tell me all about yourself and what you're doing and everything."

"Oh, there isn't much that's interesting about me," Willis said. "I'm working in Beakney-Graham and Company. It's a management concern."

Sylvia Hodges looked at him with bright attention. "I suppose I ought to know," she said. "What is a management concern?"

"Well," he said, "frankly, it's sort of like an industrial doctor's office. If someone is having trouble running his business, he comes around to us for assistance, and we tinker with the organization, and it's a real industrial education, but I'm afraid it all sounds boring."

"Oh, no," she said, "but I still don't see exactly what you do."

"That's the fascinating part about it," Willis said, "because we do almost everything. Personally, I'm assisting one of the big shots, Mr. Joe McKitterick, and I go with him on jobs all over the country. A while ago we were down South with a fertilizer company, and before that we were up in Minnesota with a pulp mill, and when we're not doing things like that I'm writing reports or entertaining clients."

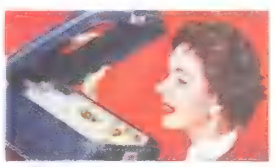
"I don't see why you say it sounds boring," Sylvia said. "You certainly look as though you were doing well." It was the first personal thing she had said, and he laughed.

"You have to look that way if you work in Beakney-Graham," he said. "You have to look as though you knew all the answers in the book."

…h what a …derful Christmas!

Crown

…r-lite luggage…



…HESE AND OTHER FINE STORES:

…o.....The Yeager Co.
…Pa.....Hess Brothers
…Wis.....H. C. Prange Co.
…Md.....Hochschild, Kohn & Co.
…Md.....Stewart & Co., Luggage Dept.
…Mich.....Smith's Luggage & Leather Shop
…n, N. Y.....Sisson Brothers Weldon Co.
…m, Ala.....Birmingham Trunk Factory
…. Y.....Kuehner Leathergoods, Inc.
…ga, Tenn.....Gould's Luggage Shop
…ga, Tenn.....Lovemans, Inc.
…Va.....L. Herman, Inc.
…hio.....Ray's Department Store
…ich.....Crowley Milner Co.
…ge, N. J.....Muir's Department Store
…, Ind.....The Luggage Shop
…W. Va.....Jones, Inc.
…dale, Fla.....Freeman's Luggage
…is, Ind.....L. E. Morrison & Co.
…Tenn.....Miller's Inc.
…Mich.....Rogers Leather Goods Store
….....The Luggage Shop
…Ky.....Kaufman's of Louisville
…Ky.....Royal Luggage
…r, N. H.....The Leavitt Stores Corp.
…Ohio.....Scattergood's
…Tenn.....Lowenstein's
…is, Minn.....Twin City Leather
…Tenn.....White Trunk & Bag
…. J.....Central Luggage
…swick, N. J.....Sellinger's Luggage Shop
…lews, Va.....Penn Luggage
…N. Y.....Macy's New York
…Va.....W. G. Swartz & Co.
…la.....City Luggage & Jewelry Co.
…, Pa.....Gimbel Brothers
…. C.....Boylan-Pearce
…Calif., In Magnolia Center
Hillmer's Luggage Shop
…o, Texas, By the Alamo..Joske's of Texas
…dy, N. Y.....H. S. Barney Co.
…Pa.....The Globe Store
…, Iowa.....Sioux City Luggage Shop
…d, Ind.....Robertson's of South Bend
…d, Mass.....Forbes & Wallace, Inc.
…, Mo.....St. Joseph Trunk Co.
…Downtown and Clayton, Mo.
Scruggs-Vandervoort-Barney, Inc.
…Minn.....Pedro's Distributors
…a.....O. Falk's Department Store
…an.....Hillmer Leather Shop
…N. J.....Lee's Luggage
…n, Pa.....N. Kaufman's, Inc.
…, Miss.....The Valley
…xas.....Nobby Luggage
…on, D. C.....Lansburgh's
…, Ill.....Heins
…rre, Pa.....Lazarus
…Kan.....Walker Brothers

…VN LUGGAGE CO., INC.
…421 West Redwood Street
…Baltimore 1, Maryland

From now on you'll be traveling in style…going wonderful places, meeting exciting people…all because you hinted for fabulous, new SKY-LITE by CROWN. It's molded, tapered…fashion-lovely in line. Covered in rich, textured nub-weave that washes quickly, scoffs at scuffing. Luxury lined in Celanese acetate… with loads of practical pockets. Comes in glowing fashion colors…grey, brown, green, blue. 21″ Weekender, 22.50 26″ Pullman, 29.50 And the love-of-your-life Train Box, 19.50

CROWN LUGGAGE CO., INC. BALTIMORE 1, MD.

*PLUS 10% FEDERAL EXCISE TAX

"You're certainly different from what you were in Cambridge," she said.

"I guess I was pretty provincial when I was in Cambridge," Willis said, "but I don't think I've changed much, basically."

"Oh," she said, "maybe it's because you have to know the answers. I wish I knew the answers to anything."

"That's funny," Willis told her. "I always thought you did."

"Oh, no," she said. "I must have been terrible. You see, I was in love. A girl is always terrible when she's in love."

"Why, I never thought you were terrible," he said.

"I don't suppose you did," she answered, "because you never really thought of me at all. Would you like another cup of tea?"

"Thanks," Willis said, "I would enjoy another cup," and his mind moved awkwardly as he thought of something else to say. "It's a good thing, getting over being in love with someone. It clears the decks, doesn't it?"

"Yes," Sylvia Hodges said, "it sort of clears the decks. Let's talk about something else."

The orchestra had begun to play as they were talking, but Willis had not been aware of the music until then. It was true he had never thought of Sylvia Hodges as a person separate from her environment.

"Suppose you tell me what you really want, I mean out of life and everything," she said.

"Out of life?" Willis repeated after her.

"I know it's a silly question," Sylvia said, "and probably it shows why I'm not good at talking to men. I always say something like that and it drives them off."

"Well, everybody tries to figure what he wants out of life. I've given it serious thought personally, but I don't want to bore you."

"It won't," Sylvia said. "Just looking at you makes me curious, because you look so happy and so sure of everything."

"Well," Willis said, "I'm glad you think I look happy, but I wouldn't say I am, entirely. Actually—to draw an inventory—to get ahead, and eventually to be r boss, with a business of my own home of my own, of course, and a fam my main problem just at present is to ge and that's quite a game in this tow had forgotten about Sylvia, being lo second in his own imagination, but acutely aware of her when he paused. leaning toward him listening, and it first time he had ever thought of her a looking. "Well, that's my picture and your turn. If you had a wish what wo wish, Sylvia?"

He saw her hesitate, but the light left her face.

"I'd like to want about what you d said, "but a girl can't get any of thos by herself, you know. I'm awfully tired poor and bright." She gave her head shake. "If I were to tell you what I w now, you'd think I was an awful fool.

"Oh, no," Willis said. "Tell me."

"All right," she told him, "I want th dress in Bergdorf Goodman's."

The Plaza was not a bad place for he often thought afterward. The voi the music made Willis gay and reckl

"Personally," he said, "I've been to buy an automobile all day, and driv country with the top down."

"Have you?" she asked him. "Reall

Nothing that he was thinking mad sense. He could never analyze the rea hind the decision that he made, and h cared to try to explain it.

"Listen," he said, "if you want tha we'll go over and buy it."

"Don't be silly. Of course I can't d she said.

"You can if you want to," he t "We'll buy the dress and then we'll bu It might be a very good idea if you ar what we wanted for once."

"Willis," she said, "don't be rid I hardly know you, and of course I c do anything like that."

He smiled at her. He had often con large sums of money in the abstract, had never realized so definitely and co exactly what money meant.

"Sylvia," he asked her, "what's the Are you afraid?"

"No," she said, "of course I'm not only—what would people say?"

"No one needs to know," he said, nodded to the waiter and asked him check.

He was Willis Wayde again as soon were out of the Plaza, and Sylvia though she did have a good figure, plain and rather pale. She would have much better if she had worn more

"You know I can't let you buy me a Sylvia said, and it no longer seemed now they were out of the Plaza.

"I DON'T suppose you can," Willi "but just the same I'm glad I asked y

"Well," she said, "it's been awful seeing you, and thanks for the tea. ought to be going now."

"But you haven't told me where you Willis said. "Can't I come up and call sometime?"

"Oh, I live in an apartment with a girl," she said. "You don't want to again, do you?"

"Yes," he said, "seriously I want to she gave him her address and telephon ber. "But I am going to buy an autor even if it's a cheap one."

"Then I'll go with you," she said. "I to see what it's like to buy one."

Willis' five years in New York with ney-Graham and Company had molde into the man he still was. He had ris gradual steps from the ordinary employ the office to a first-rate junior executiv he had started from the bottom. It wa fusing to him that Sylvia Hodges shoul disturbed his assurance that afternoon

Reaction swept over him when he w his apartment on West Tenth Street to and change before meeting those clients Waldorf. Willis lived on the third floor of those old brick dwellings that he li

The richer your lotion—the smoother your hands!

Trushay is richer in protective ingredients than any other leading hand lotion

Yes, Trushay's formula is extra-rich in beauty oils! That's why it gives your hands such perfect care . . . brings your skin new loveliness so many ways!

1. Applied beforehand, guards hands even in hard water!

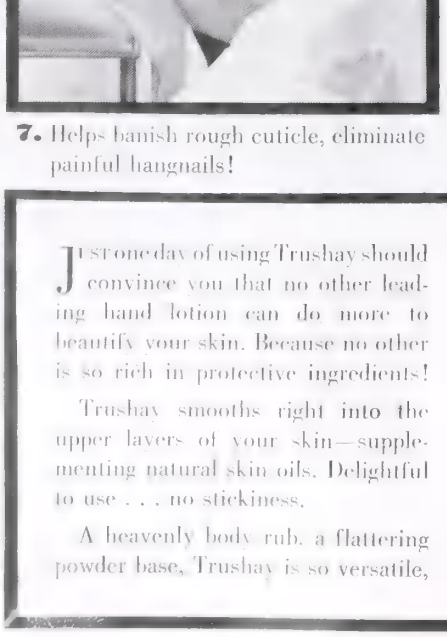
2. Counteracts drying action of detergents, soaps—soothes irritation!

3. Rubs in easily, supplements natural skin oils!



4. Smooths those rough spots—elbows, knees, heels!

5. Makes a fragrant, luxurious body rub!

6. Comforts chapped, cracked, red skin!

7. Helps banish rough cuticle, eliminate painful hangnails!

8. Softens, beautifies—a quick, flattering powder base!

9. Trushay Lotion gives your skin that lovely silken smoothness!

Just one day of using Trushay should convince you that no other leading hand lotion can do more to beautify your skin. Because no other is so rich in protective ingredients!

Trushay smooths right into the upper layers of your skin—supplementing natural skin oils. Delightful to use . . . no stickiness.

A heavenly body rub, a flattering powder base, Trushay is so versatile, you'll probably want two bottles—one for the kitchen, one for your dressing table.

TRUSHAY®
LOTION

A PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

ons." His room reminded ionally of the Harcourt the Harcourt house was standard of his tastes. This been in his mind when he d around for secondhand nd rugs, at a time when it ssible to pick up Victorian ables at a reasonable price.
ances asked why he didn't ew stuff now that he could Villis always answered that as it was. He always felt at never he reached his apart-its quiet was like a rebuke ıy evening.
olish and uncertain of him-d bought a runabout and tten his personal check for agreed to take delivery on ternoon. He did not mind e as much as not knowing he had made the purchase, he would never have taken den step if he had not met lges. He had done it on acer, but now that she was isode was like a daydream.
me time a trace of his elaas in him. Without his be-with Sylvia Hodges, for a r minds and desires had ogether. They had both power of money, and they power.
is telephone rang, Willis
so deep in his imagination nd made him start guiltily.
Willis," a girl's voice said.
e answered, "hello, darling."
Lydia Hammond; she had ent in the Village in order from her parents and was t the Art Students League.
g," Lydia said, "have you
p there looking at etchings, u got a cold or something?"
," Willis said. "Why?" someone is there," Lydia u're too cute to be trusted e corner. Willis, how about dinner, and then, the way it her Saturday? You haven't have you?"
rse I haven't," Willis said,

o leave to keep his appoint-ne Waldorf, but he had an ental picture of Lydia.
Lydia," he said, "you don't much I wish I could, but go right out. It's a crowd eland and I've got to see al again."
oor darling," Lydia said.
nised you were going to call afternoon, you know."
ompletely forgotten. Noth-emed to end with Lydia.
it, darling," he said, "but ied up with these people all
"
illis," she said, "you know have taken a minute off to ve been waiting for hours."
se he should have called should have remembered.
dreamed you'd be waiting ne just to hear from me," old you I was going to,"

m. "Haven't you had me ind at all?"
rse I've been thinking about g," Willis said, "but there other things."
d himself pacing nervously desk, but he was tied by the ord of the telephone, which m to Lydia Hammond. sort of other things?" she ss," he said, "and it looks I've got to go out to Cleve-week."

it wasn't all business this
" she said. "I'll bet you ith some other girl."

"Lydia," he told her, "I've really got to be going now. I'm sorry I was thoughtless."

"Then if you can't come over tonight," she said, "come over for breakfast in the morning."

"I wish I could," he said, "but I have to take those people out to Darien."

He waited but there was nothing but unbelieving silence. It was a relief at last to be able to feel honestly indignant.

"If you don't believe me," he said, "get up tomorrow morning and stand by the Park Avenue entrance of the Waldorf. I'm going out to Darien with Mr. Hawley from Cleveland."

"Darling," Lydia said, "you can come around on Sunday night, can't you?"

"Why, yes, I'd love to, Lydia," he said, "and good-by until then, darling, and I'll tell you a secret on Sunday night." He could not understand what made him say those last words, except it was unkind to leave her with the feeling that he was not enthusiastic. "I bought a little runabout with red leather upholstery this afternoon."

"Oh, darling," she said, "was that why you didn't call me?"

"Yes," he said, "of course it was."

"Darling," she said, "I can't wait. I'm awfully sorry I was mean to you."

Willis had a feeling of temporary relief when he hung up the telephone and it was a greater relief to think about Sylvia Hodges. She was shy and aloof and proud, and even her plainness was appealing. Sylvia Hodges would never seduce him in an off moment, or bother him on the telephone.

So new! So gay! So good!

ANOTHER GOLD MEDAL SUCCESS FOR YOU!

Christmas Bell and Tree Cookies

Mix well:
1/2 cup soft shortening
1/2 cup sugar
1 egg
1 tsp. vanilla

Sift together, then stir in:
1-1/2 cups sifted GOLD MEDAL Flour
1/4 tsp. soda
1/2 tsp. salt

Color 2/3's of dough red or green. Mold this into 1½ x 10" roll and chill. For Bell Shape... squeeze top half together, leaving lower half flared and curving like bell. For Tree Shape, squeeze into triangle.

Save ¼ cup of white dough to form bell clappers or tree trunks. Roll out rest of white dough on paper into a 10 x 4" rectangle large enough to cover colored dough. Trim edges. Wrap around colored dough. Chill.

Heat oven to 375° (quick moderate). Slice dough with sharp knife, ⅛" thick. Place on ungreased baking sheet, ½" apart. Press tiny balls of white dough to bottom of bells to form clappers or to trees to form trunks. Bake 8 to 10 minutes. Makes about 5 dozen.

NEW GOLD MEDAL COOKIES
EASY TO MAKE AND SURE TO PLEASE!

● Betty Crocker's festive refrigerator cookies are so crisp and delicious made with Gold Medal Flour. And you can be doubly sure of success with this "Kitchen-tested" recipe and flour. Make the cookies days in advance, bake them when you wish, then pack 'em in a plastic box (easily available), tie with a jaunty ribbon and... well, there's no nicer way to say "Merry Christmas."

THIS YEAR GIVE FOOD

"A little of your love goes with every gift you bake"

Says Betty Crocker, of General Mills

It was also a relief to meet Mr. Nat Hawley in his suite at the Waldorf, because there Willis was dealing with a familiar personality. Industrial executives, Willis was beginning to learn, were different from Mr. Henry Harcourt, who was an older model, but they were all pounded and battered and then smoothed on a sort of universal production line.

Mr. Hawley's suite was in disorder. There was an array of bottles on the table, and ice and soda and sandwiches and even two individual bottles of milk. The contents of a briefcase were scattered over another table, and coats were draped over the backs of chairs. Mr. Hawley was pacing back and forth in his shirt sleeves, holding a highball glass. Pete Judkins, second vice-president of Hawley Pneumatic Tool, was pouring himself a drink, and Art Ross, assistant sales manager, in his undershirt, with his face covered with shaving cream, stood in a bedroom doorway.

When he saw Willis, Mr. Hawley gave a loud, happy cry. He was a heavy-jowled man with bushy eyebrows, and he clasped Willis by the hand.

"Well, well, if it isn't our host for the evening," he said. "We've just been sort of washing up and having a little skitch and soda before we get on the road. Help yourself to skitch, unless you want some bourbon."

"Thanks, I could certainly do with a touch," Willis answered heartily.

It was always best to pretend that you liked liquor, and yet he knew that Mr. Hawley's hard brown eyes were watching how he handled it.

"You call me chief," Mr. Hawley said. "You're working for Pneumatic Tool tonight, isn't he, boys?"

"He sure is, chief," Pete Judkins said.

"O.K., chief," Willis said. "Hello, Pete. Hello, Art."

He had not forgotten that they had reached a first-name basis at the University Club. It paid never to forget.

"You go wash your face, Artie," Mr. Hawley said. "We've got to get on the road and see a show."

"How about another short snort, chief?" Pete Judkins asked.

Mr. Hawley frowned and handed the second vice-president his glass. "Just a light one, Pete. Say, Willis, do you know what I always tell my boys?"

Willis laughed. You always had to get into the spirit of the moment. "I'd really like to know, chief," he said.

"Come here, Pete," Mr. Hawley said. "Willis, you take a good look at Pete. I've got the finest, most loyal crowd around me that there is in any organization in this whole beautiful country. My boys make me proud, and seriously, just a little humble too. We're all for one and one for all in Pneumatic Tool, and—well, here's what I tell the boys. Work hard and play hard."

It was amazing how clearly Willis could remember the scene. He already knew that you should never underestimate anyone like Mr. Hawley. If he sounded silly, it was well to remember that he wasn't. None of them were.

"Personally," Mr. Hawley said, "I believe in having fun. I used to be quite a playboy, but I have to watch the skitches now."

Everyone laughed sympathetically, and Mr. Hawley cleared his throat.

"The greatest playboy I ever knew in business," he said, "happens to have one of the finest organizational minds I know, and he is a very dear close personal friend of mine. I don't know how he still keeps it up at his age. His name is Percy L. Nagel, and P. L. is a sweetheart."

There was a moment's respectful silence.

"Is that Mr. Nagel of Simcoe Rubber Hose and Belting?" Willis asked.

"It certainly is," Mr. Hawley said. "Were you ever acquainted with P. L. Nagel?"

It all went to prove that it paid to remember names and faces.

"I only just met him," Willis said. "It was when I was working in a small plant in Massachusetts—the Harcourt Mill. Mr. Nagel wanted to buy the mill."

"Son," Mr. Hawley said, "you can shake hands with me again. Any friend of P. L.'s is always a friend of mine."

"Say, chief," Mr. Judkins began.

Mr. Hawley waved his hand. "Don't crowd me, boys," he said. "Let me make my point. I believe in fun, but life isn't all fun either. There are finer things in life."

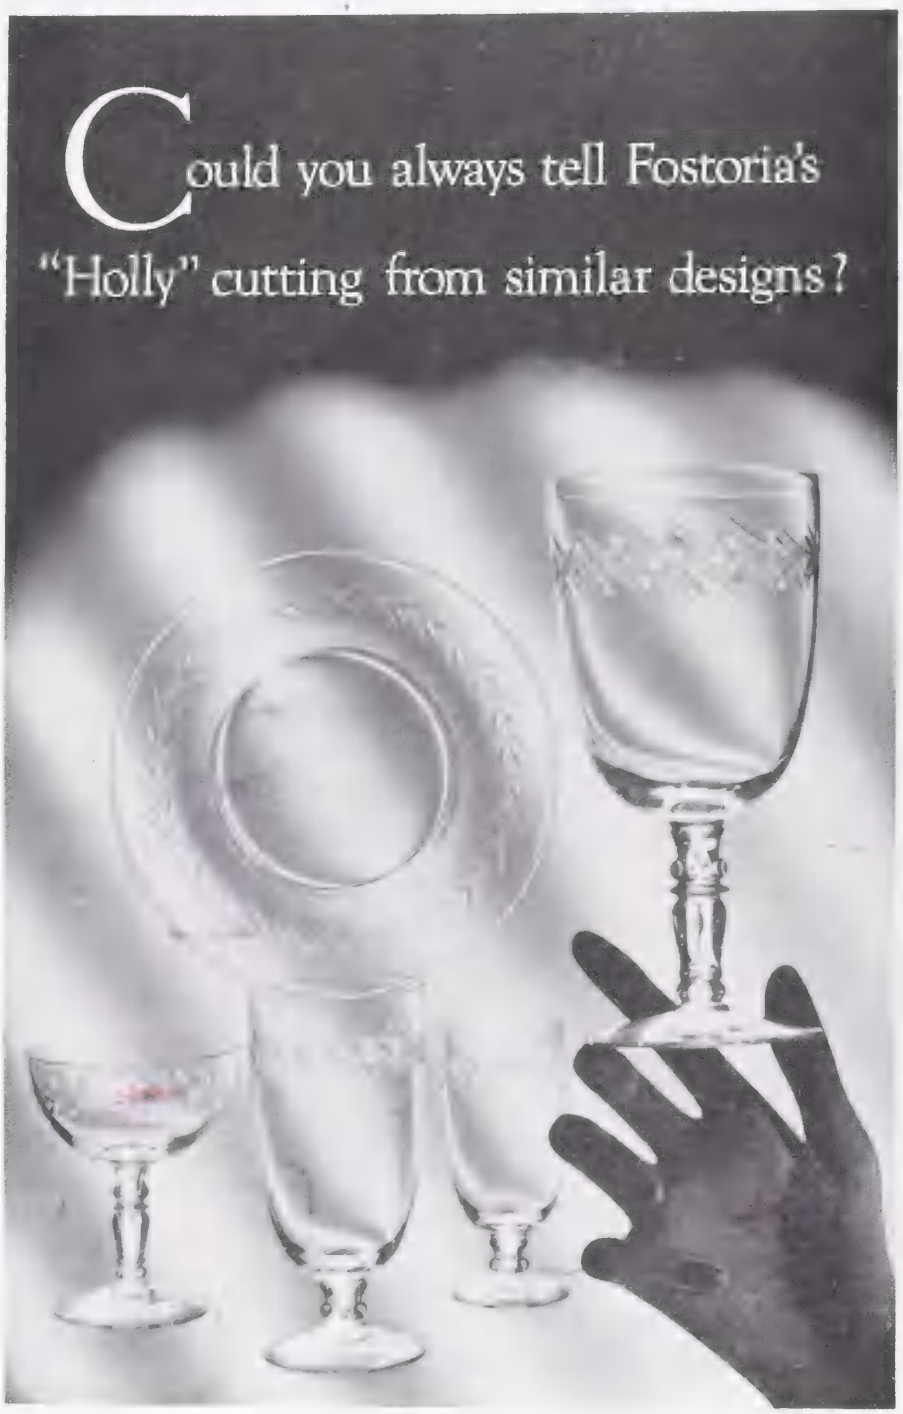
Mr. Hawley looked around him sharply, but everyone was listening.

"Life isn't all play," he said, "and it isn't all work. A well-rounded man makes all sorts of contacts. Now, for instance, about three years ago we were selling some drills to Rothstein Mining and Development. You remember, don't you, Pete?"

"Yes, chief, I certainly do," Mr. Judkins said.

"It was a real experience," Mr. Hawley said. "There were all sorts of experts around that table—mining engineers and geologists and things like that—and among whom was a college professor. I don't recall why the Rothstein people had retained that professor, but he was a real contact. He knew about fishes and red sandstone, and he wrote a book which he presented me with, personally inscribed. His name was Hodges. He's a professor of geology from Harvard University."

"Chief," Mr. Judkins said, "we really ought to be going."

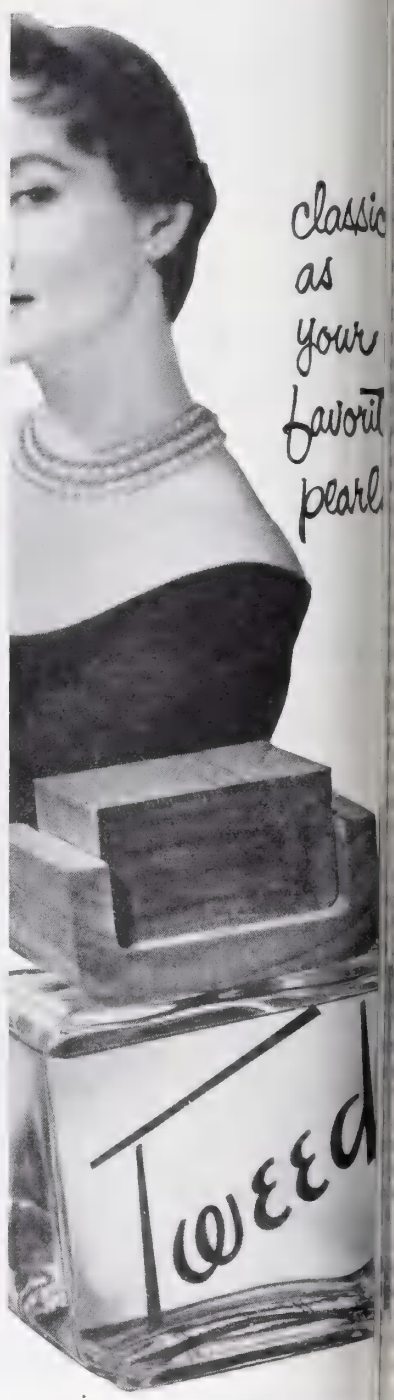


"All right, Pete," Mr. Hawley said, "but let me make my point. My point is that my acquaintance with this Professor Hodges a real experience. Get my coat, will Rossy?"

It was strange how the name had come out of nowhere, there in a hotel room New York. For a moment Willis was u cided whether or not to say anything, finally he spoke.

"The fishes were called ganoids, we they?"

"Say," Mr. Hawley asked him, "how you know that?"



"Why, I happened to know Profe Hodges myself in Cambridge quite a ago," Willis answered. It was strange to t

ALAS, we have no copyright on a holly bush, so we go all-out to make Fostoria's Holly just a little bit prettier than any other. The difference starts with the glass itself, and our Holly is handblown of fine lead crystal. Then, we cut the pattern two ways: the "leaves" with a frosty look; the "berries" with a sparkling polish. This extra artistry results in a distinctively lovely holly design—a wise choice for a gift, or for your own pleasure. The suggested place setting we show above, $14.00*. In open stock because it's made by the Fostoria Glass Company in Moundsville, West Virginia.

slightly higher in the West*

FOSTORIA

Tweed . . . the one fragra above all others . . . to w anytime, anywhere.

Tweed Perfume from 2.00 to 32.
3½ oz. Bouquet Tweed 1.50
PRICES PL

Lentheric
NEW YORK PARIS LONDON

Pearls by Marvella

WE SUGGEST: You get acquainted with this world-famous fragrance by trying the Helene Curtis special offer: ◻ purse size bottle of Tweed perfume free with purchase of Helene Curtis Spray Net.
limited time only

sor Hodges could be useful to him ss way.
Ir. Hawley said, "I forgot you were
nan. When did you see the old prof

t for quite a while," Willis an-ıt I happened to have tea with his ıst this afternoon at the Plaza."
on," Mr. Hawley said, "that's a coincidence. Those contacts never a bit of harm. That's exactly the een trying to make."
ey were on the street waiting for the call a taxi, Mr. Judkins squeezed affectionately.
ief is in quite a mood tonight," s said. "You made a real hit with stairs."
." Willis said. "That makes me
."
him happy,
he way that
All at once sure as fate
ld strike Mr.
r a raise to nd dollars a get it. As a ıct, he asked ey for exactly se in salary
y afternoon, ontract with eumatic Tool er knew that en changing r you had he few yards
ked to Mr.
office was a nbolic jour-remembered
y and confu-he had first to Mr. Beakwith a set tional blue-he was near f that long arrison was he small re-

m.
May," Willis ou think the see me for a

ed a button roffice tele-
r. Wayde," wonders if ive him a few
Mr. Beakshe smiled
Yes, you can
"

kney's office afforded a fine view son. You had an impression of the nd then of two or three college def them honorary, which were the tions. You always saw Mr. Beakcarefully tailored man, gray at the h aquiline, mobile features.
ell, Willis," Mr. Beakney said, nearly over and night is drawing wn and let's look at the view. It's a e and steel, isn't it?"
," Willis said, "it looks beautiful nd steel," Mr. Beakney said. "That se which I happened to use when I sing the chemists' convention the . Have you seen a copy of my

"
" Willis said, "I read it."
ney was watching him closely.
Ir. Beakney said, "but you didn't to speak about my oratory, did off your chest. I have to go to the ess for dinner."
, sir," Willis said. "I want to know
't think I'm worth ten thousand ar."
kney gazed at the view without answer, and Willis knew the pause d to disconcert him.

"I don't like this sort of thing," he said, "at the end of a hard day. It's not the custom here for my people to ask for raises."

Instead of being crushed, as he would have a short time ago, Willis kept his wits about him. Watching Mr. Beakney was enough to tell Willis that he was in danger. Willis had only to say the wrong thing once, and Mr. Beakney's cool expression told him that it would be very easy to say it.

"Just what in hell"—Mr. Beakney's voice had risen to a cool, hard note—"makes you think that you're worth ten thousand dollars a year?"

"I didn't say I thought I was," Willis answered. "I only asked you if you thought so."

"So that's it," Mr. Beakney said. "Hawley's been getting after you for Pneumatic Tool, has he? I rather thought he would."

It was a question of whether to answer or to remain silent, and there was only a second in which to make the choice.

"I wasn't especially attracted by Mr. Hawley," Willis said.

You could always tell when you had said the right thing, and all at once the tension was broken.

"You wouldn't get on with him at all," Mr. Beakney said. "Personally, I disliked every moment I spent with him. You're happy with us here, aren't you?"

"Yes sir," Willis said, "very happy."

"I'm glad to have you say so," Mr. Beakney said. "You've been making a real place for yourself here, but I guess we'd better change your plans a little." Suddenly Mr. Beakney laughed, and slapped Willis affectionately on the knee. "I guess we'd better send Hal Towle with Joe to Cleveland. I wouldn't want to see you in Hawley Pneumatic Tool."

"I wouldn't want to be there," Willis said.

"Now, Willis," Mr. Beakney said, "if two thousand dollars more a year makes you happy, why, what's two thousand dollars? It won't mean anything to you in a while at the rate you're developing, but after this, you let me make the raises. It's annoying, being asked."

"I'm sorry, sir," Willis said.

"Don't say you're sorry," Mr. Beakney said. "I was young myself once. I know what it's like when someone like Hawley puts on pressure. I wish I knew what he offered you, for purely academic reasons. I'll bet it was more than ten thousand, but I won't ask."

"Thank you, sir," Willis said.

"I get this in a better perspective now," Mr. Beakney said. "It was loyal of you to come to me first. I won't say I would have matched him, but it was loyal. Ability is first here, but loyalty is a close second."

Mr. Beakney slapped his knee again and stood up.

"Just the same," he said, "I guess you'd better not go to Cleveland. I've got another problem that came to us yesterday. The Rahway Belting Company wants a survey done. It's a small outfit, but it's a chance for you to develop, and you worked at Harcourt. Have you forgotten about belting?"

"No sir," Willis said.

"Well," Mr. Beakney said, "clear up what you're doing around here. Next week we'll send you down to Rahway. I wonder what you want that two thousand for. You're not thinking of getting married, are you, Willis?"

"No sir," Willis said, and he meant every word of it.

After leaving the office he went straight to his apartment on Tenth Street and sat for quite a long while thinking. He had succeeded with Mr. Beakney, he knew now, by giving himself a value which did not exist. Mr. Beakney had thought erroneously that Willis had received a tempting offer from another source, and Willis' conscience stirred uneasily, but then it had all been Mr. Beakney's own idea. Mr. Beakney was astute enough to look out for himself, and if he had fallen into a trap of his own contriving, there were fine dramatic precedents.

Then he was lonely and he wanted to share his thoughts with someone, which explained why he had pulled out his pocket address book and a moment later he was dialing Sylvia Hodges' number.

"Hello, Sylvia," he said, "this is Willis Wayde. How would you feel about having a bite of supper? I'll bring the car around and we might run out somewhere to Long Island."

What would have happened, he often wondered, if Sylvia had not been at home? As sure as fate he would have called up Lydia Hammond. He was in a mood where he had to call someone.

(To be Continued)

THE LESSON

By JOAN AUCOURT

A cold light of love,
A wild one was I,
Whose kisses came and went Easy as a sigh;
Nor did I ever dream
When mouth was pressed to mouth
What warmth was in the wind
This much farther south.
And now, lost in love,
Where should I go?
I was never taught this;
I did not know.

Morning once was morning
And night and stars were night;
Now there is only
One kind of light:
If eyes are shut or open,
Lights are off or on;
Darkness is darkness
Only when you're gone.
Blinded with love am I;
How should I go?
I was never taught this:
I did not know.

"Joy to the family"

To everyone alike, your lovely, living Flowers-By-Wire bring glad tidings of happiness and love. Simply leave your Christmas list with your F.T.D. Florist . . . the shop with SPEEDY and the famous MERCURY EMBLEM. He guarantees delivery worldwide, telegraph-fast — even of last-minute remembrances.

Phone or Visit
Your F.T.D. Florist

Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association, Headquarters, Detroit, Michigan

NEW GIFT IDEAS:

Lee "Junior" Riders, Chetopa Twill shirts and pants

Lee Riders authentic western cowboy pants or blue jeans

How to say a

Practical Merry Christmas

Give good-looking, long-wearing Lee clothes

Useful, appreciated, every day of the Year! Handsome, hard-wearing Lee work and play clothes. Tailored for every height and build. Sanforized to stay their size. See them at your Lee dealer now!

THE H. D. LEE COMPANY, Kansas City, Mo.

Lee CLOTHES FOR WORK AND PLAY

LOST CHRISTMAS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 43

be too old for a doll. So I think I will this Christmas."

Will got up and hung the stool on its peg, and picked up the bucket of milk. Old Mott took a sleepy mouthful of hay. Turning the button on the door, Will thought, Plague Martha Sims. Dumping the kid here like this and never a word about Christmas. . . . Of course she was busy; the Welfare Department was real busy this time of year, he guessed. . . . Still, she was the one who should have seen to it.

Neither he nor Hattie had wanted to take the girl, but Martha had put it so they couldn't refuse. She had paced about the kitchen with her toed-out, flat-heeled walk, hands in the pockets of her baggy tweed suit, tears actually damping the nervous, sad horse-face.

"If you could take her, Aunt Hattie, just for a while," Martha had said, "till we can find someplace permanent to put her. I can't leave her where she was another day. If you knew —— Oh, sometimes I hate this job!" she'd cried.

Hattie had said dryly, "Well, I spose I could give her a good scrubbing, and feed her up some, but I can't keep her long, Martha. You'll have to find her a permanent place right away."

Martha had gone striding out to the car then, opened the door with the faded WELFARE DEPARTMENT on it, got the girl and her baggage—a paper sack and a shoe box—and dumped them in the middle of the kitchen. They hadn't seen Martha since.

It was dark crossing the barnyard. Will found his free hand holding a scratchy darned-mittened one by the time they got to the steps. On the porch, in the light from the kitchen window, he saw Arla's face looking gravely up at him from under the delicate feathering of snow on her cap.

"Before you take your coat off, Arlie," he said, "spose you bring in a load of wood for the wood box in the front room. Take it in the front door."

In the kitchen, he closed the door to the front room quietly. Hattie looked up inquiringly from the stove where she was mashing the potatoes, her face flushed and pretty from the heat. He came over to her.

"Hattie," he said in a low voice, "Arlie says tomorrow's Christmas. She's been marking the days off on her calendar, and she's expecting a present."

"Oh, my stars!" Hattie said. Pain flickered in her eyes. They looked at each other. "She's never said a word. Not a word."

She began to whip the potatoes angrily. Like him, she turned her anger toward Martha Sims.

"Martha should have done something," she said. "You'd think she would have, Christmas being so near."

They heard wood tumbling into the box, in the other room, and a door closing. Arla was getting another load.

"If you could maybe make up some cookies or something," Will said, "I could cut a tree. I know where there's a little balsam fir just the other side of the pasture."

Hattie hesitated, frowning. She lifted the plates from the warming oven, then set them back again.

"MAYBE I could do that," she said. "There's those nightgowns and stockings and underwear I got from the mail order today. I was going to surprise her with 'em after supper tonight, but I could put 'em under the tree for tomorrow."

Heavy knit underwear, long tan cotton stockings, striped flannel nightgowns—he knew just how they would look, the new-flannel smell of them when she opened the package.

"She wants a doll," he said. "A big-girl doll with real hair and go-to-sleep eyes. She thinks she'll get it this year, sure. It's kind of a last chance."

At the closed still look of Hattie's face, he wished he had not spoken. For immediately there was another presence in the house. They both felt it: the doll, lying there above their heads, her dimpled hands stiffly outspread on the blue silk skirt, her eyes serenely closed, on the delicately tinted bisque face a sweet impersonal smile, forever turned to the blue-striped wallpaper lining the lid of the trunk.

Hattie's lips made a straight line, her jaw was set.

"Call Arlie to supper now," she said. She took the plates down from the warming oven and set them on the table.

Seeing the firm way her hands moved, the stern pose of her head, he knew there would be no good in speaking of it.

After supper, when the dishes were done, Arla came over to him where he sat with his sock feet on the oven door. She stood beside him for a few moments, watching him tamp the tobacco into his pipe, before she got out what she wanted to tell him.

"I know a Christmas song," she said. "Want to hear it?"

He looked at the odd intense face—the skin so white, the ragged hair so black, the eyes so burningly blue. She had none of the tints and contours of a child, but the child looked out of her eyes.

"Sing it," Will said.

She clasped her hands:

"Away in a manger
No crib for His bed,
The little Lord Jesus
Laid down His sweet head.

The stars in the sky
Looked down where He lay,
The little Lord Jesus
Asleep in the hay."

She hadn't got the tune quite right, and the hoarse little voice broke on the high notes, but she sang it lovingly, looking at him shyly as she sang.

Hattie came over, the flour sifter in her hand.

"That was real nice, Arlie," she said. "You better go to bed now."

The child started to the door, and then looked back. She was waiting for something—some talk of Christmas, some assurance that it would be here tomorrow.

But Will couldn't say the words she wanted, and Hattie, already busy measuring out flour for the cookies, seemed not to see her.

"Good night," Arla said. She shut the door carefully behind her.

"I'll finish up the dress I was making for her," Hattie said. "I only got the handwork left to do."

It had a brown wool skirt, a tan wool top, from two old dresses of Hattie's, and it was like everything Hattie ever sewed, neat and stout, but homemadish. Good enough to wear to school, but not the kind of dress little girl for Christmas. A blue silk pink rosebuds embroidered in the the dress on the doll in the trunk—t be the kind.

Will got up and brought his b Mackinaw in from the back hall a putting them on in front of the fire, the dark and the snow outside.

"I don't like you going out after night," Hattie said. "Spose you w hurt, Will."

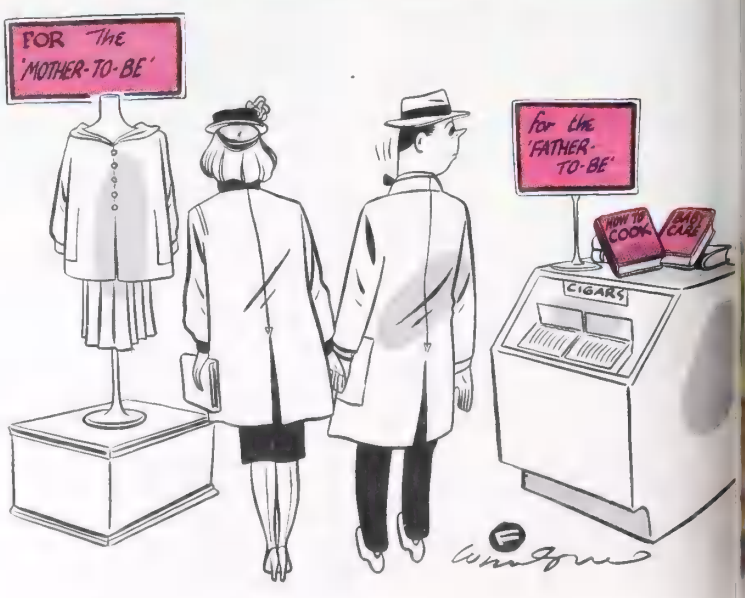
"It's not very far," Will said. "I where it is, noticed it last time I w clean out the spring."

IT was farther than he'd let on t farther even than he'd thought. T was swollen from the storm, the log ridged with snow in the beam of his It had been a long time since he cross in wet weather. He hesitated, balanc and swept his light around him. All see through the deepening snow was pine or two.

The little balsam would be halfw slope, in a small clearing that had velop in perfect symmetry. He had last time he passed that way, not thin sciously, as he used to, "That woul good Christmas tree," but somethi than thought marking it, all the sam

He'd have to cross over now if he w Another few minutes of hesitation ar too cold to make it.

He didn't quite know how he g or how he was going to get back, but the tree. It was a little bigger than h bered, and he was sorry about that, would be harder to carry home.



But this was the one he'd come aft began on it, chopping away the lower one by one as the light found then him working space. The trunk at fir to resist the ax. For a moment he sharply destroying this living thing chips were flying now, fresh-cut fresh-fallen snow.

Not until he was halfway across t he remember the ax leaning against with the snow closing over it. It wa him to leave it there; he was a ma spected good tools. But he was not g tonight.

His balance was poor with the t one arm—stepping from the log t guessed too short and stepped viol space.

A sapling saved him and the tree; pulled himself up the creek bank, began to beat violently. He sat on let the snow and the cold and the wrap about him.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 96

Here they are!

-famous Gibson Christmas Cards

You'll love these merry new Gibson Christmas Cards. So visit your Gibson Dealer now while he has a complete selection. They're conveniently packed, 25 identical cards to the box for only $1*. Of course, the Gibson name on the back of each card will say you sent the very finest.

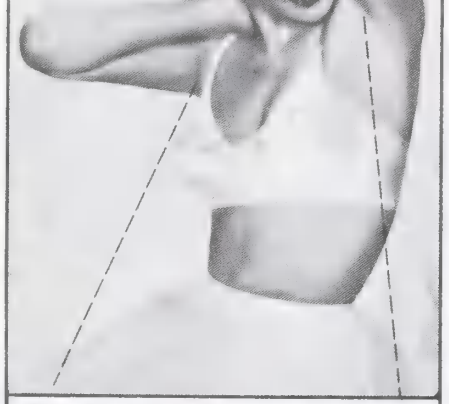
GIBSON

Christmas Cards



The Gibson Art Company
Cincinnati, Ohio
Publishers since 1850
Slightly higher in Canada*

NEW!

DOCTOR'S DEODORANT DISCOVERY*

SAFELY STOPS ODOR 24 HOURS A DAY!

New Mum with M-3 won't irritate normal skin or damage fabrics

Proved in underarm comparison tests made by a doctor. Deodorant without M-3, tested under one arm, stopped perspiration odor only a few hours. New Mum with M-3, tested under other arm, stopped odor a full 24 hours.

1. *Exclusive deodorant based originally on doctor's discovery, now contains long-lasting M-3 (Hexachlorophene).

2. Stops odor all day long because invisible M-3 clings to your skin—keeps on destroying odor bacteria a full 24 hours.

3. Non-irritating to normal skin. Use it daily. Only leading deodorant containing no strong chemical astringents—will not block pores.

4. Won't rot or discolor fabrics—certified by American Institute of Laundering.

5. Delicate new fragrance. Creamier texture—new Mum won't dry out in the jar.

6. Gentle, safe, dependable—ideal for sanitary napkins, too. Get new Mum today.

NEW MUM

cream deodorant with long-lasting M-3

(HEXACHLOROPHENE)

A PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 94

Arla would be asleep by now, warm under Hattie's quilts, and the doll would go on sleeping up there in the trunk—how many more years? He made up his mind he would speak to Hattie about it when he got home.

He stopped in the woodshed and picked out some boards to make a stand for the tree. The yellow light from the kitchen windows, slanting through the falling snow, made him feel warmer already.

It seemed to him he had been gone a very long time. But Hattie was only frosting the cookies, cut in the shape of stars and Christmas trees. She scarcely looked up when he came in.

"Soon as I finish with this," she said, "I'll bring down the ornaments."

He set the tree up in the front room by the window. Its fragrance, more powerful than the fragrance of brown sugar and spices, filled the house.

Hattie came in with the boxes of ornaments. She set them out delicately, carefully, but they had lain away from the light too long; three of them crumbled at her touch. The tinsel was deeply tarnished, the star of Bethlehem had lost all its sparkle, but they put them on anyway, working silently together, he on one side of the tree, she on the other. Last of all, they clipped on the candles.

These candles had decked the last Christmas tree they trimmed together—but they had never been lighted.

"I'll light 'em in the morning," Hattie said, standing back to look at the tree. "It'll likely still be dark when she gets up."

In the kitchen, Will put some oak in the range and adjusted the damper, and Hattie brought the rocker up to the oven and sat down to her sewing.

Will spread his hands over the warmth. Now was probably the time to speak about the doll. But he couldn't bring himself to do it. He remembered that long ago he had wanted to give Velma's warm coat to one of the Sweeney girls, knowing she'd have wanted it that way. Hattie's response was something he could never get out of his mind:

"I'd rather burn it than see another child wear it."

It was still up there in the trunk with the doll.

The next day Hattie had started making over one of her old coats for the Sweeney girl, and neither of them ever spoke of it again. . . .

Watching her plump pretty hands rhythmically whipping the needle into and out of the brown wool, he found that he could not disturb her now. But neither could he forget Arla's "next year I'll be too old for a doll."

"Hattie," he said, "do you think Ben Hubbert might have a doll there in his store somewhere?"

"If he did," Hattie said, "it'd be fifty years old. He's still got the same old buggy whips hanging from the rafters he used to have when papa took me in there as a little girl. And how would you get it here in time? You couldn't get through tonight."

"Maybe I could," he said, "if I was to leave right away, and take the truck."

He went over to the phone. Three longs and a short, that was Hubbert's store, written up on the wall by the phone.

"WHAT's that? A doll?" Ben was one of those people who always yell into a phone. "I don't stock 'em any more. Ever'body gettin' theirs from the mail order now. You hang on a minute, though—I'll go look—might have one somewhere."

Hattie held up the dress, frowning at the hem.

"Seems like I got it a little too short," she said. "But I left plenty of hem in case I have to let it out."

A stick of wood settled itself in the stove, and the room seemed not quite so warm. It must be good and chilly, Will thought, out in that drafty store. Where in the world, in all that accumulation, would the old man look for a doll? And even if he found it, it would be foolish to go after it tonight. He was so tired that it would be very easy to fall asleep and end up off the road. . . . Maybe he could get up extra early.

"I'm sorry!" Ben cried. "Sorry, Will!"

After he hung up Hattie said slowly, "I could make her a rag baby, but she's too old for it, and when she's got her heart set on something else, it would be like a slap in the face."

She was embroidering a yellow daisy with a brown center on the front of the dress. Her brow began to smooth out, her mouth to soften with the pleasure of the work.

"You go to bed, Will," she said. "I'll be along pretty soon."

Yes, he'd have to go to bed; he was too achingly tired to be any good to anybody tonight. Too tired to talk about the doll. But at the door, he turned.

"There's that doll up in the attic," he said. "It's just what Arlie wants."

Hattie's lips tightened. Slowly she shook her head. She did not even look up, and the daisy went on unfolding steadily in her hands.

There was nothing more to be said. Twenty years and she had not changed. . . .

It must have been three o'clock when Will woke up.

On her side of the bed, Hattie turned with a little sigh to sleep more deeply. Always in the night like this when he awoke and she slept on beside him, she seemed to him the young Hattie, grave and trusting, unmarked by age and grief. And he would lie there and remember that both of them were getting old, and many things that had been, until he drifted back to sleep. But this was different; the awakening was as if he had an appointment with himself.

The stairs had a metallic coldness; he was shivering by the time he got to the attic.

He knew where the trunk was, under the small window, and the keys hung on a nail behind the door. He did not need a light. In his own house he knew where everything was. He got the wrong key at first, and the second key stuck a little before it turned in the lock.

He raised the lid on the odor of moth balls, clean woolens, long-folded cotton and linen. He felt for the solid shape of the doll.

It was not there.

He thrust his hand among the layers of clothing, the paper-wrapped bundles, feeling to the very bottom of the trunk.

What had she done with it? Had Hattie guessed his purpose, before he knew it himself, and hidden the doll tonight? Or had she burned it long before?

When he awoke for the second time that morning, Hattie was already up. It seemed a good deal later than it was b snow on the ground reflected all the of the beginning day.

He did not get out of bed at o was a feeling of grief about this da to him a little at a time as he dress ing, sitting on the edge of the bed.

When he opened the door to the f warmth laden with the balsamy fra the tree was a breath of the long ecstasy of Christmas morning. H lighted the candles.

Anyway, he thought, he had g that—the tree, fresh and magical, ant than any tree before.

The door of Arla's room opene came out in nightgown and bare f excitement she had forgotten to p slippers Hattie was trying to tea wear.

IT seemed to Will that she stood for a very long time, her arms strai sides, her face turned to the glowing then she began to search, but only eyes, as if she dared to go no neare

Almost as soon as Arla, Will saw against a package at the foot of dimpled hands outspread.

Arla knelt, her thin little pro against the candle-starred dark, the her shoulder blades sharp in the w gown, her sleep-tousled hair stick back.

Carefully she touched the doll's w fore, the crisp blue-and-white gingh the slip edged with tatting, the lac panties all made since last night, he

She smoothed out its skirt. Then s the doll up and held it to her wit memorial gesture of the mother.

Until now he had not noticed Ha ing in the kitchen doorway. She loo in her gray-and-white print dress, even this early in the morning, neatl and pinned up. She came over to did something she had not done t long time—something he rememb the young Hattie.

She put her hand on his arm an up, spoke to him seriously and co

"She could be a pretty child, Will. got to looking like she belonged body."

He placed his hand over the plu that rested on his arm—as the young used to do.

"I think she's beginning to look a it already, mother," he said.

MARCHESA ELENA GRIMALDI

(Painting on page 44)

PAINTINGS have their vicissitudes, as do human beings. Van Dyck's portrait of the Marchesa Elena Grimaldi has experienced the mutability of fortune. It was painted in 1623, when the artist was a young man, still at the height of his vigor. He had left his native Flanders and settled temporarily in Genoa, where he became overnight the fashionable portraitist of the patrician families. There he created on canvas a race of supermen and women, richly dressed, of lofty stature and aloof expression. However, of all the Genoese who sat to him, Van Dyck has given to none so dignified, so majestic a pose as to the wife of the Marchese Cattaneo. He has also favored her with perhaps his most brilliant design. How skillfully the parasol is used to heighten still further the Marchesa's tallness, "towering in her pride of place," as she advances across her terrace and casts at the spectator, far below, an appraising glance! This is the ultimate in the Grand Manner in portraiture.

The failure of their trade and the decline of their independence, however, brought the great families of Genoa close to destitution. English collectors cast covetous eyes on their works of art, and especially on the Marchesa Grimaldi's portrait. Sir David Wilkie in 1828 wrote Sir Robert Peel saying he had heard from his agent that in the palace of Nicola Cattaneo there was a picture of "a Young Lady, with a Black Servant holding a Curious Parasol over her head," which he tri The family would not sell, but sho once more? Apparently the later Wilkie's agent were equally unava early in this century when the V scholar, Sir Lionel Cust, gained adm the Cattaneo palace, he was usher room where he halted spellboun every wall, as it seemed, Van Dyc down, and on one there stood and ga a haughty dame, over whose head page held a scarlet parasol. All, spoke of dust and neglect, and whe was with regret that such treasures o should be left to molder on the wall

Van Dyck's masterworks were not ble away much longer; they had in fac the nadir of their fortune. A dealer b the Cattaneo paintings shortly before World War, and eventually Mr. Wi quired the most important of the lot trait of the Marchesa Grimaldi and traits of her two children. These he the rest of his collection to the nation when Wilkie's agent had seen the pai wrote, "What a prize . . . for a Nati lery." It would never have occurred to anyone else at that time that the Gallery for which this prize was e destined would be, not in Europe, b United States of America.

—JOHN WALKER, Chief Cura tional Gallery of Art.

ok crisp, for allure . . .

but look twice, to be sure!

h, winter cottons answer every hall I wear?" problem. Many d with new crease-resistant fin- ay crisp hours on end, shed between wearings.

Upset! She'll never look crisp in this again—it shrank! Whatever else you look for when you buy, ALWAYS look for the "Sanforized" label—it guards against shrinking.

Down South, pastel linen is the biggest thing under the sun. Chinese styling, the newest. This two-piece version unpacked without a wrinkle—just as the label promised.

Downhearted! The backbone of her wardrobe . . . after just a few washings! Whether they wrinkle or not, linens can shrink. As Confucius say: No "Sanforized" tickee—watch wash-ee!

e slim-jim pants, fancy shirts garb of gals everywhere. And all those ruffles scare you. Ac- to the label, they practically mselves.

At wit's end! Without the "Sanforized" label some cottons can shrink two whole sizes in just a few washings. Out of fit, out of style . . . out of your wardrobe.

Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc. permits use of its trade-mark "Sanforized," adopted in 1930, only on fabrics which meet this company's rigid shrinkage requirements. Fabrics bearing the trade-mark "Sanforized" will not shrink more than 1% by the Government's standard test.

(Top) "Willow"* (Left to Right) "Chantilly"* "Décor"* "Strasbourg"* "King Edward"* "Rondo"* "Lily of the Valley"* "Greenbrier"* "Theme"*

Wouldn't one of these Gorham sterling patterns make a wonderful gift for a Christmas bride?

Or wouldn't you, for that matter, love a gift of sterling flatware with the Gorham name on it? There are so many good reasons why you should.

Most obvious reason is the beautiful variety of patterns. Only Gorham* has so many: American Modern patterns like Gorham's newest "Willow" and "Theme"; classics like "Strasbourg" and "Chantilly." (Did you know that through the years more brides have picked "Chantilly" than any other sterling pattern?) And richly decorated patterns like "King Edward" and "Décor" that show sterling the way Gorham makes it, in all its deep-cut beauty.

But fun as it is to pick out the prettiest pattern, when you're buying sterling there are other deeper values you should consider. Because all sterling is not the same. The sterling Gorham uses, for example, is finer than the Government standard for sterling. There's more precious silver in it.

And into this finer sterling Gorham builds a solid strength with a deep glow that years of daily use can't dim. Both these qualities add greatly to the value of your sterling gift.

There are other design advantages, too, that you find only in Gorham: one-piece seamless knife handles that resist dents, never rattle; the double-use pieces of Gorham's new American Modern series.

Why don't you see this finer sterling at your jeweler's just for the sheer pleasure of it? And who knows, maybe you'll find some under your Ch tree! Single placesettings start at $27.50; sta to serve 4 persons, from $77.00, Fed. Tax incl. payment plans available.

Gorham
STERLING

AMERICA'S LEADING SILVERSMITHS SINC

*TRADE MARKS © 1954 BY THE GORHAM CO., PROVIDE

The graceful designs of museum masterpieces inspired these new needlepoint patterns. . . . An heirloom rug with flower-and-leaf motifs and matching designs for cushions, chair and stool upholstery.

New needlepoint designs from a Museum treasure

FOWLER

A Victorian lady's chair comes into its own when upholstered with needlepoint showing the graceful Cluny pattern against a contemporary decoration color.

By HENRIETTA MURDOCK
Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

HERE are new and unusual needlepoint designs taken from a rare hand-worked rug inspired by the famous Cluny tapestries. There are six of the designs for upholstery with the centers already worked on 26″ canvas. The same designs appear in the rug so that your chairs, ottomans and sofa cushions can be matched to or harmonized with it.

The rug comes in two sizes, 44″ x 68″ and 36″ x 54″. The center motifs and border are already worked ready for the fill-in background. The designs themselves are worked in cream, beige and other light neutral tones with small occasional accents of darker colors. This makes it possible for you to choose for your background a color that harmonizes with your established scheme.

Light designs against decorative colored background are a new look in needlepoint, which traditionally shows darker colors against neutral backgrounds. This is a true tapestry touch which lends distinction to your handiwork.

This reverse use of color in needlepoint is particularly flattering to antiques, as it emphasizes the beauty of the wood and brings old pieces directly into the room scheme. Almost every woman has a precious old chair or two for which she would like needlepoint of her own handiwork. The freshness of the lighter colors is singularly pleasing and makes your piece a real heirloom treasure.

Heavier yarns are used for the rugs, of course, so that they will withstand practical use; and, happily, the filling in goes faster with the regular rug yarns.

If you do not find these needlepoint designs in the art-needlework department of your local store, write to the Interior Decoration Department, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa., for the name of a store in your area where they are obtainable.

When

are you really grown up?

There was a time when you wanted things to prove your maturity . . . like high-heeled slippers or the key to the front door. But all these hard-won privileges seem unimportant when you're really grown up. Then you make your decisions because they're best for you—not just to prove a point.

Take sanitary protection, for example. Almost every girl, every woman, who uses the internal method has made the grown-up decision to adopt it because she honestly believes it's best for her. She may have learned about it from a friend, from her doctor or from a Tampax ad. But basically, she has weighed the advantages of Tampax herself. Here they are:

(1) Tampax prevents odor from forming. (2) Tampax is both invisible and unfelt when in place—does away with the whole belt-pin-pad harness. (3) Tampax is easy to dispose of. (4) Tampax is so small, month's supply slips into purse. (5) Tampax can be worn in tub or shower. (6) Wearer's hands need not even touch the Tampax.

Get Tampax at drug or notion counters in 3 absorbencies: Regular, Super, Junior. Look for Tampax Vendor in restrooms throughout the United States. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

TAMPAX INCORPORATED
Palmer, Mass.

Please send me in plain wrapper a trial package of Tampax. I enclose 10¢ [illegible] of silver to cover cost of mailing. Size is checked below.

( ) REGULAR ( ) SUPER ( ) JUNIOR

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

CHURCHILL OFF GUARD

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 53

seat was improved noticeably. Mine was still what it had been before. Because I truly dreaded our return, I tried to get the secret, but when the gaits of our three beasts matched one another enough for me to call to Lawrence, my camel decided quite suddenly to gallop all the way home. Lawrence seemed to know what was in the animal's mind for he turned his thumb toward me and said something to Winston just as my long runaway began.

"Go it, Thompson!" shouted Winston Churchill. No urging was necessary. We flew over the sands with the dreadful purpose of an empty goods train with no engineer. I knew, if I could just stay on, I would far outdistance everyone else in the desert. This would at least give me some moments to compose myself before resuming the more formal and sensible duties of guarding Mr. Churchill.

Both he and Lawrence were already seated in the rear of the [railroad] car, smoking and chatting when I arrived. They let me get down without saying anything. I eased myself over to the car. It was like moving a fracture case without benefit of splints, stretcher or sedation.

It would have been an ideal time for a try on the Secretary's life, for I was nearly blind with the sun glare and I felt in every bone as if a stampede had passed over me. Churchill chuckled richly. I didn't want to hear any comment from him or Lawrence, either one. I felt a tap on my shoulder and Winston's voice at my ear, high and ragging:

"That was a great show of energy, Thompson! I've never known a man to get so much out of a camel."

We drove with some hurry to the RAF installations outside the city of Cairo. There was something there, or something going on there, that Winston was determined to know about and that (from what I could sense and gather) the RAF was as determined to keep from him.

"I'd now like to be driven over to the married quarters," Mr. Churchill would say. And there would be a fast and fussy procrastination, such as another inspection of a hangar the duplicate of which we had just seen, or a diversionary skirmish into the canteen or the map room. But they could not shake their Secretary's will to see what he had come for and see it in every detail, creditable and discreditable.

He waved officers away from himself, and drew noncoms (and their wives, too, standing about in polite and inquiring forlornness, struggling to be cheerful and honorably responsive, quite enough to upset a man) about him and into converse with him, until the whole complaint was in his mind. His eyes were cameras and the conscience of his mind was their film strip. . . . Before we were ourselves out of the field's area, his urgent memorandum for improvement was on the submarine cables and tapping out its calm authorities in Whitehall.

The officers who had tried to sidetrack him were dismissed with a monumental disinterest and a handshake almost reflexive in its brevity. It was in this blunt little exchange that I realized I would serve this man with all I had, in any danger, and for as many years as his positions might require the protection of the Yard. Was there ever a one like him for seeing so much?

Astonishing examples of his quickness of eye were happening all the time—for beauty, for drama, for pathos, for mechanical imperfection, for power improvement, for danger, for the containment of it and the release of good forces. Years later, on our way back from first inspections of the British fleet in Scapa Flow, I overheard him give an order to a junior officer. The order puzzled me as indeed it did the N.C.O. as well.

Churchill said, "See that refuse is dumped in the water in the mock ship's area."

"Refuse, sir? What kind, sir?"

"Dinner scraps. Garbage. There are no gulls at the mock ship, but there are hundreds of them at the others."

Then I saw. There was a huge silhouette of a battleship, made by carpenters of light timbers and wallboard, to deceive German reconnaissance and mislead them as to our strength in this huge basin. These things he saw and fixed.

I was most greatly annoyed at the unconscious use to which he could put anyone at all to do things for him that had not the least suggestion of belonging to his proper office. It is true that I had carried his paintboxes to the quayside while we waited for our ship at Marseilles and stood by holding off inquisitive snoopers at the wharf till the "seascape" (no marvel) was finished. I had at the time thought it to be a capricious enthusiasm that would not repeat itself, as it was hard to associate the art of painting with the man's other activities.

I very soon learned that painting was no mere enthusiasm. It was a disease, and before any time at all had passed I had become worn out at the thought of the menial lugging of his damn boxes. It has given me a quite warped notion of this whole side of civilized living to the extent that I would never think of going into a museum no matter who was hanging there.

He painted [in Egypt] and smoked by the hour, while clusters of tourists, dilapidated sheiks and buggy little boys hung about, taking snapshots or giggling.

A group of British Tommies came along, off duty and carefree. With his back turned to them, Churchill could have been nearly anything in the world before being what he really was. Now, under a green umbrella, he looked like an upholstered toad slowly incinerating itself. Very loud stage whispers of advice came from the Tommies. They thought the man might be better doing the outside of blimp hangars. They wondered if instead of painting the Pyramids the man might do better to repair them.

At this sally, Churchill turned and grinned broadly.

"Gawd! It's Winston!" The young soldiers sucked in their company breath and wished themselves far away, but he called them over, showed them his effort at close range, criticized what he thought was still missing in the effort, set about trying to put it in, and all the time chatting back and forth—getting an amazing amount of spontaneous comment from every one of them. They had been thoroughly "sweated" for impromptu offerings of many sorts, without ever knowing that the magic of the Churchill process of kindly solicitation was also giving the Secretary for Air and the Colonies a look into the morale of the "effectives" on the field, and ground guess at their competence.

About this time I saw at close rang strength of his stoicism. It came about, hibitions of stoicism necessarily must, result of the pain of disappointment. caused by the man I had previously gu the Prime Minister, Lloyd George. W Churchill [then a member of the Liberal was so obviously the logical appointme the Chancellorship of the Exchequer t man thought Lloyd George could withh

It was in late 1921. Lloyd George's c was not too sturdy, and Tory oppositio building. Lloyd George feared that the servative machine would end his pa assembled [Liberal-Tory] coalition. A did not give Churchill the post of Char of the Exchequer. I am sure it crushed h

The office workers about him, the secr staff and clerks, all shared the desolatio knew he suffered. He must have seen t tress in my face, and wished to spare embarrassment of speaking of it, for he ened roguishly, peered up at me by p over his glasses (I always felt a foot abov for he crouched so) and said with twinkle, "It is obvious, Thompson, yo little influence with the man you las tected. See that you improve this."

If Winston Churchill in defeat is Winston Churchill with nothing to d kicker of wa paper baskets, and a believably ungoverned bundle of bad t It is better to stay away from him, a his family seeks to do. And such of his ers as can find the reason to take the d or find an emergency miles or counties He could be as abrupt as a large mete leave fumes behind, and a large crater there had been nothing before but s notions of the man.

Then in the course of a few mont quixotic course of events took many some of them doubling clear back on selves. Lloyd George's coalition fell. Law's Conservatives moved into powe

Churchill was neither a Cabinet M nor a "Member." He was plain W Spencer Churchill. I reminded him t was (because of membership in the Council) "Right Honorable," and some glint of the man came back at once.

"They don't want me here! We'll see that! I'll have to try somewhere else. know where I'm going. I'm just not clear

CONTINUED ON PAGE 102

"I wouldn't worry. I'd say it was very sensible of you to be scared of women."

Hallmark Note Papers make thoughtful and inexpensive Christmas gifts!

ere's a modern air of beauty about these new Hallmark Note pers . . . and there are so many new and different designs! Yes, 're sure to find one for every type of person and every social asion. That's why Hallmark Note Papers make ideal Christmas s. You can please even the most discriminating people with a ign to suit each personality.

And—Hallmark Note Papers cost so little. At the fine stores t feature Hallmark Cards, you'll find boxes of Hallmark Note pers priced at 59c, $1.00 and $2.00. Choose yours this very ek. And remember your own Christmas thank you notes . . . so lude a box or two for your own use.

Hallmark Cards

"When you care enough to send the very best"

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 100

the date. Pack a bag, Thompson. I'm going to fight for my old seat at Dundee."

That night he had an acute attack of appendicitis. I sat outside his room in the nursing home and was not able to believe my ears when I heard him shouting my name as if he might be at his own desk.

He wanted my newspaper!

Then he wanted his secretary. He wanted several, not just one.

The more his doctors insisted he was too ill to do so much [after the General Election campaign started] the more they were reminded it was now their doing and none of his. Then the chief nurse complained.

Churchill, still in the nursing home, announced to his doctors that he had ordered a special coach to be attached to the regular Scottish express and that he was going aboard the train.

He was reminded that his stitches had not yet been removed. "Then I shall wear them in remembrance of you," he most dreadfully warned them.

Hecklers would rise in halls, and other hecklers would rise and begin clubbing them. Churchill hated to have heckling interfered with because he was so good at giving it back. On one occasion he got a roar of a laugh when a heckler became so entangled in his attempted abuse that he could only splutter, and before the expletives could be arranged for delivery, Churchill had flung at him, "My friend should not develop more indignation than he can contain!" And the same evening (Mr. Churchill was cultivating a not very successful mustache at this time and quickly abandoned it) a shrill and striking woman rose and shouted, "I don't like your ideas or your mustache!" To which Winston had this to send back: "Madame, pray do not distress yourself—you are unlikely to come into contact with either one."

Everybody shouts things at Winston Churchill. Bus drivers stop, lean from their cabs and give him advice. Children pluck his sleeve. There is a happy flutter of solicitude on all sides.

The American-born Lady Astor, acid-pure in all her pursuits and a woman with more vibrating value than grace, went after Churchill on the liquor problem, and on one occasion, when acknowledging that more money in His Majesty's coffers was his first concern, Churchill said calmly enough, "It is imperative that I should refresh the revenue." And, perhaps enjoying the discomfort of Lady Astor (whose tongue is not only versatile but forked), he produced from the Speaker's stand a glass of Scotch whisky, and added to his previous sentence, "I do so now," and took a fine pull before replacing the glass.

Another time, he was sitting below, listening to a harangue from some now-forgotten member of the opposition who was taking Winston's logic and his character apart, one bone at a time. It began to bother Churchill (who, while the greatest talker in the world, is also its worst listener) and he began to indicate his disagreement with what he was listening to by the most violent and continuous shakings of his large head. Everybody in the House of Commons saw what Churchill was doing The speaker, too, saw how seriously the House's attention was being pulled away from himself and humorously and disastrously dissipating his argument. He came to the edge of the platform and looked right down at Churchill, who continued shaking his head. The speaker aimed his forefinger at Winston and remarked to him, in a sort of squealing outrage, "I wish to remind the Right Honorable friend that I am only expressing my own opinion!" And Churchill, looking up impishly and half rising: "And I wish to remind the speaker that I am only shaking my own head!"

There could be no more serious business that day.

The general strike was the most awful upheaval (of her own doing) to scourge England since her own Civil War and I do honestly believe Winston Churchill enjoyed every single minute of it.

The editor of the Morning Post wrote the Chancellor of the Exchequer and, strike or no strike, offered the full physical facilities of the Post to the government.

Mr. Churchill wanted to run the newspaper. In no time we were off to the building of the Morning Post. All newspapers are housed in ugly palaces, and are accessible to the strangest people. On my very first sight of the structure, it was apparent it was a worse security risk than a county bazaar, for one could enter anywhere without a pass, without challenge, and carry anything whatever into the numerous dark floors. I cautioned Mr. Churchill about this. I cautioned him four times. He merely thought I was cross and sleepy (which was true) and went ahead singing abominable melodies through his nose.

Churchill was always unceremonious about his departures. He would just be gone. Now he was gone. I chased down the dirty floors and hallways, overtaking him on his way to the machine room. There were a lot of beer mugs on the floor. Winston peered into them. They were all empty. He inquired what this meant and found that beer drinking and type-setting and press running were occu that went together. He was told the n enough beer. He didn't believe it. On long-remembered sentences rolled out then as he stood in the middle of a clu sweating workers in dungarees:

"Nonsense! There is no such th enough beer!"

The Duke of Westminster, who had dence near Dieppe, invited Mr. Churc a weekend. He decided to drive the ca self to Dover to catch the boat for the C crossing. This is always a bad sign. I means that he is cross and subcons wants to smash up something, or tha dangerously elated and things will get sm up anyhow through careless exuberan Churchill has an immense grasp of the tages and uses of the machine age; genius for putting whole mechanized zations to work, whether it be a navy force or a fleet of emergency automo distribute his British Gazette. But he personal sensitivity about the machine selves. He runs everything as if it were a proof fire engine in a foam-rubber ca strips gears and rams head on towar thing. He could never learn, for exam fly an airplane, though flight has been his greatest enthusiasms (and one of h too). He is a great shot but a poor dan is a strong swimmer, but he sounds an like a North Sea flotilla maneuver. He most beautifully kept hands I ever sa man and they have great strength, but t few times he tried to play golf he cur turf till it sizzled, never once hit the clean whack, and ser of grass into the a sounds and expleti before heard in E

Did he ever, in fa when he was first get "feel" of flying? never did, though fl ficers have told me t sure he was thinkin He would have cracked up. If things h gone the way he felt they should, his and his scalding impatience would have up in mid-air and the retaliatory forces ity would be waiting for him when it w for the two to meet—Winston and the that is. He was a bit less than fair when over controls in the early days, but w less in the problem of landing or tak

So we drove, myself in some misery, ing for Dover. Churchill was driving he hated was Stanley Baldwin and wanted was to find Baldwin suddenly right of way and ram a "thank you" him. There was a lot of road repair. W near Croydon. Winston went throu just as if they weren't there (it is physica which he lacks, and a celestial insensit violent jolts when he's at the wheel). Th narrowed. Construction lamps were b Cars were in single file. There were mo shoveled earth about. Winston did n for the delay the situation indicated. an opening and I suddenly realized jumped out of the road and were prog right down the sidewalks of Croydon. apparently the plan of the Chancellor Exchequer to bypass the single file of stationary cars and merely rejoin the sion when he could conveniently be hea

It was indeed most foolish of him. forgotten that pedestrians have privile their own sidewalks and are not accu to seeing motorists, even Chancellors right down them. We got into a nice no time and had to make an abrup (Churchill was unusually good in th nique of the abrupt stop) and of course up into the amazed countenance of a raged local constable.

Churchill's head hung down in de couragement. He did have the civic s say he was sorry (though I'm sure he at all sorry—just nettled at the delay) matchless voice of the man identified once for the constable.

"Sorry, Mr. Churchill." Then the of the constable's office and the dis guilt of the violator brought forth, in sarcasm, a caution that withered C

One thorn of experience is worth a whole wilderness of warning. —LOWELL for luxury giving... and living the most glamourous bedlinens of all,

FASHION BORDER GIFT SETS

Here's elegance to delight in day after day...for years! Finest percales...or long-wearing muslins...with enchanting woven or embroidered borders. All with beauty woven in for keeps! Decorator colors. Matching flat and fitted bottom sheets available.

by DAN RIVER sheets with fashion woven in

AT BETTER STORES, OR WRITE: DAN RIVER MILLS, INC., DEPT. LB, DANVILLE, VA.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

BORDERED SETS IN IMPRESSIVE NEW GIFT BOXES, FROM $2.95 TO $11.95

YOU SUFFER
AIN
DACHE URITIS
RALGIA
IST
IEF
ITH ds of ns and dentists recommend s Why . . .
is like a doctor's prescription.
, Anacin contains not just one combination of medically l active ingredients. No other t gives faster, longer-lasting rom pain of headache, neuneuritis than Anacin tablets.
nacin® today!

INGROWN NAIL
Hurting You?
Immediate Relief!
ops of OUTGRO® bring blessed relief from g pain of ingrown nail. OUTGRO tough-kin underneath the nail, allows the nail to d thus prevents further pain and discom-TGRO is available at all drug counters.

KLING . . .
NOISY TOILET ?
GET A WATER MASTER AMERICA'S LARGEST SELLING TOILET TANK BALL
nning toilets can waste over 500 galvater a day. Stop this annoying noise, nd expense. The amazing new pat-Vater-Master Tank Ball instantly stops of water after each flushing—stops everytime, not just some of the time.
at hardware stores EVERYWHERE

dermassage tic eeze ensor END FOR YOUR dermassage SAMPLE
THAN 4000 hospitals throughout the se it daily! PROTECTS against exter-used skin disorders. RELIEVES tired, nuscles and chafed itchy dry skin and
t. RELAXES tense nerves; induces rest-
. Use for baby's tender skin, too.
is ad and 10c (to cover mailing) for
z. dermassage dispenser and booklet care to: LH assage 30 W. Washington St. Chicago 2, Illinois duct of Edison Chemical Company and kept him silent clear to the Channel. The constable looked into the car in the most falsely paternal way imaginable, and said softly, "Do try to stay in the road, sir."

Churchill likes to know when he's in danger. It exhilarates him. He gets extra lively and almost boyishly concerned. The danger simply delights him. So we never tell him.

When Churchill purchased Chartwell Manor and the huge stretch of ground which surrounded it, his life seemed to open out in a new way. Winston loves to get into work clothes and he is a horse for day labor. The lawns around the house were the immediate job to be done, and he and I, with the gardeners, put in long days when government work permitted these defections, leveling off the earth and laying grass turf over a huge area.

He loved the visual gratification that bricklaying brought him. Winston could lay several hundred bricks in a single day. British unions don't permit more than eight hundred.

His first "wall," which he finished in four hours before lunch one morning and which he fashioned (proudly) without guiding strings, level or foundation, looked less like a wall—to the amazed but silent bricklayers who were too paralyzed to say anything—than it did like a mine disaster. It was a thoroughly awful wall that would fall down with the very first rain. Winston, of course—because he'd built the thing—went off to his luncheon quite sure it was the best thing since the Romans.

The bricklayers gave up their own lunchtime to pull down his work and put it all back together again, working with the regular beat of output that pronounces the professional. A little before twilight, Mr. Churchill came out again, bringing with him a Cabinet member, and pointed out his great skill and speed and sureness of eye and steadiness of hand and delicacy of trowel work. "One morning's work—and behold, a classic entity!"

The bricklayers' union was so impressed with the photographs of "his" labors (everything had the obvious "master builder" touch) that it was proud to include anyone so distinguished as a Chancellor of the Exchequer in its membership. There was a brief challenge about it from the union's council, querying the right of an amateur to enjoy professional standing and the union's protection that went with it. This turned into a row. The union itself seemed to want the "bricklayer statesman" in its company, the council not to, and the socialist element was strong enough to force the president to ask Churchill, who by then had paid dues, to resign.

Churchill was hurt at first, then majestically furious. He reminded the whole union that it had sought his membership and he'd lay bricks with the best of them, in a public exhibit to prove his competence. He said he was to be considered in this matter for exactly what he was and that he was a bricklayer and nothing more and those who were dragging in his "incidental duties" as King's Minister were laying down a smoke screen over the dignity of organized skilled labor.

Here is Churchill, the contained man, at his best. (But give him a swimming pool or a war and look out.)

Churchill has only rarely lent his painting to exhibits. And then only when he had the protection of anonymity. Here, I think, he liked to stand up under the pressure of competitive skills and see how good he was considered to be by those who did not realize they were examining the labors of a Prime Minister. The vanity-modesty dilemma again.

I knew that Churchill [in Italy to see Mussolini in the '20's] was not in the least impressed with the so-called "long walk to the Presence." Churchill has the instinct and the technique for taking the military clank out of heavily decorated aides and flunkies (when he thinks they need bypassing or reducing). So, when challenged by the advance brass of Mussolini's outer chamber for daring to be smoking and especially for thinking he could walk in on Il Duce that way, he simply passed his smoldering cigar to the astounded sergeant who had challenged him, pushed his gun up, and walked in by himself, lighting a fresh cigar while he closed the door with his foot.

Early in World War II Mr. Churchill became Prime Minister. One day, soon after taking over the rooms provided for him at No. 10 Downing Street, he issued an order to the whole British government against whistling in the corridors. Many times, in the midst of meetings, upon hearing whistling after the posting of his order, he has dispatched the person nearest to him to fly outside and find and silence the culprit.

I was accompanying him early one morning. We were on our way from the Annexe to Downing Street. A boy passed, whistling loudly (and not too well). But he was a pleasant-enough-looking boy, and half saluted Winston by a lift of his eager brows as youngster passed statesman.

"Stop that whistling!" Churchill thundered.

"Whatever for?" the boy properly challenged.

"It's a horrible noise!"

"Then shut your ears!" the boy hurled back upon the astonished Prime Minister. The boy returned to his enjoyments full blast.

We crossed the road into the Foreign Office yard. I saw a slow smile break over Winston's face. He repeated the boy's words aloud to himself, and chuckled. Then he looked up at me. "Shut your ears," he said. "Shut your ears!"

Made by master craftsmen since 1882
Factories: Dolgeville, N.Y.
Because of transportation costs, prices are slightly higher west of the Rockies

RED CROSS
Cotton Balls

For applying antiseptic

treating skin irritations cleansing cuts and scratches

For { first aid use beauty care
baby care

sterile
Johnson & Johnson

No connection whatever with American National Red Cross

We were to visit President Roosevelt at sea. Churchill rushed about Chequers being in favor of everything and approving of everyone. Very unusual for him. On the day we were due to leave, his keenness to be off grew more and more intense—actually boyish—as the hour came. He very well knew the hour, yet he kept asking me it. At one o'clock, for the thirtieth time, he once more asked me if everything was ready and "secure" and exactly when were we to depart.

"About a quarter of an hour," I answered him, amused at his suspense. I felt some myself, of course, but I am a cop and this is not an authorized part of our equipment.

Today I do truly believe if I had studied my wrist watch for a second or two and then said with quiet positiveness, "We leave in exactly thirteen minutes and eleven seconds," he would have stood it out. (And we were only going to the station to catch a train! At least, that was the start.) But he couldn't stand it. At one-five he jumped into the waiting car and instructed the driver to take us to the station at once. He was grinning at all, and flashing his most bewitching smile on persons never before seen.

Of course we had to wait. Finally the train came. It already had quite a supply of some of the most important Englishmen alive. And a lot of champagne too.

The mood of the group grew happier at dinner before we arrived at our point of embarkation. Churchill not only had his regular pint of champagne, he had a bit more tonight.

He turned to Lord Cherwell—a brilliant mathematician—and asked him to work out in his head how much champagne he had drunk, at the rate of a pint a day, in twenty-four years. He seemed very satisfied with the answer. But when he turned to the professor again and asked him how many railway coaches it would require to stow and carry all that champagne and was told that one end of one coach would be more than ample, he was very put out and disappointed, feeling himself a very uninteresting imbiber at best. He wanted it to require several trainloads.

Then Sir John Dill asked Mr. Churchill how many yards of cigars he'd smoked. The Prime Minister wouldn't get into it, and it also came out that the definitions of smoking would have to be gone into with considerable care, many seeming to know that Winston, while seldom without a cigar in public, was also known to carry it about unlit for long periods of time, so that a single cigar might last half the afternoon, most of the time more ornamental than functional. You can see how important the dinner conversation had become.

We arrived in the far north of the island in a cool, heavy rain, but nothing would dampen the spirits of the Prime Minister or the pervasive sense of "mission" that went with this group.

I knew by this time—and by silhouette—every ship in the Royal Navy, and there before us (though I had not been told—indeed, none of us had) was the Prince of Wales.

We went aboard at once. There the Prime Minister was met by Admiral Tovey. Churchill stepped forward to shake hands with him. He had not noticed yet that a quick and sickly-looking man had also stepped up. Then these two shook hands. I'd seen the picture fifty times, but did not at once identify the man.

It was Harry Hopkins. He had just come back from seeing Stalin.

"Hello, Harry!" said Winston jovially. "How is our friend Joe?"

"Joe is looking very well, Winston, and is sorry he didn't take your advice."

"Joe has a lot of work to do now," said Winston.

"I guess he knows it now," said Harry.

"He should have taken my advice. Everybody should take my advice," he added good-naturedly. "At all times."

I had a certain amount of importance, at least by proxy. I could keep people away from the Prime Minister, and I could tell the hundreds of inquirers that I had no idea where we were going, who was to meet us, what was to be said, and then look wisely and laconically away as if I actually were carrying the plans in my trousers. I enjoyed a great deal of prestige and was well served at messtime. But too often, when in the midst of a cluster of eager questioners and holding them spellbound, there would be the warning buzz of the ship's loud-speaker, then the momentous summons: "Inspector Thompson, lay aft to the laundry to fetch the Prime Minister's fresh linen!" . . . "Inspector Thompson, lay aft to the Prime Minister's cabin to porter his laundry." . . . "Inspector Thompson, the Prime Minister's uniforms are ready!" And off I'd go, the whole navy sensing my odd humiliation. And enjoying it.

In speaking of President Roosevelt, I gathered that Winston was rehearsing in his own thoughts quite closely what he was planning to say, and in what order. He and Harry Hopkins were together much of the time. Winston had a world sense. It was English, and it was personal, but it was a world sense nonetheless. He seemed to feel that he held the continents in his right hand and the custody of all their inhabitants, and that in his left hand he held the oceans. I began to feel that Winston's view of President Roosevelt was very much that sort of thing too: that there might be two such men; men of prestige and power, of might, accomplishment, elaborate thought, fearless initiation, supported by an impassioned love by the multitudes; that Winston felt it might be likely (certainly possible) that this, also, was the way the President of the United States felt about *him*self.

There was a loom of land ahead, then land itself, then the outlines of ships, some carrying sail.

Just ahead now was the USS Augusta, with the President of the United States aboard her.

We approached and spirits lifted at once. We soon reached our anchorage in surrounds very similar to Scapa Flow. Around us were numerous units, big and small, from the U.S. Navy. How hungrily Winston looked over their firepower! How we needed it!

As we passed slowly and majestically between these ships, bands were playing everywhere. It was most beautiful. It was hard to hold back tears. We sailed clear around the Augusta playing a number all the Americans love—the Sousa march, Stars and Stripes Forever. We received a salute from her and she right away struck up God Save the King.

The Augusta had a large canvas awning over the quarter-deck, and as we arrived the band played God Save the King again. We went to the deck above. The President of the United States was here. So were officers of the U.S. Army, Navy and Air Force.

President Roosevelt was standing by the rail, supported by his son Elliott, an officer in the U.S. Army. It was a most impressive moment. The President looked strong and healthy. He did not smile at first. He was a serious man. Character and decision were written into every line of his face. He stood very straig had a cape. It gave him an aloof elega did not appear incongruous.

Winston Churchill moved forward. President Roosevelt smiled most winn had never seen such a smile. They shook warmly, informally. After greeting the dent, the Prime Minister presented the officers who had accompanied him Augusta, and of course those of the C and War Council.

At the conclusion of this, Mr. Ch handed to the President a letter fro Majesty the King. Here, most regrettab contrarily, the sound camera suddenly to function. What was said then is now caught only a broken snatch or two. It not be reconstructed.

We got back to the Prince of Wales af two warriors had lunched together. A o'clock a welcome surprise was in store crew of our ship, and for all her escort stroyers. Several small boatloads of cardboard boxes came alongside. We not imagine what they were. The boat manned by marines. They brought thes dreds and hundreds of boxes on deck box contained 200 cigarettes, two app orange or other fruit, and half a po cheese.

You cannot imagine what a lift this Most of these men hadn't tasted an orat two years, hadn't even seen one. This present from the President of the States to all crews. And in each box printed folder, on the front of whic inscribed: The Commander in Chief, States Navy, sends his compliments a wishes, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Presiden United States, August 9, 1941.

A meeting of this character had neve held before. The circumstances in wh came about will remain forever with tho were present and who took part. All were ships of war—encircled by the high of the clean coast of Newfoundland. F planes drummed but remained far off.

The head chaplain read the service [S morning] standing before a rostrum with American and British flags. We w deeply reached. Three hymns were sung them selected by the Prime Minister. He the sea and knew the hymns the majo the sailors would be sure to know. The rang richly across these strange waters. was never such singing.

Roosevelt was one to capture the im tion. From the instant I had heard his vo the wireless, I had wanted to behold th in person, to look at him and listen to must confess I got quite a start when his guard offered to make this very thing p right here and now.

Mike is like all the other Americans met in one respect at least, in that sugge are put into action right on the spot. W ried across the deck to the President's "Isn't there some sort of warning? I some ceremony? Some protocol?" I very didn't want to be guilty of a breach in tilio, and didn't at all understand the ican system for such things. (It turns ou is none!) "Hell no!" he said cheerfully, ing me along with a powerful shove acr shoulders. "*Any*body can meet the Pre if I think they're O.K. Me and a few that is." And he seemed glad to be able this for me. (The paper work this woul entailed in England is amazing to think

At the very doorway of the Presi suite, I collided with Winston Churchi stepping out after a conversation. I in ately told him the purpose of my com and the courtesy being shown me by the ican Secret Service. Churchill beame grabbed us both, one in each hand.

"Oh, no, Thompson! I will perfor introduction myself! It will be a great pl for me."

So we came into the presence of Roo I stood at his desk, where he was readin writing. He looked up and smiled mos ably. He seemed relaxed and good-natu leaner and sharper edition of Winston h

THE "DIFFERENT" GIRL

By BARBARA SHOOK CONKLIN

She looked different from the other girls who waited Downstairs in the dorm to greet their beaux;
She wore brown oxfords and her hair was plaited
In two thick braids. Even her clothes,
A plain brown crepe touched up with lace,
With its mended spot and jagged hem,
Made her seem old-fashioned and out of place.
It was clear that she wasn't one of them.
But the boy who met her looked different too;
He called her darling and she never knew.

CONTINUED ON PAGE 106

e gift that answers
every sewing need, every budget

HITE
Sewing Machine

ew White All-Stitch Zigzag win needles does profestwo-color embroidery plus other custom details with- achments!

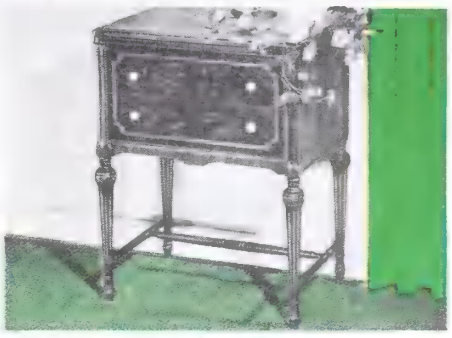
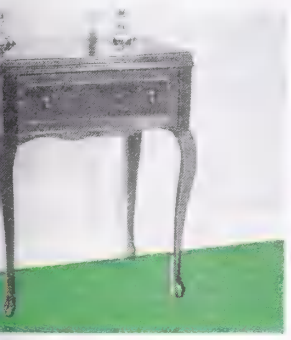
Compare features! Compare prices!
are WHITE's selection of beautiful cabinets!



White machines offer so many easy-sewing features: Zigzag sewing and two-color embroidery! Sews backward and forward! Quiet, dependable operation! Perfect all-speed stitching! Quick, one-hand threading! Beautiful appliqué, hemming, buttonholes and other professional sewing jobs!

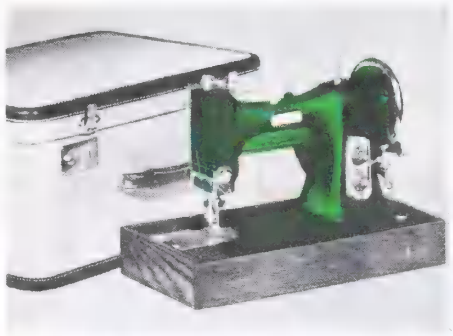
Remember: A free White Magic Sewing Course is included with each machine—and every White is guaranteed by a well-known American manufacturer! See a complete line of White Sewing Machines at leading stores everywhere. Quick, reliable White service is as near as your telephone. Some White models as low as $69.50.

BLOND OAK MODERN. Designed for contemporary living with simple, modern lines that fit into any room. In lovely limed oak.



COLONIAL DESK. Popular Early American design with four deep drawers for sewing supplies. In mellow maple finish.

SHERATON CONSOLE. This compact, classically designed period table has a concealed, large tray for sewing supplies. In satin-smooth mahogany or walnut finish.



ose from the world's largest selection of cabinets.
trated are just a few:

E TABLE. Charming occasional ent a hallway or serve as an in any room. In rich-toned r walnut finish.

MID-CENTURY DESK combines the practicality of storage space with beauty of design. Large work-surface top. In choice blond, mahogany or walnut finish.

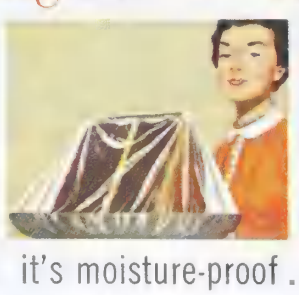
WHITE DE LUXE PORTABLE makes the perfect gift. Finest machine for straight sewing, lightweight, smart luggage case.

MAKE IT A WHITE CHRISTMAS—
IT'S SO EASY TO SEW ON A WHITE

WHITE sewing machines
SINCE 1876

ACHINE CORPORATION, Cleveland 1, Ohio

Take a drumstick, for instance . . .



ONLY

SARAN WRAP

will keep it so fresh . . . so long . . . so easily!

it clings by itself . . . just press this miracle plastic in place, it stays!

it's moisture-proof . . . foods can't dry out . . . keeps odors in their place, too!

it's crystal-clear! now you can see at a glance everything you wrap!

See MEDIC Critics call it the most dramatic television of the year! Monday evenings 9, EST . . . NBC-TV.

A product of The Dow Chemical Company, Midland, Michigan. Also available in Canada.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 104

in some ways, and extended his hand across his desk to me. He had good arms and shoulders and an unexpectedly powerful grip. Winston spoke:

"Inspector Thompson has faithfully guarded me for a period of nearly twenty years. It gives me great pleasure to present him to you."

Here we chatted for about ten minutes, the President offering me one of his cigarettes from his silver cigarette case.

Churchill slipped out. Roosevelt asked me to stay. Mike went on into the suite somewhere.

Roosevelt asked, "How is he standing up under it, Thompson? How is he really?"

"He has marvelous reserve, sir, and fine working habits, including the habit of periodic rest."

"Good. Good. See that he goes on observing that. I do this myself."

"Yes, sir. I understand so."

"Does he sleep at night?"

"When he finally goes to bed, sir, he goes off at once."

"It's useful. I cultivated it many years ago. It's a valuable habit for busy people." He smoked thoughtfully for a moment, leaning back and looking at me, as if measuring me to see how much strength stood between the life of the Prime Minister and the dangers and the terrors about him—those survived and those not yet encountered. "Is he hard to handle?"

"Yes, sir. He's reckless and self-willed. Restraint of any kind is unendurable to him."

"Well, take care of him. He's about the greatest man in the world. In fact, he may very likely be the greatest. You have a terrible responsibility in safeguarding him. You have the responsibility of four or five hundred million people, Thompson."

He smiled and dismissed me, and was instantly at work. Churchill was this way, too, total attention to the matter under scrutiny.

We then left the Augusta, finding Ensign (later Lieutenant) Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., waiting for us at the gangway. He and Mr. Churchill spoke together. Young Roosevelt said a most comforting thing, and in my hearing: that a thorough understanding had been reached. It was the first I heard of it. The younger Roosevelt accompanied us to the Prince of Wales. On the way Mr. Churchill said to him, "Your father is a great man."

This precipitated one of the most interesting conversations—at least for individual slant—that I have heard. Roosevelt, Jr., immediately thanked the Prime Minister, then amended the observation to read this way: "I think my father is becoming a great man."

"Yes," said Winston, seeing the point at once. "He has certainly had much to get through. And to get over."

"That is it. He has been determined to get over his affliction, and he has done so. It hasn't reduced his activity, mental or physical, nor impaired the fairness or clarity of his judgments. My father is a very religious man, Mr. Churchill. I presume you know this."

"I have sensed it."

"He is brainy, but if he is great it is through his determination to set aside obstacles. Setting aside his own was first."

"It is my opinion—and one not arrived at without a considerable range of samplings and comparisons—that your father is one of the greatest men on the earth today."

To this young Roosevelt replied, smiling, "Father was talking to me of you while you were out of the dining room yesterday and said that Churchill ——"

Here the Prime Minister broke him off with gruff good humor: "No—no! 'Winston.' 'Winston.' Your father always calls me 'Winston.' He's never to do anything else!"

"Yes, sir. Correct, sir. So he does. So he will, too, I'm sure!" They laughed together here. Roosevelt, Jr., continued: "In any case, he said quite plainly and without reservation that you are the greatest statesman the world has ever known."

Churchill's eyes glistened and a tremble went through him. "I do not think of myself this way. I hardly think of myself a just in the flood of the circumstance.

"But the world thinks of you this Churchill. So does my father. I told history would have time to make thes tions, but meantime it was my own e that he—meaning my father—and were certainly the greatest two men and that together you can bring pea world and keep it here."

"Very diplomatic of you, young m very challenging. Thank you now, for us ac ss."

A beautiful villa had been placed at ill's disposal at Palm Beach, and at a able distance from the next nearest The day following our arrival, I ap the Prime Minister to find out what swim suit he would like me to get f told him I was going to a store in the get one for myself.

"I don't think I need one," he said and to my astonishment.

I made the polite sounds implyin and just the faintest remonstrance— of noises butlers make in the cinem they don't use words.

"No," he continued, unimpresse quite private here. And no one kn staying in this part. It's quite a sec I've been promised it's one that'll be we

Both of these statements were, o true, or nearly so.

"You see, Thompson," he encourag ing toward the villa, "I have only to of the back door into the sea."

"But you can through field glass I said.

To which he replied, "If they much interested, it own fault what th

I knew it would b thrown away to bu swim suit.

The voice of conscience is so delicate that it is easy to stifle it, but it is also so clear that it is impossible to mistake it.

—MME. DE STAEL

Winston caused amusement on t over [to the United States]. He was He loved flight. He did not much ca he looked like. This time he looke lievably ludicrous. It was hard to was the Prime Minister of a world po looked more as if presiding at a Ha party. He looked chubby too. He lay the rear of the flying boat, seeming to most of the space there—absolutely f ant in baby-blue siren suit (we might admit that his siren costumes were the of military) and the gaudiest dressin ever seen on an Englishman. He chan a couple of times as the drafts see change in the plane, and smoked a twe cigar most of the way across the Atl was better for me not to look at him.

The meetings were only well starte the heavy news came to us that the A ships containing armored vehicles to r our armies in Libya had been sunk. will remember, the Mediterranean was impassable, and supplies had to be se sands of miles around the Cape of Goo then through the Suez Canal.

President Roosevelt looked up at th and as if declaring advantages he coul a hand of whist, he said, "I have a nu Sherman tanks just being issued to ou You shall have them at once. We'll se for you right away."

Without an instant's delay—witho waiting for Winston to thank him, or the admirals and generals to react—he up a telephone at his side and issued th then and there.

These tanks—minus a single shiploa a U-boat got—enabled us to drive th mans back from El Alamein.

Our journey [to Quebec the same ye broken for a visit to Niagara Falls. C men surrounded us so thick it was not p to walk. Winston, with his wife Cle and daughter Mary, stood in a hundre One of the newsmen asked in a loud upon learning that Churchill had seen t in 1900, "Do the falls look the same to irst saw them so many years ago, tittered but all waited.

looked out at the mighty chasm as s questioner the compliment of a answer, then said, "I'm not abso- in as to the falls, but the principle changed!"

joked about Friday the thirteenth, king was never quite a joke with believe it was his one obstinate . . . . But the Germans were getting k so hard and so fast on all fronts were still fighting that I looked any Friday the thirteenth with joy. , there was a Friday the thirteenth, n April, 1945. It was three A.M. and ell rang. I was instantly up. Winston ls this late unless I have left him last few minutes. This night he had his light a little before two. I was newspapers. I was not restless but eful.
ou come quickly, Thompson?" aid weakly. I grabbed my guns and up and pacing about his bedroom. vas sunk down. He kept looking at would go from one wall to another. topped.

ou heard the terrible news?"
, sir," I said, protesting. But he right—and that was the main thing. in your family, sir?"
he President of the United States. d and mine, Thompson."
n?" I asked quickly, thinking of later, the dead look the President they took leave in North Africa.
r worse, Thompson. He has passed long time Winston Churchill just out his room, talking of Roose- ing, reminiscing, smiling, going days, the years; recalling conversa- hing he had done this, wondering been meant when Roosevelt said at; agreeing, disagreeing, reliving. alized Winston could not stop talk- ing—here in the middle of the night—because he could not bear the agony. Now that the great American was no more, it was all a terrible, unbearable loneliness for him.

I remember some of his sentences. "No one realized what that man meant to this country. No Englishman can ever quite know it altogether. They can only half sense it. Perhaps, in time. In later years."

He went over to a dressing table and opened a drawer. He kept his fresh handkerchiefs there.

"He was a great friend to us all. He gave us immeasurable help. We would surely have gone under. Without him and the Americans behind him, surely we would have been smothered. There was just too much." Then he wept, and finally recovered. "I do not know just now, but I will try to fly across the ocean tomorrow. The funeral is to take place at the weekend. I do not know for certain. I must ask the King and members of the Cabinet. There is so much. You will come, of course, if I go?" And he looked shyly at me.

"Of course, sir. Whatever is needed."

"He was loved by millions. Inside and outside the United States. Hated, too, as who isn't who gets things done. I'll be hated. But I'm composed about it. It requires no resignation on my part. I'm sure it took none for Franklin.

"I have lost a great friend. One of the greatest ever. And now"—and here the pacing slowed and he went into deep thought—"we have to start all over again. And it is Friday the thirteenth!"

In the evening of his life and work (his eightieth birthday is November 30, 1954), I hope that the peoples of the world will long remember him as the one who, when all seemed about to crack, hung on; that his eloquence and his determination and his honest endeavor to keep this world together, and keep it right, did vitally help bring us through to victory in Europe.

Alfred North Whitehead said once, "Churchill is a better Prime Minister flat on his back in bed with pneumonia than any other man in England up in his boots."

OUR READERS WRITE US

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 8

he front section of the book. As you w, the Arab is noted for his hospi- ty, and no visit, however casual, is r ended without tea and coffee being ed the guest. Very truly yours, CONNIE B. RIDGEWAY

e Made It!

Houston, Texas

Dear Editors: Polio laid me low forty rs ago. It added to my burdens that parents were lovingly reconciled to ing their crippled, old-maid daughter manently on their hands. My ways ttempting to be "marriageable" are the methods I would employ in my ater wisdom, but they sufficed at the e and our marriage has been beauti- and satisfying. I still prepare break- for my husband and eight-year-old with thankfulness in my heart.
Yours very truly,
(Name withheld)

rican King

Kampala, Uganda, East Africa

Dear Mrs. Bass: My husband and I e recently invited by the King of nyoro to spend a week at his palace in ntral Uganda. This was the week that ruler celebrated his thirtieth anni- sary of accession to the throne.
Bunyoro is the oldest kingdom of ntral Africa, with 1200 years of excit- history behind it. In olden days its gs were all-powerful and ruled with a d and cruel hand.
We were fortunate to see what re- ins of the old tribal glory, for although Kingdom of Bunyoro is no longer verful, and modern civilization has ught many changes, the king himself clings to his old tribal customs with ubbornness that is unique in modern ica. The ceremony to which we had n invited was a re-enactment of his ginal coronation.

When each day's symbolic ceremony was over, the King of Bunyoro shed his pagan personality and became once more a modern man in a modern world. The transition was amazing. He would leave us, magnificent in his bark-cloth robes and return again a few minutes later, wearing an immaculate white suit, tie and highly polished shoes. Then he would sit with us on his balcony, a grandchild on each knee, and watch the dancing of his people. He spoke with us, in perfect English, of the past history of his kingdom and of its future too.

His queen the Omuga spoke only a few words of English and I knew no Bunyoro at all, which, to a stranger, seems to consist mostly of gutteral sounds and long drawn-out "mmmmmmm's." And yet, as we had many interests in common, we did not find it difficult to understand each other.

She was curious about people of other lands, and through a translator asked me many questions about our lives in America. And for a woman who until only a few years ago wore the simple costume of her country—robes of pounded bark—I was surprised to learn that she had a great liking for our Western style of dress. She admired the cottons that I wore and took pride in showing me the wardrobe she had taken with her to London when she attended the Coronation of another queen—Elizabeth II of England.

But my biggest surprise came when she showed me her treasured copy of the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL from which she studied the current fashions. It was given her by an American missionary two years ago. Then she turned to a page of Wilhela Cushman's and pointed out a dress that she herself had copied—the dress she wore to England to meet the queen! Very truly yours,
JINX WITHERSPOON RODGER

"There seems a magic in the very name of Christmas"

A magic that stirs remembrances of the blended perfume of many sweet and spicy odors; of popping corn and fashioning it into endless chains for the tree; of pulling taffy, polishing apples; of knitting a mitten just right for snowballing; of sampling each batch of cookies as it comes from the oven; of laughter, song and whispered confidences; of warmth and the happiness of Christmas.

Christmas Fun in the Kitchen

The kitchen door says "Merry Christmas" with its gay frosted ginger-cooky wreath and the cookies the children made.

LA G. SHOUER

CH Christmas as your children grow ıp has its own and special memories.
: missing a great slice of joy if you ɔuild some of those memories right kitchen. Even the littlest one can share in making cookies and wrapackages, if it's only to put a finger ribbon while you tie the bow. You ıelp getting that Christmas feeling, l-over warm isn't-it-wonderful feel-atching a child squiggle frosting on erbread star—his star, his offering birthday Child.

ɔon't be too busy this year to have 'un in the kitchen. Christmas is still l weeks away and friends will cherish ıemade, family-made gift. If you ıave time to run the whole gamut of mas-food giving, concentrate on one things you make especially well.

the least of the charm of homemade-gifts is the originality you show in ting them. I'll lead you on with some tions and ideas. Then put on your ıg cap and dream up some of your You'll be surprised how much fun

v for some good things to put in the ges. It wouldn't be Christmas withaking at least one kind of homemade Anyone would love to receive a or so of

CHRISTMAS CARAMELS

ne in a large heavy saucepan 3 cups
-and remember beet sugar makes just nderful candy as cane sugar—2 cups
ream, ¾ cup light corn sirup and ½ teaspoon salt; cook slowly on medium heat to soft-ball stage (236° F., if you have a thermometer), about 20 minutes. Add ⅓ cup butter or margarine and 1 cup light cream alternately in five additions, beginning and ending with butter or margarine (do not let mixture stop boiling), stirring constantly. Continue to cook slowly to hard-ball stage (252° F.), which takes about 25 minutes. Remove from heat and stir in 1 teaspoon vanilla and ¾ cup broken walnut meats. Pour into lightly greased 9″-square pan. Cool completely, then turn out on a board and cut with a sharp knife (using a sawing motion) into 1″ squares. Wrap each square in cellophane or aluminum foil or plastic-film wrapping to keep it fresh. Makes about 2½ pounds.

There are four kinds of cookies in our cooky train. Ann Batchelder gives you some to choose from in The Party's On! on page 64 and here's the one in the center coach—simple, easy to make by the dozen.

FILBERT DIAMONDS

Mix 4 egg yolks with 1 cup sugar without beating. Grind ½ pound (1½ cups) shelled filberts and add to yolk mixture. Chill dough. No, there's no flour in this recipe. Roll out about ⅛″ thick between sheets of waxed paper, working with a small portion of the dough at one time. Cut out with a small diamond-shaped cooky cutter. Place on greased baking sheet and top with filbert halves. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., 10 minutes. Makes about 85 small diamond-shaped cookies (2′ long).

For friends not quite so appreciative of sweets give something sophisticated—maybe these before-dinner pickups called

CONTINUED ON PAGE 136

Merry Making

Cooky express. Fill a cardboard train (available in card shops for displaying your collection of Christmas cards) with Christmas cookies, a different kind for each car.

Bake your favorite fruitcake in tiny pans—wrap and heap in a salad bowl, handy by the front door—nice to give to parting callers.

A wire lettuce basket prompts a gift idea. Enamel it green. Line with a gay, colorful napkin. Fill with almond schenkle (miniature almond doughnuts) or Christmas cookies. Tie the handles shut with ribbon and tuck in a gay spray of gilded spruce and cones.

Make a Christmas-breakfast coffee bread for each of your next-door neighbors. Wrap on brightly colored breadboards with clear film.

Inexpensive miniature picnic hampers, sold for purses, take to paint and a greeting. Ideal toters for snacks for a special friend.

Remember the friends who rave about your salad dressing with generous samples in inexpensive, corked flasks given a sophisticated holiday touch with rickrack, tiny bells and sequins.

Jolly jelly. Make saucy Santa caps of red paper and cotton for jars of jam or jelly. Use notebook reinforcements and cotton for the faces

Sugar-plum drum. Coffee cans become enchanting toy drums to fill with homemade candy. Paint blue. Trim with red-and-white pressure tape. Stretch letter paper over the top.

A wreath that tastes good. Cut a 10″ circle out of rolled ginger-cooky dough—have it thicker than for regular cookies. Cut out center with sharp edge of an opened fruit can. Bake on greased cooky sheet. Frost with icing, decorate with candied fruits, marzipan and silver candies.

No gift expresses "Merry Christmas from our home to yours" more warmly than a gift of food.

STUART

Coconut-cooky mittens in all sizes and frosted ice-cream cones to fill with candy and hang on the tree.

ONIONS IN THE STEW

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 55

and the Jackie Coogan doll he won at a carnival when he was ten years old in Council Bluffs, Iowa.

This was during World War II and in Seattle, where we lived, there weren't any houses for rent and none for sale for nothing, which is what we had. We did like the country, it is true, but we would gladly have moved into the police station if it had been for rent furnished. You see, in addition to no money, we had no furniture.

In the Pacific Northwest, there are several hundred islands, varying in size from small enough to be cuddled in the crook of your arm to over a hundred miles long. Not one of them, no matter how small, has that forlorn, discarded floating-paper-cup look so often associated with the word "island." These are young, virile, heavily wooded. Five of the larger islands are within commuting distance of Seattle. They are all ringed with beaches and homes, mostly summer, some of which probably could be rented, we thought. But when we tackled a real-estate agent, he treated us as if we were inquiring about the Pribilof Islands and had demanded a snap decision as to the exact number of female seals in residence that year.

That is why we finally decided to look for ourselves.

We investigated Bainbridge Island first because I used to visit there when I was a little girl and had pleasant memories of large, well-furnished houses with inside plumbing, electric lights, even grand pianos, all owned by darling people who would undoubtedly not only let us move in but would probably not let us pay any rent. All the houses, I remembered, had orchards with yellow plums, sandy beaches with clams and gardens with bulbs.

I said, thinking of my happy childhood, "And the ferry ride takes forty-five minutes."

The ferry ride did take forty-five minutes. When the ferry docked we started looking for a real-estate office. We found one, and the proprietor, Mr. Haggerty, was so pleasant I had to go out and look again to be sure the office sign did say "Real Estate." Not once did Mr. Haggerty say "There's a war on," or "Say, are you crazy?" but only that he didn't have much to rent because of a shipyard operating on the island. "I'll be delighted to show you what I have, though," he said, getting some keys out of a drawer.

What he had was one large, thin-walled summer house, miles and miles and miles from the ferry, a store, a school or another house. It had no electricity and the bathroom was on the back porch. The house did have a fine view of the Olympic Mountains, a sandy beach, four bedrooms, adequate beds and sagging wicker furniture and it was for rent for $60 a month. Don wanted to take it at once. But I, who had lived without electricity or friends and with the toilet outdoors, stood firm.

The only other place for rent on Bainbridge, Mr. Haggerty told us, was much farther from the ferry, had no lights either and was at the foot of a steep cliff. "It's easy to get to at low tide," he said. "But the rest of the time you'd have to use the steps and I wouldn't trust 'em. They're about forty years old."

"Let's go see it anyway," Don said, assuming a lifetime-lease look. I stiffened and got tears in my eyes and Mr. Haggerty winked and said he had forgotten the key.

WE were invited to spend the next weekend on Vashon Island. The Havers, whom we visited, had a charming house right on the beach, the tides were perfect for clamming, and Saturday night as Don and I lay in bed on their porch, listening to the slurp, splash, slurp of the waves against the sea wall, and watching the ferry gliding across the moonlit water, we decided that this was the perfect place. The beach was rich with clams and driftwood. The water was filled with salmon, sole, cod and Spanish mackerel. The soil was so fertile that syringa and alder grew twelve feet a season. The climate was almost ten degrees warmer than that of Seattle. And it was walking distance from the ferry.

The next morning we told George Haver, "We like this place. This exact spot. We want to live here."

George was glad that we liked his beach, but very discouraging about our finding anything to rent or for sale for no money. He explained that all the people on that particular beach had been coming there for thirty-five years and, even though there was no road and they had to walk in by the county trail and bring in all their provisions and possessions by boat or by wife, they were all very attached to their houses and never rented them. We were so downcast by this information that he took us for a boat-ride around the point.

In the course of the ride he said, "As long as you're disappointed anyway, I'm going to show you a house that will spoil you for any other beach house."

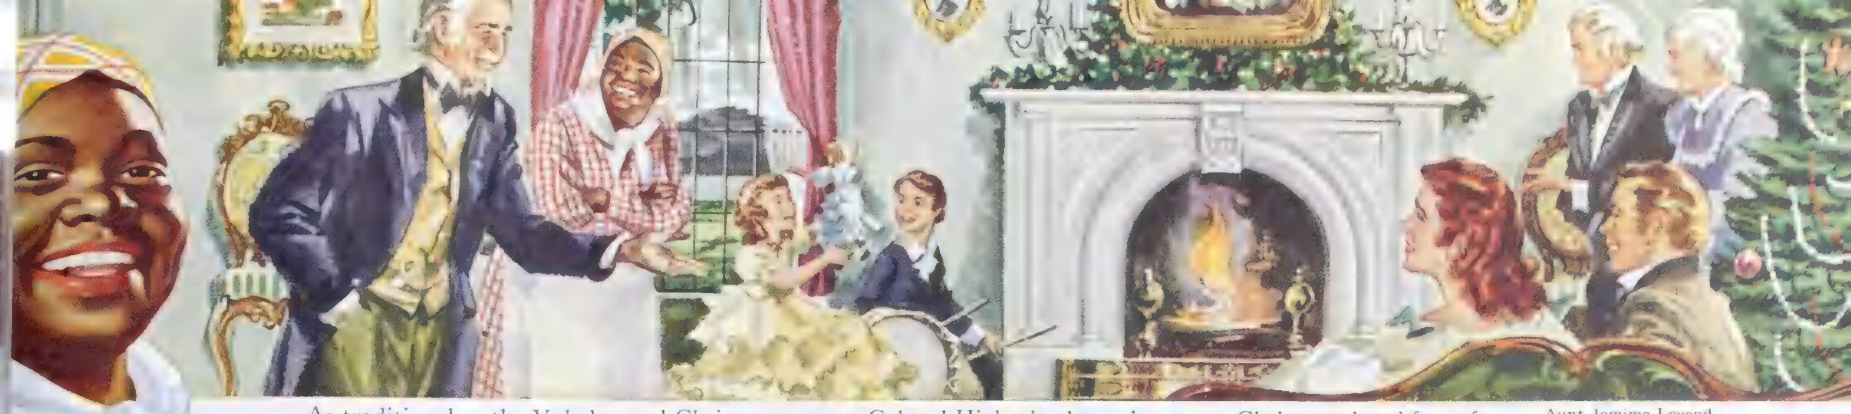
He steered the boat to shore, pulled it up on a log and we climbed a small winding path to the house.

He had told the truth. It was the most attractive house we had seen and it certainly did spoil us for all the sagging built-by-grandpa-designed-by-the-cat structures we had seen and were to see. Unfortunately, the Hendersons, who were living in it and who had bought it from the doctor who had built it, were very happy here.

"We are going to live here forever," they told us smugly, while I looked around me and wondered if the Seattle Public Library had anything on well poisoning.

The house, snuggled on the lap of the plump green hillside, was built of hewn fir timbers. The roof was hand-split cedar shakes, each shake at least an inch thick. The rain and the salt air had turned it all a soft pewter color. The kitchen, which was small, had knotty-pine walls with a bricked-in electric range and a trash burner across one corner. Against the windows which looked at Mt. Rainier over an enormous window box filled with pink geraniums was a Flemish-blue drop-leaf table and four stools. The drainboard and inside cupboards were the same Flemish b door was pine planks put down with pegs and calked. The living room opened from the kitchen by a swing half door, was about forty feet long. same plank floors, an enormous sto place that went up two stories, a sma stairway leading to a balcony from opened three small knotty-pine bedroo a bath. At the south end of the balc the master bedroom, which had a ceiling, pine walls and a fireplace with hood. In all the rooms were hand rugs and lovely pine furniture made doctor. There were two patios, one kitchen, one in the angle of the ell fo the master-bedroom wing and the livir made of rounds of cedar with flowers in between. Around the south patio rockery filled with heather. Above it or was a gnarled old apple tree. The ground the apple tree was carpeted with blu and yellow tulips. Across the front house and accessible from the living r French doors was a rustic porch over the water and the sandy beach and fa Rainier.

IT was the house we had dreamed of But it definitely wasn't for rent or for we said good-by to Vashon.



Then my sisters Dede and Madge fo rented a small beach house on Quarte Harbor at the other end of Vashon Isl the next few weeks each Saturday mo would load the car with groceries, dren, Tudor the dog, mother and her ing things, bathing suits, sun-tan oil pounds of ice because the house had t of icebox, and go to Vashon.

We had a wonderful time. The wa warm for swimming. There were hug

CONTINUED ON PAGE 112

D. B. A. AND CO., LTD.—"THE BEST CARTOONS FROM PUNCH"

As traditional as the Yule log and Christmas tree at Colonel Higbee's plantation was a Christmas breakfast of Aunt Jemima's pancakes. Light, tender, famous for flavor, they were a perfect start for a day of merriment.

Aunt Jemima Legend

u can't duplicate it in a homemade batter; you don't get it in any other mix . . .

e matchless

4-flour flavor of Aunt Jemima pancakes

FOR THE FINEST BUCKWHEATS get Aunt Jemima in the YELLOW box

The treasured Aunt Jemima recipe combines 4 flours in a special way. Wheat flour for lightness, corn for tenderness, rye for richness, rice for browning quality. This 4-flour blend gives Aunt Jemima pancakes a flavor no others can match.

AKES

emima
e regung Deon the erve in ee. Ben pand crane and utter, been erwith mixer.
plenty ges.

to eill's Club dio eekdays

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 110

piles of driftwood for beach fires. There were the mingled smells of fresh coffee and salt air. And there was sleep refreshing as only a sleep induced by too much sun, too much swimming and too much food can be. Don and I became revitalized and renewed our efforts to find a place on Vashon on the water.

We looked at large thin-walled houses without electricity and with a bathroom on the back porch; we looked at houses at the bottom of cliffs; we looked at crumbling houses furnished in sagging wicker and discarded pottery. Don and I got so that we could tell by the kind of fern in the abalone-shell hanging basket what the inside of the house was going to be like.

After we had finished Vashon we went to Camano Island. We looked at Manchester on the Olympic Peninsula. We drove to Tacoma and Everett and even went clear up to the San Juans with the idea that if we should find "the place" perhaps we could manage with mother until the war and our jobs were over.

Then one morning I was in a restaurant drinking coffee and dispiritedly leafing through the want-ad section of the paper when I saw what appeared to be an advertisement of the Hendersons' house on Vashon. The ad said, "Lodge-type log house, huge stone fireplace, 400′ of sandy beach, for sale—$7000 furnished."

I called Mrs. Henderson at the office where she worked and she told me that it was their house. That her husband had been offered a wonderful job in California and they thought he should take it. I made arrangements to go over the next weekend. My hands were shaking as I hung up the phone.

The next Saturday as we swung along the trail, I told Don that I just knew we were going to get the house. "I just feel that it was meant to be," I told him.

Don, who is Scotch on both sides of his family, is not exactly an optimist. He said, "Quite a bit of erosion along here."

But the house was for sale and the Hendersons had got the place from the doctor who built it with no down payment because the doctor had to go in the Navy, and they were willing to sell it to us the same way. We were to pay $150 a month until we had established a down payment, then we would go to the bank and have it refinanced. We were all terribly casual and gay, made more so by the fact that we none of us had any money, didn't want the others to find it out and I kept my hand over Don's truthful mouth at the right times.

Anyway, we made arrangements to come out the next weekend with two payments (which we intended to borrow) and the house would be ours.

"You see," I told Don on the ferry on the way home, "it was meant to be."

Don said, "That ramp isn't down far enough." He pointed at the cars bouncing onto the ferry, each one denting its exhaust pipe because the dock hand hadn't lowered the ramp far enough, which he still doesn't.

It is not the dawdlers and triflers who find life worth living; it is the steady, strenuous, robust workers.

—CHARLES W. ELIOT: The Happy Life

If, as I have, you have ever said in a rather superior way, "I simply will not allow things to dominate my life; I keep my possessions down to a minimum"; if, also like me, you have nurtured the mistaken impression that you have kept your possessions down to, say, one package of corn plasters and a few first editions, then you should move to an island. Try mixing that minimum with water and see what you have. My box of corn plasters turned out to be three old trunks minus handles, filled with clothes and/or ingots; stuff out of ten medicine cabinets; assorted boxes of canned goods, vases, dishes, records, pictures; and thousands of loose items such as pillows, pots and pans, record players, bamboo rakes, lamp shades and dog beds. My few first editions, supplemented by the contents of the trunk of Don's car, were mistakenly left to rise in the moving van overnight, and when we unloaded them at Vashon they had swelled into eighty-seven cartons filled with lead.

This was October. My sisters Dede and Madge had married and left home, and mother was to live with my sister Mary while her husband was overseas, so I got the washing machine, the encyclopedia and mother's portrait.

I PACKED. I started out very methodically. "Books—reference" I marked on the outside of a carton. "Sheets—towels" I marked on another. "Silverware" another. When Don attempted to help I said kindly but firmly, "You had better let me do it, dear. I know exactly what I am doing and I want things to be orderly."

"Draperies—living room" I wrote on a neat newspaper bundle. "Candles, vases, bric-a-brac" I marked a carton. Then somehow I began running out of enough of the same thing to fill a box—also out of boxes and newspapers—also out of strength. By the end of the day I was rolling a jar of mayonnaise, a heel of salami and a half-filled bottle of perfume in my tweed skirt and not even stamping the bundle "Perishable."

Next came getting the things to Vashon. My sister's husband borrowed a moving van, Madge solicited an unemployed musician to drive it, Don and the children and I loaded it and the car and we were off. One last sentimental look at the old brown house revealed that we had left mother's portrait, the box of old medicines, the skis, and Tudor the dog, who didn't care for cars and kept oozing in one side and out the other. The rearranging to get these things in took just the right amount of time for us to miss the ferry and wait an hour on the dock. Also, just as we turned onto the West Seattle Viaduct, Tudor reared up, put his paws on Don's shoulders and threw up down the back of his blue cashmere sweater. Don groaned and looked accusingly at me. He couldn't do much else because the traffic is always very heavy on the viaduct and a sudden stop or swerve might mean being squashed by an oil truck, and I certainly didn't want gasoline all over my clean jeans. Crowded in the front seat with Don and me were the two girls, the portrait, the elk antlers and a lot of strained silence. When we got to the dock at last I carefully maneuvered the sweater and T shirt over Don's head and substituted a red sweat shirt still warm from Mrs. Miniver, the cat. Tudor watched the operation reproachfully, the girls giggled behind their hands and Don's expression, to put the kindliest interpretation upon it, was rage suffused with despair spread thinly over a boiling caldron of desire to commit wificide and dogicide.

THINGS were really not going too badly, however. We had intended to get the ten-o'clock ferry, but as is usually the case with expeditions of this kind, we weren't even packed by ten. The ferry we had just missed was the two-thirty. Of course everybody was starving and the little store on the dock had only a gum-ball machine and a few candy bars so stale the chocolate had turned to silver and the peanuts tasted like peach pits, but we all ate with gusto, even Tudor, who, the girls felt, should be rewarded.

"For what?" Don asked grimly.

Harris, Madge's musician, was sleeping in the van, so we didn't bother him.

The day was lovely—hazy with a sun like a marigold. The tide was going out and the wet sand by the dock steamed faintly and gave off a nice seaweedy smell. "Wood will certainly be no problem anyway," I said cheerfully, pointing out logs in huge jackstraw heaps along the shores on either side of the dock.

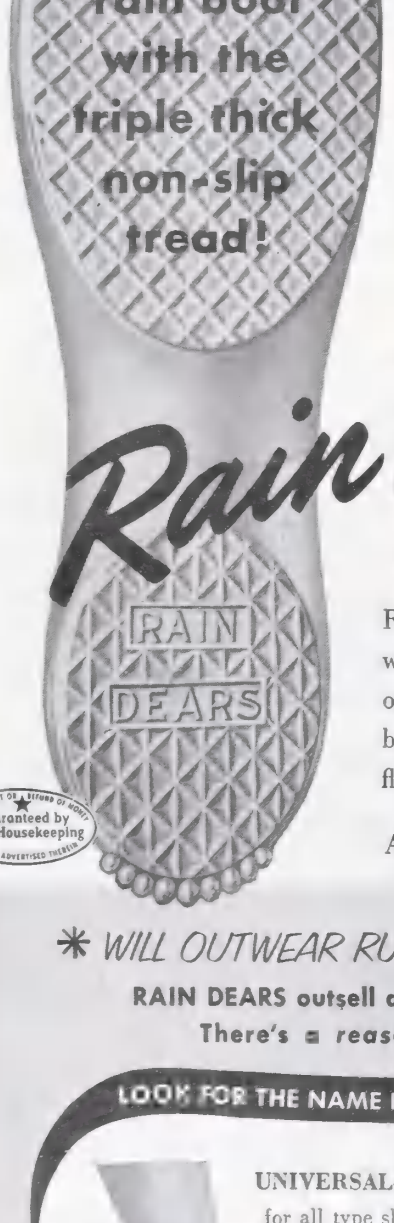
"I like wood that is already sawed," Don said unenthusiastically.

"Over at Marilyn's summer home we gathered bark," Anne said. "Even when it is soaking wet it burns keen."

"Remember those creosote logs we got at Dede's," Joan said. "There's a nice little fat one. They weigh a lot but they make a hot fire. Let's get it, Don."

Don said sternly, "One of the first laws of the beach is that anything on your property belongs to you. The man who lives in that green house is probably counting on that nice fat little log for his fire tonight."

"Darn!" Joan said. "It's just the right size."



"If there are creosotes on this side there are probably some on the other," Don said.

"But the tide will be high on our side," Joan said. "We're right across from here."

So Don explained about the tides and he apparently knew what he was talking about because he used words such as "lunar," "barometric pressure," "coastal configuration" and "tidal bore," but I only half listened as I am very well satisfied with my conception of the tide situation, which is that every twelve hours somebody, perhaps the man in the moon, pulls the plug and lets out some of the ocean. After a while he turns on the faucet and fills it up again. If he is in a hurry we have a tidal wave.

The wash from an aircraft carrier suddenly began pounding the shore. Because the tide was out the waves slapped the flat beach with a tremendous noise like giant handclapping. The old dock trembled and Tudor barked. Anne and Joan laughed and shouted and the day lost a little of its grimness and took on more of a holiday aspect.

Then the ferry came in and Don bought our first commuter's ticket: car and driver, ten rides for $3.70—passengers 10 cents each. To

FOR RAIN, SLEET, OR SNOW PERFECT PROTECTION!
FASHION PERFECTION!

Rain Dears

DE LUXE (by LUCKY) ®

RAIN DEARS are 100% fully molded, with no seams to come apart. So light on your feet, and so smart on your feet, but sturdy, too! Transparent for extra flattery. About.....$2.00

Also available in smoke.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

✳ WILL OUTWEAR RUBBER BOOTS TREAD

RAIN DEARS outsell all other plastic rain boots
There's a reason—they're best!

LOOK FOR THE NAME RAIN DEARS ON THE BOX.

Extra reinforced back • Triple thick, deep sharp tread

ASK FOR THE GENUINE—ASK FOR RAIN DEARS.

At shoe, notion and rainwear counters everywhere

Los Angeles | LUCKY SALES CO., INC. | New York • Chicago

90 cents for a car and driver—passenger—a commuter's ticket ioned, I believe, that our new, er-colored dream house had no od the civilization-ridden neigh-ith of us did have a road. They at was steep and rutted and two hundred feet from the y let us use it. They also let us oats and an outboard motor.

s tied all the boats together and
hem. Harris insisted on steering which was unfortunate, as he ed with the idea that we were rom Vashon to Seattle and kept sea, chairs, books and pillows vake.
igh confused, was eager and nightfall we had most of the wall, a few things in the house g machine in one of the boats. I dinner, but he pointed out that inches of beach left before high id him and he slithered off, the ldly at his narrow back.
staggered wearily up the path to ew house, which was as cold as ed high with junk. While Don ilt roaring quick-dying carton sh burner and the fireplaces, awed feverishly through boxes food. The night before I had and a pot of beans and had tuff for salad in a damp dish everything will be ready and g day," I told Don. But where y certainly were not in this old es—or this one of vases or almost an hour of fruitless ded that they might still be on ook Tudor and a flashlight and my neck, my back, my arms, y palms ached and with each h little jagged pains ran down

I still experienced a wonderful rity as I realized that this was was going down to look for our wall.
down to the sea wall I had an-emotion as I listened to the against the wooden pilings and e tide was in and so those were ause Mr. Henderson had ex-owned the tidelands too.
light over the heaps of boxes oing that I had marked the box
if I hadn't, in some mysterious ould make its presence known.
didn't so I called Tudor.
" I said kindly. "Here Tudor, his wont, absolutely ignored sy sniffing a rock. "Tudor," I ply. Instantly he flattened him-nd, buried his head in his paws blow.

ed my voice again. "Tudor, old food! Good food! Find it!" I of boxes and trunks.
d at me suspiciously, then ran the house. He wasn't any help, en me an idea. I began sniffing elf. It was hard to get a true above the salt water and the mill whose rich rotten-cabbage en in on the south wind but I e package of food. It was un-reference" and "Draperies—

g pine table in the north corner om, but we ate clustered around oths around a porch light. Oc-here are chilly and we were all and Joan washed the dishes in Don and I made up the beds.

to find the blankets and sheets I or that short-lived spurt of effiboxes were clearly marked, d linen."
n a bedroom is a very luxurious ing tired feet down into the icy n sheets is not so grueling when e you are looking into a merrily

After we had turned out the lights, Don and I watched the leaping shadows on the pine walls and listened to the wind, which had freshened. Then suddenly we realized that, in addition to the crackle of our fire, the slosh of our waves, the moan of the wind under our eaves, we were listening to rain on our roof.

"It's raining!" I said, leaping out of bed. "The books and records! Hurry, we've got to cover them."

Not even stopping for raincoats, we ran down the path, dragging tarpaulins which we hurriedly tucked around the boxes and trunks. Don flashed his light on the washing machine defiantly spraddled in the rowboat. The waves were almost washing over the stern. "Come on," he said. "We'll have to try and pull the boat up the steps." I jerked on the rope and he jerked on the washing machine and we managed finally to get the prow onto the top step, the stern in the water, the washing machine veering dangerously toward the south. Don tied the painter to a maple tree. I tied my bathrobe cord around the washing machine's wringer and secured both ends to the oarlocks. We stumbled back to bed.

The fire in our fireplace was only coals, but it was still comforting and delightful, especially after the chilly interlude on the sea wall in the rain.

From far across the water a freighter tooted. The rain on the roof sounded like millions of birds' feet. I said to Don, "Isn't it wonderful! Here we are all together at last."

Don said, "Unk." He was very tired. With a snap, the last piece of wood broke apart. The glow from the fireplace was very faint now. The noise of the Sound, less of the slurp, slop, splash and more of a rhythmic thrummmm, like a drum roll, showed that the waves must be pretty high. Heavenly sounds, I thought sleepily.

Then above the wind, the rain and the surf I thought I detected a heavy groaning scraping noise.

Your gentle touch tells him how much you love him, makes him feel warm and secure. He depends on your wise care to keep him comfortable and contented

Love him wisely, protect him from every hurt

His baby skin really is thinner than yours

You are his whole world

You clip his tiny nails often—soft as they are, they might scratch and hurt his sensitive skin. You can add to his skin comfort too, by choosing a bathroom tissue that is "tender-skin" soft. The new ScotTissue is unfailingly gentle to his thinner skin yet it is strong to cleanse neatly and thoroughly without tearing or shredding.

Get several rolls today. The big 1000-sheet roll goes further—it's your best choice for baby, and for the whole family. Another great Scott value.

"ScotTissue," Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

1000 SHEETS—OVER ½ MORE THAN THE 650 SHEETS YOU GET FROM MOST OTHER TISSUES

"Comfy" for baby, economical for the family

Softer than ever...

2 ROLLS OF SCOTTISSUE EQUAL MORE THAN 3 ROLLS OF MOST OTHER TISSUES

"That washing machine!" Don said loudly in my ear. "It's still trying to get away."

We had moved on Saturday. That gave us Sunday to unpack, put away, look around, plan ahead and get wood. Sunday morning when I got up later, tireder than I planned, I found that the washing machine had got away after all. Joan and Don, with their irritating early-morning cheerfulness and 20–20 vision, spotted it riding the waves halfway to Three Tree Point, directly across from us.

"See," they told Anne and me, who, even under normal conditions, have trouble seeing each other, "there it is, right there by that white streak."

"I'm cold," Anne said. "Let's go in the house and start the fire."

Joan said, "Can't you even see the rowboat?"

"No," Anne said, huddling her arms around her.

"You're not trying," Joan said. "Now look right across the Sound at that bare place on the hill."

Don said, "The water's pretty rough out there. I can see whitecaps. Let's row out now before breakfast and try to get it back."

"I'm not going anyplace until I have a cup of coffee," I said crossly.

"I'm not either," Anne said. "Only I'm going to have cocoa. Let's start the fire."

"Ah, come on, mommy," Joan said. "A boat ride before breakfast would be fun."

"Why don't you and Joan go?" I said to Don. "Anne and I will get breakfast."

"Yes," Anne said eagerly to Joan. "You and Don go and mommy and I will have breakfast all ready when you get back."

"We'll all have to go," Don said. "Towing that washing machine in that rough water is going to be ticklish business."

So we had breakfast first, and after my second cup of coffee I became mildly enthusiastic about the boat trip. "Hurry with your cocoa, Andy," I said brightly. "We're going for our very first boat ride."

"Does Don know how to row?" Anne asked suspiciously.

"Of course," I said. "Don't you, Don?"

"Well, I haven't had too much experience with boats," Don said, "but I can manage, I guess."

"Can you swim?" I asked him.

"I would be able to," he said, "if my bones weren't so heavy. I always sink."

I looked out at the Sound again. The water in the middle looked much rougher and several large dark clouds were grumbling menacingly as they shoved and pushed each other around directly overhead. I poured myself another cup of coffee.

"Oh, mommy," Joan said, "we'll never get started."

"This may be the last cup of coffee I'll ever have," I said, "and I intend to enjoy it."

"You may as well pour me one too," Don said, sighing resignedly.

"Well, I'm going down and get the boat in the water," Joan said.

"Go ahead," Anne said. "I'm going to make myself another piece of cinnamon toast."

"Why don't you get one of the neighbors to help you?" I said, peering past the pink geraniums in the window box toward the horizon. "If that speck I see out there is the rowboat with the washing machine in it, it's awfully far out."

"Oh, nonsense," Don said. "Pe across the Sound all the time. It wo long."

"I wish we had life jackets," I sa

"Oh, Betty," Anne said, "don't Joan and I are wonderful swimmers.
probably swim across the Sound.
let's go before it starts to rain again.
toast in the boat."

When we got to the beach Joan h rowboat in the water and was splash up and down in front of the sea wall.
to her to come in and after Don had boat onto the beach with a tremen that sent Joan, who was about to sprawling and lost an oar overboa climbed in and began arguing abou to sit where.

There was a great deal of unnece about my tremendous weight and h on one side with only one of the girl fly weight to balance me, the boat over. This could have been easily sol sitting in the prow, but that was a fa and both girls wanted it. They finally take turns, so that when we were in of the Sound in rough water, they crowded and the oa the boat d ly and kic
the ankles changed se

Don wa adept at
He blame
"damned
keep slipp
the oarlo Joan infor tactlessly didn't h blades str should di
he was r hard with oar and h ting every
She had everythi rowing Dede's would be help him.

Anne that she h everythi
rowing
Washingt
she and rowed the dinghy of Marilyn's fath mous speedy cruiser." She told D dipping too deep, he was holding too straight, but it was all right row so hard with his right oar would turn us around and we where we were going. I, who had b since I was five years old and i had seen all the Washington crew my mouth shut because I have neve this sport and was not anxious to tak
With set lips, Don continued to di and splash toward the washing mach even I was beginning to see clearly.

Like a stout gray lady on an excu it had slid up and wedged itself in t the rowboat, from which position watched our maneuvers to ease alo get the painter. This was not too e water was choppy and the painter w around the washing machine's legs.
tempt to lift the washing machin tangle the rope, Don leaned so hard of our boat we dipped water.

Anne immediately screamed, "We over! We're sinking! Help! Help!"

Joan stood up and shouted, "W everybody, I'm going to get in the ot

I shrieked, "Don't get in the o
Joan! Shut up, Anne! Don, be car
Don said, "Everybody be quiet!" j black clouds above us released larg drops, which began splatting on ou

Joan said, "Please, mommy, let the other boat. I can hand you the

CONTINUED ON PAGE 11

NEXT MONTH

This handsome, charming stranger—she felt an intense longing to push his head under the cold tap. It showed clearly on her face. Robert, watching her, smiled happily to himself. This was going to be livelier than he had anticipated.

What can you do with a man who conspires with your friends and relatives to make your life miserable . . . who is bent on staying although the look on your face plainly says that he must go? Only one thing. And Lucille did it in

THE LARK SHALL SING

By ELIZABETH CADELL

complete in the January JOURNAL, condensed from the novel soon to be published by William Morrow & Co., Inc.

IOW TO HAVE FUN...AND GET THINGS DONE

Wednesday night's a great time to have fun, and still do things in all sorts of places. Meet some folks who've found out how.

. Father's late again. But he's getting all the news from Morgan atty on the car-radio. Mother's listening, too, while she hems a ss in the dining room. Then she'll hear "ONE MAN'S FAMILY"—a habit 's had for 23 years! Mighty pleasant habit, too.

2. Father takes to the basement, to paint an old kitchen chair. He's happy as a lark because Dinah Shore is giving him a private song-recital. Dinah always sings just for Father. At least, to hear him tell it! (And the family just lets him go on dreaming!)

. Mother and Sister never think of dish-washing as a chore, when ank Sinatra's program keeps them company. Brother's gone calling on e light of his life and he's listening, too. The girl friend insists.

4. Brother and his girl are living it up at the soda fountain with friends. Witty Bill Cullen in "WALK A MILE" and wacky Groucho Marx in "YOU BET YOUR LIFE" supply an hour of entertainment (free!).

. Sister's Caller has arrived and they've taken over the living room. ey're listening, at the moment, to a dramatization of an actual news- per story on "THE BIG STORY." The wonderful thing, they agree, is that u can listen to the radio and still do other things!

6. Mother and Father relax in style! First, a visit to Wistful Vista where "FIBBER McGEE AND MOLLY" are the warm and funny hosts . . . then, "THE GREAT GILDERSLEEVE"! After he raids the refrigerator, Brother'll clomp upstairs chortling like Gildy. He's been listening, too.

All in all, you have so much fun . . . can do so much in so many places . . . WEDNESDAY NIGHT on NBC RADIO a service of RCA consult your newspaper for time and station

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 114

Don said, "O.K., Joanie, but wait until I steady the boat."

Nimbly Joan jumped into the stern of the other boat, which was clear up out of the water due to the weight of the washing machine, skipped down to the prow, crawled under the washing machine and fed the painter out the small opening between the wringer and the point of the prow.

I grabbed the end of the rope quickly and yelled at her to "get out from under that washing machine right now!" She did, announcing unconcernedly as she jumped back into our boat, "It was caught on that faucet on the side."

As soon as we started rowing back toward home, the washing machine became unwedged and slid down and leaned over the starboard side, thus making it as difficult as possible to tow. Of course Joan wanted to get back in the boat and try to push it into the prow again, but even Don vetoed this. We finally reached shore, the washing machine defiant and un-cooperative all the way; and when we tried to maneuver it up the narrow trail to the house, it weighed just as much as possible and kept flinging its wringer around its head like a billy club.

When we finally got it installed in the service room, the girls insisted that I test it out. I threw in some dish towels and turned it on and it swirled and swished very efficiently.

Joan said, "I'm certainly glad it works, because I didn't pack anything but dirty clothes."

"How perfectly disgusting," Anne said.

Don said, "I wonder if you'd rinse out a few pairs of my sun-tans."

Anne said, "Of course all my clothes are clean, but I think I'll wash all my summer clothes and put them away."

Joan said, "Can you wash coats in washing machines? Mine has mustard and some hamburger juice on it."

I said, "Before we get too enthusiastic a washing, let's see if the wringer works."

I turned off the washing part and turne the wringer. The rollers began tu smoothly against each other, neatly pre the water out of a piece of seaweed picke on the trip.

"O.K.," I said to Don and the girls. erything's working fine. Bring on your clothes."

Then I reached in to get one of the towels and the next thing I knew I was a the room, lying on the floor, crumpled ag the cement wall, and Anne and Joan bending over me wailing, "Mommy, mo are you hurt?" and Don, who unders electricity, was helping me to my fee saying soothingly, "Probably sand i brushes."

He finished the washing, with Anne Joan and me crouching in the doorway w for him to be electrocuted. Nothing hap except that he took all the buttons off J blouses with a popping sound like sh peas. Afterward he took the washing ma all apart, removed some seaweed and the from the brushes and a clamshell or two the tub. He oiled it but said he could n derstand what had happened, as he coul nothing basically wrong. However, as l we had it that washing machine had the casional rebellious spells, shooting spark the water, grinding things up in the wi even knocking down a devout Ch Scientist who had no fear.

After Don had finished the washing a had all had some more coffee and coc began the unpacking. While I worked I h down rapid decisions on vital questions s "Isn't this my blouse, mommy, you can the inkstain on the collar, see?" . . . "I blouse, Betty, you know perfectly wel Don't you remember, it is the one bought but it was too small so she gav Alison and you took it because Alis taken your checked one and you gav me?" and "Betty, are you going to let t wear all my sweaters? [That was the y girls to wear men's sweaters.] They h ready taken all my sweat shirts." The l wailed plaintively at me from the be where Don was rapidly filling up drawers with his things. I still keep my wear, stockings, girdles, gloves, jewelry nightgowns and scarves in the tw drawers in my bedside table. My sweat shorts share a blanket drawer under on bunks with the bathing suits.

THOSE pictures in movie magazines star's bedroom with a separate clo purses and another separate closet coats make me drool like a boxer do that I would have anything to put in th it would be so wonderful, when wis change purses, not to have to stand hamper and fish around in the top close end of the bathtub where I also kee thousand clean flour sacks (remains o en-farming days—second attempt—o husband) and suitcases.

The next problem was getting our fo into the medium-sized refrigerator. frigerators seem to be designed for peo buy their butter a cube at a time, and the type of shopper that makes the but out, "Here comes Betty MacDonald, A ter get out that big side of beef," I ende I always shall, with a large carton o vegetables outside on the umbrella ta the refrigerator stuffed to the point had to ease the door open to keep the t nicely balanced on top of the milk bott flinging themselves out of captivity. T was enormous and took up a lot o

We had ham and eggs for breakfa ham and potato salad for lunch, ha wiches for supper, but I could still s sandwiches every day, ham omelet at l times, ham and Lima beans Thurs split-pea soup Saturday night.

When we sat down to supper, An "Ham again! Oh, dear! Marilyn's mo fried chicken every Sunday. I wish had fried chicken."

Joan said, "Marilyn's mother takes dren to restaurants all the time—any they want. Sometimes every day."

Even a tiny difference in freshness...

makes a big difference in flavor!

CHASE & SANBORN COMES TO YOU FRESHER THAN ANY OTHER LEADING COFFEE!

True—most coffees are fresh some of the time . . . no matter how they're packed. But only one coffee—Chase & Sanborn—always brings you that extra freshness that makes such a big, big difference in your coffee cup.

The reason is pressure packing. For only pressure packing can pack coffee right out of the roaster, while flavor's richest. Then all flavor-stealing air is replaced by flavor-sealing vapor. Pressure surrounds each coffee grain to lock flavor in! That's why Chase & Sanborn "Dome Top" Coffee is fresher than coffee in vacuum cans or bags.

What's more, you prove it's fresh before you buy! The rounded top of the can tells how. You can't test coffee packed any other way! Discover the wonderful difference real freshness makes in coffee. Try Chase & Sanborn today!

Pressure Packed for fresher flavor!

CHASE & SANBORN COFFEES ARE SERVED BY MORE FINE HOTELS AND RESTAURANTS THROUGHOUT AMERICA THAN ANY OTHER BRAND!

said, "I think Marilyn's mother is aw-utiful, don't you, Joan? She's fun too.
es us around in her green Cadillac and op as many times as we want for ice aid, "Remember the time she took us oon Chicken Inn and let us have two

, and I had three?"
said, "Marilyn's mother has a Filipino
y and she says he is positively useless, oes make good hot biscuits. They have for every meal. Hot ones."
, "I think Marilyn's mother is posieless." I sounded a little hysterical.
e are at war trying to save our democ-
l all she does is ride around in a green and eat hot biscuits. As far as I am d she is a very poor citizen and I wish no more about her."

, gosh, you're crabby," Anne said. "I trying to tell you how nice Marilyn's as everything and you ——"
at my yellow sweater you're wearing,
Don asked.
mean this sweater?" Anne said in abnazement. "This yellow one?"
that one," Don said.
nk this is Uncle Cleve's," Anne said. aid, "It is not. I saw you get it out of rawer over at the apartment yester-re a sneak," Anne said. "A dirty little rossing sneak. All you ever do is spy nd tattle and ——"

will do," I said hopefully.
took my navy-blue sweat shirt?" Don blue? Sweat shirt?" Joan asked.

e just a few things [twelve drawers—oards—three shelves and he was not npacked]," Don said plaintively, "and like to keep them."
said, "I'm sure this is Uncle Cleve's but if you're going to be so darn
'll take it off."
aid, "Does your navy-blue sweat shirt g sleeves and some white paint on lder?"
' Don said.
ham, anyone? Please have some n!" My voice shook with emotion.

came getting the girls ready for school.
pproach to the problem was very sim-merely asked me forty-two times if I three whole sandwiches in her lunch. I d and she said what about an apple—s and she said "Cookies?" Yes. She
y.
s preparation involved first going and despising all her clothes, then the least loathsome things and iron-
, even things as smooth as mirrors.
ldn't allow me to iron them—too care-Joan—too stupid. I let her alone, and to put breakfast on the table. Anne me excitedly. I put down my spatula t into the living room.
was standing by the ironing board, her rkling with excitement and delight.
mommy, isn't he adorable?" she said,
at a large buck standing on the porch n the window. "Just imagine, a real on our porch. Oh, I love living in the It's so romantic!"
enrolled the children in school: Joan eventh grade of the Vashon grade comfortable brown-shingled building ree miles from us; and Anne as a n in the Vashon high school, a large brick edifice about seven miles away.
e school bus the girls had two choices.
de was low they could walk to the rs with the road and go up their the tide was high they had to walk the get on the bus down by the store at . Joan liked her school and seemed to g very well, only occasionally bringing of hiding the lids to the inkwells, a window in the gym, eating somee's lunch; for which misdemeanors she ry unfairly, I thought—kept after which meant she had to walk the three me, usually in the rain. The first time pened I threatened heatedly to go up l and do something. Anne and Joan ighted.

Joan said, "Yes, and you just tell Miss Harwood that the doctor said I have to chew gum."

Anne said, "Be sure and wear your gray suit and explain to her that we are from the city."

Don told me not to be hasty and produced from his past several valiant incidents having to do with his plowing through blizzards on cardboard soles, carrying mush sandwiches, he was so eager to get an education.

Because of my job or weakness or both I never did get up to school until the night of the Christmas entertainment, which was absolutely charming with Joanie singing a solo and a wonderful simplicity of spirit which could be found only in a country school. Even I didn't have enough of the Hun in me to inject an old complaint into such an atmosphere. So on occasion, as long as she attended Vashon grade school and as long as she indulged in climbing out of windows and throwing chalk, and so on, Joan was kept after school and had to walk home. Actually, now that I think about it, it was a very healthful punishment.

Anne immediately loathed her school because: a—it was a school; b—"they sing hymns at noon instead of dancing"; c—it was in the country. So many evenings when I came home from work I would learn that Anne had stayed home with some mysterious ailments. Aching toenails—nonfocusing eyes—pains in her heels. On such evenings I would be greeted with a sparkling-clean house, stuffed pork chops and hot apple pie for dinner, all the ironing done, the beds made. The temptation to keep this little homebody home was almost overpowering. But my conscience told me that I must force her to continue with book learning, especially in view of the fact that she was reputed to have a terrific I.Q.—170 or minus 2. All she apparently wanted was to learn to card wool and make biscuits. Even when I stopped work the following February (fired from job) I had only a little better luck getting Anne all the way to school. If I did get her on board the school bus, with her books and the assurance

Only the Sunbeam®

toasts with RADIANT CONTROL

that gives you the same UNIFORM TOAST whether bread is frozen or fresh, rye or white, thick or thin

See Sunbeam appliances on these great NBC-TV shows: Sunday Night Color Spectaculars, "Ethel & Albert" every week, and HOME, the daytime "Magazine of Television." Consult your local TV schedule.

Give Sunbeam and you give the finest

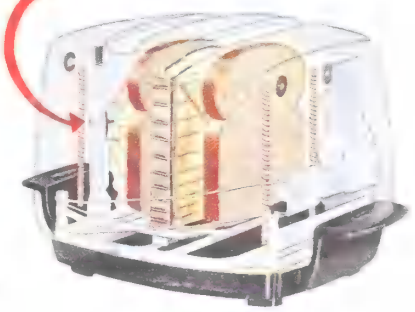
Sunbeam RADIANT CONTROL makes it possible to take frozen bread directly from the home freezer, or at room temperature directly from the breadbox, and get the same uniform results every time. If the bread is frozen it stays down until it is thawed out and toasted to perfection, and only then silently comes up automatically. If the bread is from the breadbox Sunbeam RADIANT CONTROL knows it, and toasts it a shorter time automatically.

Automatic Beyond Belief!

All you do is drop in the bread—

Bread lowers itself automatically, no levers to push

Toast raises itself silently, without popping or banging



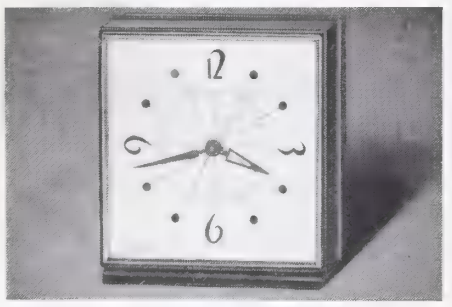
No Levers to Push

ONLY the Sunbeam gives you RADIANT CONTROL that "adjusts itself" automatically to every kind of bread, rye or white, moist or dry. You can take slices directly from the home-freezer and Sunbeam RADIANT CONTROL will toast them a little longer than if they are from the breadbox. You can even reheat a piece of toast without burning. If the slices are thin it toasts them quicker than thicker slices. Get the toaster that gives you COMPLETELY AUTOMATIC operation and in addition RADIANT CONTROL that regulates the toasting automatically, depending on the bread. Ask your dealer to demonstrate the new Sunbeam Toaster.

Only Sunbeam has patented RADIANT CONTROL

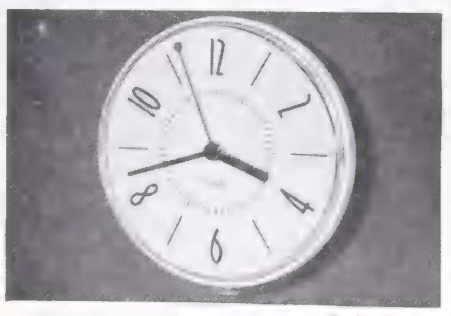
The heat radiated from the surface of the bread actuates the exclusive Sunbeam Radiant Control thermostat.

© SUNBEAM CORP., Dept. 50, 5600 W. Roosevelt Road, Chicago 50, Ill. • Canada: Toronto 9



PITTSFIELD ELECTRIC ALARM. Attractive modern styling in rich wood case. Blond or mahogany finish. Only 4½ inches high. Bell alarm. $7.95. With luminous dial, a dollar more.

4 New Westclox electrics



JUST IN TIME FOR CHRISTMAS GIVING

SLEEPMETER ELECTRIC ALARM. Smart modern case and dial. Only 4 3/16 inches high. Bell alarm. Non-breakable crystal. Sweep second hand. Ivory color. $5.45. Luminous, $6.45.

COUNTRY CLUB ELECTRIC ALARM. Ivory or green case in simple, clean lines. Unique modern face. Pleasant alarm. Guaranteed for a year. $9.45. Luminous dial, a dollar more.

PRIM ELECTRIC WALL CLOCK. Only 5¾ inches in diameter. Non-breakable crystal. Sturdy metal case with dials in red, yellow, white or green. Only $3.98. In sparkling chrome case, $4.98.

Prices do not include tax and are subject to change.

WESTCLOX

Electric Clocks

made by the makers of BIG BEN

La Salle-Peru, Illinois

Products of GT GENERAL TIME Corporation

that her hot lunch was paid for (sandwiches from home were so vulgar), I had no guaranty that she wouldn't go into a decline on the way to school and have to spend the day lying on a couch in the nurse's room.

Joan's way was so much easier. Explaining her A's and B's, she said, "Well, all you have to do is to get a man teacher and be nice to him and then he makes you a checker and checkers don't have to take tests."

As soon as we had the children in school and were reasonably sure they knew where to catch the bus according to the tides, Don and I went back to work. Don had to catch (and that is the right word) the 5:15 ferry in order to be at Boeing's Renton plant, about twenty miles from the dock, at 6:30.

Our schedule then was: up at 4:30 (I'll bet if I have five husbands I'll always manage to find one that gets up at some ungodly hour); Don make fire in the trash burner; turn on oven to defrost the kitchen; Betty make coffee and Don's lunch. I usually set the table and laid out everything the night before. After he had dressed, Don unhurriedly drank his coffee and orange juice, ate his poached eggs, and leisurely lit a cigarette. After the third drag, he would suddenly stare unbelievingly at the clock, leap out of his chair, grab his raincoat, hurl himself through the door into the rain and blackness. I would pour myself a cup of coffee and heave a sigh of relief just as Don, having forgotten to put new batteries in his flashlight or to take his lunch, would come bursting in again.

While he looked for either or both of these things, I went out on the porch and tried to check by sound whether the tide was in or out. If it was out we were glad because he could go by the beach. If it was in he had to take a tiny, slippery, overgrown goat trail through the woods. He was gone again. The clock said one minute of five. Don allowed sixteen minutes to run up the beach, get in his car, start the motor and drive the mile and a half to the ferry. He always made it unless the car wouldn't start, there was a log across the road, the ferry left early or he was out of gas.

At 5:30 I'd fix the girls' breakfast—at least set their places at the table and get out the bread and the toaster and the peanut butter and the cocoa—then I'd go through the icy living room, down a dank passageway to the dark, cold little service room where the shower was. This location of the shower, so handy for swimmers, had seemed adorable to me in the summer. In the winter it seemed like something overlooked by the Marquis de Sade. After I'd checked the floor, the bath mat and the inside of the shower curtain for slugs, spiders, centipedes and wood lice, I would turn on the shower full force hot and let it heat up the room while I ran up and made our bed. About this time I was not spilling over with wild enthusiasm for life on an island. Fortunately, five minutes under the hot shower restored my spirits to normal.

AT 6:30 I awakened the girls, refereed their morning quarrels over underwear, skirts, sweaters, bobby pins, ironing, socks, who did the most work the day before and who was my favorite child, decided with Anne—who was and is a wonderful cook—what we would have for dinner, reminded Joanie—who wasn't but is now a wonderful cook—to be sure and bring up wood when she got home, and checked them both for lunch money and my perfume.

Then I kissed them, grabbed my flashlight and left. It was always 7 o'clock and my ferry left at 7:20 and I should have left at 6:50 and now I would have to run the last quarter of a mile. I wore loafers and woolen socks over my silk stockings, carried my office shoes along with my lunch, purse, current book and grocery list in a large green felt bag.

The county trail from our house to Dolphin Point was narrow, slippery and garlanded with wild blackberry vines which apparently grew four feet every night so they could claw my face and snag my stockings every morning. At intervals nicely spaced between the blackberry vines, spiders had stretched their beautifully woven webs from elderberry to syringa across the path. I tried to catch all the spider webs with my green felt bag, but often missed and ran the rest of the way to the ferry clawing wildly at an invisible veil, complete, I feared, with dots that were alive.

From Dolphin Point on, the trail was better. When I got to the "big tree," an old-growth fir about six feet in diameter, I could see whether the ferry was in, almost in, or going out again. It was from this point that I usually had to run.

My first morning of walking the trail I had plenty of time. I had left the house at a quarter of seven and when I got to the big tree the ferry was still docked at Harper, a small settlement on the Olympic Peninsula and the ferry's only other stop. I made my way to the dock in a leisurely fashion and leaned on the railing. An old sea gull swooped down and lit beside me. He had part of one toe missing, his vest was dirty and he had a face like a Hollywood producer, but I was grateful for his friendliness.

Together we examined the morning. In the east the Cascade Range, including Mt. Rainier and all its foothills, was a purple cardboard cutout, pasted on a pale green sky. The Olympic Mountains were a white-crested wave across the west. The water, a rippleless sheet of foil,

WRAPPING UP SUSAN

By DOROTHY BROWN THOMPSON

Susan has a zipper to fasten up her snow suit.
Susan has a button to fasten up her coat.
Susan has a loop of tape for pulling on each snow boot.
Susan has a knitted scarf to wrap around her throat.

Susan has a pair of gloves, and those are made of leather;
Susan has two pockets, with a handkerchief in one.
Getting Susan zipped and tied and snappered all together Takes a lot of exercise before the job is done!

reflected a single late-blooming star. To the north, the fat little ferry twinkled across the Sound past Blake Island, a small, plump, lonely place without a single light or inhabitant.

It was nearly 7:15 and rosy-faced people began hurrying past me along the dock, their feet making nice, hollow, purposeful clumps on the boardwalk. All the women carried bags containing town shoes. I wondered if I should change my shoes then or wait and do it in a genteel fashion in the ladies' lounge on the ferry. I glanced down at my feet and there between my two brown loafers was a $5 bill.

"It is an omen of good luck," I told the children that night as I stuffed it in the teapot, traditional place for mother, even working variety, to stuff money. It was too.

In the city, as I remember, weather was a topic passed around with the salted peanuts and not expected to hang around much past the introductions. In the country, weather is as important as food and sometimes means the difference between life and death. In the twelve years since we moved to Vashon Island we have experienced the most rain, the driest summer (that wonderful one), the coldest winter, the most snow, the severest earthquake, the worst slides, the highest tide, the lowest tide, the strongest winds, the longest unceasing period of rain, the densest fog, the hottest day, the earliest spring, the latest spring, the coldest summer, the warmest fall, the dreariest winter (this one), the wettest Christmas, in addition to a total eclipse of the moon, a total eclipse of the sun, and a flying saucer on the Oregon coast.

We have also come to expect, in times of great emergency, no co-operation from the elements.

There was that time after weeks of agonized waiting (which included withering looks if we dared to use the telephone in the evenin fear "he" might want to call) when Ann finally asked to the Junior Prom by the boy. She had a beautiful pale blue net dress (borrowed from a friend of Aunt A and Roger, the boy, worked in Beall's G houses, the third largest orchid growers United States, and he had promised h orchid, her first. He assured her it wou "still good." Everything was wonderful! a tremendous sigh of relief the family s back to normalcy, at least our version There were a few tense moments the ni the prom when Anne couldn't decide wh to hide Don and me and pretend she and lived on the beach alone, or whether in T and formal we were to be just lounging a in the background, ready to run down beach and get a log or two if the fire go

Finally Joan, always realistic, pointe that no matter what kind of dumb ideas got, had we forgotten that Don's Tuxed gone to sea with the washing machine an covered with mildew and anyway there girl in her room at school whose moth her clothes off the city dump. Anne to not to be disgusting, if she could help it. A last admonition when she went to dres "Now, when I come downstairs, don't te look nice."

"WE won't have to, because you w Joan said.

"You shut up!" Anne shrieked.

"Can't we ever have any peace?" Do So I turned up the radio.

Anne did look beautiful. The pale blu perfect for her red hair and turquois eyes, but we all kept a stony silence stamped down the stairs, walked ove jerked the orchid away from Roger, wh such a "big wheel," seemed unusually fr apprehensive. After they had gone Joa out her homework (mere gesture) and I the ironing board. Then they were back, bawling, Roger looking miserable.

"The tide!" Anne bawled. "It's high! got his shoes all wet just getting here. you do something?"

"Why don't you walk the trail?" Joan

"You mind your own business!" screamed, because for some strange ado reason walking the trail was a shamefu to her, like picking up coal off the ra tracks.

Finally we quieted her and she wo loafers and carried her shoes, and Rog rowed a pair of Don's shoes (mine woul been a better fit, but pride, both Roge mine, prevented my suggesting it) and his own and they waded through th Anne had a wonderful time at the pro she said that she despised living on an and how would I feel if a ship went by was walking the beach and got my part wet and seaweedy?

Then came Halloween. Anne and Joa invited to a party at the Falcon's Nest, grand place (since burned down) repu have been built by a Chicago millionai Falcon's Nest was on the hill back of us easy walking distance.

"Oh, you are lucky!" I told the girl love to see that house. I hear the garag basement will hold thirty cars."

Anne said, "I wish we didn't have t though. Do you think we'll ever have a Cadillac?"

Joan said, "Everybody walks on Hall dopey. Don't you remember last year w and-treated for twenty-two blocks?"

"I wish we were back in the city," An

I said, "Look at that beautiful moon It's just perfect for Halloween."

Joan said, "Oh, boy, tomorrow Halloween!"

Anne said, "Moonlight on the water me feel lonely."

When we woke up the next morning w having one of our better storms. Winds miles an hour, drenching rains, eno waves that thundered on the beach l guns. As I fixed the lunches and set the watched the rain beading the kitchen w and the wind knocking the geraniums in the window box, and my heart ache

CONTINUED ON PAGE 120

Sally Ross has some Pream cooking secrets for you!

New easy, thrifty way to "cream" your coffee!

PREAM

FOR CREAMIER FROSTING

New Pream recipe makes a rich, easy-spreading frosting without any cooking.

FOR TASTIER DRESSINGS

Add delicious flavor to all sorts of salads with wonderful new Pream dressing recipes!

FOR SMOOTHER GRAVY AND MASHED POTATOES

Make lumpless gravy the pure Pream way. For smooth, rich mashed potatoes, add 1 tbsp. Pream, dissolved in potato water, for every serving.

A DELICIOUS 100% DAIRY PRODUCT IN POWDERED FORM

Not a substitute! Pream is a true dairy product—made entirely from fresh, sweet cream and other milk products—powdered for convenience. Nothing added!

Never sours! Never "turns"! Keeps indefinitely while sealed. When opened for regular use, it stays fresh tasting to the last spoonful on kitchen shelf or in your refrigerator!

So economical! Pream costs about ⅓ less per serving than coffee cream!

Less calories! When you Pream your coffee, every cup contains only about half as many calories as if you used coffee cream.

Instant dissolving! Just put a spoonful of Pream on top of your cup of hot coffee or tea. Stir . . . and enjoy! Get Pream today!

The new way to "cream" it is to Pream® it!

SEND FOR FREE RECIPE FOLDER

New, easy ways to make basic recipes more delicious—plus dozens of other time-saving Pream cooking ideas in the new Pream Recipe Folder. Just fill in and mail this coupon now.

To: Sally Ross, Pream Test Kitchen
Box 959-B, Columbus 16, Ohio

Please send me FREE Pream Recipe Folder.

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ Zone_____

State_____

Pream is available also in the Dominion of Canada, Alaska and Hawaii.

©1954, M & R Dietetic Laboratories, Inc., Columbus 16, Ohio

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 118

was not too unusual, as I have never been exactly joyous in the early hours, often going through an entire divorce and marrying Howard Hughes while I am waiting for the coffee to boil. But this morning my sorrow was for my children. My poor little disappointed children so cruelly imprisoned on this desolate island by my hardhearted husband.

Old Hardheart came whistling in at that point and said cheerfully, "Another hot day."

I said, "I could just cry for Anne and Joan. Tonight's Halloween and they are invited to a party at the Falcon's Nest."

Don said, "They'll just have to wear their raincoats."

"That isn't the point," I said furiously. "It's walking the trail in the rain and their costumes getting all soggy and oh, just everything!" I glared out the window at the storm.

Don said, "Betty, you're a sentimentalist. Children are realists. They probably won't be nearly as disappointed in the weather as you are."

"But they will," I said. "They were counting on the moonlight."

"And it's raining and it can't be helped so they will have to face it," Don said, lighting a cigarette. "Have you ever heard of anybody who amounted to anything who didn't have a few hardships in his life?"

This brings up a point. All books on "Child—the Training of," "Home—Making it Happy," "Others—Getting Along With," and so on, agree that the parents should always be in absolute accord on matters of discipline. This is a lovely thought and would certainly make any home happier, but from my experience and observation it could be possible only if the mother and father were deaf mutes or identical twins.

Take Don and me, for instance. We loved the children. We loved each other. But when a crisis involving discipline arose in our happy little home and it was necessary for us, as reasonable understanding parents, to hark back to our childhoods and try and recall how we felt about the same situation at the same age so we could be fair, we were as far apart as an Eskimo and a Maori.

Don comes from a stern, unrelenting Scotch (both mother and father MacDonalds) Free Methodist ("free" certainly a misnomer) family of twelve children. The stories of his childhood had to do with oatmeal, working twelve hours a day for Western Union when he was ten—or perhaps it was seven—years old, hauling ashes to earn school clothes, church five days a week and hour-long prayers on bony knees every single night. Up to the time of my father's death when I was twelve, my three sisters, my brother and I had experienced discipline of a sort. I say "of a sort" because daddy, though very strict when he was home, was a mining engineer and away most of the time and when he was gone mother was her usual fun-loving, easygoing self and we did as we pleased. After daddy died we really did as we pleased. Exactly. If we didn't want to go to school we didn't (we usually did, though, and a couple of us even had A averages); if we felt like studying, we did—if we didn't, we didn't; if we wanted to stay with friends for two or three weeks, we did, sometimes not even calling up to give our whereabouts; if we wanted to spend our Sunday-school (Episcopal) money for candy, we did. About the only laws of behavior, aside from nice manners, laid down by mother were that we couldn't sulk and we were expected to tell the truth, no matter how appalling. Even when daddy was alive we were encouraged to bring our friends home with us, as many as we liked for as long as we liked.

DON wanted to be "notified" well in advance of guests. He never got used to the nocturnal shrieks and giggles and trips to the refrigerator and lending of his pajamas occasioned by Milly's or Ruthie's or Jeanie's or Molly's staying all night. He just was not used to adolescents; but is anybody?

So the girls, bundled up in yellow slickers, sou'westers and galoshes, went to the Halloween party. The tide was high so we walked the trail, but Don did promise to come and get them in the car at 11:30. We thought the tide would be out a little by then.

When Don and I got home we built up the fire and put Pinafore on the record player. At 11:30 Anne hadn't called and I thought we should go up and get them anyway. Don told me to relax and he'd play some Burl Ives. At 12 Anne called. She said not to come for them for half an hour as they were eating and having a wonderful time. "She sounded excited and happy," I told Don almost tearfully.

He said, "Why shouldn't she have a good time—it's a party," which remark of course opened such an enormous chasm between us that I didn't even see any point in attempting to bridge it with conversation. Especially as it involved the basic difference between men and women and goes way back to date of birth: when the doctor (male) informs the father (male) that he has a son (male) and passing out of cigars and rejoicing can be heard for sixty miles. Then if it is a girl there is a great deal of smiling anyway, being a good sport and talking about next time.

THANKSGIVING was fun. All my family came out. There were fifteen of us and the day was beautiful and everybody loved our house and thought we were so lucky to live on an island that my sister Alison and her husband bought a big old house with five acres and the roof on backward within easy commuting of us (if you happened to be a goat), and my brother Cleve bought a small old house with three acres and the icebox on the back porch, within easy commuting (if you happened to be a goat with a car).

Then came Christmas. Oh, I was glad we lived in the country where we wouldn't run any risks of being tainted by the gross commercialism so rampant in the city. We were going to have a real Christmas, pure in spirit, old-fashioned in execution.

"We will make all our presents and we will have the biggest Christmas tree we have ever had and we will cut it on our own property," I told my noticeably unenthusiastic little family. As I spoke I could hear the ringing of the ax in the crisp winter air, could see the children standing by, eyes shining, while I perhaps hummed a carol or two. Mentally I added popcorn balls, strings of cranberries and gilded walnuts to the festivities.

Anne wailed, "Oh, aren't we going to town for Christmas? I told everybody at school we were."

Joan said, "What do you mean, make our own presents? You mean like those ugly little calendars we used to make in third grade?"

"I certainly don't want one," Anne said.

Don said, "Are you dead set on getting our Christmas tree on our own property?"

"I certainly am," I said. "That's one of the main advantages in living in the country."

"Well, then you'd better get busy on some ideas for decorating a leafless alder," Don said.

"What about those great big firs?"

"Four feet in diameter is a little big even for your taste, isn't it?" Don said.

"Oh, I don't mean using one of them for the tree," I said. "I mean, aren't there some seed

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP AND MANAGEMENT

required by the Act of Congress of August 24, 1912, as amended by the Acts of March 3, 1933, and July 2, 1946 (Title 39, United States Code, Section 233)

Of LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, published Monthly at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, for October 1, 1954.

1. The names and addresses of the publisher, editor, managing editor, and business managers are:

Publisher, The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia, Pa.

Editors, Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar Gould, Hopewell, New Jersey.

Managing Editor, Laura Lou Brookman, Philadelphia, Pa.

Business Manager, None.

2. The owner is: (If owned by a corporation, its name and address must be stated and also immediately thereunder the names and addresses of stockholders owning or holding 1 percent or more of total amount of stock. If not owned by a corporation, the names and addresses of the individual owners must be given. If owned by a partnership or other unincorporated firm, its name and address, as well as that of each individual member, must be given.)

The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia, Pa.

Cary W. Bok, Camden, Maine.

Curtis Bok, Philadelphia, Pa.

Mary Louise Curtis Bok Foundation, Philadelphia, Pa.

W. Curtis Bok, Cary W. Bok and Edith Evans Braun, Trustees of the Locust Trust, Philadelphia, Pa.

W. Curtis Bok, Cary W. Bok and Edith Evans Braun, Trustees of the Swastika Trust, Philadelphia, Pa.

Trustees U/W of Cyrus H. K. Curtis, Deceased, Philadelphia, Pa.

Friends of the Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia, Pa.

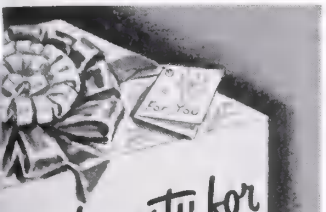
William G. Welsh, New Bedford, Mass.

Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Philadelphia, Pa.

Bache & Company,* New York, N. Y.

Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Beane,* New York, N. Y.

*Held for account of customers



3. The known bondholders, mortgagees, and other security holders owning or holding 1 percent or more of total amount of bonds, mortgages, or other securities are: (If there are none, so state.)

None.

4. Paragraphs 2 and 3 include, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting; also the statements in the two paragraphs show the affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner. LAURA LOU BROOKMAN, Managing Editor.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 27th day of August, 1954. W. C. ZIMMERMANN, Notary Public. [SEAL]

(My commission expires February 3, 1957.)

nore beauty for our gifts with DENNISON GIFT WRAPS

u can make all of your ts more beautiful with nnison Gift Wrappings.
art designs and lovely ors in gift wrapping
bers, matching seals, ds, tags and ribbons.

ok for the Dennison ne on all the gift wrapgs you buy. Then you'll sure of getting the est in quality — the est in style.

gift wrapping ideas,
illustrated book —
OW TO GIFT WRAP — E DENNISON WAY" at ailers or send 25¢ to:

nnison
Manufacturing Company
amingham, Massachusetts

RA INCOME?

RSE! Write to the address l we'll send you details about making offer. No obligation.
S CIRCULATION COMPANY
dence Square, Philadelphia 5, Penna.

FOLDING BANQUET TABLES

on the Kitchen Committee of some dge, Club, School, etc., in your town e interested in this modern Folding able. Write for Catalog and special institutions and organizations.

O. 115 CHURCH ST. COLFAX, IOWA

Relief in ALL
COLD miseries
Tabcin®
BRAND
ATERY EYES
FEELING • RUNNING
RAL ACHES
RRITATIONS
HING • BETTER THAN EVER

ORATORIES, INC., Elkhart, Indiana

lings around? I'll bet you five dollars I can find a pretty Christmas tree on our own property."

"By flashlight?" Joan said. "It's dark when you leave and dark when you get home."

"I'll look on weekends," I said.

The next weekend it rained. Also the next, but as Christmas was the following Friday we went out anyway. We walked along the beach until we could see Tacoma. We found miles and miles of vacant property, all solidly overgrown with alder, madroña, blackberry, syringa, buddleia, elderberry and maple. Sometimes firs or cedars loomed black against the sky but, sans a helicopter, we couldn't get at them. Sunday we tried the hillsides near us. We found a few fir trees, but they were anemic, sallow little things.

Monday morning, Mr. Harvey, a banker who lived around the point from us and with whom I often got a ride to town, asked me if we had got our Christmas tree yet. I told him of our fruitless search. Whereupon he told me that he had some enormous balsam firs on his place, all perfectly symmetrical, and he would be delighted to let us have one. I said that Don and I would be down that night after work. He said he would have the tree ready for us. He did, cut and packaged. It was perfectly beautiful with cones on its thick branches, twenty-one feet tall (the exact distance from the peak of our ceiling to the floor) and the largest tree in the history of the family.

A FERRY acquaintance of Don's who had been a high rigger in the logging camps helped us bring it home and put it up. The family Christmas-tree ornaments, which I had inherited along with the encyclopedia, were not quite sufficient, especially after Don had decorated the upper branches by balancing on one of the beams, snagging a branch with the poker, attaching an ornament and letting the branch snap back and smash the ornament against the wall. We strung popcorn, made stars out of tin foil, gilded walnuts and added three more strings of lights (Vashon purchase) and the tree was lovely.

Christmas Eve we went in to my sister Mary's as we always do. It was raining, but we were very gay with our carload of presents (mostly bought at the Vashon drugstore).

The entire family—at that time only eighteen, now thirty-two and rapidly increasing—was at Mary's. Mary's house looked beautiful and very Christmasy and everyone, filled with a delicious supper and the Christmas spirit, had a wonderful time. Then as we sang Silent Night for the last time Don announced we had only twenty-seven minutes to get the last ferry.

By taking back streets we made it and the next thing we knew we were on our neighbors' sea wall looking down at the tide which was slapping playfully at the top step. The trail was dark with an impenetrable darkness like oily smoke, wet and very slippery. By the time we got home our Christmas presents and our spirits (even mine so homemade and old-fashioned) were like leftover dumplings.

Don built the fires while I put Christmas carols on the record player and made oyster stew. The girls' reaction was tepid.

Christmas morning rain was still lashing the windows and gurgling in the downspouts, but we managed a semblance of gaiety as we opened our partially dried-out presents in front of a roaring fire. The sagging atmosphere was leavened still further by the girls' getting just what they wanted (I believe it was men's sweaters and deep purple lipstick that year) and mother and Alison and her husband, who had been invited to dinner, loyally appearing.

Then came January and the big snow. We are not used to snow in this country, are never prepared for it, and even when it is actually flittering down and the weatherman predicts twelve inches, we keep talking gamely about those winters when the nasturtiums bloomed straight through.

I remember how surprised I was about ten o'clock that morning when I left my office building to go across the street for coffee and found that it was snowing hard—small dry flakes that powdered my hair and were still unmelted when I looked in the mirror behind the coffee urns.

By noon the snow was three or four inches deep on the downtown sidewalks and the radio

Long-wearing full-fashioned Cannon nylon stockings in three proportioned lengths. Cannon 60's are your best buy. You will find Cannon stockings at your neighborhood store. CANNON

KNOX

GIFT CERTIFICATE

for his Xmas

In a quaint Santa Claus that's a little bank, too

. . . this KNOX HAT Certificate in a gay, surprise package

You're certain to delight him, for he chooses the fine Knox Hat he wants. And you'll make his Christmas merry by giving him your Certificate in one of these different, original ways:

In a jolly, old-time Tom 'n' Jerry Mug

In a sparkling ball you hang on the Christmas Tree

In a colorful, smart Miniature Hat Box

Get your Gift Certificate from your nearest Knox hatter $8.50 to $40.00 reported six inches and more in the residential districts. Everyone in the office began calling home.

I tried to call Mrs. Russell, the only other year-arounder on the beach, to ask her to look out for Anne and Joan and keep them at her house until Don got home at four or thereabouts. The operator said the lines to Vashon were temporarily out of order. Every once in a while I went to the window and looked out. In spite of the wind, a thick white curtain of flakes had turned the early afternoon into dusk and made the street lights wan and ineffectual. The roofs of the parked cars on the street below were heaped with snow which was pulled by the wind into peaks like seven-minute icing.

About three o'clock the "big boss" announced that he was closing the office. He said that most of the city buses had stopped running and many of us would have to walk. I tried to call Vashon again, but the lines were still out. I put on my raincoat (white poplin and stylish, but no warmer than cellophane) and galoshes and started for the Vashon-bus stop five blocks away. The wind, apparently fresh off a glacier, had gathered momentum on the north-and-south streets and came whining down between the buildings with an armload of snow that made each crossing a little nightmare of streaming eyes and frozen legs. People were walking huddled with their heads down, their coats pulled around them like bathrobes.

When I got to the Vashon-bus stop, I found most of the commuters already there. Apparently every office in Seattle had closed early. While we crowded in the small doorway waiting for the bus, I heard that the lights always went off on Vashon during a snow, the telephone was already out and probably would be for weeks; the ferries probably wouldn't be running; this looked like a big snow—big snows always caused terrible slides; a wind like this would certainly take out a lot of sea walls.

I became almost frantic with worry. What if I couldn't get to the island? Poor little Anne and Joan would be there all alone. I tried to inventory the supplies we had on hand. All I could accurately remember was a new case of dog food, part of a case of cat food, and two or three cartons of cigarettes.

Then the bus came. We all squeezed on board and drove to the Fauntleroy dock, where we were informed that the ferry was now leaving from another dock in downtown Seattle. We drove back to Seattle and down on to the dock. There was a long line of waiting cars, but the bus had priority and went right to the front.

The ferry finally left at 8 o'clock. The waves were enormous, the ferry creaked and groaned and writhed in pain. In the restaurant where I sat out the trip, the coffee cups slid off the counter and a woman pushed away her apple pie and sobbed, "We'll never make it. We'll all be drowned!"

We landed at the Vashon dock about 9:30. At the store, Bob Russell and I were told the trail was impassable and we would have to go by the beach. The tide, for some strange cooperative reason, was out. We started. The wind was at our backs, but walking on the rocky beach was like stepping on frosty billiard balls and our flashlights were futile against the driving snow. It took us almost an hour to reach the point where Bob lived. He wanted me to come in and warm up a little before going on, but I was too worried about the children. I stumped on. My nylon-clad legs were numb. My face felt as if it had been sandpapered. I recognized our sea wall, but the path from the beach to the house was completely obliterated.

On my hands and knees I crawled where I thought the path should be. I reached the kitchen door just as Don and the children, who had been waiting for me at Russells', came down the steps. They helped me to my feet, dragged me into the kitchen and gave me a big drink of whisky by candlelight.

"The lights are off, the telephone won't work, and the pipes are all frozen," they told me cheerfully.

WE were snowed in for two weeks. At first I was happy because I couldn't go to work and could be with my family. Anne was in raptures because school was closed, Joan loved the snow and Don was very cheerful about hauling water from the spring and wood from the beach.

Then came the second day and cooking on the trash burner without an oven by candlelight lost a little of its hilarity; Don didn't leap to his feet eagerly when I called "Wood" and the girls began quarreling the minute they opened their eyes. At night I dozed off to something murmured by Joan and answered by Anne's shriek, "Mommy, Joan's caught a mouse [or a fly or a spider or a slug] and she's going to put it in my room. Stop her!" . . . Don: "Peace! All I want is a little peace! Do something, Betty!"

By the sixth day I began to wonder what all those delightful things were that I had been planning to do when I stopped working. I had faint recollections of dreams of long country evenings spent in front of a roaring fire reading Shakespeare, each of us taking a part, the way we used to do when daddy was alive; listening to symphonies on the record player, braiding rugs.

People who are late are often so much jollier than the people who have to wait for them.

—E. V. LUCAS: The Phantom Journal (Methuen & Co., Ltd.)

Of course the first drawback was the fi Don's attitude toward the woodpile. If more than two matches going at once to listen to moans about waste and lect not looking ahead. Naturally, durin period the beach was as clean as a pla tide didn't even bring in seaweed.

Another thing was the matter of lig had one kerosene lamp and one ke lantern, but we had no kerosene. We ha a few candles, but we learned that a wi wick even if a candle is three feet tall ar berry. We couldn't play the record pla cause it was electric; I hadn't learned braid rugs; the Shakespeare was in on hundreds of boxes in the back hall (th had only three small bookcases) and t thing I wanted to do was look for it.

WE played bridge—this was not too fun for me as I was the only one wh how and my pupils refused to take m for anything and slapped across the Finally our life boiled down to reading, sleeping, getting wood and getting another's nerves. Even eating lacked tomary fillip, and when I was asked wh fixing for lunch or dinner and I told was almost certain to hear at least one This was partly induced by ennui and by the fact that our only really ample were the dog food, the cat food and of which we seemed to have about a th pounds.

One bleak morning toward the end siege, I was shu around the kitchen plating a casserole dles, cat food and stubs, when Don op mush up to Vashon some supplies.

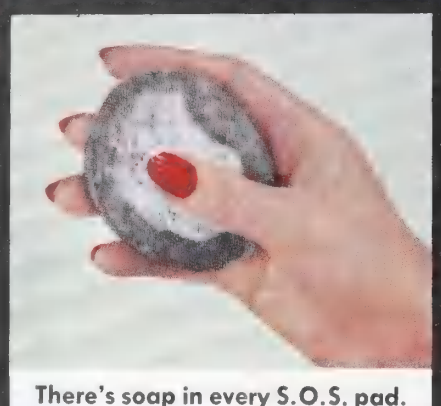
I said I would mak but he told me not t as he knew what we and he was the ju what his knapsack hold and what h bony shoulders could carry. Of course point the girls rushed in with demands solutely vital things such as hormone movie magazines, firecracker-red nai and bobby pins. After a great deal of sion, a few tears and some loose talk a wish I could see my real daddy," D firmly he would not forget the keros would get some candy and gum. He w bobby pins. He would not get movie zines, hormone cream or nail polish. H get the mail. He would not forget the n

We bundled him up and waved him as he crunched down the beach past the which was a frozen waterfall, and the in their white fur scarves, I could alm the enclosing howl of the wolves.

While Don was gone there was a fi tide and for hours and hours Anne a and I filled gunny sacks with bark, them along the beach and heaved them the sea wall. Then we each hauled one up the path to the house. When the fir fireplace was burning hot and bright, only bark soaked in salt water can made a pot of coffee and we each hac

Don came back at dusk with the ke several cans of beef stew, very heavy a ing like dog food; candy, gum, movie zines, nail polish, mail, steaks, baco canned milk, matches, lettuce, coff noodles. He brought the noodles, he s cause, although I hadn't said anyth noticed the supply was getting low.

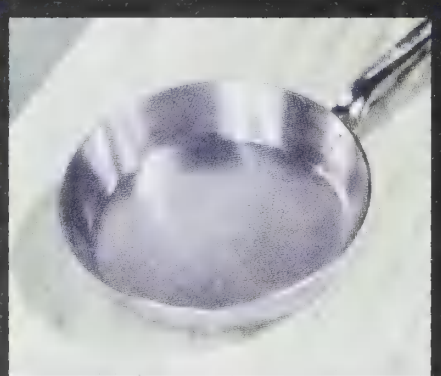
For the first few years after we m the beach, we had only one year-round bor, the Russells. They bought their ho same year we did, and also, as we did, and commuted.



The Russells were neighbors in th old-fashioned, almost forgotten calf jelly sense of the word. A plate never r empty. Tea and cucumber sandwiches afternoon. Half of a fresh cake left kitchen table. Hand-knitted Angora so the girls. Help with a creosote log, broth for the ailing. "I'm rowing to th

CONTINUED ON PAGE 124

See how easily S.O.S® cleans off burned-on food and grease



This is sturdy S.O.S.—an oval pad of interwoven fibers that don't pull apart.

There's soap in every S.O.S. pad. Just wet it, the soap is ready to go to work instantly.

S.O.S. cleans fast. Just rub briskly . . . S.O.S. cuts through burned-on food and grease.

S.O.S. shines as it cleans. Your pans are polished bright with no extra work at all!

The S. O. S. Company, Chicago, Illinois, U. S. A.
S. O. S. Mfg. Co. of Canada, Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

AESAR . . . MEDIC . . . MONTGOMERY

ONDAY FACES that give you a thrilling evening

eart, your nerves, your funnybone for a real workout on Monday The reason? The memorable faces ograms on NBC-TV.

R'S HOUR! Great Caesar's ghost t a mad, hilarious sixty minutes this Caesar . . . master satirist, phoney , unbearable braggart, languid ovable wretch. No wonder this man nour has been called the wit of the ! Don't miss him.

C. Rarely has a program been so and applauded. For MEDIC is nakedly ore thrilling than a suspense thrill- ou think great authors write great ait until you see the plots life writes in these dramatizations of real medical cases! The American Medical Association calls it "dramatic, informative, authentic."

ROBERT MONTGOMERY PRESENTS. Plays that stir you; touch a raw nerve; stay with you. For five years, this series has been one of America's top favorites. This season's plays include new dramas by Robert Sherwood and other brilliant writers, as well as stories you know and love.

And there's so much more on Mondays! Tony Martin and his wonderful songs . . . John Cameron Swayze and his "News of the World." And for night owls, TONIGHT . . . a big, new, late, "live" show starring Steve Allen; every weekday night.

Monday night? Do yourself a favor. Stay home and watch NBC-TV

NBC TELEVISION
A SERVICE OF RCA

and . . . every fourth Monday

"PRODUCERS' SHOWCASE"
A "LIVE" NBC SPECTACULAR

90-minute hit shows with great stars and great guest producers. In black and white, and color.

Check your favorite newspaper for time and channel.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 122

what can I get you?" It is a sad thing that the pace of today's living has done so much to eliminate this graceful way of life. To us the word "neighbor" is a warm tangible thing instead of merely nomenclature for the house next door.

As time went on and their children finished school, other summer people girded up their loins and became year-rounders. Now, even on the stormiest nights, nights when the wind grabs the giant firs and shakes them until their cones rattle on the roof like pebbles, the clouds explode with rain and the waves attack the sea walls like charging bulls, we can look along our curve of beach and count seven lighted houses, seven beacons of friendship.

We didn't meet all the regular inhabitants of our beach for several years as all the boys, one of the girls and many of the men were in the service. During this period some of the houses were rented. Most of the renters were transient, both in location, occupation and attitude, and though we were moderately friendly, I cannot easily recall their faces or their names.

When I say I cannot remember the war renters I am excepting Lesley Arnold, who, in addition to a husband in the Navy and thirty-one coats, including one lined with real leopard and a full back wild mink, had large purple eyes which she kept focused on Don!

It was our first spring on the island. I was painting the porch furniture and humming and being happy and trying not to care that I worked harder than anyone in the whole world and was apparently also going to be buried in my tan knitted suit. I love to do things like painting porch furniture on a spring day, or licking bookplates on a rainy day. I am a true homebody, a domestic woman who will fight a tiger for her children, her man or the last leg of lamb in the butcher shop. My favorite song is "You're Mine, You."

I had just made the discovery that the word "folding" stamped on the bottom of the captain's chairs I was painting meant "with a hammer" when Anne and Joan came bounding in and announced breathlessly that some new people named Arnold had moved to Vashon. "Mrs. Arnold is about your age only awfully pretty with beautiful clothes," Anne said. "She gave us a Coke and they are just moving and her husband is in California so I invited her to dinner. Her name is Lesley and she said we could call her that. She's adorable, Betty, and she's brown and has a perfect figure."

A strange chilly premonition like one of those small unexplained riffles on smooth water swept over me. However, I said, "How nice. What time did you tell her to come?"

"I didn't tell her any time," Anne said. "I just said dinner. What smells so awful—dinner?"

"Turpentine," I said. "I'll call Mrs. Arnold."

A GUST of wind slipped under the newspapers I had spread on the porch, lifted them up and began folding them around the freshly painted chairs like wrappings. "Oh, damn!" I said, slapping furiously at the papers.

"You've got white paint in your hair," Joan said.

Anne said, "What are you going to wear tonight, mommy?"

"I hadn't thought," I said. "But undoubtedly my tan knitted suit."

"What are we going to have to eat?" Joan asked.

"Oxtails," I said. "I've already got them in."

"Oxtails!" Anne wailed. "Why don't we have fried chicken? Marilyn's mother always has fried chicken when she has company."

"But Andy," I said, "I've got oxtails already in the oven. Anyway, they are delicious and I cook them better than anybody."

"But oxtails sound so cheap," Anne said. "And they're so gluey."

"That's the best part," Joan said.

"What else are we going to have?" Anne asked.

"I was planning on having oxtails with carrots and mushrooms, mashed potatoes because the gravy is so good, green salad and that fruit stuff made with bananas and oranges and pineapple and coconut."

"I'll make an angel-food cake," Anne said.

"You can't. Not enough eggs," I said. "Anyway, we won't need cake. Oxtails are filling and fruit is all we will want for dessert."

"Please, Betty, let me make a cake," Anne said.

"Go on, Betty, let her," Joan said. "Only make a devil's food with four layers, Anne."

"If you want to cook, why don't you bake some oatmeal cookies?" I said to Anne. "I think we have both raisins and nuts."

"Sure," Joan said. "I'll help."

"Eat them, you mean," Anne said.

"What time is it?" I asked. "Joanie, run in and look at the kitchen clock."

From the kitchen Joan called out, "Quarter to five."

I stood up and stretched. Anne said, "Maybe I'd better just fix the fruit. I wish we had a fresh pineapple and real coconut."

"It'll be just as good without," I said. "Put some fresh mint in it. I'm going in and call Mrs. Arnold."

Lesley Arnold's voice was husky to that fascinating point just short of asthma. She was easy and absolutely sure of herself. She said she'd love to come to dinner and couldn't she come early and help? With that tiny laugh with which women indicate that they are so well organized they have had everything done since four that morning, I said no but to come early.

She said, "Anne and Joan are so adorable. I do hope they'll be home."

"They will," I said. "They think you are beautiful and glamorous, and can hardly wait to see you."

"The lambs," she said. "I'll be over in a while."

I went upstairs, took a bath, mostly with turpentine to get the white paint off my legs and arms and hair and neck, put on m knitted suit, lots of perfume, heavy jewelry and heavy make-up. When I cam the kitchen Joan said, "Wow, your eye are dark!"

Anne said, "I think you look glam but I wish you'd wear more eye sh A piece I read in a beauty magazine sai everybody should wear eye shadow even daytime."

"Even on the beach?" I asked.

"Of course," Anne said. "I'm goi wear eye shadow with my bathing su summer."

"I'm not," Joan said.

"No, you'll probably wear filth and berry stains," Anne said.

I said quickly, "Joanie, you set the t Anne said, "I'll set the table. Joan make the living-room fire."

Portable Kitchen

Plug-in devices admirably take on cooking assignments for three meals a day, are easy to pack when moving day rolls around.

By GLADYS TABER

SETTING up housekeeping is a wonderful adventure. Home from the honeymoon, unpacking the wedding gifts, hanging the good water color—it adds up to great fun. Best of all, maybe, is the first dinner. The bride anxiously watches that first tentative bite of the shrimp-tomato-rice dish or fried chicken. "Best I ever ate," says he. These young-marrieds had a cubbyhole kitchen (4′ x 7′) but fortunately a good refrigerator and sink. Fortunately, too, the landlord provided adequate electric circuits—an old light socket is not enough for plug-in cookers. With portable appliances they could take on their next move, they were set. For the tiny kitchen they bought an unfinished wood kitchen base cabinet, faced the back with plywood, hinged a drop leaf to it and then mounted the unit on easy-rolling casters. Top was gay red plastic, easy to care for. The cabinet was painted gray like the living room, then spattered red. A blue folding screen was added, to hide kitchen clutter when needed, and on this they mounted menus collected as a hobby. But home-cooked meals are better, says the man of the house! Introduced on these pages are some of the fine plug-in devices now available.

For saucepan cooking, welcome gift for a bride (or anyone) is an electric pan. She dials cooking heat; it stays at proper level. Four-quart size, pan cooks shrimp-rice main dish or steams vegetables. Handsome enough to come to the table with chicken curry for company. Easy on budget for a rib-sticking stew or savory baked beans.

At mealtime screen unfolds to hide sink and refrigerator. Nice touch, right panel can be used like a door to kitchenette. Swing-out drop leaf on cabinet adds casual eating space for two while counter top helps with the serving. Electric coffeemaker brews coffee and keeps it just right.

For baking or roasting, handy homemaker's aid is an electric ovenette. Fresh cherry pie, fluffy baked potatoes or crisply crusted casseroles come out ready to eat. She can cook brown buttery rolls, sweet berry muffins in it, use it for small roasts or for reheating leftovers. It's economical to operate and temperature-controlled.

ure," Joan said. "I'll light the candles. you carry up a thousand-pound t's all this loose talk about logs?" Don n the doorway.

Arnold was so beautiful she made me sick at my stomach. She had large eally purple, eyes, small regular fea- istening white teeth, and hair the unbleached muslin, pulled severely d held with a large tortoise-shell bar- e had on a goldy-brown, sleeveless, hintz dress, cut very low, a gold e sweater, huge topaz-and-diamond and three heavy topaz-and-diamond . Her slender brown feet were in natural-leather thongs. She made just like a hygiene teacher. A hot teacher in an ugly tan knitted suit, g shoes and no husband.

Don, my honest, blunt Scotsman, was so dashing (drooling?) that even the girls were impressed. After dinner some of the beach people came up and we played records, recorded our own squeaky voices and were terribly gay until after three o'clock. Lesley was certainly very, very attractive. At least I thought so until she pushed me up against the refrigerator and said, "I've asked your big handsome husband to walk me home—do you mind?"

"Help yourself—take two," I said, my eyes on the dripping ice tray I was holding.

"Can I have a kiss too?" she said.

"Why don't you ask him?" I said.

By the time Don got home I had washed the dishes, emptied all the ash trays, even vacuumed. (I didn't want anybody getting up in court and saying I hadn't done my share.) Don said, "I hurried as fast as I could."

"Those things take time," I said.

"What things?" he asked.

"Things like kissing Lesley," I said.

"Oh, that," Don said. "She asked me to kiss her, so I pecked her on the cheek."

We were all supposed to go to Lesley's for breakfast the next morning and then to someone else's house for sandwiches. But somehow or another I was making clam fritters at eleven in the morning and hamburgers at four in the afternoon, and in between Lesley took everybody, especially the men, down to her house while I cleaned up the mess and made things attractive again. I was spreading relish on a bun when they came back the second time. I may have been a little curt because Lesley said, "Why, Betty, I believe you're jealous."

"Jealous?" I said. "Of course I'm not."

Anne, who had been helping me, said, "But she is jealous. She's mad because you asked Don to kiss you and Joan and I are too." Her eyes were blazing.

Lesley put her arm around Anne and said "Why, baby, Betty and I were just joking. She's not jealous of me. You and Joanie bring your hamburgers and come sit by me." And lucky old unjealous mommy got to cook them.

Then there is the night Anne and Joan were staying all night in town and Don and I planned to have dinner at the Alibi, the Vashon restaurant, and go to the Vashon movie show. We were sitting in the kitchen discussing this fabulous outing when Lesley called and said she was all alone and wouldn't we come down. I said that we were going out to dinner. She said come down for a drink then as she was all alone and Johnny wasn't coming home until the next Wednesday and wouldn't we please. It was a nasty rainy night and I felt sorry for her all alone so, like a fool, I asked her to have dinner and go to the show with us. She said she would but only if we would come down to her house and have a drink. So we went and she had on black velvet slacks and a black cashmere sweater and diamonds and French perfume and the minute we walked in she told Don how tired he looked, how terribly tired, how absolutely worn out. This time she made me feel like a great big botany teacher in tweeds and without a husband.

AFTER she had been gay, Don had been tired and I'd been uncomfortable for about an hour I said, "Come on, let's go. I'm starving and the show starts at eight-ten."

"Show?" Lesley said. "What show?"

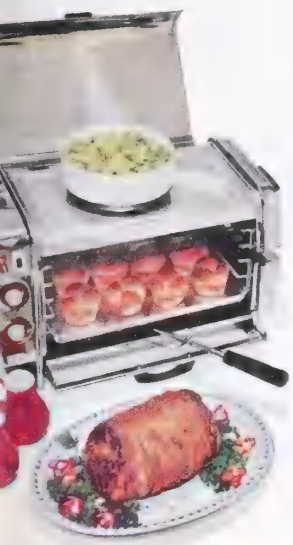
"The movie show at Vashon," I said. "I told you on the phone we were going."

She said, "But Betty, it's a terrible night and Don is so tired."

I said, "Don promised to take me to the show."

"What's playing?" she asked.

"I don't know," I said sulkily.



"Now, Betty," she said, "be reasonable. Don is tired, terribly tired. You don't want to drag him out into the ra[illegible] cold just to see a movie."

helves rest on movable brackets so height can be changed. Top shelf is widest. Gay red ubber covering, scissored to fit shelves, cushions sound, is easily cleaned. Practical gifts ke electric fry pan (on cabinet) and cooker-fryer (on shelf) are meal-making mainstays.

Handy, new cutting-board drawer pops into position—top right. Partitioned cutlery drawer on left. Two of many exciting features.

For broiling and rotisserie cooking, plug-in broiler is portable and always useful. For a party dinner, a roast or chicken revolves under the heat until crusty and brown; baster is used to drip zesty sauce as spit revolves. Raising lid, she can cook vegetables or heat frozen French fries on top surface. Rolls are placed inside to warm after meal comes out. For late snacks, the hostess broils 'burgers.

For heating liquids, electric hot cup is small and compact but does important jobs. Speedy, it's a natural for brewing tea or making instant coffee or hot chocolate, is at home, too, with hot onion soup or oyster stew for two. It cooks breakfast eggs, with a rack for lowering them gently. On a cold night, it heats chili for a bracing supper.

might [illegible]
you'd bette[illegible]
"I couldn't [illegible]
I said.

And so the summer went on and on and on. Lesley took sun bath[illegible] and wore different real jewels and a differe[illegible] new dress every night. Every afternoon at about five-thirty she would call to have Don help her pull up her boat, carry her groceries, saw up her logs, fix her stove, check her wiring, and she was clever enough to make it sound natural.

Don liked her and Anne and Joan still adored her and they all made me feel like Typhoid Mary if I criticized her even the tiniest bit. I had terrible dreams of frustration every night and woke up every morning even nastier than usual.

"Lesley has me on the head of a pin and she is enjoying every minute of it," I told Don.

He said, "Why are you so stinking about Lesley? She's a nice gal and she's lonely."

"Yes, lonely for my husband," I said.

"You're being ridiculous," Don said, but I think we were both relieved when she moved to San Francisco in October. Anne and Joan were inconsolable.

"She had thirty-one coats," Anne told one of her friends, "and three Dior dresses."

"And real diamonds and rubies," Joan said.

"And she had a perfect figure, thirty-six-inch bust, twenty-four-inch waist and thirty-four-inch hips," Anne said.

"And she had a gold-color convertible and fourteen cashmere sweaters," Joan said.

"Gosh, she was beautiful," Anne said. "Her hair was platinum and she had great big violet eyes, and whenever her tan faded even a little she took an airplane to Hawaii!"

"Somebody set the table," I shouted rudely. "It's almost seven."

"Gosh, you're crabby!" Anne and Joan said together.

According to titbits I have picked up from my reading over the past twenty-five years, it seems to be an accepted fact that the happy woman is the woman who has some interest other than bearing children and the subsequent washing and ironing and cooking and sweeping. These tasks, thrust upon her with her wedding ring, are her lot and she is expected to perform them with willingness, dispatch and quiet efficiency, but, we are told, the discussion of them is not interesting to the husband—that lucky pup who goes downtown every day to meet new people and eat in restaurants.

If you want to keep your husband's love, so say the instructions, you should always look pretty, be fun, keep your house immaculate, get up and cook your husband's breakfast, and have outside interests. There is one thing to be said for this state of affairs: it offers a challenge; an absolutely impossible one, to be sure, but a challenge.

When we moved to Vashon Island my outside interest was working for a contractor who was building something or other, very vital, for the Government at terrific expense in Alaska.

It was an outside interest, though, and I could fill up the evenings telling my husband and children how tired I was, how incompetent everybody else in our organization was, how much cabbage was selling for in Alaska. Then in February my sister Mary decided that I should become a writer and introduced me to an editor who told me to bring him a five-thousand-word outline of my book. Never having dreamed of writing a book, I was not as quick with the outline as I might have been. In fact, I had to stay home from work to write it and some pal in the office told the boss what I was doing and I was instantly fired and thus became rather unwittingly an author.

The job of being a lady writer, not substantiated by any regular salary, was regarded by my family with the same tolerant amusement they accorded my efforts toward making my own Christmas cards. "All I ask," I would tell them with tears in my eyes, "is one quiet spot where I can write and not be disturbed." (This was a lie, of course, because they knew that what I really wanted was a million dollars so I would never have to write another word.)

When I am writing I itch and hate my family, especially during that painful period known as "getting into the book," when I am trying to decide whether I shall be Marcella Proust or Thomasina Wolfe and know I shall end up being Betty MacDonald and sobbing over nasty reviews. Thank goodness I'm not alone in this because I read The Cost of a Best Seller, by Frances Parkinson Keyes, and another book about writing by Kenneth Roberts, and they had their feelings hurt in Europe too. Apparently the only writer who is never sorry for himself is Ernest Hemingway.

I HAVE tried writing in the kitchen, the dining room, the living room, our bedroom, the guesthouse, the porch, the patio—it is always the same. I am first, last and always a wife and mother and must stop whatever I am doing to —— "Try and remember where you left the big screw driver" . . . "I am up in Vashon and I lost the list—what was it you wanted?" . . . "Read the directions and see if Weevil Bait can be used for slugs." . . . "Give me the recipe for chicken in olive oil and wine." . . . "I'm bringing the children over for the weekend ——"

When I contemplate my own household and our way of life with my greenhouse devoted to little sailboats, big plastic alligators and sun-tan oil, twenty-four sheets to the laundry on Mondays, and $183.50 long-distance phone bills, I think longingly of a neighbor who ways has her cuticle pushed back and h her ground round steak one pound at a ti

"Well, one reason I'm glad we have house," Anne said, "is because now I can vite all my friends to visit me."

Joan said, "Who am I going to invit don't have any friends."

Don said, "I think before anybody in anybody we should talk things over."

Anne said, "Of course I'm not sure an my friends would care to come way out he Joan said, "Who'll I invite? I don't h any friends."

I SAID, "Anne and Joan, you can invite y friends, Don can invite his friends, I can in my friends and if we feel like singing the S Spangled Banner at three in the morn we can."

Don said, "I think we should talk th over. I think I should be consulted."

Anne said, "Of course I'm not sure an my friends ——"

But as it turned out, everybody had frie and relatives and they were all glad to v especially in good weather. I learned r away that the big difference between isl entertaining and other kind is tha an island guests all night or for weeks or a coupl years. Even the rare good sp who try to go h usually miss the ferry, or the f company hears are having peopl dinner and kn down the dolp or stops running ferries just for fun of it.

The point beir you are not an " ways defrost Wednesday" kin housekeeper, but enjoy having pe in for dinner, can stuff that gallons of h finished and a scorched curr jelly under the s tuck that large s of magazines w Don insists on keeping on the kitchen win sill in with the ironing; toss the beach coats dog dishes and my manuscripts in the b hall with the vacuum cleaner; light the can put some good music on the record pla and you are ready.

But when people stay all night, too, slap-dash methods will not pass muste we have congenial people and they are ha a good time, it is easy to stay up most of night, especially when it is a house part like to stay up late, too, and I like to ha good time, but four o'clock in the mornir not a time to make decisions. Shall I clear before I go to bed and perhaps not get to until dawn or let it go and probably be as tired in the morning? In the meantime the guests have popped off, as has Don, keeps calling hoarsely, "Betty, come to Why don't you come to bed, Betty?"

Another thing, I love children and alr always have some tiny friend with me. S tiny friend who goes to bed at seven and in my bed at six in the morning. Oh well, s is just a habit, the psychologists say.

There are all kinds of guests. Fun, no hard, bores, nasty, crazy, alcoholic, relig fanatics, old pals who have got fat and old pals who have got rich and dull, old who haven't succeeded and are on the de sive, relatives, babies, foreign friends know no English, adolescents who play record player from seven A.M. to three A.M. paint their toenails while I wash the dis bright young friends of Anne's and Jo who are fun, bright young friends of An and Joan's who are no fun and don't h

CONTINUED ON PAGE 128

THE MEMORY LINGERS ON

A jolly good way to remember your friends and relatives this Christmas is to send LADIES' HOME JOURNAL gift subscriptions! They're easy to order — and the pleasure will last for as long as you care to give. A lovely card in your name will announce each gift.

A handy order form is in nearly every copy of this issue.

Give her the most beautiful cabinet sink in the world

Of all the many gifts you can give (or get), there's one a homemaker can appreciate far more often and much, much longer than any other. Every day, for many years to come, she'll enjoy this treasured possession—her new 66-inch Diana Cabinet Sink, by Youngstown Kitchens.

See it at your nearby Youngstown Kitchen Dealer's now. And see many other new models of cabinet sinks and kitchens in long-lasting steel. Mullins Manufacturing Corporation, Warren, Ohio.

Handy, new cutting-board drawer pops into position—top right. Partitioned cutlery drawer on left. Two of many exciting features.

STEEL
Youngstown Kitchens

Sold in the United States, Canada, and most parts of the world

FREE KITCHEN PLANNING AND DECORATING ADVICE

Visit your Youngstown Kitchen Dealer now. Or send this coupon for free information and literature in full color.

Youngstown Kitchens
Mullins Manufacturing Corporation
Dept. L-1254, Warren, Ohio

NAME (Please print) _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ ZONE _____

COUNTY _____ STATE _____

© 1954 Mullins Manufacturing Corporation

When OVER-EATING brings on UPSET STOMACH

FOR QUICK RELIEF
GET
PHILLIPS' TABLETS

Any time you overeat, remember this—you never know when it's going to cause upset stomach, gas, heartburn or any other symptom of acid indigestion. So be wise—carry a pocket-size tin of Phillips' Tablets with you wherever you go. That way, you're always ready for fast relief—no matter when or where acid indigestion comes along. As pleasant to take as candy mints, peppermint-flavored Phillips' Tablets are made from one of the fastest, most effective stomach sweeteners known—and bring almost instant relief from acid indigestion. 30 tablets—28¢.

PHILLIPS'
MILK OF MAGNESIA
TABLETS

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 126

foreign men who light my cigarettes lingeringly and tell me "Youth is so gauche, so raw," then try to lure Anne or Joan out on the porch, and FBI agents who should open a school.

One summer we rented our town house, which we had bought to lessen the domestic shame while the girls were in their last years of high school and first years of college, to five FBI agents with whom we naturally became friends and whom we naturally invited to spend their weekends on Vashon, and one of whom Joan later married. Now that was a summer I enjoyed.

They helped; in fact, did all the work, portioning it out in a most businesslike way and not accepting any excuses. They were good cooks, they were bright, they sang, they never got drunk, they liked children, they made the beds, and they loved the country. As far as I am concerned, J. Edgar Hoover can billet his whole staff on me any old time, for as long as he wants.

My idea of heaven would be an enormous house, preferably one with twenty-four bedrooms and twenty-four bathrooms, thousands of guests, mostly FBI agents and foreign men, a great many excellent unobtrusive servants, and no work to do. As my alternative is a house with four bedrooms, a guesthouse, three davenports, a lawn swing, three chaise longues and the floor, thousands of guests, many of them under four years old, and no servants, I often go six months without getting to the beach. Don says that my problem is that I don't relax. He usually says this to me early in the morning after I have been up until three o'clock anyway and then got up again with somebody small who has thrown up in an upper bunk.

I prefer to believe that I am not abnormally tense—that all over the world there are wives who, under similar circumstances, are not relaxing. How could I relax, for instance, when Anne invited her friend "O.K. Honey" to spend the summer and that was the year we were building a big kitchen with a fireplace and I was making do in the service room with orange crates for cupboards and no drainboards on the sink? "O.K. Honey" was very small, with enormous blue eyes, long golden-brown hair, almost black lipstick, wine-colored fingernails an inch long, and an I.Q. which I estimated to be about 20. I guess the reason Anne and Joan liked her so much was that she was not pressing with her opinions and she knew so many boys. I say I guess, because, though she was here for over a month, I never heard her say one thing but "O.K., honey."

Don kept growling, "Who invited her? Why am I never consulted about these things?" as Anne and Joan and O.K. Honey spent hours covering themselves with sun-tan oil and lying motionless on the chaise longues on the porch, painting their toe-and finger-nails, listening to records, pinning up their hair, and eating. I used to wonder if Anne and Joan mightn't have bought O.K. Honey in a drugstore. She certainly looked as if she could have come wrapped in cellophane and she was unfamiliar with even the simplest forms of housekeeping, such as putting two pieces of bread in the toaster and pushing down the lever.

ANNE and Joan were willing, even eager, to cook for her, serve her, wash and iron her clothes, row her in the boat, drive her to the movies, make her bed, but if I asked them to empty the ash trays or pass the cookies, they roared like wounded bison and said, "Work, work, work, that's all we ever do around here! I thought this was summer vacation!"

They were also wearing their hair long and limp, their fingernails painted deep maroon, their lips almost black. Then one day somebody named Buzz telephoned from Seattle and O.K. Honey went to the phone and said, "O.K., honey" and took the next ferry home.

"Buzz is her steady, home on leave from the Navy," Anne and Joan told me, after they had packed her things and driven her to the ferry.

"Steady!" I laughed loudly. "And just who were all those Charlies and Phils and Tommies and Donnies—friends of her mother?"

"Do you always have to be so critical of our friends?" Anne said wearily as she settled herself at the kitchen table with a box of tissues, a bottle of polish remover and a new bottle of deep-plum nail polish.

Of course I'll never forget the summer I took care of my sister Alison's four- and five-year-old boys because her new baby was very sick, and Joanie invited her steady to stay with us because she was so sorry for him because she didn't love him; I invited a dear friend who was an alcoholic but didn't feel that she was quite ready for psychiatry; a couple whom I had met somewhere in Arizona and carelessly asked to "come and see us any time—we have plenty of room" took me at my word and dropped in for the month of August; my Norwegian cleaning woman's husband had a heart attack; and Anne, who was leading her own life in town being a model, kept bringing home for the weekends and recuperation another model who looked like a Madonna but whose husband was everlastingly blacking her eyes because she was so attractive to other men.

The weather was fair, and by that I mean gray and cold, but I forced everyone to eat supper on the beach every night—paper plates, no dishes—and things might have worked out after a fashion if the woman from Arizona had just once got up before three in the afternoon, especially in view of the fact that her husband was disgustingly hearty and arose and went swimming in the icy Sound at 5:30 A.M. and was lathering around in the kitchen ready for a big breakfast at six.

When the woman from Arizona did finally appear, she demanded that I sit with her while she ate her breakfast, which I was glad to do because it was sitting. However, we would no more than get settled at the table and one of Alison's little boys would come sloshing up from the beach to tell me that he had fallen out of the rowboat in his last clean clothes; or in a low throbbing voice Joan would plead with me to do something about her steady who was contemplating suicide in the porch swing; or my sister Mary would call up and tell me that she was on her way out with Mrs. Ellis and her three children and "Arenthau Salavochic and his adorable wife, actually a count and countess but working for the Ellises just to learn American ways," and they didn't speak a word of English but I would love them and she was bringing a salmon and what else did I need? As I write this the thought occurs that it is a very strange thing that the ferry has never broken down bringing people—only when it is supposed to be taking them away.

Then of course there was the Saturday afternoon when Don and the girls and I came staggering along the beach with our loads of groceries and a male voice yelled "Yoohoo!" at us from the roof of our house and it was Don's old buddy, the very same old buddy, who, refusing to believe that Old Don" ha finally taken the step, spent our weeke honeymoon (all that was allowed defen workers) in Don's apartment with us and t shutoff notices (utilities had been roommate responsibility, Don said) and the evictio letter from the landlord (Don said landlord u reasonably prejudiced against single men ev since he had found those fishbones behir the cushions on the couch).

ALTHOUGH he did not come down off t roof, we could see clearly that Old Buddy face was suspiciously flushed and that he wa crawling around loosening the shakes in nor too steady a fashion. I sent Don out to "talk to him while the girls and I put the groceri away. Mary and some Navy people were e pected on the next ferry and I still had a gre deal of rapid stuffing and tidying and flow arranging to do and I didn't intend to b hampered by Old Buddy.

I set Anne to making clam-and-crean cheese dip and Joan to filling little dishes wit nuts and sunflower seeds and olives. When had finished my tidying I opened the bac door and called to Don to start the fire. Do didn't answer, but Buddy peered at me ov the edge of the roof and said, "Heigh-ho!" slammed back into the house.

"You've got to get him out of here," I sa to Don.

"Why?" Don asked mildly. "He's up on t roof out of the way."

"I don't think you're funny," I said. "Ma and those Navy people are coming on t next ferry; and anyway, think of the girls."

"Yes, think of us," the girls said. "He revolting!"

"Why don't you all relax?" Don sai "Everything will work out. Let's all be sweet."

Leaving Anne and Joan with the ho d'oeuvres, I dashed upstairs, washed my fac put on my tight black slacks and a whi sweater and was splashing on perfum when from my open bedroom window heard Mary and the Navy people crunchin along in the sand, and then from overhea I heard Buddy calling out to them "Heigh-ho!

Anne, who had come in to inspect m make-up and borrow a little perfume, sai "Oh, mommy, honestly, I think he's perfect disgusting. Can't Don get rid of him?"

I said, "He's Don's oldest friend, And we'll just have to be understanding."

It really wasn't too hard as Mary and h friends were fun and Old Buddy stayed on t roof, only asking for occasional favors in t way of drinks and the binoculars so he coul examine the crevasses on the moon.

One of the Navy officers (there were thre had brought a guitar and after dinner we wer

CONTINUED ON PAGE 130

"Don't you start rushing out here every time I open this door!"

Helene Curtis has wonderful news for you!

NOW... a Hair Spray with NO LACQUER

never, never stiffens your hair!

keeps your hair in place all day!

Helene Curtis SUPER SOFT spray net BRAND

I you women who've turned up your pretty noses at a Hair Spray

qquer
ly leaves ilky and looking.

qquer
y makes behave. en hours ast a wet news the nginess" ur wave.

qquer
s perfect hair-dos. oin curls minutes.

. . . don't, one minute longer! For here is an excitingly new hair spray without one smidgen of lacquer. Even the perfume is new—an airy, apple-blossom sort of fragrance.

Forget wind, forget weather. Helene Curtis new Super Soft SPRAY NET holds your hair perfectly in place softly. It's so exquisitely soft, you can use it every single day, as often as you like, without even a hint of stiffening or drying.

Super soft? Oh my yes! Yet it keeps that just-had-a-hair-do smoothness all day long. "Sets" your pin curls snugly after a shampoo or for a quick redo. And it really brushes or washes out instantly.

And when you have a professional hair-do, you'll discover it's the hair spray used and preferred by better beauty salons across the country.

Honestly, Super Soft SPRAY NET is the newest, nicest, most delightful thing that could happen to your topknot.

We're just as proud of our Regular SPRAY NET!

Hard-to-manage hair . . . hair that's overdue for a permanent needs the more persuasive control of Regular SPRAY NET. So if you're one of the millions who have used it and loved it—don't change. Regular SPRAY NET, the finest of its kind, is for you.

$1.25 plus tax

SUPER SOFT OR REGULAR

LIMITED TIME ONLY

FREE!

a generous purse-size bottle of

Tweed PERFUME

with every purchase of SUPER SOFT or REGULAR SPRAY NET

FREE!

Buy SPRAY NET, Regular or Super Soft and get a gift of Lentheric's TWEED, the one fragrance above all others . . . to wear anytime, anywhere!

®T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Now there are two SPRAY NETS . . . Super Soft or Regular, both wonderful!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 128

out on the porch in the moonlight and he played sad songs and sang to us. It must have been after three when I was stumbling around emptying ash trays and brushing potato chips off the mantel while Don called to me, "Why don't you come to bed?" that I remembered about Buddy and realized that we had not heard from him for some time.

"What are you going to do about Old Buddy?" I whispered hoarsely. "He's still out on the roof."

"Nothing," Don said. "His responsibility. Now come to bed."

"I'll be along in a minute," I said, sweeping the hearth.

As I put away the enormous amount of equipment Don uses for fried-egg sandwiches, I thought again about Buddy out there on the roof in the cold night air. What if he rolled off and broke his neck? What if the raccoons that favor our roof as a play field clawed him?

Humming happily, I went up to bed.

The next thing I knew there was sunlight dappling the rug, and up from the patio floated the cheerful thrumming of a guitar.

"What happened to Old Buddy?" I asked Don. "I was so worried about him last night I couldn't sleep."

Giving the cord that pulled back the draperies a yank, Don said, "Take a look." I got warily out of bed, walked to the window and looked out. Below me, spread-eagled in the lawn swing, a white goatskin rug clutched around his throat, was Old Buddy. One of the Navy officers was kneeling beside him strumming his guitar, another was propping up his head, feeding him a gin fizz.

Anne and Joan and Mary came in with coffee. Anne said, "You'd better hurry and drink this, mommy, that lieutenant commander and I have breakfast almost ready. We are making buttermilk hot cakes and sausages."

Joan said, "What's that one's name wit guitar, Aunty Mary?"

"Johnny," Mary said.

"Well, Johnny and I are going out spearing right after breakfast."

Lighting a cigarette, Mary said, "It's l enly out here, Betty. So relaxing."

The tricky thing to remember a adolescents is that they seem so miserabl ing what they are doing that you, their l and bewildered parents, assume that would be happier doing something They wouldn't. Adolescents are going miserable no matter what they are doing they would rather be miserable doin things they choose. This is all so easy fo now that Joan and Anne are twenty-fou twenty-five, charming, intelligent, beau companionable, adult and married. Do I adore them and can't see enough of th

But during that long pull between fou and twenty (they were both married at tw it came over us with a flash—well, really like a punch in the stomach, accompani the splash of tears—that the English are more civilized than we are and they what they are doing when they send Im away to school—and by away I mean Rangoon to England or vice versa—a seven and bring her home reluctantly she is thirty.

The summer Joan and Anne turned teen and fifteen and they both referred to "she" and "oh, him," bolted themselves bathroom for sixteen hours at a stretch wore lipstick to bed, Don and I sent aw the catalogue of a fine school in Cana had the splendid English approach, we tell, because the catalogue said, "No ne them to come home for any of the holi we will keep them all summer." Ann Joan found the catalogue and cried, n cause we didn't want them home but b the school demanded that all pupils hav hair chopped off even with the ear lob wear black oxfords with Cuban heels.

Frankly, I do not know any easy ans adolescence, but I do know that servi the part of the parents—one of the ado goals—does not help. Neither does shr under criticism, breaking into tears, le about fair play, or locking yourself bathroom and talking about them. Ab only thing to do is to try to hang on t sanity and pray much as you would were lost in a blizzard without a com were adrift in a leaky canoe and could h roar of the falls just ahead.

WHILE you are hanging on I will reach into the black pit of my experience a you a few things to think about, in ca aren't already glaringly apparent.

1. Adolescents do not hate their p They merely feel absolute contempt, oc ally coated with condescending pity fo their tiny brains, ridiculous ideas, unfa and obvious senility. They all refer t fathers as "oh, him" and their moth "she": "She won't let me go naturally scared to death I might have a little fu change." . . . "Who was that on the Oh, him! What did he want this ti overcoat again?"

2. All adolescents are masters of the even triple cross. This does not mea they will grow up to be either commu politicians—it is merely an indication adolescence, loyalty is no long-term e and best friends can turn brown quick gardenias.

3. All adolescents "go steady." Da with boys who appear to be oily, weak-c and untrustworthy. Sons with girls w pear hard-eyed, brazen and, if not do immoral, certainly not wholesome types. No parent gets anywhere con these great romances.

How can anyone as stupid as "oh evaluate a big wheel like Billy? (A bi who gets straight D's on his report c has a vocabulary of thirty words.) "It happens that Billy is left half on the t team and president of SqueeGees, th school fraternity."

What can "she" possibly know a wonderful girl like Charlene with he

CHRISTMAS FESTIVITY in fragrance

DESERT FLOWER A. Dusting Powder 1.50 B. Hand and Body Lotion, Toilet water 2.50 C. Purse Perfume in gift box 1.50

OLD SPICE FOR MEN D. NEW Electric Shave 1.00 E. Shaving Mug, After Shave Lotion, Cologne, Talcum 4.25 F. After Shave Lotion and pressurized Smooth Shave 2.00 G. Travel Set: Lather or Brushless Shaving Cream, After Shave Lotion, Talcum, 1.50

ESCAPADE H. Toilet Water and Dusting Powder 3.00 J. Purse Perfume with case 2.00 K. Purse-size Stick Cologne 1.00 L. Bubbling Bath Crystals 1.50

FRIENDSHIP'S GARDEN M. Bath Salts 1.00 N. Dusting Powder and Toilet Water 2.35 O. Liquid Petals Cream Perfume in gift box 1.25

Prices plus tax, except shaving cream, soap, and Electric Shave

SHULTON New York • Toronto

rts, fuchsia lipstick put on with a ife, and scintillating conversation of, Anne, Johnny may have the mind of ut he sure has the body of a man!" t jealous because Charlene was voted rt of the SqueeGees four times. (No

ing that is so difficult for fathers to r is that very few if any of the bril- yers, bankers, doctors, architects or n, a facsimile of which they desire of law, ever took out girls when they high school. They were too shy and studying to be brilliant lawyers, and g wheels in high school are, always n and undoubtedly always will be oth, shifty-eyed, self-confident non-

ing that comes as such a blow to the is the fact that little Conroy is not to Ermengarde Allen. "She has such anners and will be very nice-looking r skin clears after all, her vas my class- Bryn Mawr." who is shy and efers to Ermen- ho is shy and s "that pimply dolescents tele- This is part of ive quality that em all eat in the nery, walk in knot up in hall- ted we stand— ve might learn g. You will not thing by hav- telephones. o telephones!" and Joan's aid, and kept n busy. dolescents in- ave the family e time. To ac- this they re- he gentle nag er-on-stone he smooth lie old tearful si- ey will always n try to reason They have the stance to the impersonal olescents are ul with their ssessions, but bsolutely reck- anything belonging to their parents. ay flannel slacks, Don's shoes, my dio, my toast-colored cashmere Don's bathing trunks, my jeans, our rts, our beach towels hit the adoles- and were never seen again. adolescent girls would prefer to live oom. adolescent boys would prefer to live ther's car.

NG in retrospect those long, wet, winters when daylight was only on and keeping warm was the motivat- I am overcome by how wonderful d Joan were. How co-operative and ining and hard-working and dear. Of ewing things in retrospect does blunt nd point up bright places, but they little girls to be getting wood, cook- r, making beds and smiling, and I ain they were such little girls and they e. I wondered if they were happy, an island and leaving for school in the ter all, they were used to my large d our hordes of friends, I told Don. l, "Look at the Brontës, Saki, Ruskin, All great people who had thrived on

"Perhaps we should have waited were older before moving to the d, "Living in the city doesn't solve g. Think of all the city children who are alone because their parents are in Palm Springs or down at the athletic club getting pie-eyed or in New York attending the National Convention of the Juvenile Delinquency Prevention Society."

One stormy night Don met on the ferry and brought home to dinner a widower who lived by himself on the other side of the island. Anne, home from school with one of her fleeting unlocalized ailments, had stuffed and baked a salmon and made an apple pie. The man couldn't get over it. "That little girl, that wonderful little girl!" he said over and over again as he passed his plate for more salmon and watched Anne swishing competently around making coffee and cutting the cheese.

JOANIE said, "I'm wonderful, too, aren't I, mommy? I rowed out and bought the salmon from the fishing boat and I carried up a root so big Don can't get it in the fireplace."

"You don't know how lucky you are," the old widower told Don and me with tears in his eyes. "I've never seen anything like it."

Anne and Joan glowed like little fireflies and in his honor after dinner when they were doing the dishes kept their fighting down to quiet slaps, hissed insults and one broken saucer.

Sunday morning the girls always climbed in our bed, Don lit the fire in the fireplace and we took turns going down and getting coffee, orange juice and the Sunday papers which Don brought home Friday and I saved. After we had read the papers, Anne and I got up and cooked a big Sunday breakfast. Kippered herring and scrambled eggs or clam fritters and bacon or shad roe or eggs scrambled with Olympia oysters no larger than a thumbnail. While Anne and I cooked, Joan and Don got wood and built the fires. We never bothered with Sunday dinner, preferring soup and sandwiches whenever we got hungry.

Sunday afternoons we took walks, gathered bark, wrote and acted out plays, popped corn, made fudge, sang into the recording machine, read aloud, took trips in the rowboat with the outboard motor, cleared land, fed the deer and played with the kittens. In spite of my occasional misgivings, we were a very happy, enthusiastic family and I was delighted that Anne and Joan had accepted Don so easily as my husband and their friend.

Then Satan, in the form of adolescence, entered the Garden of Eden and turned it overnight into a jungle filled with half-grown, always hungry, noisy, emotional, quarrelsome, rude, boisterous, snarling animals.

The first manifestation was the hair. Anne had bright copper-colored curly hair which she wore shining-clean and hanging shoulder length. Joan had pale blond curly hair which she wore shining-clean if I caught her, hanging shoulder length. One early evening Anne began rolling her pretty hair into small wet snails about six hairs to a snail, secured tightly with bobby pins crisscrossed like swords.

I said, "What are you doing to your hair?"

Sighing heavily, she said through a mouth filled with bobby pins, "Oh, you wouldn't understand."

"Why wouldn't I?" I said.

"Because you don't know anything about style and anyway you want me to look ugly."

CONTINUED ON PAGE 133

EGO BRACERS

By GEORGIE STARBUCK GALBRAITH

When now and then my self-respect's
In jeopardy because my sex
Is female, I don't yearn to fly
A plane or bridge a chasm. I Count off the ways I'm better than My lord or any other man.
To wit: I buy no apple corers
Or magazines from door-to-doorers;
Quite frequently to show my strength
I stretch a dollar thrice its length
And bind the budget's gaping sides;
From me no wily cuff link hides;
I close my eyes when I am kissed.
And as a woman, I insist
No other gender can begin
To make men feel so masculine!

BUY-LINES by Nancy Sasser

AN ADVERTISING COLUMN

THE MOST TREASURED GIFT you could possibly give this Christmas is the Revised Standard Version of the Bible . . . for regular reading of the Bible has marked the turning point in many a life and I believe the Revised Standard Version will help someone you love find new understanding and peace of mind in these troubled times! That's because it's not full of old-fashioned words and phrases that are difficult to understand . . . but is written in the living language of today. Faithful to the earliest manuscripts, it retains all the beauty of the beloved King James Version. I particularly recommend the magnificent genuine leather edition for Christmas-giving at $10 . . . but you may prefer the handsome maroon buckram edition for only $6. And for the young folks on your gift list, I suggest the new illustrated edition . . . with 12 full-color pictures and 12 full-color maps which bring well-known Bible incidents vividly to life. Comes in a choice of 2 bindings . . . one for $3.50, the other $3.25!

ANY LOVELY LADY on your gift list would love to get a blouse of Du Pont NYLON . . . and you can give it proudly knowing it will continue to give her pleasure for months and months to come! And NYLON this year comes in a palette of the most exquisite colors I've ever seen . . . vibrant, dark shades of navy and black as well as snowy-white and a perfect "rainbow" of pretty pastels. The new styles are exciting, too . . . ranging from casual to dressy, from little-girl to career-sophisticate. In other words, NYLON blouses look lovely in any setting . . . add an air of elegance to college days, business affairs and all at-home events! As for wonderful weaves and weights, I've never seen such a wide array . . . you can choose from two-layer 15 denier sheers to heavier, shadowproof NYLONS. And when you give NYLON, you give easier care and longer wear . . . two qualities every woman appreciates! So don't think of NYLON Blouses only as gifts for you to give . . . drop a happy holiday hint around that you'd also like to get one at stocking hanging time!

BEAUTY IS APPLIED ART . . . a talent you can easily acquire in your boudoir with the help of my favorite "beauty operator." I'm talking about Q-TIPS Beauty Swabs . . . dainty, cotton-tipped applicators designed for cosmetics, to give you the finesse needed to look your loveliest from head to toe! You see, they have cotton tips at both ends . . . but unlike baby's, Q-TIPS are longer and slimmer . . . so easy to use, and so much more "talented" than your fingertips, they put an end to make-up slip-ups! That's why I recommend Q-TIPS Beauty Swabs for all your beauty jobs . . . everything from blending eye-shadow and erasing mascara smears and lipstick smudges . . . to applying cuticle oil, hair coloring and rouge. Every pretty dressing table box brings you a beauty "bonus," too . . . lessons in loveliness by that master of make-up Ern Westmore which teach you the beauty "Q's" practiced by Hollywood movie stars. So if you use cosmetics, use Q-TIPS Beauty Swabs . . . you'll see wonderful improvements!

MEN ARE PARTIAL TO PRETTY SKIN . . . so you're sure to suffer socially during the holidays if you have blackheads, pimples, rash or other externally caused blemishes! That's why I make you this:

SPECIAL CHRISTMAS OFFER . . . of a generous SAMPLE of CUTICURA SOAP that will bring you a softer, clearer skin in only 7 days if you use it regularly and correctly! You can take my word for it . . . because unlike other leading soaps, CUTICURA is superfatted. And as it deep-cleanses, it supplements the natural oils of the skin . . . thus keeps your skin soft and smooth, supple, satiny and healthy. I'll also send you a trial-size bottle of greaseless, "invisible" CUTICURA MEDICATED LIQUID to use over or under your make-up to speed healing of unbecoming spots and splotches . . . so your own special prettiness will shine as bright as Christmas tree lights. See OFFER #1 in box.

And if I were you, I'd use emollient CUTICURA Ointment at night . . . for it helps soften your skin as well as clears up embarrassing complexion imperfections that hide your natural beauty!

I'M SAYING "MERRY CHRISTMAS" to many people on my gift list with a really perfect present . . . a thrilling PARKER Game! And that's what I hope you'll give and get . . . for PARKER Games bring Holiday fun the whole year long. Which one do I like best? All of them . . . but "Monopoly," the fascinating real estate trading game, is sure to suit every taste to a "T" and delight anybody of any age! It's truly exciting . . . because "Monopoly" players make fortunes, go bankrupt and get rich quick again as they buy and sell land and utilities. You'll want to choose some other PARKER Games, too . . . particularly "Sorry," "Clue," "Hollywood Go," "Rook," Bing Crosby's "Call Me Lucky" . . . and for those who still enjoy crossword letter games, "Keyword" is the best of them all. And get this:

WONDERFUL BOOKLET called "How to Have Family Fun and Popular Parties with Parker Games" . . . it's packed with hints to help you become the most successful hostess in town . . . so check OFFER #2 in box.

Write Nancy Sasser, Dept. P-8, 271 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y. for:

☐ OFFER #1 . . . SAMPLES of CUTICURA SOAP and CUTICURA MEDICATED LIQUID. Please enclose 10c.

☐ OFFER #2 . . . PARKER'S BOOKLET "How to Have Family Fun and Popular Parties with Parker Games." Please enclose 10c.

The gift that will brighte her heart and her home

What is the one perfect gift for her? So thing that says "I love you" in a very spe way? A gift so festive, so luxurious she'll ne ever forget the moment you gave it to h

A gift of 1847 Rogers Bros. is all that so much more. For America's finest sil plate is made to last a lifetime. It will sh on her table every meal, every day, fore ... as a symbol of your eternal love.

The family silver for generations

Look for this 1847 Rogers Bros. display at your favorite store. It features the magnificent, 52-piece service for 8 in a handsome, tarnish-resistant chest. Your choice of 5 patterns . . . only $79.75. You can place it under her Christmas tree for a small down payment. Easy terms.

1847

1847 ROGERS BROS.

America's Finest Silverplate A Product of The International Silver Company

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 131

hair looks lovely just the way it is," wisely.
ew you'd take that attitude," Anne ginning to cry. "I knew you'd get if I tried to fix my hair the way
y is wearing it."
said, "That's right, mommy. Every-ts their hair up in pin curls. They all look like hags."
bags."
scrags."
urious," I said, getting a little furious.
on't see much point in curling curly don't see any point in anything!" bbed. "You don't know anything ything! You even like to live on this aken island."

aid, "Say, Laurie told me that Helen that Bobby likes you."
n?" Anne said, brightening up.
erday," Joan said. "I forgot to tell stinker," shrieked Anne. "And now I I Jimmy I'd go to the Friday dance

. I could kill you."
head," Joan said calmly. "But if I'm won't be able to tell you what else aid."
t?" Anne said.
Cross my heart I'm not going to kill oan said.
't be silly," Anne said.
said, "All right, then, promise you'll e with my

mise," Anne

," Joan said, said that id that Bobby to ask you Seaview Boys
ootball dance.
e you going to ething ugly dish and old,"

said bitterly.
ll the other rich and will smoke and have on formals."
n Hendricks isn't rich," Joan said, goes steady with the president of the re class."
but she doesn't live on a corny old Anne said.
ad red hair and a bust I wouldn't care lived," Joan said wistfully. "Say, the f my theme has to be 'Why I Want to ollege.'"
what a repulsive title," Anne said.
promised you'd help me."
ow," Anne said, "but it will have to
s." et my notebook," Joan said.
," Anne said. "I have to finish pin-my hair. I'll do yours, too, if you he added generously.

nen on Anne and Joan and all their nale friends spent at least one third lives rolling their hair into small snail ver the snails they tied bandannas of kinds—one year dish towels, one en's bandannas, one year woolen one year enormous silk squares. The hing was that except for special occa-ch as the Friday-night dances, Squee-mals, Junior Proms, and so on, we w these curls unfurled. Their hair was up when they left for school, it was p the minute they got home.
day before last my sister Mary's mid-ghter, Sally, who is sixteen, came to bringing three of her school friends.
d when I saw their hair, wound into ils, each snail secured with the criss-bobby pins. I decided to ask Sally, ot my daughter and therefore doesn't ed upon to give me the "diamond-
" or to turn all my simple questions sonal affronts, why adolescents keep ir pinned up all the time. Stepping said, "Sally, would you answer a for me?" Instantly she and her three Man is continually saying to woman, Why will you not be more wise? Woman is continually saying to man, Why will you not be more loving? It is not in their wills to be wise or to be loving; but unless each is both wise and loving, there can be neither wisdom nor love. —THOREAU friends exchanged looks and moved closer together.

She said suspiciously, "What do you want to know?"

I said, "Why do you keep your lovely blond hair pinned up all the time? In the past two years I've only seen it combed out twice."

She said, "Well, it comes out of curl."

"When?" I asked.

"At school," she said. "I comb it out as soon as I get to school in the morning."

"And you put it up again the minute you get home?"

"Of course," Sally said. "Somebody might come over."

"What if somebody doesn't?"

"Then it's all ready for dinner."

"Do you comb it out before dinner?"

"Daddy won't let us come to the table in pin curls."

"Then you put it up right after dinner."

"Of course."

"Why?"

"Somebody might come over."

"Then you put it up again before you go to bed?"

"Of course."

"Wouldn't it be easier to have a permanent?"

"Oh, no, permanents are corny."

Of course everybody knows that adolescents, in spite of a repulsively overconfident manner, are basically unsure. We read it in books. It is pointed out to us in lectures. But you have to live with an adolescent to realize that in this half-ripe, newly hatched, wet-feathered stage they are not aware they are unsure but consider themselves wise, tolerant, responsible adults. Adults so mature they have a phobia against anything childish. Thus the pleasant Sunday mornings in our bed came to a sudden end. Instead Anne and Joan rushed down and got the papers, fought over them shrilly for a while, then came into our room, sat on the bed, drank the coffee which we had got ourselves, and complained. "Gosh, you look hideous in that nightgown, Betty," was one form of greeting, followed quickly by, "Raining again!" heavy sigh. "It seems like it has been raining for years and years." Another heavy sigh. "Do you think Tyrone Power's going to marry Lana Turner, mommy?" They were both wearing Don's pajamas, their hair was of course in pin curls, their faces smeared with calomine lotion, their fingernails were long, ruby-colored and chipped, their eyes sad.

I said, "Let's get dressed, have breakfast, build a big fire in the fireplace and play charades."

"Charades? You mean that baby game where you act out words?"

"It isn't a baby game," I said. "You remember we played it last summer."

"I don't want to play," Joan said, "it's too much like schoolwork."

"I wish I had a pink Angora sweater," Anne said. "Marilyn has two. A pale blue one and a pale pink one."

"Two?" Joan said. "Are you sure? They're twenty-five dollars, you know."

"Marilyn's rich," Anne said. "She gets thirty-five dollars a month just to spend on clothes."

Don said, "I can't understand why we let the Russians into Berlin."

Anne said, "Marilyn's going to spend Christmas in Palm Springs."

I said, "Palm Springs is the last place I would want to spend Christmas. Who wants hot weather and palm trees for Christmas?"

"I do," Anne said wistfully. "I'm so sick of rain I could die."

"Me too," Joan said. "Marilyn's going to get her own car when she's sixteen."

Don said, "Of course Russia had the world bluffed and our policy of appeasement, uncertainty and double talk isn't fooling anybody but ourselves."

I said, "Possessions don't bring happiness. Happiness is something you must find in your own self."

"Well, it would be a lot easier to find it if I had a car of my own," Anne said.

Joan said, "If we had a car of our very own we could drive to California next summer."

"You could not," I said.

"Why?" they said together.

"Because I don't believe in young girls' driving around the country by themselves. It's not safe."

"It certainly seems funny to me that we are always old enough to do what you want but never old enough to do anything we want," Anne said. "Don't you think Joan and I are old enough to drive to California, Don?"

"What about South America?" Don said. "It's farther away."

"Let's get dressed," I said, getting out of bed.

To be sure they weren't missing out on any new vital beauty aid, Anne and Joan studied the magazines. They knew instantly if burnt sugar was the latest color in lipstick and they pleaded and begged until they got it. When they got it they wore it out in about two hours, because they put on a new complete make-up when they got home from school (this one was ROYALE, in Gardenia White, Charcoal Grey, and Flame Pink. Complete sets, open stock, serving pieces available. Write The Branchell Co., St. Louis 10, Mo., for illustrated catalog.

To serve your own "royal family"...

ROYALE by BRANCHELL

break-resistant melmac® dinnerware

Royale . . . regal in design and destined for a long reign on America's smart tables! Flaunting fresh new colors, it's made of Melmac molding material—so you know it resists breaking, cracking and chipping, whisks beautifully through the hot water of dishwashers, including the automatic kind, won't surrender its good looks even when children attack it! Truly regal! Truly Royale!

Replacement Guaranteed

by The Branchell Co. if any dish breaks, cracks or chips in normal household use within one year from date of purchase. Look for Branchell's guarantee certificate and for the tag that says Melmac, sure sign that you're getting the real thing!

MELMAC is a registered trade-mark of American Cyanamid Company, N. Y. 20, N. Y., supplier of Melmac Molding Compounds to manufacturers who fashion high quality dinnerware in a variety of designs and colors. ROYALE, shown here, is an exclusive design of The Branchell Co., St. Louis 10, Mo.

for getting wood), another for eating dinner and of course another before doing the dishes because "somebody might come over." On occasion they would experiment with different blemish removers. One night when they both came in to kiss us good night coated entirely with some pure white stuff that smelled like creosote and made them look like plaster casts, I said mildly, "Are you sure that is good for your skin?"

Joan said, "Look at my face. My pores are so enormous I look like a cribbage board."

I examined her face as well as I could through the white paste and said, "Your skin looks fine to me."

"Naturally you'd say that," Joan said. "Because you don't care. You cook rich foods all the time because you want us to break out."

Then there were the clothes so vitally important. Everything long and loose and pitiful. Boys' coats. Men's sweaters. Don's shirts. Boys' jeans and T shirts. Wooden shoes, loafers, dirty saddle shoes. Exactly the right kind of white socks turned down an exact number of inches. The first high heels and the furious outburst in the shoe store—"You're glad my feet are so big because you know it hurts my feelings!"

No matter what garment I bought Anne and Joan, the grass was always greener in somebody else's closet. They and their schoolmates exchanged clothes constantly. Anne and Joan would leave for school in one outfit, come home in another. It was hard for me to understand this because all the skirts, blouses, sweaters and coats were exactly alike.

Next in importance to clothes were eating and dieting. For weeks everything would be so-so. The girls would come home from school with their accompanying wake of Jeanies, Lindas, Ruthies, Sandys, Bonnies, Chuckies, Normies, Bills and Jims, go directly to the kitchen, and the refrigerator door would begin to thump rhythmically like the tail of a friendly dog, as they devoured everything not marked with a skull and crossbones or frozen. During those intervals any old thing I cooked—stew, spaghetti or deep-fried pot holders—was greeted with, "Is that all you made? We're starving."

Then one morning I decided to get up early and cook something very nice for my growing girls with their long chain of Ruthies, Jeanies, and so on, who apparently didn't care if they slept six in a bed or in the fireplace just so it was every night at our house. "I'll make French toast," I said fondly to Tudor as I flitted happily around, getting out the real maple sirup and crowding another place on the table each time another gruesome little figure in a torn petticoat, bobby pins and calomine lotion appeared and asked me where the iron was.

When I had a stack of golden French toast about two feet high, I called loudly that breakfast was ready. After an interval the girls began straggling in, dripping with my perfume and, of course, wearing one another's clothes.

"Hurry and drink your orange juice. I've made French toast," I said proudly.

"I hope you didn't cook any for me," Anne said, sitting down at the table and unscrewing the top on a bottle of nail polish. "I'm dieting and all I want is one hard-boiled egg."

"Why do you always fix orange juice?" Joan said. "Tomato juice has only fifty calories."

The various Ruthies and Jeanies said to my offers of French toast, "None for me, thanks, Mrs. MacDonald. I'm just going to have black coffee or warm water and lemon juice or a hard-boiled egg."

AFTER they had gone I grimly dumped the lovely golden-brown French toast into the raccoons' pan and decided that this was the last time I would ever get up and cook breakfast for my disagreeable little daughters and their ungrateful little friends.

After school the locusts arrived on schedule, but only the boys ate. The girls sipped tea. Then came dinner and no matter what I cooked—rare roast beef, brook trout, grou round steak broiled—it was never on th diet. I don't know what diet they were on, it was apparently the same one Mary's dau ters and friends are using today, a spe high-school diet that calls for one plate fudge, three Cokes and a pound of che eaten in private and one small celery stalk half a grapefruit nibbled at the dinner ta Mother used to infuriate Anne and Joan quoting:

"There was a young lady named Maud Famed both at home and abroad,
To eat at the table
She never was able
But in the back pantry, my God!"

Of course you can't discuss adolesce without getting on the subject of sex, discussion of which occupied a promin place in our dinner-table conversation dur those years. Don and I tried to be very fri with Anne and Joan and encouraged them be very frank with us. We answered t questions with medical terms and, we hop the correct casualness. The result was that matter who came to dinner, the conversa was dappled with remarks about Lesbi prostitutes and nymphomaniacs in wh Anne and Joan and their friends seemed to extremely interested. Adolescents enjoy- fact, will go to most any length to get— center of attention.

I LEARNED after a while, a long while, th I displayed shock or any other interes reaction during these discussions they w on and on and on. So I became able finall toss it off—to say casually, "Please pass gravy," right in the middle of the gory de of the story about Murdene Plunkett, " prostitute" who picked up a soldier in movie, and then brazenly accepted Ge Herod's invitation to the Senior Ball.

I encouraged Anne and Joan to read f the time they first learned how. Our libra large and varied, and beyond casual sug tions I made no attempt to monitor their s tions. One rainy school morning Anne a me for a piece of wrapping paper, to wra a book so it wouldn't get wet. I offere wrap the book for her and she handed Lady Chatterley's Lover. I said, trying hard to speak casually, "Why are you ta this book to school, Andy?"

"Because I'm going to give a book re on it," she said just as casually as she adju her bandanna.

"Have you read it?" I asked.

"Part of it," she said. "It's awfully dull D. H. Lawrence is supposed to be a writer, isn't he?"

this suit has Sta-Nu

Looks like New! Colors Bright! Feels like New! Wrinkle-Resistant!

It's like the thrill of finding an all new wardrobe . . . when your dry cleaner cares for your clothes with Sta★Nu! To keep all your clothes looking lovelier longer, always send them to the dry cleaner using Sta★Nu, the process that replaces vital textile finishing agents lost through normal wear! And Sta★Nu costs you no more than ordinary dry cleaning!

Sta★Nu Corporation
4850 W. Belmont Ave.
Chicago 41, Ill.

Over 2,000 quality dry cleaners in the United States and Canada have been licensed to use the Sta★Nu process. Look in your classified telephone directory for this trademark. It identifies your Sta★Nu dry cleaner. If by chance none is listed, send us the name of the finest dry cleaner in your community. A few exclusive Sta★Nu franchises still are available for dry cleaners who qualify.

"He's not exactly what I wanted—he's what I could get."

tfully substituted The Turn of the oy Henry James, as a little more suit-l high-school English, just as dull but a r to carry in the rain.
urse the girls eventually came across d Ulysses quite openly on the couch ving room, but they didn't attempt to ok report on it. They adored Gone e Wind, but they thought Kitty Foyle ny. They loved Farewell to Arms, but t decide about The Grapes of Wrath of "that disgusting ending." They ortilla Flat, but were not enthusiastic nvitation to the Waltz or Alice Adams.
he girls talked a great deal about cation, tight strapless black evening and long cigarette holders, but when peared they talked in raucous voices, like hyenas and pushed one another boys rudely.
and Joan had always been, to my ed maternal ears, normally truthful
n. Joan told me when she broke the eld of Alcotts' car. Anne told me when led nail polish on my bedspread. They ld me when they took the candy out of cent store. Perhaps they each told me e other one did, but anyway I got the ne way or another, most of the time.
came adolescence and the birth of the obvious, bold-faced lie. The lie, told, y decided, to test parents out, to see ind of fools they really were. It began e lost wallet. Anne and Joan were each ve dollars a week allowance. This was er carfare, school lunches, Saturday and occasional shopping trips. One ay Anne told me that she had lost her and would have to have another five I asked her where she had lost her and she was very definite. It was in ck and Nelson's at the hat bar on the or at eleven A.M. on October fourth.
d that she had put the wallet on the right beside her while she tried on a d when she looked for it it was gone.
by one of the shoplifters with which re was crawling, she said. While she e this story Anne and Joan both fixed h large innocent blue eyes. Naturally ed them and gave Anne another five
The next Saturday the same thing
ed. Almost the same story, only this was the Vashon drugstore. I shelled other five dollars.

DAY morning Velma, my cleaning
, brought me Anne's green wallet, she had found behind the bed. In it o one-dollar bills and the stubs of four ats in the Fifth Avenue Theater. When ame home from school I showed her let and the theater tickets and said, why did you lie to me?"
said, "I don't know. I guess I just to see if I could."
d, "O.K., you each owe me five dollars.
n pay me two dollars a week."
said, "Carol's been lying to her mother nths and months—she never catches

n why does she always borrow money e?" Anne said furiously. "She owes me llars."
came skipping school. "Gosh, we had geometry test today," Anne announced er one night as she carefully pushed as into a string of green beads en-her potatoes.
had an algebra test," Joan said, taking disinterested sip of her milk. "It was ut I think I got an awfully good grade." d, "How do you think you did in ry, Andy?"
right I guess," Anne said. "I despise entron, but her tests aren't too hard."
d, "Speaking of geometry, Aunty Mary u coming out of the Paramount Thes afternoon."
ie said, "Oh, it couldn't have been us, MacDonald. We were all at school.
t we, Jeanie?"
ie said, "Sure they were, Mrs. Mac-
d. Ask Kathy."
d, "I don't have to ask anybody. I know ren't at school and I know you aren't for dinner because you have spent stuffing down popcorn and ice cream and candy and Cokes. Now clear the table, wash the dishes, do your studying and go to bed!"

Later on when Don and I were lying in bed reading and trying to take our mind off adolescence, I heard Ruthie say to Anne, who was taking her bath in our bathroom, "Gee, Anne, your mom's sure sweet. I wouldn't dare tell my mom I skipped school. She'd kill me."

Anne said, "Oh, she's all right, I guess. Do you think that Bill really likes me?"

I don't know how or when Anne and Joan learned to drive, but I do know that each one on the day of her sixteenth birthday demanded to be taken to town so she could go through the ridiculous routine of a driving test and be given a license to drive her steady's father's car and to lend our car to any bonehead friend who wished to back it onto a busy street without looking, run it into a tree, turn a corner without seeing "that dumb truck," or put it in reverse by mistake when going very fast. After a time I became accustomed to answering the phone and having a small quavering voice say, "Mrs. MacDonald, this is Joanne and I've had a little trouble with the car—your car, I mean—and there's a policeman who wants to speak to you."

Once when we had been up very late listening to "Then I said to Ted and Ted said to me" and then were kept awake further by King Cole and further still by the pattering of bare feet and shrieks and giggles and the thump of the refrigerator door and finally by the bedside light being switched on and Joan demanding, "Do you know where my down quilt is? We're making a bed for Evelyn on the porch," Don remarked with feeling, "What are we running here, a hostel? That Ruthie hasn't been home for two years. How come nobody wants to go anywhere but here? Why should we be the only ones with a string of empty Coke bottles on the mantel? Where are the other parents? What are they doing?"

Give the gift of beauty... EATON'S
FINE LETTER PAPERS

From the varied collection of Eaton gifts now in fine stores, everywhere: PETALET LETTERS—floral-framed paper—$1; BOUQUET—distinguished new size, with bouquet at top—$1.50; LOVE LETTERS—two colors of sheer paper—$1.50; YOUR AUTOGRAPH—a most suitable gift for a gentleman—$2.50 and $1.50, and RANDOMWEAVE CABINET—richly fabricked, deckled paper—$4.

EATON PAPER CORPORATION PITTSFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS

Yawning, I said, "Probably sitting around in their uncluttered houses saying, 'What is all this loose talk about the problems of adolescents? I don't find them any trouble at all.'"

Anne burst in and said, "Do you care if Carol smokes?"

"I don't care if she bursts into flame," Don said.

"Very funny," Anne said, "and very old." Taking our only package of cigarettes, she went out of the room again, slamming the door behind her.

"Never mind," I said to Don. "Someday they will marry and leave home."

"Are you sure?" Don said as he sadly sorted over the butts in his ash tray, finally selecting a pretty long one. He examined it critically for a minute or two and then, with a sigh, struck a match and lit it.

Now they are both married and each has three babies. They are loving wives, marvelous mothers, divine cooks and excellent housekeepers. Don and I are very proud of them, but more important, they like us. Their husbands like us. We are friends. Sometimes we are such good friends I get all six of the babies—the oldest is four—but I love it and it is awfully good for my figure.

Some lines from Vachel Lindsay keep coming back to me:

Gone were the skull-faced witch men lean. . . .
'Twas a land transfigured, 'twas a new creation. . . .
And on through the backwoods clearing flew:
"Mumbo-Jumbo is dead in the jungle, Never again will he hoo-doo you. Never again will he hoo-doo you."

Though Anne and Joan are grown up and Don and I are in our forties and grandparents six times over, Vashon Island hasn't changed a great deal. There are a few more houses, a few roadside signs (supposedly not allowed quite a few Cadillacs and foreign cars in tow on Saturdays, there is talk of a floating brid to the mainland, the telephone service is tiny bit better even though we still have fou teen people on our line. Ordinary living-eating, sleeping, keeping warm—is somewh easier than it used to be, but still has little common with urban life. Life is always struggle, but on an island you at least have feeling of having entered into personal, phy ical combat with it. Puget Sound spen every winter trying to batter down our se walls and reclaim the land. The rain tries push us down where the Sound can get at easier. Old logs lie hidden like unexplod bombs on the hills above us waiting f enough rain so they can come charging dow and flick our houses off the beach like ash off a cigarette.

Of course there have been times when have wondered if we did do the right thing moving to an island. If it was fair to An and Joan. If it was fair to me. Once I aske Don and he said:

"Guiding children through adolescence no joy ride no matter where you live. A least here on Vashon we had somethin to take our minds off it. Fun things suc as sawing wood or cleaning out the storm sewers."

Then I foolishly said, "And how do yo think it has been for us? For instance, ho do you think I compare to other women m age?"

Giving me a long, fond husbandly loo Don said, "Well, you don't look as tired a you did yesterday."

When the "men of the house" have colds you'll especially welcome Scotties' wet strength

"MAN SIZED" SNEEZES DON'T TEAR IT—
new Scotties stay strong even when wet!

Softer than ever—you can "blow good and hard" into a new Scottie and you don't poke a hole through it. Scotties have such amazing wet strength they don't crumble and tear in use.

When it comes to make-up, new "wet strength" Scotties take off the "oiliest" face creams neatly, without shredding, and without leaving annoying lint.

Yet—new Scotties are so soft their touch is always gentle on cold-tender skin.

Be sure to keep a good supply of new Scotties on hand for the whole family. Another great Scott value. Scotties are thrifty.

A simple test. Hold any non-wet strength tissue under the faucet. Water makes a hole instantly.

Hold a new Scottie under the faucet. You will see how it holds water without going to pieces. "SCOTTIES", REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

CHRISTMAS FUN IN THE KITCHEN

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 109

SESAME-SEED NIBBLES

Mix together ½ cup sesame seeds, 1 cup flou ½ teaspoon salt and a dash of cayenne peppe Cut in ⅓ cup cold butter or margarine. Ad enough ice water (about 2 tablespoons) make a dough the consistency of piecru Roll out ⅛" thick and cut into small roun with a 1½" cooky cutter. Place on greas baking sheet. Pat more sesame seeds on the top. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., f 20 minutes until light tan. Before removin from pan, and while hot, sprinkle light with salt. These may be kept in a covere tin or cracker jar, and reheated before bein served. Makes 5 dozen.

On the morning before Christmas when th cake and cooky baking and the candymakin are all done, the wreaths are hung and th whole house looks and smells like Christma honor one more tradition—that of makin the Christmas bread. In many countries th rite is more important than making Christm cakes and cookies. Of Norwegian origin, th one is aromatic of cardamom.

CHRISTMAS BRAIDS

Measure ½ cup shortening, ⅔ cup sugar, teaspoons salt, ¼ teaspoon crushed cardamom seed and 1 teaspoon cinnamon into large mixing bowl. Add 2 cups scalded milk Cool to lukewarm and add 2 packages yeast compressed or dry, softened in ¼ cup luke warm water. Next, add 2 beaten eggs and cups flour. Mix well. Add 1 cup white raisin 1 cup shredded citron and 1 cup sliced cand died cherries. Beat in 4 more cups flou Place dough in greased bowl, cover and le rise until double in bulk. Punch down an knead on lightly floured board. Shape into braids or 2 round loaves. Place on greased baking sheet and let rise again. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., about 45 minutes Brush with melted butter or margarine and cool on a rack.

And now, enjoy yourselves. Gifts you bu are wrapped in secret and hidden in closets t await the giving time. Gifts you make are fo all in the family to see and admire with pride in having helped create them. EN

OTHER VIEWS OF VOGUE PATTERNS
ON PAGES 62 & 63

ue Design No. S-4545. "Easy to Make" coat; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. $1.00. White lamé coat with Orlon-fleece lining requires 3 yards of each fabric (50–52″ wide) in Size 14. The lining is cut exactly like the coat and faces it to edge. Turn up the hems separately.

ue Design No. 8016. "Easy to Make" one-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 40. 60c.

ue Design No. 829. One-piece dress and coat (coat sleeves are optional); 12 to 20, 30 to 38. $2.50.

ue Design No. 7807. Blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 46. 50c.

ue Design No. 8300. "Very Easy to Make" skirt and shorts (not illustrated); 24 to 30 waist measure. 50c.

ue Design No. 8493. "Very Easy to Make" blouse and cummerbund; 10 to 18, 28 to 36. 50c.

ue Design No. 8461. "Very Easy to Make" skirt or tie-on skirt; 24 to 32 waist measure. 50c.

ue Design No. 8494. "Easy to Make" blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 40. 50c.

ue Design No. 7948. "Easy to Make" bodices; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.

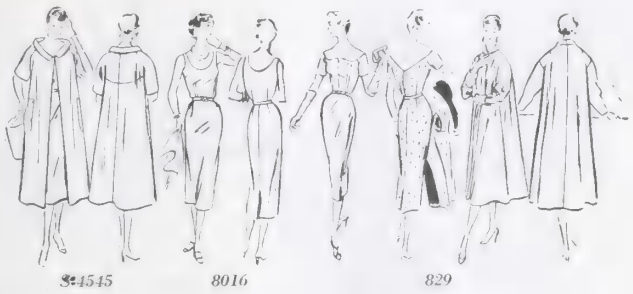
ue Design No. 8495. "Easy to Make" skirt: 24 to 30 waist measure. 50c.

ue Design No. 8320. Blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.

ue Design No. 8423. "Easy to Make" blouse: 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.

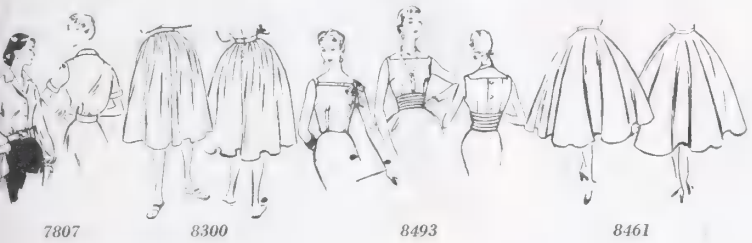
ue Design No. 7716. Pants, 24 to 32 waist measure. 50c.

ue Design No. 7394. "Easy to Make" blouse; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 50c.



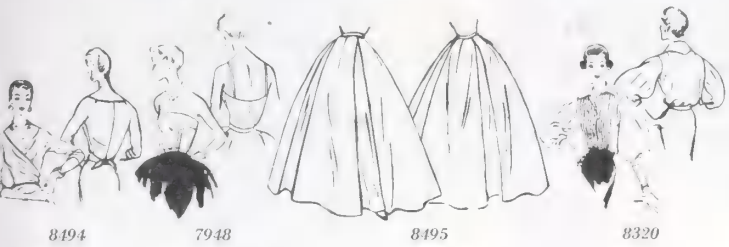
ue Design No. 6949. "Easy to Make" skirt; 24 to 32 waist. 50c.

ue Design No. 8419. "Easy to Make" two-piece dress; 12 to 20, 30 to 38. 75c.

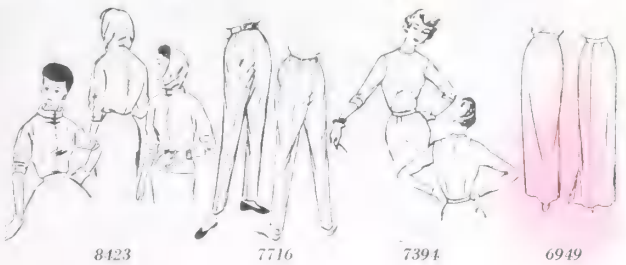


ue Design No. 8267. Boy shirt; 12 to 20, 30 to 40. 50c.

ue Design No. 8199. "Easy to Make" skirt; 24 to 32 waist measure. 50c.



further information about all fabrics and where to buy them, write to Pattern or, Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia 5. Pa. The jewel-trimmed border print India-print spreads may also be bought plain. The bow stole is made from a 5- length of fabric, the loops of the bow forming the sleeves.



S-4545 8016 829

7807 8300 8493 8461

8494 7948 8495 8320

8423 7716 7394 6949

8419 8267 8199

GENTLE EX-LAX HELPS YOU TOWARD YOUR NORMAL REGULARITY

TONIGHT—If you need a laxative, take chocolated EX-LAX, America's best-tasting laxative. Take it at bedtime—it won't disturb your sleep.

IN THE MORNING—You'll enjoy the closest thing to natural action. No discomfort or upset. You'll soon feel like yourself again!

NEXT DAY—EX-LAX continues to help you toward your normal regularity. You hardly ever have to take EX-LAX again the next night!

Buy The New 65¢ Size—Save As Much As 37¢

Also available in 30¢ and 12¢ sizes

EX-LAX

THE CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE FOR YOUNG AND OLD

MORE PEOPLE USE EX-LAX THAN ANY OTHER LAXATIVE

©1954 Ex-Lax Inc.

Now Many Wear

FALSE TEETH

With Little Worry

Eat, talk, laugh or sneeze without fear of insecure false teeth dropping, slipping or wobbling. FASTEETH holds plates firmer and more comfortably. This pleasant powder has no gummy, gooey, pasty taste or feeling. Doesn't cause nausea. It's alkaline (non-acid). Checks "plate odor" (denture breath). Get FASTEETH at any drug counter.

NEW! Dr Scholl's BALL-O-FOOT Cushion

—LOOPS OVER TOE →

QUICK RELIEF for Callouses, Tenderness, Burning at Ball of Foot

Made of soft LATEX FOAM and NYLON

Just like Walking on Cushions in even the HIGHEST Heel Shoes!

It's entirely NEW! Without adhesive, scientifically designed Dr. Scholl's BALL-O-FOOT Cushion loops over toe and nestles under ball of foot. Quickly relieves painful callouses, burning, tenderness. Gives priceless walking ease. Your shoe—not you—absorbs the shock of each step. Flesh color. Worn invisibly. Washable. Only $1.00 pair at Drug, Shoe, Department and 5-10¢ Stores and Dr. Scholl's Foot Comfort® Shops. If not obtainable locally, order direct, enclosing $1.00. State if for woman or man.

DR. SCHOLL'S, INC., Dept. 8B, Chicago 10, Ill.

RELIEF IN

COLDS

FEEL BETTER

WHILE YOU'RE

GETTING BETTER

use the Alka-Seltzer®

BRAND

cold comfort treatment

A ALKA-SELTZER for the ache-all-over feverish feeling.

B Be careful. Beware of drafts, get more rest.

C Comfort the irritated throat by gargling with ALKA-SELTZER.

MILES LABORATORIES, INC., Elkhart, Ind.

How long since you've taste real cheese?

Miss Wisconsin is real ch Not process cheese. Miss consin's incredibly good fl is achieved by letting it age urally . . . at its own sweet p Miss Wisconsin Cheddar proud Wisconsin cheese. Ser pridefully, at room temperat with fruit or rye bread. An sure to try it the gourmet's all by itself, thoughtfully savo

ARMOUR STAR ®

Miss Wisconsin

Natural CHEDDAR CHEESE

ALSO MISS WISCONSIN SHARP CLUB, SWISS, BRICK, AND BLUE

Miss Wisconsin Cheddar comes from the Wisconsi River Country folks who cut it into handy wedges—sharp-aged, medium-aged, or mild. For free recipe write: Marie Gifford, Dept. 205, Armour and Com pany, Chicago 9, Illinois.

st year, before new baby rry was born, Santa was y with notes from nine!

Marnita, 10, wanted a world globe or—if possible—skis.

, likes music, asked hatever Santa has."

Sherry, 7, had a feminine hope: a party tea set "with all the knives and forks."

y, 6, when "very little," cided to be a nurse. Nurse and candy pills, please?

4½ (two minutes older twin) yearned for a belt and cap gun.

Clark, 4½, hoped for a real Indian bow and arrow (he'd already tried making his own).

½, wanted a Western o be like the twins.

ark, 2, could use a flash-ht of his own so he could ke it shine all day long.

Scotty, almost 1, loves excitement most of all. And he's sure to get his wish!

Christmas morning: 3 A.M. Stockings are up. Spruce is gala. Gifts are stacked. Now for a nap. At 7 A.M., children will tumble into the room—and from then on it's pandemonium.

TEN ANGELS FOR CHRISTMAS

Ray and Marvel Crookston sing carols with a full choir—their own ten cherubs.

BY ROSEMARY JONES
PHOTOGRAPHS BY RUTH ORKIN

"Our claim to distinction is in having had ten children in the first eleven years of our marriage. I am thirty and my husband is thirty-two. We are Mormons and our religion does not make an issue of birth control.

"Our own private theory is that, as long as we both have such perfect health, to deny life to any potential child of ours because of some possible future financial insecurity would be a breach of faith with our Creator."

THE first year Ray and Marvel Crookston were married, Marvel's mother sent them a Christmas card showing seventeen small angels in choir robes, wrote underneath, "You get them here and I'll see that they're dressed!" So for years Marvel and Ray jokingly planned to have seventeen children. "Now that we're over halfway," Marvel laughs, "it's not quite the joke it seemed then! But Benjamin Franklin was fifteenth in a family of seventeen, and who'd want to miss one like that?"

No one, on first seeing "all those children," can believe that they belong to the young Crookstons. Marvel looks just about twenty-three or twenty-four, partly because she is small—not quite five feet tall—partly because her fair skin, clear blue eyes and short brown hair are like a girl's. Ray, long a hunter and skier, is brown and wiry. In summer the whole family piles into the car—a station wagon, so there's room for all—several evenings a week to picnic.

A stranger called across to Ray one evening, "Is that your Sunday-school class?"

Ray looked around at his family and grinned. "Yes," he said good-naturedly, "every day."

The Crookstons have so many children simply because they want them. They all have wonderful health—Marvel "snaps back like a rubber band" after each baby, according to her doctor. For the Crookstons their children are their career. The care and feeding, bathing and dressing and loving of ten, day in, day out, take all the energy of both, but because they are doing what they want to do, that energy seems inexhaustible. "When a couple agrees on all the fundamentals," Ray believes, "they can make any dream come true." For Ray and Marvel their dreams—and their love—have grown with the family. "He is pretty special," Marvel frankly admits. "With so many ears listening," Ray laughs, "we couldn't quarrel even if we wanted to!"

The Crookstons met in 1942 when Marvel, not quite eighteen, visited Portland, Oregon, with a girl friend whose brother roomed with Ray. The friend was Ray's girl, and Marvel admits she was envious from the first day! On the last night of the girls' stay, when Ray and Marvel had a few minutes' talk alone, he said, "We have so much to find out about each other. I don't even know your birthday!"

She told him her birthday (August 20), and he promised to call long-distance. When the call came he invited her to visit his family in Logan, Utah, before CONTINUED ON PAGE 142

As gaiety mounts, Mark and Joey whirl each other excitedly on an upside-down piano stool in between their cooky-cutting jobs.

Marnita, Gail, Sherry and Kay braid and button one another while Marvel does a morning's baking—12 loaves of bread in two ovens.

The children provide eparations all their own . . .
5 little boys help Marvel ake cakes and candy while big girls make decorations.

Mouths fly open like birds' as Clark, Joe and Byron get lunch and bath together.

"Train, train!" Mark exclaims, wide-eyed. There's a bow and arrow for Clark—a nurse's kit for Kay.

"With a family like ours, you have a steady entertainment!" Once a week, girls take turns M.C.'ing and every Crookston sings, plays, dances or recites (Mark fiddled in an impromptu act). After final applause, M.C. serves popcorn.

Grandma Sharp makes girls' dresses—forty in a batch. For Christmas she sent only three cowboy hats for boys, but Marvel found Indian bonnet for Clark.

Young
HOW AMERICA LIVES

There'll be 25 for Christmas dinner—all 12 Crookstons, andparents, and some company to "fill things out."

Crookstons manage on $4700 income. Ray, patient with his small "helpers," feels: "If you're happy and healthy, it's a privilege to share your blessings with children."

Ray and Marvel, Mormons, give a tenth of their income to church. Three nights a week, Ray does home repairs and chores for widows and elderly church members who need assistance.

"With so many little ones learning the rules of growing up, there are problems. But the problem are outweighed by the love shining in their faces whenever a new baby enters the family circle."

Young HOW AMERICA LIVES

Ninth baby, Scotty, was born 15 minutes after Marvel drove to the hospital. Gail totes him tenderly. All the girls receive special notes from Marvel when each baby is born—she doesn't want them to feel lonely.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 140 she started her freshman year at Utah's Brigham Young University in Provo.

After that visit they knew their hearts, but both sets of parents felt they were too young. Ray went into the Army Air Corps in October. Marvel wrote so enthusiastically about Ray to her parents in Independence, Missouri, that her father flew out to Provo to urge her not to do anything rash—to wait—and she promised. When she married Ray during his Christmas furlough—on January 6, 1943, at Logan Temple—she thought she had waited, quite a number of weeks!

After the wedding (Marvel made her own wedding dress, of white brocade and taffeta), they occupied the time during the bus trip back to his base by planning their family. Six children, they decided—twins first of all.

According to Mormon faith, mortal life is only a small part of the long life of the spirit. The Crookstons do not worry about the temporary difficulties that might beset children in this world. They work to give them the security of a happy childhood, and hope that this security will be great enough to cushion them in adult life. The Mormon principle of the "eternal family" lies behind all the Crookstons think and do.

Marvel followed Ray from one Army base to another until he was sent overseas for six months' duty in Korea, three months in Japan. Then she went back to Missouri, where her parents made a basement apartment in their own home for the new family.

Ray had enlisted during his sophomore year in college. When he was discharged from the Army nearly five years later, he and Marvel had three little girls—Marnita (named for her mother and grandmother, but called "Nini"), Gail and Sherry. So, though Ray has a brother who is a doctor, another who is a dentist ("which helps us immensely!"), he decided to take an apprenticeship CONTINUED ON PAGE 144

No. 10

Last year, Marvel printed 50 family photos for far-off friends. This year needs a new edition—baby Merry has arrived for first Christmas on earth, is getting acquainted with Grandpa Sharp and circle of faces around her crib.

Believe-it-or-not dessert! It bakes in your sleep —and it's party fare with tree-ripened peaches ☆

☆ fruit given every hour it needs on the tree to bring you finest flavor, texture and color in the can

One reason this dessert is so good is the care that goes into growing DEL MONTE Brand Peaches.

Come harvest time, the world's largest staff of peach experts visit every DEL MONTE orchard every day. Their job: to see that our peaches stay on the bough till they're ripe enough to give you mellow flavor, tenderness and glowing color when you serve them.

Doesn't that give you one big clue to why DEL MONTE Peaches are so dependable — the best-liked brand of peaches in the whole world?

PEACH MYSTERY DESSERT

- 5 egg whites, at room temperature
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- 1 cup sugar
- 1 cup whipping cream, whipped and sweetened with
- 2 teaspoons sugar
- Few drops of almond extract
- 6 to 8 DEL MONTE Brand Peach Halves

Preheat oven to 450° F. (hot) for 15 minutes. Beat egg whites and salt together until stiff. (With electric mixer, use high speed.) Take 15 minutes (while oven is heating) to add the cup of sugar, 1 teaspoon at a time, while continuing to beat. It is very important to add the sugar slowly. Divide mixture evenly into 6 to 8 well-greased glass custard cups (or spread evenly in well-greased 8 or 9-inch square baking pan). Place in pre-heated oven, close oven door and turn off the heat. Let stand in oven overnight, or at least 6 hours. At serving time top with sweetened whipped cream flavored with almond extract, and drained peach halves. Serves 6 to 8.

Packed two ways . . . halves and slices

Del Monte® Peaches

—the brand you know puts flavor first

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 142

in plumbing in his father-in-law's business in Independence, rather than go back to college. During his apprenticeship, Kay was born.

Even with a fast-growing family, the Crookstons have never found it difficult to shuttle cross-country by car. When Ray graduated to journeyman, the Crookstons moved back to Logan, Utah, Ray's home town, and settled permanently into a story-and-a-half house complete with basement and garage. With rebuilding and remodeling, it comfortably accommodated the five little boys who came along in quick succession—twins Byron and Clark, Joe, Mark and Scotty. The Logan house is home to the Crookstons, although just temporarily it's leased while the family is once more in Independence, where Ray is helping out in his father-in-law's plumbing business, and where baby Merry was born this year.

Most of the decorating and rebuilding of their Logan home was done by Ray and Marvel. Marvel painted two rooms, papered six others (including ceilings). Ray converted the basement and garage into extra rooms. Both believe in investing in appliances instead of extra help, and the investment pays off richly. Two loads every day are put through the washer, four loads when the beds are changed. The dryer (picked up at one third the usual cost through one of Ray's plumbing contacts) has already paid for itself in time saved. The kitchen is the heart-center of their house: plenty of cupboard space (though none so high the boys don't climb to the top!); dishwasher, sink, oversized refrigerator; and two ranges side by side, to give Marvel eight burners, two ovens. Wherever the Crookstons find themselves, there are signs of a full and busy world! A large box always filled with rubbers and boots sits inside their door. A row of low hooks holds coats and caps of all sizes.

Marvel is a born organizer, who thinks ahead unconsciously, is never rigid in plans (as if she could be), never upset when the program changes. When the Crookstons have all piled into the car for a long drive, she sits in front talking with Ray, but her quick ear sorts out every sound from the hectic back seats. A cry goes up—to anyone else just a part of the general hubbub—but Marvel asks quickly, "Who's standing on Joe?" She knows what each child is doing most of the time; she has an unconscious sixth sense that checks feet for rubbers, heads for caps. She knows when a cry is real, and when it's just exuberance and can safely be ignored.

Ray is a hard worker, is trained in welding, mechanical drawing and blueprint reading, as well as plumbing. His income (about $4700 a year) is unsteady, but as sure as he can make it.

Ten per cent of the Crookstons' income (and a little extra) goes to the church. In addition, Ray gives several evenings a week to church welfare projects. Tithing is spiritually important to Ray and Marvel, and through the church they are assured of care and help for their children at any time of need.

On the job Ray works hard, but his real work begins when he steps through the door of his home. Then his heart and mind are fully absorbed.

At lunchtime the children fly to him. Gail and Sherry have school news, Kay describes the morning in kindergarten. Nini is reading one of the inevitable books, but she's only waiting for the clamor to die so she can begin one of the long discussions she loves—about animals, or stars, or gravity, or ancient Rome. The twins and Joe are full of the morning's adventures, Mark jumps on his father with a loud shout for attention. Marvel, stirring gravy, smiles across at Ray over the hubbub.

Ray can turn his hand to anything, and does. Unconsciously he has looked over the situation, decided what needs doing first. It may be the growing pile of pans in the sink—even with the dishwasher, there are always extras. Or the living room may need straightening for the afternoon. (The heavy vacuum cleaner is used half a dozen times a day.) Or Scotty has waked up and needs changing. Ray begins almost before his coat is off; he and Marvel work together.

To keep the clatter to a minimum at lunch, Ray starts a game—twenty questions or a word game. He takes every opportunity to enlarge the children's knowledge. While he's putting the four little boys to bed he may tell them Bible stories or stories of animals and plants, or of history—especially American history and the settling of the West. For the children there is always something new to think about, and mealtime is their favorite time for questions.

The children share family responsibility as well as family fun, and each little girl spends half an hour every day helping with household chores. They set or clear the table, straight the front rooms, make beds.

Clearing the table is not Sherry's favor occupation, and occasionally during lunch loud cry goes up; Sherry has been badly hu "Never mind," Marvel says with goo natured cynicism, "it'll be all well as soon the dishes are cleared away!"

How have they fed the whole family all th years on $100 a month? "Our methods could of interest only to a fraternity house," Mar laughs. Their large freezer (down payment fr Ray's GI insurance dividend) is filled. R has often bagged a deer—or, with luck, two during hunting season. Pheasants, duck a salmon (from canyon rivers and lakes) h gone into the freezer too. Potatoes bought hundred-pound sacks (six sacks last fall $1.25 each) are stored in a root cellar. Mar cans fruits and soup stock in hundreds of h gallon jars. The whole family went last su mer to strip a peach orchard of the last of fruit. For the cleanup job the fruit was gi to them. Marvel and Ray worked all that ni peeling and canning, had 308 quarts peaches. Marvel bakes at least once a w (usually twice), ne fewer than two loaves at a time. T pans of hot rolls, two more of cin mon rolls, go i the oven the sa day. They own p interest in a nei bor's cow. The milk has been s plemented w canned milk for babies, and hom enized milk from grocery. They eggs by the half-c Three filling, v balanced meals on the table e day. There's n any problem at leftovers!

After lunch older girls go t to school, Ray i to work, and the tle of the naps be Kay is usually g about resting, b the boys don't settle down she doesn't ei "Byron is bothering me," she reports. " don't you slip in and lie on my bed?" Ma suggests. "But you'll have to be very q Mark's there, and I think he's almost asle

Kay wanders away and Marvel turns t to Scotty. She's feeding him his baby f loving him as she does. She bites his toes makes a buzzing sound as her finger ho over him like a bee. She was wrong a Mark. Joe wanders out, says righteo "Markie's out of bed." Marvel's eyebrow up. "Where's Joe?" she asks, laughing.

Joe, the most reluctant napper, has wo out ingenious stalls. Now, in addition to regular kiss, he must give Marvel the "bu fly kiss" (winking rapidly so that his eyela brush her cheek), the duck kiss (qu-qu-ack), the piggy kiss, and so through animal world. At last he disappears back the bedroom.

After Scotty is fed and back in his play Marvel lies down with Mark or Joe, which is still awake. Her relaxation come snatches, just as her individual attention t children does. All day long she seizes e chance to love one or another especially t to hear about his own problems—when putting little boys into sleepers after bath, when she's braiding the girls' hai school.

Ray's and Marvel's understanding of children comes not only from deep love, from vivid memories of their own childho Remembering the special loneliness girls sometimes feel in their teens, Ma wrote a personal letter to each of her da ters during the hospital stays after each was born. She wrote about how much new baby was wanted and loved, how name had been chosen, all the happy th

NEXT MONTH

"We have no retirement blues, believe me, we're much too busy!"

In 1951, at 70, Guy and Maude Sarvis bought two and a half acres of Florida jungle "replete with chiggers, wood roaches and snakes." On it, doing most of the work themselves, they built the house they'd longed for all their lives.

Today, accept their invitation to "Birdsong" (if it's Saturday, the square-dance club will be meeting) and see

HOW YOUNG AMERICA LIVES—AT SEVENTY-FIVE!

By BETTY COE SPICER

IN THE JANUARY JOURNAL

SOFTASILK CAKE FLOUR,

the glamor ingredient, gives you glamorous cakes that are gifts straight from the heart!

What better holiday cake can you bake than luscious Lord Baltimore? Made with Softasilk and the new "LoveLight" recipe, it takes only 2 eggs and only 2 minutes of batter beating. For best results in "LoveLight" cake use Wesson Oil and Softasilk Cake Flour, the glamor ingredient that assures you higher, lighter, more delicious cakes. Only the "Top Twelfth O' The Crop" is good enough for Softasilk. No other cake flour or cake mix can give you better results!

Betty Crocker's "LoveLight" recipe is in every Softasilk package.

Betty Crocker's LORD BALTIMORE Icing and Filling

⅔ cup sugar
½ cup white corn syrup
3 tbsp. water
⅛ cup egg whites (about 2)
½ tsp. lemon extract
½ tsp. grated orange rind
½ cup chopped walnuts
½ cup chopped red and green candied cherries
1 cup shredded coconut

Blend sugar, syrup, water in small saucepan. Boil rapidly until mixture spins a 6 to 8" thread, or 242°. When mixture begins to boil, beat egg whites until stiff enough to stand in peaks. Pour hot syrup in thin, steady stream into beaten egg whites, beating constantly with beater until it stands in very stiff peaks. Blend in lemon extract, orange rind. Into ⅓ of the icing, blend the walnuts and cherries. Spread between layers for filling. Ice top and sides of cake with rest of icing. Sprinkle coconut all over cake.

SOFTASILK CAKE FLOUR

ut the new arrival. The letters are put the future.
mas, the season of the heart, brings and Marvel's strength and love to the ause being together is the way of life Crookstons, Christmas is the happiest heir year.
in December Marvel starts sounding children on what Santa Claus should He was 'Santy Closet' around here ongest time—the kids knew about the ut not about Claus!") One year, when vas short, she sat up late many nights twenty doll outfits by hand—dresses, and coats. Last year with finances she allowed roughly $5 for each child, om Ray's extra earnings during the d for extras she had the $10 apiece her nually gives and Ray.
r list is come sends a ler to a mail-ouse, and unobtrusive on, tries to e children's n their orig-
ts, in spite of and brighter plays.
much inner on the queshether Santa ould bring or a globe world, last i decided to r skis. Her talked it kis meant a investment ey usually ow for one but good Nini could by all the in turn. Her are just right now. Then, rvel and Ray
r for Nini, mazingly ree, not to bea "little without a od of her ay, an enc skier himdertook the or skis.
oid duplicaarvel peeked children's s sent by her Why had she y three wided cowboy now that big boy at ew all about bo ha"?
searched
h several finally found an Indian headdress
e with feathers to go with Clark's d arrow. Cars and trucks were added cowboy and Indian equipment. For there was (besides his flashlight) a train that could be taken apart—and taken apart again, wheel by wheel!
e wrapping Gail's "rocket skates"— springs to be attached to shoes for nd higher jumping—Marvel took a ng look at them. "I always wanted a en I was little." Because she had noay's disapproval of a friend's nurse's ch came without candy pills, she care-ed small bottles with red shot and little ellets, left over from cake decoration.

ays flew, and fun at home was mixed Christmas programs at church and Christmas was everywhere. Among zens of things every mother does in ber, Marvel remembers when . . .
she asked Joe, "Whose birthday is nas?" He considered the question, then said with a broad smile, "Santy Claus!" Marvel, shocked, quickly taught the children new words to the birthday song, "Happy birthday, dear Jesus, Merry Christmas to all," until the idea was firmly implanted.

. . . she drove the little girls downtown for their Christmas shopping. Nini, with $1.50, and Gail, with $1.35, managed to buy something for each member of the family. Gail found miniature sunglasses to fit her sisters' dolls. Sherry, with only a quarter to spend, was so intrigued by a packet of tissues for cleaning eyeglasses that she recklessly gave 10 cents to buy one for Clark. (His glasses make it easier to tell the twins apart—when Clark remembers to wear them.)

. . . she went to the Christmas service at church and heard the small children, lined up behind the altar rail, singing The Cradle Song in thin high voices. Byron, Clark and Joe, looking like cherubs, had their heads together on the front row, and Marvel groaned to herself. "I told the teacher to keep them apart!" she whispered to Ray. "Somebody'll shove somebody else and they'll all go over the rail."

. . . she heard Kay directing the boys as they sang one of the "family songs" to the tune of a favorite nursery rhyme ("This year," Marvel says, "we'll add baby Merry's name to it!"):

"We're the Crookston family, ho ho!
We have fun wherever we go—
There's daddy and mamma, Byron and Joe,
There's Clark and Mark and Scott, ho ho!
There's Nini and Gail and Sherry and Kay—
We have fun every day!"

. . . she helped the children wrap their presents at the big dining-room table. The boys industriously wrapped handkerchiefs for daddy. Nini and Gail, the only ones interested in secrecy, retired to mamma's bedroom, where Marvel heard Nini instructing her sister, "Take the price tags off." "Why?" Gail asked, frankly curious.

. . . she helped with spelling as Kay printed addresses on Christmas cards for grandma and grandpa and her teacher. "Is F like a E only with two little outs?" Kay asked.

On a snowy afternoon last winter Marvel walked over with the girls to admire the tree and window decorations at school. Whittier School, just across the street from the Crookstons' home, is the teacher-training school for Utah State College in Logan. The teachers assure Marvel that her children are above average, easier to work with than many—perhaps because they are used to group life at home!

One of the most important Christmas events in Logan is the school's cantata. For the cantata Nini and Gail had to be dressed in bathrobes as shepherds, and Sherry and Kay in flannel pajamas (children ready for bed on Christmas Eve). At the last minute Marvel brought out her rouge and lipstick, made up each bright face. Ray dressed the twins and

HOW THE CROOKSTONS SPEND THEIR MONEY EACH MONTH

Ray's income as a plumber varies, but averages $390 a month. The first deduction—10 per cent—goes to their church. While the Crookstons are in Missouri, the friends who lease their Utah house make mortgage payments to the bank. In Utah, the Crookston budget holds steadily to these sums. But in Missouri, Marvel has found food expense edging upward, is currently making arrangements to buy food wholesale, as they have done in the past. Social Security is taken out of Ray's check. And P.S.—With all those exemptions, Ray has no income tax to worry about!

Church (10 per cent of income, plus small extra assessments)	$ 43.00
Food	100.00
Mortgage payment (including interest and taxes)	72.00
Utilities (fuel, light, water, telephone)	37.50
Insurance and savings	40.00
Medical, dental, hospital insurance (one-year average)	15.00
Car expenses	22.00
Music lessons (piano for the four girls)	16.00
Furniture and appliances	15.00
Recreation (includes magazines, newspapers, toys; records)	10.00
Clothing (Marvel's mother dresses the children)	4.00
Dry cleaning, shoe repair	3.50
Union dues	12.00
Total	$390.00

YOU'RE PAMPERED

...much more than you know

Living's pretty well cushioned nowadays by people you never see—thousands and thousands of specialists in product development, employed by brand names manufacturers to win your favor.

Look who work for you all the time!—armies of scientists, doctors and chemists; dieticians, cosmeticians and stylists; engineers, designers and researchers. And all to protect you from inferiority . . . all to safeguard your health, promote your comfort, lighten your labors, brighten your morale, sharpen your appetite, polish up your looks, and boost your ego.

See what we mean?

Formula for pleasant living: follow the ads in this magazine.

BRAND NAMES FOUNDATION INCORPORATED
A NON-PROFIT EDUCATIONAL FOUNDATION
37 WEST 57 STREET, NEW YORK 19, N.Y.

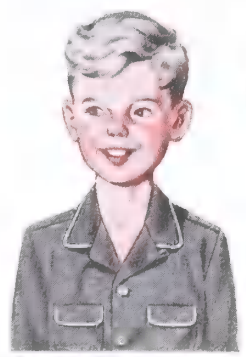
WANT PROTECTION? PATRONIZE THE DEALER WHO PROVIDES YOUR FAVORITE BRANDS

"WHITE TOUCH" is brand-new!... and just in time for Christmas!

The world's most famous shirts for Dads are now available for lads!

Here's an exciting new shirt to rate a big smile from any boy on Christmas morn. Arrow "White Touch" for Grads (sizes 12 to 20) and Juniors (sizes 4 to 12). Rich, deep tones are accented with white saddle stitching and piping. They're washable, and will wear almost forever.

There's a "White Touch" shirt for your boy, be he 6 or 16. Above, red with white for Grads. Arrow "White Touch" is priced at $5.00.



ARROW
SHIRTS FOR BOYS
by Cluett, Peabody & Co., Inc.

"White Touch" in charcoal and white for Grads. $5.00

"White Touch" in charcoal and white for Grads. $5.00

"White Touch" in charcoal and white for Juniors. $3.95

Joe, who had been looking forward to this for days. The twins had new shoes and spent much time proudly kicking at each other.

Marvel, the last to get ready, made a lightning change from her red denim coverall to a black faille dress. She stepped into black pumps, put a bright pin at her shoulder, rescued the lipstick from Nini and touched her own lips.

Mark, not yet asleep, knew very well that something he wouldn't like was about to happen, and he held up his coat to Ray anxiously. Ray took him on his lap while the four little girls stood in a row to sing O Little Town of Bethlehem and Gloria in Excelsis for Grandma Crookston, who volunteered to baby-sit. For the last six years, Ray and Marvel have celebrated Christmas with all four grandparents on hand, with Ray's mother and father living close by in town, and Marvel's mother and father flying to Utah for the occasion.

The height of the pre-Christmas excitement came—as it always does—when the whole Crookston family went to pick out the tree. They wanted a tree ceiling high, and Marvel had specified "a bushy fat one," easier to decorate. A blue spruce fitted everybody's requirements exactly, except that it cost more than Marvel and Ray had planned. But the tree salesman, who knew the family, knocked the price down a bit for all those children!

At home again everybody was in the way, trying to help, but Ray finally got the tree off the car and into the house. The little boys started hanging their homemade decorations on it at once. "Oh, must we have all the kids' things on it?" Nini asked. She's beginning to feel conscious of conventional ways. "It makes the tree look so awful!" Marvel quieted her with a frown and assured her that by the time everything was on the tree the children's things wouldn't be too noticeable. ("Though ours often is the worst-looking tree in town!" she admits privately.)

The final wall of the wise man's thought is human kindness. If the road of disappointment, grief, pessimism is followed far enough, it will arrive there. Pessimism itself is only a little, little way, and moreover it is ridiculously cheap. The cynical mind is an uneducated thing. Therefore do I strive to be as kind and as just as may be to those about me, and in my meager success at it I find the solitary pleasure of my life. —STEPHEN CRANE

While everyone discussed where the tree should go (it was put by the windows in the living room, where it has been every year, but there is always debate about other possibilities), Marvel used the few minutes to pop Scotty into the tub for a belated bath. "While I was lying down this afternoon," she called to Ray, "a loaf and a half of bread disappeared. I don't think anyone is really interested in supper."

Now Ray brought out the lights and Mark, fascinated by anything to do with electricity, seized one string for his own. "Byron," Ray called, "I want you to test these lights for me." The little blond boy's face was sober as he carefully began screwing bulbs in and out. Nini and Kay were stringing tinsel rope on the tree while Ray begged them to wait till the lights were ready.

At one point Ray had all three strings of lights working, but next morning all were out. Lighting the Christmas tree means first making a thorough search of four little boys' pockets. In the days that followed decorations were added gradually to the tree, and the top two thirds grew more and more beautiful. The lower third was bare, as little fingers took all decorations within reach to play with.

NEXT day, everyone was working around the tree again when Grandma and Grandpa Sharp arrived, and all the children threw themselves on the visitors. Scotty pulled himself up in his play pen and began to cry. Marvel, excited enough to cry herself, ran to pick him up to share in the general joy.

Mrs. Sharp had a fat package (new bathrobes for the girls) under her arm. Marvel's mother kept her promise and dresses all the children—the young Crookstons' only help with their family. Mrs. Sharp gets such real pleasure from sewing and shopping that she won't let them thank her. She makes for little dresses at a time—whole school a winter wardrobes for the Crookston girls a other fortunate grandchildren.

Now grandma was trying to listen to ea child's special news while she accepted gifts sticky peanuts with real gratitude a promptly ate them. Grandpa pulled Ray a Marvel into the kitchen. "I've got an elect train in the car," he said proudly, unable keep back the news a minute longer. Ray a Marvel grinned at him. He'd wanted to one ever since the twins were born, and h managed to hold out this long, though t twins were still a little too young, Mar thought privately, for such a complicated a valuable toy.

AT last—it was Christmas Eve! Little bo pockets had been searched and the tree lig were all burning. The stockings—red c duroy "boots," like Santa's, in graduat sizes—had been hunted out and now hung a row at the mantel. After Christmas E supper, everyone gathered around the fire toast marshmallows. Then, because the ch dren are fascinated by matches, and can ne play with them, Ray let everyone take tur lighting and blowing out a Christmas cand The girls sang carols in the firelight, wh Marvel started getting out the sleepers.

There are always balloons in profusion Christmas morni ("They cost a ce apiece," Marv points out, "and fifty cents you c make the room a tree look very speci like a circus. The k love them.")

There were balloo on Christmas Eve, t very large ones shap like animals. R started the long job blowing them up, w the little boys crowd so close he hardly h room to breathe. huge yellow mou Joe's balloon, caused trouble—Ray could get air into the ears. But at last the mou half again as tall as Joe, stood wavering cardboard feet.

Mark had been having a picnic with smaller balloons, stepping on them to hear pop—before he discovered that biting th was even quicker. Now he reached eagerly Joe's mouse. Joe pulled it away fiercely a dragged it to the bedroom. Later Mar called Ray to see. Joe had hidden the h balloon under the covers of his bed, where was outlined in every detail, but invisible Mark and any other thieves who might around. Joe, looking innocent, lay cur around it.

The twins' balloon, long and pink, went the bedroom, too, but it wasn't hidden quic enough; Mark was crying for it when Mar sat down to hear the twins' prayers. W divided attention they repeated after her, l by line, "Dear heavenly Father, we tha Thee—for our blessings—for a nice wa house—for good things to eat—for mom and daddy to love us—for all our brothers a sisters ——" (In the long list of family t forgot Sherry, but added her on quickly.)

In the middle of the prayer came the lo pop the twins had been fearfully expecti Mark had bitten the pink balloon. Byron a Clark started up—but prayers were not ov and they stayed until the last words. The loud indignant howl went up, more ballo had to be produced (Marvel broke into next day's store), and Byron and Clark w consoled.

Nini stayed up to help her parents p Santa Claus. "Sometimes they feel left after they know the truth," Marvel sa "and this made her part of it all again."

Stockings had to be filled, the train set under the tree, stacks and stacks of packa brought in from the garage. Tree lights a the train all worked at last, and Nini went bed at two-thirty!—excited and pleased to so "grown up." After she had gone, her o packages were brought out, and the long be hidden behind the tree. Ray and wearily turned out the last light at the morning. At the very latest the would be up by seven.

norning the first small cry came from Ray came out in pajamas and robe to fire in the fireplace. Red stockings a knobby row at the fireplace, soft ne from the fire and tree, balloons imly from tree branches and the l chandelier overhead.

f the twins, a little blond boy in eepers, stumbled out first. Then came vith the others close behind him. s that, huh? What do you think of ?" Grandpa Sharp asked, and the istled.

! Train!" Mark exclaimed, and for it.

Marvel appeared in her blue silk ought from Japan by Ray and saved al occasions), she found the excite- eady intense. Clark had found his eaddress, Byron and Joe were wear- -brimmed cowboy hats, with holsters aists of their sleepers. Joe, a burned his gun clutched between two fingers, ing everyone smell it.

nly Mark's outraged howl rose. He all the toys were his—but the other protected their own fiercely. From nt on Marvel and Ray took turns divert Mark's attention.

his face almost white, took a long package from Ray. "Is it all for y reassured him, and with shaking lark took out the bow and arrow!

Nini, still very sleepy, found her skis, ise was complete. After all, she had anta Claus, and there hadn't been a em! One after another, the children stand in the heavy binders and "ski" e living room.

veryone watched while mamma and ened the presents made for them in school. Gail had made pencil holders—polished wooden blocks with pencil-sized holes drilled in the top. Kay's candlestick ("for the whole family") was a lopsided bit of clay that would hold a candle only with difficulty, but Marvel hugged her tightly. Sherry's red candlesticks, for the Christmas table, were much more finished, but her small clay dish, for bobby pins, had been broken in transit. Marvel, not letting Sherry see, thanked her warmly. Gail had painted a small pitcher dark blue, then dipped it, still wet, in the crushed fragments of a bright Christmas-tree ball. The result was startlingly beautiful.

Soon Sherry collected her presents—a precious tea set in the center—in a corner of the dining room. Then she took Scotty's stocking to his play pen and unpacked it for him. "This is for Scotty" (a huge orange) "and this is for Scotty" (a small chocolate Santa) "and this is for Scotty."

Scotty, surrounded by balloons, one fat hand on his own train (which fitted on the rail of his play pen), just grinned at everything and everyone in bewildered joy.

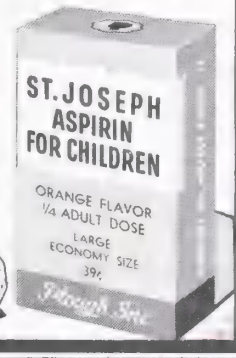
Mark had at last started pushing his musical chime roller up and down the floor. His sleepers were drooping, he was sucking a limp yellow balloon.

Ray had matters well in hand. There were to be twenty-five for Christmas dinner—including the two sets of grandparents. Marvel decided to slip away for a nap.

On her way to the door she passed Joe, playing intently with Mark's take-apart train. "Mommy, mommy, mommy," he crooned to himself, as he does when he's too happy to know what to say.

"What, Joe?" she asked, and he looked up, startled to find her so near. He grinned, and she laughed back at him.

When people ask, "How do you do it?" Ray and Marvel can only answer, "You have to want to." Their secret lies in the way they say "want to."

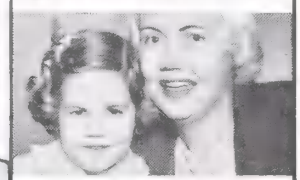


END

MRS. GEORGE DRAKE, Chicago, Ill.—"When I think of all the fuss and bother I used to have giving adult aspirin to my youngsters, I wonder how I ever got along without St. Joseph Aspirin For Children. We don't have any scenes now, thanks to St. Joseph Aspirin For Children. They like its pure orange flavor, take it readily. And it works so gently and quickly."

America's Mother-and-Child Favorite

Mother, we know you'll agree with this statement: "Only the best is good enough for your child." So remember this—St. Joseph Aspirin For Children is approved by more doctors, trusted by more mothers and liked by more children than any other brand. Each 1¼ grain tablet contains the preferred standard of accurate dosage measure. Refuse substitutes. Look for the "St. Joseph" name.



World's Largest Selling Aspirin For Children

COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE

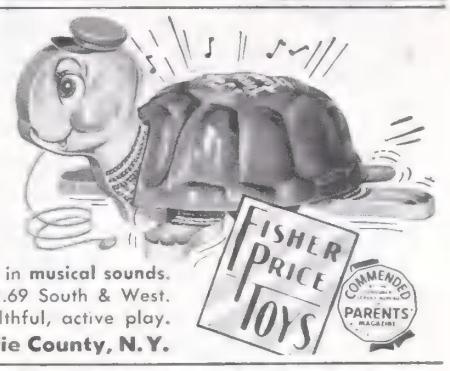
A PLOUGH PRODUCT

MRS. MARY MOORE, Boston, Mass.—"My doctor says St. Joseph Aspirin For Children is right for my child in every way."

MRS. WM. HOLLIDAY, New Orleans, La.—"You don't have to break tablets. I'm sure of giving just as the doctor orders."

For Your Family's Regular Aspirin Needs... DEMAND St. Joseph ASPIRIN

200 tablets 79¢
100 tablets 49¢
12 tablets 10¢



FISHER-PRICE'S

TOY TURTLE

One of 23 safe, wood Pull Toys!

Colorful Timmy Turtle "comes to life" as a playful companion for children 1-5! He plays gay music from under bright green, non-breakable shell . . . paddles feet to and fro. Fun and stimulates imaginative play . . satisfies natural interest in musical sounds. AT ALL TOY COUNTERS or direct, $2.50 East, $2.69 South & West. Send for folder #49 of push-pull toys for healthful, active play.

FISHER-PRICE TOYS INC., East Aurora, Erie County, N.Y.

THIS IS A MESSY MUNCHER

By MUNRO LEAF

MESSY MUNCHERS can make a nice home look like a pigpen. No matter what they munch and nibble on, they leave a mess behind them. Whenever you see fruit peels and skins, nut shells, bits of crumbs of bread, toast, cookies, bags, boxes and old pop bottles lying around a house where they should not be—then you know that house has a Messy Muncher living in it. Too, too bad!

WERE YOU A MESSY MUNCHER THIS MONTH?

Imagine me doing my own Christmas shopping again!

Stop wishing, start doing again in a modern, folding

E&J WHEEL CHAIR

"ADDS THE WILL TO THE WAY"

Dealers listed in phone book "Yellow Pages"

EVEREST & JENNINGS, INC., LOS ANGELES 25

FREE to 100,000 MOTHERS

Easy TO PUT ON "totes"

NEW KIND OF LATEX RUBBERS
So Light Won't Tire Young Feet

TO ADVERTISE these wonderful new s-t-r-e-t-c-h-y latex rubber overshoes we'll gladly give you a pair free. NOTHING TO BUY, NO OBLIGATION. Just send your name and address, and name and address of your favorite shoe or department store. We'll mail you a pair to fit baby shoes, size 2 to 4, absolutely free and postpaid. Regular 98c value. Get for your child or give to a friend.

LADIES! For Yourself: 2 PAIRS FOR $1.00

Get yourself ready for cold, wet days. Women's nationally famous "totes," regularly $2.98 if perfect, yours TWO PAIRS for just $1.00. These are slight irregulars but waterproof, 100% wearable. Money back if not delighted. Millions of women buy "totes" in stores at $2.98 a pair. Now help us advertise and save. But hurry, quantities limited. Rush $1.00 with shoe sizes, and 30c in coin to cover postage to SO-LO MARX RUBBER CO., LOVELAND 26, OHIO.

SHE: "I have done nothing to deserve Gid's indifference, his icy coldness."

HE: "When I fell in love with Patsy she was sweet and appealing. Now she is an emotional wreck—she doesn't believe I love her, although I do."

Half of the marriages that break up are childless; but if there are children in an unhappy home, they often play a crucial part in the domestic tragedy. One parent may use the child as a weapon with which to damage or punish the other; or the child may merely be the prize for which the two opponents contest. Either way, the consequences are disastrous, so that an overwhelming proportion of juvenile delinquents come from these loveless homes. The American Institute of Family Relations, therefore, has to work with children as well as with husbands and wives; and it has to show parents, as in the case here presented, that one of their responsibilities is to teach their own children as quickly as possible how to get along without them successfully. The counselor in this case was Mrs. Elizabeth Smith. PAUL POPENOE, Sc.D., Director

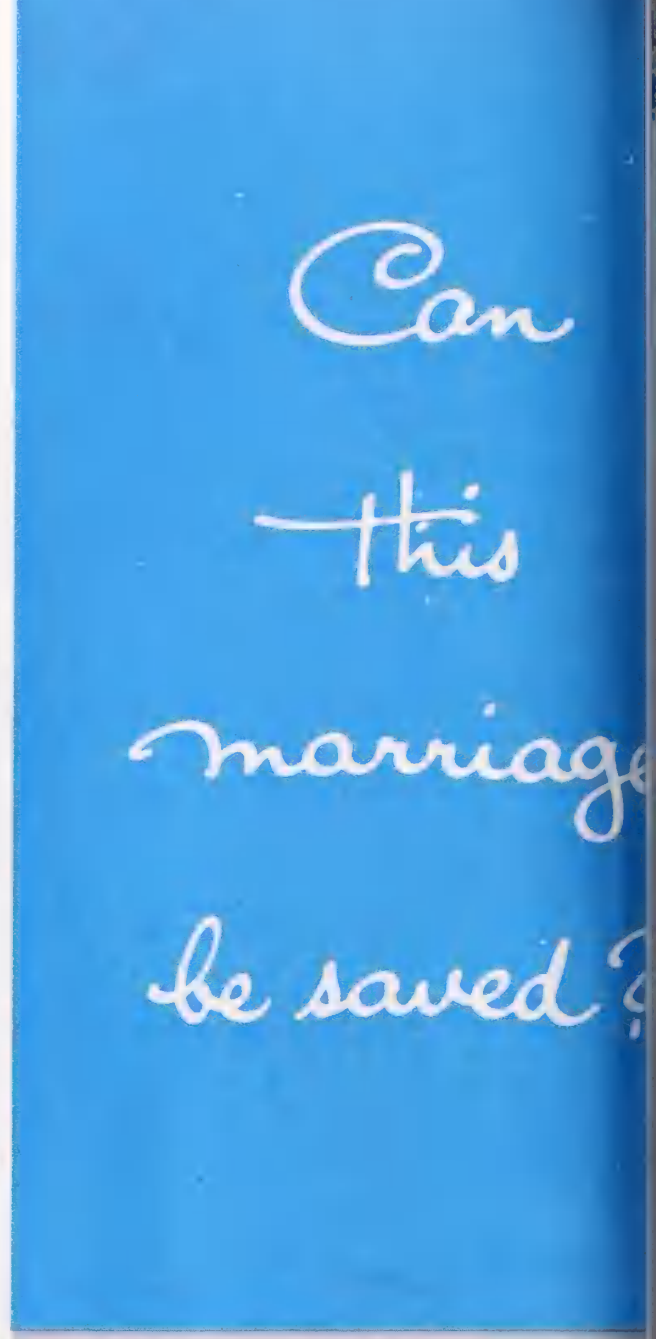
Dr. Paul Popenoe

PATSY TELLS HER SIDE:

"My husband and son are teamed against me," flaxen-haired, thirty-eight-year-old Patsy said to the marriage counselor. Patsy was slim and pretty; except for her deep frown and nervous, restless hands, she could have passed for ten years younger. "I dearly love my family, but together Gid and Johnny are driving me frantic. Gid is an airline pilot, who prides himself upon being a man's man. He hasn't the slightest interest in my ideas, and our son knows it. By preference the two would set up a bachelor establishment somewhere by themselves, and then Gid could let Johnny run completely wild. Johnny is fourteen years old and already a serious behavior problem. Everybody says so. Everybody except Gid. It isn't Johnny's fault he is disobedient, unmannerly, a wretched student. His father is to blame.

"Gid flies regularly from Los Angeles to Tokyo, which means he is gone a great deal. At best he is a part-time husband, a part-time father. The instant he boards his plane Johnny and I vanish from his mind. He is glad to escape. When Gid does come home, he consistently bows out of his family responsibilities. Gid is eleven years older than I am and far more intelligent. We have been married since I was seventeen, but we haven't grown closer with the years. Instead we have drifted farther and farther apart until Gid seems like a stranger to me. I desperately need his help and cooperation in rearing our son. When I report the latest on Johnny, Gid scarcely listens. Often while I'm still talking he walks away from me and picks up a book.

"In theory, Gid is devoted to Johnny. In fact, he refuses to concern himself with Johnny's welfare, his character, his future. Since Johnny was ten years old, ever since he started growing so fast, he has been practically uncontrollable. Gid won't acknowledge it. He contends I am too strict and severe, too demanding. I know Gid is too lenient. His nonchalance, his airy belief that Johnny will outgrow his faults, is ruining our boy.

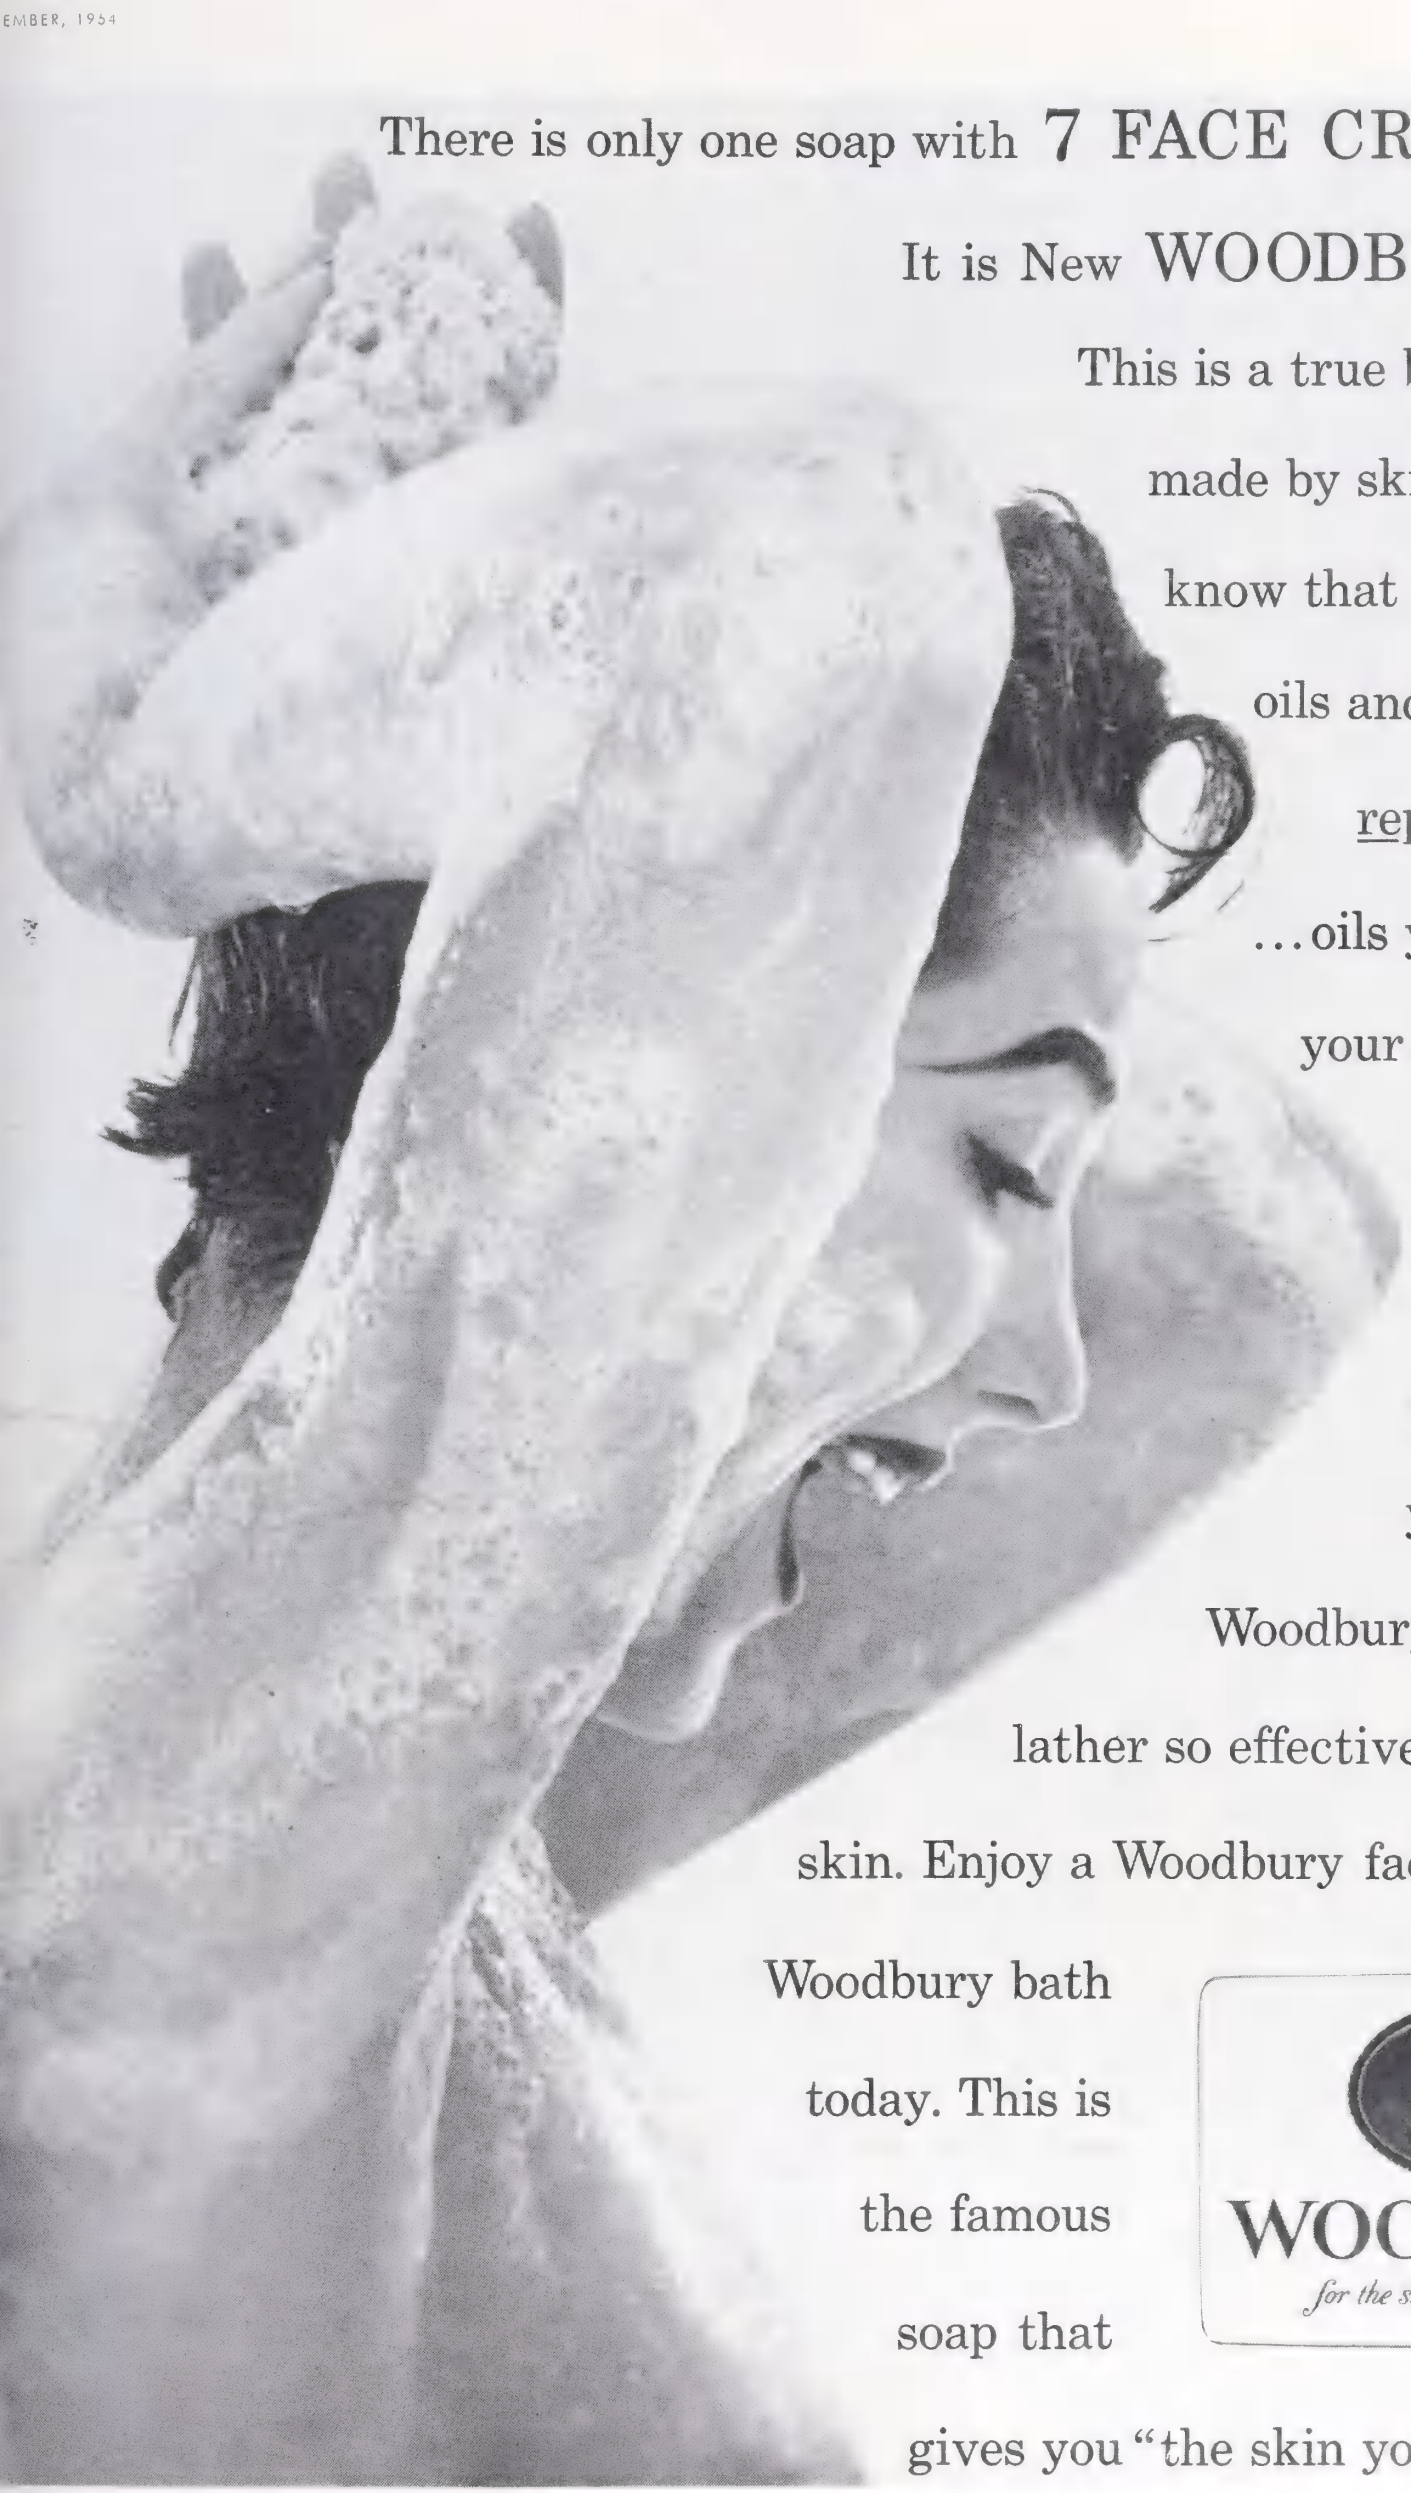


"Last semester Johnny failed in two of his subjects at school. After consulting with his teachers, I worked out a tough new homework schedule for him. Furthermore, I stood over Johnny and saw that he studied. Gid's reaction was characteristic. When I showed him the failing report card he was annoyed, not with Johnny but with me. As a sort of consolation prize he rewarded Johnny with an expensive set of mechanic's tools. Johnny much prefers tinkering with machinery to doing his schoolwork. I am always hauling him out of our garage. Naturally, Johnny was delighted with Gid's partisanship. There is nothing he likes better than to play his father and me against each other. Naturally, too, his interest in his studies took another nose dive.

"Johnny was a darling when he was little," Patsy said wistfully. "Underneath he is a good boy, a bright boy. He is plenty bright enough to realize Gid will let him get away with murder. To Johnny's way of thinking, Gid is the visiting Santa Claus and I am the mean old witch. Unfortunately, I am the one who has to cope with him. Gid behaves like a star boarder, and Johnny also treats our home like a hotel, coming and going as he chooses. Twice he stayed all night with an older boy—Frank is sixteen and a bad influence—and he didn't telephone me until nearly midnight.

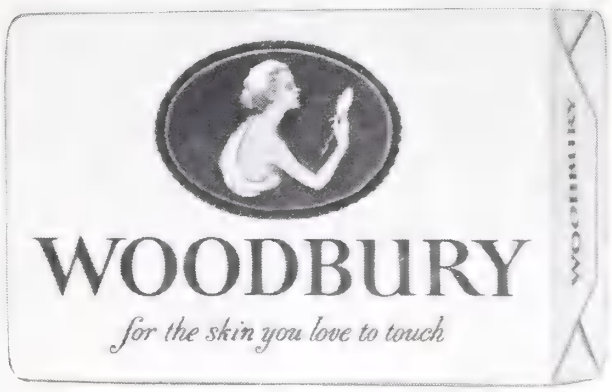
"Evening after evening, I am left alone in an empty house. I walk the floor for hours, crazed with anxiety. I feel the way I used to feel when I was a little girl and my father lay in the hospital dying and my mother, who didn't care for either him or me, was out dancing with some other man. I feel freezingly alone. I worry about Gid's safety and imagine plane crashes. I worry about Johnny and wonder what he is up to. My health has always been delicate. Strain and worry make me physically ill. The second time Johnny stayed out all night, I collapsed and had to stay in bed a week. The doctor informed Gid my nerves were responsible for my illness, and Gid's reply to the doctor was that I shouldn't be so nervous.

"My life would make anybody nervous," Patsy went on feverishly. "I never know what stunt Johnny will pull next. Six months ago he and Frank decided cleanliness was sissy and they entered a pact to stop using soap and water. On the evening Johnny made his pronouncement and sat down to supper with filthy hands. I ordered him to leave the table and wash. Johnny glanced toward Gid and waited for him to speak. Gid didn't say a word. So Johnny calmly kept on eating. To avoid a scene, I didn't drag him away from the table although I was strongly tempted. I choked back my feelings.



"Next morning Gid went off on a special Alaskan flight. Three days later Johnny's sheets were black as ink and he looked like a Bowery bum. I was expecting Gid back on a Saturday and was determined CONTINUED ON PAGE 161

DON ORNITZ



"I feel freezingly alone. I worry about Gid's safety and imagine plane crashes."

There is only one soap with 7 FACE CREAM OILS.

It is New WOODBURY SOAP.

This is a true beauty soap. It is made by skin scientists, who know that these face cream oils and emollients help replace natural oils ...oils you need to keep your skin soft, young-looking...oils you ordinarily wash away. Now you can see why Woodbury's fragrant, rich lather so effectively smooths your skin. Enjoy a Woodbury facial, or luxurious Woodbury bath today. This is the famous soap that gives you "the skin you love to touch."

HAVE WE WON THE FIGHT AGAINST POLIO?

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 28

children give blood that Mrs. Stevenson was forced to cross her own youngster's name off the list.

When you have 949 first-, second- and third-graders as at Picadome, the city's largest public elementary school, things don't go so smoothly. Mrs. T. C. Walker, P.T.A. health chairman, counted anxiously every time a teacher turned in a batch of parent-request slips giving permission for the inoculations. The day before spring vacation, nearly 100 were missing. These request slips had to be signed—or else! Ignoring the rainstorms that blew up, Mrs. Walker and three other mothers put on overshoes and raincoats, tramped over hills and back roads calling on parents until every single child had been accounted for.

In the classrooms seven-, eight- and nine-year-olds were learning some basic facts about polio. Nearly everyone knew a neighbor or classmate who had had polio. Tommy Walker, a blond, round-faced second-grader, went home and told his parents that he had learned a new word: immunization. He also told about the orange and syringe his teacher brought to class. First she filled the syringe with a tiny, tiny needle and jabbed it into the orange, very gently, and pulled it out. As Tommy spoke, he flexed his muscle proudly. "Only the needle really goes into the arm, about there. It didn't look bad at all—I bet I could take a dozen of those!"

Classroom posters pictured the souvenir lapel button each child was to receive after the final shot. It bore the silhouette of a research scientist, his microscope and test tubes, symbolizing the years of laboratory work preceding the development of the Salk vaccine, and the words, "Polio Pioneer." Pioneer was a new word, too, for most children. Their teachers told the story of the Western settlers, how they pioneered their way into an unexplored country. "Pioneer means being the first to take part in a great new adventure," one teacher said. That made every child eager to earn and wear the Polio Pioneer buttons.

By April 21 more than 500 mothers, fathers, teachers and doctors were ready to inoculate 1276 children in Lexington. The vaccine, which had come by plane that very day, was sitting in the Molloys' refrigerator. Now everyone wanted to know: "When do we start?"

In Washington that April 24 the Vaccine Advisory Committee, a group of doctors representing leading medical organizations, completed its study of laboratory reports on the vaccine. They now knew it met all the safety standards, and on Sunday, April 25, notified the National Foundation to go ahead with "evaluation of poliomyelitis vaccine, types 1, 2 and 3."

Telegrams went out immediately to the 48 state boards of health, then to local boards. By 5:30 P.M. Betty Molloy, who hadn't dared leave the house all day, had called 15 unit chairmen. "Pass the word along," she said. "We start tomorrow morning."

Promptly at 8:30 A.M. the great volunteer organization that had been marking time these many weeks went into action. At Picadome school, the first stop for the team from the board of health, twelve room mothers and four teachers waited at the door of the auditorium. One classroom had already filed inside. In the adjoining gymnasium a mother was stringing a row of sheets over a clothesline to form a makeshift partition. "Where shall I put these wastebaskets?" asked a second-grade boy wearing a Polio Volunteer arm band. As he set them down, in came the doctor, two navy-blue-clad public-health nurses, four Polio Emergency Volunteers in neat blue-and-white-striped jumpers, and four recorders guarding the bottles of vaccine and the health records. After the nurses had filled the syringes and set out packages of tiny needles, a wide-eyed little boy peeked curiously through the doorway. A room mother took his hand and steered him toward the doctor.

And here the story of the people's fight against polio ends—for the time being. Now the National Foundation, the parents and children, teachers, doctors, nurses and all the Polio Volunteers await hopefully, patiently the results of the University of Michigan study. Before the start of the next polio season, late spring, 1955, we will know the answer to the question, Have we conquered polio?

DIARY OF DOMESTICITY

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 30

and never was gift so welcome. Now we can come home on a dark snowy night and find a warm lighted path to the front door instead of falling over ourselves all the way.

The dishwasher Christmas was memorable. So was the new range. So was the new automatic clothes washer. Jill claimed I washed things and hung them up and rewashed them for a week after that gift! The automatic coffee maker was a high light one year. And the deep-fat fryer made us cook like mad experimenting on fried shrimp, fried chicken, fried potatoes, doughnuts and goodness knows what all.

I do think people are wise who consider the house as a person, and give accordingly.

Next to house gifts with us come books. We love buying books, for they are so permanent, so friendly, so always there. My book for all the young fry and for astute oldsters like us for this year is Ted Key's So'm I. I read it and laughed aloud and felt misty-eyed and reread. And thought rapidly of all the children we know who need it. It has everything. It just gives a shine to life. I don't know why the creator of my friend Hazel can also do a book about the little horse, but there it is. He can.

Christmas Eve is still my favorite time. Bayberry candles burning, fire nice and glowing on the great hearth, the smell of turkey lingering in the air, the drift of tissue paper as the children wrap last-minute gifts . . . whisperings upstairs . . . giggles as they find, inevitably, that I am being given three recordings of Edith Piaf, and Jill two Viennese waltzes . . . the packages coming down the steep stairs in armfuls to be deposited under the spicy spruce tree—all this is good. For it belongs with our country. It is really and truthfully celebrating an event that was the most memorable in history. The trappings are fun, the holiday exciting, but underneath runs a feeling that this marks the birthday of Jesus. And it is good to remember that the carpenter's Son was born, and taught, and died so long ago, and yet is still with us, influencing our lives.

When I go out with the cockers and Irish for that last whipping about in the lacy snow, I stop to think that this night and the day tomorrow are celebrated on account of a very simple Man Who was an artisan, Who dreamed, Who suffered and gave His life. How wondrous is it that a man's life should so endure—so we light the candles in the windows still to light the Christ child in. This is a recurrent miracle to me, a heart-warming one.

A single snowflake falls, so intricate in shape, so pure in texture. It melts on my cheek and is gone. It, too, is a miracle. For who could design a snowflake?

I think many mothers get tired during the Christmas rush. I do. The shopping, the last-minute buying, the wrapping, the cooking—there is always one moment when I wish it were August and nothing at all going on!

And yet, when the children say "Thank you for a happy time," when one child whispers, "This was just all I wanted" . . . when one child curls up at once to read the book you chose so carefully . . . when one child says, "This is the very most wonderful Christmas we ever had"—all the tired feeling ebbs away, and a pure happiness floods in.

Christmas is worth it! And I let Little Sister in, feathered with snowflakes, and say as I always say, have said for years:

"God rest you merry, gentlemen." END

Lucky Baby—
his Mommy uses
JOHNSON'S BABY POWDER

Softest, smoothest, silkiest powder in the world. A few sprinkles at each diaper change will chase away prickles and chafes . . . keep your baby comfy, happy. Sixty years of use have proved its quality and purity.

Lucky, Lucky Baby
his Mommy uses
JOHNSON'S
BABY LOTION too!

Scientifically formulated to prevent irritating rashes. New extra protection for delicate skin. Rich in soothing lanolin. Smooth it all over body after every bath. Give your baby the benefit of this new extra care.

THE HAPPY AFFAIR

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 48

ars that I would give the time of head, neighbor. Did you ever know e this that ended happily?"

must have been lots of them," said antly, "but those are the ones you about. You keep reading about t and Anna Karenina and Tillie's Romance, because the weepy ones
ap. I'll bet there have been thouappy affairs."
? Why, Cinderella Jane Holmes!"
lushed. "I mean situations, rela-the rosy mantle on your cheeks to that Snow

yet to taste
ed apple."
one of your said Cindy.
rse not," said
Why should it my business early beloved about to foul the most atoung lives I orgive me for g it."
does a girl do one man she's he wants hapmarried?"
nice, she runs
."
feel that he's eel that he urt me. And e's the most nan I've ever

where I came Gloria. She and put on a ng gloves.
are you go-Cindy.
hn Stadium,"
a. "Levant is ershwin, and y in love with

d man, Le-ewisohn Sta-aid Gloria,

e uniformed to prevent ers from frat-ith the musi-

Gloria had dy went into oom of their apartment nings for her e wasn't much eeded in the metic artifice.
vas clear, and to glow with ght. Her bold were fringed ing black lashes, and set above them ramatic imprint of straight black he tied a bit of black velvet ribbon sculptured throat, and she looked million dollars. The doorbell rang, ibration seemed to thrill along her
s. She flew to the door.

COCHRAN stood in the doorway with under his arm. "Any old bottles,
said.
l bottles," said Cindy.
run establishment," said Spencer.
ace should have old bottles. For-
I brought one of my own." He e wrappings off the package, and bottle of champagne. "This wine, the store assured me, was delicately from tender grapes by laughing aidens with intelligent feet. Let's put this in your refrigerator, and go out and see the town."

Cindy watched Spencer as he walked across the room and stuck the bottle in the tiny refrigerator. She had met handsomer men in her two years in the big city, but Spencer was well set up, his smile was catching, and there was a pleasant air of maleness about him.

"How about a kiss for the landlady?" she said.

HE kissed her warmly and well, without making a big demonstration about it. She got a strong physical sense of well-being from standing within the circle of his arms.

"You want to do the Slavko Vorkapich montage?" he said.

"The what?"

"In all the movies where it shows a boy and girl doing New York, you see them in a series of quick shots: riding in a hansom in Central Park, winning a Kewpie doll at the shooting gallery in Coney Island, dancing cheek to cheek, coming home late at night with the milkman. Then you know they had a crazy time and they're in love, and at the front of the picture it says 'Montage by Slavko Vorkapich.'"

"Is there a piano in it?"

"There's a man named Errol Spain at the Four Treys with a strong left hand that can hold up the world."

"Then let's do the Slavko Vorkapich montage."

They had dinner in a steak joint where people wrote their names on the lamp shades, and Spencer penciled in a Romeo Montague and Juliet Capulet, entwined in a pair of breaking hearts. At the Four Treys, Errol Spain said "Hi, Spence," and reached out his right hand to shake without losing the beat with his left.

In the hansom cab in Central Park, driving through the soft summer night, Cindy thought of the champagne in the refrigerator, waiting for them like an exciting promise, and then the memory of the conversation with Gloria bubbled up, and she decided that she would have to speak.

"Spence," she said.

"Yes, ma'am," he said.

"Have you ever had an evening like this with Barbara?"

He threw her a shrewd look in the darkness of the hansom. "Not in recent years," he said. "Night spots give her headaches."

"What does she do?"

"You mean when I'm out? Well, she plays a lot of duplicate bridge—tournament stuff. She learns French off records. She goes to French movies and tries not to look at the English-dialogue titles. She scrapes the paint off Colonial cobblers' benches that she buys at auctions. Busy, busy, busy," said Spencer.

"She sounds bright."

"Mind like a trap," said Spence cheerfully. "Anything else you want to know?"

"I guess not."

SUBTLE SUGGESTIONS FOR MALE SHOPPERS

By MARJORIE LEDERER LEE

Some wives have a yen for a toaster
That tosses the toast when it's through;
And some would go mad for a roaster
That could handle a turkey or two. . . .
But I'm an impractical maiden
As proven too clearly by this:
Bizarre as it seems
I've been stacking my dreams
On a lipstick, a compact, a kiss.

Expensive's a stove, and a boon it
Would be; and a vacuum or grill
Would be great for the family unit,
But where is the personal thrill?
For I am a queer sort of peasant,
As any poor husband can see,
Who asks, when you give me a present,
That you give me a present for me. . . .
So, Love, please recall in your shopping
That I'm an impractical miss
Who would happily part
With the whole of my heart
For a lipstick, a compact, a kiss!

You and your lovely clothes are safe with Fresh

Are you always Lovely to Love?

You're lovely to look at . . . lovely to be near . . . only when underarms stay dry and odorless.

That's why lovely women use FRESH Cream Deodorant, always!

Tests in a leading university laboratory show that new FRESH with "Moisture-Shield" formula has up to 180% greater astringent action than other leading cream deodorants. And it is this astringent action that keeps underarms dry, free from odor. Use gentle, effective FRESH daily.

ONLY FRESH HAS THIS NEW "MOISTURE-SHIELD" FORMULA TO KEEP UNDERARMS REALLY DRY!

Fresh is a registered trade mark of The Pharma-Craft Corporation. Fresh is also manufactured and distributed in Canada

Spence took her hand in his. "It helps those conversations when you come to the point," he told her. "What you really want to know is what goes with Barbara and me. If I don't love her, why do I stay married to her? If I do, how can I be here with you? Isn't that on the nose?"

"On the nose."

"Barbara doesn't care for my kind of evening, which happens to be not only my pleasure, but also my business. At sundown we go our separate ways. I don't know how this arrangement looks by the books, but there it is, and I imagine it happens more often than we know. I respect Barbara, and I try never to do anything to her that would hurt her. By the way, I'd also hate to do anything that would hurt you. If I did, it would make me miserable. Am I hurting you now? If I am, chase me into the street."

This was a moment of decision, and Cindy knew it. She thought of Barbara, and the piano players, and the two dreary years in the city, and then she leaned back against the cracked leather upholstery of the hansom cab, listened for a moment to the clop-clop of the horse's hoofs against the pavement, and said:

"Come on up to my place. I've got a cold bottle of champagne in the refrigerator."

When they got to the apartment, Gloria was there with her hair in curlers, and they all three had the champagne together.

"Something wrong with this wine," said Gloria. "The bubbles don't go up my nose."

"Spence says it was squeezed by laughing French maidens with intelligent feet."

"One of them forgot to take her shoes off," said Gloria.

"I'll mention it to the French ambassador," said Spence.

"While you're at it," said Gloria, "ask him why they don't pay their war debt."

Cindy heard the sharpening knife edge in Gloria's voice, and offered a moment out of her evening's delight to sound a not warmth in the room. "We heard Errol Spa she said. "He chopped the piano into kind wood."

"That man has a left hand that can s down bridges," said Spence.

"Levant plays with two hands," said Gl

"Old-fashioned, I guess," said Spence cl fully.

"Speaking of piano players," said Gl "why don't you stay away from Cindy?"

"Speaking of piano players," said Spe "I think I will go." To Cindy's astonishm he put down the glass and stood up, just that. "Good night, all." He said it so si and matter-of-factly that for a moment thought he was going away forever. walked him downstairs to the outside and clung to him for a moment in the vesti

"Don't let the housemother scare away," she said.

"Gloria's itching to have a fight," he "I don't like scenes. I like things to be ha I want you to be happy. Are you happy?

"Yes, Slavko," she said. "I am happy.

"Stay happy."

SHE stood there in the doorway and wat him walk down the street. That was her bad time, the moment when he turned walked away with his eager, brisk gait, a wave of doubt rushed into the gap openin tween them. Was he going home? Wha he say when he got there? Did he discus evening with Barbara? Did he make hi cuse casually, wittily? He turned the co and the warm memories of the evening flooding back and closed up the gap drove away the imps and made every good and bright again.

"Go ahead, kill me," said Gloria, Cindy had climbed back upstairs to the a ment.

"Bang, bang, you're dead," said C mildly.

"You keep telling me this is the h affair, so I thought I'd see what I coul about making you a little miserable."

"You only make me laugh," said C "That's one of the things I like about Gloria."

"Where are you going, my pretty maid you studying to become a matrimonial pocket?"

"I wouldn't want to do that," said C "Whatever happens, I know Spencer never make me unhappy."

"I surrender, dear," said Gloria. " you've got can't be cured by aspirin advice. But tell me, how long do you i to pursue this foreign entanglement?"

"I'm young," said Cindy. "There's a c amount of slack in my life. We'll see happens tomorrow."

"Levant or no Levant," said Gloria, staying home all night tomorrow night."

The summer blazed up into September crisped into fall. Even in the city there hint of wood smoke in the air. The eve whirled away like so many Slavko Vork montages. Cindy laughed, and danced life beat within her like the heart of a bi

One evening they stood looking at th from the footwalk of the George Washi Bridge, watching the lights of Riverside blazing like a giant necklace against the

"You know, Spencer," she said, "I country girl. I want to see Indian summ Pennsylvania. I want to wear a yellow c anthemum on my coat, and kick throug piles of dried leaves."

"Any self-respecting dried leaf should sider it a privilege."

"Can you get a car?"

"I'll borrow Errol Spain's," he said. "I Italian job nineteen feet long and nin inches high, and it once got a speeding while standing still."

She was completely aware that she w venting an occasion to force Spencer t her in the daytime, and she was a little bi appointed that he had handled it so cas

Errol Spain's car was painted fire-e red, and the horn played the first four no Hold That Tiger. Spencer sounded the against the slopes of the Pennsylvani and it echoed back from the standing

Millions of Expectant Mothers FIX ACID INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN with this On-the-Spot Relief

Expectant mothers tell us, "Handy TUMS are so helpful during pregnancy... so quick... so pleasant."

It's no fun—during pregnancy—to suffer heartburn and the distressed feeling caused by an acid condition of the stomach. No fun at all!

Many women first learned about wonderful little TUMS when they had these miserable acid attacks during pregnancy. They discovered, to their joy, that such "pregnancy troubles" need not be endured. Very often TUMS were suggested by their own doctors. Today, millions of expectant mothers depend on TUMS to bring them pleasant, fast, on-the-spot relief for heartburn and acid indigestion.

Join the happy throngs of mothers-to-be who fix acid indigestion and heartburn with TUMS. Economical 3-roll package 25¢.

People all over the Nation carry TUMS as faithfully as they carry their Keys!

TUMS for the Tummy

aple and oak, of beech and hickory, a et call that saluted with full throat that of a summer flaming to its close. They ted through the hills of Pennsylvania, ng three hundred miles in the powerful Cindy abandoned herself to the color and ght, as if she were a camera receiving tions. But when they were back on the Jersey Turnpike and the city was draw-ear, she felt that she must speak her mind
e she went back into the maze.
's no good, Cochran," she said.
What's no good?"
We're no good—or more specifically, I'm od. I thought I was a big modern girl, discover I'm a little sniveling ninny."
nglish translation?"
nglish translation, I have no further inn of smiling bravely as I send you back at woman, like a Gloucester fisherwife g her man off to the Grand Banks."
arbara will not be enchanted to be comwith the Grand Banks."
ou know what I'm saying, Cochran. I'm omplicated enough for these part-time gements. I love want you. Break-dinner and supper.
ay, Monday and
s."
knew this was com-
" said Spencer, n you asked me to u in the daytime."
Why not? Are you Phantom of the
?"
ny particular thing
u off?" said Spen-

es, as a matter of Last week you had
d. She took care of want to take care
u when you have a Country girls are with colds, Spencan put on a musplaster better than layo Clinic."
ncer twisted the n car around a big and trailer and d back in the high-groove. It helped he was looking ht ahead as he
. "There happens
" he said, "a girl
d Barbara Cochwhose life is knit mine. She's a girl lives a little bit underground, and she nrough the day because there are certain narks in her life, steady, predictable s like stations on a track.'" he is, in short, like a subway train."
on't be so cruel to Barbara," said Spencer.
think she is wonderful," said Cindy, "and uld like to chop her up for hamburger."

OULD tell her I was leaving," said Spencer,
I would shatter her into a jillion pieces. I take the responsibility, Cindy. I just What's the alternative? Shall I stop see-ou?"
think so," said Cindy. "I think that's the way."
think so, too," said Spencer.
hen it's agreed," said Cindy.
think you're being intelligent about it."
h, I'm intelligent, all right."
hope you'll be happy, Cindy."
thousand thanks."
ou're a girl who has the stuff to be happy.
s a rare quality, Cindy."
Well, shall we say medium rare?"
just can't hurt this girl," said Spencer.
f course not," said Cindy. "I wouldn't you to."
Well, it's settled then."
es, it's settled."
am much too proud," Spencer said, as put her head back against the red er upholstery, "to let you know by any or deed that you are breaking my heart."
or heaven's sake," said Cindy, "when are going to stop this car and kiss me?"

Well into November, Gloria said to Cindy, "How's the happy affair?"

"It's Armistice Day," said Cindy. "Let's observe a minute of silence."

"Is he going to divorce his wife?" said Gloria.

"You certainly ask some direct questions."

"I have found it is a good way to get direct answers. Is he?"

"We don't talk about it."

"What do you do, laugh about it? Sing about it?"

"You don't understand this man," said Cindy. "He couldn't hurt a fly. The world is full of people who are dull, and have sharp, sharp claws. My nice funny man wants people to be happy. He wants me to be happy. I want him to be happy."

"Is everybody happy?"

"Wherever we are together is a circle of light and warmth."

"There comes a time in these affairs—also in situations or relationships, by the way—there comes a time which is the dividing line between an adventure and a domestic mess. An adventure happens and is over, and you are left with bittersweet memories, and every time the orchestra plays a certain song you sniffle into your beer. A domestic mess, on the other hand, can chew up a couple of years of your life."

"I'm young," said Cindy.

"I know, and there's a certain amount of slack in your life. But it's not only the couple of years. After they're over, there's no way to paste those pages back on the calendar. You're not the same sweet you any more. You have soured up and fouled up and troubled up the sweetest area of life. And you know what happens to you?"

"What happens?"

"You start thinking like me."

"Oh, come off it," said Cindy. "You're all right."

"I have a certain historical interest," said Gloria, "like the ruins of Pompeii."

Having lived with Gloria for two years, Cindy now knew that Gloria was deliberately switching the conversation to the life and loves of Gloria Cook, partly because she was interested in the life and loves of Gloria Cook, but mostly because it was plain that the conversation about the life and loves of Cindy Holmes was leading to tension and possibly to tears. At another time Cindy might have listened with pleasure and patience to Gloria's account of her romance with a second violin at the Tanglewood Music Festival, but her nerves were raw, and she was not in the mood; and besides, Gloria was available for a showdown, and Spencer Cochran was not.

"You'll work out your problems," said Cindy, "and I'll work out mine. Just don't nibble at me."

Gloria looked at her with round eyes. "Was I nibbling?" she said.

"There hasn't been so much attention to the day-to-day progress of a situation since the Duchess married the Duke."

"I'm the same way at gin-rummy games," said Gloria, trying to pass it off. "I have reached into a player's hand and thrown a card for him when I've become aroused."

"Well, this is not a gin-rummy game," said Cindy, and regretted it the moment that she said it.

Gloria looked at her, and then went promptly to the closet, dragged out a suitcase, and started pushing clothes into it.

"Going somewhere?" said Cindy.

"You'll both do much better without a kibitzer, a heckler, a nibbler, a chaperon and a nag."

"Where will you stay?"

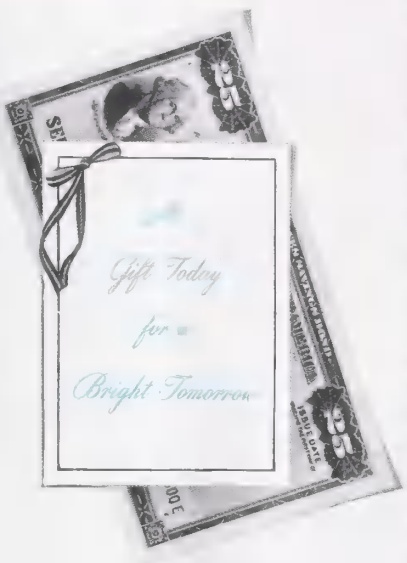
"I'll find a place. Don't worry about me, and I won't worry about you."

"Spencer is a sweet and gentle man."

"I know," said Gloria. "Is this your handkerchief or mine?"

"It's yours," said Cindy, although it was hers.

Gloria finished packing, and stood for a moment at the door. "Listen, kid," she said, "if you ever need me, give me a call, and I will arrive with the United States Marines."



"I will," said Cindy.

Gloria put a hand on her wrist. "You have all that love," she said. "You're a municipal reservoir of love. Don't throw it away. Don't give it away cheaply."

"I won't," said Cindy.

"Well," said Gloria, "there's nothing more to say. It's your life."

When Gloria had gone, Cindy felt a slight sensation of wistfulness at her departure, and then, suddenly, she was overwhelmed by an enormous thrill of excitement at being left alone. She almost reached for the telephone to call Spencer, but an unaccountable rush of modesty stayed her hand. Standing there in

A U.S. Savings Bond is a present with a future — a gift that's sure to be appreciated this Christmas or any time.

HOSPITAL-PROVEN!

actually prevents diaper rash!

Mennen Baby Magic

...the LOTION that gives baby "kissin' skin" all over!

This new wonder lotion actually prevents diaper rash, when used after each bath and diaper change. Baby Magic, used properly, heals and prevents the return of present cases! Even most severe rashes cleared fast, in hospital tests.

America's favorite baby lotion checks diaper odor, smooths skin, clears chapping, chafing, cradle cap, prickles.

In pink, blue or yellow refillable, squeeze bottle. 59¢; Giant economy size. 98¢.

NO TAX

MENNEN

Baby Specialist Since 1880

Available in Canada at slightly higher prices

the small apartment, she looked around at the jumble of clothing and chests left by Gloria's sudden leave-taking, and she decided not to call. Singing softly, she went into the tiny bathroom to wash her hair.

November sharpened into December, and Spencer went away for a few weeks, on a trip to Miami to report on the night-club activity for the winter season. When he returned, the Christmas cards were stacked on the bookstore shelves, the Santas clanged their bells in front of the department stores, the wreaths of holly bloomed in the windows across the courtyard from the small apartment. Each small evidence of the oncoming season fed the fire in Cindy's heart, for she had decided that Christmas would be the day of decision. She filled the small apartment with pine branches, and on a table in the corner she set up a white-dipped, fireproofed Christmas tree. It was not the pungent forest giant which had blazed in a corner of her parents' house every Christmas that she could remember, but it was hung with popcorn and decked with snow, and there was a small white angel on top.

Spencer had been told very little about these preparations—only that there was a Christmas party at her house and that there was a special present waiting for him.

When he called, Spencer had seemed somewhat strange—eager, but dubious.

"In recent years," he said, "Christmas has got completely out of hand."

"Silence, Scrooge," she said. "Isn't there anything you want for Christmas?"

"I want for Christmas to be over," he said, "except that after the Christmas bells come the Christmas bills."

"Well, I'm giving a party," she said.

"Who-all's going to be there?"

"We-all," said Cindy. "You-all and me-all."

"In that case," said Spencer, "you can notify the rest of the guest list that I will be there about the middle of the day."

Christmas morning was clear and snapping cold. Cindy stayed late in bed, then got up and wrapped herself in a flannel robe and started doing things about eggnog. Gloria phoned at about eleven-thirty. It was the first time in almost six weeks that she had heard Gloria's voice, and she realized with a shock how much she had missed it.

"I give you good cheer," said Gloria.

"Same to you, and many of them," said Cindy.

"Are you alone?"

"I am for the moment."

"I happen to be with the entire string section of the orchestra from Radio City Music Hall."

"The music lover finally connected with the musicians?"

"And about time," said Gloria. "They don't have to play a show till one o'clock. Can we come up for a cup of eggnog?"

Cindy thought of the bowl with the nutmeg sprinkles sitting on the bottom shelf of the refrigerator. "I don't have an egg in the house," she said.

"We'll bring the egg if you've got the nog," said Gloria.

"The truth is, I'm expecting somebody," said Cindy.

"Oh," said Gloria. There was silence for a moment, and then she said, "As long as you're not alone on Christmas. Joyoox Noel, as they say in France. I'll call you later."

At one o'clock in the afternoon there was the noise of a party across the courtyard. They started singing carols, and Cindy opened the window to hear the well-worn, well-loved tunes, putting a coat over her shoulders against the chill. For a while she amused herself by joining in softly. As always, the songs brought back memories of the great Christmas tree in her parents' parlor, with the stack of gaily wrapped boxes underneath. After a while she got cold and had to pull down the window.

At two-thirty she flirted with the idea of calling his home, disguising her voice and pretending to be his secretary at Spotlight, but there was no reason to disguise her voice unless Barbara answered the phone, and she decided she would rather die before she put herself in a position like that. Besides, he had always come before, punctually, on the do The trouble was that he had given her such a ambiguous time—the middle of the day. W that noon, Greenwich Mean Time, four o'cloc six o'clock?

Gloria phoned again, a little after three.

"I now have, in addition to the string se tion," said Gloria, "three trumpets, the secon trombone and the tympanum."

"The what?"

"Kettledrum. They don't have to play show till five o'clock. We have the eggs, w have the nogs, and we can mix them in th kettles. How about coming up to your blu heaven?"

"The truth is," said Cindy, "I'm expectin somebody."

"Oh," said Gloria. There was a silence fo the moment, and then she said, "Somebod isn't there yet?"

"He's coming around the middle of th day," said Cindy, in a fierce rush of loyalt

Now Gloria's voice changed, and all th bantering had gone out of it. "Of course h is," she said. "And I hope you have the mo wonderful Christmas ever. You're the bes kiddy." Cindy couldn't say anything, so sh hung up.

By five-thirty she had got rather dulled an numb, as if under anesthesia in the dentist chair. As if in a trance, she had begun to pu away the cups and the ladle for the eggno and the hors d'oeuvres which had been sprea out on the white-clothed table. And so it wa that she stood there rather absent-minded when the doorbell rang, and she walke listlessly to open it.

Spencer Cochran stood in the door. H cheeks were red from the December wind and his eyes sparkled. It had begun to sno outside, apparently, because there was a dus ing of flakes on his coat and on the brim of h hat. His arms were filled with green and ye low and red packages, and there was a b holly wreath around his neck.

"Come all ye faithful," said Spencer, "jo ful and triumphant." He came inside the doo smelling of the cold and the holly wreath, an he kissed her, and the points of the hol leaves pricked her skin. He was there, with h arms around her, filling her vision with h body, filling her nostrils with his good ma smell, and for the moment she washed out th tenseness of all the waiting by going soft against him and letting herself be held.

"I have brought you," he said, "all mann of goodies. I have brought you a cashme scarf which would float out of the package you merely sighed. I have brought you th perfume, which is guaranteed to make a nav officer reveal the plans of the new submari at a distance of forty paces. And I ha brought you a pound of Christmas candy, ce tified to be the most delicious trash ever mas cated by human teeth."

He was a one-man Christmas party; was wreathed in smiles and ringed wi

"What's the idea of the 'one mink coat' at the bottom of this shopping list? You trying to put something over on me?"

or the moment she forgot the chill fallen on her shoulders when she ned to the carols from across the court. ome and thrice welcome," she said. bout a kiss for the landlady?"

as prepared to let it go; she wasn't say a word. The four or five hours, r, empty four or five hours, she was to let slip by without a memory. But ull of accomplishment, thrilled with nent.

he kissed her, he said, "Wait. I other present."

eard a warning sound within her, and stop him. "I have more than enough " is the present for the girl who has ng," he said. And he took from his ocket a round thing, no bigger than an th a brass ring for a bottom and a whorl of white metal on top. He it in her hand.

t is it?" she said, bewildered.

," he said, "an electric fuse, one of atest accomplishments of modern For when the fuse is in, the lights k, electricity can do its marvels. When is out, the lights do not work, and the t triumphs of our civilization lie dark d. Without the fuse, the toaster does st. Without the fuse, the vacuum never sighs, the electric drier never opped and took a swallow of eggnog. ed to Cindy a tiresome game, less g than his other whimseys.

out the fuse," Spencer went on, "Coch- ld be having a miserable Christmas."

t do you mean?" said Cindy.

re, if you will," said Spencer, "a room eople, chattering madly, drinking ev- , saying nothing. In the corner stands rilliantly illuminated Christmas tree, e a pinball machine. Suddenly, con- n! The tree is dark. The pinball ma- gisters 'Tilt.' The people stop saying and become speechless. Into the teps mine host, Spencer Cochran. 'It g but a fuse,' says Spencer Cochran, as if he had just revealed the secret ar fission. 'I will go out and get an- ays Spencer Cochran. 'It may be hard a hardware store open on Christmas, haps they have fuses in drugstores,' ncer Cochran. Spencer Cochran speaks sure knowledge of the expert, for he ady taken the trouble to unscrew the ch controls the Christmas-tree lights. vanishes into the twilight. This fuse, unscrewed with my own hands, risk- h to be at your side, is my bonus as present to you."

es were alight, his manner expect- ere was no point in getting angry n about it. He was what he was, and all that he was. If she tried to explain, y be confused. Suddenly she felt terri- ibly tired.

e fuse good?" she said.

on the market."

e it back," she said. "Be nice, and go d light up the tree again."

lady," he said, "I only just came for stmas party. The people that live here me in."

as troubled and hurt, and she couldn't see the bewilderment that lay in his g reply. Still, she had to say it, she had o make him understand what he had her and to the other people who loved l glowed because he was there. "The ic is wrong," she said. "Two half ases don't make a whole Christmas. and screw in the fuse."

he saw that she was hurt, and he was I fouled it up," he said. "That pulver- , because I hate to make anybody ."

funny part of it is, I think you believe wn to your toenails," said Cindy. "You nt to be charming, irresistibly charm- that everyone loves you. Your talent s high-octane, my boy. You can charm s from the trees. But you cannot be all o all men—or to all women. You can't all your way, flitting between two and finding them waiting for you, un- changed, every time you arrive. Sometimes, Spence, it's kinder to have a scene. Have it with me, or have it with her, but have it."

"I don't like scenes," said Spencer. "You know that."

"I know that," said Cindy. "But the time comes when you have to make decisions, even when they hurt. Go home, Spencer. Make one whole Christmas, anyway."

He came close to her. He put his arms around her. "I don't have to be back for an hour," he said. "And you haven't given me my present."

"I have a matchless present for you," said Cindy. "I am giving you yourself. Go be irresistible to somebody who isn't one of those serious drab country girls."

She kissed him on the cheek with dry lips, and sent him out into the snow. She put most of the Christmas things away, automatically laying a wet dish towel over the sandwiches so that they would stay fresh, but she left the tree standing there—the white-dipped, fireproofed, big-city runt of a Christmas tree. She watched its meager garland of colored lights shining, and then she went and had a little eggnog, just for taste, and she cried a little. He was gone, and it burned like fury, but she was young, and there was a certain amount of slack in her life, and it helped her to know that she had done a difficult thing and that she had done it well. It was amazing how good it felt just to know she had been able to do it.

At seven o'clock, Gloria called. "I've not only got the Radio City Music Hall Orchestra," she said on the phone, "I've got the entire Men's Glee Club! They sing carols in four-part harmony!"

"Bring them up," said Cindy. "I think we have a little eggnog left."

And then she went into the bathroom, ran a comb through her hair, touched a bit of crimson to her lips, and she looked like ten million, nine hundred and ninety-nine thousand, nine hundred and ninety-nine dollars. END with zigzag sewing! Without attachments, sews straight, zigzag, forward, reverse • overcasts • blindstitches • hemstitches • mends • darns • sews on buttons • makes buttonholes • appliques • monograms • embroiders.

NECCHI . . . FIRST

NECCHI . . . FIRST

with automatic sewing! With the amazing Wonder Wheel you can do dozens of beautiful embroidery stitches, without touching the machine. There's a Necchi for every budget; straight stitch model BC only $98.95.

NECCHI . . . FIRST

with the Automatic One-Finger Lift-up! Why lift 80 pounds? With Necchi's exclusive one-finger lift-up, you can lift the machine from the cabinet well, or lower it, by just the touch of a finger . . . while seated in sewing position.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping, certified by U. S. Testing Company.

© 1954 Necchi Sewing Machine Sales Corporation

Parts and service available at 2,300 dealers in the U. S. See phone book for authorized dealer.

Dr. Spock Talks with Mothers

What "spoils" a child— and when?

By BENJAMIN SPOCK, M.D.

DI PIETRO

Dr. Spock says: "A child needs to feel that his mother and father, however agreeable, still have their rights, know how to be firm. He likes them better that way."

I HAVE two good letters to discuss. A new mother of a two-month-old daughter says, "I would appreciate a column on spoiling babies, as we are not (my husband and myself) in complete agreement on the subject. Is it possible to spoil an infant? I think not (these are almost your words). If an infant cannot be spoiled, when and at what age can the child begin to be spoiled?"

The second mother is more experienced and more definite. She says, "The demand schedule for eating-sleeping-loving, which I used and approve of, is fine for young babies, but at some point, perhaps four, perhaps five months, I believe we must modify this or develop both warped parents and children who won't know how to tolerate frustration later on. I also approve of your rule for not letting small infants cry, but this, also, I believe, must be modified for the same reason. It was something I needed help on and I didn't find it in your book. I should greatly appreciate seeing some specific material on when and how you must ease out of the demand schedule. Thank you for everything."

I think there is such a thing as spoiling in infancy. I did say, when I wrote my book in 1943 to 1945, that you can spoil a baby if you work at it actively—playing with him constantly when he'd be happy amusing himself, anxiously hovering over him when he's in no trouble—but that it doesn't come from feeding him when he's hungry, comforting him when he's miserable, being sociable with him in an easygoing way.

Today we can see that that statement doesn't really cover the whole situation. For instance, it doesn't take into account those forms of spoiling, the going-to-bed problems and the waking-in-the-middle-of-the-night problems in infancy, which I discussed a couple of months ago on this page. I hadn't ever seen one of these sleep problems until I got out of the Navy in 1946, when the philosophy of self-regulation and permissiveness had become fairly popular in some parts of the country. I hadn't seen any older babies eating at strange hours either. The old-fashioned strict regularity simply wouldn't allow such problems. But it's wise to remember that the spirit of rigid scheduling produced many other psychological problems, in mothers as well as babies. Ask some mothers of the 1920's and 1930's.

I did insert some sentences, in later printings, in Section 88, after I began to encounter sleep problems. I said, "Occasionally a very determined type of baby, whose mother has gotten in the habit of rocking him to sleep in her arms to avoid any crying, will gradually learn to fight off sleep for hours to avoid being put down. It's better to let such a baby cry for ten or twenty minutes for a few nights than to get into such a chronic struggle." But this statement probably wasn't emphatic enough to warn all parents.

In Section 274 I did say, "It's probably a good idea, after I have been emphasizing how you handle a young child by distraction and consideration, to point out that there are limits. Some gentle, unselfish parents devote so much effort to being tactful and generous to a child that they give him the feeling that he's the crown prince, or rather the king. They speak to him sweetly no matter how disagreeable he is or how unreasonable his demands. This isn't good for him or for them. He needs to feel that his mother and father, however agreeable, still have their own rights, know how to be firm, won't let him be unreasonable or rude. He likes them better that way. It trains him from the beginning to get along reasonably with other people."

One trouble is that you can't write an article that will mean the same thing to everyone. Each person takes out of a statement mainly the idea that he likes and ignores the rest. But I still keep trying to think how I can discuss the controversy of permissiveness versus firmness in a way that will make what I think is right clear to everybody.

To get a better perspective on this question I think it's helpful to take a historical view. For the first forty years of this century doctors in their pediatric training, in medical schools and hospitals, were taught the importance of strictness, especially in infant feeding, and when they went into practice they conscientiously taught strictness to mothers. They figured out mathematically what a baby of a certain weight should need in the way of protein and calories, and translated this into ounces of milk and water and sugar. They told the mother just how many ounces to put in each bottle, and they told her to give no more and no less, at just 6 A.M., 10 A.M., 2 P.M., 6 P.M. and 10 P.M., no earlier and no later.

We've learned by now that it isn't necessary to be so rigid. But then why did we think so in the 1910's and '20's and '30's? It wasn't because doctors were foolish or mean. Pediatrics was strict in the beginning because it was trying to stop the terrific infant death rate from severe diarrhea, which had always existed for bottle-fed babies, particularly in the hot summer months (that's why it was called "summer complaint"). We eventually concluded that the main cause was badly contaminated cow's milk.

Pediatrics was also strict in the beginning because babies' nutritional needs were being carefully studied for the first time and it was believed that some of the diarrhea was caused by overfeeding as well as by bacteria.

The doctors were the ones who saw the babies die by the hundreds, and the doctors were the ones who were proud of their new lifesaving knowledge. The kindest of people get stern when they carry this responsibility.

As the decades have moved by, it has become gradually clear that improved dairying, pasteurization and refrigeration are preventing most of the serious diarrhea, and that we don't have to worry so much about holding all babies down to an average formula or holding them to the clock for their feedings.

But this extreme strictness which was the rule in infant feeding easily spread into other aspects of child care such as bowel training (the mistaken idea was that absolute regularity makes for health, so why not start it early), specified hours of sleep for each age period, and so on. Get everything regulated and the sooner the better.

Now we are in the middle of a big swing back toward flexibility. The sensible and courageous people who I think did most to lead the way in American pediatrics were Dr. C. Anderson Aldrich, who headed Children's Memorial Hospital in Chicago, and later the Rochester Child Health Institute; Dr. Grover Powers, then professor of pediatrics at Yale; and Dr. Preston McLendon, a pediatrician, and Mrs. F. P. Simsarian, a psychologist, who together wrote the first article on "self-demand" and coined that phrase in 1942. Doctor McLendon was and is professor of pediatrics at George Washington University, and he took care of Mrs. Simsarian's baby, who was the first official experimental self-demand baby. Of course there had been billions of self-demand babies since the beginning of time, but nobody thought this was remarkable until after we had all been carried away by overregularity.

But a few parents get into jams under the new philosophy. I remember an extreme example described in a letter from an exhausted and bewildered mother a few years ago. She said her baby, then a year old, waked for breakfast at noon, had lunch about six, wanted to stay up till late in the evening, though the parents were sleepy at ten, wouldn't eat a good supper till midnight. Of course all that she needed to do was to wake him whenever the parents got up in the morning and he'd be ready for his meals at the time they were.

The conscientious parents who run into such problems aren't stupid or ignorant. Some of these parents probably were bossed more than was wise in their own childhoods and weren't allowed to develop confidence in their own judgment. Such people become guilty too easily, always blaming themselves and excusing others (including babies).

These situations are too bad all around. The parents are not only entitled themselves to have more assurance and more fun, they ought to, for themselves and for their children. Babies, just like grownups, prefer to be around people who know their own minds, in an agreeable sort of way, who don't let themselves be imposed on, and who take charge when appropriate.

That's enough lecturing. I should answer one question practically. Self-demand is particularly appropriate for young babies, who are mostly hungry stomach and not much worldly sense. Practically all full-size babies can adjust to a fairly regular, approximately four-hour schedule within a couple of months and can be helped to stabilize by not having a feeding rushed to them too promptly when they fuss a bit, off schedule. (I'm not talking about holding out on a starving baby.) Most babies are able to be off the second night feeding (2 A.M.) by a month, and certainly by two months, unless they're colicky. If a baby at a month or two sleeps through the 10 P.M. feeding first and still wakes between midnight and 2 A.M., then you can wake him for his night feeding at 10 or 11 P.M. If in spite of a 10 P.M. feeding he still fusses at the mystic hour of 2 A.M., let him fuss a bit and see if he won't go back to sleep. In other words, help him along gently in his growing up. I think that most healthy babies can be off all night feedings by about six months, if they've doubled their birth weight, and that by about eight months practically all of them can be on three meals a day. A few may still wake before the family breakfasttime and may need a bottle or a snack to hold them till then, but they should certainly be able to have lunch and supper at conventional hours (with perhaps one snack in midmorning and one in midafternoon).

I've received letters from a number of you asking me to write something about circumcision, timidity, aggressiveness, reluctance to graduate from strained foods, jealousy of the new baby, finicking eating, weaning from the bottle, constipation, bad language, resistance to going to bed, introduction to nursery school. I've at least touched on all these problems in my book, and I hesitate to say the same things all over again. If you want discussion of some specific aspect of one of these subjects which seems incomplete in the book, I'd be delighted to try.

Every month or so I get a frantic-sounding letter from a mother wishing I'd said more about how to manage the very difficult situation of twins. Each time I've immediately written back saying I was sorry to admit I didn't know anything very helpful (aside from the two obvious points: try to get someone to help you if you possibly can; try to treat them as individuals from the start), and asking the mother to write me everything helpful she had discovered so I could pass it on. I've never got an answer.

Although he cannot answer letters personally, Dr. Spock will be glad to hear from readers and will discuss in these pages problems of general interest.—Ed.

Never too young to step out in easy-care DuPont Nylon

It's 100% Du Pont nylon organdy—in party dresses that need none of yesterday's pampering. For today, thanks to nylon, even delicate-looking clothes have a practicality they've never had before. These delightful dresses can be hand-washed, need only a quick, light pressing. The detail, too—tumbles of roses, wisps of embroidery—is actually easy to touch up. And because of nylon's remarkable shape retention, these dresses stay crisp, fresh . . . won't wilt. When you go holiday shopping, keep in mind that, today, young beauty can be carefree, too, with nylon . . . one of Du Pont's modern-living fibers.

DU PONT
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING
. . . THROUGH CHEMISTRY

Exciting new things are happening in DuPont NYLON

Break the painful grip of children's

COLD MISERIES

A fine Bristol-Myers product

CONTAINS 3 INGREDIENTS PRESCRIBED BY DOCTORS ... PLUS SOOTHING LANOLIN

Mothers! Now relieve your child's cold miseries — "stuffy" breathing and achy chest "tightness"—with new, greaseless Minit-Rub!

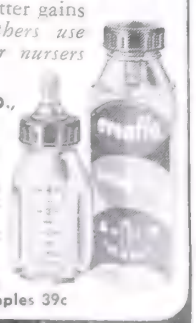
New Minit-Rub combines 3 pain-relieving prescription ingredients with soothing lanolin —in a special vanishing cream base.

So its medication starts action faster—faster than greasy rubs, faster than pain tablets! And unlike harsh-irritant rubs, new Minit-Rub won't burn the skin—yet its penetrating heat sensation and soothing, medicated vapors relieve even deep-down achy misery.

Use new Minit-Rub for muscular aches, pains, strains. All drug counters—39¢ and 69¢.

Greaseless! Stainless! Applies like Vanishing Cream!

Evenflo — Best By Test For Baby



George Swanwich, Cleveland, O., and twin daughters, Joyce and Joanna.

Evenflo SELF-REGULATING PRECISION FEEDING

Twin-Valve Nipples —So Easy to Nurse!

Just as an extra hole in a tin can permits smooth flow, so the patented twin air valves in the Evenflo Nipple provide smooth nursing. Self-regulating, they permit baby to nurse as slow or as fast as he desires. Because babies nurse Evenflo in comfort, they finish their bottles better and make better gains in weight. More mothers use Evenflo than all other nursers combined!

THE PYRAMID RUBBER CO., RAVENNA, OHIO

Complete Evenflo Units 25c (4 & 8-oz. sizes)
—with ounces in red 5¢
—with Pyrex bottles 40¢
Unbreakable Plastic Units:
8-oz. size 54c; 4-oz. 40¢
Plastic Bottles Only:
8-oz. size 39c; 4-oz. 25c
Evenflo Nipples & Parts 10c
Evenflo Deluxe Silicone Nipples 39c

"America's Most Popular Nurser"

MONEY IN VALENTINES — Send for Samples

Cash In On EVERY Occasion with MIDWEST Greeting Cards

Make bigger profits ALL YEAR. Show friends fast-selling Valentines, Easter, Mother's, Father's Day Cards, plus best Birthday, Get-Well assortments, etc. 6 new Valentine packs. Secret Pal Cards, unusual new ideas, exceptional bargains in Cards, Notes, Gifts, Gadgets, Personalized Stationery. Profits to 100% on big line. Samples on approval. Write.

Midwest Card Co., 1113 Washington Ave., Dept. M-5, St. Louis 1, Mo.

MONEY...

In Your Spare Time

Spare-time income can help you meet expenses. Write for details about our subscription-selling plan. No obligation.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
758 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Penna.

BABY COMING?
Smart gift idea!

It's the gift mother wants—"SLEEPY-BYE"*—the original all-purpose oversleeper! Exclusive "Baby-Gro" feature lets garment grow with baby! Keeps baby warm, comfy, without blankets! No more colds from kicked-off covers! No pins! Zips over baby's regular garments. Big side pleats, roomy bottom! Lots of wiggle room! Safe! No tiny legs caught in crib bars. "Best of its kind" says Nurse Louise Zabriskie, Director of the N. Y. Maternity Consultation Service. 5 nursery colors. Washable flannelette.

With Baby-Gro feature (fits baby from 6 mos.-3 yrs.).....$2.98
Layette-Size (0-6 mos.).....$1.98
Regular (individual sizes) in gay print. 6-18 mos.; 18-36 mos.....$2.98

At department and infants' wear stores.
MODELLA MFG. CO. PORT CHESTER, N. Y.
*Trade-mark of Modella Mfg. Co.

THE NIGHT BEFORE THE WEDDING

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 67

Finally, however, social pressure was too much for us. Mat was the first to go. He took to arming himself with a boy friend and disappearing into the basement to work on an engine whenever I went over for dinner. I hung on as long as I could. I shadowed him on the playground, and trailed him home after school, on the chance that he would be alone. When he was alone, he would still talk to me. But grade school had a rigid social structure—a six-month gap in age was formidable, and four years was unthinkable. My classmates would chant "Sally loves Mat," and the bigger kids would laugh, and Mat, in self-defense, would laugh too. The humiliation was too much to bear. I had to conform. I took to dolls and dress-ups.

Mat and I still saw each other, of course, but the old rapport was gone. We spoke politely, like people from different planets who are friendly, but who have no real means of communication. Mat went to junior high while I was still in grade school. When I reached junior high, I felt very adult. I remember that Joanie Hayes and I talked it over and decided that from now on we would walk properly to school, like the big girls, with poise and dignity, instead of running, as we used to do. But I could not catch up with Mat. While I was learning to walk with poise and dignity, he was already mastering the rumba.

Then, when I was thirteen, my relationship with Mat went into a new phase. I no longer adored him—I had known him for too long not to take him for granted. But I told him all my problems, and he gave me solemn advice, although sometimes I caught him smiling, and I knew he felt that anything that happened to a thirteen-year-old could not be very important.

Mat was a senior in high school then, and a very big wheel. He was on the basketball team, and he was the editor of the paper. Being a brain did not cut half so much ice with the girls as being sophisticated, and everyone agreed that Mat was sophisticated.

Joanie's older sister Elizabeth went with Mat. She told Joanie all about it.

"She says," Joanie said, "that when he looks at her she nearly dies. She says he's the handsomest man she's ever known, and if he asked her to run away and get married tomorrow, she wouldn't have the strength to say no. She says when they dance together it's so wonderful that sometimes she can't even breathe."

Mat was teaching me to dance that year, and I watched myself carefully for any of the symptoms that Joanie had described. But the only distress I felt was when Mat changed steps and I stumbled over my feet.

"A one and two and a one and two," Mat would say cheerfully. "Come on, stupid, let's try it again."

I looked at him and thought about him, but I still couldn't see what Elizabeth was so excited about. He wasn't really handsome. He was bony and thin, and the straight black hair that I had once admired seemed unglamorous to me now.

One reason for my failure to appreciate Mat may have been that I was in love again myself. Wesley Blake had curly red hair and round, pink cheeks. I thought he was perfectly darling, and when he looked at me I nearly died.

One day I told Mat how I felt about Wesley.

"He's president of home room," I said, "and he gets all A's in deportment. Isn't that wonderful?"

"Uh-huh," Mat said.

"Don't you think he's cute?" I persisted. "Joanie's crazy about him, but he likes me better." I knew I was bragging, but I couldn't help it. I wanted approval.

Mat smiled tolerantly. "He seems like a nice kid," he said.

After that I still liked Wesley, but it was different. The bloom was gone. Nothing was ever said, but Wesley and I drifted apart.

I didn't go steady with anyone for a long time; not that I wasn't interested in boys—I was. But I wanted the best, and the best was Stuart Anderson. He was the backbone of the football team, and class treasurer. I noted that the girls Stuart took out were always president of something, and I decided the way to intrigue him was to be outstanding.

I worked on the paper, I worked in the drama society, I did decorations for school dances and volunteered for anything. All this extracurricular activity was hard on my grades, but as long as I graduated, I didn't care. Besides, Stuart took a dim view of brains.

In high school, if you try hard enough, you can usually get elected to something. In my senior year, I was head of the Pep Club. I had the final word on the cheers, and during the first game of the season we capped a sequence with, "Stuart Anderson, he's our man! If he can't do it, no one can!"

The next night, Stuart called me for a date.

Stuart was a lot of fun. He liked to dance, and he talked a sort of Elizabethan boy ("Come on, wench, get thy coat") which I thought was terribly funny. He never said anything serious. The only dangerous thing about him was his driving. He had a hopped-up car and we raced trains, friends, trucks, airplanes and rabbits, while I shut my eyes and said firmly to myself, "Remember, he's the captain of the team."

When spring came, we were both still alive and a new mood settled on us. We knew that we were going on to greater things when we graduated, but we knew, too, that we were leaving something behind.

We talked about the future. Stuart was going to the State University. I was going east to school.

"Sally, lass," he said, "I'll miss thee."

"I'll miss thee—you—too," I said. I felt like crying.

We looked dolefully at each other.

"Sally," he said, "let's—let's not lose track of each other."

I threw my arms around his neck. "I'll never lose track of you," I said. "I'll write every week—every day. It's only four years. I'll wait."

"Me too," he said.

And so, although we were not officially engaged, we had promised to wait until we were out of college.

Mat Cantrell had spent most of his summers away from home while he was in college, but that summer he was back. He had graduated, and he was waiting to be called for the Army, so he couldn't work, and he was bored and when I wasn't with Stuart, I was with Mat.

Mat had changed. He seemed taller and heavier, and his dark eyes, while not exactly frowning, were serious. He was interested in a girl named Ruth Winston, who came for a visit in July. She was not pretty, but she was very smart. I felt ruffly and wispy around Ruth. I tried to calm down my curls and gave up peasant skirts for tailored linens, but even then I looked pretty naïve.

We went out on a couple of double dates—Mat and Ruth, Stuart and I. Mat and Ruth did most of the talking. They discussed dialectical materialism, Hegel, and Kant, and the role of philosophy in modern living.

"The world's in a mess," Mat said, "and it's up to us—to our generation—to do something about it. But philosophy has got to be practical. It's too easy to take a dive into Schopenhauer and never come up." He turned to Stuart. "What do you think?" he asked.

"You bet," Stuart said. "You can't read a book on football. You've got to get out there and play."

Even I could see that this wasn't quite the right answer.

"Hey, swain," I said to Stuart, "let's dance."

Later, I asked Mat if he were going to marry Ruth.

"Maybe," he said. "With a couple of years in the Army ahead of me, I don't think it's the time to plan."

"Two years?" I cried. "Stuart and I'll have to wait four—maybe more—but we're going to do it." I told him all about Stuart, how he was the captain of the football team, and had a scholarship to the university.

"Good for him," Mat said. He was watching me very kindly.

ıny," I said, "I've thought I was in e, but when you really are, it's dif-gave him an anxious glance. "Do ove, Mat?"
ed. "It's none of my business, is it?"
ıt I want to know. You do like him,
?"
ted my arm. "Of course I do, Sally,"
He strikes me as being a very nice ıat, when I went out with Stuart, e not quite the same. I had thought adult, and I realized suddenly that I seventeen. Mat had changed. I was hange, and so was Stuart, no matter

l we tried not to. I think Stuart , too, because he kept telling me that he ones who were going to be difıo were going to be faithful, and I th him, a little too fervently. I parted with tears, and I wrote him con-through the fall. By Thanksgiving, s had dwindled to nothing. When s came, he told me he was going h a girl at the university. I waited for to break, but it didn't, so I said, l right, Stuart. I guess we both knew going to happen, even last fall."
ere such kids," he said.
e smiled at each other over the

was not like high school. In high lot of us had had the faint notion were doing somebody a favor by In college, we were paying outright ivilege—a fact that our parents did forget. It suddenly became not only e, but actually desirable, to get good est and most serious boy in my class Bauer. Peter had stern blue eyes ong chin and a sensitive mouth. He t of bitter idealist—that is, he knew and hoped for the best. He was an or, and he was very bright. He argued rofessors and treated the world to a sapproval. People were a little afraid ut they admired him. I was dazzled in; but beyond that, I knew that he o save the world, and that anyone to save the world was in for a rough ped that he needed a friend, and that would be me.

English major, but I got in as many rses as I could, and worked myself ng to get through them. Peter was to bother with girls. He bought me coffee once in a while, and checked erm papers, but that was as far as it n the fall of our senior year, some-natic happened. Doctor Brown, one ofessors, suddenly and inexplicably resigned. Peter and I were incensed. We were sure that Doctor Brown was being forced out because of the unorthodox opinions he had expressed in class. Doctor Brown was not exactly a liberal, but he believed in the goodness of man in the raw, or primitive state, and this led him to some strange conclusions.

"I think his opinions are crazy," Peter said, "but he has a right to them. What's happening to freedom of speech, anyhow?"

"I think we should do something about it," I said, figuring that was what he wanted to hear.

PETER banged on the table. "We'll organize the students!" he said. "We'll have a mass protest!"

Everybody likes to protest, and by the next morning we had a couple of dozen students gathered together. We marched over to Doctor Brown's house and informed him of our plan.

He was more startled than pleased.

"Look here," he said, "it's very fine of you to take this—this interest, but I'd just as soon leave quietly."

"That's exactly what they want you to do," Peter said. "We're going to bring this thing out in the open. No man should suffer for his honest opinions."

Doctor Brown stood on the front porch, looking quite unsettled as we marched off to see the president of the college.

Peter and I, as the leaders of the movement, were admitted to the president's office. He listened to us gravely, but he did not cringe under Peter's questions, and he refused to give any reason for Doctor Brown's resignation. I expected him to throw us out of school for our effrontery, but as we left he said he was pleased to see that we were alert young people, even if our enthusiasm was misdirected. I caught the flick of a smile in his eyes and wondered when, if ever, anyone was going to take us seriously.

Peter and I were too excited to go to class. We bought some coffee and walked up by the lake and drank coffee and talked.

"We'll keep at this thing till we blow it wide open!" Peter said. "This is terrific. I finally feel as though I'm accomplishing something. Thanks for standing with me on this, Sally. I know it takes courage."

"Peter," I said, "I'd stand with you on anything."

He took my hand. "Would you?" he said.

I nodded.

We looked at each other for a long time, and then he leaned over and kissed me.

The next morning we heard, via the grapevine, that Doctor Brown had been dismissed over his unorthodox opinions, all right, but they were his unorthodox opinions about somebody else's wife. Peter and I were practi-

"They're fine—I mean they're not sick."

THIS GIFT WILL HELP YOUR CHILDREN learn!

Giant 12" Commander
REPLOGLE
GLOBE

Children who grow up with a globe at home have a better understanding of history and the social studies. Homework is easier, more like fun, because only on this true scale model of the world can youngsters see which nations are neighbors, their true sizes, shapes and the "Great Circle" distances between them. Educators agree on the value of a globe in the home . . . and your Replogle globe will be used as frequently as the family dictionary.

Invest in your child's education. Get this accurate, up-to-date* Replogle globe now . . . at your Stationery, Book or Department Store. From $1.95 to $895.00, Standard and Illuminated Models.

* Today's globe will be just as useful years from now. Over 98% of a globe never changes.

GIANT REFERENCE GLOBE
Replogle 12" Commander Model —most popular globe in America.
6,410 place names, 452 square inches of map surface.
Washable 10 color map.
Globe and "See the World" book $8.95

COMMENDED BY THE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS' MAGAZINE

FREE . . . Send today for WORLD TIME-FINDER
Set the dial. Compare time in major cities of the world.
12-PAGE BOOK OF GLOBE GAMES.
Full-color literature and more information about Replogle globes.

REPLOGLE GLOBES, Inc.
1901 North Narragansett Avenue, Dept. 11;
Chicago 39, Illinois
Please send free World Time-Finder, full color literature describing Replogle Globes, and 12-page book of globe games.
Name_____
(Please Print)
Address_____
City_____ Zone____ State_____

JOLLY TIME POP CORN BEST YOU EVER POPPED!

MERRY CHRISTMAS
GRAVY MASTER
BRUSHED ON BEFORE COOKING
Makes Meat
BROWNER—BETTER EATING—TASTIER

LOOKING FOR A SMART BABY GIFT?

It's new! It's different! Mother will love it! It's "SLEEPY-DRYE"* the all-cotton diaper cover that solves baby's wetness problems! Made with durable water-repellent! Worn over diapers. Triple-reinforced crotch locks wetness in diaper! No more wet beds, wet nightclothes! No hot plastic or rubber lining! Lets air in—lets irritating ammonia out! No more diaper rash! Now baby's body breathes! Approved for lasting repellency by the Better Fabrics Testing Bureau. Won't crack, peel, stiffen! Washable! 5 nursery colors. Sizes to 5. At all leading department and infants' wear stores $1.25. Buy "SLEEPY-DRYE," the diaper cover that really works!

"Sleepy-Drye" MODELLA MFG. CO. PORT CHESTER, N. Y.
*Trade-mark of Modella Mfg Co

THREE-IN-ONE FOR HOURS OF Fun!

GIVE A TRANSOGRAM
TAK-A-PEG DESK-ETTE

Sturdy desk with blackboard top that swings up to reveal TAK-A-PEG Set complete with pegs and hammer, plus extra storage space for chalk, pencils, erasers, etc. Constructed of smooth selected wood in maple finish, reinforced with concealed steel braces. $5.98

At your favorite toy counter

TRANSOGRAM
Growing Up TOYS
Charles S. Raizen, Pres., 200 Fifth Ave., N. Y. 10

3 Cheers for Christmas Eating

all new...all singing with the merry flavor of Ripe Olives

Cheer the way a "welcome bowl" of Ripe Olives greets your guests . . . particularly when you make it a part of your festive decorations.

Cheer the savory flavor of Ripe Olives in this unusual Appetizer Spread: Blend a 3-ounce package of cream cheese with a little milk. Stir in ⅛ teaspoon curry powder, ¼ teaspoon grated onion, ½ cup chopped ripe olives, dash paprika and pepper. Serve on crackers or toast, with potato chips.

Cheer the "ohs" and "ahs" that come with the eating of this bright, new Turkey Stuffing: Cook ½ cup chopped onion and 1 cup thinly sliced celery in ½ cup butter or margarine until transparent but not browned. Pour over 3 cups each corn bread crumbs and soft bread crumbs (6 cups soft bread crumbs may be used). Toss to blend. Stir in ½ teaspoon each salt and sage, ¼ teaspoon black pepper and 1 cup ripe olives cut into large pieces. Sprinkle with ¼ cup hot giblet stock or water. Mix lightly. Enough for 8-pound turkey.

ripe olives*

make meals that sing with California flavor

*Ripe or green-ripe...whole, pitted, chopped or sliced!

Write for free recipe booklet, "Elegant but Easy Recipes with California Ripe Olives." Olive Advisory Board, Dept. D-52, 24 California Street, San Francisco 11, California.

cally laughed off the campus. It didn't matter. I had made a fool of myself, but Peter had kissed me, and that was worth any amount of humiliation.

After that Peter and I were together constantly. We made a lot of plans for the world, which was sleeping peacefully, unaware that we were on the way. Peter came home with me for spring vacation, in order to look over my family.

Mat was back in town. He was out of the Army, had taken a course in business administration, and settled to work for his father. Mat was going with a woman named Martha Wyatt. She was a divorcee, a few years older than he, and she had two small children.

"Are you in love with her?" I asked.

MAT shrugged his shoulders. "I don't know. I don't think so. It's more of a friendship than a romance. But I like to be around her. She's—well, she's an adult. Most girls seem lightheaded to me now. When you're young, you have a lot of crazy ideas—you're going to make a million dollars, or run for President, or sail to Tahiti in a rowboat. The Army gave me enough adventure to last the rest of my life—and I'm smart enough now to know I'll never be President. All of a sudden you realize you've got to fit your ambition to your capacities. That's when you grow up."

"What do you want now?" I asked.

He smiled. "All the things that I used to laugh at," he told me. "A home. A family. A place in the community."

I made a face. "You certainly sound bogged down."

"No," he said, "there's a difference between bogging down and growing roots."

I took Peter over to meet Mat. Martha was there too. We did a lot of talking. Peter kept trying to get Mat into an argument, but Mat didn't seem interested. Peter ended up giving a monologue on Adam Smith.

I salute you.

The gloom of the world is but a shadow. Behind it yet within our reach is joy. There is radiance and glory in the darkness, could we but see—and to see we have only to look. I beseech you to look.

Life is so full of meaning and purpose, so full of beauty—beneath its covering—that you will find earth but cloaks your heaven. Courage then to claim it; that is all! But courage you have; and the knowledge that we are pilgrims together, wending through unknown country home.

And so, at this Christmastime, I greet you . . . with profound esteem and with the prayer that for you now and forever, the day breaks, and the shadows flee away.

—FRA GIOVANNI, A. D. 1513

Later I asked Mat what he thought of Peter.

"Well," he said, "he's a little wild-eyed right now, but he'll calm down. I went through that stage myself."

"He's awfully smart," I said. "He's got the highest I.Q. of any of the econ majors. Everybody expects great things of him."

"They're probably right."

I frowned. "I wish you'd tell me what you really think."

"Would it make any difference?"

"No, but I want to know."

He ruffled my hair. "If it'll make you feel any better," he said, "I think Peter is a very nice kid."

I had thought that Peter knew everything, but after that I realized suddenly that he was young, and that no one so young knew everything, no matter how bright he was.

When we got back to school, I remembered Doctor Brown and freedom of opinion, and decided to try a little of it myself. I came out in favor of laissez faire. That did it. By the time graduation came, Peter had given me up. We had a long talk about it.

"I don't really care about laissez faire," I admitted, "but sometime there'll be something I do care about, and if you disagree, what would happen?"

Peter nodded. "You're right," he said. "I'd never let you alone. I'd try to, but I couldn't. We came together in a crisis; now that the smoke's cleared—well, at least we found out in time, and there's no harm done."

"No," I said, "I guess not."

I kissed him good-by, and I cried halfway home on the plane, but by the next morning I felt better, and in a couple of weeks I found that I had stopped thinking about Peter at all.

I had, along with my econ and English, the sense to take typing and shorthand, ar September I went to work as a secretar Phillip Dyer.

I didn't see much of Mat that wi Martha Wyatt had married someone else. Mat was not going with anyone in partic but he had moved into his own apartment it was on the other side of town. So we no longer neighbors, and sometimes a wee two went by without our meeting. He busy—and I was busy too.

Working for Phil Dyer was exciting. He a famous man in our town. Young—he under forty—he had taken over a dying ness and turned it into one of the fastest-g ing small factories in the Midwest. He longed to a lot of organizations and bo I was forever making plane reservations sending telegrams and juggling appointm

Phil (we got to first names after a mon so) was an attractive man. He wore gla and his hair was beginning to desert temples, but he had strong features and a smile and he talked slowly, with great aut ity. You had the feeling that he could bac everything he said with a notarized docum

He took me out to lunch a few times, then out to dinner. He was so busy the could never plan far ahead, and af had missed a coup dates with him bec of previous eng ments, I stopped g with anyone else.

I tried to figur whether or not I in love with him. sight of him didn' me cold chills, or thing like that, enjoyed being him. He was ir gent and atten and sometimes, I made him lau felt that I had ac plished somethir taking his min business for a while.

For the most though, we c laugh. Phil was ant, but he wa lighthearted. I used to the vo college crowd, and when I was with Phil to curb my silliness. He was seventeen older than I, and I tried to grow up fa

One spring evening Phil and I went walk. We ended up at the fountain—the fountain where, years before, Stuart A son and I had sworn eternal faith. It wa same kind of evening as that long-ago on been—soft and warm, with the scent of and the gentle drip of water over the st

Phil started talking about himself. Th unusual. He generally talked about bus or politics. But he told me about his hood, and how his father had lost every in the crash and how he, Phil, had go work when he was fourteen.

"Now for the first time," he said, "I'm ing up for air. I've begun to realize tha not getting any younger, and that just isn't enough. I want a home, and child a son to inherit the business—and, of co a wife." He took my hands. "I know th crazy sort of proposal, but I've never pro to anyone before, and when I can't fall ba parliamentary law, I'm likely to flounde

HE had a funny smile on his face, an moonlight made him look about ten younger, and made me feel about ten older. I decided that it was just possible did love him, and I think I would have l him and said yes, only the chimes fro city-hall clock rang nine, and he started

"Good heavens," he said, "I was sup to be over at Paxton's half an hour ag have to get you home."

I went straight to my room and stre out on my bed and thought about it. was a lot to be said for marrying Phil. I he wasn't mad about me—it was just ti

d to get married, and I happened to be ble. But I knew, too, that he would be il, and that, in his own way, he loved Ve would have a pleasant life, and I be a part of something important and ig. I pictured myself dressing for dinner lanning menus, and being charming to iests. When Phil was depressed, I could rt him; and when he was ill, I would him breakfast in bed and see to it that ok his pills. Of course he was almost depressed, and his health was excellent, omehow he was more appealing when I ht of him as down.

y there worrying for about an hour, and instead of going in to talk it over with r, which is what girls are supposed to do se cases, I slipped downstairs and into r and headed for Mat's apartment.

t was not surprised to see me. I fre- ly stopped in for a late cup of coffee—he e same if he was in our neighborhood. ello, child," he said, "have a chair."

waved toward the sofa, and went out urned the heat on under the coffee. Then tled down.

hat's with you?" he asked.

hink," I said, "I'm going to get married." raised his eyebrows. "Married? Who oked casually at the wall. "Phil Dyer." re was something like an explosion from side of the room. "Phil Dyer!" he below wait a minute," I said. "Don't get d. It isn't as crazy as you think." I told ll about it, the various pros and cons, he emphasis on the pros. Mat paced up own, getting madder by the minute.

ou're out of your head," he said when I nished. "You can't marry him."

hy not?" I said. By this time I was get- nad myself. "I'd have a wonderful life im. Why can't I marry him?"

t threw up his hands. "Why can't you?" d. "Because he's an old man, that's why. ust be nearly forty."

mped to my feet. "So at least he isn't a kid,'" I snapped.

scowled at me. "What do you mean?" egan to do a little pacing of my own. e kid'; that's what you always said—as h I were about five years old and had urls for a brain. Wesley, and Stuart Anderson, and Peter—you ruined all of them for me. Every time I liked anybody, he was a 'nice kid.'"

Mat was standing perfectly still, staring at me. "I didn't mean to ruin things for you," he said.

I turned on him. "If you didn't mean to, why did you keep doing it?"

He shook his head. "I don't know." Then his expression changed. "If you knew I ruined things," he said, "why did you keep letting me?"

It was my turn to stare. I looked at Mat, at his dark hair and his dark eyes, and his strange, familiar face—the face I had not really looked at since the days when I followed him home from school.

"I don't know why," I said, but I did know. A thousand memories rushed through my brain: Mat, breaking the ice in the fishpond; Mat, describing the guillotine; Mat, counting out the rumba. It seemed that wherever I looked, there was nothing in my whole life but Mat Cantrell.

Neither of us moved.

"Sally," he said at last, "maybe I wanted to ruin things for you."

"Maybe," I said, "I wanted you to."

I don't know who took the first step, but somehow we were in each other's arms, and he was kissing me, or I was kissing him—whichever it was, it was wonderful.

After a while, I drew back to get my breath and my balance.

"Do you realize," I said, "that this is the first time you've kissed me since I was six and I hid in the doghouse and you caught me?"

He nodded. "Think of those wasted years." Then his face brightened. "However," he said, "it's much better now."

"Yes," I said, closing my eyes, "much better."

So I'm marrying Mat tomorrow. I still don't know quite how it happened, and neither does Mat. But I guess we were the only ones who were surprised. When I told mother, she said, "Oh, fine! I thought you two were never going to get together."

And when I told dad, he looked up from his book with a pleased smile and said, "Good for you! I've always thought Mat Cantrell was a very nice kid!"

CAN THIS MARRIAGE BE SAVED?

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 148

y should be clean to meet his father. Early norning I filled the bathtub to the brim vater and poured in a cup of soap flakes. I called and asked Johnny to help me e the light bulb. The moment he stepped the bathroom, I was ready. I jerked the rug ohnny tripped. I then shoved him into the ajamas and all. Johnny is six feet tall and s nearly as much as Gid, but I held him and started scrubbing. In the midst of ap-and-water battle, Gid arrived home. ard the yelling and splashing and ran to athroom. Immediately Johnny turned as Moses, and finished the bath by him- ve had no trouble with him since about iness, but Gid still thinks I was wrong." sy sighed.

try to keep an orderly, tasteful house Gid and Johnny can be comfortable. fair seamstress, but I have no incentive sign and sew pretty things. Two years changed all our upholstery and draper- ut my menfolk didn't notice any differ- I enjoy cooking. Both Gid and Johnny mpossible to cook for. Gid is strikingly ome, but he is more preoccupied with ight and waistline than any woman. He type man who is forever adopting some diet, counting calories and vitamins, the fun out of food. Sometimes he eats meat, cheese and eggs; sometimes he nly vegetables. He turns up his nose at kes and pies, my homemade bread. His diet seems to consist of raisins, wheat and raw carrots, washed down with t oil.

hnny has the appetite of any normal but he feels duty-bound to follow his particular version of his father's diet. I serve him wheat germ, raisins, carrots with all his meals. I cook every bite he eats in Gid's brand of peanut oil or he won't touch his food. Our kitchen reeks of peanut oil. The smell revolts me. One of these days my patience will snap and there will be another knock-down drag-out between my son and me. So far I've held myself in because I think a fourteen-year-old boy should eat.

"I also think a fourteen-year-old boy should attend school," said Patsy tensely. "Two months ago—Gid was in Honolulu on the way to Tokyo—the truant officer notified me that Johnny had been absent from his classes a week. I investigated. At first Johnny declared the truant officer had confused him with some other boy. Eventually, however, I got the facts. Johnny and Frank had bummed around in junk yards, collected old auto parts, and built themselves a souped-up jalopy. They had been cutting school to race around town all day, testing their machine. Johnny calmly told me they had achieved a speed of ninety miles an hour on a straight-away. I was terrified. Those hot rods are death traps, as everybody knows.

"Johnny and I went to the mat in a great big way. He was impudent, disrespectful, defiant. I couldn't force him to promise to stay out of the jalopy. But I did my best to discipline him. Every evening I locked him in his bedroom with his schoolbooks and there he remained until I unlocked him in the morning. I could hardly wait for Gid to come home. For once I was certain Gid would side with me. I couldn't believe he would approve of Johnny's cutting school and risking his life.

When Freezing Meats . .

In FREEZER or REFRIGERATOR

Save ALL Their Juicy Tenderness This Easy, Inexpensive Way

Rolls are 15, 18, 24 inches wide. Wrapping instructions in every box.

You need special freezer paper — but not expensive materials — to wrap meats properly for freezing. For top quality at low cost use KVP, the original freezer paper. You'll like the way it fits meat like a glove . . . minimizes damaging moisture loss and freezerburn . . . and strips easily from meat without thawing. Sold by locker plants, supermarkets, and houseware and paper sections of leading stores. A size for every need.

Your Guarantee of Quality KVP

Paper Maids SAVE TIME — SAVE WORK

Shelf Papers • Freezer Papers • Heavy and Fancy Waxed • KVP and Mrs. Hayward's Dusting Papers • Pie Tape • Baking Cups • Cookery Parchment • Gift Wrap

KALAMAZOO VEGETABLE PARCHMENT CO. • KALAMAZOO, MICHIGAN

In Canada Buy KVP — APPLEFORD Paper Products

Heavenly Smooth 7-MINIT Fluffy FROSTING

Your Perfect Christmas Trimming!

NEW BOILED FROSTING

Made Without Boiling

FREE!

Illustrated, 14-page booklet showing cakes for all occasions . . . and 19 different frosting variations. Also hints on making perfect pies. Send your name and address to: 7-MINIT, Dept. FL-7. 660 Madison Ave., New York 21, N. Y.

HEAVENLY-SMOOTH and ANGEL-LIGHT! You just add water and whip up. Never fails. Country-fresh egg whites guarantee its light, fluffy texture and luscious flavor.

Lavishly frosts large two-layer cake or up to thirty-eight cup cakes.

Make all your CHRISTMAS CAKES Party-Pretty without effort. Frost them with 7-MINIT Fluffy FROSTING

Whips Soft! Spreads Soft! Stays Soft!

"Gid returned very late at night, around one A.M. I was waiting up and so was Johnny—at my express command. The minute Gid walked through the door and put down his traveling bag, I gave him a full report on Johnny and the jalopy.

"I should have known Gid would fail me," Patsy said, and her nervous hands picked at her dress. "Gid wasn't shocked at Johnny's behavior. Nor was he perturbed when I pointed out the dangers of two boys racing on the public streets. If anything, he seemed pleased with Johnny. He was bored, annoyed, impatient with me. In a few minutes he and Johnny were chattering about the jalopy as though I weren't there. Their talk was technical but I soon gathered Gid had given our son the money to buy some of the parts for the car. In short, he had deliberately encouraged Johnny to flout my authority. I couldn't bear it. I broke into their conversation. I demanded to know if Gid didn't intend to punish Johnny. Whereupon Gid said to me, 'Boys will be boys. You have punished the kid already.'

"I looked at my husband, I looked at my son. I sat down on the sofa and started to cry. I lost control and had hysterics. I screamed at Gid that I would pack my clothes then and there, and leave him and Johnny. He didn't even put his hand on my shoulder. He didn't ask me to stay. He mumbled something about my nerves being in poor shape and picked up his bag and went in our bedroom and shut the door. Johnny scuttled into his room and shut his door. Next day I was terribly sick. It was nerves again, the doctor said.

"Three weeks ago, on July third, Gid and I had our twentieth anniversary," Patsy continued in a flat, dead voice. "Johnny had left for his summer camp, but for a miracle Gid was at home. Twenty years seemed like an important milestone to me. Nevertheless, Gid forgot the date. There was no gift. On our wedding night he had ordered a supper of lobster and champagne. On our twentieth anniversary I ate dinner in a noisy roadside inn while Gid sat outside in the car, listening to the radio. When we finally reached home he immediately went to bed."

Patsy paused.

"I have done nothing to deserve Gid's indifference, his icy coldness. When we were first married, he treated me as wonderfully as my own father did. My father died when I was nine," Patsy said. "After my father's death I had nobody until I met Gid. Literally nobody. My mother remarried and my stepfather, who had three children, hated the expense of feeding me. I was kept out of school half the time to tend his children, and the three of them made my life a misery. As a little girl the only escape I could imagine was marriage. I used to dream about my future husband and of how happy we would be.

"Marrying Gid," said Patsy, "seemed to me like stepping out of a prison into the sunshine. In the beginning, that is. Gid was strong and protective like my father. He showered me with compliments, appreciation. Nearly every time he came back from a flight he brought me something. The gift might be small, but the thoughtfulness was there. I was always frightened when he had to fly, but I hid my fear and loneliness. I longed for a child. I thought a child would be company and would bring Gid and me closer. When Johnny finally came, my cup of happiness overflowed. Johnny was a beautiful baby, a warm and loving baby. Then Johnny grew and changed. Gid changed too. It's been years since I've had any companionship with either one of them, any warmth or love. The truth is neither Gid nor Johnny needs me.

"Gid even thinks I am bad for Johnny. He wants to separate us. He is insisting Johnny be sent away to school when he is through with camp. I think I am the one who should be sent away, for I have plainly failed as a wife and as a mother. I believe I should leave my family and get a divorce."

Gid Tells His Side:

"My wife is an emotional wreck," said Gid, a lean, personable man of forty-nine with thick, dark hair and remote, gray eyes. "I would like to help Patsy—she doesn't believe I love her, although I do—but she's got me licked. Patsy seems constitutionally unable to take the normal strain and pressures of living. She allows her nerves to get the better of her, to make her sick. She spends a quarter of the time in bed, and she seems to spend the balance of it battling with Johnny and with me. It isn't surprising that Patsy feels useless, since she so frequently and bitterly complains.

"Patsy could put her wits and energies to use in understanding our boy. There is no denying Johnny is a tough youngster to handle, but Johnny needs his mother's love and help. Patsy isn't a mother in any real sense of the word. She slugs it out with Johnny on his own level, like another child. She has no positive talent for bringing out Johnny's good traits—my worst traits too. She will yield to Johnny on a major matter where she should stand firm, and then make an issue of a trifle.

"The other night she ordered Johnny to go to his room and get at his lessons. Johnny's dignity—fourteen-year-old boys need dignity—was offended. He remarked the study ing had to wait until he went to the corner and mailed a letter. It was obvious he was looking for an argument. If Patsy had said 'O.K., Johnny, mail your letter and then hurry back,' she would have side-stepped trouble. I had already given Johnny the money. He started out the door. Immediately Patsy lost her temper and zoomed up like a space rocket. She snatched a broom and cracked Johnny over the head and raised a lump as big as a goose egg. She darn near knocked him cold. And then, conscience-stricken, she had such violent hysterics I was obliged to call the doctor.

"How can an adolescent boy have any respect for a mother—a mature woman—who hits him with a broom or shoves him in the bathtub? Johnny is too big and too old for strong-arm measures. Patsy continually protests because I don't uphold her in disciplining our boy—at times I guess I may be too easy make it easy with mix make it sparkle with Diamonds

WALNUT PEACHERINO SALAD

This two-layer beauty boasts a built-in dressing—plus plump Diamond Walnuts for crunchy appeal!

- 2 pkgs. lemon-flavored gelatin
- 1¾ cups boiling water
- 2 tsps. lemon juice
- ¾ cup syrup from canned peaches
- ⅓ cup chopped Diamond Walnuts
- 12 to 16 cling peach slices
- 4 maraschino cherries, cut up
- ½ cup commercial sour cream, or ½ cup cottage cheese, well drained

Dissolve gelatin in boiling water; add lemon juice and peach syrup. Cool till thickened. Add Diamond Walnuts—the crisp touch that molded salads need! Arrange peaches and cherries in 8" x 4" x 4" loaf pan; cover with one cup of gelatin. Chill till firm. To remaining gelatin add sour cream or cottage cheese. Pour over fruit layer. Chill. To serve: unmold, and spoon mayonnaise down the center to frame plump Diamond Walnut halves. 8 to 10 servings.

CANDY-STRIP PUDDING

What wonderful tricks you can work with a mix—when you add Diamond Walnuts! Take vanilla tapioca pudding. Make it as package directs; cool to lukewarm. Melt ½ cup semi-sweet chocolate pieces over warm, not hot, water; stir in 1 beaten egg yolk, 2 tbsps. cream and 1 tsp. vanilla. Beat an egg white stiff and fold into chocolate. Now add ½ cup chopped Diamond Walnuts. In dessert glasses, spoon alternate layers of pudding and the walnut-crunchy chocolate mixture. Top with crisp, golden Diamond Walnut halves. 6 delicious servings.

2 ways to buy Diamonds ...take your choice

In-the-shell for economy—Over two full cups of usable kernels per pound! Packed in 1 lb. cellophane bags (large walnuts in red bags, medium size in blue).

Ready-shelled for instant use—crisp halves and pieces, in 8 and 4 oz. cans. So handy, so quick and easy to use!

Add the touch that adds so much

DIAMOND WALNUTS

it if she would settle on a few genu-ortant faults in Johnny that needed ient, I might feel different. Patsy o riled I'm automatically inclined to inst her and give our son a break.
en there is more right on her side is, it's hard for me to back her up.
is in a constant ferment because school grades are poor. Well, I sup-is a mother's privilege. But Patsy pride in the fact that Johnny is a orn mechanic. I do. I enjoy fooling hinery myself. It's hard for me to Johnny needs to learn how to write h composition when all his talents anical. I am proud he and Frank opy out of scrap parts. Patsy insists a sinister influence, which he isn't.
a kid like Johnny. The two of them have cut school, but Frank just got
's license and they couldn't wait to nd in their own machine. Johnny f speeding at iles an hour,
y was credu-gh to believe ks, that jalopy make forty.
a tough row when I was age. Maybe y I would like
th the road
r him. From
I can remem-crazy to fly,"
"but my folks ve a dime. My seemed as the moon. I ears as an auto
—many a time
ngry to pay for sons—before I as a pilot. I rry until I was ght and solidly with an air-

I fell in love
she was sweet ling—soft and nd helpless as but only sevwas afraid she too young for d hard to for-didn't succeed.
having such a me with her r mother was nably as mean fish as any
I have ever that I felt almost a duty to marry and her. I wanted to make up to Patsy for asures and fun she had missed. In those never I came in from a flight, she ually did something special. Patsy lly appreciative of any little thing.
arly years of our marriage, Patsy ve these chronic depressions and ailments, although she hasn't ever sically strong. And even then she bout my flying and complained of
.
felt the lack of children considerably n I did. I wasn't eager for Patsy to ild, since I was concerned about her efore Johnny came along, she had iscarriages that frightened me badly.
, it didn't seem fair of me to stand in Y's birth nearly killed Patsy," Gid was based in a small Southern town

ime. The doctor was inadequately and Patsy was in labor a week. Her cence was slow. Looking back, I y wonder if all our troubles might started then. Perhaps, in my joy at very and at being the father of a son, ve spoiled Patsy. She was so thrilled nny, I never dreamed the day would en she would treat him as she now

e Johnny was a baby," Gid went on,
as an ideal mother. But she couldn't seem to get it through her head that Johnny wouldn't remain a baby. Johnny is the all-boy type, I'm glad to say. Patsy lost control of him longer ago than she thinks; Johnny was sassing her at six and seven, and small wonder. Patsy was still trying to handle him as though he was four or five. Naturally he rebelled and acted worse. Then Patsy would punish him much too severely for misbehavior she had practically invited. Furthermore, she would attempt to drag me into the act. When I arrived home days later, she would expect me to jump on the kid. I refused to oblige her. Somebody had to defend Johnny's rights, as I saw it. Whenever I stood up for him, Patsy got her feelings hurt. I have repeatedly suggested to Patsy that she demand something less than perfection, but I don't get to first base.

"I AM away from my son more than the average father. I don't like the idea of Johnny looking upon me as an ogre. Johnny will be grown and gone soon enough. I don't believe he should be brought up to hate either of his parents. When I tell Patsy her top-sergeant techniques are alienating me and making Johnny dislike her, she doesn't improve. Instead she is likely to create one of her scenes.

"She is forever threatening divorce—Patsy would be completely lost on her own—but long ago I learned her threats weren't serious. Now when she starts talking in that vein, I simply walk off. Or else I tell her to go ahead and leave, if that's how she feels. Of course she doesn't leave. Usually, after one of those scenes, she folds up and has another illness.

"For years, except when I'm out on a flight, I've led a life no dog would envy. Luckily, I love my job. The money is extremely good, but there are satisfactions in my line that money won't buy. There's male companionship. There's variety. There is the challenge of aiming at perfection on every flight. As a class, I guess that most airline pilots do feel clannish, a little set apart from the ordinary run of folk. There is nothing trivial or small in being responsible for the safety of anywhere from fifty to eighty passengers as you carry them over thousands of miles of water.

"No, I don't discuss my work with Patsy," Gid replied in answer to a question. "She sees flying only in terms of possible crashes. She isn't even interested in helping me stick to a diet. I have a tendency toward overweight. If I don't keep my weight and blood pressure down, I'll be out of a job.

"I'm no spring chicken," Gid said. "I come home from a flight tuckered out and in a mood to rest and relax and enjoy a little calm. Even now, there are times I come home feeling warm and loving toward Patsy. That feeling certainly doesn't last. Invariably I walk smack into the middle of a pitched battle between her and Johnny. I feel like turning around and walking right out again.

"The situation in our house has got to be changed. I have an obligation to both Patsy and Johnny; I also have an obligation to myself and my airline. I believe Johnny should be sent away to school. I will miss him. For that matter, Patsy will miss him too. But Johnny deserves a chance. Maybe from disciplined people he can learn a little of the discipline that figures so largely in Patsy's conversation but so seldom in her conduct. I

DUEL

By JEAN TODD FREEMAN

The mind is cautious, eager to recover
From the touch of a hand or the kiss of a lover.
Waking in the morning and recalling the night,
The mind close-guarded is apt to take fright;
Is quite inclined to forget to remember;
Is firm in calling December December.

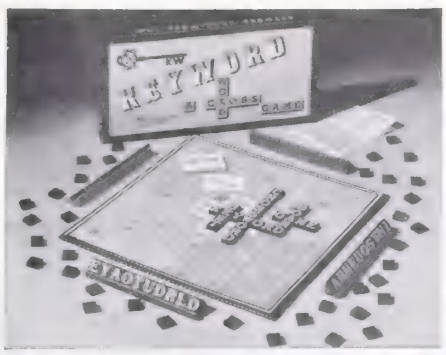
But the heart, the heart! No use to try
To restrain the heart with a warning cry.
Waking in the morning, the heart folds tight
Its memory of love in the star-swept night,
And no matter how bleak the December day,
The heart, extravagant, proclaims it May!

"I hope you try the new Betty Crocker Brownie Mix, I hope!"

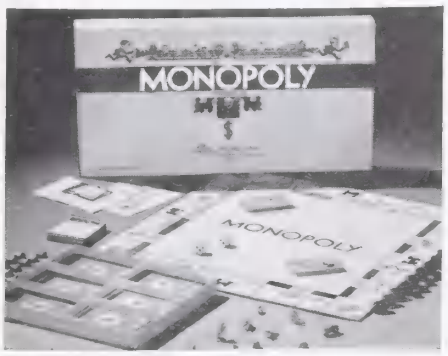
"... and make 'em sparkle with Diamond® Walnuts!"

Betty Crocker
OF GENERAL MILLS

"Now brownies are easy for anyone to make—chewy, fudgy brownies, the kind you keep in the cooky jar (if you can keep them)—or tender, cake-like brownies to serve with tea or ice cream. Do try both kinds. Easy recipes right on the package."

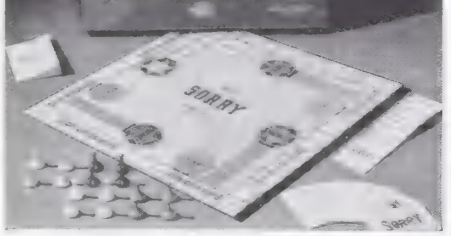


Each box of the new Betty Crocker Brownie Mix makes 36 fudgy squares. And most everything you need is right in the mix. All you add is one egg—for chewy brownies, or two eggs if you like 'em light and cake-like—and Diamond Walnuts for the touch that adds so much!



Do bake brownies . . . soon!

FILL UP THE COOKY JAR!



EACH BOX MAKES 36 FUDGY BROWNIES!

Christmas Gifts to Please Your Family

KEYWORD Best Crossword Board Game. From the grammar school crowd to grandma, players are captivated by the fun of this fast crossword game. Easy scoring — and three exclusive features! $2, $3, $5

MONOPOLY Parker Brothers' trade-mark name for its real estate trading game. Such excitement — when the family shows you how to buy, sell, and mortgage the town! You'll soon find out why Monopoly is the world's most fascinating game. $3, $4, $10

SORRY Parker Brothers' trade-mark name for its slide pursuit game. With play controlled by special Sorry cards, there's plenty of uncertainty right up to the last minute of this favorite "pursuit" game. $2.50

CLUE Everybody feels like a real detective, playing this exciting "whodunit" game. $3.00

BING CROSBY'S GAME Call Me Lucky. Bing's own game is new and different — with a "Lucky 7" card for extra suspense! $3.00

STAR REPORTER The "newsiest" game of all, with everybody trying to make that scoop! $2.50

FAMOUS

PARKER GAMES

at all leading stores

Send for this fascinating booklet! How to have family fun, popular parties, with Parker Games. 28 illustrated pages. Mail 10¢ today, with name and address, to: Parker Brothers, Inc., Dept. 127, Salem, Mass.

do wish Patsy would grow up and behave like an adult."

The Marriage Counselor Says:

"Patsy was taking out on her adolescent son the dissatisfactions of her own life. Of course she wasn't aware of it. She honestly believed she was doing her best by Johnny. Actually she was punishing Johnny for growing away from her—something that was inevitable and natural—and she was also punishing him for the emptiness of her relationship with Gid. In the process, she was further alienating Gid, she was turning Johnny into a behavior problem and she was turning herself into a chronic invalid.

"Patsy's mistakes were clear enough. It would have been useless for me to point out her mistakes to her at the time we met. When our consultations began," the counselor went on, "Patsy was literally starved for love and affection. She was too confused and despondent, too sunk in self-pity, to be rational. Her childhood had left Patsy with a profound sense of inadequacy, a feeling of being utterly alone in the world. As a little girl she dreamed that marriage would resolve all her personality difficulties and be an Open sesame! to permanent happiness. The dream was romantic, unrealistic. For a while she was happy, although not so happy as she fancied in retrospect. In retrospect, she idealized the honeymoon period of her marriage just as she idealized the brief period of Johnny's infancy.

"Patsy failed to develop and mature with the passage of time. As Gid's and Johnny's dependence on her seemingly lessened, her old childish feelings of inadequacy and unimportance took control. She struck out blindly at a world in which she felt unnecessary and unwanted. Her threats of divorce, threats she didn't intend to carry out, were a key to her emotional state. She was frantically seeking from Gid an assurance that he loved and needed her. When this assurance did not come, her frustration manifested itself in physical symptoms. She had fainting spells, sleeping spells, headaches, stomach upsets—the classic neurotic ailments. Patsy indeed needed to grow up. She couldn't manage it on her own. She had to have Gid's help.

"Fortunately Gid, who was the strong partner in the marriage, wanted to help. First he and I discussed the question of Johnny. Breaking up the family and shipping Johnny off to school at fourteen, as Gid himself acknowledged, did not seem to be the course of wisdom. There was the danger that the boy might feel rejected by both his parents. Nevertheless, Johnny required and deserved a different home atmosphere. In his efforts to counter Patsy's temper outbursts and her undue severity, Gid had swung too far in the opposite direction. Patsy was in full charge of Johnny a large part of the time and she was entitled to her husband's support. Moreover, Gid was ignoring serious faults in Johnny—major faults—of which Patsy had complained. Johnny's truancy, for example. And his poor scholastic record, for which there was no real excuse. Johnny's talents were mechanical and he was ambitious to be an engineer, but in this day and age a broad education is necessary in engineering.

"After Gid and I had talked together, he admitted that he was not blameless in the matter of Johnny's unruliness. He perceived that memories of personal childhood hardships had motivated his leniency in part, that he had not been thinking of Johnny's ultimate welfare. Gid then changed his tack, stepped out of the role of a visiting Santa Claus and assumed his responsibilities as a father. He held up higher standards for Johnny, both at home and at school. He told Johnny that he was expected to do his best in all his studies, including English composition and literature. He laid down some definite rules and regulations for the boy to follow. Johnny profited.

"Needless to say, Gid's backing was helpful to Patsy's morale. When Gid came to understand how Patsy's deep emotional hunger was affecting her health and the lives of all three of them, he reacted with characteristic sympathy. Gid was considerably older than his wife. He had been instinctively protective and considerate until his bewilderment and exasperation with Patsy had caused him virtually to abdicate as a husband. Gid felt fulfilled and satisfied in his work, and he readily comprehended that a constant feeling of self-dissatisfaction and failure would be hard for anyone to bear.

"Gid undertook an experiment. He set out deliberately to make Patsy feel that she was important to him. In every way possible—particularly in small ways—he sought to show Patsy that she was in his thoughts, a part of his life. On his next flight back from Japan, he brought her a set of china. He refreshed his recollections of the holidays that had meaning and significance to her. On Patsy's birthday he sent her yellow roses. Patsy realized that some of his 'little acts of thoughtfulness' were calculated, but this did not lessen the value to her of an unexpected orchid to pin on her coat, champagne in a cooler on New Year's Eve, unexpected words of praise. For Gid was taking trouble on her behalf, and thereby proving that she did count with him.

"The transformation in Patsy was striking and swift. As soon as she felt loved and appreciated, her depressions melted away. Nervous illnesses ceased to plague her when she achieved mastery of the runaway emotions that once had guided so many of her actions. She commenced to give to her husband and son the adult kind of consideration they needed.

One of the best things about a very little child is that he never thanks you for doing things for him—he is so sure you want to.
—MAURICE HORSPOOL

"Patsy's clashes with Johnny did not end overnight. But her point of view changed radically. For the first time she endeavored to think logically about their altercations. For the first time she saw why, how and where she had made mistakes. She saw that she had been regarding Johnny as a projection of herself, when he was a person in his own right. She began to share Gid's pride in Johnny's mechanical talents instead of vaguely hoping that Johnny would become an English teacher. After she read a few books on the nature of adolescence, she discovered that she had been exaggerating a good many of Johnny's faults.

"Patsy settled her minor skirmishes with Johnny when they occurred. She stopped saving up horrid tales to relate to Gid at the moment of his return from the flying field. As a result, Gid's home-coming warmth wasn't chilled at his own threshold. The couple's sexual relationship was resumed.

"Patsy had practically no interests, except her family and herself. She had shunned outside activities on the grounds of ill health and this had given her far too much time for brooding. Her first tentative reading led her into a neighborhood study group, where she made feminine friends. She joined a ceramics class which met two afternoons a week, and found an outlet for her creative abilities. Gid's compliments on the latest pretty household ornament were welcome but gradually became less essential. For Patsy had gained inner satisfaction; she knew that her husband and son loved her and that she was conducting herself like a real wife, a real mother.

"Four years have passed since I last saw Patsy and Gid, but I hear from them occasionally. Johnny was graduated from high school with creditable marks and is now a freshman at Carnegie Institute of Technology. The family is still a closely knit unit. Last Christmas I had a card from Patsy and Gid. There was a message from each. Gid wrote, 'I never dreamed a little appreciation, a few words of encouragement and praise could change a woman as Patsy has changed.' Patsy's triumphant postscript read: 'Why wouldn't I change? After all, Gid changed the whole world for me.'"

Editors' Note: This case history was compiled and condensed from actual records by DOROTHY CAMERON DISNEY

The Green Label Is the Green Light If You're on a Restricted Diet

SEXTON pioneered canned foods without sugar or seasoning. The green label identifies this complete line of fruits, vegetables and juices.

Sexton Restricted Diet Division brings you delicious and nutritious foods prepared under the same high standards of all other Sexton foods. They have the acceptance of the American Medical Association.

Better food stores have the green label Sexton Restricted Diet products.

John Sexton & Co., Sexton Square, Chicago, Ill.

MEXENE
CHILI POWDER SEASONIN

"You will find in the spice of MEXENE
A rare seasoning flavor supreme.
For chili or beans,
Spaghetti or greens,
Use MEXENE to improve your cuisine

Pepita Mexene

MARSHMALLOW fluff

THE QUICK CREAMY TOPPING FOR PUDDINGS

Ready to use right from the jar, or whipped with cream — the easy, delicious sauce for home-made or prepared puddings. Fold in to make creamy, tastier puddings. Write for FREE "Yummy Book" of dessert recipes, illustrated in color, Durkee-Mower, Inc., Dept. L12, Lynn, Mass.

MORE CASH FOR YOU

YES, you can have more cash in your pocket if you put your spare time to work. Write for our money-making plan. No obligation.

CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY
756 Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

JOLLY TIME THE GREATEST NAME IN POP CORN

THE PARTY'S ON!

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 65

boiled ham (canned or done on the base), 2 tablespoons catchup, 1½ tea- prepared mustard, ½ teaspoon Wor- hire sauce and a dash of Tabasco. Roll ur pastry, thin, on a floured board. with a small piece of the dough at a nd keep the rest in the refrigerator so s cold until ready to use. This treat- you know, makes the dough easier ndle and flakier too. Cut with a 2″ cooky cutter. Put ¼ teaspoon ham h round, wet the edge with cold water, e dough over and seal the edges with Just as you make any turnover. Chill refrigerator on a greased baking sheet eady to bake, just before supper. Or an be baked ahead and kept hot in a r or in a low oven, with a motherly eye little tots. Bake in a hot oven, 400° F., rown, 8 to 10 minutes. This makes 30 turnovers. "Now good digestion n appetite."

SHRIMP-STUFFED CELERY

and drain stalks of celery from the the heart of celery, not your heart or . Longer stalks can be cut into 2″–3″ s, you be the judge of how many—let sity prevail. Crisp them in ice water preparing the filling. Drain a 5-ounce shrimp. Take out the black veins fork, unless they are the variety that already deprived of said veins, and hem in cold water. Break the shrimp e pieces. Mix with 1 tablespoon finely d chives, ¼ teaspoon salt, 2 teaspoons juice, ½ cup mayonnaise and 2 dashes co. Drain the celery and dry between Stuff with the shrimp filling. You'll ut with about 15 stuffed celery pieces, start with a normal stalk of celery. the rust and spots and use only the nished.

ipe or green olives prove their versa- n a score of ways. A way to use them ill please you and add to your olive the way I've shown you here. It's the

SPICED OLIVES

the liquid from a 9-ounce can of green ives; simmer 5 minutes with 2 large garlic, sliced, and 4 dried red chili s. Add 1½ tablespoons vinegar and 3 fresh dill (have you yet an herb-pot in the kitchen?) or 1 teaspoon dried our over the olives and let them stand in a covered jar before you spring on your guests. These improve with o you needn't be afraid to make for future parties, or for the "old t home."

ow nice to know. Let the drifts drift and nd blow high, and the cold gray clouds the cold gray sky, let the gods of the ains beat their drums, and the last bird as winter comes. Let anything happen, thing may, one thing is sure and it's stay, for a spell and a long spell any- that's the oyster. Try them this way:

AVORY CREAMED OYSTERS

dozen shucked oysters over low heat for utes to release some of the juice. When ges curl they are finished. Drain well. tablespoons butter or margarine. Add espoons flour and make a smooth paste x. Add 1 cup light cream and stir over eat until very smooth and like heavy I do these operations in a double but then I'm never in a hurry. Do as e to do. To the cream sauce add ½ cup diced green pepper, ¼ cup minced , ¼ cup diced pimiento, 1 cup grated ar cheese, ½ cup grated Parmesan , 1 tablespoon prepared horse-radish, oon Worcestershire sauce, 1 teaspoon ary, 1 teaspoon salt and ⅛ teaspoon r. Add the oysters to the sauce and the double-boiler treatment, or put afing dish for 20 minutes or so—and to be as hot as a red-hot poker. Serve on toast or on hot split and buttered baking-powder biscuits.

The bird that never fails. You may count on one thing in this uncertain world: as long as you have or have had a turkey in the house, you'll eat, come the calm of spring or the blizzard of winter. If you can think up something that hasn't been done to, or made from, a turkey, from the day it's roasted to the day the last bone has disappeared, send me word. And don't say it never made a custard pie. For how do you know? Or ice cream either. This may not be new, but neither are most jokes, and now you have a chance to try

TURKEY GLACÉ

Trim the crusts from a 1-pound loaf of day-old bread. Cut the bread into ½″ cubes to make 6 cups; sauté the cubes in a frying pan, using ¼ cup butter or margarine. Season with 1 teaspoon salt, and ½ teaspoon each of thyme and poultry seasoning. Spread in bottom of a shallow baking dish, 13¼″x 8¾″x1¾″. Cut up 6 cups cooked turkey into 1½″pieces and spread over the browned bread cubes. For the sauce prepare 1 quart rich turkey stock, by cooking up the leftover turkey bones and gravy with some onion, celery and parsley. In a large frying pan sauté 1 cup finely chopped onion in ½ cup butter or margarine. Add ½ cup flour and 4 cups rich turkey stock; season with 2 teaspoons salt, ½ teaspoon thyme, ½ teaspoon poultry seasoning and ¼ cup chopped parsley. Pour over the turkey and bread cubes. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., for 20 minutes, then take it from the oven and spread the top with two 1-pound cans of whole cranberry sauce. Bake for 10 minutes.

No goose in the act. It's a goose-liver pâté without any goose. A pâté de foie gras minus any Strasbourg inheritance. It's a secret until now, and now it's about to fall on the ears of a palpitating multitude, and bound to become, someday, a treasured heirloom, a legacy, and its name is Swedish Liver Pâté. Leave it to the Swedes to dream it up, and make it for your next party.

SWEDISH LIVER PÂTÉ

Wash 1 pound calf's liver. Soak it in milk several hours. Drain and wipe dry. Take off, with a sharp and pointed knife, all the membrane. Cut into pieces and put through the grinder—using the medium knife—at least 4 times, along with ½ pound fresh pork fat, 1 medium-sized onion and 5 drained anchovies. Add 2 egg yolks—one at a time—to the ground mixture, beating well after each addition. Stir in ⅔ cup heavy cream. Season with 2 teaspoons salt, ½ teaspoon pepper, a pinch of allspice and ¼ teaspoon ginger. Blend well. Fold in 2 egg whites, beaten to soft peaks.

Grease an 8½″ x 4½″ x 2½″ loaf pan, line with greased brown paper, pack in the liver mixture. Cover with greased paper or, better yet, a sheet of aluminum foil. Bake in a pan of hot water in a slow oven, 300° F., 1¼ hours. Cool and chill overnight. Turn out on your fanciest plate and garnish with sieved hard-cooked egg. Serve sliced with Melba toast or saltines.

Apples are cider's best friend. If there weren't any apples or apple pickers or orchards to pick apples in, there wouldn't be any cider—and what a catastrophe that would be! But Nature has attended to all that, and apples and cider are all ours. One thing among many that there are to do with them both—at the same time, too—you see right here, and you may add to your repertoire

APPLE-TANG SALAD

Dissolve 2 packages lemon-flavored gelatin in 1½ cups hot water. Add 2 cups sweet cider, ¼ cup lemon juice and a pinch of salt. Chill until partly set. Fold in 3 cups diced red apple (unpeeled) and 2 cups diced celery. Pour into a pretty mold or 12 individual molds. Chill until firm. Unmold and serve

4 SHORT-CUTS TO FLAKIER CRUST quicker, better baking when you switch from solid fats to Mazola® Oil Easier to measure, just pour Mazola measures accurately . . . no digging out solid shortening.

Quicker . . . to mix liquid shortening
Mazola saves work . . . no cutting-in solid shortening.

Neater . . . to roll dough between wax paper
No extra flour on board or pin.

Simpler . . . to handle dough
Just peel wax paper right off the dough . . . crust flutes without cracking.

In pint and quart bottles

Produced by Corn Products Refining Co.

"EASY-MIX" PASTRY

Combine in measuring cup ½ cup of Mazola and 5 tablespoons of ice water (or cold milk). Beat with a fork until creamy. Immediately dump this mixture all at once over 2 cups sifted flour and 1 teaspoon salt. Toss and mix with a fork. Notice how quickly Mazola mixes in!

Form dough into ball . . . divide in half . . . roll each between two 12-inch squares of wax paper (wipe table with damp cloth so paper will not slip). Remove top sheet . . . place dough in pan . . . peel off the other sheet. Bake at temperature required for filling used. For single crust, divide recipe in half. Prick well, if for baked shell.

"It's my favorite bargain"

"A bargain," says the dictionary, "is an advantageous purchase."

Telephone service is like that.

Advantageous to you because it saves time, steps and trouble. Stands guard over your home. Helps you to keep in touch with relatives and friends.

And does all of this as a real bargain should —at low cost. Pennies buy wings when you reach for the telephone.

BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

Reminding you that someone, somewhere—close to home or far away—would enjoy hearing your voice by telephone today.

with thick commercial sour cream or with a boiled dressing.

Who wants cookies? Who doesn't? Don't all speak at once and no pushing, please. Here are enough, different enough and delicious enough, to satisfy the most cooky-minded maker and eater that ever swung a rolling pin, or found an empty cooky jar after Junior had brought a few friends in after school. So tie on the apron and get out the works and prepare to stock up on the best stock you'll find. Your party'll agree. I'll bet on that. (What is the bulge in Willie's pocket?)

YULETIDE COOKIES

Cream 1 cup butter or margarine, 2 cups sugar and ½ cup honey. Add 2 eggs—one at a time—beating well after each addition. Add 1 teaspoon grated lemon rind, 3 tablespoons lemon juice, ⅓ cup orange juice and 1 tablespoon grated orange rind. Then add 1 coarsely grated unpeeled apple (about ⅔ cup). Mix well and add 2 cups quick-cooking oats, 2 cups whole-wheat flour and 1 teaspoon salt. Finally, add 1 cup seedless raisins, 1 cup bleached seedless raisins, 1 cup currants, ½ cup chopped citron and 1 cup chopped walnuts. Mix well. Drop from a teaspoon about ½" apart on a greased baking sheet. Press lightly with the bottom of a drinking glass over which has been stretched a cloth squeezed in ice water. Bake 15 to 20 minutes in a moderate oven, 350° F. This receipt will make 18 dozen small cookies. Store in a covered and inconspicuous cooky jar, with waxed paper between the layers. Will keep and improve with age, like fruitcake. But, unlike fruitcake, which is aloof and boasts a "Keep Off" sign like a bed of asparagus at rabbit-poaching time, cookies are vulnerable, and if you can't hide them, set them in the front window with a sign "Merry Christmas. Help yourselves." I guess this is best, after all.

SWEDISH WAFERS

Beat together 3 eggs and ½ cup sugar. Add ½ teaspoon vanilla, ½ cup cold water, ½ cup melted butter or margarine and 1 cup flour. Beat until the batter is smooth. Bake as thin as possible on a well-heated, greased wafer iron over low heat until golden brown on both sides—about 1 to 1½ minutes on each side. Use 1 tablespoon batter for each wafer. Keep the iron at a slow even temperature. Roll the wafers quickly, while they are warm and before they crisp, around the handle of a wooden spoon, or shape into a cone. When cool, serve plain or filled with sweetened and flavored whipped cream. Swedish-wafer irons are handy and not very costly and most housewares departments have them.

SESAME COOKIES

Cream ½ cup butter or margarine with 6 tablespoons sugar. Add 1 beaten egg, and blend well. Sift 1½ cups flour with ¾ teaspoon baking powder and ¼ teaspoon salt. Add to the creamed mixture and flavor with ¾ teaspoon vanilla. Cookies, like cake, demand flavoring. Somehow it "bakes out," and if you try to be too saving, the result is B flat. Break off small pieces of dough, about the size of a small walnut. Form into a little pat (patty cake, patty cake), press down on hulled sesame seeds and arrange in baking order on a greased baking sheet with th seed side up. (If the seed side wasn't up, would be down. And where would you be? Decorate tops of cookies with citron c angelica. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F about 15–20 minutes until light beige. (dressmaker color or décor.) Makes 3 dozen you're lucky.

ALMOND CAKES

Cream together thoroughly ¼ cup butter c margarine and ¾ cup sugar. Add 2 eggs, on at a time, beating hard between addition Add ¾ cup finely ground blanched almond 1½ teaspoons grated orange rind, ½ teaspoo grated lemon rind, and ¼ teaspoon almon and ¼ teaspoon vanilla flavorings. Be until very light. Gradually stir in 1 cup plu 2 tablespoons flour and ¼ teaspoon sal Drop by teaspoonfuls on a greased bakin sheet. Garnish with a slice of candied cherry Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., minutes or until ligh golden brown. Th adds up to about dozen cookies.

SONG FOR MY NEWBORN SON

By JOSEPH AUSLANDER

He is all pure and fair and freshly minted, Stamped with the starry seal of Love imprinted
By the Lord's limpid grace;
Coined from a mortal dream's immortal metal,
Softer than smiles that dance and drift and settle
Upon a changeling's face.

This is my son, in whom I am well pleased;
Delivered, my deliverer, who eased
My heart of grief's dead growth:
Who forced the issue: who confronted Death,
And with one piercing cry of pent-up breath
Made answer for us both.

PANOCHA SQUARE

Melt ¼ cup butter c margarine. While it still hot add 1 cu brown sugar. Add 1 eg and ½ teaspoon va nilla. Beat until mixtu is fluffy. Sift togethe and stir into the fir mixture 1 cup flour, teaspoon baking pow der and ¼ teaspoo salt. Mix in 1 cup sem sweet chocolate piec and ¾ cup choppe walnuts. Spread o evenly in a greased 8 square pan and bak in a moderate ove 350° F., for about minutes. Be careful n to bake this longer tha just until done or will be too firm. should be chewy. O yes, I meant to tell yo they look like panoch taste like it and wh cut into squares li panocha, are panoch Only they're cookies.

BRAZIL-NUT RINGS

Beat 2 eggs until ve light. Gradually a 2 cups firmly packed brown sugar and teaspoon vanilla, beating constantly. And the arm faileth, page Mr. Edison's legio Sift together 1¾ cups flour, 1 teaspoon ba ing powder and ½ teaspoon salt. Mix wi 2 cups ground Brazil nuts and mix with t egg mixture. Chill dough in the refrigerat for about 2 hours. If you run into the wo "castana," pronounced "castana," it mea Brazil nut. What it means to be educate Break off pieces of the dough, shape in balls about 1" in diameter; or form in lengthwise rolls about ⅓" in diameter, long, and join the ends to make a ring. Ba on an ungreased baking sheet in a mod ately slow oven, 325° F., for 10 to 15 minut Spread with a thin confectioners'-sug frosting and decorate with multicolor sprinkles. Bought by the thimbleful at t candy store.

Bows won't stay. When I tie a bow, w won't it stay tied, but all at once slips a kn and lallygags on one corner, and nothing l than a spike will hold it? Why do my ca get left out, like a robin's egg under a tree stead of in the nest? My labels won't st and my presents look like the confusion y find in a little boy's room after he does homework. You tell me if you can. I beli in poltergeists and leprechauns and all other troublemakers in fairyland. But another year. Maybe things will improve. the meantime more parties and the best holidays from

ANNI